THE JOURNAL OF THE
222nd GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2016)

Saturday, June 18, 2016, 2:00 P.M.

BUSINESS MEETING I

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was convened by Heath Rada, Moderator, 221st General Assembly (2014), in Halls CD of the Oregon Convention Center in Portland, Oregon. Preceding this first business meeting, the assembly convened in Halls CD at 11:00 a.m. with a service of opening worship. Heath Rada, Moderator, 221st General Assembly (2014), preached on the parable of the prodigal son. Opening worship included a service of Commissioning for Commissioners and Advisory Delegates, which included a commitment to faithful fulfillment of their service as commissioners and a charge to commissioners.

ECUMENICAL AND INTERFAITH GREETINGS

Moderator Rada recognized Mienda Uriarte, area coordinator for the Asia/Pacific Region, who introduced the Reverend Henry William Booth Sumakul, ecumenical representative from Gereja Masehi Injili di Minahasa, Tomohon, Indonesia; and Dr. Martin Hiram Chowdhury, ecumenical advisory delegate from the Church of Bangladesh, to bring greetings and open the assembly with prayer.

Moderator Rada announced that members of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations had prepared hand-knitted pocket prayer shawls to give to ecumenical and interfaith guests attending the assembly. On behalf of the committee and the commissioners and delegates of the 222nd General Assembly (2016), Moderator Rada presented Rev. Booth and Dr. Chowdhury with pocket prayer shawls.

MOMENT OF REMEMBRANCE

Moderator Rada recognized the staff leadership of ecumenical and interfaith ministries, Robina Winbush, Laurie Anderson, Rick Ufford-Chase, and Laurie Kraus, and introduced the moment of remembrance, lament, and commitment on the one year anniversary of the Charleston Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church massacre and the one week anniversary of the Orlando Pulse Club massacre. Participants in the prayer service included Donnie Woods of the Presbytery of Charleston-Atlantic, Dan Williams of the Presbytery of Central Florida, the Reverend Terry McCrae Hill of the Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church in Portland, Wajdi Said of the Portland Muslim Community, and Eliana Maxim of the Presbytery of Seattle.

QUORUM AND ENROLLMENT

Moderator Rada recognized Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons, who advised the Moderator that Standing Rule D.2. permitted the roll to be established by registration. Stated Clerk Parsons recommended that the roll of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) be established by the list of those who had registered or would register. Based on preregistration with General Assembly Meeting Services, there would be present at this assembly:

- 594 commissioners from 171 presbyteries
- 141 young adult advisory delegates
- 20 theological student advisory delegates
- 8 missionary advisory delegates
- 14 ecumenical advisory delegates

The assembly approved that the roll of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) be established by the list of those who had registered or would register. The roll of the General Assembly can be found starting on p. 1061 of the electronic version.

SEATING OF CORRESPONDING MEMBERS

Stated Clerk Parsons announced that, in accordance with Standing Rule B.3., corresponding members were designated and present at the General Assembly. The list of corresponding members can be found starting on p. 1071 of the electronic version.

Moderator Rada welcomed the corresponding members.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON LOCAL ARRANGEMENTS

The report of the Committee on Local Arrangements (COLA) of the Presbytery of Cascades was presented by Co-Moderators Gregg and Beth Neel and Dave and Beverly Crow. The COLA showed a video on Portland, and people with placards representing all of the churches in the presbytery paraded through the assembly hall to Scottish bagpipes and drums playing “My Hope Is Built on Nothing Less.”

REPORT OF THE MODERATOR

Moderator Rada called upon Larissa Kwong Abazia, Vice-Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014), to assume the chair.

Heath Rada, Moderator, 221st General Assembly (2014), reported on “A Conversation with the Denomination.” (See p. 1055).

COMMISSIONER ORIENTATION

Vice-Moderator Kwong Abazia recognized Stated Clerk Parsons, who provided the commissioner orientation. As part of the orientation, Conrad Rocha, synod executive and stated clerk of the Synod of the Southwest and volunteer platform manager at the assembly, introduced the platform leadership, the floor parliamentarians, and how to be recognized to speak in plenary. Conrad Rocha and Jieun Kim Han, program assistant for General Assembly Meeting Services, explained interpretation services in English, Spanish, and Korean. Don Lincoln, lead pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church in West Chester, Pennsylvania, and a volunteer assistant platform manager; Associate Stated Clerk Tom Hay; and Tamara Williams, stated clerk and administrative coordinator of the Presbytery of Charlotte and volunteer assistant platform manager, explained how to use PC-Biz and electronic voting.

Vice-Moderator Kwong Abazia reminded the assembly of the high standards of conduct it is called to follow. Stated Clerk Parsons encouraged commissioners to refer to the program book found in registration packets for further information about the assembly.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY NOMINATING COMMITTEE

Vice-Moderator Kwong Abazia recognized Amy Kim Kyremes-Parks, moderator of the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC), who described the process by which the GANC places names in nomination and the procedure for making nominations from the floor.

REPORT ON BUDGET CONSIDERATIONS

Vice-Moderator Kwong Abazia called upon Earline Williams, deputy executive director of shared services and chief financial officer of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), who described the process to be used in identifying items with budget implications and how that process can inform decisions made during the assembly.

COMMITTEE STRUCTURE FOR THE ASSEMBLY

Vice-Moderator Kwong Abazia called on Stated Clerk Parsons to recommend a committee structure for the assembly.

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) voted to approve Item 00-01. [See p. 77.].

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BUSINESS REFERRAL

Vice-Moderator Kwong Abazia recognized George Anderson, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, for a report from the committee, assisted by Cheni Khonje, vice-moderator of the committee. The assembly approved Item 01-01, the proposed docket. The assembly approved Item 01-02. The assembly approved Item 01-05. The assembly approved Item 01-06, which recommends suspending Standing Rule A.2.a. in order to receive late business from entities of the General Assembly. This action required a 2/3 majority of the assembly. The Assembly Committee on Business Referral reported that it had approved Item 01-03, Referral of Business to Assembly Committees. The Assembly Committee on Business Referral also reported that it voted not to refer Item 01-04, On Amending Articles of Agreement, Section 8.2, to Include “Pacific Islander,” because the Articles of Agreement is a historical document and cannot be amended.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. A summary of the report is as follows:

Assembly Committee on Business Referral

Report One

Item 01-01. Proposed Docket of the General Assembly

Approved. [See p. 89.]

Item 01-02. Referrals in Progress and Final Responses to Referrals

Approved. [See p. 91.]

Item 01-03. Referral of Business to Assembly Committees

Approved by the Assembly Committee on Business Referrals. [See p. 131.]

Item 01-04. On Amending Articles of Agreement, Section 8.2, to Include “Pacific Islander.”

The Assembly Committee on Business Referral voted not to refer Item 01-04 because the Articles of Agreement is a historical document and cannot be amended. [See p. 141.]

Item 01-05. 2016 Final Business List

Approved. [See p. 141.]

Item 01-06. Suspend Standing Rule A.2.a.

Approved. [See p. 153.]

SPIRIT OF GA VIDEOS

Vice-Moderator Kwong Abazia announced that the General Assembly Communications Center would be presenting one video per day during the assembly, and she introduced the first video.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Stated Clerk Parsons made several announcements, including a reminder that the deadline for business to be submitted to the assembly was Sunday, June 19, at 1:30 p.m.

SIX AGENCIES VIDEO PRESENTATION

Stated Clerk Parsons introduced a video presentation about the work of the six agencies.

CLOSING PRAYER

Vice-Moderator Kwong Abazia recognized Katherine Orth, theological student advisory delegate from the University of Dubuque Theological Seminary, who offered the closing prayer for this session of the General Assembly.

RECESS

The assembly recessed at 4:46 p.m.

Saturday, June 18, 2016, 7:00 P.M.

BUSINESS MEETING II

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Heath Rada, Moderator, 221st General Assembly (2014), in Halls CD of the Oregon Convention Center, Portland, Oregon.

Don Shaw and Linda Jackson-Shaw, Presbyterian leaders from the Portland area, shared their story and led the assembly in the convening prayer.

ECUMENICAL AND INTERFAITH GREETINGS

Moderator Rada recognized Valdir Franca, Presbyterian Mission Agency, area coordinator for Latin America and the Caribbean, who introduced ecumenical guests from Latin America and the Caribbean. The Reverend Christopher Williams, ecumenical advisory delegate, Guyana Presbyterian Church, brought greetings to the assembly, and the Reverend Miguel Cancu, ecumenical representative, Dominican Evangelical Church, led the assembly in prayer.

Moderator Rada presented all of the ecumenical representatives from Latin America and the Caribbean with pocket prayer shawls on behalf of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations, and the commissioners and delegates of the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

THE ROLE OF BELHAR AND THE BOOK OF CONFESSIONS IN THE LIFE OF THE CHURCH

Moderator Rada recognized Beth Shalom Hessel, executive director of the Presbyterian Historical Society, for a presentation on the role of the Confession of Belhar and the Book of Confessions in the life of the church.

ELECTION OF THE CO-MODERATORS

Moderator Rada called for the election of the Co-Moderator of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as required by Book of Order, G-3.0501, and Standing Rule H.1.

Moderator Rada recognized Margaret Elliott, moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, who reported on Co-Moderator candidate expenses.

Moderator Rada recognized Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons who described the procedure for electing the Moderator or Co-Moderators.

Moderator Rada asked all nominees to come to the area at the back of the platform and meet with Assembly Assistant Conrad Rocha and Neil Presa, Moderator of the 220th General Assembly (2012). Moderator Rada announced that two teams of candidates had declared their intention to stand for election as Co-Moderators.

Two teams of candidates were placed in nomination. Adan Mairena (Presbytery of Philadelphia) and David Parker (Presbytery of Salem) were nominated by Julia Hill (Presbytery of Philadelphia). Denise Anderson (Presbytery of National Capital) and Jan Edmiston (Presbytery of Chicago) were nominated by Karen Sapio (Presbytery of San Gabriel). There were no nominations from the floor.

Each pair of Co-Moderator candidates addressed the General Assembly for five minutes, expressing the concerns each feels to be most important for the church in this assembly and in the two years to follow.

Moderator Rada called on Stated Clerk Parsons to explain the use of the speaker-recognition system, and the candidates responded to questions from the floor for thirty minutes. At the expiration of the time allotted for this process, the candidates met former Moderator Presa backstage at the docket coordinator’s desk.

Moderator Rada called on Stated Clerk Parsons to explain the voting procedure.

Moderator Rada polled advisory delegates and then asked commissioners to vote.

Denise Anderson and Jan Edmiston were elected Co-Moderators of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) on the first ballot, receiving a total of 432 votes. Of the total votes cast, Adan Mairena and David Parker received 136.

Moderator Rada declared that Denise Anderson and Jan Edmiston were duly elected to the office of Moderator of the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

RECOGNITION OF FORMER MODERATORS

Moderator Rada welcomed the following former Moderators to the platform:

Name	Year	G.A.	Church
Herbert D. Valentine	1991	203rd	PC(USA)
John M. Fife	1992	204th	PC(USA)
John M. Buchanan	1996	208th	PC(USA)

Rick Ufford-Chase	2004	216th	PC(USA)
Bruce Reyes Chow	2008	218th	PC(USA)

After being escorted back into the hall by former Moderator Presa, Co-Moderators-elect Denise Anderson and Jan Edmiston were accompanied to the platform by family members and friends.

INSTALLATION OF NEWLY ELECTED CO-MODERATORS

Stated Clerk Parsons, Retiring Moderator Rada, and Retiring Vice-Moderator Larissa Kwong Abazia installed Denise Anderson and Jan Edmiston to the office of Co-Moderator of the 222nd General Assembly (2016). Fred Lyon of Flossmoor Community Church in Illinois led the assembly in prayer for the Co-Moderators. Retiring Moderator Rada presented Co-Moderator Anderson and Co-Moderator Edmiston with the Celtic crosses that have been worn by all Presbyterian Church

(U.S.A.) Moderators since 1983. Stated Clerk Parsons presented Co-Moderator Anderson and Co-Moderator Edmiston with moderatorial stoles.

Co-Moderators Denise Anderson and Jan Edmiston addressed the assembly briefly.

PRESENTATION TO RETIRING MODERATOR AND VICE-MODERATOR

Stated Clerk Parsons presented retiring Moderator Rada with a replica of the Celtic crosses that have been worn by all Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Moderators since 1983, and he presented gifts to Retiring Moderator Rada and Retiring Vice-Moderator Larissa Kwong Abazia on behalf of a grateful church.

BUSINESS MEETING IV

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Denise Anderson, Co-Moderator, 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Hall CD of the Oregon Convention Center, Portland, Oregon.

Victor Aloyo, director of Multicultural Relations at Princeton Theological Seminary, shared his story and led the assembly in the convening prayer.

Co-Moderator Jan Edmiston gave a special remembrance of Kelly S. Allen, pastor at University Presbyterian Church in San Antonio, Texas, and also a candidate for Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014), who died on June 5, 2016, of a hemorrhagic stroke. The assembly watched a video about Kelly Allen.

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Beverly Crow, co-moderator of the Committee on Local Arrangements, for a special presentation of gifts for the Co-Moderators.

SPEAK-OUT

Co-Moderator Anderson explained that for the past ten months the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly had invited the church to engage in conversations about the nature and future of the church. Commissioners had already seen the COGA report, "When We Gather at the Table" and had the opportunity to go deeper into the questions it raised.

Co-Moderator Anderson invited commissioners and advisory delegates to form small groups, which would spend fifteen minutes discussing the following two questions:

"In what ways have your views of the report's findings and insights changed during your time at the assembly?" "In what ways will your views of the report's findings and insights affect your consideration of the business before the assembly?"

Following conversation, Co-Moderator Anderson said that the assembly would have one more opportunity for conversation on Thursday, June 23, 2016.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized George Anderson, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, for a report of the committee. Moderator George Anderson brought one item for action and two for information. The assembly approved Item 02-03, which indicated the order in which committee reports would be heard. Moderator George Anderson introduced Item 02-01, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures Report 1, which contained the actions of the committee related to the referral of commissioners' resolutions and the referral of Item 11-A.

Co-Moderator Anderson asked the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures to comment on its action related to CR-012. Moderator George Anderson stated that the committee declined to refer Item CR-012 for two reasons so compelling that the vote of the committee was 32 to 0.

Moderator Anderson reported that the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures examined the minutes of the General Assembly from the time of its convening on Saturday afternoon, June 18, through the end of Business Meeting III on Sunday, June 19, and found them in order (Item 02-02). Additional minutes will be added through the week and posted under Assembly Committee 02 (Bills and Overtures).

Item 02-01. [See p. 155.]

A. For Information—Referral of Commissioners' Resolutions:

1. CR-001 (now Item 10-16)—Commissioners' Resolution. To Withdraw the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) from Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC). Referred to Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination (10).

2. CR-002 (now Item 14-15)—Commissioners' Resolution. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity. Referred to the Assembly Committee on Theological Issues and Institutions. Referred to Assembly Committee on Theological Issues & Institutions (14).

3. CR-003 (now Item 07-04)—Commissioners' Resolution. Prayer for the Persecuted Church. Referred to Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations. Referred to Assembly Committee on Ecumenical & Interfaith Relations (07).

4. CR-004 (now Item 06-17)—Commissioners' Resolution. Seeking Support for Settlements of Disputes Regarding Church Property. Recommendations 1, 2 and 4 referred to Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry (06); and that Recommendation 3 be declined based upon the following rationale: Recommendation 3. implies an authoritative interpretation, which, under Standing Rule A.6.e., is not allowed in commissioners' resolutions.

5. CR-005—Commissioners' Resolution. Regarding the Use of Two States for Two Peoples. Declined.

6. CR-006 (now Item 08-08)—Commissioners' Resolution. Standing for Reconciliation and Ending Affiliation with Divisive Coalition. Referred to Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues (08).

7. CR-007 (now Item 12-12)—Commissioners' Resolution. On Affirming Principles of Sanctuary in Response to the Global Escalation in the Number of Displaced Person/Refugees. Referred to Assembly Committee on Peacemaking & International Issues (12).

8. CR-008 (now Item 12-11)—Commissioners' Resolution. Reaffirming the Ministry of Sanctuary by Congregations. Referred to Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues. Referred to Assembly Committee on Peacemaking & International Issues (12).

9. CR-009 (now Item 13-08)—Commissioners' Resolution. On Creating a Special Committee to Conduct an Administrative Review to Assure Compliance with Donor and General Assembly Restrictions on the Administration of the Jarvie Service. Referred to Assembly Committee on BOP, PILP, PPC, and Foundation (13).

10. CR-010 (now Item 12-13)—Commissioners' Resolution. Peace, Justice, and Reunification in the Korean Peninsula. Referred to Assembly Committee on Peacemaking & International Issues (12).

11. CR-011 (now Item 07-05)—Commissioners' Resolution. Recognition of the 500th Anniversary of the Protestant Reformation. Referred to Assembly Committee on Ecumenical & Interfaith Relations (07).

12. CR-012—Commissioners' Resolution. On Directing the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) to Release for Public View the Final Report of the Independent Investigation into the Incorporation and Funding of a California 501(c)(3) Nonprofit Corporation. Declined based upon following rationale: (1) civil proceedings have commenced in the matters referred to, and the church suspends its judicial process until civil proceedings have been resolved; (2) the UPCUSA, a predecessor denomination, voted that the General Assembly would not be an ecclesial court. Up to that time the General Assembly had to approve the decisions of the GAPJC before it was made final. That change has been the practice of the reunited church. Accepting this commissioners' resolution requires the General Assembly to serve as an ecclesial court of the church.

B. For Information—Final Referral

Item 11-A. Minutes, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. Referred to Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues (11).

Item 02-02. [See p. 155.]

In accordance with the Standing Rules, the minutes of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) for Saturday afternoon, June 18, 2016, through the end of Business Meeting III on Sunday, June 19, 2016, have been reviewed and found to be in order. These minutes are posted on PC-Biz under the business for Assembly Committee 02 (Bills and Overtures).

COMMISSIONER ORIENTATION II

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Stated Clerk Parsons for an update on how commissioners could complete an electronic version of the motion form on PC-Biz and reminded the assembly about internet connectivity.

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS UPDATE: REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Mary Lou Cox, moderator of the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures, for a report on financial implications on the per capita budget of actions taken at this assembly. Moderator Cox presented a per capita apportionment of $7.33 for 2017 and $7.55 for 2018 and announced that the total financial implications of actions recommended by assembly committees amounts to: $13,120 for 2016; $263,203 for 2017; and $270,583 for 2018. On Saturday morning, the committee will present to the assembly its final recommendation for balancing the per capita budget for 2017 and 2018.

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS UPDATE: REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Eileen Best, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination, for a report on financial implications to the mission budget of actions taken at this assembly. Moderator Best reported the total financial implications of actions under consideration by the assembly for the mission budgets were: $303,144 for 2017, and $251,642 for 2018.

NOMINATIONS INFORMATION

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Stated Clerk Parsons who reported that there have been no challenges to the nominees of the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) found in Item 00-03 and the Moderator's Nominations to the GANC found in Item 00-04; therefore, per the Standing Rules, these unchallenged nominations in Item 00-03 and Item 00-04 are now included in the Wednesday Consent Agenda. Additional nominations have been made and are listed in the GANC report, Item 00-05. Floor nominations for these positions are due Thursday, June 23, 2016, by 2:00 P.M.

CONSENT AGENDA, THE WEDNESDAY CONSENT AGENDA

Co-Moderator Anderson introduced the Wednesday Consent Agenda, Item 02-WCA, and stated that it could be found in PC-Biz as the Wednesday Consent Agenda. The Wednesday Consent Agenda includes recommendations from committees that have been approved by 75 percent or more of the committee members. Items that were approved by less than 75 percent will be voted on individually in plenary. In addition, items that do not have constitutional implications or, in the judgment of the committee leaders, do not represent business requiring discussion by the full assembly, are included in the consent agenda. When the consent agenda is presented to the body for a vote, commissioners will be voting for all the items included, without any alterations, in a single vote.

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized George Anderson, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, who led the assembly through the consent agenda process. Moderator George Anderson moved the agenda. Co-Moderator Anderson announced that if a commissioner wished to have an item removed from the consent agenda, they would go to microphones 2 and 7 to be recognized.

Items removed from Wednesday Consent Agenda:

- 03-09: Site Selection for the 225th General Assembly (2022)—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. Approved. (See p. 169.)
- 05-12: Request for Constitutional Interpretation of Resolving Tensions between F-1.0403, F-1.0404, and F-3.0202—From the Synod of the Northeast. Approved with Comment. (See p. 298.)

EDUCATE A CHILD PRESENTATION

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Tony De La Rosa, Interim Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, for a presentation on the Educate a Child mission. Tony De La Rosa introduced Frank Dimmock, Global Alleviation Catalyst in World Mission, Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), and Alonzo Johnson, Compassion, Peace and Justice, PMA.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THEOLOGICAL ISSUES AND INSTITUTIONS

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Jennifer Burns Lewis, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Theological Issues and Institutions, for the committee report.

Moderator Lewis presented Item 14-12, which was approved. Moderator Lewis presented Item 14-07. It was approved and Moderator Lewis introduced both the Reverend Dr. Leanne Van Dyk, president and professor of theology at Columbia Theological Seminary, and the Reverend Dr. David Esterline, president of Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, to speak.

Moderator Lewis presented Item 14-09. Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Dr. Doris Garcia-Rivera, president of El Seminario Evangelico de Puerto Rico, to explain the covenant relationship between the seminary and the PC(USA). Item 14-09 was approved with amendment.

Moderator Lewis presented Item 14-10. It was approved. Dr. Craig Barnes, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, offered a memorial minute for the late Dr. Steven Hayner, president emeritus of Columbia Theological Seminary.

Moderator Lewis presented Item 14-04. It was approved with two amendments from the floor as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets, with a gray highlight (denotes plenary action), and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets, with a gray highlight (denotes plenary action), and with an underline.]

“5. Amend Chapter Three, W-3.0402, paragraph 3 as follows:

“Baptism enacts and seals what the Word proclaims: God’s redeeming grace offered to all people. ~~[Baptism is God’s gift of grace and also God’s call to respond to that grace.]~~ [Baptism is at once God’s gift of grace, God’s means of grace, and God’s call to respond to that grace.] Through Baptism, Jesus Christ calls us to repentance, faithfulness, and discipleship. Through Baptism, the Holy Spirit gives the Church its identity and commissions the Church for service in the world.”

“9. Amend Chapter Three, W-3.0409, paragraph 3 as follows:

“The Lord’s Supper enacts and seals what the Word proclaims: God’s sustaining grace offered to all people. ~~[The Lord’s Supper is God’s gift and also God’s call to respond to that grace.]~~ [The Lord’s Supper is at once God’s gift of grace, God’s means of grace, and God’s call to respond to that grace.] Through the Lord’s Supper, Jesus Christ nourishes us in righteousness, faithfulness, and discipleship. Through the Lord’s Supper, the Holy Spirit renews the Church in its identity and sends the Church to mission in the world.”

Moderator Lewis then presented Item 14-01. It was disapproved.

Moderator Lewis presented Item 14-03. In response to Item 14-03, an alternate resolution that approves substitute wording drawn from the revised Directory for Worship was approved. Item 14-11 was approved and the awards were presented. See below in Announcements.

The committee report was arrested at this time to be resumed at the reconvening of the assembly at 7 p.m. [For the remainder of the report, see p. 16.]

SPIRIT OF GA VIDEO

Co-Moderator Edmiston introduced the Spirit of GA video on Discernment.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized the Reverend Mindy Douglas, vice-moderator of the Committee on Theological Education, who presented awards for excellence in theological education to Dr. Kathanne Sakenfeld, Princeton Theological Seminary, and the Reverend Dr. Craig Dykstra, of Duke Divinity School.

Stated Clerk Parsons reported announcements.

CLOSING PRAYER

Stephanie Quintana-Martinez, theological advisory delegate from McCormick Theological Seminary, offered the closing prayer for this session of the General Assembly.

RECESS

The assembly recessed at 4:40 p.m.

BUSINESS MEETING V

ECUMENICAL GREETINGS

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Robina Winbush, Associate Stated Clerk in the Office of the General Assembly, who introduced the Reverend Dr. Yvette Noble Bloomfield, vice-president of the World Communion of Reformed Churches, who offered prayer and brought greetings.

Co-Moderator Anderson presented Rev. Bloomfield with a pocket prayer shawl on behalf of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations and the commissioners and delegates of the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

James Winkler, National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., and Jimmie R. Hawkins and Ann Walle of Church World Service, brought greetings, and they also received pocket prayer shawls.

SPEAK-OUT

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons who described the format for the “Speak-out” session. For fifteen minutes, commissioners, advisory delegates, and corresponding members are given the opportunity to speak for one minute each from microphones two and three. Speakers may not make motions during this time.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Cheni Khonje, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, for a report from the committee.

Vice-Moderator Khonje presented Item 02-03, a revised docket scheduling the continuation of the report of the Assembly Committee on Theological Issues and Institutions before the other two committee reports scheduled for this plenary. It was approved. (See p. 156.)

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THEOLOGICAL ISSUES AND INSTITUTIONS

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Jennifer Burns Lewis, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Theological Issues and Institutions, for the continuation of the committee report. [See pp. 14–15 for the first part of the report.] Sue Rutford, vicemoderator of the committee, was recognized to present the report.

Vice-Moderator Rutford presented Item 14-13. Because of some voting malfunctions, a total of four votes were held, two when the item was first presented and two after the approval of Item 14-02. Item 14-13 was approved as amended.

Vice-Moderator Rutford presented Item 14-A for information. Vice-Moderator Rutford called on Moderator Lewis to present Item 14-02. It was approved.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations. A summary of the report is as follows:

I. Plenary Action

Item 14-01. On Amending W-4.9000 by Replacing with New Text—From the Presbytery of Kiskiminetas.

Disapproved. [See p. 971.]

Item 14-02. Regarding Endorsing the Clergy Letter Project—From the Presbytery of the Cascades.

Item 14-03. On Amending W-2.4011 by Adding Language Regarding Who Can Access the Lord's Supper—From the Presbytery of Southeastern Illinois.

In response to Item 14-03, the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approved the following alternate resolution: [See p. 976.]

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall W-2.4011 be amended by striking the current text and inserting new text to read as follows:

“Theology of the Lord's Supper

“a. The opportunity to eat and drink with Christ is not a right bestowed upon the worthy, but a privilege given to the undeserving who come in faith, repentance, and love. All who come to the table are offered the bread and cup, regardless of their age or understanding. If some of those who have not yet been baptized, an invitation to baptismal preparation and Baptism should be graciously extended.

“Worshippers prepare themselves to celebrate the Lord's Supper by putting their trust in Christ, confessing their sin, and seeking reconciliation with God and one another. Even those who doubt may come to the table in order to be assured of God's love and grace in Jesus Christ.

“Welcoming to the Table

“b. In cases where baptized children who have not yet begun to participate in the Lord's Supper express a desire to receive the Sacrament, the session should provide an occasion to welcome them to the table in public worship. Their introduction to the Lord's Supper should include ongoing instruction or formation in the meaning and mystery of the Sacraments.”

Item 14-04. Revised Directory for Worship—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board.

Approved as amended: [See p. 978.]

Amend “Directory for Worship, Draft of Proposed Revision: November 2015” as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets, with a gray highlight (denotes plenary action), and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets, with a gray highlight (denotes plenary action), and with an underline.]

1. Amend Chapter One, W-1.0202, paragraph 2 as follows:

“The first Christians began to celebrate Jesus' resurrection every Lord's Day, gathering to proclaim the Word and celebrate the Sacraments. The Church continues to gather, ~~especially~~ traditionally on the first day of the week, to hear the gospel and break bread in Jesus' name, with the confidence that the risen Lord is with us.”

2. Amend Chapter Two, W-2.0303, paragraph 2 as follows:

“In a particular congregation, ruling elders shall provide for the church's worship and encourage the people's participation. Specifically, when serving together on the session, ruling elders and ~~pastors~~ teaching elders†: make provision for the regular preaching of the Word and celebration of the Sacraments, corporate prayer, and the offering of praise to God in song; oversee and approve all public worship in the congregation, with the exception of responsibilities reserved for the teaching elder†; determine occasions, days, times, and places for worship; and have responsibility for the arrangement of worship space, the use of special appointments (flowers, candles, banners, paraments, and other objects), and the ministries of music, drama, dance, and visual arts.”

3. Amend Chapter Two, W-2.0304 as follows:

“Teaching elders† (also called ministers of Word and Sacrament) are called to proclaim the Word, preside at the Sacraments, and equip the people for ministry in Jesus' name. Specifically, teaching elders† are responsible for: the selection of Scriptures to be read, the preparation of the sermon, the prayers to be offered, the selection of music to be sung, printed worship aids or media presentations for a given service, and the use of drama, dance, and other art forms in a particular service of worship.”

4. Amend Chapter Two, W-2.0305 as follows:

~~“In a particular congregation, the order of worship [including printed worship aids or media presentations for a given service], is the responsibility of the teaching elder† with the concurrence of the session. The selection of hymnals, service books, Bibles, and other more permanent worship resources is the responsibility of the session with the concurrence of the teaching elder†, and in consultation with church musicians and educators.~~

“The session is responsible for educating the congregation about the church’s worship, in order to facilitate their full and active participation. ~~[The]~~ [It is appropriate that the] session ~~[should]~~ provide for the regular study of this Directory for Worship, particularly in the training of ruling elders and deacons.

“In fulfilling their responsibilities for worship, sessions are accountable to presbytery. ~~[Presbyteries]~~ [It is appropriate that the presbyteries] ~~[should]~~ discuss with sessions the character of their congregation’s worship, the standards governing it, and the fruit that it bears in the mission and ministry of the church. ~~[Presbyteries]~~ [It is appropriate that the presbyteries] ~~[should]~~ provide instruction in worship, making use of this Directory for Worship in the preparation of candidates for ordination, and in the ongoing nurture of teaching elders†.”

5. Amend Chapter Three, W-3.0402, paragraph 3 as follows:

~~“Baptism enacts and seals what the Word proclaims: God’s redeeming grace offered to all people. [Baptism is God’s gift of grace and also God’s call to respond to that grace.] [Baptism is at once God’s gift of grace, God’s means of grace, and God’s call to respond to that grace.]~~ Through Baptism, Jesus Christ calls us to repentance, faithfulness, and discipleship. Through Baptism, the Holy Spirit gives the Church its identity and commissions the Church for service in the world.”

6. Amend Chapter Three, W-3.0402, paragraph 5 as follows:

“Both believers and their children are included in God’s covenant love. The baptism of believers witnesses to the truth that God’s gift of grace calls for our grateful response. The baptism of our [young] children witnesses to the truth that God claims people in love even before they are able to respond in faith. These two forms of witness are one and the same Sacrament.”

7. Amend Chapter Three, W-3.0403 as follows:

“When a [young] child is presented for Baptism at least one parent (or person exercising parental responsibility) ~~[will]~~ [should] be an active member of a Christian church, normally the congregation in which the baptism takes place. The session may consider a request to baptize a child whose parent is an active member of another church. If the session approves such a request, it ~~[must]~~ [should] communicate with the council of the other congregation and notify them when the Sacrament has been administered. Those presenting children for Baptism will promise to nurture and guide them until they are ready to make a personal profession of faith and assume the responsibility of active church membership.

“A council may authorize a Baptism, to be administered by a teaching elder†, in certain situations beyond the congregational setting, such as hospitals, prisons, schools, military bases, or other ministry settings. In these cases, the teaching elder† is responsible for ensuring that the name of the newly baptized person is placed on the appropriate roll of a ~~[congregation]~~ [council] (G-3.02, G-3.03).”

8. Amend Chapter Three, W-3.0405 as follows:

“Candidates for Baptism or their parents shall renounce evil and profess their faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior. Those who are being baptized upon profession of faith declare their intent to participate actively and responsibly in the church’s worship and mission. ~~[They join]~~ [Together with] the congregation [they profess] ~~[in professing]~~ their faith, using the Apostles’ Creed, the baptismal affirmation of the early Church.”

9. Amend Chapter Three, W-3.0409, paragraph 3 as follows:

~~“The Lord’s Supper enacts and seals what the Word proclaims: God’s sustaining grace offered to all people. [The Lord’s Supper is God’s gift and also God’s call to respond to that grace.] [The Lord’s Supper is at once God’s gift of grace, God’s means of grace, and God’s call to respond to that grace.]~~ Through the Lord's Supper, Jesus Christ nourishes us in righteousness, faithfulness, and discipleship. Through the Lord's Supper, the Holy Spirit renews the Church in its identity and sends the Church to mission in the world."

10. Amend Chapter Three, W-3.0413 as follows:

"At the table, in full view of the people, the teaching elder† breaks the bread and pours the cup, or lifts a cup that has already been filled. These actions may be accompanied by sentences of Scripture or performed in silence. The use of one loaf and one cup expresses the unity of the body of Christ and the communal nature of the Sacrament. The bread used for the Lord's Supper should be common to the culture of the congregation; those who prepare the bread shall make provision for ~~[persons with food allergies]~~ [the full participation of the congregation]. The session will determine whether wine is used; a non-alcoholic option shall be provided and clearly identified."

11. Amend Chapter Four, W-4.0202 as follows:

"In cases where baptized children ~~[have]~~ who have not yet begun to participate in the Lord's Supper express a desire to receive the Sacrament, the session should provide an occasion to welcome them to the table in public worship. Their introduction to the Lord's Supper should include ongoing instruction or formation in the meaning and mystery of the Sacraments."

12. Amend Chapter Four, W-4.0401 as follows:

"In Baptism each Christian is called to ministry in Christ's name. God calls some persons from the midst of congregations to fulfill particular functions, so that the ministry of the whole people of God may flourish. In ordination the church sets apart with prayer and the laying on of hands those who have been called by God through the voice of the church to serve as deacons, ruling elders, and teaching elders†. In installation the church sets in place with prayer those who have been (previously) ordained as deacons, ruling elders, and teaching elders†, and are now called anew to service in that ministry. In commissioning the church recognizes other forms of ministry in the church: ruling elders ~~[called to pastoral service]~~ [commissioned to limited pastoral service], certified Christian educators, and persons certified to other forms of service."

13. Amend Chapter Four, W-4.0403 as follows:

"A service of ordination, installation, or commissioning focuses on Christ and the joy and responsibility of serving him through the mission and ministry of the church. Following the sermon, the moderator (or designee) of the appropriate council briefly states the nature of the ministry to which persons are being ordained, installed, or commissioned. Those who are being ordained, installed, or commissioned gather at the baptismal font. The moderator (or designee) asks them the constitutional questions (see W-4.0404). A ruling elder asks the corresponding questions of the congregation. When all questions have been answered in the affirmative, those to be ordained will kneel, if able, for the laying on of hands and the prayer of ordination. (The presbytery commission lays on hands at the ordination of teaching elders†; its moderator may invite other teaching elders† and ruling elders to participate. Members of the session lay on hands at the ordination of ruling elders and deacons; the session may invite other ruling elders and teaching elders† to participate. Because ordination only takes place once for each office, the laying on of hands is not repeated.) Those previously ordained will stand, if able, along with the congregation, for the prayer of installation. After this, the moderator makes the declaration of ordination, installation, or commissioning. Members of the session or presbytery welcome the newly ordained, installed, or commissioned person(s). In the case of the installation of a teaching elder†, persons may be invited to charge the teaching elder† and congregation to faithfulness in ministry and mutuality in relationship. When a teaching elder† is ordained or installed, it is appropriate for that person to preside at the Lord's Supper in the same service; she or he may also give the blessing at the conclusion of the service. When ruling elders or deacons are ordained or installed, it is appropriate for one or more of them to give the charge [to the congregation at the conclusion of the service]."

14. Chapter Five, W-5.0302, paragraph 2 as follows:

"~~[The]~~ [In the] Service for the Lord's Day² ~~[is the primary context in which]~~ we ~~[regularly]~~ hear the proclamation of the gospel and have the opportunity to respond in faith, committing and recommitting our lives to Jesus Christ. Accordingly, an invitation to prepare for Baptism and live out baptismal discipleship is to be a regular part of Sunday worship. Christian worship also prepares believers to go forth, in the power of the Spirit, to share with others the good news they have received, inviting them to join in following Christ's way."

1. Amend Recommendation 2., Bullet 5 of “Affirmation of Creation” as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“• That God has connected all life on Earth in a network of kinship by virtue of [~~deseent with modification~~] [biological evolution] from common ancestors;”

2. Amend Recommendation 2., Bullet 6 of “Affirmation of Creation” as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“• That, in response to God’s call, we Homo sapiens [~~(modern humans)~~] emerged[, in our wide diversity and different cultures,] as a species over more than 6 million years of hominin development;”

Item 14-14. *Resolution on Abiding Presence: Living Faithfully in End of Life Decisions—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Approved as amended. [See p. 1018.]

1. Amend Recommendation 3, “Affirmation: Faithful Living at the End-of-Life” as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“3. Encourage Presbyterian medical personnel, caregivers, pastors, deacons, and other providers of end-of-life treatment, care, and support to lead studies and discussions of these resources on a regular basis within their congregations and communities to strengthen the understanding and use of advance directives.

“Affirmation: Faithful Living at the End-of-Life

“God’s good gift of life does not come without God’s guidance, guidance carried in the Scriptures of Old and New Testaments and interpreted in our confessions of faith. [Rest of paragraph remains unchanged.]

“The Reformed tradition as we understand it sees death as part of a purposeful journey that is undertaken by each of us in community, such that our baptisms are recalled and completed at our deaths, whether they be sudden and untimely, prolonged and painful, or long-expected and peaceful. [Rest of paragraph remains unchanged.]

“This theological/spiritual/ethical context must be considered in advance care planning. All of the stakeholders in end-of-life planning and care bring their spiritual and moral convictions to the challenges explored in Abiding Presence. [Rest of paragraph remains unchanged.]

“[It is important to note the progression of care as illness progresses. Critical care (full life-saving care toward health restoration), may then include palliative care (a multidisciplinary approach to supporting the personhood of the patient) that can co-exist with critical care, and continue if the decision to discontinue critical care is made. Finally, hospice care discontinues dimensions of critical care, while enhancing care of mind, body, and soul, through the end-of-life journey.]

“Decisions to hasten death may be understandable as a last resort when all connection to one’s community has been or will be lost and medical pain management is no longer effective. Both medically and spiritually, it is always crucial that the Church and individual Christians address the reasons why people choose to end their lives, listening and drawing on God’s love as best we can, and avoiding condemnation. While sharing in the historic Christian opposition to suicide, we do not find it condemned in Scripture nor see ourselves called to judge others, particularly those facing irreversible deterioration of awareness and bodily function. A separate issue is the use of deep sedation at the end of a person’s life to control severe pain. [~~Palliative (or terminal)~~] [Such] sedation [invokes a law of double effect: pain control may increasingly suppress bodily function. The ethical concern here is the intent of the medication, either to assist with pain control, or to hasten death. Pain management] may in some cases be chosen prayerfully and within one's fully informed circle of care, knowing that death is typically a byproduct at some point.

“Death for us is not simply an individual event in a natural process, but a communal leave-taking still connected to God that involves our family, friends, and congregation. [Rest of paragraph remains unchanged.]

“The church has provided resources on medical efforts to manage the uncertainty and pain of death since 1974, addressing first the “artificial prolongation” of human life, and then addressing efforts at shortening or ending lives seen to have grown unbearable or unresponsive. [Rest of paragraph remains unchanged.]”

2. Amend recommendation 4.a. as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“a. Encourages all members and friends active in the denomination to develop their own end-of-life directives, surrogate decision-makers, ‘living wills,’ durable powers of attorney for health care, Physician Orders for Life-Sustaining Treatment (POLSTs), or other vehicles recognized by their states, to guide their treatment in the case of incapacity and/or irreversible medical decline. Copies of these documents should be shared with both primary and secondary (fallback) persons selected to carry the power of making health-care decisions when one is unable to do so oneself. Furthermore, it is very illuminating to discuss one's end of life values and preferences with the range of family members, physicians, nurses, and congregational care providers.”

Approved as amended. [See p. 1047.]

Amend the first paragraph of the recommendation section as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency[, in coordination with the Office of the General Assembly,] to help the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) make use of ‘The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity’ by:”

II. Committee Final Action and Report to Plenary

Item 14-A. Minutes, Committee on Theological Education

Approved with comment. [See p. 1049.]

Comment: The subcommittee for COTE minutes approval moves to recommend approval of the Committee on Theological Education minutes from February 25–26, 2014, through September 22, 2015, with the following comments:

- A. The committee would prefer to have the original bound minutes in hand.
- B. A notice of approval of the previous year minutes should be included.
- C. Although it may be necessary to involve different clerks, care and consistency is needed in presentation of the minutes:
 1. All meetings (both committee and subcommittees) to be opened and closed with prayer.
 2. Persons attending should be referenced by their full name or with title.
 3. If margin headings are used, consistency throughout the year is required.
 4. Care in using standard abbreviations is needed.
 5. Actions as motions should be emphasized and discussion more concise when presented.

A copy of the “Guideline for Preparation on Minutes of Agencies” should be made available to the acting clerks of the meeting.

Matt Miles, Committee on Theological Education (COTE) member, abstained

DISSENT

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON ECUMENICAL AND INTERFAITH RELATIONS

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Young Ghil Lee, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations. Moderator Lee referred to Item 07-01 and Item 07-02, which the assembly approved as part of the Wednesday Consent Agenda. Moderator Lee then presented pocket prayer shawls to Co-Moderator Anderson and Co-Moderator Edmiston.

Moderator Lee recognized Lisa Eye, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations. Vice-Moderator Eye introduced a video recognizing the service of Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons, Ecumenical Officer of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Vice-Moderator Eye presented Item 07-04. It was approved as amended.

Vice-Moderator Eye recognized Juan Sarmiento, Evangelism Catalyst for Presbyterian World Missions, to offer a prayer.

Vice-Moderator Eye presented Item 07-06. It was approved with comment.

Vice-Moderator Eye recognized Moderator Lee, who presented Item 07-03. Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Stated Clerk Parsons who explained the procedure for amending the Book of Confessions. Moderator Lee introduced a video on the Confession of Belhar. Co-Moderator Edmiston called for the vote of the advisory delegates. Co-Moderator Anderson called for the vote of the commissioners. Item 07-03 was approved, and the assembly joined in singing “Freedom Is Coming.” The Confession of Belhar is now part of the Book of Confessions.

Moderator Lee recognized the Reverend Motlalentwa Godfrey Betha and the Reverend Dr. Allan Boesak of the Uniting Reformed Church in Southern Africa, who addressed the assembly. The assembly joined in singing “We Shall Overcome.”

Moderator Lee thanked Matilde Moros and Clifton Kirkpatrick, chairs of the Special Committee on the Belhar Confession. Item 07-A was received as approved with comment by the assembly committee.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations. A summary of the report is as follows:

Item 07-06. The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations 2016 Self-Study

Approved with comment. [See p. 442.]

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) affirms and celebrates the work of the GACEIR and encourages their continued gracious hospitality, faithful imagination, and patient perseverance, as they reach out to welcome, to listen to and learn from, and to partner with the world's ecumenical, interfaith and emerging partners.

This commitment is particularly important and timely in a world fraught with ignorance and fear, discrimination and violence; and is to be supported, strengthened, and cherished.

As the committee moves forward, we would like to see them emphasize the following Moving Forward items (in the GACEIR self-study report):

- #5, collaborating ecumenically and interreligiously in addressing the crucial issues listed in the item, adding a commitment to standing in solidarity with individuals and groups targeted by a context of xenophobia that fosters disrespect and foments violence;
- #10, including the development of educational tools and materials that will assist members of our congregations to formulate faithful Christian responses to people of other faiths that reflect both integrity and respect. We request that the Confession of Belhar be considered for use in these materials.

Thursday, June 23, 2016, 8:30 A.M.

BUSINESS MEETING VI

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Jan Edmiston, Co-Moderator, 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Hall CD of the Oregon Convention Center, Portland, Oregon.

Co-Moderator Jan Edmiston alerted commissioners to a sheet at their tables that she invited them to fill out to share with the Co-Moderators stories of people who have given them hope. Co-Moderator Edmiston read a notice from Linda Culbertson, general presbyter of the Presbytery of The Pacific about Commissioner Karen Mizrahi, who fell and was hospitalized with injuries and would require surgery. Co-Moderator Edmiston led the assembly in prayer for Karen.

Denise Anderson, Co-Moderator, 222nd General Assembly (2016), shared a video from the Presbytery of National Capital about racial justice and racial mindfulness.

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Melissa Davis, manager for ecumenical networking and resourcing in the Office of the General Assembly, who introduced the ecumenical guests: The Reverend Stephen H. Bils, American Baptist Churches U.S.A.; the Reverend David Guthrie, Moravian Church in America, Southern Province; the Reverend Herman Harmelink, International Council of Community Churches; the Reverend Stephen Kendall, Presbyterian Church in Canada; the Reverend Colleen Michael, Church of the Brethren; the Reverend Mark Pettis, United Church of Christ; Father Bishoy Ray, Coptic Orthodox Church in North America; the Reverend Dr. Halvard B. Thomesen, Seventh-Day Adventist Church; Chancellor Mary Jo Tully, United States and Canadian Churches Conference of Catholic Bishops; and Father Steven Voytovich, Orthodox Church in America.

Chancellor Mary Jo Tully brought greetings, and Father Steven A. Voytovich led the assembly in the convening prayer.

On behalf of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations, and the commissioners and delegates of the 222nd General Assembly (2016), Co-Moderator Edmiston presented the ecumenical guests with pocket prayer shawls.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Moderator George Anderson of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures. Moderator Anderson presented Item 02-03, which included the amended morning docket, for approval. It was approved. (See p. 156.)

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BOP, PILP, PPC AND FOUNDATION

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Linda Lee, moderator of the Assembly Committee on the Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Corporation, Presbyterian Publishing Company, and the Presbyterian (U.S.A.) Foundation, and Todd Wright, Vice-Moderator of the Assembly Committee on the Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Corporation, Presbyterian Publishing Company and the Presbyterian (U.S.A.) Foundation, for the committee report.

Moderator Lee and Vice-Moderator Wright reported on the work of the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. Moderator Lee presented Item 13-02 to confirm the reelection of Marc Lewis as president of PPC. The motion was approved. Moderator Lewis invited Marc Lewis to address the assembly.

Moderator Lee and Vice-Moderator Wright reported on the work of the Board of Pensions.

Moderator Lee and Vice-Moderator Wright reported on the work of Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. Moderator Lee presented Item 13-07, to confirm the election of Jim Rissler as the president of PILP, Inc. Item 13-07 was approved. Jim Rissler addressed the assembly.

Moderator Lee and Vice-Moderator Wright reported on the work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation. Moderator Lee presented Item 13-08, which was pulled off the consent agenda. The committee recommended disapproving with comment. Moderator Lee invited Greg Rousos, executive vice-president and chief operating officer of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to speak to the issue. Following debate, the assembly voted on the motion. Item 13-08 was disapproved with comment. [Note: Item 13-06 was removed and placed in the GANC slate.]

Moderator Lee and Vice-Moderator Wright reported on the committee's final action agenda, which included approval of Items 13-A, 13-B, 13-C, and 13-D.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on BOP, PILP, PPC and Foundation. A summary of the report is as follows:

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS UPDATE: REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Mary Lou Cox, moderator, Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures, for a report on financial implications on the per capita budget of actions taken at this assembly.

Moderator Cox reported a correction for the total amount reported on Wednesday for 2018. Instead of $262,203 the figure should be $270,583. The total financial implications of actions approved by the assembly amount to: $8,120 for 2016; $251,969 for 2017, and $260,349 for 2018, representing an increase in per capita of $0.17 for 2017 and $0.18 for 2018. Per capita implications of pending actions recommended by assembly committees amount to: $0.16 for 2017 and $0.17 for 2018. On Saturday morning, the committee is scheduled to present to the assembly its final recommendation for balancing the per capita budget for 2017 and 2018.

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS UPDATE: REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Luis Ocasio-Torres, Vice-Moderator, Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination, for a report on financial implications to the mission budget of actions taken at this assembly. Vice-Moderator Ocasio-Torres reported the total financial implications of actions taken so far by the assembly amount to $18,074 for 2017 and $0 for 2018. Items still under consideration by the assembly for the mission budget totaled $285,070 for 2017; and $251,642 for 2018.

REFUGEE MINISTRY RESPONSE UPDATE

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Tony De La Rosa, Interim Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, who introduced the speakers. Laurie Kraus, associate mission director in the Compassion, Peace and Justice Department of the Presbyterian Mission Agency; and Teresa Waggener, Assistant Stated Clerk and manager of immigration issues in the Office of the General Assembly reported.

ASSEMBLY PHOTO

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Michael Whitman, General Assembly photographer, to take a photograph of the assembled commissioners and delegates.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Moderator Mary Lou Cox and Jihyun Oh, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures, to resume the arrested committee report. [For the first part of the report, see pp. 24–25.]

On behalf of the committee, Vice-Moderator Oh commended the assembly for actions taken through its concurrence with the committee recommendations in the Wednesday Consent Agenda regarding changes to the Standing Rules of the General Assembly with Item 03-01, Item 03-06, Item 03-07, and Item 03-11; membership status in our statistics with Item 03-05; and the “standard definition of supplier diversity” for General Assembly agencies with Item 03-12.

Moderator Cox presented Item 03-09 for approval. It was approved. Moderator Cox presented Item 03-03, Recommendation 1 and Recommendation 2. Item 03-03, Recommendation 1, was disapproved; Item 03-03, Recommendation 2. was disapproved with comment. Moderator Cox presented Item 03-10, Recommendations 1 and 2. Recommendation 1 was approved; Recommendation 2 was approved with comment.

Vice-Moderator Oh presented Item 03-02 with the recommendation for referral with comment. The recommendation was approved. Item 03-04 was answered by the action take on Item 03-02. Vice-Moderator Oh then presented Item 03-NB, which was approved. Vice-Moderator Oh presented Item 03-08 for approval. It was approved. Vice-Moderator Oh reported on the items on which the committee took final action (Items 03-A, 03-B, and 03-C). This concluded Report One of the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures. A summary of the report is as follows:

Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures

Report One

Wednesday Consent Agenda items indicated by an asterisk.

There are no items with financial implications in this report.

I. Plenary Action

Item 03-01, Recommendation 1. *On Amending Standing Rule E.2.d.(2) Concerning Resources—From the Presbytery of Central Florida.

Recommendation 1: Approved as amended. [See p. 159.]

Amend the second paragraph of Recommendation 1. to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“(2) Resource material (except for previously published books or interpretive brochures), including advice and counsel memoranda, that provides background or advice on items of new business, including commissioners’ resolutions, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred [~~and shall be as succinct as possible~~]. This material shall be submitted to the assembly committee leadership team prior to presentation to the assembly committee to which the business has been referred. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures [with a commitment to equitable presentation of different perspectives.] shall consider any request that is made to distribute this resource material to the full assembly.”

Recommendation 2: Referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly with comment. [See p. 159.]

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) acknowledges and affirms the intent of fairness behind this overture and would like to refer it for further discussion to be sure implementation ensures multiple perspectives are shared in deliberations while still retaining the discernment process of commissioners.

Item 03-02. On Revising the Racial Ethnic Composition Component of the Session Annual Report of Church Statistics—From the Presbytery of Elizabeth.

Referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly with comment. [See p. 161.]

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) supports the intended outcome of this item and refers Item 03-02 to the Committee of the Office of the General Assembly to work with the General Assembly Committee on Representation to determine the most effective and efficient way to achieve this outcome by the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

Item 03-03. On Directing COGA to Bring to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) Proposals Regarding Changes in the Moderator’s Election and Assembly Committee Meetings Process—From the Presbytery of St. Andrew.

Recommendation 1: Disapproved. [See p. 163.]

Recommendation 2: Disapproved with comment. [See pp. 163–64.]

Comment: We recommend that COGA continue to identify, investigate, and implement strategies and processes to empower all commissioners to have maximum opportunities to prepare for committee work prior to the start of the General Assembly for which they are elected as commissioners.

Item 03-04. On Adding the Category “Multiracial” to the Listing of Racial Classifications in the Annual Report from Congregations—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

Answered by the action taken on Item 03-02. [See p. 165.]

Approved. [See p. 167.]

Item 03-07. *Amendment to Standing Rule B.3.a., Presbyterian Women—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

Approved. [See p. 167.]

Item 03-08. Election of Associate Stated Clerk—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

Approved. [See p. 169.]

Item 03-09. Site Selection for the 225th General Assembly (2022)—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

Approved. [See p. 169.]

Item 03-10. Recommended Benchmarks for OGA and PMA—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

Recommendation 1: Approved. [See p. 170.]

Recommendation 2: Approved with comment. [See p. 171.]

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) encourages the General Assembly Committee on Representation to continue to work closely with the Presbyterian Mission Agency to meet the benchmarks as stated throughout the six-year review period.

Item 03-11. *On Amending Standing Rules B.4. and F.5.d. Concerning the Role of the ACC and PJC When Constitutional Questions Are Considered by the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

Disapproved. [See p. 174.]

Item 03-12. *Approve A Standard Definition of Supplier Diversity.

Approved. [See p. 175.]

Item 03-13. Joint COGA/PMA Budget Proposals for General Assembly Per Capita Budgets 2016–2018

[Note: To be voted on Saturday.] [See p. 179.]

Item 03-14. Approve PC(USA) Child/Youth/Vulnerable Adult Protection Policy and Procedures—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

Comment: We must be accountable as the body of Christ, for that which is done in our name. The creation and maintenance of a safe, supportive, non-abusive environment for all of our participants in all that we do must be and will be priority for all Presbyterians as we work to be God’s people and do God’s work. We do this out of compassion for Kris Schondelmeyer and all other victims who have suffered abuse in the Presbyterian church. We further applaud Kris and his family for their courage, which has moved us to address this imperative subject.

Item 03-NB Approved. [See p. 188.]

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs the Office of the General Assembly to form a task force made up of representatives from mid councils and local governing bodies to work with congregations on implementing child/youth/vulnerable adults protection policies and appropriate responses.

[Financial Implication: Per Capita—$9,234 (2017); $9,234 (2018)]

Approved with comment. [See p. 188.]

Comment: Exceptions: 2015 minutes out of numerical order and unsigned.

Item 03-B. Minutes, Presbyterian Historical Society.

Approved with comment. [See p. 189.]

Comment: No exceptions.

Item 03-C. Minutes, General Assembly Committee on Representation.

Approved with comment. [See p. 189.]

Comment: With exceptions.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MID COUNCILS

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Todd Freeman, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Mid Councils. Moderator Freeman presented Item 05-05 with a motion to approve the committee's alternate resolution. Co-Moderator Anderson arrested the report for the Order of the Day: Worship. For the remainder of the report, see p. 32.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Associate Stated Clerk Joyce Lieberman reminded the assembly that daily General Assembly News was available at www.pcusa.org.

SERVICE OF DAILY WORSHIP

The Reverend Dr. Alice Ridgill, pastor, New Faith Presbyterian Church, West Greenwood, South Carolina, preached on the topic, "Difference Makers."

RECESS

The assembly recessed at 10:59 a.m.

Thursday, June 23, 2016, 1:37 P.M.

BUSINESS MEETING VII

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Denise Anderson, Co-Moderator, 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Halls CD of the Oregon Convention Center, Portland, Oregon.

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Adan Mariena of the Presbytery of Philadelphia who offered prayers for gun violence victims in his community.

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Elona Street-Stewart, executive of the Synod of Lakes and Prairies, who recognized local tribes and groups of native people, spoke on the relevancy of the Confession of Belhar and acts of reconciliation for Native Americans, and led the assembly in prayer.

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized General Assembly Trackers Jim Collie, Kathy Lueckert, and Kerry Clements who presented a Tracker shirt to Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons. Collie invited the assembly backstage staff to join them onstage, and he introduced Volunteer Platform Manager Conrad Rocha who presented Stated Clerk Parsons with a Gradye Parsons bobblehead on behalf of the assembly backstage volunteers.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Cheni Khonje, Vice-Moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, who moved Item 02-03, the docket as amended, allowing the Assembly Committee on Mid Councils to continue its report before the assembly takes up the committee reports previously scheduled during this session. Item 02-03 was approved as amended. (See p. 156.)

COMMISSIONING OF NEW MISSIONARIES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized PMA Interim Executive Director Tony De La Rosa for the commissioning of new missionaries. Presbyterian World Mission staff—Hunter Farrell, director of World Mission; Lydia Kim, young adult volunteer program associate for administration; Rachel Yates, associate director of program; Debra Braaksma, Africa area coordinator; and Amgad Beblawi, Middle East and Europe area coordinator—provided context for the commissioning and introduced a short video. The Reverend Dr. Kamal Youssef Yacoub, from the Evangelical Church of Egypt, Synod of the Nile, and the Reverend Douglas Chipofya, from the Church of Central Africa Presbyterian/Livingstonia Synod, assisted with the commissioning of the new missionaries.

MEMORIAL MINUTE FOR SYNGMAN RHEE
MODERATOR OF THE 212TH GENERAL ASSEMBLY (2000)

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Dean Thompson, president emeritus of Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary, who presented the memorial moment to celebrate the life of Syngman Rhee, Moderator of the 212th General Assembly (2000).

In 1948, when Syngman Rhee was kicked out of high school in the capital city of Pyongyang, North Korea, for his membership in a Christian minister's family, he was mercifully taken into the Sung Wha Methodist Seminary. At the seminary, he and 200 other outcasts were trained at a college level until late 1950. There, his major professor was a saint named Tae Sun Park.

In September 1950, Syngman's parish minister father, the Reverend Tae Suck Rhee, age 49, was martyred, while a prisoner, by the North Korean Communist regime. Before the United Nations troops came northward, Syngman's father and several other church leaders were shot and then buried in a common grave dug into an athletic field. One prisoner, who had miraculously survived those executions, led Syngman and his brother and their mother to the mass grave, where they retrieved Rev. Rhee's body, then arranged for a Christian funeral and burial. When the Chinese troops joined the war and arrived in early December 1950, Syngman's fearful mother, Song Hee Kim, a teacher in a Christian mission school, made the critical and agonizing decision to send her two sons on a life-saving trek southward toward Seoul with hundreds of other desperate refugees, many of whom died on the one-month walk in freezing weather to the tip of South Korea. Song Hee's last words to her sons foretold the unspeakable losses yet to come, for they would never see their mother again. "Remember to pray to God wherever you go, and we will see each other in our prayers," she promised them.

In January 1951, Syngman, age 19, and his brother, Syng Kyu Rhee, age 17, joined the South Korean Marines with whom they served as mortal combatants on the front lines of the Korean War. It was the only means of survival available to them. Because the two were from one family, Syngman was able to secure a discharge for his younger brother in 1953. While Syngman sent Syng Kyu to college, he remained with the South Korean Marines until he was discharged in 1955. Syng Kyu later became a prominent South Korean business leader and a generous supporter of orphanages.

Tae Sun Park, Syngman Rhee's revered professor at the Sung Wha Methodist Seminary, had also fled for his life from North Korea to South Korea. Thereafter, he made his way to the Boston University School of Theology where he earned his doctorate. During his graduate studies, Park was asked to speak at a church camp in the Boston area. Park used his speech to implore someone, anyone in the audience, to help him find a scholarship for one of his former students in North Korea, Syngman Rhee, then a refugee in South Korea. Miraculously, a person in that audience stepped forward: Dr. Charles Culpepper, a Methodist pastor from Elkins, West Virginia. Culpepper promised, then and there, that he personally could and would direct Park to a scholarship at Davis and Elkins College. That scholarship would be awarded if Syngman could name a U.S. citizen sponsor. Lieutenant Gunner Hansen, a Christian Marine officer in Quantico, Virginia, signed on as Syngman's sponsor; for in 1953–1954, Hansen and Rhee had become deeply respectful colleagues as they were trained together at the Quantico Marine Corps Base.

Surviving the bloody Korean War, Syngman journeyed from Seoul to Seattle, Washington; then from Seattle to Elkins for ten days on a Greyhound bus. After speaking at a Wednesday evening service at a Presbyterian church in Seattle, Syngman was provided his bus fare and arranged lodging with caring families along the way.

In January 1956, with a tuition scholarship in hand, but otherwise without sufficient financial resources, Syngman dedicated himself to his studies with intense determination at Davis and Elkins, a Presbyterian college nestled in the mountains of Appalachia. There, he felt called to follow in his courageous father's footsteps by studying for the gospel ministry. Through the advocacy and financial support of George H. Vick and Agnes Preston of First Presbyterian Church, Charleston, West Virginia, Syngman was enabled to complete his coming years at Davis and Elkins, and Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary.

The rest is history. Syngman graduated with honors from Louisville Seminary in 1960, and was ordained to the ministry of Word and Sacrament. He was married to Haesun Lee, a medical doctor and beloved friend from Korea, whose father, Chang Chun Lee, and mother, Changil Kim, had been educated together with Syngman's father at Union Christian College, Pyongyang, and had remained close friends across the years. (Chang Chun Lee was a Presbyterian elder, a supporter of Christian missionaries, and an owner of lumber and canning factories.) For many years, Agnes Preston served as a mother figure for Syngman and Haesun, and a grandmother figure for their children, Anna, Peter, and Mina. Syngman had pastorates in two American Presbyterian congregations in Kentucky. He was a campus minister at the University of Louisville, where he served as the first faculty advisor for the Black Student Union, was a brave participant in the U.S. Civil Rights Movement, and marched with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. He earned a master's degree from Yale University Divinity School, and a doctorate in Sociology of Religion from Chicago Theological Seminary. Syngman served the Presbyterian General Assembly staff for World Mission for twenty-five years (1973–1998). He was president of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. (1992–1993); Moderator of the 212th General Assembly (2000) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (2000–2001); and Distinguished Visiting Professor of Evangelism and Mission, Union Presbyterian Seminary, Richmond, Virginia (1998–2008). Haesun Rhee also served at Union Seminary as director of the Carl G. Howie Center for Science, Art, and Theology (1998–2007). Then, for another decade, Syngman was the director of Union's Asian American Ministry and Mission Center. He also dedicated his saintly life to the rebuilding of churches in North Korea, and the dream of reconciliation between North and South Korea, still painfully disunited and torn by hostility, suspicion, and conflict.

From his endangered teenage years in Korea, to the occasion of his new life in the great company of heaven, made possible by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, Syngman's own remarkable life work has blessed our human race as a wonderful parable of the Spirit's leading, comforting, energizing, uniting, and prophetic power in our midst. He literally poured himself out across this small spaceship earth as an exemplary and trustworthy "servant of Christ and steward of the mysteries of God" (1 Corinthians 4:1–2). Infused with inspiring mystical sensitivity, Syngman's style of leadership was a marvelous blending of competence, confidence, and humility. Indeed, he carried his deserved laurels as self-effacingly as any outstanding leader I have ever known. As a revered pastor, chaplain, teacher, preacher, administrator, and international church leader, Dr. Rhee has glorified God and served church, world, and neighbor as a preeminent role model of Christian statesmanship.

Today, by the grace of God, we stand on Syngman's shoulders. We, all of us, are his debtors.

INTERCULTURAL MINISTRIES PRESENTATION

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Tony De La Rosa, who spoke about intercultural ministries, and recognized Rhshell Hunter, director of racial ethnic/women's ministries, for a short video presentation.

MOTION TO LIMIT DEBATE

Commissioners approved a motion to limit comments and debate to one minute (60 seconds).

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MID COUNCILS

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Moderator Todd Freeman and Vice-Moderator Karen Sapio of the Assembly Committee on Mid Councils to continue the committee's report. (For the first part of the report, see p. 30.)

Moderator Freeman presented Item 05-05, which was approved with an alternate resolution.

Vice-Moderator Sapio presented Item 05-06, which was disapproved.

Vice-Moderator Sapio presented Item 05-10 as amended with comment. Commissioners approved an amendment to the item as presented by the committee. Commissioners also passed a motion restoring voting time to twenty seconds with electronic devices with a recount only if the vote is within twenty votes. After additional discussion from the floor, commissioners voted to disapprove Item 05-10 as amended in plenary. After some debate, the assembly reconsidered Item 05-10 as presented by the committee, and it was approved with amendment and with comment.

Vice-Moderator Sapio presented Item 05-09 as amended with comment. She made an immediate motion to amend the item to reinsert [sexual misconduct policy and a] in the fourth paragraph of G-3.0106. The motion was approved. Item 05-09 was then approved as amended.

Moderator Freeman presented Item 05-11, which was approved as amended with comment.

Vice-Moderator Sapio presented Item 05-08 as amended with comment, which was approved. Vice-Moderator Sapio then presented Item 05-07, to be answered with the action taken on Item 05-08. It was approved.

Moderator Freeman presented Item 05-01. A minority report was moved. The main motion was perfected. The substitute motion (minority report) was amended and perfected. Commissioners voted against making the substitute motion the main motion. The main motion, to approve Item 05-01 with comment, was approved.

Moderator Freeman presented Item 05-15, to be answered with the action on Item 05-01. It was approved. Moderator Freeman then presented Item 05-12 for approval with comment, which was approved.

Vice-Moderator Sapio referred to Item 05-14, which was approved as part of the Wednesday Consent Agenda. She offered prayers to celebrate the ministry of the now dissolved Presbytery of Central Washington.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on Mid Councils. A summary of the report is as follows:

Assembly Committee on Mid Councils

Wednesday Consent Agenda items indicated by an asterisk.

There are no items with financial implications in this report.

I. Plenary Action

Item 05-01. On Rescinding the Actions of the 221st General Assembly (2014) That Directed the Establishment of a New Configuration of Synod Boundaries (Item 05-04)—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

Approved with comment. [See p. 279.]

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) would like to recommend to synods that they continue conversation and collaboration of ministry and mission between and among synods. This includes encouraging synods to offer assistance to struggling synods, including the possibility of changing boundaries to increase the vitality and viability of synods. Further, the assembly urges synods to undertake an intentional system of review and self-study and to report to General Assembly on a biannual basis.

Item 05-02. On Restoring the Boundaries of the Presbytery of the Pacific to Its Status Prior to the 2012 Revisions— from the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii.

Approve as amended. [See p. 281.]

Amend the third paragraph as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of the Pacific is the corporate expression of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) consisting of all the churches and ~~[ministers of the Word and Sacrament]~~ [teaching elders] within the County of Los Angeles in the State of California lying southerly and westerly of the following described line: commencing at the intersection of the Pacific Ocean and Mulholland Highway; thence northerly and easterly along Mulholland Highway to its intersection with Mulholland Drive; thence easterly along Mulholland Drive (including the Bel Air Presbyterian Church) to the Hollywood Freeway; thence southeasterly along the Hollywood Freeway to Franklin Avenue; thence easterly along Franklin Avenue to Western Avenue; thence southerly along Western Avenue to Sunset Boulevard; thence easterly along Sunset Boulevard to Fountain Avenue; thence easterly along Fountain Avenue to Hyperion Avenue; thence northerly along Hyperion Avenue to Rowena Avenue; thence southeasterly along Rowena Avenue to Fletcher Drive; thence northeasterly along Fletcher Drive to the Southern Pacific Railroad; thence southerly along the Southern Pacific Railroad to its intersection with Alhambra Avenue; thence easterly along Alhambra Avenue to the Los Angeles River; thence southerly along the Los Angeles River to the city limits of Vernon; thence along the westerly city limits of Vernon, Huntington Park, South Gate, Lynwood, Compton, and Long Beach to the Pacific Ocean; also all the churches and ~~[ministers of the Word and Sacrament]~~ [teaching elders] within the State of Hawaii and the Midway Island Group. Churches and ~~[ministers of the Word and Sacrament]~~ [teaching elders] who are members of the Hanmi Presbytery are excepted.”¹”

Item 05-03. Item 05-03 not referred for lack of concurrence.

Item 05-04. Item 05-04 not referred for lack of concurrence.

Item 05-05. On Amending G-3.0106 Requiring All Councils to Adopt a Dependent Care Policy—From the Presbytery of Great Rivers.

Approved an alternate resolution. [See p. 282.]

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop resources for councils of all levels to provide for dependent-care policies.

Item 05-06. On Developing a National Child Protection Policy Model—From the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley.

Disapproved. [See p. 285.]

Item 05-07. On Amending the Current Authoritative Interpretation of G-3.0403c Concerning Nongeographic Presbyteries—From the Eastern Korean Presbytery.

Answered by the action taken on Item 05-08. [See p. 286.]

Item 05-08. On Replacing the Current Authoritative Interpretation of G-3.0403c with New Text—From the Eastern Korean Presbytery.

Approved as amended with comment. [See p. 288.]

“2. Authoritative interpretation of G-3.0301:

“~~“ [Presbyteries, including nongeographic presbyteries,]~~ [No presbytery] shall ~~[not]~~ start ministries within the geographic bounds of other presbyteries and synods without the approval of those councils.”

Comment: The General Assembly invites and encourages all Korean-speaking congregations located in the six western synods (Alaska-Northwest, the Pacific, Southern California and Hawaii, the Southwest, the Rocky Mountains, and the Sun) to remain in contact with the synod in which they are physically located in order to have voice in the intentional consideration of a Korean-language presbytery in the western United States called for in Item 05-11, Recommendation 3.

Item 05-09. A Resolution to Ensure Adoption and Implementation of Child/Youth Protection Policies and Resources in the PC(USA)—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Approve as amended with comment. [See p. 290.]

Amend the third paragraph as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“All councils shall adopt and implement a sexual misconduct policy and a child and youth protection policy. ~~[In addition, all councils shall adopt and implement a sexual misconduct policy. These two policies shall be two different policies with differentiated intents. The child and youth protection policy is directed specifically for working with and interactions involving children and youth within the church or in church-sponsored activities, while the sexual misconduct policy is directed toward proactively preventing and responding to sexual misconduct involving all people of all ages within the church and in church-sponsored activities.]”~~

Comment: The General Assembly notes that two separate policies are intended by this sentence, with different intents. The child and youth protection policy is intended to address interactions involving children and youth within the church or in church-sponsored activities. The sexual misconduct policy is directed toward proactively preventing and responding to sexual misconduct involving all people of all ages within the church and in church-sponsored activities.

Item 05-10. A Resolution to Require and Expand Family Leave Policies—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Amend Recommendations 1. and 2. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“~~[1. Urge all presbyteries and congregations to create a family leave policy that each member congregation can adopt, which includes at a minimum six weeks paid leave and an additional six weeks unpaid leave during a twelve-month period for new mothers and fathers for the birth or adoption of or to care for a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance.]~~

“~~[2. Direct the six agencies of the General Assembly (Board of Pensions, Foundation, Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., Presbyterian Mission Agency, and Presbyterian~~

~~Publishing Corporation) to improve their family leave policies by the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to include at a minimum six weeks paid leave and an additional six weeks unpaid leave during a twelve-month period for eligible (individuals employed full-time for twelve months before taking the leave) new parents for the birth or adoption of, or to care for a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance.]~~

“[Urge all presbyteries, synods, and sessions to evaluate their leave policies for new mothers and fathers for the birth or adoption of, or to care for, a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance.]”

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) urges the six agencies of the General Assembly to evaluate leaves of absence, considering at least six weeks paid leave as a minimum for new parents for the birth or adoption of, or to care for, a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance.

Item 05-11. The Task Force for Korean-Speaking Congregations.

Approved as amended with comment. [See p. 294.]

Amend Recommendations 1. and 3. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

~~“1. Direct the [Presbyterian Mission Agency or the] Office of the General Assembly to create a [permanent] staff position, working in coordination with the Office of Mid Council Ministries [and the Presbyterian Mission Agency], for the purposes of supporting and nurturing healthy, connectional Korean-language congregations and presbyteries and second-generation Korean congregations, and request that any committee or task force created by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to study the structure of the General Assembly agencies consider continuing such a position in any recommendations it makes.”~~

~~“3. [Direct any administrative commission, committee, or task force created by the 222nd General Assembly (2016)] to consider reorganization of synod boundaries to include in its work consideration of whether a nongeographic, Korean-language presbytery can be created in the western United States,] [Ask synods of the west (Alaska-Northwest, the Pacific, Southern California and Hawaii, the Southwest, the Rocky Mountains, and the Sun) to intentionally consider the viability of creating a new Korean, nongeographic presbytery in the western United States,] consistent with the concerns addressed in this report regarding healthy relationships between Korean-language and geographic presbyteries and the constitutional protection of full representation of men and women in the leadership of such a presbytery and the congregations therein.”~~

Comment (Comment to Overture): The 216th General Assembly (2016) strongly advises that the western synods consider forming a nongeographic Korean presbytery.

Comment on Rationale to Overture: <https://www.pc-biz.org/#/search/3000089> The rationale that accompanies this report implies that the only issues for ministry to LGBTQ persons in Korean-speaking congregations are related to ordination and marriage. This implication is incorrect. The General Assembly reminds all Presbyterians and congregations of the long-standing advocacy of the PC(USA) for the civil rights and personal safety of LGBTQ persons.

Item 05-12. Request for Constitutional Interpretation of Resolving Tensions between F-1.0403, F-1.0404, and F-3.0202—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

Approved with comment. [See p. 298.]

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) recognizes the value of making room for all people at the table of decision-making in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We urge councils, at all levels, to actively consider ways to involve, in the whole life of the church, those previously left out from the table. This includes, but is not limited to, young adults and those involved in new worshiping communities. We further recommend to the Synod of the Northeast to continue their productive conversations regarding this issue and bring to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) a tangible recommendation.

*Item 05-13. Synod Report Regarding Synod Boundaries.

Answered by the action taken on Item 05-01. [See p. 300.]

*Item 05-14. On Merging the Presbyteries of Central Washington and Northwest Coast—From the Synod of Alaska-Northwest.

Approved. [See p. 304.]

Item 05-15. On Requesting Exemption on Any Action the Assembly Might Take to Reduce the Number of Synods—From the Synod of Alaska-Northwest.

Answered by the action taken on Item 05-01. [See p. 305.]

II. Committee Final Action and Report to Assembly

Item 05-A. Review of Synod Minutes.

BUSINESS MEETING VIII

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Jan Edmiston, Co-Moderator, 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Halls CD of the Oregon Convention Center, Portland, Oregon.

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Samson Tso from the Presbytery of New York City who shared his story and opened the assembly with prayer.

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized five advisory delegates and commissioners who had inspired stories of hope.

COGA PRESENTATION TO THE STATED CLERK

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Lemuel Garcia-Arroyo and other members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly for a special presentation honoring Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons and his family. Garcia-Arroyo introduced Moderator Margaret Elliott and Vice-Moderator Jim Wilson, Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, who presented Stated Clerk Parsons a Gradye Parsons Word Cloud. Stated Clerk Parsons addressed the assembly. Eileen Lindner, member of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, reported that the committee has worked with the Presbyterian Historical Society to develop a Stated Clerk Square at the Presbyterian Historical Society to commemorate our Stated Clerks. Barbara Gaddis, incoming moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, led the assembly in prayer.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Moderator George Anderson of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures. Moderator Anderson presented the docket as amended, Item 02-03. Tonight, the Assembly Committee on the Way Forward, the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination, and the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues will report. The assembly will recess no later than 11:30 p.m. Tomorrow morning, after the Stated Clerk election and installation, the assembly will hear from the Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry.

Item 02-03 as amended was approved. (See p. 156.)

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THE WAY FORWARD

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Steve Aeschbacher, moderator of the Assembly Committee on the Way Forward, and Cynthia Jarvis, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on the Way Forward to make their committee's report.

Moderator Aeschbacher presented Item 04-NB. Item 04-NB was approved. He then presented Item 04-07, which was approved with an alternate resolution. Moderator Aeschbacher presented Items 04-08 and 04-11 to be answered with the action of Item 04-07. Items 04-08 and 04-11 were approved to answer both with the action taken on Item 04-07.

Moderator Aeschbacher presented Items 04-01, 04-02, 04-03, 04-04, 04-05, 04-06, 04-09, 04-10, and 04-13 as a block action with the committee recommendation to disapprove Item 04-01 with comment and to answer Items 04-02, 04-03, 04-04, 04-05, 04-06, 04-09, 04-10, and 04-13 with the action taken on Item 04-01. The assembly disapproved Item 04-01 with comment and approved answering Items 04-02, 04-03, 04-04, 04-05, 04-06, 04-09, 04-10, and 04-13 with the action taken on Item 04-01.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on the Way Forward. A summary of the report is as follows:

I. Plenary Action

Item 04-01. On Amending G-3.0503 and G-6.04 Regarding Meetings of the General Assembly and Amending the Constitution—From the Presbytery of Foothills.

Disapproved with comment. [See p. 211.]

[Comment: We recommend that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) disapprove Items 04-01, 04-02, 04-03, 04-04, 04-05, 04-06, 04-09, 04-10, and 04-13 with comment:]

1. The committee thanks the presbyteries who submitted and concurred with these overtures for opening the conversation and calls on future General Assemblies to continue to explore ways of better engaging the whole church in important decisions.

2. The General Assembly calls upon the whole church to do the following:

a. Recommit ourselves at the congregational level, the mid council level, and the national levels of our church to advocate with all of our voice for, in the words of Moderator Edmiston to the Assembly Committee on the Way Forward, “that which breaks God’s heart in our neighborhoods” and to seek opportunities to take risks for and with the poor, the marginalized, and the excluded in our communities.

b. Call on our congregations to recommit to a biblical witness focused on values upon which the Presbytery of Foothills based their series of overtures of unity, community, diversity, and transformation, and reaffirm our foundational commitment to social justice from the historical documents of the church, including the Book of Confessions and existing social witness policy.

c. Call on our presbyteries and synods to place these values at the center of their concerns and work together within their unique ministry contexts.

d. Ask the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to consider focusing time during future General Assemblies for creating opportunities for dreaming an ongoing way forward and to work in consultation with the committees on local arrangements to engage all of the commissioners, delegates, and observers in acts of service to and with communities at risk.

e. Commend the OGA for its commitment to ensure that the voices of peoples long silenced, from within our church and outside of it (including interfaith voices), are invited to share with and challenge it and encourages congregations, mid councils, and future assemblies to do the same.

By disapproving these overtures with comment we can help move toward a more faithful, more just, and more hopeful vision of who we are as Christ’s church. We have an opportunity to bring the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) into these important conversations through invitations, through education, through prayerful consideration, and not through constitutional changes.

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-01. [See p. 216.]

Item 04-03. On Amending G-6.04e.to Require a Two-Thirds Majority Vote to Amend the Constitution—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-01. [See p. 217.]

Item 04-04. On Adding G-3.0105c. to Permit a Presbytery to Abstain on Constitutional Changes—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-01. [See p. 220.]

Item 04-05. On Adding a New Standing Rule L.2. Identifying the Right of Presbyteries and Synods to Submit Overtures Changing the Standing Rules—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-01. [See p. 221.]

Item 04-06. On Amending G-3.05 On the Review of the Manual of the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-01. [See p. 223.]

Item 04-07. On Merging the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly into a Single Entity—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

In response to Item 04-07, the assembly approved the following resolution: [See p. 224.]

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) recommends that the Co-Moderators of the 222nd General Assembly (2016), together with the Moderator and Vice-Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014), name a Way Forward Commission to study and identify a vision for the structure and function of the General Assembly agencies of the PC(USA). That vision shall take into account the ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), but shall not be bound by the current configuration of those ministries, except where mandated by the church’s Constitution. The mandate of the commission is to engage/contract a qualified, examination team that may include some or all of the All Agency Review team, with the requisite skills and abilities to assess institutional performance, both internally among the agencies and externally as they interface with the congregations. This examination team is charged with conducting a comprehensive, detailed analysis that will provide clearly detailed, measurable recommendations for improvements to the commission for implementation by the agencies. The commission shall further describe and implement a General-Assembly level staffing pattern that will accomplish its vision. The commission shall be guided in its development and articulation of this vision and structure by Reformed ecclesiology as expressed in our Constitution.

In the discharge of its responsibilities, the commission shall:

1. Integrate the recommendations provided by the All Agency Review Committee, the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly.

a. All recommendations should be reviewed by the commission to determine which should be implemented by the appropriate agencies.

b. The commission will monitor implementation across the agencies

2. Visit with and explore

a. the best practices of other national church bodies,

b. the best practices of corporations and nonprofits, as deemed helpful.

3. Consult with

a. seminary faculty and presidents,

b. presbytery and synod leaders.

4. Explore other resources they deem helpful and prudent

And shall be empowered to

1. take such administrative actions in both OGA and PMA as may move the General Assembly staff in the direction of its vision;

2. recommend to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) such changes in Standing Rules as may move the church in the direction of its vision;

3. recommend to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) any amendments to the Book of Order as may move the church in the direction of its vision.

4. explore the best way for Shared Services to serve these agencies.

The commission shall be comprised of no more than twelve voting members (with a quorum to be a simple majority of seven) at least two of whom should be members of the 2016 Assembly Committee on the Way Forward, with every effort made to include an advisory delegate from that committee. The commission membership will include a representative from both the PMA Review Committee and the OGA Review Committee, a representative from both the current Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), and at least one mid council staff person.

We agree with the PMA Review Committee that the commission consist of the following:

1. The commission shall be made up of ruling and teaching elders with broad geographic, racial, ethnic, and gender diversity, a total of at most twelve commissioners.

2. The PMA and OGA will each appoint a staff person to serve as staff support for the commission.

3. The commission's work will be informed by other churchwide conversations on the future of the church and its structure.

4. The assembly will allocate sufficient resources so that this commission can meet regularly and consult with other PC(USA) constituents, as well as others who could provide insight into the process. There should be at least two face-to-face meetings in one year and with as many electronic meetings as deemed necessary.

5. Recommendations for any missional and structural changes will be brought to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) in compliance with all Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

Rationale

The business before this committee consistently called for study of our current structure, expressed concern for the culture and administration of the PMA and OGA bodies, and posited a hope for change that will make us a more efficient, inclusive, culturally sensitive, and visionary denomination.

We appreciate the substantial work of the PMA and OGA review committees and those who developed and concurred with the amendments that have been brought to our committee. As we pursued responses to what was proposed, we recognized that it would be better to first identify the purposes and immediate foci that will govern our next steps and then address issues of structure and staffing.

We have limited the size of the commission in response to studies, and in consideration of our own process, which indicate that the decision-making abilities of committees is diminished as size increases. The inclusion of a young adult advisory delegate (YAAD) is a direct response to the insightful, articulate input our committee has received from its YAAD participants. We believe their involvement is an important component in achieving greater inclusivity and broadened perspective as we make our way forward.

Item 04-08. On Authorizing the Hiring of a Consultant to Assess the Relationship of OGA and PMA and the Need for Their Continued Existence as Two Separate Entities—From the Presbytery of St. Andrew.

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-07. [See p. 232.]

Item 04-09. On Creating a General Assembly Reform Coordinating Committee to Renew the Practice of Our Reformed Polity for the 21st Century—From the Presbytery of Foothills.

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-01. [See p. 235.]

Item 04-10. On Amending Book of Order G-6.04e and Standing Rule F.5.b.(1) to Require Two-Thirds Vote on Constitutional Changes—From the Presbytery de Cristo.

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-01. [See p. 236.]

Item 04-11. Report of the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-07. [See p. 237.]

Item 04-12. *Report of the Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly.

*Recommendation 1. Approved. [See p. 249.]

*Recommendation 2. Approved. [See p. 249.]

*Recommendation 3. Approved. [See p. 249.]

*Recommendation 4. Approved. [See p. 250.]

Item 04-13. On Amending Book of Order, G-6.04e, Concerning the Role of the ACC and PJC When Constitutional Questions Are Considered by the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

Answered by the action taken on Item 04-01. [See p. 256.]

Item 04-New Business. 2020 Vision Team.

Approved. [See p. 257.]

The Assembly Committee on the Way Forward recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) direct the Co-Moderators, in consultation with the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) and the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR), to name a “2020 Vision Team” of fifteen people to develop a guiding statement for the denomination and make a plan for its implementation with all deliberate speed. The process of developing such a guiding statement will help us to name and claim our denominational identity as we seek to follow the Spirit into the future.

1. The committee shall be made up of the following:

- a. At least six teaching elders and at least six ruling elders.
 - b. The following demographic traits should be considered when naming members of the committee: gender identity; geographic location; inclusion of people under the age of forty (with special attention paid to young adult advisory delegates (YAADs) serving on the Assembly Committee on “The Way Forward” of the 222nd General Assembly (2016)); racial ethnic minorities; those engaged in both parish and validated ministries; theological diversity (people representative of all the “clusters” identified in “When We Gather at the Table”).
 - c. The following skill sets should be considered when naming members of the committee: strategic planning, visioning, experience on administrative commissions.
 - d. The Co-Moderators of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall serve as additional, ex officio, members of this committee.
2. The committee shall build upon the work begun in “When We Gather at the Table” as well as Moderator Heath Rada’s report made to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).
 3. The committee should conduct targeted listening exercises with various constituencies throughout the PC(USA) in an effort to discern where the Spirit is leading the church in the future. These may include, but are not limited to, congregations, presbyteries, synods, and seminaries. Such conversations should center on the calling of the church (Book of Order, F-1.03) as well as the vision these constituencies have of how God is calling them to respond to “what breaks God’s heart” in their communities.
 4. The committee should also look outside the walls of the church to seek best practices and resources for being relevant to the changing landscapes of local, national, and international communities.
 5. The committee will develop recommendations that shall be the only business for the Assembly Committee on The Way Forward to review at the 223rd General Assembly (2018). The only exception would be overtures that respond directly to any reports from the 2020 Vision Team. The intention is that there will be a new vision for the denomination by the 224th General Assembly (2020).
 6. The assembly shall allocate sufficient resources for this committee to effectively accomplish its work.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Eileen Best, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination, and Luis Ocasio-Torres, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination.

Moderator Best presented Item 10-11, which was approved. Moderator Best noted that the financial implications of Item 10-11 will add $52,000 to the 2017 Mission Budget and $52,000 to the 2018 Mission Budget.

Moderator Best presented Item 10-10, Recommendation 1, which was approved. He then presented Item 10-10, Recommendation 2, which was approved with amendment.

Moderator Best yielded the microphone to Vice-Moderator Luis Ocasio-Torres of the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination. Vice-Moderator Luis Ocasio-Torres presented Item 10-08, which was approved. He then presented Item 10-16, which was disapproved. Vice-Moderator Ocasio-Torres yielded the microphone back to Moderator Best.

Moderator Best presented Item 10-13. Item 10-13 was approved with amendment. Moderator Best then presented Item 10-03. Item 10-03 was approved with amendment and with comment. Moderator Best then reported on the committee final actions (Item 10A through Item 10D).

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination. A summary of the report is as follows:

I. Plenary Action

Item 10-01. On Seeking to Eradicate Slavery from the Supply Chains of Vendors and Other Businesses That the PC(USA) and Its Various Bodies Do Business—From the Presbytery of Newark.*

Approved as amended. [See p. 567.]

Amend the recommendation section as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“1. Encourage the ministries and agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to be aware of the presence of slavery [and forced labor] in international chains of commerce.

“2. Encourage the ministries and agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to inquire of each vendor with which they do business (a) that the vendor [ascertain and/or] disclose the nature and extent of slavery [and forced labor] in its supply chains, (b) that the vendor disclose the programs and strategies that it has adopted to eradicate slavery [and forced labor] from its supply chains, and (c) that the vendor provide to the inquiring ministry or agency those reports, analyses, and other materials that confirm or otherwise illuminate the vendor’s representations.

“3. Encourage the ministries and agencies that invest in companies to inquire of each company in which they make an investment (a) that the company [ascertain and/or] disclose the nature and extent of slavery [and forced labor] in its supply chains, (b) that the company disclose the programs and strategies that it has adopted to eradicate slavery [and forced labor] from its supply chains, and (c) that the company provide to the inquiring ministry or agency those reports, analyses, and other materials that confirm or otherwise illuminate the company’s representations.

“4. Encourage the ministries and agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do business with and make investments in those companies that (a) have a rigorous program intended to eradicate slavery [and forced labor] from their supply chains and (b) disclose those reports and other information that enable the ministries and agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and such other persons as may be interested, to understand and evaluate the program that is intended to eradicate slavery [and forced labor] from the company’s supply chains.”

Item 10-02. Item 10-02 not referred for lack of concurrence.

Item 10-03. On Taking Specific Action to Address the Worsening Plight of the African American Male—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh.

Approved as amended with comment. [See p. 570.]

“1. Take specific action, not just in word, but also in deed, to address and improve the worsening plight of the African American male in [any of the] five specified cities as a pilot initiative pointing toward future and further nationwide intervention. Micah 6:8, with its powerful words to ‘Do justice, love kindness and walk humbly [with your God],’ calls us to action and not only proclamation. The following are the five cities where the plight of the African American male is especially egregious, including one where a future General Assembly will be held, and are the ones designated for specific action:

- “• Baltimore, Maryland [site of the 224th General Assembly (2020)]
- “• Charlotte, North Carolina
- “• Cleveland, Ohio
- “• New York, New York
- “• Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania “Specific actions to be taken include:

“~~[f.] [a.]~~ Request synods, presbyteries, and congregations to advocate for policies at the local and state levels that will change the structures that contribute to the demise of the black male;

“~~[a.] [b.]~~ [Encourage the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), mid councils, and congregations to develop] [P][p]rograms that address recidivism

“~~[b.] [c.]~~[Encourage the PMA, mid councils, and congregations to develop] [P][p]rograms that address and engage local congregational and community members that speak the language of and to African American males aged 6–25 years;

“~~[e.] [d.]~~[Encourage the PMA, mid councils, and congregations to develop] [P][p]rograms that empower African American males to develop hireable skills so that all of the beloved community benefits;

“~~[d.] [c.]~~[Encourage the PMA, mid councils, and congregations to collaborate with] [Programs of partnership between the congregations, presbyteries, and synods of the] PC(USA) [with] established agencies/groups such as [National Black Presbyterian Caucus,] My Brother’s Keeper, 100 Black Men of America, Amachi, Big Brothers and Big Sisters, the Boy Scouts of America: Scoutreach (an urban emphasis program), and the Open Table;

“~~[e.] [f.]~~ Request synods, presbyteries, and congregations to provide resources for the establishment and support of programs ~~[within their bounds]~~ that provide for prevention and rehabilitation in the areas of substance abuse and job placement and security;

“g. Request synods, presbyteries, and congregations to celebrate particular black males who are role models and members of extended families for the contributions to the whole society.”

“2. ~~[Access the Hawkins Buchanan Fund for Racial Justice for a portion, if not all, of the five million dollars anticipated to be necessary to support this overture.] [Request that congregations and mid councils join in this ministry by offering the funding received by the congregations in the Peace & Global Witness offering to fund this initiative.~~

“[3. Encourage presbyteries to partner with concurring presbyteries by participating in a one-time special offering challenging each presbytery to raise at least $30,000 to address the worsening plight of the African American male.

“[4. Establish a ministry partnership fund with the Presbyterian Foundation to be administered by the five pilot presbyteries.

“[5. Partner with Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) in its public violence disaster responses when those community events are rooted in the plight of African American males.]”

Comment: This concern prevails in the U.S.A. beyond the African American communities and applies to Hispanic, Native American, and all poor communities.

Disapproved. [See p. 626.]

Approved. [See p. 629.]

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) recommends that the Office of the General Assembly review the guidelines for reviewing the minutes, as they had not been updated since the 1990s. The guidelines should reflect the computerized nature of the minutes being reviewed.

II. Committee Final Action and Report to Assembly

[The items listed below were acted upon and approved by the assembly committee. No further action is needed and is here for information only.]

Approved. [See p. 629.]

Item 10-B. Minutes, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

Approved with comment. [See p. 631.]

Comment: From the electronic versions, it was not possible to determine whether three conditions were met: (1) was there a calendar year submission, (2) were they submitted to General Assembly on the first day, and (3) were the minutes deposited with the Department of History? Perhaps the minutes protocol should additionally include a certification block that verifies these three conditions were met.

Additionally, Subcommittee member, Kenneth Whitehurst, requested his comments from his review of the Minutes of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board's Executive Committee be added to these considerations:

1. Called Meeting Full Record June 4, 2015—10:00 a.m. EDT—Teleconference: No differentiation among who are members, who is staff, who is visitor. An attorney was present but not classified. Page numbering required by General Guideline 10 was not present. Marginal topic headings (Style Guideline #3) indicating “Public Session” or “Closed Session” might be helpful.

2. Called Meeting Full Record July 14, 2015—6:00 p.m. EDT—Teleconference: These minutes do not indicate an appointment of a clerk pro tem, nor who called the roll; minutes are unsigned by anyone. Page numbering is missing, and depending on the eventual placement of signatures on page 2, a slash may be required per General Guideline 11.

The Subcommittee on Minutes would also like to recognize each reviewer's efforts in contributing to a total of fifty-one reviews of minutes:

Schaeffer, R. Jill: 2014-09-29 PMAB Exec Minutes; 2014-11-10 PMAB Exec Minutes; 2014-11-20 PMAB Exec Minutes; 2014-12-11 PMAB Exec Minutes; 2015-01-22 PMAB Exec Minutes; 2015-02-20 PMAB Exec Minutes; 2015-03-04 PMAB Exec Minutes.

Marple, Presbytery of Western New York; Taeler Morgan, Presbytery of Olympia; Mickey Stueck, Presbytery of Santa Barbara; Gale Watkins, Presbytery of Grand Canyon; Augustine Wright III, Presbytery of Stockton.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL JUSTICE ISSUES

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Patricia Tull, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues, and Bobby Musengwa, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues.

Moderator Tull presented Item 11-22, which was approved as amended. He then presented Item 11-06, which was answered with the action taken on Item 11-22. Moderator Tull presented Item 11-12. Item 11-12 was approved as amended.

Moderator Tull presented Item 11-24. Item 11-24, Recommendations 1.a.–e., 2, 3, 5, and 6 were approved. Item 11-24, Recommendation 1.f. was referred to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board with comment. Item 11-24, Recommendations 4 and 7 were approved as amended. He then presented Item 11-17, which was answered by the action on Item 11-24. Moderator Tull yielded the microphone to Vice-Moderator Musengwa.

Vice-Moderator Musengwa presented Item 11-08, which was approved as amended. Musengwa then presented Item 11-20, which was approved.

The assembly approved a motion to consider Items 11-18, 11-03, 11-21, and 11-25 in a block vote. Vice-Moderator Musengwa presented Items 11-18, 11-03, 11-21, and 11-25 for a block vote. Items 11-18 (approve), 11-03 (approve as amended and with comment), 11-21 (approve) and 11-25 (approve with comment) were approved in one block vote.

Vice-Moderator Musengwa presented Items 11-01 and 11-02, which were answered by the action taken on Item 11-03. Musengwa yielded the microphone to Moderator Tull.

Tull presented Item 11-05, which was answered by an alternate resolution.

Cheni Khonje, Vice-Moderator of the Committee on Bills and Overtures, moved to arrest the report and continue at the scheduled time together. The motion was approved. [For the remainder of the report, see p. 53.]

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons made the evening's announcements.

CLOSING PRAYER

Theological Student Advisory Delegate Ricky "Lee" Sartain, from Union Theological Seminary (New York), offered the closing prayer for this session of the General Assembly.

RECESS

The assembly recessed at 11:22 p.m.

Friday, June 24, 2016, 8:30 A.M.

BUSINESS MEETING IX

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Denise Anderson, Co-Moderator, 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Halls CD of the Oregon Convention Center, Portland, Oregon. Co-Moderator Anderson led the assembly in prayer for the people affected by the Greenbrier River flooding in West Virginia.

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Amgad Beblawi, Presbyterian Mission Agency area coordinator for the Middle East, Central Asia, and Europe, who introduced the ecumenical guests bringing greetings and prayer.

The Reverend Dr. Kamal Youssef Yacoub, ecumenical advisory delegate from the Evangelical Church of Egypt, Synod of the Nile, brought greetings. The Reverend Dr. Derek Browning, ecumenical representative from the Church of Scotland, led the assembly in prayer.

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons, who explained that many individuals on the platform were wearing bow ties to honor Bill Forbes, who for nearly thirty-five years served as platform manager for every meeting of the General Assembly. Bill was never seen on the platform without his signature bow tie, and to honor him and all the volunteers who give of their time to make the assembly work, it was announced that today was Bow Tie Friday at the assembly.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Cheni Khonje, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, for a report from the committee.

Vice-Moderator Khonje presented the amended docket, Item 02-03. The revision scheduled the arrested report of the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues for the afternoon plenary today before the other two committee reports already scheduled for the afternoon. The amended docket, Item 02-03, was approved. [See p. 156.]

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS UPDATE:
REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Mary Lou Cox, moderator of the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures, for a report on financial implications on the per capita budget of actions taken at this assembly thus far. Moderator Cox announced that the total financial implications of actions approved by the assembly amount to: $5,000 for 2016; $254,083 for 2017, representing an increase of $0.16 to per capita; and $270,583 for 2018, representing an $0.18 increase to per capita. Implications of pending actions recommended by assembly committees amount to: $8,120 for 2016 and $8,120 for 2017. This would represent an additional increase in the General Assembly per capita apportionment of approximately $0.01 per member for 2017 and would total an increase in per capita of $0.17 for 2017. On Saturday morning, the committee is scheduled to present to the assembly its final recommendation for balancing the per capita budget for 2017 and 2018.

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS UPDATE:
REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Eileen Best, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination, for a report on financial implications to the mission budget of actions taken at this assembly thus far. Moderator Best reported the total financial implications of actions taken so far by the assembly amount to $187,212 for 2017; and $59,476 for 2018. Items still under consideration by the assembly for the mission budget total $146,932 for 2017; and $192,166 for 2018. On Saturday morning, the committee is scheduled to present to the assembly its final recommendation for balancing the mission budget for 2017 and 2018.

ELECTION OF THE STATED CLERK

Co-Moderator Anderson called for the election of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, as required by Standing Rule H.2.b. Stated Clerk Parsons described the procedure for the election.

Having been nominated during the second plenary of the assembly (Item 00-02, p. 78), the nominee of the Stated Clerk Nominating Committee, J. Herbert Nelson, and the other candidate for Stated Clerk, David M. Baker, were afforded an opportunity to address the General Assembly for five minutes each. The candidates then responded to questions from the floor for a period of thirty minutes. The candidates were then escorted from the hall by Platform Manager Conrad Rocha. Stated Clerk Parsons explained the electronic voting procedures.

J. Herbert Nelson was elected Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on the first ballot, receiving a total of 447 votes. Of the total votes cast, David M. Baker received 112 votes. Co-Moderator Anderson declared that J. Herbert Nelson was duly elected to the office of Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

J. Herbert Nelson was accompanied to the platform by family members and friends. Margaret Elliot, moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly; Jim Wilson, vice-moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly; Stated Clerk Parsons; Co-Moderator Anderson; and Co-Moderator Edmiston participated in the service of installation for Stated Clerk-elect, J. Herbert Nelson. The Reverend Jerrod Lowry led the assembly in prayer.

SPECIAL PRESENTATION TO THE NEWLY ELECTED STATED CLERK

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Young Ghil Lee, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Inter-faith Relations, who presented a hand-knitted prayer stole to Stated Clerk-elect Nelson.

Stated Clerk-elect J. Herbert Nelson addressed the assembly.

REPORT OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY NOMINATING COMMITTEE

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Amy Kim Kyremes-Parks, moderator of the General Assembly Nominating Committee, who reported that on Wednesday the assembly was informed of additional nominations from the General Assembly Nominating Committee in Item 00-05 and was instructed how to submit nominations from the floor. Moderator Kyremes-Parks reported that there were no challenging floor nominations.

Moderator Kyremes-Parks presented the slate as listed in Item 00-05 for the assembly's approval. The slate, Item 00-05, was approved. [See p. 87.]

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRY

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Yzette Swavy-Lipton, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry, and Joy Myers, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry, to present the report.

Moderator Swavy-Lipton presented Item 06-CA, the consent agenda from the committee. Item 06-02 and Item 06-09 were removed from the consent agenda. Commissioners then approved the remaining items on the consent agenda: Item 06-04 (disapprove with comment); Item 06-05 (approve with amendment); Item 06-06 (disapprove); Item 06-11 (disapprove); Item 06-12 (disapprove); Item 06-13 (disapprove); Item 06-15, Recommendations 1 and 2 (approve); and Item 06-16 (refer to the Office of the General Assembly with comment).

Moderator Swavy-Lipton stated that the committee reviewed and approved the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates self-study (Item 06-Self-Study).

Moderator Swavy-Lipton presented Item 06-14, which was approved. Swavy-Lipton then presented Item 06-08, which was approved as amended. Swavy-Lipton then yielded the floor to Vice-Moderator Myers.

Vice-Moderator Myers presented Item 06-07, which was disapproved. It was then moved and seconded to answer Item 06-07 with Item 06-10. The assembly then approved the motion to answer Item 06-07 by the action taken on Item 06-10. An amendment to Item 06-10 was moved and seconded.

George Anderson, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, moved to arrest the report of the Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry. It was approved. [For the remainder of the report, see below.]

SERVICE OF DAILY WORSHIP

The Reverend Dr. Jerry Andrews, senior pastor of First Presbyterian Church, San Diego, California, preached a sermon titled, "The Vertical: Be Reconciled to God."

RECESS

The assembly recessed at 12:15 p.m.

Friday, June 24, 2016, 1:30 P.M.

BUSINESS MEETING X

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Denise Anderson, Co-Moderator, 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Halls CD of the Oregon Convention Center, Portland, Oregon.

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Therese Taylor-Stinson, moderator of the Presbytery of National Capital, who shared her story and led the assembly in the convening prayer.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized George Anderson, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures. Moderator Anderson presented the docket as amended, Item 02-03. The revision included the following: during this afternoon's plenary, the arrested reports of both the Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry and the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues will be continued. Then the assembly will begin the reports from the Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues and the Assembly Committee on Immigration and Environmental Issues. In addition, it was recommended that the assembly return from the dinner recess this evening at 7:00 p.m. instead of 7:30 p.m. Item 02-03 was approved as amended. [See p. 156.]

PRESBYTERIAN MISSION AGENCY—GRACE AND GRATITUDE PRESENTATION

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Tony De La Rosa, Interim Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, who introduced Emily Stecher, director of Christian Education, First Presbyterian Church, Portland. Stecher shared her congregation's experience using the Growing in Grace and Gratitude curriculum with their third to fifth grade Sunday school class.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRY

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Yzette Swavy-Lipton, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry, and Joy Myers, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry, to continue the report. [For the first part of the report, see p. 48.]

Before the committee resumed the report, Co-Moderator Anderson asked Associate Stated Clerk Tom Hay to remind the assembly where they were in the report. Associate Stated Clerk Hay suggested it would be appropriate for the assembly to resume debate on the amendment to Item 06-10 and to invite Laurie Griffith, Assistant Stated Clerk of the Office of the General Assembly, to the podium to answer questions as needed on the motion.

Debate resumed on Item 06-10 and the amendment was approved. Moderator Swavy-Lipton presented Item 06-01, which was answered by the action taken on Item 06-10. In response to a concern from the floor that the assembly, although deciding to answer Item 06-07 with Item 06-10, did not take action on Item 06-10, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons responded that in his assessment, the assembly approved Item 06-10 by choosing to answer Item 06-07 with Item 06-10.

Moderator Swavy-Lipton presented Item 06-02, which was disapproved. Moderator Swavy-Lipton then presented Item 06-09 with the recommendation that the assembly disapprove with comment. The assembly did not approve the committee's recommendation. A motion was made from the floor to approve Item 06-09. The assembly disapproved the motion to approve Item 06-09. A motion was made that Item 06-09 be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), which was approved.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry. A summary of the report is as follows:

“The 222nd General Assembly (2016)

“1. takes notice that this conflict (settlement of disputes regarding church property) exists and acknowledges that presbyteries are working to adapt to a difficult and changing legal landscape;

“2. prays for our presbyteries and our congregations as they face legal challenges;

“~~3. [Recommendation 3. was declined because it implied constitutional interpretation.]~~

“~~4. invites this General Assembly to encourage conversation about the long-term implications of court rulings that property is a legal issue and not an ecclesiastical issue.]~~”

II. Committee Final Action and Report to Assembly

Item 06-Self-Study

Report of the Self-Study Committee of the Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Approved. [See p. 382.]

DISSENT

The following commissioners filed a dissent from the action taken on Item 06-02 from the Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry: Christopher Carlson, Presbytery of Peace River; Christopher Davis, Presbytery of Northern Kansas; Justin L. Marple, Presbytery of Western New York; Geoffrey G. Rach, Presbytery of Washington; Gale Watkins, Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL JUSTICE ISSUES

Co-Moderator Jan Edmiston recognized Patricia Tull, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues, and Bobby Musengwa, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues, to continue their report. [For the first part of the report, see p. 46.]

Moderator Tull presented Item 11-23, which was approved. Moderator Tull then presented Item 11-16. This recommendation came to the committee with financial implications, but the amendments made by the committee removed these, so there was no cost associated with this item. Item 11-16 was approved as amended.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues. A summary of the report is as follows:

Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues

Wednesday Consent Agenda items indicated by an asterisk.

Items with financial implications are indicated by a dollar sign, $.

I. Plenary Action

Item 11-01. On Adding a New Standing Rule F.5.c. Regarding Social Witness Policy Statements or Resolutions at the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

Answered by the action taken on Item 11-03. [See p. 691.]

Item 11-02. On Setting Aside “Forming Social Policy” at the Next Three General Assemblies—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

Answered by the action taken on Item 11-03. [See p. 695.]

Item 11-03. On Choosing to Be a Church Committed to the Gospel of Matthew 25—From the Presbytery of the Cascades.

Approved as amended and with comment. [See p. 700.]

Amendment:

1. Amend Recommendation 2. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“2. Call on our churches to commit to a year of Bible study focused on issues of social justice[, with particular attention to the matters of race proposed in Item 11-08 and the application of the Confession of Belhar to these concerns.]”

2. Amend Recommendation 7. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“7. [~~Create a~~] [Recommend that the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Compassion, Peace, and Justice ministries area, implement a coordinated strategy or] ‘cycle of social engagement’ that will assure that concerns around confronting racism, environmental concerns, standing against violence and militarism, and advocating for the dispossessed come before the assembly on a regular and consistent basis, [~~soliciting overtures from~~] [consulting on mission strategies and overtures with affected and engaged] presbyteries before each General Assembly on topics of the most immediate concern.”

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) notes the advice of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) of keeping together Jesus and justice “in the face of the rise of the ‘nones’ who ignore or write off the church.” Therefore, the assembly wants to urge that alternative sources of funding be sought so that the online voice and presence of www.justiceunbound.org not be lost.

Item 11-04

Item 11-04 has been moved to 12 Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues and has been re-assigned the following item number: Item 12-09. (See p. 938 of the electronic copy.)

Item 11-05. On the Admission of, and Apology for, Harms Done to the LGBTQ/Q Members of the PC(USA), Family and Friends—From the Presbytery of New York City.

In response to Item 11-05, the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approved the following resolution. [See p. 702.]

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) resolves to continue the journey as a denomination to become more open, understanding, and accepting of our LGBTQ/Q family and does the following:

1. Issues the following statement: “Followers of Jesus Christ know that no person can claim divine favor through personal merit, but only by the grace of God. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) acknowledges that actions we and our members have taken over the years have at times led God’s beloved children who are lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer, and questioning to feel that they stand outside the grace of God and are unwelcome in the PC(USA). We deeply regret that, due to human failings, any person might find cause to doubt being loved by God. We affirm the God-given dignity and worth of every human being, and renew our commitment to ‘welcome one another, as Christ has welcomed [us], for the glory of God’ [Rom. 15:7].”

2. Expresses the deep sorrow of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) about all individuals and congregations who have left our fellowship, affirms our commitment to continue to pray with them, and acknowledges our sincere appreciation for those who have maintained relationship despite profound disagreement.

3. Challenges all Presbyterians to reflect upon, and repent of, the ways we have mistreated one another, and to seek reconciliation.

4. Celebrates the diversity of those called by God into the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

5. Calls the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to deeper conversations about our differing understandings of what Scripture teaches about faithful living, recognizing that our relationships as God’s children are not ultimately dependent upon agreement.

6. Encourages congregations to reach out actively to those who have experienced marginalization due to decisions of the church, across the spectrum of theological understanding.

7. Encourages presbyteries, when assessing readiness for ordered ministry, to take into account the preparation of those whose ordination process was interrupted by policies that are no longer applicable (Book of Order, G-2.06).

8. Urges presbyteries and congregations to be in ministry respectfully, justly, and graciously together with those with whom they may disagree in regard to ordination and marriage policies and procedures.

9. Prays that all Presbyterians, empowered by God’s grace, work to cultivate a renewed spirit of partnership, to live as one community, moving forward in mission and ministry together in faith, hope, love, joy, and peace.

Item 11-06. On Resources for Learning, Reflection, and Reconciliation—From the Presbytery of John Knox.

Answered by the action taken on Item 11-22. [See p. 708.]

Item 11-07 has been moved to 12 Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues and has been re-assigned the following item number: Item 12-10. (See p. 941 of the electronic copy.)

Item 11-08. *On Offering an Apology to Native Americans, Alaska Natives, and Native Hawaiians—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

Approved as amended. [See p. 711.]

1. Strike the endnote in the first paragraph as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to offer an apology to Native Americans, Alaska natives, and native Hawaiians^[†] and to do the following:”

~~“[1. In this statement the term ‘Native American’ respectfully refers to all three of the indigenous groups.]”~~

2. Amend the first paragraph of Recommendation 1. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“1. That the PC(USA) and its members apologize to United States citizens of Native American ancestry, both those within and beyond our denomination. We offer this apology especially to those who were [and are] part of ‘stolen generations’ during the Indian-assimilation movement, namely former students of Indian boarding schools, their families, and their communities.² That the PC(USA) approve and issue the following words of apology:”

3. Amend the fifth and sixth paragraphs in Recommendation 1. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“Our burdens include dishonoring the depths of the struggles of Native American people and the richness of your gifts. Therefore, we confess to you that when our Presbyterian ancestors journeyed to this land within the last few centuries, ~~{you shared your Sacred Vision with us, to our Presbyterian ancestors, and to our country’s leaders; essentially none of us heard you.}~~ [we did not respect your own indigenous knowledges and epistemologies as valid.]

“In our zeal to tell you of the good news of Jesus Christ, our hearts and minds were closed to the value of your ~~{spirituality}~~ [own epistemologies and lifeways]. We did not understand the full extent of the Gospel of Christ! We should have affirmed the commonality between your spirituality and our understanding that God’s sovereignty extends with length from East to West, with breadth from North to South, with depth throughout the Earth, and with height throughout the Sky and Heavens.”

4. Amend the tenth paragraph in Recommendation 1. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“3. That the Office of the General Assembly share this apology with ~~[Native American tribal authorities]~~ [the leadership of Native Nations] in the United States. The means of sharing this apology shall be coordinated with the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Native American Congregational Support Office and with the PC(USA)’s Native American Consulting Committee (NACC).”

*Item 11-09. On Celebrating a Significant Social Witness Anniversary—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

Approved. [See p. 715.]

*Item 11-10. On Reconciliation and Engagement in a New Civil Rights Movement—From the Presbytery of Giddings-Lovejoy.

Approved as amended and with comment. [See p. 717.]

Amendment:

Amend Recommendation 2. as follows: [Text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“2. That local and state jurisdictions, [, in order to ensure that all citizens are treated with equal dignity and justice,] “• [review and] revise, [, as needed,] use of force policies and training, “• appoint special prosecutors in police use of force cases,

“• [review and] update, [, as needed,] use of force policies related to fleeing suspects, “• improve police training to include social interaction, implicit bias, [de-escalating violence,] and cultural responsiveness,

“• create, develop, and strengthen meaningful civilian review of police departments.”

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) affirms the lessons from Charleston and the role of the church in preventing violence.

Item 11-16. On Equipping and Mobilizing Member Congregations to Better Serve Those Living with HIV/AIDS—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

Approved as amended. [See p. 729.]

“1. Equip and mobilize its member congregations to better serve those living among us with HIV-AIDS by the development of the following initiatives:

“a. A mission-based program to create a certificate program in response to the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010), ‘Becoming an HIV, AIDS[~~, Hepatitis B, and Hepatitis C~~] Competent Church: Prophetic Witness and Compassionate Action’ (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 72–73, 1370ff). This effort will support the church in its continued prophetic witness on issues of HIV and AIDS, to specifically expand the prophetic witness into practical application.

“b. [~~An annual HIV/AIDS conference that would be conducted in partnership with the ten seminaries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)~~] [Commission delegates of the denomination to attend an existing domestic or international HIV/AIDS conference.]”

“2. Instruct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to work with the Presbyterian AIDS Network (PAN) to coordinate a development strategy and activities to raise the following revenue to support these initiatives: $150,000 over a three-year period to be utilized to operationalize [~~these two initiatives~~][this initiative.]”

Item 11-25. Healing Before Punishment: Why Presbyterians Seek to End the War on Drugs—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Approved with comment. [See p. 801.]

Comment: In addition to the other government recommendations, the federal government should reclassify all forms of cannabis from schedule 1 to schedule 2 classification. As it is currently classified, research for medical applications is extremely restricted, which limits the opportunity for new treatments for many conditions, especially for degenerative neurological diseases. Reclassification would open up more possibilities.

Item 11-26. *On the Economic Crisis in Puerto Rico—From the Presbiterio Del Noroeste.

Amend Recommendation 1. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“1. Instruct the Stated Clerk to send a letter to Congress requesting that Congress find a fair, ~~[just, and financially rightful treatment in relation to]~~ [long-term debt plan to address] the fiscal crisis in Puerto Rico, ~~[where all]~~ [in which the combination of] actions to be approved ~~[by the U.S. and Puerto Rican governments]~~ ~~[do]~~ [does] not result in greater austerity measures that impoverishes the most vulnerable classes; to include a plan for real economic development in Puerto Rico; and that every alternative include a majority of multisectoral participation of the people of Puerto Rico.”

11.A. Minutes, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Approved. [See p. 836.]

Item 11-Self-Study

Self-Study Report of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Approved. [See p. 836.]

DISSENTS

The following commissioner filed a dissent from the action taken on Item 11-05 from the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues: Geoffrey G. Rach, Presbytery of Washington.

The following commissioners filed a dissent from the action taken on Item 11-23 from the Assembly Committee on Social Justice Issues: Christopher Davis, Presbytery of Northern Kansas; Justin Marple, Presbytery of Western New York; Geoffrey G. Rach, Presbytery of Washington; Gale Watkins, Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MIDDLE EAST ISSUES

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Amy Fowler, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues, and Frances Lin, vice-moderator, Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues, to present the committee report.

Moderator Fowler introduced Amgad Beblawi, area coordinator for Europe and the Middle East, Presbyterian Mission Agency, to speak for five minutes on the history of Presbyterian partnerships and engagement in the Middle East.

Moderator Fowler resumed the microphone and presented the first item of business, Item 08-02. Item 08-02 was approved as amended. Moderator Fowler then presented Item 08-01, which was disapproved.

Moderator Fowler presented Item 08-06, a report and recommendations from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy: “Israel-Palestine: For Human Values in the Absence of a Just Peace.” Moderator Fowler stated that the committee moved approval of Item 08-06 with comment and noted that there was a minority report. Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons explained the minority report process. Moderator Fowler asked to invite Sam Jones and Doug Tilton, who were among the authors of the Israel-Palestine report, to speak for five minutes. Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Jones and Tilton. Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Commissioner Brian Paulson and Young Adult Advisory Delegate Nivin Lee, authors of the minority report, to speak for five minutes on their report.

Following a request to enlarge the text of amendments proposed from the floor on the plenary hall screens, Co-Moderator Edmiston halted debate to allow the information technology technicians backstage to do so. While the assembly waited, the assembly watched the Spirit of GA video on Identity.

Co-Moderator Edmiston resumed debate on Item 08-06, and amendments to the main motion were approved.

George Anderson, Moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, moved that the report of the Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues be arrested. The motion was approved. [For the remainder of the report, see below.]

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Stated Clerk Parsons announced that two Presbyterian Disaster Assistance teams were already on their way to West Virginia to provide assistance to flooding victims. He also made several procedural announcements.

CLOSING PRAYER

Young Adult Advisory Delegates Luck Rasoanilana from the Presbytery of Elizabeth and Rachel Wong from the Presbytery of San Francisco offered the closing prayer for this session of the General Assembly.

RECESS

The assembly recessed at 5:24 p.m.

Friday, June 24, 2016, 7:05 P.M.

BUSINESS MEETING XI

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Jan Edmiston, Co-Moderator, 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Halls CD of the Oregon Convention Center, Portland, Oregon. Annie Ntumba Tshiswaka, Presbyterian Church of Kinshasa, led the assembly in the convening prayer.

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Debbie Braaksma, Presbyterian Mission Agency area coordinator for Africa, who introduced various ecumenical representatives from Africa. Rt. Reverend Seth Senyo Agidi, Evangelical Presbyterian Church, Ghana, brought greetings to the assembly.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Cheni Khonje, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, who introduced the docket as amended, Item 02-03. The revision included the following: during the evening's plenary, the assembly will hear the arrested report of the Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues. Next up would be the report from the Assembly Committee on Immigration and Environmental Issues and then the Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues. It was noted that trains would stop running around midnight. However, with limited time to do any additional business tomorrow morning, the assembly will likely stay this evening until all committee reports are completed. The docket as amended, Item 02-03, was approved. (See p. 156.)

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Moderator Amy Fowler of the Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues to resume the committee report. [For the first part of the report, see p. 59.]

The debate on Item 08-06 continued. The minority report was defeated. The comment on the main motion was amended. Item 08-06 was then approved with the amended comment.

Vice-Moderator Frances Lin of the Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues presented Item 08-07, which was approved as amended.

Moderator Fowler presented Item 08-08, to be answered with the action taken on Item 08-07, with comment. It was approved.

Moderator Fowler asked to invite the Reverend Dr. Tom Taylor, president and CEO of the Presbyterian Foundation, to speak about the ministry of positive investment in Palestine. Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Taylor.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues. A summary of the report is as follows:

Amend Recommendations 4., 5., and 6. to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]]

“4. Call for RE/MAX to [~~cut its ties with franchises involved in the sale or rental of settlement properties in the occupied West Bank]~~ [do everything within its legal and moral power to stop facilitating the sale and rental of property in Israeli settlement colonies in East Jerusalem and the West Bank].”

“5. [~~Urge members of the RE/MAX network in the United States to not refer clients to agents and brokers who are involved in the sale or rental of settlement properties in the occupied West Bank.]~~ [Commend RE/MAX, LLC, for responding favorably to discussions of this matter with representatives of the PC(USA) and committing to take action to ensure that RE/MAX, LLC, will no longer receive any income from the sale of Jewish settlement properties in the West Bank.]”

“6. [~~Urge Presbyterians to take actions such as contacting local RE/MAX franchises or corporate headquarters or participating in petition campaigns to pressure RE/MAX to cut its ties with franchises involved in the sale or rental of settlement properties in the occupied West Bank.]~~ [Encourage Presbyterians to continue to be in dialogue with RE/MAX, LLC, to explore ways that it can stop facilitating the sale and rental of settlement properties in the occupied West Bank.]”

Item 08-05. Item 08-05 not referred for lack of concurrence.

Item 08-06. Israel-Palestine: For Human Values in the Absence of a Just Peace—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Approved with comment. (See p. 469.)

Comment: As disciples of Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, of the people of Abraham and the lineage of David, we stand with the people of Israel, affirming their right to exist as a sovereign nation, and we stand with the Palestinian people, affirming their right to exist as a sovereign nation. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) affirms Footnote 8, which emphasizes a preference for a two-state solution. The assembly also affirms our desire to stay in conversation with our partners in Israel who work for peace. Finally, the assembly expresses its opposition to any efforts to deny or undermine the rights of the Palestinian people or the Jewish people to self-determination.

Item 08-07. On Prayerfully Studying the Palestinian Civil Society Call for Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions (BDS)—From the Presbytery of New Hope.

Amend Recommendations 1. through 4. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“1. Prayerfully study the call from Palestinian civil society for boycott, divestment, and sanctions (BDS) against the state of Israel [as well as resources that oppose this BDS movement] (see “additional resources” after the Rationale section of this overture for full text of the call).

“2 Engage in ecumenical and interfaith dialogue with the authors and signatories of this document, including our historic church partners in Palestine [and our interfaith partners who oppose the BDS movement], in order to better understand and interpret the call for BDS that was issued in 2005.

“4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to facilitate dialogue events regarding BDS, which would include the authors of the 2005 civil society call [and our interfaith partners who oppose the BDS movement] and any interested Presbyterians.

“5. Direct the Stated Clerk to distribute, for prayerful study, the text of the Palestinian call [and documentation from interfaith partners who oppose the BDS movement] to all PC(USA) congregations.”

Item 08-08. Commissioners’ Resolution. Standing for Reconciliation and Ending Affiliation with Divisive Coalition.

Answered by the action taken on Item 08-07, with comment. [See p. 506.]

Comment: With the decision to prayerfully study the call from Palestinian Civil Society for boycott, divestment, and sanctions, the PC(USA) acknowledges that this may constitute a source of concern for our interfaith partners and supporters of Israel as a state. This choice for prayerful study is aimed to discern how we may be called to actively work for lasting justice and peace for people of Israel and Palestine. We seek ways to be faithful and effective by means that don’t perpetuate injustice or systematic violence.

DISSENTS

The following commissioner filed a dissent from the action taken on Item 08-02 from the Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues: Isaac Chung, Presbytery of Detroit.

The following commissioners filed a dissent from the action taken on Item 08-06 from the Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues: Isaac Chung, Presbytery of Detroit; Christopher Davis, Presbytery of Northern Kansas.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

I. Plenary Action

Item 09-01. On PC(USA) Fossil Fuel Divestment—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

In response to Item 09-01, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets, with a strike-through, and with shading; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets, with an underline, and with shading.] [See p. 511.]

1. Requests the Board of Pensions, the Presbyterian Foundation, and the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., to consider an increasingly more diversified energy sector in their overall investment portfolios, which would increase exposure to potentially profitable alternative energy companies and/or companies with an active interest in changing the consumer market's energy demand (e.g. automobile companies producing alternatively powered vehicles).

2. ~~[Commits to remaining invested in current energy companies whose primary resource is fossil fuel for the purpose of MRTI's (Mission Responsibility Through Investment) stockholder engagement.] [Directs MRTI to pursue its focused engagement process on climate change issues with all corporations, particularly with those in the oil, gas, and coal sectors, and report back to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) with recommendations, including possible selective divestment if significant changes in governance, strategy, implementation, transparency and disclosure, and public policy are not instituted by the corporations during the engagements of MRTI and ecumenical partners.]~~

3. Directs the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to inform the denomination and the larger public of the passage and implementation of this overture.

Approved as amended. [See p. 538.]

1. Amend Recommendation 2.c. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“3. Joining denominational entities and staff named above, PC(USA) presbyteries, sessions, and pastors should encourage congregations to host, co-sponsor, and/or support refugee families.

“a. Churches can provide basic support such as clothing, housing, furniture, [language teaching] and food.

“b. Churches can provide a social connection for refugees to assist their acclimation to the community—including a welcoming voice for Muslims [and persons of all other religious views].”

3. Add new Recommendations 5. and 6. to read as follows: [Text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“[5. Direct PC(USA) entities, including the Presbyterian Mission Agency, to advocate for an end to and prevention of conflicts that cause people to be internally and externally displaced from their homes.

Item 09-07.

Item 09-07 has been moved to 14 Assembly Committee on Theological Issues and Institutions and has been re-signed the following item number: Item 14-13. [See p. 1015 of the electronic copy.]

Amend the recommendation section as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Seattle overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to empower the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Office of Public Witness (OPW) in Washington, D.C., and the Presbyterian Ministry to the United Nations, to witness against environmental degradation and to affirm public policy that supports good stewardship of natural resources. With firm biblical foundation and the policies of twenty General Assemblies to build upon, they may give voice to threats to air and water quality; and to the well-being of humans and all God’s creation, including carefully documented threats from fracking; threats from ~~crude oil transport and storage and, indeed,~~ all modes of fossil fuel extraction; processing, transport, and storage; and threats from methane and other destabilizing and harmful byproducts that results from industrial processes. This empowers both ~~the~~ the offices to speak for the church to uphold the integrity of creation and speak against emerging or worsening environmental injustices.”

Answered by the action taken on Item 09-01. [See p. 543.]

Item 09-10. Collaborative Agenda on Environmental Stewardship—From the Board of Pensions, Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., Presbyterian Mission Agency, Presbyterian Publishing Corporation.

Item 09-11. On Amending G-1.0304, “The Ministry of Members,” by Adding “Caring for God’s Creation”—From the Presbytery of New Castle.

Approved. [See p. 556.]

Item 09-12. On Advocacy Against Factory Farming—From the Presbytery of Monmouth.

Approved as amended. [See p. 562.]

Amend the recommendation section as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

~~[1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate wherever possible in favor of alternatives to CAFOs (Concentrated Animal Feeding Operations) or IFAP[S] (Industrial [Food] [Farm] Animal Production [Sites]), commonly known as] also known as CAFOs (Concentrated Animal Feeding Operations) or factory [farms] [farming], and to advocate against measures that support industrialized animal farming, with specific attention to large scale vertical integration/coordination in the meat industry, recognizing that large scale farming is necessary for producing the large amount of food needed to sustain our growing population.]~~ [1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to responsibly advocate wherever possible in favor of humane treatment of animals on all size of farms. Furthermore, as an assembly of Christians, it is our duty to promote environmental stewardship and additional public regulations within reason, such as CAFO, which encourage minimizing the impact that modern production practices have on God’s beautiful earth: acknowledging that large scale farming is necessary to produce sufficient food to feed the world’s growing population.]

“3. ~~Remind the church of~~ Apply to industrialized animal farming insights from the 1990 ~~proclamation~~ report, ‘Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice,’ which asserts that humanity and nature are so inextricably bound that the suffering of one affects the other. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a history of affirming that protection of the environment is an essential part of the Christian faith.

“[4. Apply insights from the 2002 report, ‘We Are What We Eat,’ which was prepared by and with farmers, ranchers, and those involved in rural ministry, and which reminds us of our need to be aware of the impact of choices related to the food we produce, process, and consume. It calls us to put faith in action by praying, advocating, and acting for rural communities.]

“[4. Encourage all levels of the denomination (presbyteries, congregations, and individual members) to purchase only meat that carries the minimal certification of ‘Certified Humane Raised & Handled.’] [5. Recognize that damage is done to the Body of Christ when we vilify those who work in good faith in an industry that undergirds most of modern life; encourage collaboration with the many individuals in the food industry who seek to engage food production in positive and creative ways.]”

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON PEACEMAKING AND INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Jochebed Jordan, moderator of the Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues, and Sarah Sanderson-Doughty, vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues, to present the committee report.

Moderator Jordan invited Annie Ntumba Tshiswaka, Presbyterian Church of Kinshasa, Congo; Daniel Izquierdo, general secretary of the Presbyterian Reformed Church in Cuba; and Dr. Lee Hong Jung, general secretary of the Presbyterian Church of Korea, to address the assembly.

Moderator Jordan introduced Item 12-06. A motion from the floor to amend Item 12-06 was approved. Item 12-06 was approved as amended.

Moderator Jordan introduced Item 12-02, to be answered by the action taken on Item 12-06. It was approved.

Vice-Moderator Sanderson-Doughty introduced Item 12-01, an alternate resolution from the Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues. It was approved. Vice-Moderator Sanderson-Doughty introduced Item 12-05. It was approved with comment.

Moderator Jordan assumed the microphone.

This concluded the report of the Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues. A summary of the report is as follows:

I. Plenary Action

$Item 12-01. On Acknowledging and Reconciling for Killing Korean Civilians in July 1950—From the Presbytery of Cayuga-Syracuse.

Approved an alternate resolution. (See p. 853.)

In response to Item 12-01, the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approved the following alternate resolution:

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Acknowledges that during the Korean War, American troops knowingly killed at least 150 Korean civilians (and probably between 250 and 300, mostly women and children) on July 26–29, 1950, near the village of No Gun Ri.

2. Directs the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate with the president of the United States and members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives, to request an official statement to the Republic of Korea that would include:

a. an acknowledgement of the responsibility of the United States military for knowingly killing Korean civilians at No Gun Ri;

b. an apology and statement of regret for the actions of United States troops at No Gun Ri, with an indication of openness to consider appropriate compensation to the surviving victims and the families of those killed or wounded in that incident; and

c. a commitment to include information about the events at No Gun Ri in the training of United States military personnel to diminish the likelihood of such events happening in the future.

3. Directs staff persons from the Presbyterian Mission Agency to consult electronically with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s mission partners in the Republic of Korea, including the Presbyterian Church in Korea (PCK) and the Presbyterian Church in the Republic of Korea (PROK), in order to:

a. offer condolences to the approximately forty surviving victims of the events of No Gun Ri on behalf of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);

b. create a bibliography of resources about the events at No Gun Ri;

c. create worship materials to remember the people impacted by the events at No Gun Ri;

d. share the bibliography and worship materials and this overture and rationale electronically with the congregations and presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Presbyterian Church in Korea (PCK) and the Presbyterian Church in the Republic of Korea (PROK);

e. explore possibilities for joint prayer and witness regarding continuing tensions on the Korean peninsula, in the South China Sea, and other considerations for peace, world order, security, and meeting basic human needs that are currently before their congregations and members.

[Financial Implication: PMA—$14,932 (2017), $0 (2018)—Revised]

Item 12-02. On Celebrating the Completion of the Six-Year Discernment on Peacemaking—From the Presbytery of Mission.

Answered by the action taken on Item 12-06. (See p. 857.)

Item 12-03

Item 12-03 has not been assigned.

*Item 12-04. Overture Pertaining to the Congo—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

Approved. (See p. 858.)

Item 12-05. On Affirming Nonviolent Means of Resistance Against Human Oppression—From the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley.

Approved with comment. (See p. 860.)

Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) does not include support for the concurrence material from Genessee Valley and San Francisco presbyteries, since the overture does not make reference to any specific conflict situations.

$Item 12-06. Risking Peace in a Violent World: Five New Peacemaking Affirmations—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Approved as amended. (See p. 867.)

“10. Approve the following affirmations to guide the peacemaking witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

“a. ~~[We affirm that peacemaking is essential to our faith in God's reconciling work in Jesus Christ, whose love and justice challenge evil and hatred, and who calls the church to present alternatives to violence, fear, and misused power.]~~ [We affirm that peacemaking is essential to our faith in God's reconciling work in Jesus Christ, whose love and justice challenge hatred and conflict evil and hatred, and whose call gives our church a mission to present alternatives to violence.]

~~“b. [We confess our complicity in the world’s violence and our failures to stand with those who suffer, even as we pray for the Spirit’s courage to unmask idolatries, speak truth about war and oppression, and respond with ministries of justice, healing, and reconciliation.] [We confess that we have sinned by participating in acts of violence, both structural and physical, or by our failure to respond to acts and threats of violence with ministries of justice, healing, and reconciliation.]~~

“c. We follow Jesus Christ, Prince of Peace and Reconciler, and reclaim the power of nonviolent love evident in his life and teaching, his healings and reversals of evil, his cross and resurrection.

“d. Learning from nonviolent struggles and counting the costs of war, we draw upon the traditions of Just War, Christian pacifism, and Just Peacemaking to cultivate moral imagination and discern God’s redemptive work in history.

“[e. We commit ourselves to studying and practicing nonviolent means of conflict resolution, nonviolent methods for social change, and nonviolent opposition to war. Even as we actively engage in a peace discernment process, we commit ourselves to continuing the long tradition of support by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for our sisters and brothers who serve in the United States military, veterans, and their families. We promise to support materially and socially veterans of war who suffer injury in body, mind, or spirit, even as we work toward the day when they will need to fight no more.]

~~“[e. We commit ourselves to practice the things that make for peace in our daily lives, families, and communities, to risk calling our nation back from the practices of empire to the highest ideals of our heritage, and to take part in social movements for a domination-free order.] [f. We place our faith, hope, and trust in God alone. We renounce violence as a means to further selfish national interests, to procure wealth, or to dominate others. We will practice boldly the things that make for peace and look for the day when ‘they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war anymore.’]”~~

Item 12-08 not referred for lack of concurrence.

*Item 12-09. On Supporting the Report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights Regarding Protecting Individuals from Violence and Discrimination—From the Synod of the Covenant.

Approved as amended. (See p. 938.)

1. Amend Recommendations 2. and 3. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“2. Commit the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to support the goals expressed in the report to

“a. protect individuals from violence;

“b. prevent torture and ill-treatment;

“c. decriminalize homosexuality and to repeal other laws used to punish individuals on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity;

“d. protect individuals from discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity; ~~and~~

“e. protect rights to freedom of expression, association, and assembly, and to take part in the conduct of public affairs[~~]~~]; and

“[f. protect access to travel and all public facilities.]

“3. ~~[Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to identify and encourage legislation to accomplish the above goals in the United States and U.S. territories, giving attention to the strategies enumerated in the report.] [Direct~~ the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through its Office of Public Witness, and the Office of the General Assembly to identify and oppose legislation that discriminates on the grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity and to identify and encourage legislation to accomplish the above goals in the United States and U.S. territories, giving attention to the strategies enumerated in the report.]”

~~“8. Direct the [Office of the General Assembly to develop resources that are responsive]~~ [Presbyterian Mission Agency to give attention] to the particular needs of LGBT immigrants, and to provide support to congregations wishing to welcome LGBT persons seeking asylum.”

*Item 12-10. On Committing to Play an Active Part in the Global Response to the HIV/AIDS Epidemic—From the Presbytery of Southern New England.

Approved as amended. (See p. 941.)

1. Amend Recommendation 4.b.(3) by striking the current text and inserting new text as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

~~“(3) — mobilize financial resources to support education and stigma reduction initiatives, both domestically and in cooperation with global partners.]”~~

“(3) encourage congregations to use existing methods of fundraising, such as the portion of the Peace and Global Witness Offering retained locally to be used toward this cause, either by encouraging the support of the Presbyterian AIDS Network, or another HIV/AIDS ministry with which the PC(USA) is in partnership. The Presbyterian Mission Agency is not asked to fund the goals of this overture.]”

2. Amend Recommendation 4. by adding a new Recommendation 4.d. to read as follows: [Text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“[d. Direct the Stated Clerk to designate one Sunday a year, beginning with 2016 through 2020, as PC(USA) World AIDS Sunday for the purpose of raising awareness, lifting prayer, and promoting advocacy among PC(USA) members, and for the taking of a special collection to be used to support the prevention of HIV and AIDS both domestically and internationally.]”

*Item 12-11. Commissioners’ Resolution. Reaffirming the Ministry of Sanctuary by Congregations.

Approved. (See p. 944.)

*Item 12-12. Commissioners’ Resolution. On Affirming Principles of Sanctuary in Response to the Global Escalation in the Number of Displaced Person/Refugees.

Approved as amended. (See p. 946.)

~~“2. [We direct the Stated Clerk to notify the President of the United States, the office of the Attorney General, and the Department of Homeland Security of our commitment to these fundamental principals and our commitment as a church to support efforts to welcome refugees, and of our particular concern for refugees from Syria and Central America at this moment in time.] [We direct the Stated Clerk to notify the President of the United States, the office of the Attorney General, and the Department of Homeland Security of our commitment to these fundamental principles and our commitment as a church to support efforts to welcome all refugees. ANNOUNCEMENTS

Associate Stated Clerk Tom Hay made several announcements.

CLOSING PRAYER

Theological Student Advisory Delegate Sally Herlong, from Union Presbyterian Seminary, offered the closing prayer for this session of the General Assembly.

RECESS

The assembly recessed at 10:57 p.m.

Saturday, June 25, 2016, 9:00 A.M.

BUSINESS MEETING XII

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was reconvened by Denise Anderson and Jan Edmiston, Co-Moderators, 222nd General Assembly (2016), in Halls CD of the of the Oregon Convention Center, Portland, Oregon.

Co-Moderator Edmiston recognized Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons, who led the assembly in the convening prayer.

REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BILLS AND OVERTURES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Moderator George Anderson, and Vice-Moderator Cheni Khonje of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures for a report from the committee.

Co-Moderator Anderson congratulated the assembly for its diligence and good work the previous night completing the committee reports.

Vice-Moderator Khonje reported that the minutes of business meetings from Saturday, June 18, 2016, to Sunday afternoon, June 19, 2016, in Item 02-02, as well as the minutes for Sunday, June 19, 2016, through Friday, June 24, 2016 (except for Thursday evening), in Item 02-04, have been reviewed and found in order. These minutes are posted on PC-Biz under the business for Committee 2 (Bills and Overtures). Minutes of business meetings from Friday afternoon, Friday evening, and Saturday morning will be approved by a subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures after adjournment and posted on PC-Biz.

Moderator Anderson and Vice-Moderator Khonje commended the work of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

Protests found to be in decorous language are recorded in the Minutes as follows:

Protest on the process regarding Item 10-16—From Taeler Morgan, commissioner from the Presbytery of Olympia:

“After being repeatedly rescheduled CR 10-16 was placed on our agenda for 4:15 pm. The moderator chose to take it up at 3:45 pm when the commissioner speaking to it was not present. I was the first person to the mic and asked if we ought not wait until the commissioner was present. The moderator replied noting he was not there and indicating we should move forward anyway. Immediately a motion was made to disapprove CR 10-16. Discussion ensued and finally the commissioner arrived at which point he was allowed to present. I do not feel this was a fair process, creating an atmosphere of uncertainty and putting the presenting commissioner at a disadvantage.”

Protest on motion made by vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Immigration and Environmental Issues to answer Items 09-02, 09-03, and 09-04 with the action taken on Items 09-01 and 09-09—From Kathleen Owens, commissioner from the Presbytery of John Knox:

“I protest the motion made by the Vice-Moderator of the Environment and Immigration Issues to answer 09-02, 09-03, and 09-04 with the action on 09-01 and 09-09. This was not the committee’s action and therefore out of order. The committee voted to approve 09-02, 09-03, and 09-04 as amended. This is what should have been moved by the Vice-Moderator. These three motions had several items included that had nothing to do with divestment, but instead spoke to our church’s witness to the care of creation through PILP loans, promotion of earth care congregations, and the advocacy work of our Office of Public Witness, and many other programs that are not answered within 09-01 and 09-09.”

Protest on staff offering opinions during debate regarding Item 14-04—From Augustine Wright III, commission from the Presbytery of Stockton; Justin L. Marple, commissioner from the Presbytery of Western New York; Jarrett Johnson, commissioner from the Presbytery of Santa Barbara; Mickey Stueck, commissioner from the Presbytery of Santa Barbara; Christopher Carlson, commissioner from the Presbytery of Peace River; Geoffrey G. Rach, commissioner from the Presbytery of Washington; Dana Wilmot, commissioner from the Presbytery of Kiskiminetas; Sandy Gandolfi, commissioner from the Presbytery of Kiskiminetas; Terry Simpkins, commissioner from the Presbytery of Eastern Virginia; Isaac Chung, commissioner from the Presbytery of Detroit; Mary Kay Glunt, commissioner from the Presbytery of John Calvin:

“‘The notes of the true Kirk ... we believe, confess, and avow to be: first, the true preaching of the Word of God, in which God has revealed himself to us, as the writings of the prophets and apostles declare; secondly, the right administration of the sacraments of Christ Jesus, with which must be associated the Word and promise of God to seal and confirm them in our hearts; and lastly, ecclesiastical discipline uprightly ministered, as God’s Word prescribes, whereby vice is repressed and virtue nourished’ (Book of Confessions, 3.18).

“The proposed new Directory for Worship (Item 14-04) introduces a radical departure from the historic and ecumenical Christian understanding of the right administration of the sacraments. Yet this change was downplayed in debate by an official from the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) who offered an opinion speaking against the ‘Marple amendment,’ which would have brought back the phrase ‘the baptized faithful’ in reference to those who are offered the Lord’s Supper (W-3.0402).

“It is improper for PMA staff to offer opinions rather than just factual information while commissioners are engaged in debate. Therefore, we ask for an investigation into this matter and whatever action is necessary to prevent a repeat performance of this practice on any other matter of business before this and future General Assemblies.”

Protest regarding the display and celebration of the approval of Item 07-03 at the Wednesday evening plenary—From Justin L. Marple, commissioner from the Presbytery of Western New York; Jarrett Johnson, commissioner from the Presbytery of Santa Barbara; Mickey Stueck, commissioner from the Presbytery of Santa Barbara; Christopher Carlson, commissioner from the Presbytery of Peace River; Geoffrey G. Rach, commissioner from the Presbytery of Washington; Terry Simpkins, commissioner from the Presbytery of Eastern Virginia; Sandy Gandolfi, commissioner from the Presbytery of Kiskiminetas; Mary Kay Glunt, commissioner from the Presbytery of John Calvin; Christopher Davis, commissioner from the Presbytery of Northern Kansas; Augustine Wright III, commissioner from the Presbytery of Stockton:

“There is a lot of discussion about reconciliation and acceptance. A total of 25 presbyteries voted against adoption of the Belhar Confession. Many conservative Presbyterians did not want this document added to our Book of Confessions. They lost that vote. They accept that it is now part of our constitution.

“The display and celebration at the Wednesday evening plenary was offensive to many of us. It is especially disappointing that this was led from the platform, with musicians ready to lead in song. We protest this unseemly display and demonstration as well as the fact that it was not stopped by anyone in the OGA, the Stated Clerk or the Co-Moderators. We ask that no further demonstrations be permitted which would unduly rub salt into the wounds of those who have lost a vote. We ask that those who planned this demonstration be investigated and, if appropriate, action taken against PCUSA employees.”

FINAL REPORT OF THE ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

Co-Moderator Anderson recognized Moderator Mary Lou Cox of the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures for the committee’s final report.

Moderator Cox reported that the General Assembly approved $13,120 in financial implications for 2016; $262,203 for 2017; and $270,583 for 2018. The total approved additional financial implications for the 2017–2018 budget is $545,906. The per capita impact is an additional increase of $.17 in the rate for 2017 and $.18 for 2018.

Moderator Cox introduced Item 03-13, which was approved with amendment. This concluded Report Two of the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures. A summary of the report is as follows:

Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures

Report Two

I. Plenary Action

Amend Recommendations 1.–4. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

1. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) recommend that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) incorporate into the Minutes the Comparative Balance Sheet for 2015 and 2014, along with the 2015 Actual Performance in the Per Capita Statement of Activities.

[See oga-pma-budget-charts.pdf, Attachment A—Comparative Balance Sheet and Attachment B—Per Capita Statement of Activities.]

2. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016)

a. Approve the Revised 2016 General Assembly Per Capita Expense Budget totaling [~~$12,434,777~~] [$12,430,897 including $13,120 in new Financial Implications approved by this General Assembly];

b. Approve the total Expenditure Budget for 2017 totaling [~~$12,747,185~~] [$12,892,388, including $262,203 in new financial implications], and for 2018 totaling [~~$12,735,784~~] [$12,992,367, including $270,583 in new financial implications].

Report of the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

With enthusiasm and joy, the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee nominates to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) the Reverend Dr. J. Herbert Nelson to serve a four-year term as Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Rationale

The Stated Clerk Nomination Committee was elected by the 221st General Assembly (2014) and charged to bring to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) a single nomination for the office of Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the PC(USA). The committee began its work in early 2015. We met in five, face-to-face meetings and by multiple conference calls. We received thirteen completed applications; all thirteen were interviewed by telephone. Six persons were invited for face-to-face interviews in late February 2016; all six underwent a vocational assessment under the auspices of the North Central Ministry Development Center. Three persons were invited for final, face-to-face conversations in early April 2016; extensive reference and background checks were conducted on these individuals. A full report of the committee's process is available on PC-Biz in the "Resources" section, as Stated Clerk Nomination Committee Process Report.

After the final interviews and prayerful discernment, the committee wholeheartedly and overwhelmingly selected J. Herbert Nelson as its nominee.

The Stated Clerk Nomination Committee will offer an oral report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) on Sunday, June 19, and, at that time, will place in nomination the name of J. Herbert Nelson for the office of Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

[The assembly approved Item 00-03. See pp. 11, 12.]

General Assembly Nominating Committee 2016 Nominations

Commissioners to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) will vote to elect many people to positions on the various entities of the General Assembly. In accordance with the Book of Order, G-3.0111, and to ensure careful nominations of members to these entities, the General Assembly Nominating Committee proposes a slate of nominees for election. Positions to be filled are listed on the attached pages.

Biographical Information: A short descriptive paragraph for each nominee being presented by the General Assembly Nominating Committee can be found by June 17 on the GA Nominations website – www.pcusa.org/nominations.

Inclusive Representation: The nominations made by the General Assembly Nominating Committee are responsive to and reflective of the principles of participation and representation expressed in the Book of Order, F-1.0403 and G-3.0103. This report provides diversity information following the name of each nominee as well as a chart describing inclusiveness information for each committee to which the General Assembly is electing members.

Nominations Process: The process for nominations proposed to the General Assembly is a long and thorough one. As of June 12, 2016, the General Assembly Nominating Committee has on file approximately 260 Application for Nomination forms. The names of these persons were gathered through

- self-nomination;
- suggestions from sessions, presbyteries, and synods;
- and other Presbyterians who suggested the nominations of persons they knew or with whom they've worshipped and worked.

Application for Nomination forms are received by the General Assembly Nominations office and a copy of each form is shared with all members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee. In addition a copy of the application is sent to the committee or entity itself.

Each applicant is asked to solicit references from three persons of their choosing. In response to the action of the 208th General Assembly (1996), an appraisal is also solicited from the applicant's council of membership—presbytery for teaching elders and session for ruling elders and church members. The General Assembly Nominating Committee will not nominate a person unless it has received three appraisals, one of which must be an appraisal from the applicant's council of membership.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation has encouraged persons, particularly those in underrepresented categories, to consider serving the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on General Assembly entities and to submit an application for nomination form for the General Assembly Nominating Committee consideration. The General Assembly Committee on Representation has reviewed this report.

Although the majority of nominations are proposed for “at-large” positions, some people are nominated as representatives of specific presbyteries or synods to a particular entity. Entities that have such representational positions include the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, and the Presbyterian Committee on the Self-Development of People. In these cases, the General Assembly Nominating Committee requests presbyteries and synods to send the names of no less than three persons for consideration. The General Assembly Nominating Committee may select only from the pool suggested by the synod or presbytery—through its regular nominating process—when filling a mid council representation slot in these instances.

This report lists the names of persons being proposed for nomination and distinguishes between those positions that are at-large (AL), those that are synod (S) or presbytery (P) representation slots, etc. and those that are filled by representatives from other General Assembly agencies or ecumenical bodies.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee also needs to take into account the inclusiveness requirements outlined in the Book of Order or mandated by the General Assembly: racial ethnic, geographic, physical, theological, and age diversity. The committee is also sensitive to the needs for expertise expressed by the entities themselves. It is a balancing act that the General Assembly Nominating Committee takes seriously and faithfully as it attempts to discern the call of Presbyterians to service on committees at the General Assembly level.

Persons who are elected to service on General Assembly committees and entities are, in most cases, eligible to be reelected to a second term. The 219th General Assembly (2010) urged “General Assembly entities to consider re-nominations as the exception, rather than the rule and applied only to those members whose continued service is clearly beneficial to on-going or projected work in order to assist the GANC in making its careful nominations.” However, many of the persons who are proposed in the report are re-nominations.

Descriptions for each committee have been developed by the entity and adapted from the Entity Lists and Descriptions page of the General Assembly nominations website—pcusa.org/nominations. Nomination information for the 2016–2018 cycle is available at the Office of the General Assembly exhibit area—Booth 423.

Procedure for Nominations from the Floor: The procedure for nominations from the floor is described in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, F. General Assembly Plenary Meeting 6.c. Nominating from the Floor:

When any nomination for service on a General Assembly committee, council, or board comes from the floor of the assembly, the commissioner making the nomination will provide the General Assembly Nominating Committee, no later than 48 hours after the convening of the General Assembly, with pertinent information about the person whose name is being presented, as well as the name of the particular person nominated by the nominating committee whose nomination is being challenged. Such information shall be provided on the “Nomination by Commissioner Form” provided for use at the assembly and available from the Stated Clerk. The availability of the pertinent information provided by the person challenging the nominating committee's nominee shall be announced to the assembly at least twenty-four hours in advance of the nomination being made from the floor.

The name of the specific person being challenged must be stated on the “Nomination by Commissioner” form. Please return this form, completed in full on all sides, to the ASSEMBLY INFORMATION CENTER located in Pre-Function C no later than 1:30 p.m. on Monday, June 20, 2016, so that it may be verified for eligibility and the Stated Clerk may prepare for a ballot. Thank you.

This report containing the General Assembly Nominating Committee “Proposed Nominees” will be reported for action on Friday, June 24. Commissioners and advisory delegates will need the following pages for action at that time.

Final response will be presented to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

C. Presbyterian Mission Agency

1. 2012 Referral: Item 16-10. On Directing the Office of Collegiate Ministries to Present a Progress Report Regarding the Collegiate Ministries Task Force Report Received by Our Committee to the 221st General Assembly (2014)—From the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 48, 51, 1487).

Progress Report: The Presbyterian Mission Agency has reestablished the Office of Collegiate Ministry (OCM) since the 219th General Assembly (2010) and continued in that effort by installing the mission associate for collegiate ministry to carry on the work of the office. Since 2010, the OCM has developed a strategy for mission in higher education and launched a network of collegiate ministries under the branding of UKirk Ministries. Many of these ministries are directly connected to and supported by mid councils (both presbytery and synod levels). Broadly speaking, the OCM continues to expand the network through the establishment of an advisory board, regional and national gatherings, resource development, and grant distribution.

Though efforts have been made to fulfill the strategic plan since 2012, changes in the OCM staffing over the past three years have slowed this progress. Following the departure of the originally hired associate for collegiate ministries, an interim associate was designated from within the existing PMA staff on a half-time basis (continuing his role as the associate for evangelism simultaneously). During that interim time, implementation of the strategic plan continued, albeit, at a slower rate.

A national search was conducted twice during the interim period, resulting in the hiring of a new associate for collegiate ministry, Jason Santos, in the autumn of 2014. Progress continued until the reorganization of the Evangelism and Church Growth ministry area to become part of Theology, Formation and Evangelism in summer 2015. At this point, Santos assumed a broader role overseeing and coordinating Ministries with Youth, Young Adult Ministries, Camps and Conference Ministries in addition to Collegiate Ministries. During the writing of this report, the PMA is anticipating hiring another associate for the OCM, depending on the availability of funding. The OCM has also struggled with establishing sustainable funding as budgeting pressures common to the PMA have also impacted this ministry.

Progress has been made in the 1001 New Worshiping Communities initiative, through the establishment of more than twenty collegiate and young adult-focused new communities and several others in the application process. While no notable efforts have been made toward establishing regional collegiate ministry offices, both regional and national cohort gatherings will have been established by the 222nd General Assembly (2016). These cohorts are comprised of 10–12 campus ministers and/or chaplains within the PC(USA), each with designated regional leadership.

With regard to recruiting and training possibilities, more than ten internship grants were awarded to various collegiate ministries nationally over the past two years. Moreover, the OCM continues to promote a collegiate emphasis in PC(USA) seminaries both through field education placements and course work offerings. Seminaries participating in field education and coursework in collegiate ministries include Princeton, Union, Columbia, and Austin.

Since 2014, several notable efforts include the development and dispersion of UWorship (a four-year printed lectionary and liturgical resource for worship), UKirk Daily (a devotional smartphone application for collegiate students), UKirk Internship Grants (to continue in 2016), and the UKirk Cohort Project (peer-oriented gatherings for collegiate ministers).

The OCM maintains ecumenical connections through the National Campus Ministry Association, the Ecumenical Collegiate Ministry Team, and the National Association for College and University Ministries. The OCM also supports and participates in the Presbyterian College Chaplains Association and the Association of Presbyterian Colleges and Universities. To date, the OCM serves more than seventy college chaplains nationally and more than 1,200 established collegiate ministries within the UKirk Network.

4. Item 08-08. The Gospel from Detroit: Renewing the Church's Urban Vision—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 40, 42, 503ff.)

Response: This referral is being answered by Item 11-20, Resolution on Abiding Presence: Living Faithfully in End of Life Decisions, being presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016). (See p. 738 of the electronic file.)

B. Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns

2012 Referral: Item 11-12. A Resolution to Continue the Work of Deborah's Daughters, Recommendation 2. Direct that the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns, After Receiving the 2014 Report from the Review Done Through the Deborah's Daughters Program, Make Recommendations to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) That Contribute to a Proactive, Health-Giving Ministry to and Relationship with Our Clergywomen—From the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns. (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 28, 32–33, 1085–88)

Response: This referral is being answered by Item 10-11, A Resolution to Contribute to a Proactive, Health-Giving Ministry to and Relationship with Our Clergywomen, being presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016). (See p. 614 of the electronic file.)

C. Board of Pensions

1. 2014 Referral: Item 04-04. On Supporting Middle East Peacemaking—From the Presbytery of New Covenant (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 58–59, 60, 260ff.).

In response to Item 04-04, the 221st General Assembly (2014) acted to:

Instruct the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of Pensions of the PC(USA), to divest from Caterpillar, Inc., Hewlett-Packard, and Motorola Solutions, in accord with our church's decades-long socially responsible investment (SRI) history, and not to reinvest in these companies until the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee of the PC(USA) is fully satisfied that product sales and services by these companies are no longer in conflict with our church investment policy.

In accordance with the Board of Pensions Investment Manual, the Board of Pensions has added these three corporations to its Prohibited Securities Lists, which are distributed annually to all investment managers.

2. 2014 Referral: Item 09-19. Direct the Six Agencies of the PC(USA) to Provide Annual Status Reports on Supplier Diversity (All Strata) to GACOR—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 39, 735–37).

The Board of Pensions has complied with all data requests from GACOR on supplier diversity.

3. 2014 Referral: Item 12-03. Urge the Board of Pensions to Post on [Its] Website the Current List of the Churches Certified as Relief of Conscience Churches (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 17, 915–16).

The Board of Pensions has complied with this request; the website of the Board of Pensions, www.pensions.org, contains a section called Conscience and the Benefits Plan, which contains this list.

4. 2014 Referral: Item 12-12. Request the Board Of Pensions Provide an Interim Progress Report to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on This Issue of the Relief of Conscience Following Their Next Board Meeting—From the 221st General Assembly (2014) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 17, 919–20).

The Board of Pensions complied with this request; a progress report was offered in the Summer 2014 issue of the Board Bulletin, a newsletter distributed widely and available on the website of the Board of Pensions at www.pensions.org.

5. 2010 Referral: Item 18-06. On Directing the Board of Pensions to Extend Benefits to Same-Gender Spouses and Domestic Partners, Comment: BOP Highly Urged to Provide Relief of Conscience for Congregations with Moral Dilemma Regarding This Issue—From the 219th General Assembly (2010) (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 54, 56, 393).

In response to Item 18-06, the 219th General Assembly (2010) approved the following resolution:

1. Urge the Board of Pensions to adopt amendments to the Benefits Plan to extend eligibility for spousal and dependent benefits under the Plan to Benefits Plan members, their same-gender domestic partners, and the children of their same-gender domestic partners, on the same basis as, and equivalent to, benefits made available to Benefits Plan members, their spouses, and the children of their spouses.

2. Approve an increase in dues for the Benefits Plan of up to 1 percent, effective January 1, 2012, to be allocated among the plans of the Board of Pensions, including but not limited to the Pension Plan, as the Board, in its sole discretion, deems necessary to fund the cost of the additional benefits. Should the Board not implement these benefits for any reason, approval of the increase in dues is rescinded.

Comment: That the Board of Pensions be highly urged to provide relief of conscience, to be implemented simultaneously with these actions, for those congregations for whom these actions cause a moral dilemma.

The Board of Pensions has seriously and prayerfully considered the issue of “relief of conscience” on this matter since 2010. In the intervening time, the General Assembly has encouraged the Board of Pensions in this matter at both the 220th General Assembly (2012), in Item 20-11, and the 221st General Assembly (2014), in Item 12-12.

As the Board of Pensions has communicated since its initial response to this issue in 2012, a financial mechanism such as the one used in the Relief of Conscience administrative process for abortion-related expenses does not present itself in this case. The nature of the plan funding and the timeline of the benefits paid prevent such an approach.

Rather than continue to pursue this avenue, the Board of Pensions adopted a Statement of Objection approach, one that will permit employing organizations and individuals on a self-pay status—those who are paying dues that might be used to support someone else’s dependent—to declare an objection to the Board of Pensions’ decision to cover the same gender domestic partners of plan members. Just as is done in the Minutes of both the General Assembly and the Board of Directors of the Board of Pensions when dissents are lodged, a list of these objections was published and made generally available. In this case, management recorded the dissents on the Board of Pensions’ website, www.pensions.org, where those dissents serve as a public witness of the conscience of those congregations, other employers, and individuals. Specifically, this public record was placed in a Relief of Conscience section of the Board of Pensions’ website that already included a list of churches and other employers that had been granted Relief of Conscience for payment of abortion-related claims.

D. Committee on Theological Education

1. 2010 Referral: Item 10-10. Report, Neither Poverty Nor Riches: Compensation, Equity, and the Unity of the Church. Recommendation 2.e. Request the Committee on Theological Education (COTE) to Convene an Appropriately Structured Discussion Among the Seminaries on the Matter of Compensation Ranges and Sharing Economic Burdens During Recession Periods, Reporting a Digest of Their Findings to the 220th General Assembly (2012)—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 34, 35, 742–72).

Response: At the 221st General Assembly (2014), COTE stated that it had begun work and would provide a response to the 222nd General Assembly (2016). COTE referred Item 10-10 to its Theological and Church Concerns subcommittee for study and action. As a result of its study, the subcommittee determined that the seminaries already are collaborating in a structured way on the matter of compensation ranges and the sharing of economic burdens during recession periods. The seminary presidents meet annually to discuss, among other topics, the matter of institutional financial health and potential collaborative projects. COTE staff work with the presidents to establish agenda topics for conversation and to provide ample time for the conversations to take place. Additionally, the chairs of the seminary boards meet with the presidents at these annual gatherings, allowing for both administrative and trustee representation at the highest levels of the individual seminaries to be in conversation on such important topics.

The subcommittee also determined that the seminaries have structured a method of annually comparing compensation ranges among its core employee constituency of faculty members. The chief financial officer (CFO) of Pittsburgh seminary annually receives financial data, such as salary compensation, from the CFOs of the other seminaries and prepares a comparative report that, while not identifying confidential data from any particular seminary, allows the seminaries to compare their salary ranges with those of the other schools. This structured presentation of materials has been, and will continue to be, a vital comparative resource for the seminaries.

Given the strength of these ongoing conversations, the subcommittee recommended to the full COTE that no further actions were necessary.

2. 2014 Referral: Item 14-04. Part 2: The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, on Behalf of the Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Church Growth Consultation Committee, Recommends That the 221st General Assembly (2014) ... 2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Committee on Theological Education to Consult with Theological Seminaries to Develop Culturally Sensitive Curriculum, Theologies, Language, Teaching and Learning Styles for Teaching Elders and Church Leaders of All Ethnicities. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 44, 46–52, 1000ff).

Response: COTE accepted the lead and began with a consultation of PMA staff from the Racial/Ethnic and Women's Ministries areas and proceeded to contact seminaries with regard to their present work addressing culturally sensitive curricula and learning styles for teaching elders and church leaders of all ethnicities.

As a result of the commitments COTE and the seminaries already have to racism, racial ethnic diversity, and new immigrant worshipping communities, after being added to the consultation results, COTE:

- Unequivocally states its ongoing commitment to addressing racism, racial ethnic diversity, and new immigrant worshipping communities.
- Will write letters by the end of April 2016 to each seminary affirming what they are doing, encouraging them to deepen and extend what they are doing, and offering COTE as a supportive resource.
- Will actively support the work of the coordinator of theological education and seminary relations on R/E New Immigrant leadership issues in partnership with R/E&W Ministries, participation in programs that support R/E and New Immigrant seminarians, and development of a seminary faculty consultation on antiracism, inclusion, and seminary programs. COTE will receive the coordinator's report on these activities and consider observations and suggestions based on these activities.
- Recommits itself to continue deepening its engagement with these issues, supported and facilitated by the coordinator of theological education and seminary relations. COTE understands this response to referral to Item 14-04, Recommendation 2, to be only the first step in its ongoing response.

3. 2014 Referral: Item 13-07. Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions. Recommendation 1. Direct the Transfer of the Theological Education Fund (the "Fund") from the Presbyterian Mission Agency ("PMA") to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation ("Foundation"), to Be Managed, Administered, and Distributed by the Foundation for the Benefit of Seminaries Related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Pursuant to a Fund Advisory Agreement Between the Foundation and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, on Behalf of the PMA and on Behalf of the Committee on Theological Education ("COTE"), the Fund Agreement to Provide That Future Contributions to the Fund Will Be Irrevocable Contributions to the Foundation and Distributed Only as Directed by COTE, Effective January 1, 2015 (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 25, 979–81; p. 312 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 13-07. Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions. Recommendation 2. Direct That Responsibility for Marketing and Administering the Fund Be Transferred from the PMA to the Foundation, Effective January 1, 2015, and That the Foundation and COTE Engage in a Process, as Spelled Out in a Fund Advisory Agreement, to Hire an Experienced, Full-Time Fundraiser, Whose Work Shall Be Under the Direction and Ultimate Performance Management of COTE and Dedicated Solely to Generating Financial Support for Theological Education (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 25, 979–81; p. 312 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 13-07. Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions. Recommendation 4. Direct That the Marketing Information and Databases for the Fund Be Transferred from the PMA to the Foundation, as Permitted by Applicable Law and Consistent with Written Representations or Other Appropriate Communications to Donors, to Be Used Only for Marketing of the Fund, Effective January 1, 2015 (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 25, 979–81; p. 312 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 13-07. Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions. Recommendation 5. Direct That the Responsibility for the Denomination's Relationships with PC(USA)- Related Seminaries Will Continue to Be Lodged Under COTE, and That Any Mission Program Support for COTE Will Continue to Be Provided by the PMA in Consultation with COTE (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 25, 979–81; p. 312 of the print copy).

Response: The Theological Education Fund was successfully transferred from the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation at the beginning of 2015 pursuant to the Fund Advisory Agreement between the Foundation and the PC(USA), A Corporation, on behalf of the PMA and the Committee on Theological Education.

The Foundation hired the Reverend Dr. Lee Hinson-Hasty to serve as the senior director of theological education funds development and the Reverend Nancy Benson-Nicol as associate director for theological education funds development. They both began service in these roles on January 1, 2015.

The marketing information and databases for the Theological Education Fund were transferred from the PMA to the Foundation, as permitted by applicable law and consistent with written representations or other appropriate communications with donors.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency hired a coordinator for theological education, the Reverend Dr. Michelle Bartel. She began serving in March 2015. Her work entails the denominational support for theological education and PC(USA) seminars, including serving as the primary staff support for the Committee on Theological Education.

E. Office of the General Assembly

1. 2014 Referral: Item 05-09. Commissioners' Resolution. On Studying the Effectiveness of Mid Council to Mid Council Reference Checks and Clearance Procedures (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 13, 55, 353–54).

Response: In response to Item 05-09, the commissioners' resolution on studying the effectiveness of reference checks between mid councils, COGA appointed a task force to meet with the commissioner's presbytery. As a result, the Church Leadership Connection now includes a space for a presbytery to list the name and contact information of the person conducting such checks on its behalf.

2. 2014 Referral: Item 06-12. Special Committee to Review the Preparation for Ministry Process and Standard Ordination Exams (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 14, 25, 73–75, 376–88).

Response:

a. Item 06-12. Recommendation 1. Commitment to Full Diversity of the Body of Christ (Ibid., pp. 14, 73, 376)

Continuing: The manager for preparation for ministry in the Office of the General Assembly highlights issues around the "changing cultural landscape" in American society in training materials (see Advisory Handbook on Preparation for Ministry in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), pp 15–18) and training events, encouraging presbyteries to reflect these changing demographics in the country and among those entering the process in the membership of their committees and commissions on preparation.

Continuing: The need for diversity among readers and the specific need for multilingual readers is a part of all communications to the presbyteries from the manager for preparation for ministry regarding election and reporting of ordination exam readers.

Continuing: The Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCC) regularly emphasizes to the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) the need for diversity among General Assembly nominees to the PCC, and to provide GANC with racial ethnic persons with qualifications important to the work of the PCC to be considered for nomination.

b. Item 06-12. Recommendation 2. Develop List of Resource Persons to Assist with Cultural Proficiency (Ibid., pp. 14, 73, 377)

Continuing: The manager for preparation for ministry inquires of persons with these competencies encountered through training events and work with the committees of the church to ascertain their willingness to be available to provide such consultation, and facilitates connections between them and presbyteries when requested.

c. Item 06-12. Recommendation 3. Retention of Standard Ordination Examinations (Ibid., pp. 14, 74, 377)

Continuing: The Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCC) continues the administration of the standard ordination examinations, and the manager for preparation for ministry provides training materials and events on the proper use of the examinations within the overall preparation for ministry process (see Handbook on Standard Ordination Examinations in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), pp. 24–27 and 95; and online resources at <http://oga.pcusa.org/section/mid-council-ministries/prep4min/online-trainings/>).

d. Item 06-12. Recommendation 4. Consultation between PCC and Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Ibid., pp. 14, 74, 377)

Completed: Members of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) presented a report to the 2015 Annual Meeting of the PCC based on a review of the past five years of examinations for concerns of racial ethnic bias or issues of cross-cultural accessibility. The two members of ACREC who made the report also participated in the midpoint discussion of examination questions in development.

e. Item 06-12. Recommendation 5. Culturally Diverse Resources in Examination Reader Training Materials (Ibid., pp. 14, 74, 377)

Continuing: The Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCC) now formally reviews all reader training resource papers to specifically check for inclusion of materials presenting the Reformed theological insights of racial ethnic and non-European persons.

f. Item 06-12. Recommendation 6. Broadening of Examination Formats, Including Possible Oral Presentations (Ibid., pp. 14, 74, 378)

Completed: Beginning with the July 2015 ordination examinations in the areas of Church Polity, Reformed Theology, and Worship and Sacraments, the time permitted for completion of these tests was extended from three hours to nine hours (essentially a standard work day with a one-hour break for lunch). The intent of this change, which was made without fundamentally altering the expectations of the questions on the exams, was to provide more time for reflection on and review of exam responses prior to submission. Also beginning with that exam cycle the PCC made available to the presbyteries an optional format of these exams and the Bible Exegesis exam that integrates an oral component into the standard ordination exam process (see Handbook on Standard Ordination Examinations, pp. 16–18).

g. Item 06-12. Recommendation 7. Contemporary Challenges of Ministry as Teaching Elders (Ibid., pp. 14, 74, 378)

Continuing: The manager for preparation for ministry encourages presbyteries and seminaries to explore financial implications of seminary education and employment as teaching elders with their inquirers and candidates through training materials and events with committees and commissions on preparation and seminary placement officers. Such materials include information on the changing nature of teaching elder calls, time to receive first calls, financial support models for ministry, etc. (see Advisory Handbook, pp. 8–20).

h. Item 06-12. Recommendation 8. Use of Flexibility in the Preparation for Ministry Process (Ibid., pp. 14, 74, 378)

Continuing: The manager for preparation for ministry encourages presbyteries to utilize, in appropriate situations, the provisions of G-2.0610 through training materials and events with committees and commissions on preparation (see Advisory Handbook, pp. 54–56).

i. Item 06-12. Recommendation 9. Models for Responding to Emerging Issues in Preparation for Ministry (Ibid., pp. 14, 74, 378–79)

Continuing: The Mid Council Ministries area of the Office of the General Assembly sponsors online discussion boards for moderators and members of committees and commissions on preparation for ministry to facilitate requests for and sharing of models for addressing issues related to work with inquirers and candidates. The manager for preparation for ministry develops resources that draw upon best practices across the church gleaned from interactions with leadership during training events and other contacts. Resources are continuing to be collected for the development of a preparation for ministry component on the PC(USA) training site (<http://moodle.pcusa.org>).

j. Item 06-12. Recommendation 10. Report on Non-Teaching Elder Pastoral Leadership (Ibid., pp. 14, 74, 379)

Completed: Report was submitted to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) at its February 2016 meeting. COGA adopted a recommendation to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) in response to the report.

k. Item 06-12. Recommendation 11. Proposed Amendments to G-2.0607 (Ibid., pp. 25, 75, 379)

Completed: Approved by the presbyteries and included in 2015–2017 Book of Order.

l. Item 06-12. Recommendation 12: Proposed Amendments to G-2.0610 (Ibid., pp. 27, 72, 75, 379–80)

Completed: Approved by the presbyteries and included in 2015–2017 Book of Order.

3. 2014 Referral: Item 06-12, Recommendation 10, Direct the OGA and PMA to Review the Programs and Procedures Used by, or Available to, Presbyteries to Prepare, Equip, Credential, and Deploy Pastoral Leadership for Congregations Other Than the Preparation Process for Those Seeking Ordination to the Ordered Ministry of Teaching Elder, with a Report to Be Submitted to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 14, 74, 379).

Response: In 2014–15, the manager for preparation for ministry in Mid Council Ministries of the Office of the General Assembly and the coordinator of theological education and seminary relations for the Theology, Formation, and Evangelism area of the Presbyterian Mission Agency conducted a review of the programs and procedures currently used and available to presbyteries to prepare, equip, credential, and deploy pastoral leadership other than teaching elders. This review was conducted through contact with mid councils and theological education institutions in the course of their professional responsibilities as well as special conversation sessions at national and regional events including synod and multi-presbytery training events, Big Tent, and the Polity Conference.

In addition to these conversations with various constituencies, a survey was conducted in November 2015, and responses were received from 77 of the 171 presbyteries (45 percent). The presbyteries responding to the survey represented both smaller and larger presbyteries, more rural and more urban presbyteries, and fifteen of the sixteen synods. The survey included questions designed to gather numerical data as well as open-ended responses. Summaries of survey findings are included in appropriate sections of this report.

Types of non-Teaching Elder Pastoral Leaders

Presbyteries are using a broad range of persons other than teaching elders to provide pastoral leadership to their congregations and ministries. The listing and chart below provide information about the types of persons fulfilling these functions and the percentage of presbyteries among the seventy-five who responded to the question that are using one or more persons from each of the categories:

- A. Ruling elders commissioned to limited pastoral service (G-2.1001, sometimes called “commissioned ruling elders” or “CREs”), 93.3 percent
- B. Ruling elders without a commission, 38.7 percent
- C. Inquirers or candidates in the PC(USA) preparation for ministry process, 33.3 percent
- D. Deacons in the PC(USA), 9.3 percent
- E. Ordained ministers of “Formula of Agreement” churches through “orderly exchange,” 53.3 percent
- F. Persons ordained in another Christian church to ministry equivalent to a teaching elder, 70.7 percent
- G. Persons ordained in another Christian church to ministry not equivalent to a teaching elder, 13.3 percent
- H. Persons not ordained to any ordered ministry of the church, 9.3 percent

Presbyteries also report on some of these types of non-teaching elder pastoral leadership as part of their annual statistical reports to the Office of the General Assembly. In the table below, data regarding “Commissioned Ruling Elders” correlates to group “A” in the preceding list, and “Temporary Members of Presbytery” correlate to groups “E” and “F.” The totals reported by presbyteries from across the church from 2012 to 2015 (all totals at year-end except 2015, which was as of December 15) were as follows:

Total “Commissioned Ruling Elders” (CREs)	932	911	942	957
Commissioned to congregational ministry	921	895	920	925
Commissioned to other validated ministry	11	16	22	32
Total presbyteries represented	147	148	151	151
Total “Temporary Members of Presbytery”	419	397	408	418
Serving in congregational ministry	384	361	366	371
Serving in other validated ministry	35	36	42	47
Total presbyteries represented	121	119	120	120

Table 1: Non-Teaching Elders in Congregational and Validated Ministries

Both these sources of information indicate that the use of ruling elders commissioned to limited pastoral service (G-2.1001) are the most common types of non-teaching elder individuals currently being used by presbyteries to provide pastoral leadership to their congregations and other ministry efforts (such as “new worshiping communities,” institutional chaplaincies, etc.; see “Deploy” below). The use of commissioned ruling elders in congregational settings appears to be leveling off after years of rapid increase. In the decade from 2000 through 2009 the year-end totals reported by presbyteries rose from about 200 to almost 900, an almost 450 percent increase. However, although still small in comparison, the number of ruling elders commissioned to other validated ministries continues to rise. A similar pattern is present in “temporary membership” in presbyteries by ministers ordained by other Christian churches.

“Prepare”

In the November 2015 survey, sixty-five presbyteries responded to a question about the types of preparation they require of non-teaching elders who provide pastoral leadership in their congregations. Just over half (53.8 percent) reported that they had designed and run a program themselves, and about one-in-six (16.9 percent) reported they partnered with other mid councils in such programs. Almost half (47.7 percent) reported they used a program specifically designed by a seminary for persons not seeking ordination as teaching elders, and 6 percent reported they partnered with a local college to provide such training. Two of the sixty-five responding presbyteries (3 percent) indicated they relied upon mentoring provided by experienced teaching elder pastors.

These survey responses clearly highlight the two primary types of preparation for pastoral ministry other than the preparation for ministry process to become a teaching elder in the PC(USA): programs designed and run by mid councils, and programs designed and run by educational institutions and utilized by presbyteries.

The amount of instructional hours within training programs administered by mid councils varies widely. In the responses of thirty-five presbyteries to an open-ended question asking them to describe training programs run either by themselves or in coordination with other mid councils, many focused on the number of months necessary to complete the training rather than the number of contact/instructional hours provided during those periods. Presbyteries who reported the number of weeks or months necessary to complete the training ranged from six weeks to up to four years, with most clustering in the 12–24 month range. For those presbyteries reporting total instructional hours, the range was from a low of two hours to high of approximately 150 hours, with most requiring between 25 and 50 instructional hours. By way of comparison, a typical college course includes about 40–50 instructional hours.

Seminaries in the PC(USA) have various continuing education programs that can serve as a resource for presbyteries as they undertake the work of preparing, equipping, and credentialing Presbyterians for pastoral leadership. These trajectories in seminary education can be used apart from the preparation process for those seeking ordination to the ordered ministry of teaching elder. The resources vary from seminary to seminary, and include special certificate programs, leadership programs, continuing education workshops and programs, opportunities to take regular seminary courses without pursuing a degree, and master of arts programs in theological disciplines. Currently, the only seminary offering a specific program for certification of CREs is University of Dubuque Theological Seminary in their Christian Leadership Program. Austin Seminary offers a Certificate in Ministry in English and a Certificado en Ministerio de Español in Spanish.

The seminaries are consistent in their development of these educational opportunities when it comes to preparation. The programs and workshops all include elements of self-knowledge, faith development, and awareness of dynamics in church and society. These programs also provide resources for equipping congregational leaders, as elements of practical ministry and experience are incorporated.

Finally, it is important to note that, while some of our PC(USA) seminaries offer certificates and diplomas in tracks other than the master of divinity (M.Div.), a seminary cannot actually “credential” a student in these programs. All the certificate can show is that a student completed the work. This is similar to the situation with inquirers and candidates who graduate with an M.Div. degree but can only be “certified ready to be examined for ordination, pending a call” (G-2.0607) by their presbytery of care.

Among the offerings provided by PC(USA)-affiliated seminaries are the following:

Austin Seminary
Master of Arts in Ministry Practice
Certificate in Ministry, Certificado en Ministerio de Español

Columbia Theological Seminary
Master of Arts in Practical Theology
Christian Spiritual Formation
Spiritual Direction
Older Adult Ministry
Leadership in Ministry workshops

Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary
Institute for Worship, Preaching, and Sacred Arts

Pittsburgh Theological Seminary
Hispanic Ministries Network

Princeton Theological Seminary
Online Certificate in Theology and Ministry Certificate in Youth Ministry

San Francisco Theological Seminary
 Certificate in Black Church Studies
 Certificate of Ministry Studies
 Certificate in Trauma and Spiritual Care
 Certificate in Worship Leadership
 Diploma in the Art of Spiritual Direction
 Diploma in Spiritual Formation Studies

Union Presbyterian Seminary
 Masters of Arts in Christian Education with Extended Campus Program
 Leadership Institute

University of Dubuque Theological Seminary
 Christian Leadership Program offering certification for CREs

Beyond training programs provided by either mid councils or seminaries, it has long been acknowledged that a primary preparation for ruling elders commissioned to limited pastoral service was their prior experience as ruling elders within congregations and higher councils of the church. That history emerged in several comments to Item 06-08 to the 221st General Assembly (2014) requesting consideration of amending the constitution to permit presbyteries to “elect and ordain men and women to be ruling elders for the purpose of commissioning them to serve as commissioned ruling elders pursuant to G-2.1002–G-2.1004.” The committee assigned the overture recommended disapproval, and the assembly did disapprove it. Nevertheless, during the period in which this report was being prepared, Office of the General Assembly staff were informed of more than one presbytery that had arranged for congregations to elect and ordain persons as ruling elders so that they could then be commissioned to limited pastoral service in ministry settings without formal connection to the congregation that had elected and ordained the individual.

“Equip”

Just as presbyteries use a variety of training models to prepare persons other than teaching elders to provide pastoral functions before they begin such service, they also employ a variety of methods to continue to equip them during their periods of ministry in these settings. Far and away the most common type of support was the assignment of a mentor, which should not be surprising since the Book of Order requires mentors for ruling elders commissioned to limited pastoral service (“A teaching elder shall be assigned as a mentor and supervisor,” G-2.1004). Of the sixty-seven presbyteries that provided information about ongoing programs to equip non-teaching elders for providing pastoral leadership in the November 2015 survey, roughly four out of five (79 percent) reported the use of mentors with several indicating mentors were assigned to ministers of other denominations serving presbytery congregations as well as to CREs. There were also, however, just over 10 percent of the presbyteries (7 of the 67 responding to the question) that indicated that they provided no form of regular support to non-teaching elders providing pastoral functions, even though mentoring was suggested as one possible form of such support in the question itself.

Other forms of ongoing support that were identified included colleague and support groups (18 percent of the responding presbyteries), continuing education beyond the preliminary training (16 percent), and supervision by a committee within the presbytery (12 percent). One presbytery reported that its only support was an “annual consultation,” and four others (6 percent) reported that non-teaching elders providing pastoral functions were encouraged to participate in training and support opportunities provided by the presbytery to its teaching elder members.

The survey responses indicate that presbyteries primarily rely upon mentors to equip and support non-teaching elders who are providing pastoral forms of leadership. However, the anecdotal information gathered during conversations about this issue across the church indicates that the quality of these mentoring relationships is inconsistent at best. Many of the mentors receive no specific training or support for these roles. It was widely reported that many mentors do not have regular contact with the persons to whom they are assigned, and that much depends upon whether or not the mentor and mentee are able to form a personal bond.

“Credential”

When asked about “which ... types of credentials does your presbytery provide or require for persons other than teaching elders who provide pastoral leadership,” 56 of the 65 responding presbyteries (86.1 percent) reported they required presbytery commissions to limited pastoral service specifically to moderate sessions, administer sacraments, or perform marriages where permitted by state law (G-2.1001). Because roughly 40 percent of these presbyteries also reported in response to a different question that they had ruling elders providing pastoral leadership “without a commission from the presbytery” it is difficult to interpret this data. Respondents may have focused on the word “provide” rather than “require” or may have been focused specifically on the functions enumerated from G-2.1001 since only 4.6 percent responded that they provide “commissions to forms of service not enumerated in the Book of Order.” Similarly, only 4.6 percent of these presbyteries reported that they required “educational degrees or certifications in areas such as Christian education, spiritual direction, etc.,” even though roughly half reported that they utilized programs designed by seminaries and colleges as a form of preparation for such service. Perhaps the best interpretation of the data is that many presbyteries view a “commission to limited pastoral service” extended to a ruling elder as the only “credential” available to them in such circumstances.

That such “commissions” appear to be seen as a “credential” proper may also help to explain another point widely present in the anecdotal evidence. Such “commissions to limited pastoral service” are often considered to confer a status on the recipient as a “commissioned ruling elder” or “CRE” distinct from a commission to perform specified functions in a particular ministry setting. Thus, presbyteries can talk about their “CREs” who have completed training but not yet been assigned to serve in any ministry setting. Additionally, ruling elders who have completed periods of service specified by a commission can continue to refer to themselves as a “commissioned ruling elder.” Among other consequences of “commissions” being considered “credentials” retained by ruling elders who received them are individuals wishing to place Personal Information Forms (PIFs) in the Church Leadership Connection (CLC) system so they might be considered by congregations looking for such leadership; individuals seeking to transfer from one presbytery to another as a CRE; and individuals offering themselves to congregations as CREs apart from prior presbytery involvement with the congregation in developing its mission strategy, including administration of the sacraments and officiating at weddings by personal invitation.

Another issue raised by the statistical data on the breadth of persons being utilized to provide pastoral functions other than teaching elders (and those holding equivalent ordinations in other Christian churches) and ruling elders commissioned to limited pastoral service is whether there needs to be some other form of constitutionally recognized means for a presbytery to formally authorize such ministry. In the past, a presbytery was permitted to extend “licensure” to “preach the gospel” to candidates who had completed the preparation process for ordination as a teaching elder and been examined by the presbytery but not yet received a call; however, such licenses could not include authorization “to be the moderator of a session, to administer the sacraments, or to perform a marriage ceremony” (1979–80 Book of Order of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States, G-49.07–49.10). New immigrant worshiping communities have raised the issue of whether some form of formal authorization should be available for a presbytery to extend to persons in the ordered ministry of deacon or another category of ordered ministry conferred by Reformed churches elsewhere in the world (such as “evangelist”). As indicated earlier in this report, some presbyteries are responding to the absence of such alternatives by working with congregations to elect and ordain individuals as ruling elders specifically for the purpose of then commissioning those persons to limited pastoral service in other ministry settings.

“Deploy”

As reported in Table 1 above, 151 of the 171 presbyteries (88.3 percent) reported in 2015 that they had commissioned ruling elders to perform one or more of the pastoral functions provided for in G-2.1001 (moderate sessions, administer the sacraments, or perform marriages). Of those ruling elders the vast majority (96.7 percent) were commissioned to congregational ministry settings. In the November 2015 survey, just over three-quarters (77.7 percent) of the sixty-three presbyteries who responded to the question indicated they have such commissioned ruling elders serving in “solo pastor” settings, and about one-in-five (20.6 percent) had such persons serving in what could be described as “associate pastor”-type positions. At least one presbytery reported they had commissioned a ruling elder to perform the pastoral functions in G-2.1001 in their capacity as either a co-pastor, leader of a new church development, Christian educator, or member of presbytery staff.

There is some indication that presbyteries may be under-reporting to the Office of the General Assembly their use of ruling elders commissioned to perform pastoral functions in validated ministry settings. Whereas only thirty-two individual ruling elders had been reported to OGA as serving in such capacities for 2015, more than a quarter (28.1 percent) of sixty-three presbyteries responding to a question in the November 2015 survey about their deployment of such ruling elders indicated they had granted commissions for “ministry settings other than congregations.” The vast majority of these validated ministry settings were identified as institutional chaplaincy roles (at hospitals, hospice centers, prisons, and educational campuses), although one presbytery reported the representative of Presbyterian Women on its administrative council had been commissioned and another reported a commission to perform weddings without identifying a particular ministry setting.

4. 2014 Referral: Item 08-07. On Fairness in Ministry Compensation: Incentives and Solidarity (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 14, 41–42, 495–501).

Response: The Office of the General Assembly, Church Leadership Connection, posted the report, Fairness in Ministerial Compensation: Incentives and Solidarity electronically and encouraged “mid council staff and elected leaders” to review the report. It is available at <http://oga.pcusa.org/section/mid-council-ministries/clc/>.

5. 2014 Referral: Item 15-04. On Recognizing the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative to Affirm and Promote the Civil and Human Rights of Immigrants in Our Communities—From the Presbytery of Central Florida. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 58, 1030–33).

Response: The Office of the General Assembly hired a new manager for advocacy, Laura Polk, who began work in the Office of Immigration Issues in January of 2015. The Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative (PIDI), facilitated by the manager for advocacy in the Office of Immigration Issues, has met on a monthly basis to inform each other of the advocacy work being done on the ground, connecting with others doing similar work, and strategizing on ways to strengthen the national network of Presbyterian advocates.

F. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation

1. 2014 Referral: Item 04-04. On Supporting Middle East Peacemaking—From the Presbytery of New Covenant. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 58–59, 60, 260ff).

Following the directive from the 221st General Assembly (2014), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation completed divestment from all direct holdings in Caterpillar, Hewlett Packard, and Motorola Solutions. The estimated total of all holdings was $3 million out of the $1.7 billion in total Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation assets. The securities were added to the 2015 Prohibited Securities List, which in turn was distributed to all Foundation investment advisors, money managers, and New Covenant Funds. The 2016 prohibited securities list continues to have Caterpillar, Hewlett Packard, and Motorola Solutions included on the list.

2. 2014 Referral: Item 04-06. On Affirming Occupation-Free Investment in Palestine—From the Presbytery of Mackinac. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 13, 61–62, 271–75).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation is grateful for the assembly’s commendation. Through its subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, the Foundation offers positive, transformational investment strategies designed to create conditions for peace in the region. In addition, New Covenant Trust Company has enhanced its securities screening capability to further serve agencies, presbyteries, congregations, and members with customized, screened investment portfolio strategies. These Mission Driven Investment Portfolios enable Presbyterians to align their investments with their values.

3. 2014 Referral: Item 04-10. Commissioners’ Resolution. On Declaring That Zionism Unsettled Does Not Represent Views of PC(USA)—From the 221st General Assembly (2014) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 13, 62, 296–98).

The Presbyterian Foundation has not produced any catalogs or resources that promote or reference “Zionism Unsettled.”

4. 2014 Referral: Item 09-13. A Review of Efforts Regarding Cultural Proficiency and Creating a Climate for Change in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)—Report to the 221st General Assembly (2014)—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 35, 38, 652–55).

Representatives from the six agencies (including the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation) and members of the GACOR consulted over the past year regarding supplier diversity policies. A database of eligible businesses has been compiled and will be updated on a continual basis by all representatives to assist the six agencies when selecting vendors for their organizations.

5. 2014 Referral: Item 09-19. Developing a Standard Definition of Supplier Diversity and Any Related Terms or Criteria Necessary—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 39, 735–37).

The six agency representatives, members of the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR), and consulting partners from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, combined efforts to develop a standard definition of supplier diversity, supplier categories, and supplier groups. These will serve as guidelines for preparing annual status reports to GACOR.

6. 2014 Referral: Item 09-22. Commissioners’ Resolution. On Encouraging Parental Leave Policy—From the 221st General Assembly (2014). (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 39–40, 740–42).

The Foundation does not have a parental leave policy. Short-term disability is provided for the birth mother in coordination with the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA), and FMLA leave may be used when adopting a child. A father may also utilize FMLA upon the birth or adoption of a child. FMLA is unpaid leave, but the employee may use paid time off in order to receive pay.

7. 2014 Referral: Item 13-07. Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 25, 979–81).

Five General Assemblies (198th in 1986, 205th in 1993, 219th in 2010, 220th in 2012, and 221st in 2014) called on the PC(USA) and COTE to strengthen the funding mechanism for our PC(USA) seminaries through the Theological Education Fund (TEF) and Theological Schools Endowment Fund (TSEF). The 221st General Assembly (2014) agreed with a Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions (Item 13-07) and the COTE that moving the fiduciary responsibility of the TEF and TSEF from the Presbyterian Mission Agency to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation would reduce expenses and enlarge the possibilities for theological education support. In the Fall of 2014, and in accordance with the 221st General Assembly (2014), a new position was created by the Foundation as directed by the COTE and another staff position was transferred to lead the Seminary Support Network. The senior director (new role) and associate director (transferred role) job descriptions were approved, persons were called by the COTE Executive Committee (The Reverend Dr. Lee Hinson-Hasty as senior director and the Reverend Nancy Benson-Nicol as associate director), with both beginning January 1, 2015. A TEF Fund Advisory Agreement was signed February 9, 2015, to implement all the 221st General Assembly (2014) mandated actions. The Executive Committee of COTE functions as the TEF Advisory Committee monitoring the transfer and progress of the project and partnering with Foundation staff regularly in 2015 and 2016.

G. Presbyterian Mission Agency

1. 2014 Referral: Item 14-04. Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Church Growth Consultation Committee Report. Recommendation 4. Direct the Six Agencies of PC(USA) to Distribute Essential Documents in Multiple Languages, as Appropriate—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 44, 46–52, 1000–09; p. 316 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Mission Agency’s Office of Communications has on staff one Spanish-language translator and one Korean-language translator. Their full-time work is to translate essential documents into Spanish and Korean, principally for the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The documents that are considered “essential” vary depending on the different constituencies, and the Spanish and Korean caucuses have taken an active role in defining what they wish to have translated.

On the Spanish side, highlights of our translator’s work include General Assembly overtures; important media releases, memos, statements, newsletters, and prayers from the Stated Clerk and General Assembly Moderator; elder-training monthly columns and materials for Special Offerings; and a special edition published by Presbyterians Today called Welcome to the Presbyterian Church.

Highlights of our Korean translator’s work include General Assembly overtures; media releases, memos, statements, newsletters, and prayers from the Stated Clerk and General Assembly Moderator; ruling elder materials; Confession of Belhar; Parliamentary Procedures; materials about the 1001 New Worshiping Communities initiative; and materials for Special Offerings.

The Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program has one document it considers essential (their Offering Circular) that has been translated into both Spanish and Korean.

The Presbyterian Foundation had its agency overview piece translated into both Spanish and Korean. Their Composing a Legacy brochure (overview of Foundation services) was translated into Spanish, and their Spending Formula piece (explanation of the total return policy of the Foundation for endowment funds) was translated into Korean.

Although the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation does not consider any of its materials essential, the agency is working with OGA to publish How to Be a Presbyterian Ruling Elder in Spanish and Korean. Their hymnal committee was intentional about including hymns with Spanish and Korean lyrics, as well as some settings in other languages. They have also produced various Thoughtful Christian studies and a hymnal (El Himnario) in Spanish.

The Board of Pensions offers most of its resources about plans, programs, and benefits in Spanish and Korean.

Within the Presbyterian Mission Agency, staff members from the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries area have been instrumental in securing translations of essential documents into other languages, largely by using teams of volunteers. The Asian Congregational Support office has translated the Book of Order into Chinese and Indonesian; Presbyterians Today Advent and Lenten devotionals into Chinese, Indonesian, Taiwanese, Thai, and Vietnamese; news stories about ordination changes and same-gender marriage into Chinese and Vietnamese; a summary (published by The Presbyterian Outlook) of actions taken by the 221st General Assembly (2014) into Chinese; and various other documents into Burmese with its multiple dialects. Their webpage also includes multilingual instructions (Chinese, Indonesian, Vietnamese, Japanese, Thai, Filipino, Taiwanese) to use the Google translate tool to get rough translations of other materials. The Portuguese Congregational Support office has translated the Book of Order and a letter from the Moderator into Portuguese.

2. Alternate Resolution to 2004 Referral: Item 04-12. Recommendation 2. That the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council Office of Theology and Worship Undertake an Analysis of the Directory of Worship with the Goal of Evaluating Its Influence and Effectiveness in Guiding Sessions, Pastors, and Higher Governing Bodies in Planning and Conducting Worship That Is Authentically Reformed and Culturally Appropriate—From the 216th General Assembly (2004) (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 86).

2014 Referral: Item 13-02. The 221st General Assembly (2014) Forwards the Draft of the Proposed Directory for Worship to the Church for Study and Comment in Consideration of Submitting It to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) for Approval. All Comments Should Be Directed to the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly by July 1, 2015—From the 221st General Assembly (2014) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 24, 25, 956ff).

Response: This referral is being answered by Item 14-04, Revised Directory for Worship, being presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016). (See p. 978 of the electronic file.)

3. 2012 Referral: Item 11-20. A Statement on the Housing and the Mortgage Crisis. Recommendation. MRTI to Report Back to the 221st General Assembly (2014) on Ways for the Church to Respond to the Housing and Mortgage Crisis—From the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 28, 34, 1118–22 of the CD; p. 253 of the print copy).

Response: The Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) and its ecumenical partners engaged major banks and financial institutions (some of which had absorbed subprime lenders as part of its regular work on the subject of mortgage servicing and foreclosure avoidance. Immediately after the crisis hit in late 2008, MRTI and its ecumenical partners urged banks to modify loans as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) had done in mid-2008 in its takeover of IndyMac Bank. The Treasury Department was slow during 2009 through 2011 in adequately developing the major federal response, its Home Affordable Modification Program (HAMP) modification program, and MRTI et al. continued to press banks to use alternative modification programs to cover those borrowers not covered by the Treasury modifications. Unfortunately, a major portion of these delinquent mortgages from this crisis had been securitized, so MRTI also had to pressure the bank mortgage servicers to provide modifications.

These banks and financial institutions were under intense scrutiny by government officials and regulators, and were subject to legal actions by states. The initial pressure for bank reform came from the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) and the Federal Reserve, which received all the background papers written for the ecumenical partners, and they were followed by the passage of the Dodd-Frank Act in 2010. Public ranking of individual lenders on a consistent basis first came from the 2012 National Mortgage Settlement with 49 State Attorneys General, HUD, and the Department of Justice. Shareholder advocacy reinforced this effort, and led to reforms and more transparency.

At the same time, underwriting standards were tightened and lenders eliminated stated income and most subprime loans. MRTI has also advocated for reforms in the securitization of mortgage loans, in auto loans, and in other products prone to abuses. Attention to the financial sector has been and will be a key component of MRTI's work.

4. 2012 Referral: Item 12-09. A Resolution to Recognize the Commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Making Just Immigration a Reality. Recommendation. Direct the Office of Immigration Issues and the Office of Theology, Worship and Education to Collaborate in the Development of Accessible Worship and Study Resources That Will Assist Presbyterians in Understanding, Engaging, and Integrating an Ecclesiology of 'Being Church Together'—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 55, 60, 1155–57 of the CD; p. 263 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Immigration Services and the Office of Theology and Worship conducted a consultation in early 2015 and will have resources available to the church at <http://oga.pcusa.org/section/mid-council-ministries/immigration/>.

5. 2012 Referral: Item 21-01. On Instructing MRTI to Study and Report Corporate Practices of Health Insurance Companies and Possible Divestment of Same. Recommendation 1. The MRTI Committee Is Instructed to Request Information and Explanations of Health Insurance Company Policy and Practice on: State and Federal Lobbying Expenditures and Political/Campaign Contributions, Government Subsidies and Profit Margins Related to Provisions of the Healthcare 'Reform' Legislation, Aggregate Data on Increases in Premiums and Deductibles Over the Past Ten Years, Categories and Percentages of Claims Denied, and Percentages of Profits Used in Compensating Top Executives in Comparison with Return to Shareholders—From the Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 64, 1687–92 of the CD; p. 341 of the print copy).

2012 Referral: Item 21-01. On Instructing MRTI to Study and Report Corporate Practices of Health Insurance Companies and Possible Divestment of Same. Recommendation 3. MRTI Is Asked to Evaluate the Variance Between Church Principles of Universal Access and Affordability and Corporate Objectives, to Assess the Likelihood of Significant Change in Corporate Behavior, and to Recommend to the GAMC and General Assembly, Including Possible Divestment, That Would Strengthen the Integrity of the Church's Practice—From the Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 64, 1687–92 of the CD; p. 341 of the print copy).

2012 Referral: Item 21-01. On Instructing MRTI to Study and Report Corporate Practices of Health Insurance Companies and Possible Divestment of Same. Recommendation 4. The GAMC, the Presbyterian Foundation, and the Board of Pensions Are Requested to Report on Their Actions to the 221st and the 222nd General Assembly (2014) and (2016), with an Eye to Guiding Individual Presbyterians, Congregations, and Mid Councils in Relation to Their Own Investment Holdings in This Major Part of the Economy—From the Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 64, 1687–92 of the CD; p. 341 of the print copy).

Response: Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) has collaborated with ecumenical partners to engage health insurance companies around affordable and accessible health care. Primarily this has focused on increasing participation in the state exchanges as part of the Affordable Care Act. Access to health care, both domestically and internationally, is a key issue for the faith-based investment community. However, MRTI has found no interest among its partners for divestment as a strategy. The engagement process, including dialogues, shareholder resolutions, and proxy voting is the preferred strategy. Further detailed analysis was not feasible due to financial constraints. For more information on shareholder engagement on health issues, see MRTI's web site at www.pcusa.org/mrti.

6. 2014 Referral: Item 04-04. On Supporting Middle East Peacemaking. Recommendation 5. Call for All Foreign Aid Given by the U.S. Government—including Aid to Israel and the Palestinian Authority—to Be Comprehensively and Transparently Accounted to the American People and Held to the Same Standards of Compliance with All Applicable Laws—From the Presbytery of New Covenant (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 58–59, 60, 260–67; p. 182 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 04-04. On Supporting Middle East Peacemaking. Recommendation 6. Call for Church Advocacy for Foreign-Aid Accountability to Be Directed Toward Its Universal Adherence Rather Than Targeted for Selective Application to Some Recipients and Not Others—From the Presbytery of New Covenant (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 58–59, 60, 260–67; p. 182 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been working through the Faith Forum on Middle East Peace to advocate for accountability in U.S. foreign aid to all countries in the Middle East. We have sent letters to congress as well as to the administration to call for clear accountability to U.S. laws particularly in aid to Israel and Syrian rebel forces. We have had several meetings with the State Department to begin the process to ensure that military aid to Israel and other countries is in compliance with the Leahy Law.

7. 2014 Referral: Item 04-12. Commissioners' Resolution. On Reaffirming the Rights of Children and Attention to Violence Against Children in Israel and Palestine. Recommendation 4. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Engage in Advocacy and Public Witness for the Human Rights of Children in Palestine and Israel in Relation to the Listed Items (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 60, 62–64, 300–305; pp. 187–88 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Mission Agency has witnessed and advocated for the human rights of children in Palestine and Israel in several ways. The Office of Public Witness (OPW) supported a congressional briefing on the treatment of Palestinian children. Young adult volunteers from the Office of Public Witness led the worship service at an Interfaith Vigil on the International Day for Protection of Children that focused on the issue of Palestinian children in Israeli detention and on the need to protect all children in Israel, Palestine, the United States, and around the world. The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations worked with members of the United Nations Security Council on their actions relating to children in armed conflict, raising specific concerns for children in Israel and Palestine. The Israel-Palestine Non-Governmental Organizations (NGO) Working Group at the United Nations, of which the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations is a member, sent a letter to United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon expressing deep concern that he failed to include the Israeli Defense Forces and Palestinian armed groups on his list of those who committed grave violations against children in 2014 despite the report of the special representative on children in situations of armed conflict that such violations were committed during the 2014 Israeli incursion into Gaza.

8. 2014 Referral: Item 04-12. Commissioners' Resolution. On Reaffirming the Rights of Children and Attention to Violence Against Children in Israel and Palestine. Recommendation 5. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Create Information Documents, Study Guides, or Other Educational Materials to Be Made Available Through Digital Download at the PC (USA) Website, as Well as Links to Materials and Research from Other Organizations (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 60, 62–64, 300–05; pp. 187–88 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Mission Agency provided educational opportunities on the situation of violence against children in Israel and Palestine. The organization Defense for Children—Palestine led a workshop at the 2015 Compassion, Peace, and Justice training day. Speakers at Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations seminars on Israel and Palestine and on children's rights addressed the need to work to end violence against children in Israel and Palestine. Due to the material from other organizations working on this issue, the Presbyterian Mission Agency did not create new materials. Links to informational documents, study guides, research, and other educational materials are available on the Web page of Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations. Links to these materials are also shared through the social media platforms of various Presbyterian Mission Agency offices. <http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/un/>.

9. 2014 Referral: Item 04-13. Commissioners' Resolution. On a Commitment to Prayer for Peace, Justice, and Reconciliation in Israel and Palestine. Recommendation 4. Facilitators Shall Be Directed to Resources from the Reconciliation Program of Presbyterian World Mission and the Presbyterian Mission Agency's Interfaith Relations Office That Promote Constructive Conversation and Meaningful Dialogue (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 13, 64, 306–08; pp. 188–89 of the print copy).

Response: A variety of resources have been made available on the PC(USA) website, <http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/interfaith/interfaith-resources/>, as well as in print and periodical publications, including several articles in Presbyterians Today, Presbyterian News Service, and the spring issue of Mission Crossroads. World Mission staff and PMA interfaith relations staff have been available for consultation.

10. 2014 Referral: Item 06-12. Special Committee to Review the Preparation for Ministry Process and Standard Ordination Exams. Recommendation 10. Direct the Office of General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Review the Programs and Procedures Used by, or Available to, Presbyteries to Prepare, Equip, Credential, and Deploy Pastoral Leadership for Congregations Other Than the Preparation Process for Those Seeking Ordination to the Ordered Ministry of Teaching Elder, with a Report to Be Submitted to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 14, 74, 376–88; pp. 200-201 of the print copy).

Response: This referral is being answered by the Office of the General Assembly in II. Final Responses to Referrals, E. Office of the General Assembly, 2. Item 06-12 above. (See p. 97 of the electronic file.)

11. 2014 Referral: Item 07-02. The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Recommendation 4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Advocate and Work Toward Meeting Human Needs, Seeking Justice and Reconciliation, and pursuing Peace Through Interreligious Peacemaking, Disaster Assistance, and Solidarity Efforts That Attend to Respectful Interactions with Persons of Different Cultural and Religious Traditions in Both the United States and International Contexts—From the Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 34, 444–53; p. 205 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Mission Agency regularly engages in advocacy and mission that meets human needs, seeks justice, reconciliation, and peacemaking in a respectful, interreligious context. Some of the highlights of this ongoing work include:

- Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) has adopted a Code of Conduct that guides PDA every time it responds to a disaster: http://pda.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/pda/pdfs/codeofconduct.pdf. This Code of Conduct explicitly states that:
 - Aid is given regardless of the race, creed, or nationality of the recipients. Aid priorities are calculated on the basis of need alone.
 - Aid is not used to further a particular political or religious standpoint.
 - We respect culture and custom.

PDA has responded to the Syrian refugee crisis by providing educational support for Syrian children living in camps in Lebanon. Our ecumenical partner, the National Evangelical Synod of Syria and Lebanon, is facilitating this response, mindful of cultural and religious differences and sensitive to the trauma these children have experienced.

PDA continues to be engaged in a substantive response in the Philippines (2013 Super Typhoon Haiyan) and the Nepal Earthquake (April 2015). Both of these recovery efforts are serving multiple religious communities.

In Iraq, PDA provided swamp coolers and other shelter-related resources to Yazidi and Sunni refugee camps on the outskirts of Kirkuk, working through the Presbyterian Church in Kirkuk.

- The Presbyterian Peacemaking Program is sponsoring “Mosaic of Peace,” a conference in the Holy Land April 4–16, 2016. The goal of the conference is to engage with Christian, Muslim, and Jewish leaders, experience contextual theology, and study peacemaking practices within the framework of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) policy.
- <http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/peacemaking/mosaic-peace> The majority of the advocacy work carried out by the Office of Public Witness in Washington (OPW) is done through ecumenical and interreligious coalitions. OPW has engaged in significant interreligious advocacy work around trade issues, specifically the Trans Pacific Partnership (TPP). This work is done through the Interfaith Working Group on Trade and Investment. OPW has also engaged in peacemaking advocacy on drones through the Interfaith Working Group on Drones, including the Interfaith Drones Conference in Princeton in January 2015, the May 15, 2015 letter to President Obama on behalf of faith leaders expressing concerns with lethal drone use. The Interfaith Working Group has also coordinated meetings and helped organize the Interfaith Network on Drone Warfare. An interreligious Syria Refugee Working group has just been formed.

- The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations also engages in advocacy related to issues of freedom of religion through the Religious Non-Governmental Organizations (NGO) Committee and International Religious Freedom Committee.

12. 2014 Referral: Item 07-02. The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Recommendation 6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Build Capacity for Strong and Mutual Interreligious Relationships Throughout Its Ministry Areas, to Develop and promote Resources That Support the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at All Levels in the Church’s Efforts to Build and Strengthen Those Relationships, and Facilitate Cooperative Efforts with Other Religious Traditions for Social Justice. Among These New Resources Would Be “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” and an Accompanying Study Guide—From the Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 34, 444–53; p. 206 of the print copy).

Response: Within the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), Interfaith Relations works with World Mission to offer training to mission co-workers on interfaith relationships, and to hold workshops for congregations and at PMA sponsored conferences. We are developing resources for congregations and members with the Young Adult Interfaith Cohort based on the Interreligious Stance's spheres. Supporting materials can be found at http://www.presbyterianmission.org/site_media/media/uploads/theologyandworship/interfaith/the_interreligious_stance_pc\(us\)1.pdf1.pdf)

13. 2014 Referral: Item 07-02. The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Recommendation 7. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Cooperate with Youth and Young Adults in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Their Interreligious Engagements That Support the Larger Efforts of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Respectful and Mutual Interreligious Relationships on Behalf of Justice, Peace, Reconciliation, and the Common Good—From the Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 34, 444–53; p. 206 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Theology and Worship and the Office of Interfaith Relations has created a Young Adult Interfaith Cohort of Presbyterians engaged in interfaith work throughout the church and in the world. The cohort is a two-year commitment that offers mentorship and works with young adults in the creation of resources for the church. More information can be found at <http://whatsnextwhatsnow.org/issue/interfaith/>.

14. 2014 Referral: Item 08-05. Resolution to Define and Interpret Standards for PC (USA) Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges. To Refer the Following Recommendation to the Already Established Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Task Force. The Committee Would Like the Task Force to Have at Least Six (6) People. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, in Consultation with the Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges Presidents Roundtable, to Convene a Racially Diverse Special Task Force of Six People with Expertise in the Field of Education to Define and Interpret the Standards for Racial Ethnic Schools Related to the PC (USA)—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.14, 41, 489–91; p. 221 of the print copy).

Response: A special task force, including racial ethnic schools and colleges presidents and other diverse leaders, met in the fall of 2014 to define and interpret the standards for racial ethnic schools related to the PC(USA). A report was presented to and approved by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board at its April 2015 meeting. The report can be found on the Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges website (www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/resc/schools-colleges).

15. 2014 Referral: Item 08-06. A Resolution to Develop a Churchwide Antiracism Policy. Recommendation 1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, Using Existing Racial Ethnic Ministries, Consultation with the Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force, the Advocacy Committee for Racial-Ethnic Concerns, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and Engagement with Experienced Practitioners as Appropriate, to Update and Revise Churchwide Antiracism Policies and Develop Implementing Procedures Similar to the Existing Antidiscrimination Policies and Procedures—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.14, 41, 491–95; pp. 221–22 of the print copy).

Response: This referral is being answered by Item 11-22, “Facing Racism: A Vision of the Intercultural Community,” to be approved at the April 2016 Presbyterian Mission Agency Board Meeting being presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016). (See p. 770 of the electronic file.)

16. 2014 Referral: Item 08-06. A Resolution to Develop a Churchwide Antiracism Policy. Recommendation 2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Develop and Implement Criteria for Evaluating the Effectiveness of Current Churchwide Antiracism Training Programs and to Report Back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) Regarding Its Findings and Any Corrective Actions Taken or Proposed and Results Achieved—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.14, 41, 491–95; pp. 221–22 of the print copy).

Response: See II. Final Responses to Referrals, G. Presbyterian Mission Agency, 75. “Evaluation of the Effectiveness of Current Churchwide Antiracism Trainings Report,” below. (See p. 125.)

17. 2014 Referral: Item 08-06. A Resolution to Develop a Churchwide Antiracism Policy. Recommendation 5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Develop Tools, Assessment Instruments, and Training Materials for the Presbyteries and Congregations in Order to Develop Clear and Effective Understanding of Systemic Racism, Including White Privilege, Power, and Prejudice in Relation to Race—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.14, 41, 491–95; pp. 221–22 of the print copy).

Response: Training materials and assessment tools on antiracism have been developed and revised. These materials include modules on white privilege, power, and prejudice. These training materials are available for presbyteries and congregations. Staff from the office of Gender and Racial Justice are available to visit presbyteries and congregations to offer training and/or to train antiracism trainers. An antiracism trainer is available to train groups in the church. The antiracism manual is available for trained facilitators.

18. 2014 Referral: Item 08-08. The Gospel from Detroit: Renewing the Church's Urban Vision. To Refer Item 08-08 to the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) to Convene an Urban Ministry Roundtable with Groups and Individuals Engaged in Urban Ministry Including, But Not Limited to, ACSWP, ACWC, ACREC, and Racial Ethnic Caucuses for the Purpose of Developing a Method of Fulfilling the Goals of Item 08-08 and to Report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016)—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 40, 42, 503–16; pp. 222–23 of the print copy).

Response: Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) contracted with a part-time consultant to rebuild the Urban Ministry Roundtable, a network of pastoral leadership engaged in urban ministry. PMA hosted a leadership/organizing team of eleven Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) pastors in Chicago, October 26–28, 2015. The leadership/organizing team is planning regional consultations (dates and places not yet confirmed) on “Race, Class, and the Current Challenges of Urban Ministry.” PMA developed a website for resource sharing and networking: <http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/compassion-peace-justice/urbanministry>.

19. 2014 Referral: Item 08-09. For-Profit Prisons, Jails, and/or Detention Centers Be Added to the List of Companies for Divestment and/or Proscription of Investment Ownership. That the Category of Publicly Traded Corporations That Directly Manage or Operate for-Profit Prisons, Jails, and/or Detention Centers Be Added to the List of Companies from Which the General Assembly Urges Divestment and/or Proscription of Investment Ownership—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 40, 42, 516–17; p. 224 of the print copy).

Response: Since the General Assembly approved the policy of divesting and/or proscribing investment ownership in publicly traded corporations that directly manage or operate for-profit prisons, jails, and/or detention centers, this category has been included in the General Assembly’s divestment and/or proscription list. Updated annually, the list currently includes Corrections Corporation of America, The GEO Group, Inc., G4S, the leading U.S. Security Company, and Serco Inc.

20. 2014 Referral: Item 08-10. Measure for Measure: Assessing the Effectiveness of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God. Recommendation 1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Plan a Women of Color Consultation (WoCC) That Focuses on the Inclusion of Women of Color of All Ages in Leadership and Decision-Making in Presbyteries and Synods and/or Their Successor Bodies. The Next WoCC Shall Be Held No Later Than the Fall of 2015 and Be Reported to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) with Recommendation for Further Action and Study—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 14, 42, 518–22; p. 224 of the print copy).

Response: This referral is being answered by Item 10-09, “Empowered and Hopeful: Women of Color Consultation Report,” being presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016). (See p. 611 of the electronic file.)

21. 2014 Referral: Item 08-10. Measure for Measure: Assessing the Effectiveness of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God. Recommendation 2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Make Available Print and Electronic Resources on Cultural Competency, Antiracism, and Antisexism to Mid Councils and the Larger Church—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 14, 42, 518–22; p. 224 of the print copy).

Response: Print and electronic resources on cultural competency, antiracism, and antisexism are available to mid councils and the larger church through the office of Gender and Racial Justice in the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Staff from the office of Gender and Racial Justice are available to visit presbyteries and congregations to train individual antiracism trainers or teams of trainers. An antiracism trainer is available to train groups in the church. The antiracism manual is available for trained facilitators.

22. 2014 Referral: Item 08-10. Measure for Measure: Assessing the Effectiveness of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God. Recommendation 4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Collect Information from Mid Councils on the Implementation of Cultural Competency, Antiracism, and Antisexism Training for Committees on Ministry and Committees on Preparation for Ministry and to Report Its Findings to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) —From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 14, 42, 518–22; p. 224 of the print copy).

Response: See II. Final Responses to Referrals, G. Presbyterian Mission Agency, 76. “Implementation of Cultural Competency, Antiracism and Antisexism Trainings in Mid Councils Report,” below. (See p. 129 of the electronic file.)

23. 2014 Referral: Item 09-05. On a Two-Year Study to Discern How to Advocate for Effective Drug Policies. Recommendation 2. Urge All Publications and Other Communication Vehicles of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Develop Articles, Reports, and Other Materials Designed to Educate, Motivate, and Activate Church Members and Congregants to Learn About the History, Development, and Implementation of U.S. Drug Policies—From the Presbytery of San Francisco (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 35, 36, 630–35; pp. 236–37 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations attended the Civil Society Hearing on “Preparation for the United Nations (UN) General Assembly Special Session on Drugs” and other events related to the UN General Assembly Special Session on Drugs that will be held during 2016. The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations joined the New York Non-Governmental Organizations (NGO) Committee on Drugs, a global committee of more than ninety NGOs that works to support civil society in engaging with the UN system on international drug policy and practice, facilitating the exchange of information between civil society organizations and UN agencies, member states, and other relevant UN bodies. Information gathered has been shared with the study team and with the wider church through social media.

There have been numerous articles relating to Drug Policy and the overall issue of drugs, addiction, and crime published in Unbound, the social justice journal from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ASCWP). A few of them are excerpts from testimonies at the hearings the task force held.

- <http://justiceunbound.org/carousel/justice-and-responsibility-the-drug-war-in-colombia/>.

During the course of 2016, several of these issues will be feature articles on the Presbyterian News Service as well as incorporated into the two existing monthly newsletters for Compassion, Peace and Justice.

24. 2014 Referral: Item 09-05. On a Two-Year Study to Discern How to Advocate for Effective Drug Policies. Recommendation 3. Recommend that the Criminal Justice Network of the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association Focus Criminal Justice Sunday in 2015 on Issues Related to the Impact of Drug Prohibition—From the Presbytery of San Francisco (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 35, 36, 630–35; pp. 236–37 of the print copy).

Response: Because national drug policy is currently in a fluid state, the leadership of the Presbyterian Criminal Justice Network (PCJN) is reluctant to develop resources that could be out of date before congregations have a chance to use them. PCJN leaders anticipate working with members of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s Drug Policy Reform Study Team and others to address this theme in a future Criminal Justice Sunday resource.

While understanding that changing times require that the majority of planning meetings to be conducted via Skype, GoToMeeting, or conference call, the leadership of PCJN believes that resources could more effectively be developed if funding was available for an initial face-to-face meeting. Just as the Drug Policy Task Force determined that it was necessary to conduct some of its meetings in person as it created a comprehensive policy document, so too does the PCJN leadership believe that the development of denominational resources would benefit from at least one face to face meeting.

25. 2014 Referral: Item 09-06. On Advocating for Financial and Political Reform. Recommendation 1. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Advocate for the Following: 1. Financial and Political Reforms (a) Aimed at Eliminating and/or Regulating Closely the Practices of the Financial Sector, Which Caused the Great Recession; and (b) Affirmative Efforts by the Department of Treasury, Securities and Exchange Commission, and Other Regulatory Bodies to Protect Ordinary Citizens, to Revise Bankruptcy Laws to Protect Borrowers and Those Holding ‘Underwater’ Mortgages, and to Enable National, State, and Local Efforts to Provide Refinancing Through Repurchasing and Restructuring Mortgages and Public Capital Projects—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 36, 635–38; p. 238 of the print copy).

Response: Office of Public Witness engaged in advocacy to support the creation of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (created by Dodd-Frank, but languished under congressional inaction over the confirmation of the new director). The Office of Public Witness director has also met several times with the newly appointed director, Richard Cordray, to discuss a variety of methods to protect consumers from financial predators. The meetings have largely focused around predatory lending.

26. 2014 Referral: Item 09-06. On Advocating for Financial and Political Reform. Recommendation 2. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Advocate for Appropriate Investigations and Prosecutions of Individuals, Companies, and Industries Engaged in Fraudulent Behaviors, Regardless of Position or Size, That Justice May Be Applied Equally to All. This Will Include Advocating for Strategies That Address the Lack of Prosecution of the Individuals and Financial Institutions Responsible for the 2008 Meltdown of the U.S. Economy—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 36, 635–38; p. 238 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Public Witness has been an active participant in the Faithful Democracy whose goal is to reduce the undue influence of private money in politics.

27. 2014 Referral: Item 09-06. On Advocating for Financial and Political Reform. Recommendation 3. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Advocate for Campaign Finance Reform and Other Efforts to Reduce the Influence of Special Interest Money in Politics (Including That of the Financial Sector, the Gun Lobby, the Oil Industry, Etc.)—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 36, 635–38; p. 238 of the print copy).

Response: Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been heavily engaged in advocacy in support of a constitutional amendment to overturn Citizens' United v. Federal Election Commission (FEC) and other campaign finance reform efforts. The OPW actively participates in the interfaith coalition “Faithful Democracy” whose goal is to reduce the undue influence of private money in politics. As of May 2015, the OPW has published nine blog posts and two action alerts on campaign finance reform. In October 2014, OPW staff person wrote an article on money in politics for Presbyterian Women’s Horizons magazine and in May 2015 we hosted a conversation on money in politics on <http://ecclesio.com/> that comprised five articles examining the role of money in politics through different lenses. Finally, the director coauthored an op-ed on campaign finance and immigrant detention in the Houston Chronicle in May 2015.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), working in collaboration with the Office of Public Witness (OPW), has developed an addition to the 2010 resolution that will be distributed electronically in January 2016 to all presbyteries and synods and through other channels across the church.

28. 2014 Referral: Item 09-07. On Gun Violence Prevention. Recommendation 1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to a. Provide Models for Congregational and Local Ecumenical Forums to Explore the Dynamics of Gun Violence in Their Areas, and to Select Appropriate Initiatives for Witness and Action in Their Communities, and b. Assist in the Formation of Support, Healing, and Advocacy Groups for Those Who Have Experienced Gun Violence in Their Families—From the Presbytery of Hudson River (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 32, 36–37, 638–42; pp. 238–40 of the print copy).

Response: Several model forums have been conducted across the church since the 221st General Assembly (2014). Congregational and mid council forums have occurred as well as ecumenical and community forums. Many have been modeled on the forum suggested in the screening toolkit for “Trigger: The Ripple Effect of Gun Violence,” which brings together an array of community leaders to address the implications of gun violence from diverse perspectives. The four-session study guide for “Trigger” as well as a series of studies produced by the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship (PPF) continue to be available and utilized in study groups. A Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) gun violence network is under development with plans to begin sometime in 2016.

Our PC(USA) camps and conference centers have conducted camps for victims and survivors of gun violence. Youth and collegiate conferences have conducted workshops for those impacted by gun violence, including the 2015 Montreat Collegiate Conference “Peace Bound,” which included Virginia Tech students. More needs to be done in 2016 to fulfill this referral, including an adaptation of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance’s (PDA) work on trauma recovery to families impacted by gun violence.

29. 2014 Referral: Item 09-11. Affirming the Importance of Maternal and Child Nutrition over 1000 Days. Recommendation 4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to work with Presbyterian Women in Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc., to identify resources for Presbyterians to learn more about maternal and child nutrition—From the Presbytery of National Capital (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 38, 649–50; pp. 241–42 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Gender and Racial Justice in Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries have collaborated with Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to identify resources for Presbyterians to learn more about maternal and child nutrition. Information on the maternal and child nutrition in the first 1,000 days movement can be found on the Gender Justice website (www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/gender-justice-ministries), Presbyterian Women’s website (www.presbyterianwomen.org/justice), and on the AllWomen in the Church website (www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/all-women).

30. 2014 Referral: Item 09-11. Affirming the Importance of Maternal and Child Nutrition Over 1000 Days. Recommendation 6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Advocate for Policies That Promote Good Nutrition in the 1,000 Days Window—From the Presbytery of National Capital (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 38, 649–50; pp. 241–42 of the print copy).

Response: Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), through our Office of Public Witness (OPW), has advocated for maintaining the level of international development assistance (through which 1,000 Days is funded) and Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) and Women, Infants, and Children (WIC) benefits within the U.S.A. WIC, in particular, targets nutrition for children in the 1,000-Day window. We have advocated for reauthorization of the Child Nutrition Act. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was also part of a coalition statement of support for the Global Food Security Act in both the House of Representatives and the Senate and we continue to do advocacy on that issue.

31. 2014 Referral: Item 09-12. On Providing a Trauma Crisis Counseling Consultation to Train in Best Practices in Caring for Survivors of Homicide Victims. To Commit the Necessary Financial and Programmatic Resources to Provide for a Trauma Crisis Counseling Consultation Within Twelve Months of the 221st General Assembly (2014). The Attendees

Would Be Trained by the Presbyterian Mission Agency, Mental Health Professionals, and Community Stakeholders in Some of the Best Practices for Caring for the Bereaved Survivors of Homicide Victims and traumatized Community Members—From the Presbytery of Nevada (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 38, 650–52; p. 242 of the print copy).

Response: Churchwide trauma consultation was planned, staffed, and scheduled as a pre-conference event prior to Big Tent. Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) (through Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) and the Mid Council office) advertised the conference among all mid council partners, with special attention to communities that have experienced high levels of public violence. Regrettably, enrollment was extremely low. The event was therefore re-envisioned as a series of TED-Talk style short videos that will be made available churchwide, at no cost to pastors, congregations, and mid councils. The talks incorporate trauma professionals teaching best practices for non-clinical support and intervention following trauma, as well as congregational, community, and liturgical strategies to support wholeness and healing following trauma. Additionally PDA and Presbyterian Camps and Conference Centers have initiated a model for “healing camps” to support children and youth after public violence or trauma and are establishing a churchwide network of camps able to support such initiatives in their regions after traumatic violence affecting children.

32. 2014 Referral: Item 09-14. National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force Report. Recommendation 1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to Hold a National Consultation on Developing Regional Racial Ethnic Ministries in 2015 for Twenty-Five Participants Over a Two-Day Period. This Consultation Will Have a Planning Team of Ten People and Shall Include Developing a Vision and Structure so Each Ministry May Create Its Own Unique Way of Doing Ministry—From the Task Force on National Racial Ethnic Ministries (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 38, 655–59; p. 243; p. 243 of the print copy).

Response: Twenty-five leaders from across the United States gathered in Louisville, Kentucky, on May 27–29, 2015, for a national consultation on developing regional racial ethnic ministries. The consultation leaders developed a resource for congregations and mid councils to use on developing regional racial ethnic ministries. The resource was shared with participants in a workshop at the 2015 Polity Conference, sponsored by the Office of the General Assembly, in October 2015 in Portland, Oregon. The resource can be found on the Intercultural Ministries website (www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/intercultural-ministries/further-study).

33. 2014 Referral: Item 09-14. National Racial Ethnic Ministries Task Force Report. Recommendation 3. Call for a Churchwide Conference on Race, Ethnicity, Racism, and Ethnocentricity in 2015. In Addition, Direct the Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to Appoint a Planning Team of Ten People for This Event in Consultation with Groups Named in a. Through f; g. A Report Will Be Submitted to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) on These Matters—From the Task Force on National Racial Ethnic Ministries (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 38, 655–59; p. 243 of the print copy).

Response: This referral is being answered by Item 11-24, “Churchwide Conversation on Race, Ethnicity, Racism and Ethnocentricity Report,” being presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to be voted on at April PMA meeting. (See p. 787 of the electronic file.)

34. 2014 Referral: Item 09-15. A Resolution to Educate Against and Help Prevent Voter Suppression. Recommendation 3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to prepare Educational Materials (Web-Based or Print) for Use in Congregations and Mid Councils Specifically on How Voter Suppression Impacts Our Democracy Theologically, Ecclesiologicaly, and Culturally—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 38–39, 659–63; p. 244 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 09-15. A Resolution to Educate Against and Help Prevent Voter Suppression. Recommendation 5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Lift Up Voters’ Rights in Election Years 2014 and 2016 Through Its Communications Channels and Recognize the Need to Educate the Grassroots on the Effects of Voter Suppression on Church and Society—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 38–39, 659–63; p. 244 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) created a “Get Out the Vote” Action Alert for the 2014 mid-term election that was also shared via Unbound, a bimonthly online journal published by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), which advocates for and promotes Christian social justice issues. This alert can be viewed at the following link: <http://justiceunbound.org/carousel/today-is-election-day-get-out-the-vote>.

The OPW is currently writing a congregational study guide on voter suppression titled “We Shall Not Be Moved: Advocacy in the New Age of Voter Suppression.” It will be housed on the “resources” section of the OPW website <https://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/washington/about-us/>. As a participating sponsor for the Ecumenical Advocacy Days conference held in April 2016, Compassion, Peace and Justice has made suppression of political rights a key component to its training day, which is part of a larger three-day conference devoted to advocating for a more transparent and participatory government. Information on the conference can be found at <http://officeofpublicwitness.blogspot.com/2015/11/register-now-for-advocacy-training.html>.

The Office of Public Witness wrote curriculum for a discussion series on voter suppression for use in congregations and mid councils. The OPW also released and publicized a statement on the 50th Anniversary of the Voting Rights Act, and a Voting Rights Manifesto. In May 2015, an OPW staff member wrote an expose for Horizons magazine on the 50th anniversary of the act and the Supreme Court decision that gutted it.

35. 2014 Referral: Item 09-15. A Resolution to Educate Against and Help Prevent Voter Suppression. Recommendation 6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Develop Advocacy Strategies to Work Against Voter Suppression and for Greater Freedom in Voting and Access to Voting, and to Share News of These Efforts Across the Church—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 38–39, 659–63; p. 244 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) is currently writing a congregational study guide on voter suppression titled “We Shall Not Be Moved: Advocacy in the New Age of Voter Suppression” to engage congregations in local, regional, and national voter turnout efforts and prevent voter suppression. It will be housed on the “resources” section of the OPW website <https://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/washington/about-us/>. The OPW staff and young adults wrote a five-part educational series for ecclesio.com on the injustices of corporate money in politics: <http://www.ecclesio.com/2015/05/>.

36. 2014 Referral: Item 09-16. Tax Justice: A Christian Response to a New Gilded Age. Recommendation II.1. The 221st General Assembly (2014) Invites All Members, Congregations, and Councils and Directs the Appropriate Officers of the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Encourage Study and Discussion of This Report and to Represent Its Positions in the Consideration of Tax and Related Legislation at All Governmental Levels, and Directs the Stated Clerk to Communicate This Report Electronically and Through a Limited Number of Print Copies to Members, Ecumenical Partners, and Governmental Bodies, with Guidance from the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 32, 39, 663–96; pp. 244–51 of the print copy).

Response: The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) has distributed this policy primarily by an on-line link to the booklet and three-page summary of key positions: <http://www.pcusa.org/resource/tax-justice-christian-response-second-gilded-age/>. It has been distributed to church partners in the National Council of Churches; to college, university, and seminary professors in the Social Ethics Network; provided in limited copies at the Presbyterian Training Day and Ecumenical Advocacy Days, the Polity Conference, and Big Tent, where a workshop on the resource was provided. There has been some on-line discussion of the report among those involved in tax policy. ACSWP celebrates the creation of an informal Presbyterian Tax Justice Network of interested persons in New York City, Long Island, and Boston presbyteries. In addition, a class on tax justice has been taught at Harvard Divinity School for the past two years, and the report has been presented at a symposium at Loyola Marymount University.

37. 2014 Referral: Item 09-17. The Self-Study Report of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the 221st General Assembly (2014). Recommendation 6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Uphold the Instruction Given by the 205th General Assembly (1993) to Ensure Programmatic Advocacy: “Under the Leadership of Those Working in the Areas of Racial Ethnic Ministries and Women’s Ministries, ... Ensure Advocacy and Monitoring Functions ... Throughout the Ministries and Agencies of the General Assembly—From the Advocacy Committee on Women’s Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 39, 696–735; p. 252 of the print copy).

Response: Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries’ staff meet regularly with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and with the associate for advocacy committee support to ensure programmatic advocacy and empowerment for women. Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries engaged in programmatic advocacy at the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women, the Presbyterian Women Churchwide Gathering, the African American Clergywomen’s Gathering, the Native American Women’s Gathering, the Study on the Status of Women Theological Consultation, the Women of Color Consultation, and in racial ethnic and women’s leadership institutes. Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries also held several women’s listening visits across the country and shared its findings with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns at a meeting held in 2015, and with the Study on the Status of Women Theological Consultation planning team at the theological consultation in the fall of 2015. The ministry area in collaboration with the Office of Research Services and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns is also working together to study the status of women. Racial Ethnic & Women’s staff also led a national Staff Development Day workshop with an ACWC member and the associate for advocacy committee support in Louisville, Kentucky, in November 2015. Ecumenical and interfaith conversations surrounding issues of gender and race also took place at the Women of Color in Ministry event, the White Privilege Conference, and the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women.

38. 2014 Referral: Item 09-23. Commissioners’ Resolution. On Requesting the Release from Prison of Mr. Oscar Lopez Rivera. The 221st General Assembly (2014) Referred Item 09-23 to the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the Stated Clerk for Further Study and Discernment and, if Appropriate, Take Timely Action (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 40, 742–43; p. 254 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) Director J Herbert Nelson co-authored a letter with Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons to President Obama urging him to commute the sentence of Oscar Lopez Rivera.

39. 2014 Referral: Item 11-02. On Turning Attention to the Plight of the Church That Is Suffering Due to Sectarian Violence and Persecution in Egypt and Other Parts of the World. Recommendation 4. Direct the Office for Public Witness and the Presbyterian Office at the United Nations to Inform and Equip Presbyterians to Advocate for Just Peace Throughout the Middle East—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.65–66, 823–26; pp. 261–62 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-02. On Turning Attention to the Plight of the Church That Is Suffering Due to Sectarian Violence and Persecution in Egypt and Other Parts of the World. Recommendation 6. Calling on the Government of the United States to Examine Its Role in the Middle East, to Seek to Ensure That Future Involvements in the Region Be Consistent with the Promotion of Justice and Freedom for All, Including Religious Liberty, and ‘to Ensure That Military Intervention of Any Kind Is Undertaken as a “Last Resort” and Reflects a High Consensus Among Democratic Nations That It May Serve a “Just Peace”—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.65–66, 823–26; pp. 261–62 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations (PMUN) has advocated for just peace in the Middle East with permanent and elected members of the United Nations Security Council. The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations has attended human rights briefings held by United Nations Economic and Social Council that focus on a just peace throughout the Middle East. The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations participates in nongovernmental organizations (NGO) committees that focus on religious freedom, religion, and human rights in the Middle East, all conditions of a just peace. Through social media, seminars, and presentations by persons from the Middle East, the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations has informed and equipped Presbyterians to advocate for a just peace.

The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has sent action alerts and provided information through social media to members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to inform and help them to advocate for peacemaking in the Middle East, particularly in regards to the conflicts in Syria and Iraq as well as Israel and Palestine. We have also held webinars and briefings concerning those conflicts.

Through various coalitions, including the Faith Forum on Middle East Peace and Churches for Middle East Peace, the Office of Public Witness have advocated with congress and the administration for nonviolent diplomatic solutions to the conflicts in Syria and Iraq and Israel/Palestine, and for a nonviolent negotiated settlement to the conflict with Iran. This has been done in visits to congress and the administration as well as letters and action alerts to constituents.

40. 2014 Referral: Item 11-02. On Turning Attention to the Plight of the Church That Is Suffering Due to Sectarian Violence and Persecution in Egypt and Other Parts of the World. Recommendation 5. Direct Presbyterian World Mission and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance to Consult with Mission Partners in the Middle East, and Seek Increased Financial Support Through Church-Wide Appeals to Support Mission Partners’ Efforts to Provide Relief for Christian Refugees in/from the Region—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.65–66, 823–26; pp. 261–62 of the print copy).

Response: World Mission and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance staff have been in consultation with Presbyterian churches in Iraq, Syria, and Lebanon, and have provided support for their relief programs, including rebuilding houses in Homs, Syria, and providing electric generators for internally displaced people in Iraq. World Mission has planned a few connectional trips to Lebanon, Syria, Iraq, Egypt, and Palestine-Israel for PC(USA) constituents to help establish congregation-to-congregation relationships and collaboration in ministry. More than ten PC(USA) mission coworkers serve in the Middle East with sister denominations in a variety of ministries.

41. 2014 Referral: Item 11-03. On Removing Cuba from the List of State Sponsors of Terrorism. Recommendation 1. Petition the President of the United States and the U.S. Department of State to Remove Cuba from the List of State Sponsors of Terrorism as Soon as Possible—From the Presbytery of Long Island (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.65, 66, 826–27; p. 262 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-03. On Removing Cuba from the List of State Sponsors of Terrorism. Recommendation 3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Advocate for This Result in Cooperation with the Appropriate Denominational and Ecumenical Organizations in Washington—From the Presbytery of Long Island (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.65, 66, 826–27; p. 262 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) met with members of the administration including the State Department and the National Security Council to encourage the removal of Cuba from the list of State Sponsors of Terrorism. We sent letters to Secretary Kerry as well as to members of congress urging them to support this action. On May 29, 2015, Cuba was taken off the list of State Sponsors of Terrorism.

42. 2014 Referral: Item 11-05. On Lifting All Travel Restrictions for U.S. Citizens Traveling to Cuba. Recommendation 1. Petition the president of the United States, the U.S. Department of State, and the U.S. Treasury Department’s Office of Foreign Assets Control to Remove All of the Restrictions on Travel by U.S. Citizens to Cuba, Which It Is Legally Possible for Them to Do, and to Openly and Vigorously Advocate to Congress the Repeal of All Laws Restricting the Constitutional Right of U.S. Citizens to Travel to Cuba—From the Presbytery of St. Augustine (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.65, 66, 830–31; p. 263 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-05. On Lifting All Travel Restrictions for U.S. Citizens Traveling to Cuba. Recommendation 2. Petition the Majority and Minority Leaders of the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives to Work to Repeal All of the Laws Restricting Travel to That Nation—From the Presbytery of St. Augustine (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.65, 66, 830–31; p. 263 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-05. On Lifting All Travel Restrictions for U.S. Citizens Traveling to Cuba. Recommendation 4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Advocate for This Change in Policy in Cooperation with Other Appropriate Denominational and Ecumenical Organizations in Washington—From the Presbytery of St. Augustine (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.65, 66, 830–31; p. 263 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been continuously advocating for the lifting of the travel ban to Cuba. Through work with the Latin America Working Group and the Ecumenical Working Group on Cuba, we have participated in meetings with congress, sent out action alerts and signed on to letters advocating for Congress to lift the travel ban. We also participated in Cuba Summit sponsored by Latin America Working Group (LAWG) and Washington Office on Latin America (WOLA). We have also helped set up several meetings for delegations from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and our Cuban partners to advocate the lifting of the travel ban.

43. 2014 Referral: Item 11-07. On Commemorating the 100th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. Recommendation 4. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to a. Encourage Appropriate Observance of the 100th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide, Designating Sunday April 26, 2015, as the 100 Year Anniversary Commemoration Day in Presbyterian Churches Including the Preparation of Educational and Liturgical Resources, and Other Memorials to Be Made Available on the Web at Least Two Months Prior to 4/26/2015; b. Encourage the United States to Endorse the Highest Human Rights Standards for All Agencies and Actions of the United States Government; c. Work Cooperatively with Other Churches and Communions in Both Advocacy and Encouraging Appropriate Artistic, Musical, and Other Cultural Forms of Remembrance—From the Presbytery of Los Ranchos (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.65, 67, 835–40; pp. 264–65 of the print copy).

Response: Complete resources for education, liturgy, and wider engagement were released on the web for all congregations starting January 2015 leading up to commemoration of the Armenian genocide centenary on April 26 (<http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/worship/armenian-genocide/2015>). Observance was encouraged all year. At a Jinishian Memorial Program event with interchurch partners in June, the City of Los Angeles officially recognized the PC(USA) for supporting the Armenian community as the first Protestant denomination to acknowledge the genocide. The “America, We Thank You” campaign also gave tribute to Presbyterian aid and human rights advocacy, along with other churches during WWI. The Jinishian Memorial Program hosted an ecumenical pilgrimage study tour to Armenia through World Mission Initiative at Pittsburgh Seminary in October.

44. 2014 Referral: Item 11-08. Western Sahara: Occupied, Non-Self-Governing Territory, and Test Case for International Law. Recommendation 1. Urge the U. S. Department of State and the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations to Continue to Call Upon the Community of Nations to Support Self-Determination for the People of the Region Known as Western Sahara in Accord with Prior UN Resolutions and Determinations of International Courts—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.15, 67, 840–46; pp. 265–66 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations, in consultation with the Stated Clerk, sent the requested letter to the U.S. State Department and the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations.

45. 2014 Referral: Item 11-08. Western Sahara: Occupied, Non-Self-Governing Territory, and Test Case for International Law. Recommendation 2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Work with Ecumenical and Interfaith Partners and Other Non-governmental Organizations (NGOs) in Support of These Efforts on Behalf of Western Sahara, and to Give Attention as Feasible to Justice Issues in Other Non-Self-Governing Trust Territories, Territorial Possessions, and Occupied Territories—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.15, 67, 840–46; pp. 265–66 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations has worked with faith-based and secular partners to monitor the situation in Western Sahara and other non-self-governing trust territories, territorial possessions, and occupied territories, advocating for justice when the opportunity presented itself.

46. 2014 Referral: Item 11-08. Western Sahara: Occupied, Non-Self-Governing Territory, and Test Case for International Law. Recommendation 3. Direct the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to Monitor the Activities of International Corporations in Western Sahara in Which the Foundation or Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) May Be an Investor, Including the Potash Corporation, Initiating Correspondence on the Impacts of That Firm’s Mineral Extraction, and Recommending Appropriate Further Corporate Social Responsibility Measures Consistent with the Concerns Noted Above—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.15, 67, 840–46; pp. 265–66 of the print copy; pp. 265–66 of the print copy).

Response: The Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) Committee has integrated Western Sahara into its human rights work, and regularly monitors corporate activity in the country and its territorial waters.

47. 2014 Referral: Item 11-08. Western Sahara: Occupied, Non-Self-Governing Territory, and Test Case for International Law. Recommendation 4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, to Monitor Matters of Human Rights and Religious Liberty in Western Sahara and Other Countries Across the Northern Africa region Where Ethnic and Religious Tensions and Undemocratic Governance May Threaten International Peace and Security, and Make Recommendations on Public Policy and Economic Witness as Appropriate—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.15, 67, 840–46; pp. 265–66 of the print copy).

Response: The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) has supported the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations in its monitoring the process of The Fourth Committee (Special Political and Decolonization) of the UN, which continues to support a referendum of self-determination for the inhabitants of Western Sahara. The Presbyterian Mission Agency World Mission ministries and the Middle East Staff Team follow different ethnic and religious struggles across Northern Africa from Northern Nigeria and Cameroon, through Libya and South Sudan, to Egypt, Somalia, and Yemen.

48. 2014 Referral: Item 11-09. A Resolution on Behalf of Dominicans of Haitian Descent and any Others Impacted by the Decision 168/13 of the Constitutional Court of the Dominican Republic. Recommendation 1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to a. Engage in Advocacy for International and Local Support in Favor of Dominicans of Haiti Descent and Any Others Impacted by the Decision 168/13 of the Constitutional Court of the Dominican Republic, b. Speak Out Against Statelessness and Deportation for Dominicans of Haitian Descent and Any Others Impacted by This Law, c. Advocate in Favor of Equal Treatment and Access to Basic Human Rights, Privileges, and Public Services for All Dominicans Regardless of the Nationality of Their Ancestors—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 67, 846–47; p. 266 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations (PMUN) has monitored the situation faced by Dominicans of Haitian descent. The ministry has worked with ecumenical partners in the United Nations (UN) community to advocate on this matter. With these partners, the ministry cosponsored an event advocating for the human rights of all Dominicans. Staff from the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations raised concerns about Dominicans of Haitian descent in a meeting with the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Haiti, appointed by the United Nations Human Rights Council.

The Office of Public Witness (OPW) participates in the Haiti Working Group, an interfaith working group chaired by Church World Service. We have signed on to letters to congress and the administration lifting up the rights of Haitians in the Dominican Republic (DR) and have partnered with World Mission in promoting a day of prayer and action for Dominicans of Haitian Descent. We have also partnered with the PMUN and World Mission in participating in high level meetings with the administration and at the United Nations.

49. 2014 Referral: Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance. Recommendation A.3. Urges the United States Congress to Pass Legislation Governing Military Drones. These Laws Should Articulate Procedures That Put Checks on Executive Power and Establish Civilian Oversight.—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 67–68, 847–60; pp. 267–69 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance. Recommendation A.4. Urges the U.S. to Make Public and Submit Its Rules for Military Drones to Institutions of the International Legal Community for Analysis and Evaluation. Together with Other Nations, We May Develop International Conventions Governing Their Use and Prevent a ‘Drone Race’—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 67–68, 847–60; pp. 267–69 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance. Recommendation A.5. In the Absence of Conventions Outlawing Drone Use in Combat or Counterterrorism, Urges That Targeted Killings of Suspected Terrorists Be Given More Effective Judicial and Congressional Review Through the Use of Warrants, Advocates for the Accused, and Regular After-the-Fact Public Reporting by Any and All Secret Courts, so That Elected Bodies May Evaluate the Costs and Benefits of Counterterrorism Measures and Find Alternatives, and so That No One Person, Even a President Acting in Military Capacity, Could Order the Killing or Indefinite Detention of a Suspected Enemy Exempt from Judicial Review—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 67–68, 847–60; pp. 267–69 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance. Recommendation A.6. Urges, in Cases Where the Proposed Targeted Killing of Suspects Amounts to the Declaration of War, That Congressional Approval (Beyond Surveillance Court Approval) Be Sought, as for Other Wars, and That Any Such Declaration or Approval Include Tax Revenues Sufficient to Cover All Costs Expected from These Military Operations—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 67–68, 847–60; pp. 267–69 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance. Recommendation A.8. Instructs the Appropriate Offices of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly, in Ecumenical and Interfaith Cooperation Whenever Possible, to Advocate for Such Legal Protections of Human Rights and Regulation of Military Drones (UAVs), and to Produce Resources to Interpret and Assist Discussion and Exploration of the Use of Remotely Piloted Aircraft and Related Technologies—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 67–68, 847–60; pp. 267–69 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance. Recommendation B.2. Recommends That the United States Congress, Other Federal, State, and/or Local Agencies, as Appropriate, Pass Legislation and/or Regulations Governing the Use of Domestic Drones so That Constitutional Rights Are Upheld—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 67–68, 847–60; pp. 267–69 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance. Recommendation B.3. Urges the Adoption of Policies That Would Prevent Domestic Drones from Being Weaponized—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 67–68, 847–60; pp. 267–69 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-10. Resolution on Drones, War and Surveillance. Recommendation C.2. Recommends the United States Congress Pass Legislation to Increase Accountability of Surveillance Agencies and Commercial Contractors Engaged in Surveillance.—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 67–68, 847–60; pp. 267–69 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Public Witness (OPW) helped to plan and participated in the Interfaith Conference on Drones in January of 2015. The conference brought together faith leaders from across the country to learn and then take action concerning the United States' use of drones. The OPW is an active member of the Interfaith Working Group on Drones. Through this coalition we have sent letters, action alerts, and held meetings and briefings with congress and the administration advocating the items in Item 11-10.

50. 2014 Referral: Item 11-11. Risking Peace in a Violent World: Affirmations for Presbytery Consideration. Recommendation 5. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Continue to Help Interpret the Discernment Process Outlined in Recommendations 1.–3.—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 68–69, 860–87; pp. 269–70 of the print copy).

Response: Peacemaking and ACSWP staff persons prepared a summary document for presbyteries that included an overview of the discernment process, the action of the assembly, a brief theological basis, and summary rationales for each of the five affirmations. We worked with the OGA to create an online reporting form for presbyteries to log their votes and comments. We contacted presbyteries to encourage them to docket time to review the affirmations. In several cases, presbyteries consulted with us for guidance prior to their meetings and/or we attended their meetings. We continue to interpret the Five Affirmations even as the report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) is prepared.

51. 2014 Referral: Item 11-11. Risking Peace in a Violent World: Affirmations for Presbytery Consideration. Recommendation 6. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Work with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy as It Develops Resources and Assists Networks to Support International Peacemaking on Current and Emerging Challenges Such as South Sudan and Areas in Need of Reconciliation and Reconstruction Such as Syria, Iraq, Afghanistan, and Colombia, While Addressing Domestic Peacemaking in Such Areas as Gun Violence, Violence in Families, and Concern for Returning Veterans—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 68–69, 860–87; pp. 269–70 of the print copy).

Response: In 2014 and 2015 International Peacemakers were invited from our partners in South Sudan, Syria, Iraq, Colombia, Rwanda, South Africa, and other countries engaged in reconciliation and reconstruction efforts. Many of these peacemakers met with our Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission networks to support and strengthen these partnerships.

52. 2014 Referral: Item 11-12. On Helping to Remedy the Tragic Conditions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Recommendation 2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Advocate for Public Policy That Is Consistent with the Objectives Set Out in Recommendation 1, Building on Existing Treaties and Encouraging International Cooperation, Collective Security, and Accountable Monitoring Processes for the DRC and Those of Its Neighbors Facing Similar Threats—From the Presbytery of Boston (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 69, 887–90; pp. 270–71 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations (PMUN) advocated with members of the United Nations Security Council guided by this policy and in consultation with World Mission staff, the Congo Mission Network, and our church partners in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Staff from the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations participated in a World Council of Churches consultation on the Democratic Republic of Congo and shared the information from that consultation with Presbyterian Mission Agency staff members and the Congo Mission Network.

The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has been advocating for support for a peaceful end to the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo through work with the Advocacy Network on Africa. We have also been providing staff support to the Congo Mission Network's Advocacy Committee. Our young adult volunteer is producing a congregational resource that addresses the major issues in Democratic Republic of Congo, particularly sexual- and gender-based violence, the recruitment of child soldiers, conflict mineral and the extractives industry, and support for improving the educational system assistance to the government of the Democratic Republic of Congo to rebuild and strengthen the country's educational system. We have been particularly focused on the extractive industry and have signed letters and made hill visits with the Publish What You Pay coalition. <http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/washington/washington-report-presbyterians/>

53. 2014 Referral: Item 11-12. On Helping to Remedy the Tragic Conditions in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Recommendation 3. Direct Mission Responsibility Through Investment to Study the Merits, Costs, and Logistics of Making the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) “Conflict-Free” with Regard to Investments in Extractive Industries by Its Agencies and to Report Its Findings to 222nd General Assembly (2016), and to Initiate Usual Processes of Corporate Engagement with Firms Operating or Trading with the DRC—From the Presbytery of Boston (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 69, 887–90; pp. 270–71 of the print copy).

Response: Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) with its ecumenical partners has engaged corporations on their relationship with minerals from conflict regions. It should be noted that the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), after considerable public pressure, now requires companies to disclose information on the subject in their annual filing of the 10-K report to the SEC. MRTI and its partners remain vigilant about efforts to eliminate that requirement. MRTI believes that its continuation of such work is the best strategy at present.

54. 2014 Referral: Item 11-13. A Resolution on Developing a Comprehensive Social Witness Policy on Human Trafficking as a Human Rights Issue. Recommendation 3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Assist the Reference and Study Task Group in the Research Process—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 69, 890–92; p. 271 of the print copy).

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations hosted a meeting of the study task group at the United Nations and made connections with human trafficking experts from the United Nations system and civil society groups. Staff from the ministry has provided information to the study task group as requested.

55. 2014 Referral: Item 11-14. Resolution on Sexual Violence within the U.S. Military Services: A 2014 Human Rights Update. Recommendation 2. Commend Legislative and Military Leaders Involved in Developing Policies to Eliminate Sexual Violence within the Armed Services, Including a. Through g.—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 69–70, 892–97; pp. 271–72 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-14. Resolution on Sexual Violence within the U.S. Military Services: A 2014 Human Rights Update. Recommendation 3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and Office of Public Witness, and Encourage the Presbyterian Council for Chaplains and Military Personnel, to Urge Legislative and Military Leaders Involved in Developing Policies to Eliminate Sexual Violence within the Armed Services by Doing a. Through c.—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 69–70, 892–97; pp. 271–72 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-14. Resolution on Sexual Violence within the U.S. Military Services: A 2014 Human Rights Update. Recommendation 4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Support the Implementation of Policies to Prevent Sexual Violence by U.S. and Other Military Personnel Engaged in Joint Jurisdictions Such as United Nations (UN) Peacekeeping and North American Treaty Organization (NATO), Both Within These Forces and Among Vulnerable Refugee and Asylum-Seeking Civilian Populations—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 65, 69–70, 892–97; pp. 271–72 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 11-15. On Encouraging Use of the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation. Recommendation 4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Maintain Current Information on the Status of Companies That Have Signed the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism and to Continue to Partner with and Support ECPAT-USA—From the Presbytery of New York City (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 70, 897–900; pp. 272–73 of the print copy).

Response: A summary of policies and links to specific policies within the U.S. military are as follows:

56. 2014 Referral: Item 11-17. Commissioners' Resolution. On Iran. Recommendation 7. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Nurture Relationships That the PC (USA) Shares with the Churches in Iran Through Our Common Membership in Ecumenical Bodies; Also to Continue to Look for Ways of Supporting and Building Relationships with the Christian Communities in Iran (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 71, 903–05; pp. 274–75 of the print copy).

Response: World Mission continues to maintain relationship with the Evangelical Church in Iran (ECI), which was established by Presbyterian missionaries starting in 1834. Direct communication with ECI is very difficult because of U.S.–Iran relations. Endowments funds designated for ministry of ECI are available but have been awaiting license from the U.S. Government Office of Foreign Assets Control.

57. 2014 Referral: Item 11-18. Commissioners' Resolution. On Concern, Prayer, and Action for Syria and Iraq. Recommendation 4. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency and Other Presbyterians and Congregations to Advocate for the United States and Other Governments to Do What Is Possible to Mediate a Just and Peaceful Settlement of Those Conflicts (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 15, 71, 905–08) ; p. 275 of the print copy.

Response: The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations advocated for a just and peaceful settlement of the conflicts in Syria and Iraq with ambassadors of member states of the United Nations Security Council. This advocacy took place through the ministry's participation in the Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) Working Group on the Security Council and in consultation with other offices of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and our church partners in Syria and Iraq.

The Office of Public Witness (OPW) has continued to call for a nonviolent diplomatic solution to the conflict in Syria and Iraq. We have sent letters, met with members of Congress and the administration, and sent out action alerts advocating for a peaceful end to the conflict.

58. 2014 Referral: Item 13-07. Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions. Recommendation 1. Direct the Transfer of the Theological Education Fund (the "Fund") from the Presbyterian Mission Agency ("PMA") to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation ("Foundation"), to Be Managed, Administered, and Distributed by the Foundation for the Benefit of Seminaries Related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Pursuant to a Fund Advisory Agreement Between the Foundation and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, on Behalf of the PMA and on Behalf of the Committee on Theological Education ("COTE"), the Fund Agreement to Provide That Future Contributions to the Fund Will Be Irrevocable Contributions to the Foundation and Distributed Only as Directed by COTE, Effective January 1, 2015 (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 25, 979–81; p. 312 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 13-07. Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions. Recommendation 2. Direct That Responsibility for Marketing and Administering the Fund Be Transferred from the PMA to the Foundation, Effective January 1, 2015, and That the Foundation and COTE Engage in a Process, as Spelled Out in a Fund Advisory Agreement, to Hire an Experienced, Full-Time Fundraiser, Whose Work Shall Be Under the Direction and Ultimate Performance Management of COTE and Dedicated Solely to Generating Financial Support for Theological Education (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 25, 979–81; p. 312 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 13-07. Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions. Recommendation 4. Direct That the Marketing Information and Databases for the Fund Be Transferred from the PMA to the Foundation, as Permitted by Applicable Law and Consistent with Written Representations or Other Appropriate Communications to Donors, to Be Used Only for Marketing of the Fund, Effective January 1, 2015 (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 25, 979–81; p. 312 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 13-07. Report of the Special Committee on Funding Theological Institutions. Recommendation 5. Direct That the Responsibility for the Denomination's Relationships with PC (USA)-Related Seminaries Will Continue to Be Lodged Under COTE, and That Any Mission Program Support for COTE Will Continue to Be Provided by the PMA in Consultation with COTE (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 16, 25, 979–81; p. 312 of the print copy).

Response: The Theological Education Fund was successfully transferred from the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation at the beginning of 2015 pursuant to the Fund Advisory Agreement between the Foundation and the PC(USA), A Corporation, on behalf of the PMA and the Committee on Theological Education.

The Foundation hired the Reverend Dr. Lee Hinson-Hasty to serve as the senior director of theological education funds development and the Reverend Nancy Benson-Nicol as associate director for theological education funds development. They both began service in these roles on January 1, 2015.

The marketing information and databases for the Fund were transferred from the PMA to the Foundation, as permitted by applicable law and consistent with written representations or other appropriate communications with donors.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency hired a coordinator for theological education, the Reverend Dr. Michelle Bartel. She began serving in March 2015. Her work entails the denominational support for theological education and PC(USA) seminars, including serving as the primary staff support for the Committee on Theological Education.

59. 2014 Referral: Item 13-08. On Celebrating the 500th Birthday of John Knox. Recommendation 4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) to Develop and Disseminate Worship Aids, Including Public Prayers and Resource Materials for the Month—From the Eastern Korean Presbytery (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 24, 25, 981–83; p. 312 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of Theology and Worship developed a web resource, <http://www.presbyterianmiss.org/ministries/worship/john-knox-500/>, to celebrate John Knox’s 500th birthday in 2014, including a Reformation day liturgy, an essay on Knox and prayer, excerpts from the Scots Confession, and a short biographical sketch.

60. 2014 Referral: Item 14-02. Educate a Child, Transform the World. Recommendation 3. Launch a Churchwide Initiative That Will Inspire, Equip, and connect Our Congregations, Mid Councils, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Improve the Quality of Education for 1,000,000 Children in the U.S. and Globally Over the Next Four Years—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 44, 45, 996–98; p. 315 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 14-02. Educate a Child, Transform the World. Recommendation 6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Shape and Guide This Initiative, Developing Tangible Metrics to Determine Success and Impact, and to Report Back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016), Sharing Progress Made and Identifying Strategies for Deeper Engagement in 2016–18—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 44, 45, 996–98; p. 315 of the print copy)

Response: The “Educate a Child, Transform the World” initiative continues in collaboration with Compassion, Peace and Justice (domestic component) and World Mission (international component). The international component led by Frank Dimmock, catalyst addressing the root causes of global poverty, was launched at the 221st General Assembly (2014). The initiative has its own website (pcusa.org/global-poverty), webinar (youtube.com/watch?v=42Q_cRrCPNw&feature=youtu.be), Facebook page (facebook.com/GlobalPovertyPCUSA), and blog (pcusa.org/blogs/global-poverty). It has been featured in various articles that relate stories and practices of partnerships in education. Projects are being developed with global partners in Africa, Latin America, Asia, and the Middle East, strengthening quality education for many children. The national component, pcusa.org/child, was launched in April 2015 at Compassion, Peace, and Justice (CPJ) Training Day in Washington, D.C. The Reverend Dr. Eileen Lindner was hired as a consultant.

The question of developing and utilizing metrics to evaluate the impact of the initiative has required significant research and thoughtful reflection. Measuring quality learning is a challenge that continues to confront education experts globally. World Mission will collect standard output indicators, provided by ministries of education in partner countries, and indirect measures related to partner education programs. Examples of this would include: numbers of children receiving scholarships, training and mentoring of teachers, upgrading school infrastructures, developing and utilizing child protection policies, etc. The national component of this initiative will utilize three distinct styles of metrics: Baseline Metrics; Contextual Metrics; and Contact (or Participatory) Metrics.

The initiative’s team members are currently seeking to foster deeper engagement in 2016–2018 through a variety of means, including an “Educate a Child Toolkit,” <http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/child/toolkit/>. Deeper engagement has already been fostered and will continue to be fostered through social media, webinars, workshops, leadership training events, and other measures of support for congregations in new or existing educational ministries both within the U.S. and globally.

61. 2014 Referral: Item 14-02. Educate a Child, Transform the World. Recommendation 7. Urge Those Developing This Initiative and Its Metrics to Build Upon Values, Traditions, and Analysis Embodied in Previous General Assembly Policy on Public Education and the Impacts of Poverty, and to Consider Ways That This Initiative Continues the Work of Child Advocacy Approved by Previous Assemblies—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 44, 45, 996–98; p. 315 of the print copy).

Response: This initiative is firmly rooted in the analysis, values, and recommendations of the 2010 social witness policy “Loving Our Neighbors: Equity and Quality in Public Education.” One of the Presbyterians convened at the Proctor Institute in July 2015 was a member of the task force that developed that policy, and he continues to work with the national component’s staff team.

The 2010 public education policy is made available as one of the very first suggested resources for study and reflection. Other resources from past PC(USA) child advocacy also continue to be distributed via the website, including worship resources from the Year of the Child at <http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/child/> and <http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/child/resources/>. People involved with the Presbyterian Child Advocacy Network (PCAN) and more general with the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) have been involved in conversations about this initiative from the beginning. This initiative continues to promote Children’s Sabbath, an ecumenical and interfaith weekend dedicated to celebration of and advocacy for children, of which Presbyterians have long been supporters.

Given the racial ethnic and poverty-related disparities in education opportunities and outcomes in the U.S. and globally, this initiative is also a response to past General Assembly pronouncements related to race, economic inequality, and poverty alleviation.

62. 2014 Referral: Item 14-04. Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Church Growth Consultation Committee Report. Recommendation 2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Committee on Theological Education to Consult with Theological Seminaries to Develop Culturally Sensitive Curriculum, Theologies, Language, Teaching and Learning Styles for Teaching Elders and Church Leaders of All Ethnicities—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 44, 46–52, 1000–09; p. 316 of the print copy).

Response: The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) accepted the lead and began with a consultation of Presbyterian Mission Agency staff from the Racial/Ethnic and Women’s Ministries (RE&WM) ministry area and proceeded to contact seminaries with regard to their present work addressing culturally sensitive curricula and learning styles for teaching elders and church leaders of all ethnicities.

As a result of the commitments COTE and the seminaries already have to addressing racism, racial ethnic diversity, and new immigrant worshipping communities, along with consideration of the results of the consultation, COTE:

- Unequivocally states its ongoing commitment to addressing racism, racial ethnic diversity, and new immigrant worshipping communities.
- Will write letters by the end of April 2016 to each seminary affirming what they are doing, encouraging them to deepen and extend what they are doing, and offering COTE as a supportive resource.
- Will actively support the work of the coordinator of theological education and seminary relations on R/E new immigrant leadership issues in partnership with RE&WM, participation in programs that support R/E and new immigrant seminarians, and development of a seminary faculty consultation on antiracism, inclusion, and seminary programs. COTE will receive the coordinator’s report on these activities and consider observations and suggestions based on these activities.
- Recommits itself to continue deepening its engagement with these issues, supported and facilitated by the coordinator of theological education and seminary relations. COTE understands this response to referral, Item 14-04, Recommendation 2, to be only the first step in its ongoing response.

63. 2014 Referral: Item 14-04. Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Church Growth Consultation Committee Report. Recommendation 3. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly to Collaborate with Mid Councils to Establish Regional Certified Ministry Training Programs to Prepare Racial Ethnic and Immigrant Church Members to Serve Worshipping Communities—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 44, 46–52, 1000–09; p. 316 of the print copy).

Response: Staff in Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries and the coordinator for mid council relations in the Office of the General Assembly collaborated with mid council leaders on the establishment of regional certified training program for racial ethnic and immigrant leaders. Representatives from mid councils and leaders from across the country met in Rock Island, Illinois, in 2015, to determine current training opportunities in the church for racial ethnic and immigrant leaders serving worshipping communities. The meeting between the Presbyterian Mission Agency, Office of the General Assembly and mid council leaders was a helpful collaboration. The group concluded that there are many resources currently available for regional certified ministry training programs, such as the Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary training for commissioned ruling elders, offered in Spanish (www.austinseminary.edu/page.cfm?p=3189) and/or the Theocademy program of the Synod of Mid America (synodma.org/theocademy), which provides web-based training resources.

64. 2014 Referral: Item 14-04. Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Church Growth Consultation Committee Report. Recommendation 5. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and Mid Councils to Create a Network of Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Coaches Trained to Address the Culturally Specific Needs of Racial Ethnic and New Immigrant Congregations—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 44, 46–52, 1000–09; p. 316 of the print copy).

Response: Racial ethnic and new immigrant congregational leaders were recruited and invited to attend the Racial Ethnic and New Immigrants Coaches Training held November 11–13, 2015, in Greensboro, North Carolina. Twenty-two racial ethnic and new immigrant leaders attended the training. This gathering of African-, African American-, Hispanic/Latino-a-, Korean-, Asian-, Middle Eastern-, Native American-, and Portuguese-language coaches discussed how to address the culture- and language-specific needs of the racial ethnic and new immigrant congregations and leaders for whom they will provide coaching. These coaches are planning to work in collaboration with mid council leaders and with Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries staff to support the growth, sustainability, and transformation of new and existing racial ethnic, bilingual, and intercultural worshipping communities.

65. 2014 Referral: Item 14-04. Racial Ethnic & New Immigrant Church Growth Consultation Committee Report. Recommendation 6. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Office of the General Assembly, and the Mid Councils to Consult with Each Other to Consider Expanding the Criteria for Accepting the Ordination Credentials of New Immigrant Leaders—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 44, 46–52, 1000–09; p. 316 of the print copy).

Response: The coordinator for intercultural ministries in Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries, the coordinator for mid council relations in the Office of the General Assembly, and mid council leaders consulted in 2015 on expanding the criteria for accepting the ordination credentials of new immigrant leaders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The group focused on G-2.0505a.(1) in the Book of Order of the PC(USA) on the “Transfer of Ministers of Other Denominations,” which reads, “In the case of ministers for immigrant fellowships and congregations, a presbytery may, if it determines that its strategy for mission with that group requires it, recognize the ordination and receive as a member of presbytery a new immigrant minister who furnishes evidence of good standing in a denomination, even though at the time of enrollment that minister lacks the educational history required of candidates, and provide such educational opportunities as seem necessary and prudent for that minister’s successful ministry in the presbytery.” The group reminds the church that this gives great latitude to presbyteries to expand the criteria for accepting the ordination credentials of a teaching elder of an immigrant fellowship or congregation, and it also calls upon presbyteries to continue the education of that leader, as needed, for her/his successful ministry in the presbytery. The group determined that it will remind presbyteries of G-2.0505 a.(1) in the Book of Order and will share resources, as needed, to presbyteries who are working with new immigrant leaders on ordination.

66. 2014 Referral: Item 15-01. On Divestment from Fossil Fuel Companies. Refer the Subject Matter to the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) for Action and discernment in Accordance with Its Long-Standing and Detailed Procedures to Engage with Individual Corporations to Advance Their Actions in Support of Important Social Policy Issues—From the Presbytery of Boston (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 56, 1013–21; p. 319 of the print copy).

Response: This referral is being answered by Item 09-09, “MRTI Report on Divestment from Fossil Fuel Companies,” being presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016). (See p. 543 of the electronic file.)

67. 2008 Referral: Item 08-12. Funding Christ’s Mission Throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Attachment 1, Recommendation A2. 2. We Propose That the General Assembly Council Gradually Transition the Two Current Forms of Designated Mission Giving, Direct Mission Support and Extra Commitment Opportunities, into “Funding for Specific Mission” Over a Five-Year Period Beginning in 2009—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Minutes, 2008, Part I, pp. 22, 24, 664–704 of the print copy).

Response: The 218th General Assembly (2008) directed the General Assembly Council (now the Presbyterian Mission Agency) to simplify giving opportunities presented to donors, as the older categories of “Directed Mission Support (DMS)” (originally specifying gifts considered to be given inside the General Assembly Mission Budget) and “Extra Commitment Opportunity (ECO)” (originally specifying gifts considered to be “over and above” the General Assembly mission budget) were proving to be confusing to donors. In 2008, the General Assembly Council regularly distributed catalogs for potential donors. The DMS catalog had listings of nearly every possible way to designate gifts within the mission budget. At the same time, the ECO catalog offered other opportunities, leaving donors to struggle with, “Do I want to give within the budget or over and above the budget?” Which catalog do I need?

In the years since 2008, the Presbyterian Mission Agency has wrestled with how to simplify giving. It is increasingly transparent to donors whether they are using a DMS account or an ECO account. There is no longer any distinction between giving within the budget or giving outside of the budget. The opportunities to give with impact are plentiful. Internally, DMS accounts are now used for congregations who wish to designate a portion of their congregational mission giving toward particular causes. ECO accounts are now used by individual donors who want to have specific impact on mission around the world. Internal distinctions between these account types allow individual donors to receive a tax deduction for gifts to ECO accounts, while this is not important for gifts to DMS accounts from churches.

The effort to simplify giving, which began in 2008, has culminated in the development of a new Presbyterian Mission website that makes it very easy for donors to make gifts, without having to know individual account numbers or account types. Organized around the experience of the potential donor, the website responds with options based on information given by the potential donor. DMS and ECO accounts still exist as different types of funding for specific mission, but the donor is not required to understand anything about the types in order to make a gift.

68. 2014 Referral: Item 03-06. A Resolution to Support Hotel and Hospitality Workers Through the Adoption of Just Policies in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Recommendation 1. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of General Assembly to Include Protective Language in Every Hotel Contract so That if There Is a Labor Dispute at the Contracted Hotel, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Can Pull Out of the Contract Without Penalty—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 13, 21, 193; p. 167 of the print copy).

2014 Referral: Item 03-06. A Resolution to Support Hotel and Hospitality Workers Through the Adoption of Just Policies in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Recommendation 2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of General Assembly to adopt a policy that gives preference to hotels where workers’ rights are protected either by organization, or through the fair practices of their employers, and commits to honoring and upholding boycotts that are directly related to workers’ wages and working conditions—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 13, 21, 193; pp. 167–68 of the print copy).

Response: The following policy “Presbyterian Mission Agency and Office of the General Assembly Policy Supporting Hotel and Hospitality Workers” was approved by the February 4–5, 2016, meetings of The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB).

Presbyterian Mission Agency and Office of the General Assembly Policy Supporting Hotel and Hospitality Workers

Staff of the PMA and OGA tasked with researching hotel locations for upcoming meetings and events of those agencies will consult the Unite Here* Fair Hotel directory (<http://www.fairhotel.org/hotels-search/states>) or similar guides for “socially responsible union hotels” in the area(s) under consideration, and include those hotels in the site selection process.

Staff of the PMA and OGA will also consult the boycott list at <http://www.fairhotel.org/boycott-list> and refrain from booking hotels that appear on this list or similar guides for PC(USA) meetings or when traveling on PC(USA) business.

PMA and OGA staff will include protective language relating to termination in the event of labor disputes in every hotel contract. A hotel must agree to this clause (or alternate language deemed acceptable by Legal Services and the Stated Clerk) in order to proceed to a final contract with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation.

In the event of a boycott, strike, picketing or another dispute directly related to workers’ wages and working conditions that is announced or occurs at a hotel after a contract is signed, the PC(USA) will first urge the hotel to settle the dispute, ensuring the hotel is aware of the labor dispute clause and the PC(USA)’s intention to terminate the contract if it the dispute is not satisfactorily resolved.

In the event that resolution is not assured well before the scheduled event, the group may and should seek an alternative location and invoke the labor dispute clause to terminate the contract. Additional costs (higher hotel rates, meeting room rental, ground transportation, etc.) to the meeting budget are a likely consequence.

This policy does not require a group to relocate the scheduled event when the dispute occurs within 60 days of the first date of the event, and efforts to secure suitable alternate venue(s) in the same city (using the same airport) are unsuccessful. In these situations, the Executive Director of the PMA or the Stated Clerk of the OGA will review the circumstances and approve the decision.

*Unite Here (unitehere.org) is a labor union that represents workers in the hotel, gaming, food service, and other industries across North America. It maintains an on-line directory of hotels across U.S. and Canada whose workers are represented by Unite Here. It also maintains a list of hotels that are under a boycott or at risk of dispute.

This agreement may be terminated without liability by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) if performance hereunder would foreseeably involve the Group in or subject it to the effects of a boycott, strike, picketing or other labor dispute. (Provided that the Group may not withhold, delay or cancel performance based on a labor dispute involving its own employees.) The Hotel agrees to notify the Group in writing within 10 days after it becomes aware of any labor relations dispute involving the Hotel and its employees including, but not limited to, union picketing, the filing of an Unfair Labor Practice charge by a union, the expiration of a negotiated labor contract, an existing or impending strike or lockout, or any other matter which could reasonably be construed as a labor- management relations dispute.

69. 2014 Referral: Item 04-10. Commissioners’ Resolution. On Declaring That Zionism Unsettled Does Not Represent Views of PC(USA). The 221st General Assembly (2014) Declares That Zionism Unsettled Does Not Represent the Views of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Directs All Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Entities to Express This Statement in All Future Catalogs, Print or Online Resources (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 13, 62, 296–98; p. 186 of the print copy).

Response: Immediately following the 221st General Assembly (2014) a statement was prepared for inclusion in copies of the resource in line with the directive in this General Assembly action. On June 27, 2014, the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency took the further step to discontinue promotion and distribution of “Zionism Unsettled” by the denominational offices in order to most clearly support and communicate the decisions of the General Assembly (<http://www.pcusa.org/news/2014/6/27/zionism-unsettled-no-longer-sold-pcusa-website/>).

70. 2014 Referral: Item 08-07. Fairness in Ministerial Compensation: Incentives and Solidarity, a Response to Two Referrals. Recommendation 1. Request the Presbyterian Mission Agency to Review Churchwide Ministerial Salary Data as Context for Its Review of Presbyterian Mission Agency Salaries—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.14, 41–42, 495–503; p. 222 of the print copy).

Response: Salary ranges of positions within the Presbyterian Mission Agency are reviewed, at a minimum, every two years by analyzing data from comparable religious/faith-based, nonprofit, and some for-profit organizations. A review of churchwide ministerial salary data is included in this analysis. One source of this data is the Board of Pensions report on “Clergy Effective Salaries.” A review of churchwide ministerial salary data has been added to the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s compensation philosophy, which is described in the Presbyterian Mission Agency Compensation Program document.

71. 2014 Referral: Item 10-NB. Recommend Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly Engage in the Process of Working Together with Churches in the Task of Reconciliation, Starting with Visiting Each Presbytery and Serving as a Resource for Each Presbytery’s Discussion of These Actions in Congregations and the Presbytery At-Large and Present Voices of Reconciliation for the Unity of the Church (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp.29, 31, 33, 55, 819; p. 260 of the print copy).

Response: The Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency have taken the following actions:

- A webpage <http://oga.pcusa.org/section/ga/ga221/ga221-reconciliation/> was created for use by mid councils listing resources for the work of reconciliation
- A “concierge service” has been created in response to a request by mid council leaders. This is one phone number to be called when a member of the national staff is requested for a presbytery meeting or other gathering. The purpose of the service is to provide a way for mid council leaders to make one contact for such request to be sure that someone will be available.
- A conversation was held at the Polity Conference in 2014 asking mid council leaders to share their reflections on the idea of reconciliation and to share their ideas about how to achieve it.
- The Mid Council Engagement application has been used by PMA staff to keep track of their contacts with presbyteries and synods. Those making these contacts, whether in person or by other means, have been urged to spend time asking about the stresses and celebrations in those mid councils and to offer help as needed.
- The senior staff of PMA and senior staff of OGA participated in a one-day retreat led by the Lombard Mennonite Peace Center to explore issues of highly anxious systems and ways to lead in the face of such anxiety.

Response:

Evaluation of the Effectiveness of Current Churchwide Antiracism Trainings Report

The Presbyterian Mission Agency, in developing and implementing criteria for evaluating the effectiveness of churchwide antiracism training, worked in collaboration with the Office of Research Services in the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Research Services conducted a survey of participants (and those invited to participate) in antiracism trainings held at the 221st General Assembly (2014) and at the 2011 and 2013 Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Big Tents. These trainings were offered by the Office of Gender and Racial Justice in Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries.

Research services could find no record of persons who participated in the 221st General Assembly (2014) antiracism trainings, so the entire population of individuals who had the opportunity to participate in the trainings were invited to respond to the survey. In addition, those who participated in antiracism trainings at the PC(USA)’s Big Tents in 2011 and 2013 were invited to take the survey. Research Services also received feedback from those who have participated in similar antiracism trainings elsewhere and those who have never participated in any antiracism trainings.

This evaluation of current churchwide antiracism trainings involved a web-based survey of persons participating (or invited to participate) in antiracism trainings and also a series of interviews were conducted with antiracism trainers. Thus, persons who have participated in antiracism trainings, persons who were invited to participate in trainings, and the trainers themselves were included in this research.

Survey Respondents

A total of 855 persons were invited to participate in the survey, of which seventy-three had invalid email addresses. And, a total of 248 people from this population completed the survey (32 percent of those receiving an email invitation to participate in the survey).

Sixteen percent of respondents indicated that they participated in PC(USA) antiracism trainings. (Of these, 21 percent participated within the past year, 42 percent participated one to three years ago, 26 percent participated more than three years ago, and 11 percent do not remember when they participated in the training).

Impact of PC(USA) Antiracism Trainings (Summary)

Those who participated in PC(USA) antiracism trainings were asked what ongoing personal impact the training had on them. Sixty-nine percent responded that PC(USA) antiracism training has impacted their personal attitudes about racism; 60 percent responded that the training has impacted their understanding of what racism means; 54 percent responded that the training has impacted their personal attitudes about white people; and 49 percent responded that the training has impacted their personal attitudes about people of color.

Seventy-six percent of participants agree with the information presented in the antiracism training in which they participated; 66 percent felt it was worth their time; and, a minority (24 percent) felt that antiracism training was focused on making white people feel ashamed for being born white.

Observations

In answering questions designed to measure more subtle forms of racism prevalent in society, awareness scores of those who took PC(USA) antiracism trainings do not differ significantly from the scores of the other respondents.

The respondents who have taken PC(USA) antiracism trainings are significantly more likely to agree with the statement that race is a social construct, compared to those who took similar trainings elsewhere or those with no training. Between these groups, there are no significant differences in agreement or disagreement of the other statements in the survey.

Overall, 51 percent of respondents say they are doing some work to dismantle white privilege. Those who have participated in PC(USA) antiracism trainings responded that they feel significantly more empowered to address white privilege. Respondents generally agree that white privilege is not a myth, that it bothers them, and that they try to be cognizant of it.

Those who have taken PC(USA) antiracism trainings are significantly more likely than those who have never had antiracism training to say they have been accused of racism (54 percent of antiracism participants versus 32 percent of those with no training).

These findings seem to indicate that those who have taken PC(USA) antiracism trainings are more aware of racism and more willing to address their racism. Those who have participated in PC(USA) antiracism trainings are significantly more likely to say they have confronted someone for saying or doing something racist.

Survey ResultsGoals

The Building the Beloved Community: A Training Manual for Antiracism Facilitators (4th edition, 2014), states the goals of antiracism training as follows:

The goal of antiracism work is to help people recognize the relationship between conscious and subconscious beliefs and behavior at the cultural and institutional levels. This will enable them to understand how oppressive social behavior is institutionalized and perpetuated in the values, beliefs, structures and institutions of society. If the foundational beliefs and values of a society are biased against a segment of the population based on racial characteristics, a racist or race-based system of oppression will result. Understanding this connection will enable people to see how their own attitudes and behavior are influenced by prevailing racial norms. This is called deconstruction—understanding how something is put together is a prerequisite for dismantling it. This is the beginning of the change process.

The survey indicates that the PC(USA)'s antiracism trainings are achieving their goals in some respects, but are still falling short. Those who have participated in PC(USA) antiracism trainings generally feel that the experience has had the greatest impact on

1. their personal attitudes about racism, and
2. their understanding of what racism means. However, there is no difference in overall racism awareness between those who took the trainings and those who did not.

Also, only 59 percent of those who participated in PC(USA) trainings feel that the training has had an impact on their understanding of how racism operates systematically in the United States today.

Challenges

Part of the challenge is that the PC(USA) antiracism training was originally designed to be an eight-hour training scheduled for 1–2 days. The time scheduled for trainings has been cut back, as most organizations have been reticent to give this much time to antiracism training. The training at the 221st General Assembly (2014) and at the 220th General Assembly (2012), for example, was scheduled for forty-five minutes. To increase the training time, the trainers offered two, forty-five minute sessions (1½ hours total) in 2012 and named them Part I and Part II, encouraging commissioners and others to stay for both parts. At the 221st General Assembly (2014), only an overview of antiracism could be offered in the two, forty-five minute trainings offered. It is difficult to help participants understand how institutional racism and white privilege operates in the United States in such a short timeframe.

Even so, the Office of Gender and Racial Justice has seen signs of increased interest and requests for antiracism and cultural humility (formerly named “cultural proficiency”) trainings in the last few years. For example, in 2014 and 2015, Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary requested that staff from the Office of Gender and Racial Justice provide training to its incoming class of seminarians as part of their orientation. This training was scheduled for three hours. Also, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board dedicated a full day of its board meeting this fall to cultural humility training. This training was scheduled for seven hours, not including the lunch break. Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries staff have also offered trainings at churches and conferences, including the Big Tent 2009, 2011, 2013, and 2015, and worship-based resources have been shared with the larger church, following high profile racial justice cases in the nation in 2014 and 2015. A Cultural Humility Team was created in the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and in 2015, it offered a Mission Staff Cultural Humility Day, a Strategy and Coordination Leadership Team Cultural Humility Day, training at a Presbyterian Mission Agency Board meeting (as referenced above), cultural humility was a major focus of an All Staff Mission and Budget Update, and the team has advised the Human Resources area in offering ongoing trainings.

Another area of concern is the significant minority of PC(USA) participants (24 percent) who feel that antiracism trainings focus on making white people feel ashamed for being born white. These respondents are, in large part, also the same respondents who did not feel that antiracism trainings were worth their time and who did not agree with the information the trainings provided. Of individuals who attended antiracism trainings and also those who did not attend any antiracism trainings but participated in the survey, about one out of every four respondents are resistant to its message, in part because they have yet to be convinced there is a problem. This minority is contrasted with 74 percent of respondents who agree that racial discrimination is still a problem in the United States. Nevertheless, 28 percent of these respondents also believe that people of color are too quick to blame racism for their problems, and 39 percent of them think the media makes things out to be about race when it is really not about this.

A challenge also lies in people's attitudes about racism in general. Those who think that people of color are too quick to blame racism for their problems are more likely to rate lower on the racism awareness scale. And, they are also more likely to believe that the best way to end racial inequality is to ignore race. These findings point to a potential focusing of antiracism trainings. In other words, it may be fruitful to focus on the dynamics of "colorblind racism" in future antiracism trainings, that is just because some choose to disregard racial characteristics in their everyday lives and decision-making, thus seemingly providing the grounds for people to be treated equally, does not mean that racism and white privilege has gone away. This simply allows persons to ignore institutional racism and the disadvantages and lack of opportunities for people of color to fully flourish and live out their calls in the church and society.

Although attitudes about racism vary, understanding of what race is remains consistent. PC(USA) antiracism trainings have successfully educated participants on the meaning of race as a social construct. People who participated in PC(USA) antiracism trainings generally understand that race is not biological, that it is a human construct. However, what is distressing is that these same people are not taking the next step towards understanding what a social construct is. This difficulty in understanding, however, is much less pronounced in those who participated in PC(USA) antiracism trainings than with those who did not.

Respondents reported that the PC(USA)'s antiracism trainings are influencing their actions. Those who took PC(USA) antiracism trainings are significantly less likely to say they don't know what they can do about white privilege, and are significantly more likely to say they have confronted someone for saying or doing something racist.

One of the most significant findings of this research is that older adults, those with less education, and those who self-identify politically as independents are the least aware of racism and its systemic impacts. Thus, for greater impact when considering which specific populations within the church to invite to participate in antiracism trainings, inviting these groups specifically may provide good opportunities for learning. Or, it may be a better investment to focus energies on the groups that are more aware of racism and its systemic impacts and ask these groups to join the antiracism movement, such as young adults, for example, many of whom have come of age in a more intercultural society.

Results of Interviews of Antiracism Trainers (Summary)

As stated earlier, this research involved a web-based survey of persons participating (or invited to participate) in antiracism trainings. A second part of the research was to conduct a series of interviews with antiracism trainers. The trainers interviewed were generally happy with the PC(USA)'s antiracism and cultural humility trainings and indicated that they are committed to these trainings in the church. It had been seventeen years since the Presbyterian Mission Agency (formerly the General Assembly Council) held an introduction to antiracism training. Antiracism training was first held at its 1997 meeting, and the agency recommended that an introduction to antiracism training also be planned for commissioners to the 211th General Assembly (1999). After seventeen years of training in the church, the antiracism trainers offered the following observations for future trainings:

1. The PC(USA) will need to set more realistic goals for antiracism and cultural humility trainings.
2. The PC(USA) will need to make antiracism and cultural humility trainings a higher priority.
3. Not only individuals, but teams will need to be trained to facilitate future antiracism and cultural humility trainings.
4. Congregations, mid councils, and agencies will need to have trainers check back in with them after the training to provide support.

5. Encourage congregations, mid councils, and agencies to join existing antiracism organizations, partner with others, and share what they've learned through the web or through national gatherings.
6. The language used to describe antiracism and cultural humility trainings should suggest and provide opportunities for mutual learning.
7. As the church moves into a new era, some new activities and presentations (some of which we have been using) will need to be added to the antiracism manual to replace older exercises and modules. Also, the antiracism manual will need to be updated to reflect recent advances in research and language.
8. As organizations are requesting trainings be held in less time than originally designed by the antiracism manual, the manual will need to be adapted to provide facilitators and trainers with direction on how to adapt the activities and presentations for different timeframes, in order to reduce the trainer's preparation time. And, the training design will also need to have an intentional directional flow.
9. Also, as less time is being offered for trainings, there should be guidelines for prioritizing which activities and presentations need to be covered, at a minimum, during the trainings.
10. Develop an antiracism curriculum for use at the local level that will be available at no cost to congregations and mid-councils. Or, receive permission from Presbyterian Women in the PC(USA) and the resource writer to adopt their newest antiracism curriculum created by an antiracism trainer entitled, Becoming the Beloved Community, available with or without a DVD and available through Presbyterian Distribution Service. Packet with DVD is item PWR10045, $24.95 plus shipping. Packet without DVD is item PWR10046, $14.95 plus shipping.

Future Directions for Antiracism and Cultural Humility Trainings

The foundation has been laid by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to engage in antiracism and cultural humility trainings. Seventeen years ago, the church created an antiracism policy, Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community. This report evaluating the effectiveness of current churchwide antiracism trainings is presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) with the hope that commitment to implementing antiracism and cultural humility trainings in the church will result in a new vision and recommitment to building an antiracism organization and living into the vision of God's intercultural community.

Racism and white privilege exist in the church and in society. Racism is the "interlocking systems of advantage (as well as disadvantage) based on race. Unless we learn to recognize the interlocking effects of privilege at these levels we will not recognize how easily some of us enjoy privileges because of our racial identity that are not equally available to all our neighbors."¹

Systemic racism has significantly impacted the society and the church for many years in the ways we gather for worship, the ways we function and relate as the Body of Christ, and the ways we build trust and engage individually with one another. Racism has directly or indirectly influenced the allocation of limited resources for mission, the staffing of leadership positions within the church, the calling of leaders to serve in local congregations, as well as the process of ordination and preparation towards ordered ministry.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) received and approved the Climate for Change Task Force report and approved the recommendation made that "cultural proficiency and antiracism training be mandatory for all employees of all six agencies, and provide periodic or continuing education courses or training in this area, which will be monitored by the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns."²

As a country, we have made progress regarding the understanding of race and the reality of racism. However, there is still staggering evidence of the continuing reality of white privilege—as seen in comparisons of wealth, education, health care, and mortality rates between the so-called races in the United States.³ As long as this disparity exists, the church must continue antiracism training and so bear witness to the conviction that all people are made in God's good image.

While some progress has been made in society at large, the church continues to struggle. In some locations within the church, there is little evidence that the sin of racism has been identified or that privilege and power are appropriately shared between people of different "races."

The Confession of Belhar affirms that "the church must therefore stand by people in any form of suffering and need, which implies, among other things, that the church must witness against and strive against any form of injustice, so that justice may roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream; that the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged; that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others."⁴

Response:

Implementation of Cultural Competency, Antiracism and Antisexism Trainings in Mid Councils Report

The 221st General Assembly (2014) directed the Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop and implement criteria for evaluating the effectiveness of current churchwide antiracism trainings and to collect information from mid councils on the implementation of cultural competency, antiracism, and antisexism trainings for committees on ministry and committees on preparation for ministry, and to report its findings to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

The Office of Gender and Racial Justice in the Presbyterian Mission Agency contacted the 171 presbyteries and 16 synods in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to inquire if their committees on ministries and committees on preparation for ministry had engaged in cultural competency, antiracism, and/or antisexism training. The question sent to the mid councils was: “If your committees on ministries and committees on preparation for ministry have held cultural competency, antiracism, and antisexism trainings?” This survey of mid councils involved an initial email sent to the mid councils, followed up by phone calls for those who did not respond to the email. The mid councils were quite responsive, returning the information in a timely manner. Their responses provided valuable information in whether or not mid councils implement these kinds of trainings, and what the ramifications are for people of color, women, and marginalized groups when mid councils are not aware of bias or privilege when it comes to ordination and preparation towards ordered ministries.

Survey Responses

A total of 171 presbyteries were surveyed, of which nearly 45 percent responded, representing 76 presbyteries. Of the 76, a total of 68 presbyteries reported that they had engaged in no cultural competency, antiracism, and/or antisexism trainings. This represents 90 percent of the respondents. Seven of the presbyteries responded affirmatively, reporting yes, that they had engaged in either cultural competency, antiracism, or antisexism trainings. Of the respondents, this represents nearly 9 percent. One presbytery refused to provide an answer to the question, representing less than 1 percent.

To provide a little more analysis, the presbyteries that reported that no trainings occurred in their committees on ministries or committees on preparation for ministry, said that conversations on these matters have taken place or are in the process of being planned. However, many of these are not specifically with committees on ministries or committees on preparation on ministry.

A report by the General Assembly Committee on Representation in 2014 reported that of the sixteen synods in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a total of seven synods reported that they had engaged in no cultural competency or antiracism trainings. Four of the synods responded affirmatively, reporting yes, that they had engaged in either cultural competency or antiracism trainings. Five synods provided no report.

Observations

Overall, the majority of the committees on ministries or committees on preparation on ministry in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have not engaged in cultural competency, antiracism, and/or antisexism trainings. This survey may seemingly indicate that 90 percent of these committees in mid councils may not recognize, see the need for, or agree that racism, gender bias, or discrimination is a problem in their candidates’ ordination or call processes. Or they may have not had the resources to provide such training, and in some cases, this may be on a mid council's "to do" list. If it is true that committees on ministry or committees on preparation for ministry do not believe that there are problems in the church related to racism and sexism, this may, in fact, perpetuate discrimination. Just because some people chose to disregard racial characteristics or gender differences in their everyday lives and decision-making, does not mean that racism, sexism, and/or white privilege has gone away. This simply allows persons to ignore racism, sexism, and disadvantages for people of color, women, and/or new immigrants in the church. This also may mean that individuals in these groups, which are often marginalized, are unable to fully live out their calls in the church and society.

The reason for antiracism, antisexism, and cultural humility trainings is to combat issues that have been reported by women of color and those who work with women of color in ministry, such as that:

1. Persons of color, especially women of color, seeking ordained ministry in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), face difficulty navigating the call system; and
2. Persons of color, especially women of color, are subject to frequent and various forms of discrimination.

Antiracism trainings have successfully educated participants on the meaning of race as a social construct, and anti-sexism trainings help us to be aware and counter gender bias. Cultural humility trainings highlight cultural differences and explore tools for antiracism in order to build and deepen culturally diverse relationships that lead to personal transformation and impact organizational change.

Findings in surveys on the benefit of PC(USA) antiracism and antisexism trainings seem to indicate that those who have taken these trainings are more aware of racism and sexism, and are more willing to address their racism. Those who have participated in PC(USA) antiracism and cultural humility trainings are significantly more likely to say they have confronted someone for saying or doing something racist or sexist.

In 2014, Racial Ethnic & Women's Ministries conducted Women's Listening Visits with PC(USA) women leaders in different geographical areas throughout the country. Some of the findings were:

1. That trainings for committees on ministry and committees on preparation for ministry "on how to talk with and treat women in ministry and women candidates is crucial, and it is important for committees on ministry and committees on preparation for ministry to become aware of the disparity between the treatment of men and women candidates."
2. That "our denomination's current standards and practices for approving candidates for ordination leaves little room and creates a difficult road for candidates whose cultural and/or educational background does not fit."
3. That there are "silos of cultural groups in the PC(USA) and the presbyteries," and "structural inflexibility limits options such as the ordination of immigrant pastors and new pastors who have not yet received a call."
4. That the "culture of the PC(USA) is a hindrance to diversity" and that there is a need to "facilitate conversations and feedback on national, local and presbytery levels dealing with the needs of racial ethnic communities"; and
5. That racial ethnic women are not receiving as many calls to serve as solo pastors or heads of staff in congregations as others in the church are, and sometimes, women of color "do not feel supported by male pastors in their presbyteries, and they often have to survive on their own."

Conclusion

The 221st General Assembly (2014) urged mid councils to provide training and education on cultural competency, antiracism, and antisexism to its committees on ministry and committees on preparation for ministry with an expectation that issues that are addressed in this training will be disseminated throughout the presbytery at least once every three years beginning in 2015 (Item 08-10, Recommendation 3). If our findings are accurate, then the majority of the presbyteries have not yet responded to this urging by the General Assembly.

Also, the 220th General Assembly (2012) received and approved the Climate for Change Task Force report and approved the recommendation made that "cultural proficiency and antiracism training be mandatory for all employees of all six agencies, and provide periodic or continuing education courses or training in this area, which will be monitored by the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns."¹

As long as disparity exists, the church must continue antiracism, antisexism and cultural humility trainings, and bear witness to the conviction that all people are made in God's good image.

The Assembly Committee on Business Referral voted not to refer Item 01-04 because the Articles of Agreement is a historical document and cannot be amended. [See pp. 2, 3.]

On Amending Articles of Agreement, Section 8.2, to Include “Pacific Islander”—From the Presbytery of Sacramento.

The Presbytery of Sacramento overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to revise Section 8.2 of the Articles of Agreement as found in Appendix A of the Book of Order as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“8.2 Governing bodies of the Church shall be responsible for implementing the Church’s commitment to inclusiveness and participation which provides for the full expression of the rich diversity within its membership. All governing bodies shall work to become more open and inclusive and to correct past patterns of discrimination on the basis of racial ethnic background.

“Racial ethnic members in the United States (Presbyterians of African, Hispanic, ~~and~~ Asian, and Pacific Islander descent and Native Americans) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision-making of the Church, and shall be able to form caucuses.

“Participation and representation of racial ethnic membership shall be assured by the Committees on Representation (8.1).”

Rationale

The PC(USA) is committed to inclusion and seeks to ensure we hear the voices of those who are not the majority via Article 8, which is intended to ensure racial ethnic representation, participation, and organization.

This change seeks to more fully and accurately reflect the racial ethnic diversity in the PC(USA) by language that includes Pacific Islanders consistent with the intent of Article 8.

Personnel and/or committee affected: All committees, commissions, boards, and other official entities of the PC(USA).

Rationale for adding “and Pacific Islander”: It is included by the city, county, state, and the U.S. Census as an ethnic group representing those of the Hawaiian Islands, Guam, American Samoas, Northern Mariana Islands, etc. Let us embrace our people/cultures of the Pacific Islands.

2. CR-002 (now Item 14-15)—Commissioners' Resolution. The Foundations of Presbyterian Polity. Referred to the Assembly Committee on Theological Issues and Institutions. Referred to Assembly Committee on Theological Issues & Institutions (14). Vote: 32-0.
3. CR-003 (now Item 07-04)—Commissioners' Resolution. Prayer for the Persecuted Church. Referred to Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations. Referred to Assembly Committee on Ecumenical & Interfaith Relations (07). Vote: 32-0.
4. CR-004 (now Item 06-17)—Commissioners' Resolution. Seeking Support for Settlements of Disputes Regarding Church Property. Recommendations 1, 2 and 4 referred to Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry (06); and that Recommendation 3 be declined based upon the following rationale: Recommendation 3. implies an authoritative interpretation, which, under Standing Rule A.6.e., is not allowed in commissioners' resolutions. Vote: 32-0.
5. CR-005—Commissioners' Resolution. Regarding the Use of Two States for Two Peoples. Declined. Vote: 32-0.
6. CR-006 (now Item 08-08)—Commissioners' Resolution. Standing for Reconciliation and Ending Affiliation with Divisive Coalition. Referred to Assembly Committee on Middle East Issues (08). Vote: 32-0.
7. CR-007 (now Item 12-12)—Commissioners' Resolution. On Affirming Principles of Sanctuary in Response to the Global Escalation in the Number of Displaced Person/Refugees. Referred to Assembly Committee on Peacemaking & International Issues (12). Vote: 32-0.
8. CR-008 (now Item 12-11)—Commissioners' Resolution. Reaffirming the Ministry of Sanctuary by Congregations. Referred to Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues. Referred to Assembly Committee on Peacemaking & International Issues (12). Vote: 32-0.
9. CR-009 (now Item 13-08)—Commissioners' Resolution. On Creating a Special Committee to Conduct an Administrative Review to Assure Compliance with Donor and General Assembly Restrictions on the Administration of the Jarvie Service. Referred to Assembly Committee on BOP, PILP, PPC, and Foundation (13). Vote: 32-0.
10. CR-010 (now Item 12-13)—Commissioners' Resolution. Peace, Justice, and Reunification in the Korean Peninsula. Referred to Assembly Committee on Peacemaking & International Issues (12). Vote: 32-0.
11. CR-011 (now Item 07-05)—Commissioners' Resolution. Recognition of the 500th Anniversary of the Protestant Reformation. Referred to Assembly Committee on Ecumenical & Interfaith Relations (07). Vote: 32-0.
12. CR-012—Commissioners' Resolution. On Directing the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) to Release for Public View the Final Report of the Independent Investigation into the Incorporation and Funding of a California 501(c)(3) Nonprofit Corporation. Declined based upon following rationale: (1) civil proceedings have commenced in the matters referred to, and the church suspends its judicial process until civil proceedings have been resolved; (2) the UPCUSA, a predecessor denomination, voted that the General Assembly would not be an ecclesial court. Up to that time the General Assembly had to approve the decisions of the GAPJC before it was made final. That change has been the practice of the reunited church. Accepting this commissioners' resolution requires the General Assembly to serve as an ecclesial court of the church. Vote: 32-0.

[The assembly received Item 02-04. See p. 70.]

Minutes of the Assembly, Sunday evening, June 19, 2016, through Friday morning, June 24, 2016.

[The assembly received Item 02-04. See pp. 7, 11, 70.]

A. In accordance with the Standing Rules, the minutes of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) for Saturday, June 18, 2016, through Sunday, June 19, 2016, have been reviewed and found to be in order. These minutes are posted on PC-Biz under the business for the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures (02), Item 02-02.

B. In accordance with the Standing Rules, the minutes of the 222nd General Assembly (2016) for Sunday evening, June 19, 2016, through Friday morning, June 24, 2016 (excluding Thursday evening), have been reviewed and found to be in order. These minutes are posted on PC-Biz under the business for the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures (02), Item 02-04.

C. In accordance with the Standing Rules, the minutes for the rest of the assembly will be reviewed by a subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

[The assembly received Item 02-06. See p. 70.]

Minutes of the assembly, Thursday evening, June 23, 2016, through Saturday morning, June 25, 2016. Approved by the subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

Item 03-01

On Amending Standing Rule E.2.d.(2) Concerning Resources and E.2.f.(3) Concerning Oral Presentation to Assembly Committees—From the Presbytery of Central Florida.

[The assembly approved Item 03-01, Recommendation 1., with amendment. See pp. 12, 28.]

The Presbytery of Central Florida overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to amend Standing Rule E.2. as follows:

1. Amend Standing Rule E.2.d.(2) as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

~~“(2) Resource material (except for previously published books or interpretive brochures), including advice and counsel memoranda, that provides background or advice on items of new business, including commissioners’ resolutions, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred and shall be as succinct as possible. This material shall be submitted to the assembly committee leadership team prior to presentation to the assembly committee to which the business has been referred. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures], with a commitment to equitable presentation of different perspectives, shall consider any request that is made to distribute this resource material to the full assembly.~~

“Resource material provided for the committee by the appropriate General Assembly entity shall include well-written presentations from the variety of different perspectives on any issue under consideration. These presentations on other perspectives should come from the most articulate and informed proponents of that particular point of view. A report including a summary of the actions taken on this issue by our ecumenical partners and previous General Assemblies shall also be prepared by an appropriate General Assembly entity.”

[The assembly referred Item 03-01, Recommendation 2. to the Office of the General Assembly with comment. See pp. 12, 28]

[Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) acknowledges and affirms the intent of fairness behind this overture and would like to refer it for further discussion to be sure implementation ensures multiple perspectives are shared in deliberations while still retaining the discernment process of commissioners.]

2. Amend Standing Rule E.2.f.(3) as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

Rationale

The Foundations section of the Book of Order states: “Presbyters are not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ” (F-3.0204). This overture will help us find and represent the will of Christ in three ways.

- First, it will help us seek the will of Christ in a way that is less contentious. When a decision is required on a topic of much debate, it is often hard for presbyters to find and represent the will of Christ amid all the voices bidding for our attention. If one voice in a particular debate is given an advantage, this makes the discernment process even more difficult. This overture seeks to give all voices an equal opportunity to be heard.

The Peace, Unity, and Purity Task Force noted that when there are matters of disagreement it important that we listen deeply to what others have to say. This committee found well-written presentations on all sides of an issue to be of help. They stated, “The pursuit of truth takes place in a community where differing voices are not only respectfully engaged but also honored as full partners in our common pursuit of God’s will for the church.”

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to be a community in which all voices have a place at the table. However, when General Assembly entities and General Assembly staff come to a firm conclusion on a matter and then promote that conclusion as a part of the process, those who differ from that conclusion find it hard to have their voices heard.

- Second, this overture will help commissioners to the General Assembly focus on the relevant arguments. At every General Assembly there are many first-time commissioners who are assigned to a committee with business that is unfamiliar to them. In order to make an informed decision and listen for the voice of the Spirit, these commissioners need to hear all sides on any particular issue presented in an erudite and winsome way.

- Third, this overture will encourage divergent thinking. Good leadership requires that we think of as many solutions to a problem as possible before we decide which solution (or combination of solutions) might be best. Having a number of well-thought-out solutions to a problem on the table could help the General Assembly committees lead the church in a new and exciting direction. This new direction will require the General Assembly committees and the full assembly to do more reading in some cases. However, making an informed decision should be more important than just making a decision.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-01

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 03-01 be disapproved.

Item 03-01 purports to give balance and enrich input to committee decision-making, but in practice it would be time-consuming, inevitably arbitrary, and possibly quite expensive. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) appreciates the proponents' desire for fairness. While ACSWP is not the only body that would be covered, we have tried to think through this proposal in relation to the often complex requests for study we are given. This overture would mandate:

Experts advocating differing points of view shall be given equal time if oral presentations promoting one point of view are given by General Assembly staff, persons with special expertise, and elected members of General Assembly entities.

Consider that if a committee was considering a resolution on human trafficking or pornography and received an oral presentation from any of the groups listed above, this mandate would require that someone who advocates human trafficking or pornography be given equal time. This would be a waste of time. More than that, however, this overture does not recognize the role of the Bible, our confessions, and our mission experience in forming social witness policies in particular. Just as many concerns (like poverty) have been around a long time, so have approaches by the church. The study material normally attached to any set of recommendations is designed to show how given conclusions were reached and alternatives considered, guided by the range of voices mandated by the assembly in 1993 (<https://www.pcusa.org/resource/why-and-how-church-makes-social-policy-witness/>).

Further, the overture's rather rigid approach negates the reason the General Assembly elects persons to advisory and advocacy committees in the first place: Presbyterians with experience and expertise are elected to give their time to consider an issue at length, engage diverse points of view, talk over the implications with mission co-workers and General Assembly staff, and develop a position based on the merits of the issue. These volunteers act on behalf of the rest of us. Sometimes, as with the Risking Peace Affirmations, the report on the "two-state solution" for Israel-Palestine, and the drug policy reform study coming before this General Assembly, ACSWP has digested reports from presbyteries that studied the issue, held hearings, invited input from the larger church, and tested findings. Under that 1993 statement, Why and How the Church Makes a Social Witness, which undergirds the assembly manual, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy seeks not just a theoretical exercise but practical recommendations for action based on its knowledge of the church.

Reports coming before this General Assembly, for example, engage diverse points of view and name areas of disagreement among Christians. The report on human trafficking looks at the contested terminology from "modern slavery" to "forced labor" and identifies different approaches to prostitution. The study of the Israel-Palestine situation identifies multiple views in the church regarding the viability of the "two-state solution," while inviting the church to unify around the need for any diplomatic or political solution to honor human rights and democratic values.

Pick an overture coming from a presbytery proposing a new or different policy on a given topic. The current assembly rules recommend reference to theological and confessional grounding, citation of prior General Assembly actions, and consultation with programs that would be affected in mission or budget. Each presbytery is authorized to designate an overture advocate prepared to resource the assembly committee. For cost reasons, it is on the presbytery to determine who that advocate is and how they get to the assembly. General Assembly rules also suggest hearings on all business, open to non-Presbyterians, and on some matters (notably South Africa, Central American human rights, corporate boycotts and divestment, environmental issues, sexuality) organizations in the church and outside often bring in experts. Some issues have multiple sides; the role of advisory and advocacy committees is partly to take into account how "social location" affects how individuals and groups see an issue.

Thus mandating equal time does not reflect how committees structure their work. Committees are assigned papers and there are hearings where one can give additional information, offer opinions, and even present substitute reports. Who would determine which other experts would be brought in and who would pay for them? What if the commissioners wanted to arrest a report or voted to call the question before some expert had finished a presentation? The committee process already in place gives significant opportunities to consider diverse points of view represented in the church. As former commissioners know, hearings can go for days and some matters may be revisited for years.

We hope that this response itself is fair, but must acknowledge that ACSWP's own resources and those of other bodies are limited and practices can always be improved. There are judgment calls for moderators to make, and forgiveness to be shared when decisions do not go a given way. Within our committee itself, there are often intense discussions. Yet we believe Christ does not ask the church to be a neutral place, but a truthful place, as truth always has justice on its side. Yet it is grace, then, when we see God's justice pointing to the reconciliation of all sides.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 03-01

Comment on Item 03-01—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 03-01, the overture to amend Standing Rule E.2. concerning resources and oral presentation to assembly committees.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created "to carry out the assembly's oversight of the Stated Clerk ..." (Organization for Mission, Section, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the experience of commissioners and advisory delegates at the assembly.

COGA advises the General Assembly to disapprove Item 03-01 due to two inconsistencies within the proposed amendment to the Standing Rules of the General Assembly. We find that it is hard, if not impossible, to measure fairness in resources provided to commissioners and advisory delegates to the General Assembly. Additionally, committee leadership and assembly staff are not in the position to determine who is an "expert" for there is already provision in the Standing Rules for a committee to dialogue with the general public through the open hearing availability given to General Assembly committees. COGA urges the assembly to instead rely on F-3.0105 in the Book of Order and practice mutual forbearance, for every commissioner has been ordained by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the ministry of ruling elder or teaching elder and also elected and commissioned by the presbytery in which they reside. They are therefore called by God to represent themselves at this particular time in service to God and the church. To further delineate what is fair and is worthy of perusal by commissioners and advisory delegates could hamper the movement of the Holy Spirit and promote tribes to form. Additionally, this overture could potentially add layers of required listening that can break down a committee's work and cause further division in their discernment. We must trust one another as Christ trusts the church to carry on his work in the world.

[The assembly referred Item 03-02 to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly with comment. See p. 28.]

[Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) supports the intended outcome of this item and refers Item 03-02 to the Committee of the Office of the General Assembly to work with the General Assembly Committee on Representation to determine the most effective and efficient way to achieve this outcome by the 223rd General Assembly (2018).]

On Revising the Racial Ethnic Composition Component of the Session Annual Report of Church Statistics—From the Presbytery of Elizabeth.

The Presbytery of Elizabeth overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Office of the General Assembly to commission an appropriately racially and culturally diverse task force, working group, or committee, to revise the survey instrument used in the Racial Ethnic Composition Component of the Sessions' Annual Report of Church Statistics to more clearly reflect the racial, ethnic AND cultural diversity in our churches.

Rationale

The annual report that is typically filed by the clerk of each church's session asks the clerk to assign each church member to one of the following categories of racial or ethnic identification: Asian, African, African American, Black, Hispanic, Middle Eastern, Native American, White, Other. These data are used to measure how well the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is doing in fulfilling its goal of being a welcoming, inclusive church for all people, regardless of cultural or genetic heritage. This goal, while laudable and surely shared by all, is nevertheless obscured in a number of significant ways by the very labels, or categories of identification, into which the report filing form asks the clerk to divide church members.

First, categories overlap. What is the reasoning behind including both "Black" and "African American" among the choices? This seems more a matter of personal choice, semantics, and preference of one terminology over another than a distinction based on race or ethnic background.

Second, individual people overlap the categories. In which category does, for example, a person of African descent whose parents grew up in Panama belong? Or a white-skinned person of Syrian descent, or whose parents emigrated from Cuba? What of a person with Native American blood whose name is Dominguez? Or any of the endless permutations of mestizo, mulatto, Amer-Asian, and other ethnic blending that reason, simple observation, and the latest science of genetics all tell us plainly that we all partake of?

Third, the categories are too broad to give a clear picture of cultural diversity. Why, for instance, don't Japanese or Japanese American church members have a different ethnic category heading than church members from Lahore, Mumbai, or Chennai? Why do church members from the Dominican Republic get lumped into the same category as those from Mexico or Peru? And what (besides the Body of Christ) significantly unites someone of Hispanic descent whose family has been in this country for generations with someone who is a recent immigrant from Central America?

We know what divides them, and it is culture. It is nurture and history and collective experience, not nature or biology. It is the same as the reason for having a category of "African" alongside a separate and distinct category of "Black." (Where, by the way, does a white South African fit in this racial ethnic breakdown?)

Let us admit that whatever language we use for mapping the dimensions of human diversity, or Presbyterian diversity, is, like all language, ultimately inadequate and imprecise; also that cultural, ethnic, and racial identity is, for most people, a very personal and precious treasure, one that is alternately defended and trumpeted with pride and a sense of guardianship.

Moreover, while ethnicity is immutable, a product of one's genetic inheritance from one's parents, culture—which implies not only language and dialect, but cuisine, music, and dance styles, the stories you've grown up with, and the values you've learned, the jokes you laugh at, the sources of your joy and suffering—is malleable, morphing, dynamic, and a subject of some degree of personal choice. To be sure, cultural identification is predestined to a certain extent by ethnicity; geography and historical era each plays a role, as well. Still, an individual person can actively choose to identify, more or less, with the predominant culture of his or her group, or even reject the culture altogether.

All of this explains why we feel that culture is at least as powerful a marker of identity and a measure of diversity as race and ethnicity, perhaps even more so, and it should therefore be accounted for in our annual Presbyterian census-taking. We therefore urge the Office of the General Assembly to assign some appropriate group or committee or task force, as a matter of foremost priority, to research this question and come up with a survey instrument that celebrates our church's diversity in more than just the eight broad categories of racial ethnic diversity that are currently offered, an instrument in which the smallest possible number of people in any given population, church, or community, is relegated to the category of "other," and one that manages to also incorporate the dynamic and vibrant cultural diversity that is captured within each of these categories.

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this Item be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and to the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy affirms the importance of encouraging diversity in our church as part of "exhibiting the kingdom of heaven to the world." It is also part of our witness and evangelism to build churchwide strategies based on accurate data. Working in consultation with the General Assembly Committee on Representation (and other bodies of the Presbyterian Mission Agency as warranted), the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly can incorporate consideration of these matters into its regular work with staff on the questionnaire. Commissioners may also consider whether their clerks of session share their response forms to the Stated Clerk's questionnaire with their sessions or congregations.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-02

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 03-02.

Over the years, the population demographic in the United States has become increasingly diverse and more complex, as has the demographic within the PC(USA). According to the 2010 Census, the population reporting multiple races (9.0 million) grew by 32.0 percent from 2000 to 2010, compared with those who reported a single race, which grew by 9.2 percent (<https://www.census.gov/newsroom/releases/archives/race/cb12-182.html>).

ACREC concurs that many of these existing racial ethnic categories that are currently being used for statistical purpose by the PC(USA) do overlap with one another and often lead to confusion, misrepresentation, or underrepresentation, especially among those who consider themselves to be “multiracial” or “interracial.” Currently they would have to choose one of their closest racial ethnic affiliations or the category of “other.”

As we seek to become a more inclusive community of faith, we identify ourselves first and foremost as children of God. God embraces our diversities and identifies who we are regardless of how we may humanly identify or categorize ourselves.

Comment on Item 03-02—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) respectfully advises that the assembly refer Item 03-02, on revising the racial ethnic composition of the Session Annual Report of Church Statistics, to COGA for action as part of its response to the referral from the 219th General Assembly (2010), which will be reported to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). The 219th General Assembly (2010) referred a similar overture concerning the categories for statistical reporting. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly has been engaged in that work and anticipates reporting recommended changes to the Sessions’ Annual Report of Church Statistics, consistent with the goal of this overture, to the next assembly.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 03-02

Comment on Item 03-02—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

This overture seeks to revise the racial ethnic composition component of the session annual report of church statistics.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully requests that when reports measuring statistics and participation demographics of the church are revised, that the assembly direct GACOR be included in the body making recommendations for revision. The GACOR is the assembly entity tasked with the responsibility to collect, review, analyze, and make recommendations based on the annual reports of church and agency statistics. Data collected by these instruments inform baselines for comparison of participation and representation on decision-making bodies. The GACOR uses this data in almost every analysis of institutional capacity and inclusiveness.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching, from across the church in accordance with F-1-0403. Its Constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

Item 03-03

On Directing COGA to Bring to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) Proposals Regarding Changes in the Moderator’s Election and Assembly Committee Meetings Process—From the Presbytery of St. Andrew.

[The assembly disapproved Item 03-03, Recommendation 1. See p. 28.]

The Presbytery of Saint Andrew overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) to bring to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) a proposal for constitutional changes, revisions to the Manual of the General Assembly, and necessary implementation provisos that would:

1. Move the election of a General Assembly Moderator and Vice-Moderator to the end of the meeting of each General Assembly, with the result that the newly elected Moderator and Vice-Moderator, having demonstrated leadership through the week of the assembly meeting, would be elected to serve as its ambassadors for the next two years, working to build the next assembly’s agenda and business, over which they would then preside.

[Comment: We recommend that COGA continue to identify, investigate, and implement strategies and processes to empower all commissioners to have maximum opportunities to prepare for committee work prior to the start of the General Assembly for which they are elected as commissioners.]

2. Create a system by means of which General Assembly committees can convene at least six months prior to the assembly at which they will serve as commissioners to organize and begin their work, culminating in reports and action recommendations at their meetings once the General Assembly itself has convened. It is assumed that evolving electronic meeting technology will be employed to make this process possible.

Rationale

In the current General Assembly process, Moderators are elected on the basis of a very brief time of “campaigning” at the beginning of each assembly, and a ninety-minute period of questions and answers mostly on theoretical questions of what they would do if elected. Furthermore, once the assembly adjourns, its Moderator and Vice-Moderator have essentially completed their work, save the tasks of interpreting the assembly’s actions to the church and serving as its ambassadors to both the PC(USA) membership, and the world.

This proposal would first give each assembly the opportunity to experience its potential leaders in action, and then determine at the end of the assembly week who should be elected to serve in these critically important roles at the next assembly, and in the months leading up to it.

Second, the proposal would change the current process of coming together for a total of one week with the expectation that commissioners will reach good and well-reasoned decisions on a myriad of matters enumerated in thousands of pages of overtures, responses, reports, and recommendations. In an age in which not only can reports can be distributed electronically, but entire meetings can be conducted electronically in full compliance with Robert’s Rules of Order, there is no reason that a system cannot be created to allow General Assembly committees to organize, meet, assign work groups, and accomplish much of their work before the assembly week occurs.

In developing a process for implementing this proposal, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) should have the freedom to contemplate creative options—including shortening the length of assembly meetings themselves—to create the possibility of individual in-person committee meetings well before the assembly week for the purposes of group formation and organization, which could be held relatively inexpensively by utilizing the Presbyterian Center, camp and conference facilities and/or churches.

This process would also give the Moderator and Vice-Moderator particular roles in facilitating and coordinating these meetings and work.

Comment on Item 03-03—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly offers the following comments for consideration by the assembly in deliberation of Item 03-03, on directing COGA to bring to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) proposals regarding changes in the Moderator’s election and assembly committee meetings process.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the experience of commissioners and advisory delegates at the assembly.

COGA urges the assembly to consider the potential impact of Item 03-03 with care. As the rationale for this item suggests, by allowing for individuals to demonstrate exceptional leadership during their service as commissioner, the assembly may be better informed in making a decision as to who could best fulfill the duties of Moderator during the succeeding biennium, including moderating the following General Assembly, while still compliant with Robert’s Rules of Order. This item may bring a spirit of creativity and nimbleness to the Moderatorial positions that would enliven the body for carrying the decisions made at General Assembly to the presbyteries and communicating the story of the assembly to members of our churches. COGA continues to believe that creative approaches to ensuring that the General Assembly is accessible to all members who make up our denomination are necessary.

However, the proposal also raises some concerns based upon COGA’s view of the role of the Moderator. First, the assembly should consider with care whether a Moderator elected by one assembly will be as effective in moderating the business of the subsequent assembly as would be an individual whom the subsequent assembly has elected would be. Further, as COGA understands G-3.0104, a Moderator’s presbytery would have to reelect him/her as a commissioner at the subsequent assembly, or he/she would not have the ability to serve as Moderator. COGA does not believe G-3.0104 allows the General Assembly to compel that the individual be reelected a commissioner. Finally, COGA is concerned that the proposal has the potential to create confusion between the role of the Moderator and the role of the Stated Clerk in planning the General Assembly. Any action should make completely clear that the change in the term of Moderator is not a warrant for such an individual to supplant the Stated Clerk’s responsibilities for planning the General Assembly.

[The assembly answered Item 03-04 by the action taken on Item 03-02. See pp. 28, 29.]

On Adding the Category “Multiracial” to the Listing of Racial Classifications in the Annual Report from Congregations—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to do the following:

1. Add the category “multiracial” to its listing of racial classifications in its annual report that congregations use to report their annual statistics to the General Assembly each year.
2. Proclaim that
 - We recognize that each person has the right to define their racial classification in the way that best fits their sense of self.
 - The United States is becoming an increasingly diverse community, with many individuals having heritages from diverse races and cultures.
 - Asking people to choose a racial category that they believe does not encompass their full, rich, and unique background dishonors their unique heritage.
 - Asking people with a diverse racial background to choose “other” as a racial category can convey a sense of diminished worth and value for their personhood/humanity.
3. Call on our churches to use language in their membership forms, annual reports, services, meetings, and community work that expresses its appreciation for the rich and complex diversity of all humanity.
4. Uphold that all people, regardless of their race, ethnicity, gender, marital status, sexual orientation, class, or any other category that the world may place on them, are first and foremost children of God, all members of God’s family, and all to be treated with equal respect, care, and love.

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this item be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, with consultation with the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries and the Committee on Representation.

As in Item 03-02, there is a very important mission goal involved in the choice of language, in this case the word, “multiracial.” It is certainly better than, “other,” as is currently used. At the same time, the category multiracial or multiethnic, without some qualification, could possibly inhibit the usefulness of the new category, which might itself be used as a catch-all. This is a matter on which Research Services may well also have wisdom, as they design questionnaires regularly. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly would report its determination to the 223rd General Assembly (2018), but might be able to implement any changes before that time.

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 03-04. See ACREC’s Advice and Counsel on Item 03-02.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 03-04

Comment on Item 03-04—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) respectfully advises that the assembly refer Item 03-04, on adding the category “multiracial” to the listing of racial classifications in the annual report from congregations, to COGA for action as part of its response to the referral from the 219th General Assembly (2010), which will be reported to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). The 219th General Assembly (2010) referred a similar overture concerning the categories for statistical reporting. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly has been engaged in that work and anticipates reporting recommended changes to the Sessions’ Annual Report of Church Statistics, consistent with the goal of this overture, to the next assembly.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 03-04

Comment on Item 03-04—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

This overture adds the category “multiracial” to the listing of racial classifications to the annual report from congregations.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation uses both “multiracial” and “other” in its reports. We support General Assembly using “multiracial” as a means to identify persons who associate themselves with more than one given racial category.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching, from across the church in accordance with F-1-0403. Its Constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

[The assembly disapproved Item 03-05. See pp. 12, 28, 29.]

On Amending the Annual Statistical Report to Include a New Category “Partners in Ministry”—From the Presbytery of Arkansas.

The Presbytery of Arkansas respectfully overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to instruct the Office of the General Assembly to amend the Annual Statistical Report to include a new category, “Partners in Ministry.” This number shall be reported by the OGA in the statistical data for each congregation, which is accessible through the OGA or its website, in order that the vitality of a congregation is accurately reflected in those statistics.

“Partners in Ministry” are defined as individuals fully participating in the ministry of the church. Full participation is defined as their willing inclusion on a register of Partners in Ministry and their willingness to make a financial pledge to the ministry of the church, their inclusion in a congregational care list kept by the session or board of deacons, or their inclusion in a phone list designed for notification of members and regular participants in the event of temporary cancellation of church programs or events (e.g. cancellation due to weather, etc.).

It has been observed that in ever greater numbers, many of the congregants, worshippers, and participants in congregations choose to delay or never formally become members of any congregation or denomination. This trend is evident not only in congregations of the PC(USA), but of most Christian denominations in the United States, and was one of the considerations behind the “1001 Worshipping Communities” movement. This reluctance may be for many personal and cultural reasons, including (but not limited to) loyalty to the denomination or congregation of the participants birth or family, a sense of one’s residence being temporary, a distrust of institutional stability, a discomfort with some of the exact words of the affirmation of faith, a desire to be certain that the affirmation of faith is one that they can state with absolute sincerity, or a cultural/generational trend to try many things out before making a commitment to one.

In some cases, the participant’s desire is not to become part of the structure of the church or denomination, but simply to participate in the worship and/or mission of the congregation, whether for a short, long, or extended period of time. Nonetheless, the congregation’s ability to serve Christ in its community and the world is affected by the non-members’ participation. The congregation’s ability to do ministry and mission is expanded even as pastoral and congregational care are owed to this larger number of congregants also expands.

These are considerations that may affect a future pastoral call, and the upward or downward trend of this aspect of the congregation’s ministry should be as verifiable as the congregational growth or decline in membership, attendance in worship or Christian education, and financial stability, all of which are currently included in the statistical information available.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 03-05

Comment on Item 03-05—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 03-05, on amending the annual statistical report to include a new category “partners in ministry.”

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the Office of the General Assembly, including its responsibilities for the Sessions’ Annual Report of Church Statistics. COGA is concerned that this item will create confusion for clerks of session in identifying those that fall into the definition of “Partners in Ministry,” and thereby add to their administrative burden. The committee recognizes that some individuals may be unwilling to enter into active membership in a congregation, but fulfill some or all of the criteria listed. It is grateful for those individuals, but unclear that adding reporting regarding these individuals (and not individuals who meet some but not all of these criteria, or meet different criteria) fulfills the purposes of statistical reporting by sessions. Tasking clerks of session with the duty to determine whether these criteria are met has the potential to add to the burden of these faithful volunteers.

On Adding New Standing Rule B.5.b., Assembly Committee Moderators—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) amend the Standing Rules by adding a new Standing Rule B.5.b. and re-lettering the current b–f as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Assembly Committee Moderators

“b. When the moderator of an assembly committee is not a commissioner to the current assembly (Standing Rules C.1.c), they shall have voice in committee and voice in plenary on business from their committee.”

“Ecumenical Representative

~~“b. c.~~ Ecumenical representatives ... [Text remains unchanged.]

“Resource Persons

~~“e. d.~~ The assembly may welcome ... [Text remains unchanged.]

“Presbytery Staff

“Ecumenical Visitors

“Interfaith Representatives

~~“f. g.~~ Interfaith representatives ... [Text remains unchanged.]”

Rationale

This clarifies the role of committee moderators who are not currently commissioners, but have been appointed by the General Assembly Moderator from previous assemblies as allowed in Standing Rule C.1.c.

[The assembly approved Item 03-07. See pp. 12, 28, 29.]

Amendment to Standing Rule B.3.a., Presbyterian Women—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) amend Standing Rule B.3.a. to add the moderator of Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church

“a. The following persons shall be corresponding members: Moderators of earlier General Assemblies; the Stated Clerk, Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks, and other members of the staff of the Office of the General Assembly as designated by the Stated Clerk; the members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly; the members of the PMA Executive Committee and staff of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and of the divisions and related entities designated by the council; all members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution; the executives of synods; one person designated by each entity reporting directly to the General Assembly, including permanent, special, and advisory committees (additional persons may be designated by such bodies if authorized by the Moderator of the preceding General Assembly in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly); the moderator of Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc., or her designee; and the presidents (or their designee) of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and seminaries related by covenant agreement.”

Rationale

Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc. (PW), is a critical part of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission and ministry. The purpose of the organization commits PW members to “build an inclusive, caring community of women that strengthens the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and witnesses to the promise of God’s kingdom.” PW is in partnership with the six agencies of the PC(USA); however, corresponding member status with the General Assembly will solidify and strengthen the relationship between the larger PC(USA) and PW.

- Presbyterian Women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc., (PW) is the women’s organization of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)). There have been women’s organizations in the Presbyterian church for more than 200 years.
- PW’s resources—human, financial, and programmatic—support the mission of the PC(USA) and the worldwide church.
- PW is a tax-exempt national women’s organization related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as an integrated auxiliary.
- PW’s bylaws and articles of incorporation link the organization directly to the PC(USA) Constitution.
- Since 1996, the national Moderator is a member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board with voice and vote. A member of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board is appointed by the board to serve on PW, Inc.’s board, with voice and vote.
- In 2001, Presbyterian Women entered into a covenant relationship with the General Assembly Council, now known as the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board. This covenant, now an institutional relationship agreement, was renewed most recently in 2014.
- PW corresponds to the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board through Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries.
- PW is in programmatic partnership with PMA ministry areas and committees, including the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns; World Mission; Compassion, Peace and Justice; and Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries.
- PW, Inc., has an extensive service agreement and works in partnership with the Presbyterian Mission Agency and its ministry areas and programs; is a member of the Board of Pensions; works in partnership with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation and holds funds there; and works in partnership with the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation.

History

With reunion of the Presbyterian Church in the United States and The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America in 1983, the corresponding women’s organizations, Women of the Church (WOC) and United Presbyterian Women (UPW), began work on a united organization. Presbyterian Women came into being in 1988. The 198th General Assembly (1986) received the Presbyterian Women Purpose and Principles of Organization. General Assembly action affirmed the design and bylaws of the organization.

Presbyterian Women has worked in partnership with the PC(USA) since 1988. Presbyterian women serve throughout the church. They pray, study, teach, preach, build relationships, and mentor. Presbyterian Women continues to strengthen the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through its ministry and mission. Through human and financial resources; Bible study, publications, and media; PC(USA) networks and gatherings at all levels of the church and ecumenical partnerships; mission support and grant programs (Thank and Birthday offerings); leadership training and advocacy for women and children in church and society; and denominational policy support and interpretation, Presbyterian Women remains a strong, faithful, and dependable partner, integral to the PC(USA).

Election of Associate Stated Clerk—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, with the concurrence of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) elect Teaching Elder Beth Hessel to a first, four-year term as Associate Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Rationale

The Standing Rules of the General Assembly at H.2.d. states the following:

The General Assembly may elect one or more Associate Stated Clerks as the General Assembly shall determine. The Stated Clerk shall nominate persons to fill each such office after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The term of office shall be four years, subject to reelection at the pleasure of the General Assembly.

This person gives exemplary service as executive director of the Presbyterian Historical Society, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), is in good standing as a teaching elder, and is a faithful Christian leader who serves the church with “energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.” The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly enthusiastically nominates this person for election as Associate Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Site Selection for the 225th General Assembly (2022)—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) accept the invitation of the Presbytery of Scioto Valley to hold the 225th General Assembly (2022) in Columbus, Ohio, June 25–July 2, 2022.

Rationale

Standing Rule I.1.d specifies that the place of meeting for the General Assembly rotate among four areas. The rotation pattern calls for the 225th General Assembly (2022) to be in Area C, which includes the Synods of Living Waters, Lincoln Trails, and Covenant.

Some of the cities in this area that have the facilities to potentially host the assembly were eliminated quickly because of cost (Nashville), how recently they had hosted an assembly (Detroit), unavailability of suitable dates (Louisville), or challenging logistics. Alabama is one of the two states with “Arizona-like” legislation on immigration, so the action of the 219th General Assembly (2010) prevented consideration of Birmingham (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 39, 40, 43, 879ff).

Office of the General Assembly staff considered proposals from Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, and Indianapolis, and conducted site visits in most of those cities. To determine the relative cost to per diem for meeting in each city, staff calculated anticipated expenses including:

- Estimated travel costs for commissioners, advisory delegates, Office of the General Assembly (OGA) staff and volunteers, as researched by the PC(USA) travel agency.
- Hotel costs for commissioners, advisory delegates, OGA staff and volunteers, based on the proposed 2022 rates for the hotels likely to be in the assembly block.
- Convention center rent, equipment, and utility costs
- Estimated group meal costs for commissioners and advisory delegates, and other food and beverage service.

We calculated the total cost of these items for each city, allowing us to compare the approximate relative cost of meeting in each. It is important to note that this is not a total budget for the assembly, but a tool to determine which cities are more or less expensive in the areas that are paid by General Assembly per capita.

Comparisons of Cities

Chicago (June 2–9) was ruled out before a site visit due to costs. Though airfares were the lowest, high hotel rates ($214 average) and convention center expenses made it the most expensive option. Another consideration is that the proposed package included meeting space at the McCormick Center and rooms in nearby hotels, which are some distance from the real heart of the city.

Cleveland (June 11–18) last hosted the assembly in 1960. Its new convention center made it possible to consider Cleveland, but the facilities would not be ideal for either plenary sessions or committees. The weighted average hotel rate is $192 (second only to Chicago), and the hotel package would be somewhat spread out. Though we thoroughly enjoyed our visit and feel that the city has much to offer, it would present some challenges as a General Assembly (GA) location.

Cincinnati (June 25–July 2) last hosted the assembly in 1995. The convention center would accommodate the plenary sessions and up to eleven assembly committees; others would be at a nearby hotel. There are an adequate number of hotel rooms in five hotels near the convention center, with a weighted average hotel rate of $176. Along with the proposed convention center rent and equipment costs, and higher anticipated airport transportation costs, it would be the most expensive of the three finalists. Total costs: $1,221,495.

Indianapolis last hosted the assembly in 1985. Its expanded convention center is well-suited for events; plenary/worship, the exhibit hall, all the committees, and other key operations could be accommodated in one half of the building. The convention bureau would cover the convention center rental costs. Two sets of dates were offered: June 25–July 2, or July 2–9, with significantly lower costs for the later dates. For the week that includes the July 4 holiday, the cluster of Marriott-related hotels offered rates averaging $154. Indianapolis offers very suitable facilities for the assembly and very good rates, but concerns include that we would be likely to share the building with another group, and potential risk in committing to just one hotel chain for ALL rooms. Total costs: $1,140,999 for July 2–9 dates

Columbus (June 25–July 2) last hosted the assembly in 2002 and it was a very good location for the meeting then. Since then the convention center has expanded and it is currently undergoing a major renovation. The size and layout of the convention center facilities are very well-suited to the assembly operation, and the convention bureau is covering the convention center rent. Another hotel has been built across the street from the convention center, so there are an adequate number of rooms within walking distance of the convention center. The convention center and hotels are across the street from the North Market and at the edge of the popular Short North area, so there are numerous restaurants and other outlets nearby. The available dates are June 25–July 2, with a weighted average hotel rate of $156; however, we are exempt from more of the state taxes in Ohio, which makes the final hotel costs paid by per capita lower than that of Indianapolis. Vendors with experience working in Columbus and Indianapolis advise us that labor costs would be lower in Columbus. In addition to being the most cost-effective city among those considered (especially for dates that do not mean meeting over July 4), it offers excellent facilities and amenities. Total costs: $1,108,750.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve the following:

[The assembly approved Item 03-10, Recommendation 1. See pp. 28, 29.]

- 1. Approve the following benchmarks for the Office of the General Assembly:
 - a. a general benchmark of 50 percent women and 40 percent persons from minoritized racial groups (50/40) for the employment of personnel;
 - b. a targeted benchmark for exempt employees of 50 percent women and 33 percent persons from minoritized racial groups (50/33); and
 - c. retain the benchmark of 10 percent for diverse suppliers (10).

Rationale for Recommendation 1.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) received the employment (Affirmative Action and Equal Employment Opportunity, AA/EEO) and supplier diversity (SD, formerly minority vendor) reports from the Office of General Assembly, on time and as required by General Assembly action.

The analysis showed the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to exceed the current employment benchmarks for women (69 percent achieved, compared to the 40 percent benchmark) and minoritized racial group members (22 percent achieved, compared to the 20 percent benchmark). From a review of past practices and performance, the committee, in consultation with staff, determined that an upward adjustment of the benchmark should be considered. In examining the data, we noticed a slight difference in exempt and nonexempt levels of employment.

In reviewing three years of OGA employment data, it was noted a greater percentage of achievement of the benchmark is accomplished through employment of lower levels of the organization. The majority of employees are exempt (32 to the 22 who are nonexempt). Of sixteen women employed in nonexempt positions, eight are from minoritized racial groups. Of the six men in that same category, three are from minoritized racial groups. While exempt employees show a different pattern: of eleven men (one part-time), only one man is from a minoritized racial group; and of the twenty-one women, five persons (one part-time) are from minoritized racial groups.

GACOR suggests setting a goal for general employment of 50 percent women and 40 percent persons from minoritized racial groups. To address the level of employment and the resulting shift toward less diverse workforce, the GACOR recommends an additional goal for exempt employment of 50 percent women and 33 percent persons from minoritized racial groups.

The OGA provided materials describing the grading of employment levels. The distinction between nonexempt and exempt provides a useful division of the workforce for responsibilities and management functions. While it does include some lower-level employees, it includes all senior levels of leadership and helps focus efforts of recruitment and retention on those senior leadership positions.

The recommended benchmark for exempt staffing is set to guard against a dependency on nonexempt positions to make the goals. Setting the specialized benchmark challenges the agency to continue seeking diversity at the exempt level.

In practical terms, the higher benchmark challenges the agency to increase the diversity of staff at the exempt level. With the new 33 percent benchmark and holding at the current employment level, the agency is asked to gain four to 5 exempt positions held by persons from minoritized racial groups in the six years between reviews. Current staff of OGA was hired near equally from the local area, outside the state, and from other agencies and PC(USA) entities. An analysis of the workforce was done by examining Bureau of Labor Statistics for Louisville and Philadelphia, ministers in the PC(USA), candidates and inquirers in the PC(USA), national staff profile of a denomination in full communion with PC(USA), and other agency workforces. Conclusions were that the pools demonstrate adequate levels of personnel to equip OGA to reach the new benchmarks.

In contrast, the 2014 report for supplier diversity only reported a 2.02 percent achievement against a 10 percent goal. As the benchmark was achieved once in the last three years (2013), the GACOR suggests this benchmark remain in place at 10 percent for now. They expect with the standard definition of supplier diversity presented, and newer means to collect supplier data, that this benchmark will show improvement for the next round of review.

[The assembly approved Item 03-10, Recommendation 2 with comment. See pp. 28, 29.]

[Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) encourages the General Assembly Committee on Representation to continue to work closely with the Presbyterian Mission Agency to meet the benchmarks as stated throughout the six-year review period.]

2. Approve the following benchmarks for the Presbyterian Mission Agency:

- a. a general benchmark of 50 percent women and 40 percent persons from minoritized racial groups (50/40) for the employment of personnel;
- b. a targeted benchmark for exempt employees of 50 percent women and 33 percent persons from minoritized racial groups (50/33); and
- c. retain the benchmark of 10 percent for diverse suppliers (10).

Rationale for Recommendation 2.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) received the employment (Affirmative Action and Equal Employment Opportunity, AA/EEO) and supplier diversity (SD, formerly minority vendor) reports from the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA). The reports were received on time and as required by General Assembly action.

The analysis showed PMA to exceed the employment benchmarks for women (67 percent achieved, compared to the 40 percent benchmark) and minoritized racial group members (27 percent achieved, compared to the 20 percent benchmark). From a review of past practices and performance, the committee determined that an adjustment up of the benchmark should be considered. Due to PMA staff transitions and GACOR not being included in agency review committee schedule coordination, there was less consultation than was desired.

In reviewing three years of PMA employment data, it was noted that most of the achievement of the benchmark is accomplished through employment of lower levels of the organization. Upon follow-up requests, PMA did submit a report showing distinctions between exempt and nonexempt employees.

PMA has significantly less men employed in nonexempt positions than females (18, or 17 percent men to 76, or 34 percent women) and proportionally there are significantly less women employed in exempt positions than males (146, or 66 percent women to 89, or 83 percent men). Additionally:

- The most common pay range is $35,001–45,000, which includes 75 percent of the nonexempt male employees and 89 percent of the nonexempt female employees.
- Seven percent of the exempt male employees earn $95,001 or above while 5 percent of the exempt female employees are in the same pay range.

White employees make up 73 percent of the workforce, 47 percent are white women and white men are 26 percent, while men and women from all minoritized racial groups combined make up only 27 percent of the total workforce. Of this 27 percent, there is little diversity as employees reporting an African American/Black identity make up more than half. Racial ethnic women are 18 percent of the total workforce while men of color are 9 percent. The benchmark of 40 percent of women in the workforce is exceeded by PMA and the workforce exceeds the 20 percent employees from minoritized racial groups benchmark established so long ago.

GACOR recommends setting a new benchmark that will challenge the agency to retain an inclusive workforce even as it may reduce its workforce. GACOR suggests a goal for general employment of 50 percent women, and 40 percent persons from minoritized racial groups. To address the exempt level of employment and the resulting shift toward less diverse workforce, the GACOR recommends an additional targeted goal for exempt employment of 50 percent women and 33 percent persons from minoritized racial groups.

The PMA and OGA workforces share many characteristics that would recommend a similar approach to setting new benchmarks.

The PMA is asked to gain 13 percent employees from minoritized racial groups in the general workforce and 33 percent in its exempt workforce, to be reviewed again in six years.

The benchmark for exempt staffing is set to guard against a dependency on nonexempt positions to make the goals. Setting the specialized benchmark challenges the agency to continue seeking diversity at the exempt level and to reflect inclusivity at all levels.

GACOR recognizes there are ways the reports can be improved. In the employment data report, it is difficult, if not impossible, to tell if there are persons classified in multiple categories. The disability employment data are not available because of privacy laws and PMA has not added practices to allow for self-identification that they are reporting. While the GACOR understands this limitation, the disability information would be useful to evaluate compliance with AAEEEO requirements and the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

In contrast to the employment data, the 2014 report for supplier diversity reported a 6.11 percent achievement against a 10 percent goal. In 2013, the agency reported reaching 5.13 percent of its suppliers being diverse. As the benchmark has not been achieved in the last three years, the GACOR suggests this benchmark remain in place at 10 percent for now. It is expected with the standard definition of supplier diversity presented to this assembly, and newer means to collect supplier data, that this benchmark will show improvement for the next round of review of PMA.

The assembly's action regarding the definition of supplier diversity for the agencies of the PC(USA) (another item of business before the 222nd General Assembly (2016)) will be essential in determining what a diverse supplier is for reporting and records keeping.

Overall Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2012 Referral: Item 11-17. Privilege, Power and Polity: The Church as an Employer. Recommendation 2.a.–b. Recommend New Churchwide Goals—From the 220th General Assembly (2012) (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 45, 1103-05 of the CD; pp. 33, 250–251, 1091–93 of the print copy).

The 220th General Assembly (2012) approved the report, Privilege, Power and Polity: The Church as an Employer and in it directed the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) to review all six agencies as to their employment and supplier diversity, measure achievements against the benchmarks established by General Assembly action, and recommend adjusted benchmarks when deemed appropriate. In a response to referral, the 221st General Assembly (2014) set a schedule for those reviews and established a pattern of continuing review on a six-year cycle. The report expressed the hope that each agency would be reviewed independently and the benchmarks tailored to their specific realities. This action reflects the GACOR's efforts to do that work.

The current benchmark of 40/20/10 (40 percent women, 20 percent racial ethnic persons, 10 percent minority vendors) was established before reunion and was reflected in the 195th General Assembly (1983) by its action on the report, Focus Us and Make Us Whole: A Ten-Year Comprehensive Review of Equal Employment Opportunity within the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp 259–97).

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 03-10.

The ACWC advocates the support of the recommended benchmarks for the Office of General Assembly (OGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) as it is noted that the current benchmark of 40 percent women/20 percent racial ethnic persons/10 percent minority vendors was established before reunion and reflected in the 195th General Assembly (1983). The current recommended benchmarks are being made by the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) following their review of three years of OGA’s employment data that revealed a need to guard against a dependency on nonexempt positions to achieve the benchmark goals, and further, that setting the specialized benchmarks challenges the OGA to continue seeking diversity at the level of exempt employees.

For the PMA, GACOR reviewed three years of their employment data, as well, and discovered that the PMA employs significantly fewer men than women in nonexempt positions, and further that significantly less women are employed in exempt positions. The GACOR’s recommended benchmarks will challenge the PMA to retain an inclusive workforce even as it may reduce its workforce, which the ACWC fully supports as we guardedly attend to equality in the workforce and justice for every person. Such equality and justice stems from our Reformed interpretation of scripture whereby each human being is made in the image of God (Imago Dei; Gen. 1:27); Jesus mandated our sensitivity to the least of these first and foremost (Mt. 25:36; Jn. 21:17); and such equity and justice should be modeled by our own denominational headquarter office for others to observe and follow suit.

For both the OGA and the PMA, the recommendation for diverse suppliers remains at 10 percent with the rationale being that this benchmark was achieved once in the last three years (2013), and with newer means to collect supplier data the expectation is for this benchmark to show further improvement in the next review cycle.

Thus, the ACWC strongly encourages the approval of Item 03-10.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 03-10

Comment on Item 03-10—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The 220th General Assembly (2012) gave the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) the responsibility for reviewing affirmative action goals (with respect to employment and purchasing) for its agencies. The General Assembly was clear that this review and ultimate recommendation to the General Assembly for approval would be done in consultation with the agencies, and based on data from the labor market for the agencies:

The 220th General Assembly (2012) directs GACOR to review and recommend revision to the affirmative action goals for employment and purchasing (Supplier Diversity Program) to the General Assembly on a regular and recurring basis, in accordance with their responsibilities in the Churchwide Affirmative Action Plan (AAP) and the Book of Order, G-3.0103.

a. The GACOR shall take into consideration federal Department of Labor statistics on race, ethnicity, and gender in the labor market; race, ethnicity, and gender representation in church membership; and other factors, as appropriate.

b. The GACOR, in consultation with the six General Assembly-related agencies (Board of Pensions, General Assembly Mission Council, Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Foundation, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and Presbyterian Publishing Corporation) and the General Assembly advocacy committees, ACREC and ACWC, shall recommend new churchwide goals to the General Assembly in a six-year cycle, beginning in 2014.

c. The agencies of the General Assembly, including the Board of Pensions (BOP), General Assembly Mission Council (GAMC), Office of General Assembly (OGA), Presbyterian Foundation (Foundation), Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), and Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) shall be held accountable for implementing both affirmative action employment and supplier diversity purchasing goals... (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p 34.)

Since the agencies are to be held accountable for implementing both goals, it is very important that the goals be developed in consultation with the agencies involved and that the revised goals be attainable.

There has been no consultation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency regarding either the labor market data or these specific goal recommendations. The Presbyterian Mission Agency only became aware of the recommended goals once they were posted to PC-Biz, despite multiple efforts by the Presbyterian Mission Agency to be in dialogue with GACOR regarding this work.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency requests that the assembly refer this recommendation to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) so that the General Assembly Committee on Representation can be in dialogue with the Presbyterian Mission Agency regarding the feasibility for success in implementing a new goal that raises the expectation beyond the composition of the local job market, prior to General Assembly consideration.

On Amending Standing Rules B.4. and F.5.d. Concerning the Role of the ACC and PJC When Constitutional Questions Are Considered by the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

The Presbytery of Grand Canyon overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to do the following:

1. Amend Standing Rule B.4.as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“4. Advisory Committee on the Constitution

“During the General Assembly, ~~three~~ five (5) or more members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution [this committee] shall be present at the session of the General Assembly to advise the General Assembly and its Moderator on constitutional matters.”

2. Amend Standing Rule F.5.d. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“d. When the General Assembly is in plenary session, questions that touch upon constitutional matters, including rulings on questions of order involving constitutional matters requested by the Moderator, shall be handled by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution. These questions shall be referred in writing by the Moderator to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, ~~which shall consider each matter referred and make recommendations directly to the General Assembly through the Moderator (ACC). Action on an issue in question is to be suspended (tabled) to ensure that sufficient time is given the ACC for deliberation on each issue in question as to its timeliness; to ascertain what effect it would have on the whole church; and, to ascertain its adherence to the scriptural tenets of the denomination. Once a recommendation is rendered to the Moderator, it can then be placed before the plenary body for action. The Moderator may continue the plenary session for the conduct of other business of the assembly during this period of deliberation by the ACC.~~”

Rationale

It seems obvious that some changes need to be made in the General Assembly’s Standing Rules so that they more clearly and explicitly define the governing procedures and express the scriptural basis upon which our denomination was ordained.

Understanding that recommendations of the Advisory Committee of the Constitution (ACC), which become authoritative interpretations (AI) when passed by the General Assembly, commissioners not only carry with them the authority of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) but also become effective immediately. Nevertheless, they should not be enacted in haste. The importance of such action and its effect upon the numerous individual church bodies requires much thought and prayerful deliberation in order to prevent the abuse of power by a few.

The commissioners to General Assembly must have the ability to clearly understand the implications resulting from their support of an authoritative interpretation (AI), the rationale of the issues placed before them, and the process by which an AI is both rendered and implemented. The existing procedure has a tendency to be self-serving and does not provide for transparency. The ability of the permanent judiciary committee to issue a stay of enforcement of an enacted AI is essential to protecting the integrity and the credibility of the Presbyterian denomination.

The current rules for amending the Book of Order by a simple majority vote of one General Assembly and a simple majority of the presbyteries has fostered the instability of the church’s Constitution. The result of this condition has led to both the loss of support for the work we are commissioned to achieve and a decline in the denomination’s membership.

Concurrence to Item 03-11 from the Presbytery of de Cristo.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 03-11

Advice on Item 03-11—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

While the ACC has no mandate to consider changes to the Standing Rules, because the proposed changes directly affect the ACC, it is deemed appropriate to provide limited communication on these matters (Standing Rule A.7a(1)).

1. Standing Rule B.4. would be amended to provide for the presence of five, instead of three, members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) during plenary sessions of the General Assembly. Although the ACC discerns no compelling reason for this amendment, should commissioners decide this number is appropriate, the ACC finds no constitutional bar to this action.

2. Standing Rule F.5. would be amended to require “suspension” of General Assembly action on any issue referred to the ACC while the ACC considers the matter and presents its advice to the General Assembly Moderator. The term suspension is inaccurate. If the assembly desires to enact this change, the appropriate term is to “postpone” the issue under consideration. Should commissioners decide this postponement is appropriate, the ACC finds no constitutional bar to this action.

Standing Rule F.5. would be further amended to require the ACC to consider the item’s “[a] timeliness, [b] to ascertain what effect an issue would have on the whole church; and [c] its adherence to the scriptural tenets. The ACC examines amendments for consistency with other provisions of the Constitution. Providing interpretation of scripture or identifying scriptural tenets is beyond the ACC’s scope of authority (G-6.04).

If the assembly decides it is necessary to provide instructions to the ACC during its consideration of an issue, it is the advice of the ACC to omit the proposed instructions and use the constitutional language “examine the issue for clarity and consistency of language and for compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution” (G-6.04b). Anything beyond this is properly determined through the collective discernment of the assembly.

Comment on Item 03-11—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly respectfully advises the assembly to disapprove Item 03-11, on amending Standing Rules B.4. and F.5. concerning the role of the ACC and PJC when constitutional questions are considered by the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It also regularly reviews the Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

COGA finds that each of the recommendations could potentially hinder the work of the General Assembly.

With respect to the first recommendation contained in this item, currently three members of the ACC are required to be present when the assembly is in session. In practice, most, if not all, the members of the ACC are present when the assembly in plenary is considering business of a constitutional nature. To increase the number of ACC members who are required to be present when the assembly is in session limits the flexibility of the ACC and the assembly, and could prove poor financial stewardship by requiring that a larger number of ACC member be present when no business of a constitutional nature is being considered by the assembly.

COGA is concerned that the second recommendation in this item would unnecessarily interfere with the completion of business during an assembly. The ACC has generally been very effective in answering constitutional questions while debate continues during meetings of the assembly. Many such questions are routine or simply seek amplification of previous written comments of the ACC. If time for deliberation is required, the ACC is capable of requesting a recess of the meeting or delay in consideration of that item of business. Therefore, COGA does not believe Recommendation 2 would serve the assembly well. (COGA notes, however, that to bring the Standing Rule in accord with normal practice at the assembly, a change to the Standing Rules removing the requirement that request for advice from the ACC be made in writing, as opposed to verbally, by the Moderator would be appropriate.)

[The assembly approved Item 03-12. See pp. 12, 28, 29.]

The General Assembly Committee on Representation recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve the document, “A Standard Definition of Supplier Diversity,” as found in Appendix A below.

Rationale

This recommendation is in response to the following referral: 2014 Referral: 09-19, Recommendation 1.a.–b. Direct the GACOR to Convene a Table with Leaders, Designated by the Six Agencies for the Purpose of Developing a Standard Definition of Supplier Diversity for the PC(USA), and Any Related Terms or Criteria Necessary; Revise Any Appropriate Manuals and Guidelines; Report Back to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 735–37)

The 221st General Assembly (2014) referred Item 09-19 to the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) and directed them to involve all six agencies in the development of a standard definition of supplier diversity. The definition is intended to be helpful to agencies in determining what spends are to be tracked and how to determine if a supplier qualifies as a diverse supplier.

The table included two representatives each from the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), one representative each from Board of Pensions (BOP), the Foundation (FDN), and the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., (PILP), and three members of GACOR. The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation declined a seat at the table citing a small staff and limited application to their agency, confirming they will abide by the definition approved by the assembly.

Each agency reports to GACOR annually regarding their use of diverse suppliers and the relative spend to total spend. The reporting was imprecise and, in consultations, there were confusions among agencies and the committee as to what was being asked. Item 09-19 resulted from that process and is intended to provide clarity.

The attached document was a result of more than a year of consultations among the designated representatives of the agencies and members of the GACOR. The definition had wide consultation and participation. Adjustments to the descriptions of supplier categories were made with consultation. Consulting partners were Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC), Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), and racial ethnic caucuses and councils of the PC(USA). Significant attention was paid to providing guidance for diverse supplier group identification while also reflecting the particular context of the PC(USA) and its practices. All racial group designations are imperfect and contested. The ones that appear in this definition were considered carefully.

Appendix A

Standard Definition for Supplier Diversity

Diverse Supplier

A diverse supplier is a for-profit enterprise located in the United States or its trust territories, which is owned, operated, and controlled by women, persons with disabilities, or minoritized racial group members guided by definitions in this document and in materials from the National Minority Supplier Development Council (NMSDC), Women's Business Enterprise Council (WBEC), and Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

Ownership by diverse supplier group members means the business is at least 50 percent owned by such members or, in the case of a publicly owned business, at least 50 percent of the stock is owned by one or more such members. The management and daily operations are controlled by those members of underrepresented groups.

Diverse Supplier Groups

For the purposes of identification of diverse supplier groups, the following categories of difference are included¹ in this definition:

Black/African American/African: Persons originating from or descended from Africa.

Asian/Pacific Islander/South Asian: Persons originating or descended from Japan, China, Indonesia, Malaysia, Taiwan, Korea, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia, Myanmar, the Philippines, Thailand, Hawaii, Samoa, Guam, the U.S. Trust Territories of the Pacific or the Northern Marianas; Tibet, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, and India.

Hispanic/Latino-a: Persons originating or descended from any races, cultures, and nationalities from Latin American countries (Mexico, Central America, South America, and the Caribbean) that were once under either Spanish or Roman rule, and who speak Spanish (the dominant language), Portuguese, or other indigenous languages. The term Hispanic also includes Iberians and other Spanish-language speakers.

Native American/Alaska Native/Indigenous: Persons descended from American Indian, Eskimo, or Aleut, and regarded as such by the community of which the person claims to be a part.

Middle Eastern/North African: Persons originating from or having ancestry from these countries: Egypt, Libya, Algeria, Morocco, Tunisia, Sudan, Armenia, Kurdistan, Bahrain, Cyprus, Iran, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Oman, Palestine, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Turkey, United Arab Emirates, and Yemen.

Multiracial: Persons descended from two or more minoritized racial groups listed.²

Women-Owned Business: A business that is owned, operated, and controlled by a woman or women.

Persons with Disabilities: Persons who qualify are described in the Americans with Disabilities Act, section 12102.

Supplier Categories

In accounting systems, a supplier or vendor is any individual, business, or organization that receives payment. All suppliers/vendors in the accounting system will not be included in the supplier diversity report based on the definition of a supplier. This definition will guide the agencies in determining what counts in the total amounts reported.

03 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

There are suppliers in the PC(USA) accounting system that meet the diverse supplier group criteria but the type of payment made is not a purchase but a reimbursement, grant, transfer of funds, etc. It would be too labor intensive to review each transaction to determine the type of payment for all records. As these suppliers are repeated, their records will be reviewed and updated. Building better practices going forward, these contracts will capture supplier diversity information.

The following supplier categories³ are included:

- Travel
- Meetings/Conferences
- Printing
- Office Supplies
- Technology
- Building Services
- Relocation Moving and Storage
- Accounting Services
- Insurance
- Legal Services
- Independent Contractors

Payments to independent contractors could be for services rendered or reimbursement for expenses. As the database is updated to reflect those contractors who fit within the definition of diverse supplier, these contracts will be included in the reporting process.

The following supplier categories are excluded:

- Financial Institutions
A significant number of transactions with financial institutions are wire transfers or other movement of funds, not actual payments to the bank for services. To determine which transactions are for service provided requires reviewing individual transactions to determine type of payments.
- Schools/Universities
- Government Agencies
- Nonprofit Organizations
- Professional Associations
- Utilities

Payment Threshold⁴

The minimum payment threshold will be $500 per year, per supplier.

All criteria in this definition must be met to consider a record as included in the reporting of an agency's supplier diversity.

Rationale/Background

When the 220th General Assembly approved the report, "Privilege, Power and Policy: The Church as Employer," in 2012, it shifted language and asked for modernized approaches to AAEEEO and supplier diversity (formerly called minority vendors). In living into the referrals from that action and following assembly actions, it became clear that there were differing operative definitions informing the agencies' reporting of diverse suppliers. Those differences made receiving useful data all but impossible. The 221st General Assembly (2014) directed that the agencies work with the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) to establish a standard definition for the PC(USA). This was one step in the process of simplifying procedures and practices of accountability.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is an employer and contracting entity. Employers in the United States commonly rely on the NMSDC and its standards for identifying certified diverse suppliers. They provide the standard and maintain databases, both national and regional for suppliers. The NMSDC-MBE uses four federal categories for persons from minoritized racial groups. This definition follows that practice and uses the NMSDC as the frame. Likewise the WBEC also provides a certification process for women-owned businesses, and manages a member database to refer to suppliers who have completed it. The agency representatives advocated for these sources to provide the framing for the standard definition as it provides resources in member databases for finding certified suppliers.

Adjustments to the racial descriptions of diverse supplier groups were made to reflect the use of these designations in the church and its practices. The PC(USA) determined that Middle Eastern is a category of difference in our life together that has meaning and protection. PC(USA) recognizes the Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus, designates program staff for congregational support, and tracks the social identity in its internal statistics. With regard to employment, there are added complications. Middle Eastern is not recognized as a separate identity under Title 7 of the 1964 Civil Rights Act (and its subsequent revisions), nor in the EEOC1, a form used by employers to report equal employment opportunity. There is no known external certifying body at this time that tracks Middle Eastern ownership for suppliers.

This adds difficulty in externally authenticating diverse suppliers in this regard. For now, reliance will be on voluntary self-identifications shared. Because this definition serves the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) agencies, it is added here.

It has been almost three decades since a Minority Vendor Policy was adopted (1987) by the PC(USA). The PMA is bringing a revision to that document to this assembly that limits its scope to PMA. The GACOR is disappointed that they were not adequately included in that revision and consider its revision before the approval of the definition to be premature. Mindful of assembly action, all agencies will need to develop their own supplier diversity policies going forward.

Recognizing that massive social changes have taken place in the U.S.A. in those four decades, the proposed Supplier Diversity definition seeks to update past practices and be relevant with the lives and practices of all those with whom the denomination is engaged in supplier business. The church and its agencies will review and revise policies to reflect updated practices. The GACOR is a mandated and eager partner in this work.

Endnotes

1. Sources used to determine the definition of the following groups are varied. The bulk was taken from NMSDC-MBE (National Minority Supplier Development Council uses an ownership threshold of 51 percent for Minority Business Enterprise (MBE) certification) policy and suggested guidelines for preparing their activity report. Regional NMSDC affiliates maintain databases on suppliers and help companies locate local suppliers. As their brochure states,

The NMSDC affiliate council nearest a company's headquarters conducts the annual certification process to assure that the business is at least 51 percent owned, operated and controlled by minorities: Asian, Black, Hispanic and Native American. Our standardized procedures assure consistent, identical review for the certification of each MBE. Wherever your business interests, NMSDC certification guarantees national recognition. Certified MBEs are listed in the NMSDC national database, which is accessible to corporate members 24 hours a day, every day of the year.

The PC(USA) maintains corporate membership for access to this database. The PC(USA) has identified a wider range of particular racialized identities as protected in our practice (categories tracked in participation, organized in caucuses, supported in programs for congregational support) and that is reflected in this accounting. The definition of women-owned business is sourced from the Women's Business Enterprise Council (WBEC uses an ownership threshold of 51 percent) and the definition of persons with disabilities is sourced from the Americans with Disabilities Act.

2. The PC(USA) uses this category to recognize multiple racial identities of persons. This category is not included in the NMSDC policy, therefore authentication may rely on voluntary self-identification. Agencies should provide a way that suppliers can self-identify these categories for their claimed majority ownership. Coordinating those means and consulting with GACOR is desired.
3. Regarding independent contractors: Agencies do not anticipate that recording this category will have substantial impact on overall percentages reported.
4. Significant preparation time is required in capturing and analyzing the data needed to provide supplier diversity reports. To maintain a manageable process, the minimum payment per supplier is used in determining which suppliers are counted and contribute to calculating the percentages of diverse supplier expenditures.

ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-12

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 03-12 with comments.

When ACREC was asked to weigh in on/consulted regarding the Supplier Diversity Definition, issue was taken with the proposed language “Minoritized Racial Group” as opposed to “Minority Vendor” or “Racial Ethnic Vendor”—language unquestionably more familiar to the people to whom this odd nomenclature is applied. Additionally, questions were raised with GACOR representatives regarding the percentage of racial ethnic employees (as opposed to simply the owners) of businesses seeking to profit from doing business with the agencies and entities of the PC(USA). Finally, inquiries as to whether or not there exists an accurate accounting (data) of dollars spent (“spends”) with racial ethnic vendors/minority vendors in relationship to the total dollars spent by the PC(USA) agencies and other entities for which data could or should be readily available. The ACREC believes these are fair and extremely important issues to raise that have not been satisfactorily addressed.

There was no specific information given explaining the origin of the language decided upon to describe those suppliers formerly known as Minority Vendors. Though the racial ethnic caucuses were consulted regarding language around their particular constituents' racial categorization, ACREC has five members who represent their particular racial ethnic caucuses with no knowledge of any consultation with GACOR regarding the renaming of “Minority Vendor.” Further, no reason has been given for not having disaggregated data for dollars spent with minority vendors or the racial ethnic percentage of employees in any given for-profit vendor doing business with the PC(USA) agencies and other entities, except offering that those are daunting tasks requiring additional human resources. ACREC recognizes the challenges GACOR has faced in acquiring and organizing such data and would advise that the agencies be required to offer this particular disaggregated data to GACOR, even if it takes some time to implement a system that will make this process less cumbersome for the agencies.

The ACREC recommends approval of this item, but with the above reservations and the hope that some work can be done to incorporate language that will address our particular concerns.

ACWC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 03-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 03-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 03-12.

We appreciate the level of collaboration and consultation that went into this definition. By being intentional with this process, our church has reaffirmed the importance of such policies and their impact on our communities.

Joint COGA/PMA Budget Proposals for General Assembly Per Capita Budgets 2016–2018

1. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMA) recommend that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) incorporate into the Minutes the Comparative Balance Sheet for 2015 and 2014, along with the 2015 Actual Performance in the Per Capita Statement of Activities.

[See oga-pma-budget-charts.pdf, Attachment A—Comparative Balance Sheet and Attachment B—Per Capita Statement of Activities.]

2. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMA) recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016)

a. Approve the Revised 2016 General Assembly Per Capita Expense Budget totaling [~~$12,434,777~~] [$12,430,897 including $13,120 in new Financial Implications approved by this General Assembly];

b. Approve the total Expenditure Budget for 2017 totaling [~~$12,747,185~~] [$12,892,388, including $262,203 in new financial implications] and for 2018 totaling [~~$12,735,784~~] [$12,992,367, including $270,583 in new financial implications].

c. Approve a per capita apportionment rate of [~~$7.33~~] [$7.50] per active member for 2017 [including 17 cents for new financial implications], and a rate of [~~$7.55~~] [$7.73] to be effective for 2018 [including 18 cents for new financial implications].

3. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMA) recommend that the 22nd General Assembly (2016) approve that an amount of $1,365,540 be designated from the 2017 per capita budget (about half the cost of the General Assembly meeting), and be reserved for use in the year of the General Assembly meeting (2018).

[See oga-pma-budget-charts.pdf, Attachment B—Per Capita Statement of Activities, Budget Proposals 2014–2015 and see also Attachment B1—Per Capita Statement of Cash Flow 2012–2016.]

4. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMA) recommend that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve the attached allocation of designated funds for OGA, and PMA task forces, totaling $1,830,588 for 2017[5] [and] $2,071,838 for 2018.

[See oga-pma-budget-charts.pdf, Attachment C.]

BUDGET PERFORMANCE 2015

Revenue

The OGA had an approved funding source budget of $12,583,937. The actual funding was $12,072,159. This $511,778 negative variance is due to (1) per capita under budget by $176,000 (1.4 percent), (2) investment income under budget by $144,000, and (3) unrealized losses, not budgeted, on an investment of $189,000. Overall funding has declined 4.1 percent from the expected budget.

Expenses

The OGA’s expense budget was $12,851,570 and actual was $11,897,168. This provides a positive variance of $954,402 or 7.4 percent less than allowed by the approved budget. The OGA continues to exercise fiscal restraint in use of funds to provide its mandated services. It is a responsibility taken very seriously at all levels of the OGA. This is a trend of positive performance that stretched over many years. Expenses were under budget in all ministry areas as well as in the PMA allocation. (NOTE: The PMA expenses were verified with PMA fiscal leadership as accurate. It is possible that yearend adjustment could impact this estimate). The one cost that will exceed budget is the estimate for uncollectable per capita apportionment. The 2015 budget was $1,000,000. The actual needed to properly set the yearend receivable reserve is $1,200,000.

Net to Reserve

The OGA had a budget loss of $267,633 before any use of reserves. The year 2015 is expected to provide a net surplus of $181,294 or a positive budget variance of $448,927. The slight surplus accrues to reserves.

OGA BUDGET REQUEST REVISED 2016 AND PROPOSED 2017 AND 2018

Assumptions

2016 Revised Budget

The 2016 revised budget was approved by the General Assembly. The OGA is requesting the following budget modifications:

- Reduce OGA 2016 budgeted non-salary expenses as agreed to by OGA Leadership by $382,550. The expense is detailed in the attached budget presentation in the account detail section.
- Reinstate the records manager position at a grade 18 that was eliminated in 2013 as a result of the OGA staffing restructure. The OGA recommends that the salary is a component of the Shared Services account as this position serves all the agencies in a unique manner.

Rationale: The lack of this position located at the OGA home office has reduced the identification and collection of records from the PC(USA) agencies located in the Louisville area. PHS and Gradye Parsons made several attempts to solicit cooperation from the agencies as part of a voluntary program. This has proved unsuccessful. The Stated Clerk and PHS believe the lack of records including important electronic records are not properly saved for future use. Further, OGA is concerned about the legal jeopardy of not having these records given the issues facing the national church and its agencies.

- All other previously approved assumptions remain the same for the 2016 Per Capita Budget

2017 Budget Assumptions

- Increase the 2016 per capita rate of $7.12 by 3 percent to $7.33.
- Membership would decline by 75,000 members.
- Increase staff salaries by $1,000 each.
- Benefit increase of 1.5 percent. (NOTE: This could change downward when we understand the impact of the new Board of Pensions (BOP) benefit options proposal.)
- Continue the projected non-salary cost reductions started in 2016. This would yield approx. 3 percent in projected saving ($312,000) in 2017.

The projected costs for OGA operations for 2017 are $12,647,188. Projected funding is $11,770,982. This would require the use of $876,203 in reserves. Without the per capita increase and the expense reductions, the needed reserves would be $1.5 million dollars.

2018 Budget Assumptions

- Increase the per capita 2017 rate from $7.33 to $7.55 (3 percent).
- Membership would decline by 75,000.
- Increase staff salaries by $1,000 each.
- Benefit increase of 1.5 percent. (NOTE: This could change downward when we understand the impact of the new Board of Pensions (BOP) benefit options proposal.)
- Continue the projected non-salary cost reductions started in 2016. This would yield approximately 3 percent in projected saving ($320,000) in 2018. The projected 2018 OGA expenses for operations are $12,738,784. Projected funding is budgeted at $11,551,195. This will require the use of $1,187, 589 in reserves to break even. The reserve need without the per capita rate increase and cost savings is $1.86 million dollars.

DISCUSSION

The OGA, like as other agencies, is faced with declining funding. In 2013, OGA reduced staffing and costs. The approved 2014 budget was $14,328,000 in expenses. The OGA is proposing 2018 costs at $12,738,000. The 2014 budget adjusted for inflation at 2 percent would be $15,540,000. This compared to our proposal calculates the real dollar costs reductions that started in 2013 and will continue thru 2018 as $2,802,000.

The OGA leaders and staff worked hard to identify areas for efficiencies. We reviewed no fewer than seven different scenarios of possible budget outcomes. We have responded to declining funding aggressively without proposing to reduce services. We also believe that more staff reductions at this time would compromise our ability to effectively serve the church as we are mandated. Therefore, we have not included any staff reduction in this proposed budget. We are requesting that the per capita rate increase modestly by 3 percent for 2017 and 2018. No single issue was debated more thoroughly. Our proposal of cost reductions, per capita rate increase, and the use of reserves, provides OGA with time to participate in the potential reorganization discussions and further discern its own delivery of services. We understand that further reductions might become necessary in the future. We strongly believe that now is not that time. Our proposed budgets ensure that OGA will meet the reserve requirement of 30 percent of annual expenses thru 2012 as you can see in the statement of cash flow. [See oga-pma-budget-charts.pdf, Attachment B1—Statement of Cash Flow.] Without the per capita rate increase and cost reductions we would fail to meet this requirement by the end of 2017.

[Comment: We must be accountable as the body of Christ, for that which is done in our name. The creation and maintenance of a safe, supportive, non-abusive environment for all of our participants in all that we do must be and will be priority for all Presbyterians as we work to be God's people and do God's work. We do this out of compassion for Kris Schondelmeyer and all other victims who have suffered abuse in the Presbyterian church. We further applaud Kris and his family for their courage, which has moved us to address this imperative subject.]

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve and implement the “Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Child/Youth/Vulnerable Adult Protection Policy and Its Procedures” as the General Assembly’s child protection policy mandated in G-3.0106.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) CHILD/YOUTH/VULNERABLE ADULT PROTECTION POLICY AND ITS PROCEDURES

POLICY APPLICATION STATEMENT

It is the policy of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and all entities of the General Assembly that all church members, church officers, nonmember employees and/or contractors, and volunteers of congregations, councils, and entities of the church are to maintain the strongest sense of integrity, safety, nurturing, and care involving all interactions with children, youth, and vulnerable adults. This policy applies to all General Assembly entity sponsored activities that involve children, youth, and vulnerable adults.

POLICY RATIONALE

The implementation and documentation of a Child/Youth/Vulnerable Protection Policy strives to reduce the risk of abuse and neglect for the following reasons:

- Children, youth, and vulnerable adults are a gift from God and the Church has a divine mandate to provide for their safety and nurturing. The Church is called to be a place that reflects the open arms of Jesus. In Matthew 19:14, Jesus says, “Let the little children come to me.” The Church is to be, at all levels of council and in all entities, a place of safety and nurture reflective of the arms of Christ.
- Any type of abuse involving children, youth, or vulnerable adults has lasting and devastating effects on the life of the victim/survivor. It is the call of the Church to be a life-giving entity of Christ’s healing and hope for community and individuals, not an entity that brings harm and hurt.
- The larger Church suffers with the victim/survivor and his or her family when abuse and neglect occurs. The Church is crippled by the hurt, pain, and distrust that accompanies abuse. Not only does the Church lose its credibility at all levels, it also suffers considerable financial loss and loss of integrity. More importantly, in instances of child, youth, or vulnerable adult abuse within the Church, there is immeasurable spiritual, psychological, emotional, and physical harm perpetrated that woefully cripples God’s call on the Church.

- The Book of Order states, “The congregation as a whole, on behalf of the Church universal, assumes responsibility for nurturing the baptized person in the Christian life,” and Presbyterians believe this baptismal commitment to be a serious one, understanding it to apply to all in the church’s care, including children, youth, and vulnerable adults (Book of Order W-2.3013).

- Children and youth are not only persons of care and service in the church, but they are also co-recipients of the graces and love of God. Jesus exemplified this in the Gospel of Mark 10:15–16 when he urged his followers to receive the kingdom of God as a little child. And he specifically takes up the children into his arms and blesses them. So also the Church, as the body of Christ, is to be the presence of Christ’s love, in the same way taking up all children and youth into its arms and blessing them; providing for them a safe, thriving, and nurturing environments in which to grow in every way.

DEFINITIONS

Each state has its own statutes regarding what is defined as child/youth/vulnerable adult abuse. This policy advises all sponsoring councils and entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to consider and be familiar with state statutes pertaining to the location of each event/activity.

The following is a comprehensive list of definitions of terms and their intended use in this particular policy. For the purpose of this policy:

Child: A child will be defined as a person between the ages of 0–11.

Youth: A youth will be defined as a person between the ages of 12–17.

Minor: A minor is any child or youth 0–17 years-old.

Child/Youth Worker: Any person, volunteer or paid staff or contractor, who participates at any level at General Assembly entity sponsored events or activities involving children and/or youth.

Vulnerable Adult: Any person eighteen-years-old or older without the developmental or cognitive capacity to consent.

Vulnerable Adult Abuse: Any act or failure to act that results in the physical, sexual, psychological, or emotional mistreatment, neglect, or exploitation of a vulnerable adult.

Child/Youth Abuse: Any act or failure to act that results in the physical, sexual, psychological, or emotional mistreatment, neglect, or exploitation of a child or youth.

Sexual Abuse: In the Book of Order, sexual abuse is defined as, “Sexual abuse of another person is any offense involving sexual conduct in relation to (1) any person under the age of eighteen years or anyone over the age of eighteen years without the mental capacity to consent; or (2) any person when the conduct includes force, threat, coercion, intimidation, or misuse of ordered ministry or position” (Book of Order, D-10.0401c).

Misuse of technology: The use of technology that results in the harassing or abusing of a child/youth. This includes using technology to send suggestive message and images to a child or youth. Adults should not have any technological contact with a child or youth that is not either preapproved by the child/youth’s legal guardian with a signed waiver, or the contact is on an open public medium, such as a church website or other social media program.

PMA: Presbyterian Mission Agency.

OGA: Office of General Assembly.

Safe Child Response Team: The Safe Child Response Team is a team comprised of a minimum of three members of or appointed by the sponsoring council or entity of the General Assembly who are specifically trained to respond to allegations and reports of child, youth, or vulnerable adult abuse at General Assembly entity sponsored activities. These teams must be readily available to be contacted and used at all General Assembly entity sponsored events.

Sponsoring Council or Entity: Any council or entity of the General Assembly within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that is tasked with the responsibility of planning events and activities for children, youth, or vulnerable adults.

SCREENING, TRAINING, AND BACKGROUND CHECKS

A child/youth worker, whether on a paid staff, contractor, or volunteer basis, shall be subject to:

1. The organizing council’s receipt of a completed, signed, and approved application and background check authorization forms, including a signed form verifying the event policy has been read. The application should include a minimum of two references.

2. All child/youth workers must be at least eighteen-years-old and four years older than the oldest youth whom they are serving.

3. The applicant's consent to a criminal background check. The sponsoring council or entity must consult with the insurance company through which they have coverage to determine what background checks are appropriate for their particular event. The sponsoring council or entity should cover the costs of the background checks for all child/youth workers. These checks shall be run no more than six months prior to the event. (This time restraint is also at the discretion of the organizing council's insurance company's requests. Child/Youth workers who participate annually in events may only be required to have one background check per calendar year, depending on insurance company standards.)

4. All child/youth workers, paid, contracted, or volunteer, must participate in training sometime within the year prior to the event. The training is to be provided by the sponsoring council or entity and shall cover the event child/youth protection policy thoroughly as well as methods of abuse prevention and a detailed plan of reporting. The sponsoring council or entity may contract with others to provide these trainings. These trainings shall further cover:

- What constitutes child/youth/vulnerable adult abuse and neglect.
- How to recognize signs and symptoms of abuse and neglect.
- State laws concerning definitions of abuse and reporting.
- Mandatory criminal background checks and the security of those files.
- Explanation of the importance of the application and screening processes.
- Appropriate boundaries with children and youth, especially regarding adult/child/youth ratios, transportation, and use of technology.
- If an overnight event is planned, discussions of boundaries involving appropriate sleeping arrangements and restroom/shower facilities use shall be discussed.
- The presence of a Safe Child Response Team at each event and how to contact them.
- All paid employees working directly with children or youth at any General Assembly entity sponsored events must be certified in first aid and CPR.
- Other related topics.

5. No person may serve as a child/youth worker who has a conviction on his/her record of certain felonies or misdemeanors, including, but not limited to, any of the following:

- Criminal homicide;
- Aggravated assault;
- Crimes related to the possession, use, or sale of drugs or controlled substances;
- Sexual abuse;
- Sexual assault;
- Injury to a youth;
- Incest;
- Indecency with a youth;
- Inducing sexual conduct or sexual performance of a youth;
- Possession or promotion of child pornography;
- The sale, distribution, or display of harmful material to a minor;
- Employment harmful to youth;
- Abandonment or endangerment of a youth;
- Kidnapping or unlawful restraint;
- Public lewdness or indecent exposure; and enticement of a youth;
- Any crime that involves sexual misconduct or sexual abuse, particularly if it involves misconduct or abuse with a minor;

03 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

- Any crime that involves misuse of technology for sexual purposes, such as collecting or distributing photographs of minors who are naked or in sexual or inappropriate poses (child pornography);
- Any crime that involves the use of force, such as assault or endangerment;
- Any crime that involves abduction and kidnapping;
- Any crime that involves drinking and driving, such as driving while intoxicated.

In addition, if a council or General Assembly entity is aware that a child/youth worker has a prior conviction for one of the aforementioned crimes or a related crime, the child/youth worker shall automatically be ineligible to attend a child/youth event in any capacity.

6. Whenever a General Assembly entity organizes an event for minors for which the agency will invite minors from other church councils who will be supervised by child/youth workers, the councils who selects the youth workers shall:

- a. Not send a person to act as a child/youth worker whom the council knows has violated the provisions of the Book of Order or policy of a local congregation or presbytery pertaining to sexual misconduct or child/youth protection.
- b. Not send a person to act as a child/youth worker for minors when that person is also scheduled to work at the event.
- c. Require councils at all levels of church life who are assisting in organizing General Assembly entity events for minors, or sending child/youth workers to these events to abide by the same screening, training, and background check standards mandated in this policy for the General Assembly and its entities.

7. Whenever a General Assembly entity organizes an event for minors that invites minors from councils who will be supervised by child/youth workers, the General Assembly entity shall:

- a. Provide guidance to the councils that are sending child/youth workers about best practices for securing child/youth workers and eligibility requirements.
- b. Provide guidance to the councils that are sending child/youth workers concerning the requirement that the council perform and pay for background checks for potential child/youth workers and how to evaluate the background check for offenses that would disqualify a person from being a child/youth worker with minors.
- c. Provide guidance to the councils on when to perform the background checks and with what background check provider.
- d. Identify someone on the organizing council of the General Assembly entity/event to be the designated recipient of background checks from councils and train that person:
 - i. To review every background check received;
 - ii. To identify criminal convictions on background checks that should disqualify a person from being a child/youth worker;
 - iii. To notify a council if the staffer believes the council has erred in selecting a child/youth worker whose background check indicates that the person should not act as a child/youth worker;
 - iv. Report to the General Assembly entity sponsor of the event of each potentially disqualifying background check and related concerns so that a formal decision can be made to inform the council that the person whose background check is in question is not eligible to attend the event as a child/youth worker.

CONFIDENTIALITY OF RECORDS

The sponsoring council or entity shall maintain all child/youth worker applications, results of background checks, and related information in confidential, secured files.

REPORTING

Each sponsoring General Assembly entity will publicize a procedure for reporting any prohibited actions and have copies available at all times in a public place at the event. Anyone suspecting or having knowledge of a violation of child abuse may report such violation to any leader of the General Assembly entity sponsored event. Any child or youth who suspects or has knowledge of any type of minor abuse is invited to share the knowledge with any adult leader of the General Assembly entity sponsored event. Anyone who has knowledge or suspicion of child/youth abuse should be made aware that state law requires the immediate reporting of such abuse to the civil authorities. Any adult leader should report such violation to any Stated Clerk or Associate or Assistant Stated Clerk of the General Assembly or any other leader designated by the sponsoring General Assembly entity of the event. Any person receiving information under this paragraph shall share that information immediately with the designated response team.

SAFE CHILD RESPONSE TEAM

At every event or activity for minors planned by a council or entity of the General Assembly, a Safe Child Response Team must be trained by the sponsoring council or entity and be present and available throughout the entire duration of the event. This team should be comprised of at least three members, staff or appointed by the sponsoring council or entity staff. An attorney chosen and secured by the General Assembly entity shall be on-call for all events. The response team will familiarize itself with the terms of this policy as well as established procedures under the Rules of Discipline, Book of Order of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for responding to complaint(s) of alleged child/youth abuse against any teaching elder, ruling elder, employee, or volunteer in a leadership position(s) with the sponsoring entity and any events they may sponsor.

The Safe Child Response Team shall have the following responsibilities in response to allegations of child/youth or vulnerable adult abuse or neglect incurred against any child/youth worker or event participant:

1. Immediately provide for the safety of the alleged victim(s) involved.
2. If the report alleges abuse or harassment of a minor, the response team will:
 - a. immediately ensure the allegation is reported to the civil authorities under state law;
 - b. immediately notify the parents or guardian of the minor;
 - c. notify the insurance company of the allegation and that no investigation has yet occurred.
3. Make immediate decisions concerning the temporary removal of the individual accused from any contact with children or youth pending an investigation and/or removal of the accused from the event until a resolution of the allegations has occurred.
4. Notify designated people at the General Assembly entity immediately of the report of alleged abuse/neglect including an attorney who is on-call throughout the duration of each event, who must be previously secured by the General Assembly entity in case of such allegations during each sponsored event. Any possible media requests will be handled by a designated person or office with advice from the on-call attorney, taking care to safeguard the privacy and confidentiality of all involved.
5. Consult the OGA and PMA about resources available for victims of the alleged abuse prior to each event and have those resources readily available at every event. This will provide victims and their families immediate resources that may aid in the particular spiritual, psychological, or emotional needs and trauma that arise from the devastation of abuse.
6. If the report is against a teaching elder, the response team shall send a written statement of allegation to the stated clerk of the presbytery that holds the teaching elder's membership. This written statement of allegation shall trigger the formation of an investigating committee under the Rules of Discipline of the Book of Order: The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Part II.
7. If the report is against a ruling elder, the response team will notify the session of membership that an allegation of offense has been received against an elder that triggers the formation of an investigating committee under the Rules of Discipline of the Book of Order: The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Part II.
8. If the report is against an employee of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corp., the response team will notify the person(s) or committee responsible for supervision of the employee, Human Resources, and Legal Services. The response team will request a follow-up report from the supervisory body of the outcome of any subsequent investigation or discipline.
9. If the report is against an employee of sponsoring council or entity other than Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corp., the response team will notify the person(s) or committee responsible for supervision of the employee. The response team will request a follow-up report from the supervisory body of the outcome of any subsequent investigation or discipline.
10. If the report is against a volunteer, or nonmember of the PC(USA), the response team will request that the General Assembly entity appoint an investigating committee of three persons to initiate an investigation of the allegations in order to:
 - a. gather any statements of abuse from those making the report, including any information from the Safety Response Team, and any party to the abuse;

- b. gather any information from the person who was accused of abuse;
- c. make written determinations and take actions appropriate to resolve the matter including, but not limited to, making recommendations for prevention as well as response.

11. Provide pastoral counseling for the principal parties involved (accuser(s), possible victim(s), accused, family members).

12. A written summary of any proceedings in such cases will be maintained by the General Assembly entities.

13. Any person bringing a report of abuse or assisting in investigating will not be adversely affected in terms and conditions of employment, church membership or affiliation, or otherwise discriminated against or discharged.

MANDATORY EVENT RULES FOR WORKING WITH CHILDREN AND YOUTH

The sponsoring council or entity of the General Assembly shall ensure that the following measures be in place and actions taken for each event or activity involving children and youth:

1. Two-adult rule: Two non-related adults must always be present in groups of children and youth. The only exception is if an emergency situation deems this not immediately possible. All child and youth workers and volunteers must be a minimum of four years older than the age group they lead or supervise.

2. Ratios: The adult to child ratio for all child-related events/activities is 2:10. The adult to youth ratio for all youth-related events/activities is 2:17. There shall also be one adult of each gender when there is one or more minors of each gender in a group. Only in emergency situations may the ratios and gender diversity be compromised.

3. View Windows and Open Doors: When minors and adult workers or volunteers are in a room, if the door is closed, the door must have a view window installed. If no view window is installed in the door, the door must remain open at all times.

4. Adult workers/caregivers should respect the privacy of the children to whom they provide care. Responsible use of digital devices and cell phones is required in all situations (ex. Taking age-appropriate photographs and movies, not taking photographs of minors who are not fully clothed. Adults and minors are required at all times to wear appropriate attire.

5. Age appropriate training to children and youth should be provided regarding behavior that should be reported to caregiver or leader of the event.

6. Transportation: All adult drivers at child/youth events must have proper licensure and insurance on file with the organizing council. All vehicles used must have seat belts for the driver and each passenger. No minor under eighty-five pounds may sit in the front seat of any vehicle. All drivers transporting minors and vulnerable adults must be over the age of twenty-five and must be informed that if their vehicle is used, their insurance would be primary if an accident occurs. If a charter bus is rented, or any outside carrier is contracted, the company hired must ensure criminal background checks on their drivers. Each vehicle must follow the ratio rules noted in point 2 in this section. Lastly, no minor may be a driver at any event or activity (this includes golf carts at events).

7. Forms: The legal guardians of each minor must provide the appropriate information and medical forms for each activity/event. The information form should include all contacts for legal guardians and the medical form must include a copy of the minor's health insurance card. Further consent forms must be signed by legal guardians for any off campus events. Any photos at the event that are used in social media or published material by the organizing council must be released by a signed consent form from a participant's legal guardian as well as the minor. All such forms must be stored at the event site, in a secure place with restricted access.

8. Each event/activity must ensure that rules are gone over with participants at each event/activity. These rules shall include but are not limited to a code of conduct specific to the event/activity, as well as a list prohibited and expected behaviors for the specific event/activity. The code of conduct and prohibited and expected behaviors list should be given in written form to each participant and legal guardians, as well as discussed thoroughly at the beginning of the event/activity.

9. Children/youth and adults must maintain different showering and grooming hours at events in which bathrooms and shower rooms are shared in housing. These hours must be posted on site.

10. Adults should never share sleeping quarters with children or youth. The exception to this rule is for the occasional legal caregiver/child situation or parent/child situation. If a child/youth requires a caregiver/parent, written permission must be given and kept on record from the child/youth's parent/legal guardian.

11. All volunteers and employees at any General Assembly entity sponsored events must also abide by a code of conduct that emphasizes the following prohibited behaviors. Some of these prohibited behaviors include but are not restricted to:

- a. Display of sexual affection toward a child.
- b. Use of profanity or off-color jokes.
- c. Discussion of sexual encounters with or around children or in any way involving children in personal problems or issues.
- d. Dating or becoming “romantically” involved with children (under the age of eighteen).
- e. Using or being under the influence of alcohol or illegal drugs in the presence of children.
- f. Possessing sexually oriented materials—including printed or online pornography—on church property or property being utilized for a church event.
- g. Having secrets with youth/children.
- h. Staring at or commenting on children’s bodies.
- i. Engaging in inappropriate or unapproved electronic communication with children.
- j. Working one-on-one with children in a private setting.
- k. Abusing youth/children in anyway, including (but not limited to) the following:
 - Physical abuse: hit, spank, shake, slap, unnecessarily restraint.
 - Verbal abuse: degrade, threaten, or curse.
 - Sexual abuse: inappropriately touch, expose oneself, or engage in sexually oriented conversations.
 - Mental abuse: shame, humiliate, act cruelly.
 - Neglect: withhold food, water, shelter.
 - Permit children or youth to engage in the following: hazing, bullying, derogatory name-calling, ridicule, humiliation, or sexual activity.

Social Media—Electronic Communications

General Social Media Policy—No minister, employee, contractor, or volunteer of the General Assembly and its entities shall create or use a media site (Web, Facebook, YouTube, or similar) in the name of or purporting to represent the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) without the explicit written permission of the sponsoring council, General Assembly entity, or event leadership. When clergy or staff, acting in their capacity as a representative of the General Assembly or its entities, lead or coordinate a group activity using social media, each may use only official General Assembly entity sites/channels when they have been made available by the entity of the General Assembly. These may include Web pages, Facebook, e-mail, and similar means.

Social Media Communications

Persons who shall create public pages on behalf of General Assembly entity programs are responsible to monitor communications and to assure that employees and volunteers do not have private (and possibly inappropriate) conversations with children and youth.

Persons having Facebook privileges on behalf of the General Assembly entity shall treat unsolicited communication or “friending” from children or youth under age as an unauthorized text message. No reply may be given except to indicate by a posting that accepting a “friend” invitation by under-age children is a violation of the code of conduct.

If a child or youth reveals abuse or inappropriate interactions with an adult, the person must report this information in the manner of any “suspected abuse.”

When using Facebook to communicate with children or youth, the authorized minister shall inform parents/guardians of each child or youth that the latter is communicating with the person via Facebook, providing the parent/guardian the opportunity to disapprove or to participate in a group.

Social Networking Code of Conduct

Each person who leads using the resources of social media shall apply this Social Networking Code of Conduct:

- Prohibit comments that are, or could be construed by any observer, to be harsh, coercive, threatening, intimidating, shaming, derogatory, demeaning, or humiliating.
- Prohibit sexually oriented conversations or discussions about sexual activities.
- Prohibit private messages between employees and volunteers and children or youth.
- Prohibit posting inappropriate pictures (for example, sexually suggestive, exploitive, or voyeuristic) or inappropriate comments on pictures.
- Provide children, youth, and their parents with this Social Networking Code of Conduct.
- Encourage parents to play a role in monitoring their children's and youth interactions with employees and volunteers.
- Continuously remind children and youth how to interact appropriately through social networking sites.
- Deny participation by individuals who repeatedly violate the code of conduct.

At the institution of the use of social media, the authorized minister shall present this Social Networking Code of Conduct to children or youth and parents/guardians.

SIGNING OF POLICY AND APPLICATION TO SERVE

Each adult engaged in the leadership of a General Assembly entity event shall acknowledge receipt of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Child/Youth/Vulnerable Adult Protection Policy and Its Procedures by signing an application to be employed, volunteer, or supervise. In addition, each person engaged in the leadership of a General Assembly entity event shall consent to all comprehensive background checks required and shall comply with any consequences of a reported violation of this policy.

Rationale

The 221st General Assembly (2014) sent to the presbyteries a proposed revision to G-3.0106 of the Book of Order requiring that "All councils shall adopt and implement ... a child protection policy." Following the approval of presbyteries, this change went into effect on June 21, 2015.

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly appointed a Task Force for Safe and Sacred Space, with OGA and PMA staff from Constitutional Interpretation, Legal Services, Ministries with Youth, and staff and a committee member from the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns to deal with issues surrounding child protection at General Assembly events and asked the task force to draft a child protection policy for the General Assembly.

The Task Force for Safe and Sacred Space brought this policy to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly realizing the necessity of having a policy and procedures in place for the General Assembly. The task force also understands that as the General Assembly lives into the policy, there will always be opportunities for future amendment to the policy as needed.

Item 03-Info

A. GACOR Agency Summary

“As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s offspring, heirs according to the promise” (Gal. 3:27–29) (Book of Order, F-1.0403, Unity in Diversity).

Introduction

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) is a permanent standing committee of the General Assembly, mandated by the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Book of Order (G-3.0103, Participation and Representation), The Manual of the General Assembly (including the Standing Rules of the General Assembly and the Organization for Mission) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the Churchwide Plan for Equal Employment Opportunity and Affirmative Action. Since it was constituted at reunion in 1983, GACOR has a long history of leadership, training, and service to the denomination.

The GACOR helps the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) become what God calls it to be, a church that includes diverse persons from the abundance God provides, an inclusiveness that represents the fullness God has created. We serve the denomination, keeping our attention on the quality of its community and always pointing toward a greater openness to voices not always heard, to leaders routinely overlooked, and to seek decision-making processes that enable full participation.

Assigned Responsibilities

The GACOR, in its constitutional mandate, promotes, reviews, advises, advocates, and consults with the General Assembly and its entities, committees, councils, and divisions in order to ensure that the principles of inclusiveness and diversity are implemented. How we function as the body of Christ is important both internally (structures, procedures, ways of interacting) and externally (social witness, mission, ministry). The church seeks to live into the abundance of the gifts given to it for its mission by helping it express that diversity and more fully accomplish our common ministries. To do this most faithfully, the church needs to have the widest possible participation. This rich diversity of membership and participation particularly includes “race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, [and] theological convictions (Book of Order, F-1.0403). At the national level, the church (as the body of Christ) is equipped with the widest possible diversity, by election and employment, for its life and it is called to select broadly from those leaders for its bodies.

Accomplishments

Since the close of the 221st General Assembly (2014) on June 21, 2014, in Detroit, Michigan, the GACOR worked diligently to complete the functions assigned by the Book of Order and Organization for Mission and in accordance with its Manual of Operations. The committee met face-to-face four times. The committee restructured itself in the fall of 2014 after the action of the 221st General Assembly (2014) changed its membership from 16 to 14 persons, to have two subcommittees. The GACOR Executive Committee (GACORX) consists of the moderator, vice-moderator, secretary, and chairpersons of the two subcommittees. The subcommittees are referred internally as GATE and ARRR. GATE is assigned to gather, analyze, translate and export data. ARRR is assigned to advise, review, report, and recommend actions. The subcommittees meet monthly by conference call or face-to-face in conjunction with the meetings of the full committee. GATE subcommittee examined data from synod COR reports and interpreted it to the committee. Fourteen of the sixteen synods submitted yearly synod committee on representation reports (SCOR) in 2015 and the remaining two synods began submission but did not complete the report. In the fourth year of implementation of the online submission of the report (2015) all synods started them. The percentage of completed reports went from 62 percent to 88 percent. This increase in participation reporting is to be applauded. Special recognition to the Synods of Covenant, Lakes & Prairies, Rocky Mountains, South Atlantic, Southern California and Hawaii, Southwest, The Sun, and Trinity for completing their reports for all years.

The ARRR guided the task of convening the Supplier Diversity Definition Table and received the Supplier Diversity Definition and Reporting Criteria, then requested feedback from the committee and consulting partners. Work remains on finishing a revised, electronic “Tool Kit” for mid councils to support their COR functions. The committee provided feedback on the new Directory for Worship. The GACOR conducted an informational and inspirational synod COR training in Portland, Oregon, on October 9–11, 2015. Meeting in conjunction with the Moderator’s and Polity Conferences, GACOR shared in leadership of the concluding worship service with the Polity Conference.

Other accomplishments were as follows:

- Advised the Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014) on the slates for special committees and commissions.
- Consulted with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) on the six-year cultural proficiency plans of the six General Assembly agencies.
- Adapted to staffing transitions resulting from a restructure in the Office of General Assembly.
- Convened the Supplier Diversity Definition Table with representatives of the six PC(USA) agencies and developed a definition that is being sent to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).
- Engaged the six agencies in conversation regarding their employment practices.
- Advocated for diversity in leadership by participating in caucus discussions with the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) leadership, and by continuing communications with the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC).
 - Designated members as liaisons with underrepresented constituency partners (including Presbyterians for Disability Concerns (PDC)) and caucuses to improve mutual communication with underserved communities.
 - Offered advice and counsel at Committee on the General Assembly (COGA) and Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) meetings.
 - A member attended 2015 Big Tent, interpreting the work of the committee and meeting with constituencies.
 - The GACOR moderator met with the Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014) a number of times during his term.
 - Participated in the PC(USA) Identity conversations led by COGA.
 - The GACOR moderator attended meetings of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and provided advice on issues before that body.
 - Advocated for adequate staff support in January 2015, through correspondence with the director for Mid Council Relations in OGA, and subsequent meetings regarding GACOR’s administrative support.
 - Corresponded with the manager of General Assembly Nominations regarding the distinct diversity needed by GACOR and requested reports on candidate pools and scheduling for consultation on slates.
 - Initiated mutual liaisons between ACREC (Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns) and GACOR, requested financial implication from COGA, and designated a GACOR member to be a liaison to ACREC.
 - In preparation for the 222nd General Assembly (2016) in Portland, Oregon, the committee reviewed General Assembly overtures and other business, preparing comments and marking items of interest to the committee for follow-up.
 - In accordance with Standing Rules, GACOR participated in the Leader Selection process for the 221st General Assembly (2014) and the 222nd General Assembly (2016) committees.

Membership

Class of 2016: the Reverend Dr. Tom Kirkpatrick (Synod of Alaska-Northwest), Dr. Tressie Muldrow (Synod of Mid-Atlantic), the Reverend Rubén Ortiz-Rodríguez (Sínodo de Boriquén—Puerto Rico), the Reverend Héctor M. Rivera-Vélez (Synod of the Sun), Issa Sayar (Synod of the South Atlantic), Wanda Tanner-McNeill (Synod of the Trinity), and Josephine (Jo) C. Mueller (Synod of Southern California and Hawaii).

Class of 2018: Marvella Lambricht (Synod of the Covenant), Chris Hopp (Synod of Lakes & Prairies), the Reverend Martha Ross-Mockaitis (Synod of Lincoln Trails), Michael (Mike) Hauser (Synod of Mid-America), the Reverend Larissa Kwong Abazia (Synod of Northeast), the Reverend Clover T. Bailey (Synod of the Pacific), and Maribeth Culpepper (Synod of the Southwest).

Words of Thanks

On behalf of the 222nd General Assembly (2016), the General Assembly Committee on Representation expresses its thanks and appreciation to Teaching Elders Héctor M. Rivera-Vélez and Thomas G. Kirkpatrick, and Ruling Elders Tressie Muldrow, Issa Sayar, Wanda Tanner McNeill, and Josephine C. Mueller for their dedicated service to the church through membership on the GACOR. The GACOR wishes to thank Teaching Elder Myung (Martin) Han (Synod of the Living Waters) who found it necessary to resign his position in 2015.

The GACOR is grateful for the staff assistance of the Reverend Molly Casteel, Assistant Stated Clerk and manager for Representation, Inclusiveness and Ruling Elder Training, and Cheri Harper, senior administrative assistant for Mid Council Ministries. The committee is also grateful to Diane Minter who supported them in this period.

B. GACOR Report on the AAEEO and Supplier Diversity (SD) Achievements of the Six Agencies, 2014–2016

The GACOR reports to the General Assembly on agencies regarding their employment and supplier diversity in response to the report and recommendations from “Privilege, Power and Policy: The Church as Employer,” as approved by the 220th General Assembly (2012) as Item 11-17 (Minutes, 2012, Part I, pp. 45, 1103-05 of the CD; pp. 33, 250–251, 1091–93 of the print copy). The 221st General Assembly (2014) revised the action by requiring the six agencies to report annually to GACOR. This report contains an overview of achievements by each of the six agencies in the 2013 and 2014 fiscal years.

1. Introduction

The GACOR does an annual review of data received from all six agencies regarding the employment of personnel and supplier diversity. The six agencies are the (1) the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), (2) the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), (3) the Presbyterian Foundation (FDN), (4) the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), (5) the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC), and (6) the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church U.S.A. (BOP). In this term, the two agencies under particular examination for benchmark revision were the OGA and PMA. That 2012 action can be found in Item 11-17, Privilege, Power and Policy: The Church as Employer, Recommendation 2 (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1091).

The following report makes a distinction between exempt and nonexempt employment. These distinctions result from federal employment law, the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). The definition follows:¹

There are two types of exemption under the Fair Labor Standards Act, FLSA. These are “nonexempt” and “exempt.” A nonexempt employee is paid for all overtime hours worked. Overtime is typically defined as any time worked over forty hours in a workweek (depending upon the bargaining unit contract). Nonexempt employees generally perform operational functions such as routine clerical duties, maintenance work, and checking and inspecting equipment.

An exempt employee is not paid for overtime hours worked. There are three categories under which an employee may be considered exempt. They are administrative, executive, and professional. These categories generally define an exempt employee as one who customarily and regularly exercises discretion and independent judgment in the performance of his/her duties. Exempt employees must pass a Salary Basis Test, i.e., they must be compensated at a minimum salary that is at least $250/week.

- The Administrative exemption is for non-manual or office work directly related to management policies or general business administration. Positions customarily and regularly exercise independent judgment and discretion more than 50 percent of the time. Work is performed under general supervision and may require special training, experience, or knowledge.

- The Executive exemption is for positions whose primary duty is management of a department or subdivision in addition to exercising independent judgment and discretion more than 50 percent of the time. Under the executive exemption, positions must directly supervise 2 or more full-time employees and have the ability to make employment and disciplinary decisions.

- The Professional exemption is for work that requires an advanced degree and that is original or creative in nature. Independent judgment and discretion must be exercised in these positions more than 50 percent of the time. In addition, certain computer professions may be considered exempt under the Professional exemption when they meet certain criteria and are paid on a salary basis or an hourly basis that is at least $27.63/hour. (The University of California, Irvine, Human Resources. “The FLSA Exemption Status Definition”, <https://www.dol.gov/whd/regs/compliance/hrg.htm> (1 February 2016).)

2. OGA: Office of the General Assembly

The Office of the General Assembly (OGA) provided their reports in a timely manner and responded to requests for clarification and follow-up. The Presbyterian Historical Society is a part of the OGA and their employees are included in this report. Looking at the total workforce, GACOR made the following observations:

¹ The University of California, Irvine, Human Resources. “The FLSA Exemption Status Definition,” <https://www.dol.gov/whd/regs/compliance/hrg.htm> (1 February 2016).

a. Employment

Out of the total fifty-five employees of the OGA, 71 percent identify as white. The bulk of the remaining 29 percent identify as African American/black (20 percent of total workforce). The committee rejoices to see a sizable percentage of employees be persons of color. Representation in the workforce beyond the black/white binary is minimal (9 percent of total workforce or roughly 1/3 of employees of color). We draw attention to this gap (see Figure 1).

Employees who are people of color but not African American or Black (20 percent), reported as Asian/Pacific Islander (7 percent) and Hispanic/Latino/a (2 percent). As a consideration of the total workforce, this examination shows all levels of employment.

Figure 2 demonstrated the OGA workforce is majority female (69 percent) exceeding the established benchmark of 40 percent. That shifts when looking at different levels of employment. In Figure 3, the preponderance of female employees in exempt positions is made clear. There are 26 exempt female employees and 12 nonexempt female employees; compared to the 12 exempt male employees and 5 non-exempt male employees.

Reported data also includes age information. Figure 4 shows the age breakdowns of the workforce for OGA and figures 5 and 6, the intersecting variables of gender and age.

Disaggregating the 17 men and 38 women into separate graphs shows the nearly identical distributions despite the significantly higher number of women employed in OGA.

When looking at the employment data through race and gender the numbers show another interesting aspect. Women employees outnumber men in both groupings of white and persons of color, yet the proportion shows men are less diverse: women are 70 percent white to 30 percent members of minoritized racial groups, whereas men are 77 percent white and 23 percent members of minoritized racial groups.

The salary distribution of OGA employees by gender, Figure 7, shows where the majority of persons' compensation falls in the graph, distinguished by gender. Most employees are women in the $35,001 to $45,000 range of compensation, followed by those women in the $65,001 to $75,000 range. Most men employed by OGA are either in the $35,001 to $45,000 range or the $55,001 to $65,000 range.

To date, the OGA has not included information about employees with disabilities in their reporting to GACOR, thus this report doesn't reflect the inclusion of disabilities and differing abilities that may be present in their employees. Federal laws have requirements to protect employees with disabilities from discrimination. While the GACOR understands this limitation, self-disclosed information on disability would be useful to evaluate compliance with AAEO requirements and Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). The committee is eager to assist agencies in exploring methods for self-disclosure.

As Figure 8 demonstrates, while men represent 31 percent of OGA workforce, they represent 22 percent of the exempt and 9 percent of the nonexempt salary information. Although women represent 69 percent of the OGA labor pool, only 47 percent represent the exempt category and 22 percent represent the nonexempt. Although OGA hires more women, it does not result in a corresponding higher percentage of women in the exempt category.

The following observations were made in an examination of the OGA data:

- While 56 percent of OGA employees are nonexempt, 85 percent of the nonexempt employees are women.
- Within the $20,000–45,000 nonexempt pay range, 33 percent are male employees and 67 percent are female employees.

GACOR highlights the following in the reports from OGA:

- Among employees who identify as Asian or Pacific Islander:
 - There are equal numbers of male and female employees.
 - One female employee is nonexempt. The exempt employees earn $45,000–75,000 annually.

- Among employees who identify as black or African American:
 - Nine female and two male employees are reported. Of these persons the majority are in nonexempt positions: five of the female employees and both male employees.
 - Both male employees are between 46–55 years of age
 - Forty-four percent of the female employees are between 46–55 years of age.
 - Two of the female employees earn $55,001–65,000 annually and two female employees earn $75,001 or above
- The employee who identifies as Hispanic/Latina is a female and has an exempt position.
- Among employees who identify as white:
 - There are 13 males (3 nonexempt); and 28 females (7 nonexempt).
 - Slightly more women earn less than $55,000 than men: 57 percent of female employees compared with 54 percent of male employees.
 - Twenty-one percent of female employees earn between $55,001–75,000, while 15 percent of male employees are in this salary range.
 - Proportionally more men than women earn more than $75,001 annually: 22 percent of female employees compared to 31 percent of male employees are above this pay threshold.

b. Supplier Diversity

The Presbyterian Mission Agency reported the OGA supplier diversity (SD) data in 2013 and 2014. GACOR has insufficient information regarding the diverse supplier information at this reporting. In 2014, they reported that 2.2 percent of OGA suppliers were diverse leaving many categories in the report blank. The benchmark is 10 percent.

GACOR finds it troubling that the amount of money spent with diverse suppliers is not available for some categories. The data are incomplete. As there is a definition coming to the 220th General Assembly (2016) to assist agencies in identifying diverse suppliers, GACOR anticipates reporting to improve. Much work has been completed by the GACOR and the agencies in regards to updating the definition of supplier diversity.

The OGA & PMA Supplier Diversity Reports were submitted on time, though substantial data was missing that would have allowed for accurate calculations and revealed a clear picture of supplier diversity.

- The category of women in essence only records suppliers who are owned or controlled by white women. In practice, suppliers who are women of color are distributed in the racialized categories, if there are any reported. As a result the reporting option of women of color was left blank.
- Men of color are identified in minoritized racial ethnic categories that may also include women of color. There is not enough data in the report to disaggregate it. The gender of women of color is erased in the reporting.
- Additional practices are needed for self-disclosure to record persons with disabilities and Middle Eastern employees. Without data reported in these categories, no conclusions can be drawn about those categories or about agency practices.

OGA reported the following SD data:

- In 2014, the OGA reported a total of seven diverse suppliers, reflecting 2.02 percent of the spend ($101,081). The spend of the agency in a General Assembly year is different and may account for the swing in percentage between 2013 and 2014 data sets.
- In 2013 they reported a total of five diverse suppliers, reflecting 10.25 percent of their spending ($209,630).

3. PMA: Presbyterian Mission Agency

The Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) reported in a timely manner and responded to requests for clarification and follow-up. PMA employment figures include offices in New York and Washington D.C., as well as deployed staff. GACOR made the following observations:

a. Employment

PMA reported 336 employees; 73 percent of whom identified as white. Like OGA employment numbers, the majority of employees of color identify as African American and/or black (56 percent of people of color, this group is claimed by 15 percent of all employees). Figure 9 shows the full breakdown of the racial group membership of PMA employees.

The committee rejoices to see a sizable percentage of employees be persons of color (27 percent). Representation in the workforce beyond the black/white binary is present (12 percent of total workforce or roughly 45 percent of employees of color). When examining the workforce by gender (see Figure 10), PMA reports women making up 65 percent of employees and men 35 percent. Figure 11 shows how the distribution changes with race and gender included.

In 2014, the PMA reported that men made up 35 percent and women 65 percent of its workforce and so it has met its first benchmark of 40 percent in the AAEEEO recommendations. PMA also met its second benchmark for hiring minorities, with the total racial ethnic workforce reporting at 27 percent. Racial ethnic women were represented at 18 percent while men came in at 9 percent.

Most of women employed in the PMA are compensated at levels below $65,000. Males in PMA employment outnumber women in the pay range between $65,001 and $85,001.

Reported data also indicates proportionally there are significantly less men employed in nonexempt positions than females and proportionally there are significantly less women employed in exempt positions than males. Additionally:

- Seventy-five percent of the nonexempt male employees fall into the $35,001–45,000 pay range, while 89 percent of the nonexempt female employees are in this same pay range.
- Seven percent of the exempt male employees earn $95,001 or above, while 5 percent of the exempt female employees are in the same pay range.

GACOR highlights the following in the reports from PMA:

- Two employees identified as Native American/Alaska Native. The sample is too low to show statistical data.
- Among employees who identify as Asian/Pacific Islander:

- Thirty-three percent of female employees earn less than $35,000 annually, while there are no male employees in the pay range.
- There are equal numbers of male/female employees in the $35,001–65,000 pay ranges.
- Sixty-seven percent of the female employees earn $65,001–75,000, while 13 percent of the male employees are in the same pay range.
- Half of the male employees earn $85,001–95,000 and there are no female employees in the pay range.
- Among employees who identify as black or African American:
 - Twenty-seven percent of female employees earn $35,001–45,000 and 8 percent of male employees are in this pay range.
 - Twenty-four percent of female employees earn $45,001–75,000 and 50 percent of male employees are in this pay range.
 - Sixteen percent of female employees earn $75,001–95,000 and 17 percent of male employees are in this pay range.
 - All female employees between the ages of 26–35 are nonexempt employees.
- Among employees who identify as Hispanic/Latino:
 - Fifty-three percent of female employees earn less than $45,000 and there are no male employees earning less than $45,000. All male employees earn between $45,001 and 65,000.
- Among employees who identify as white:
 - Sixty-three percent of female employees earn less than $55,000 and 28 percent of male employees are in this pay range.
 - Twenty-six percent of female employees earn between $55,001–75,000 and 42 percent of male employees are in this pay range.
 - Six percent of female employees earn between $75,001–105,000 and 24 percent of male employees are in this pay range.
 - Five percent of female employees earn more than $105,001 and 3 percent of male employees are in this pay range.

While analyzing the data on supplier diversity, it is troubling that the amount of money spent with diverse suppliers is not available for some categories as noted on the 2014 Supplier Diversity Report. This data are incomplete, and of questionable value. In the reasoning given for this lack of information, it is indicated the data may be available in the future. GACOR looks forward to the availability of this data.

Much work has been completed by the GACOR and various other agencies in regards to updating the definition of supplier diversity. Throughout the PMA report, supplier diversity is referenced.

In the employment data report, it is difficult, if not impossible, to tell if there are persons classified in multiple categories. The disability employment data is not available because of privacy laws. While the GACOR understands this limitation, the disability information would be useful to evaluate compliance with AAEEEO requirements and Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) compliance.

b. Supplier Diversity

The Presbyterian Mission Agency reported supplier diversity data in 2013 and 2014. GACOR has insufficient information regarding the diverse supplier information at this reporting. The data are incomplete. Missing data would have allowed for accurate calculations and revealed a clear picture of supplier diversity. As there is a definition coming to the 220th General Assembly (2016) to assist agencies in identifying diverse suppliers, GACOR anticipates reporting to improve. Much work has been completed by the GACOR and the agencies in regards to updating the definition of supplier diversity.

The OGA & PMA Supplier Diversity Reports were submitted on time, though substantial data was missing that would have allowed for accurate calculations and revealed a clear picture of supplier diversity.

- The category of women in essence only records suppliers who are owned or controlled by white women. In practice, suppliers who are women of color are distributed in the racialized categories, if there are any reported. As a result, the reporting option of women of color was left blank.

03 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

- Men of color are identified in minoritized racial ethnic categories that may also include women of color. There is not enough data in the report to disaggregate it. The gender of women of color is erased in the reporting.
- Additional practices are needed for self-disclosure to record persons with disabilities and Middle Eastern employees. Without data reported in these categories, no conclusions can be drawn about those categories or about agency practices.

Actual data reported:

- In 2014, PMA reported a total of twenty-five suppliers, reflecting 6.11 percent of their spend (or $837,760).
- In 2013 they reported a total of twenty diverse suppliers, representing 5.13 percent of their spend (or $567,799).
- The benchmark of 10 percent is not met.

4. BOP: The Board of Pensions

The Board of Pensions (BOP) reported in a timely manner. GACOR made the following observations:

a. Employment

Women represent 66 percent of the all (125 of 188) BOP employees. In reviewing salaries, the largest group earns between $45,000 & $55,000 (35 out of 125). While there are fewer men, they peak in the same range (10 out of 63). However men also see a spike again with ten employees in the $105,000 range (See Figure 16).

Eleven percent of BOP employees are age 35 or under, and 4 percent are over 65. The majority of employees are aged 36–65 (84 percent). This is on par with the age distribution for the entire employee population of BOP.

White employees represent 65 percent of the workforce, and employees identifying as African American or black are 24 percent. All other ethnicities represent 11 percent. BOP reported 3 percent of employees who identified as multiracial.

In reviewing the gender and race of BOP employees, the lowest representation is by men of color (7 percent). White men represent 27 percent of the total workforce. The gap is smaller when comparing women (by half). White women are 38 percent of employees, whereas women of color make up 28 percent of employees (see Figure 18).

b. Supplier Diversity

The Board of Pensions did not provide the total amounts that they expensed for all vendors. GACOR cannot make an accurate evaluation. Their report stated that they expensed 100 percent in all categories of the form. GACOR failed to include a form category for white vendors, which would include the amount expended in that category. This will be corrected in the forms beginning later in 2016.

5. PILP: The Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

The Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP) reported in a timely manner. GACOR made the following observations:

Male employees' lowest salary was $65,000 and peaked at $145,000 while women's lowest wage was much lower at $20,000 and capped at $75,000.

Supplier Diversity

PILP reported that 2.4 percent was invested in the women category, and PC(USA) and two related entities made up three of their vendors. A total of $215,663 or 48.6 percent of the total and $79,365 or 17.9 percent of the total was paid to publicly traded companies making it difficult to determine ownership. GACOR will review the request for information form used for this first review, and make changes for the next General Assembly reporting process.

6. FDN: The Foundation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (FDN) reported in a timely manner. GACOR made the following observations:

Male employees are 36 percent of FDN workforce. Exempt male employees are 31 percent and 5 percent are nonexempt. While women are 64 percent of the FDN labor pool, 47 percent are exempt and 17 percent nonexempt.

In reviewing the gender and race of FDN employees, there is a low representation of racial ethnic men (9 percent). White men represent 27 percent of the total employed. This disparity is similar when comparing white women to racial ethnic women, 49 percent to 15 percent respectively.

Five percent of FDN employees are women aged 35 or under, and 58 percent are between 36- and 55-years-old. Thirty-three percent are aged 46–65. There are no women employees over age 65.

Five percent of FDN male employees are age 35 or under, and 48 percent are between 26–45 years-old. Thirty-three percent are aged 46 to 65.

As Figure 23 shows, the majority of women employed by the Foundation are bunched between $35,000 and $75,000. Male employees are more evenly distributed through the pay ranges.

Supplier Diversity

FDN provided information about their Supplier Diversity information, and they expensed 24.5 percent in vendors for all categories. A total amount spent was not provided and GACOR will revise the request forms immediately.

7. PPC: Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, Inc.

The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) reported in a timely manner. GACOR made the following observations:

Women represent 72 percent of the total (19 of 31) PPC workforce. In reviewing salaries, the largest groups earn between $45,000 and $55,000 or $55,000 and $65,000 (six in each level for a total of 12 out of 31). While twelve men are employed by the agency, their salaries peak at $75,000 and $85,000 (3 out of 12, or 25 percent of male employees). The uppermost leadership (with the highest salaries) are men.

In reviewing the gender and race of PPC employees, there is a low representation of racial ethnic men (7 percent). White men represent 32 percent of the total population. This disparity looks different when comparing women employees who identify as white to women of color, 42 percent to 19 percent respectively.

Forty-eight percent of PPC employees are aged 35 or younger, and 3 percent are older than 65.

Sixty-eight percent of PPC employees are women aged 35 or younger, and 21 percent are between 36 and 55 years. Eleven percent of female employees are aged 46 to 65 years. There are no women employees over 65-years-old.

Seventeen percent of male PPC employees are age 35 or under, and 34 percent are between 26 and 45 years. Forty-one percent are aged 46–65 and 17 percent of male PPC employees are over age 65.

Supplier Diversity

PPC did not provide the total amounts that they expensed for all vendors. GACOR cannot make an accurate evaluation. Their report stated that they expensed 100 percent in all categories of the form. GACOR failed to include a form category for white vendors, which would include the amount expended in that category. This will be corrected in the forms beginning later in 2016.

C. General Assembly Nominating Committee Agency Summary

The gifts of God for the people of God; come and serve!

Introduction

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is committed to full participation and representation of the rich diversity of the church in its governance. Through the General Assembly Nominating Committee's comprehensive nominations process, all Presbyterians have the ability and access to be considered for elected service on more than thirty General Assembly boards, commissions, committees, and councils. The nominations process ensures that the General Assembly is afforded the opportunity to select, from the varied gifts and services of Presbyterians, the most qualified persons to serve on General Assembly entities with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.

Assigned Responsibilities

The General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) is charged with providing careful nominations of persons to serve in elected membership on more than thirty ongoing boards, committees, councils, and commissions designated by the General Assembly. The GANC does its work in conformity with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s commitment to full participation and representation of the rich diversity of the church in its governance.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee itself is broadly representative of the constituency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The committee consists of sixteen members, women and men from each of the synods of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). They represent various racial ethnic identities, age groups, different theological perspectives, and include persons with disabilities. The Moderator of the previous General Assembly nominates GANC members for election by the ensuing General Assembly.

The General Assembly nomination process is application based and is open and accessible to the broad membership of the church. Persons who wish to be considered for nomination must complete and submit an application form and solicit personal references. In addition to providing a way to gather consistent demographic data, the application form allows for personal and creative narrative responses to a variety of questions about the applicant's sense of call to service, qualifications, and experience. Applicants can be confident every application is reviewed during the nomination process.

Accomplishments

The GANC continues to connect with Presbyterians corporately and individually—through meetings of presbytery and synod nominating committees, participation and attendance at national and regional conferences, engagement and correspondence with leaders at all councils of the church, and other official Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) groups—in order to inform Presbyterians of the many and diverse opportunities for service.

In addition to face-to-face engagements, individuals, congregations, presbyteries, and synods can find a listing of positions open for election on the General Assembly Nomination website: www.pcusa.org/nominations.

In the Fall of 2015, the GANC mailed to each presbytery and synod the list of vacancies to be filled. Additionally, the GANC website provides instructions, information about the nominations process, and committee descriptions. These descriptions contain information on the skills and expertise needed and time requirements for service. The descriptions are a useful tool for candidates as they determine whether or not their particular gifts and abilities are a match with the identified needs of a specific entity.

Persons interested in being considered for service on a General Assembly level committee must do so by submitting an application for nomination form via the GA Nominating Committee new online application system. As of February 20, 2015, approximately 230 applications were received for about eighty at-large vacancies. Currently, applications remain active for two General Assembly cycles. With the newly designed application form and database, applicants will be required to update their application form and resubmit it if they wish to be considered for nomination beginning with the General Assembly 2018 cycle.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee continues to further its efforts to deepen cultural competence and proficiency by providing educational opportunities for its members. Its February 2015 meeting included a workshop on "Reflecting the Church's Rich Diversity Through a Culturally Proficient Nominations and Discernment Process," led by Jessica Vazquez of Crossroads Antiracism and Organizing and Training.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee works in concert with the General Assembly Committee on Representation to ensure that membership on all General Assembly entities is broadly representative of the membership of the whole church.

Through participation at conferences, conversations and engagement with the General Assembly Committee on Representation, racial ethnic caucuses, affinity groups, individual contact at all mid council levels as well as with pastors and ruling elders across the denomination, the General Assembly Nominating Committee strives to increase the number of racial ethnic persons and persons with differing theological perspectives in its pool of applicants.

In its efforts to provide the General Assembly Committee on Representation quantifiable information about the theological diversity of the pool of nominees, the GANC added the following question to its nomination form: "Which of the following terms best describes your theological perspective?" Applicants are provided with the following categories (listed in alphabetical order on the form): Conservative, Evangelical, Liberal, Moderate, Orthodox, Progressive, and prefer not to answer. Applicants are encouraged to check all that apply and a space is provided for comments. In addition, the GANC has removed a question on its form, "To assist the General Assembly Nominating Committee in addressing the Presbyterian Church's commitment to theological diversity, please briefly describe your theological perspective," replacing it with, "Please name one key theological issue facing the church today and explain your perspective on this issue."

The General Assembly Nominating Committee notes that many applicants do not identify themselves as persons with disabilities even when a disability does exist. Thus, we believe that the number of persons with disabilities serving the church on committees at the General Assembly level is actually higher than reported. In an effort to encourage persons to self-identify, the GANC sought the advice of Presbyterians for Disability Concerns in 2013. As a result, the GANC revised a question on its form from, "Are you a person living with a disability?" to "Are you living with a disability? If yes, please describe the accommodations needed for your participation on this entity." The General Assembly Nominating Committee will continue to seek ways to encourage persons living with disabilities to make this information available.

Members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee relate actively to mid councils and General Assembly entities throughout the year. Each General Assembly Nominating Committee member serves as a liaison to the nominating committee of the synod in which the member resides. Each member attends at least one synod or synod nominating committee meeting every other year to explain the nominations process.

The General Assembly Nominating Committee invites all General Assembly entities to send a written report biennially concerning the specific needs of the entity regarding nominees presented to the General Assembly. In addition, the General Assembly Nominating Committee's liaison member is available to meet with the entity or be in contact by telephone or mail at the entity's invitation, so that the nominating process may be explained and that the skills and expertise needed by the entity are identified. This information, along with advice and counsel received from the General Assembly Committee on Representation, assists the General Assembly Nominating Committee in its work.

Since the 221st General Assembly (2014) there have been three meetings of the General Assembly Nominating Committee: February 26–March 1, 2014, in Seattle, Washington; November 19 and 20, 2015 via video-conference call; and March 9–12, 2016, in Salt Lake City, Utah. An orientation for new members was held on September 3–5, 2014, in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

There are sixteen members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee—one member residing in each of the sixteen synods. The General Assembly, upon the nomination of the General Assembly Moderator, elects the members of the General Assembly Nominating Committee; members serve a six-year term. The following officers were elected and served from July 2012 to June 2014: Amy Kim Kyremes-Parks (church member), Synod of the Rocky Mountains, moderator; Danny C. Murphy Sr. (teaching elder), Synod of the South Atlantic, vice moderator; and Tully M. Fletcher IV (teaching elder), Synod of the Southwest, secretary. Other members of the committee are: Lindsey Anderson (teaching elder), Synod of the Covenant; Eva O. Carter (ruling elder), Synod of Living Waters; Ana Victoria Eleutice Figueroa [until February 2016] (ruling elder), Presbiteriano Borinquén en Puerto Rico; Douglas Howard (ruling elder), Synod of the Northeast; Yena K. Hwang (teaching elder), Synod of Mid-Atlantic; Bertram G. Johnson (teaching elder), Synod of Alaska-Northwest; Judy Lussie (ruling elder), Synod of the Pacific; Judith North (ruling elder), Synod of Lakes and Prairies; Mary Paik (teaching elder), Synod of Southern California and Hawaii; Bob Riggs (ruling elder), Synod of Mid-America; Judith Trabue (ruling elder), Synod of Lincoln Trails; John M. Willingham (teaching elder), Synod of the Trinity; and Gene Wilson (teaching elder) Synod of the Sun.

The office of the General Assembly Nominating Committee is located in the Office of the General Assembly, 100 Witherspoon Street, Louisville, KY 40202-1396. Assistant Stated Clerk Valerie Kiriishi Small, ruling elder, serves as the coordinator for General Assembly Nominations (part-time).

STATEMENT OF CASH FLOW - PER CAPITA BUDGET
Actual and Projected Sources of Funding and Expenditures 2012-2016

USING THE FOLLOWING ASSUMPTIONS:

- Projected Rev and Exp for 2017 & 2018
- number of members for 2012-2014 is as follows: (please note that apportionment revenue is based on the membership reported two years prior to the current year; that is 2016 apportionment revenue is based on membership reported at end of 2014):

(2012):2,004,192; (2013): 1,921,240 (2014): 1,666,767;

For 2015 & 2016 projected membership reduction of 100,000 each year.

For 2017 and 2018 projected membership reduction of 75,000 each year

For 2019 and 2020 projected membership reduction of 75,000

Increase Per Capita 3% in 2017 and 2018, 2019 and 2020

Expense reduction 3% from 2017-2020 each year

OPPORTUNITIES:

- Manage expenditures to be less than budgeted
- Planned use of reserves after holding 30% of Budget

RISKS

- Actual membership declines more than projected
- Actual expenditures exceed budgeted expenses
- Church and economic related issues impacting Revenue & Investment values
- General Assembly financial implications increases expenditure
- The level of available funds from reserves (after the 30% provision) declining

[The assembly disapproved Item 04-01 with comment. See p. 37.]

[Comment: We recommend that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) disapprove Items 04-01, 04-02, 04-03, 04-04, 04-05, 04-06, 04-09, 04-10, and 04-13 with comment:

[1. The committee thanks the presbyteries who submitted and concurred with these overtures for opening the conversation and calls on future General Assemblies to continue to explore ways of better engaging the whole church in important decisions.

[2. The General Assembly calls upon the whole church to do the following:

[a. Recommit ourselves at the congregational level, the mid council level, and the national levels of our church to advocate with all of our voice for, in the words of Moderator Edmiston to the Assembly Committee on the Way Forward, “that which breaks God’s heart in our neighborhoods” and to seek opportunities to take risks for and with the poor, the marginalized, and the excluded in our communities.

[b. Call on our congregations to recommit to a biblical witness focused on values upon which the Presbytery of Foothills based their series of overtures of unity, community, diversity, and transformation, and reaffirm our foundational commitment to social justice from the historical documents of the church, including the Book of Confessions and existing social witness policy.

[c. Call on our presbyteries and synods to place these values at the center of their concerns and work together within their unique ministry contexts.

[d. Ask the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to consider focusing time during future General Assemblies for creating opportunities for dreaming an ongoing way forward and to work in consultation with the committees on local arrangements to engage all of the commissioners, delegates, and observers in acts of service to and with communities at risk.

[e. Commend the OGA for its commitment to ensure that the voices of peoples long silenced, from within our church and outside of it (including interfaith voices), are invited to share with and challenge it and encourages congregations, mid councils, and future assemblies to do the same.

[By disapproving these overtures with comment we can help move toward a more faithful, more just, and more hopeful vision of who we are as Christ’s church. We have an opportunity to bring the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) into these important conversations through invitations, through education, through prayerful consideration, and not through constitutional changes.]

On Amending G-3.0503 and G-6.04 Regarding Meetings of the General Assembly and Amending the Constitution—From the Presbytery of Foothills.

The Presbytery of Foothills overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

1. Shall the first paragraph of G-3.0503 be amended as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown as italic.]

“The General Assembly shall hold a stated meeting at least biennially. Each General Assembly shall be organized around one of the Six Great Ends of the Church (F-1.0304), taken up in succession in the order listed in F-1.0304. The main business of each General Assembly shall be to discuss and to explore ways to enable Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) congregations and councils to fulfill more faithfully and effectively the Great End which is the theme for that General Assembly. Every third General Assembly shall depart from the rotation of the Six Great Ends and instead be called together to consider all amendments to the Constitution that have been properly submitted. All overtures to amend the Constitution, in order to be considered by the General Assembly for constitutional change, must have the endorsement of no fewer than 15 percent of the presbyteries in the PC(USA). Overtures that receive two-thirds endorsement of the presbyteries may be considered at any General Assembly following the achievement of the two-thirds endorsement. The moderator, or in the event ... [the rest of G-3.0503 continues unaltered from this point];”

2. Shall G-6.04 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be inserted is shown as italics.]

“Amendments to the Book of Order shall be made only at a General Assembly for constitutional change (every third assembly, as required by G-3.0503) and only if all the following steps are completed:

“a. All overtures to amend the Constitution must have the endorsement of 15 percent of the presbyteries to be considered by the General Assembly. Overtures that achieve endorsement of two-thirds of the presbyteries may be considered at the next session of the General Assembly, regardless of the assembly rotation (G-3.0503).

“~~a.~~ b. All proposals requesting amendment of the Book of Order are communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly at which they will be considered.

~~“e- f.~~ [Text remains unchanged.]”

Rationale

The General Assembly exists to serve the individual churches that make up the PC(USA), and not the churches to serve the General Assembly.

“The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness ...” (G-3. 0501).

The six Great Ends of the Church are “the proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of humankind; the shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God; the maintenance of divine worship; the preservation of the truth; the promotion of social righteousness; and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world” (F-1.0304).

In actual result, recent General Assemblies have produced the opposite of a “bond of union, community, and mission” among its member congregations—but instead have produced strife, division, and dysfunction; and thereby greatly distracted PC(USA) congregations from their central work of pursuing the six Great Ends in their mission and ministry.

The central focus of recent General Assemblies has not been on “provid[ing] that the Word of God may be truly preached and heard ... that the Sacraments may be rightly administered and received ... [and the nurture of] the covenant community of disciples ...” (G-3.0501a–c), but rather has been centered upon the consideration of constitutional amendments—effectively turning the meetings of the General Assembly into biennial constitutional conventions.

A constitution is not a manual of operations, but is a deeper document expressing shared and unifying principles and values that establish the general framework for governance, and therefore should not be easily amended without thoughtful consideration and widespread consensus regarding these fundamental principles and values.

General Assembly meetings of the PC(USA) must return to their rightful purpose of supporting and building up the congregations of our denomination as defined by the Book of Order—enabling them, individually and together in church councils, to more faithfully and effectively fulfill the six Great Ends of the Church.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 04-01

Advice on Item 04-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 04-01.

Rationale

Item 04-01 would limit a General Assembly’s ability to respond to current situations or to implement insight derived from discussion and exploration of ways to enable Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) congregations and councils to fulfill more faithfully and effectively the Great Ends of the Church for at least two years and up to six years. Sometimes amendment of the Constitution is required in order to empower councils, congregations, and organizations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to work toward realization of the Great Ends of the Church or to respond to current situations within the Church or society.

Item 04-01 emphasizes only the Great Ends of the Church but does not consider the current requirement that the General Assembly keep before it the marks of the Church and the notes by which Presbyterian and Reformed communities have identified themselves through history as well (Book of Order, G-3.0501).

Item 04-01 seeks to eliminate strife, division, or dysfunction that may arise from actions of the General Assembly but addresses only constitutional change. Overtures that do not require constitutional amendments or other actions of the General Assembly may also create discord.

Item 04-01 intends to emphasize that the Constitution is a document expressing shared and unifying principles and values that establish the general framework for governance, and therefore should not be easily amended without thoughtful consideration and widespread consensus regarding these fundamental principles and values. The current requirements for constitutional amendment, however, do include discussion and majority vote by the General Assembly followed by deliberation by all presbyteries over the course of a year with a majority agreement of the presbyteries required for any change (Book of Order, G-6.04c and d). It is the advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, therefore, that the stated intent of the overture is already achieved in the Book of Order.

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 04-01 proposes substantial rule changes using the Six Great Ends of the Church as a schedule for General Assemblies to take up the six themes separately, and would require high percentages of presbyteries to concur on any overtures, also restricting what business might come before the assembly.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 04-01 be disapproved.

Theologically, this overture not only replaces the Book of Confessions with the Six Great Ends, giving them an arbitrary authority unimagined by any prior General Assembly, but also ignores the functions of the General Assembly in the recently revised Book of Order, Chapter 3. In fact, this overture and its companions may remind experienced General Assembly observers of the entire alternative Book of Order that the Presbytery of Foothills proposed in 2010. At a time when much of the church seeks to simplify structure and focus on mission outside itself, these complex proposed rules (and exceptions) would further focus the church on its internal processes, and restrict the assembly's view of its mission to one area at a time. Further, while seeking to elevate the power of presbyteries vis-à-vis the assembly, the proposed rules would silence all but the most robust presbyteries when we need far more church-wide creativity and conversation.

In order not to duplicate the Advisory Committee on Social Witness' advice and counsel memoranda on Items 11-01 and 11-02, we only summarize our theological and confessional concerns here. Yet because our assignment is to assess matters of social witness and the church's capacity for such witness, we venture this response. Item 04-01 should be disapproved because it (1) misrepresents the Great Ends of the Church, (2) would limit consideration of matters of social righteousness to once every eighteen years, (3) reflects a flawed understanding of the nature of the Reformed church, (4) misrepresents conflict in the church, (5) would muzzle the church's ability to bear prophetic witness, reviving a distorted understanding of the spirituality of the church, and (6) appears to shrink and bind the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

1. This overture reflects a mistaken view of the great ends of the church. By mandating that General Assembly dockets "be organized around one of the Six Great Ends of the Church," it betrays an erroneous belief that the Great Ends is a list of discrete activities; when they are, in fact, integrally related dimensions of the church's single response to God's grace in Jesus Christ.

Consider how the "promotion of social righteousness" is integral to living out ALL the Great Ends. Can we "proclaim Jesus' gospel" among people who have historically suffered injustice without promoting social righteousness? Can we proclaim the salvation Jesus Christ makes possible without addressing how Jesus heals (a meaning of salvation) our relationships with God and one another? Can we proclaim Jesus' gospel without also confronting sinful principalities and powers of this world the way he did? Can we "preserve the truth" without also challenging the ways in which we call evil, "good," and injustice, "necessary"? Can we "maintain divine worship" if we do not confess our complicity in the world's injustices? Can we foster the "shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the Children of God" if we do not confront sinful systems that divide and diminish us? Can we "exhibit the kingdom of God" if we do not promote social righteousness in Christ's church and world? If we approve this overture and put the Great Ends on a rigid cycle, we will compromise every aspect of the church's life.

In conversation leading up to this General Assembly, the overture's advocates have admitted that the Great Ends are enmeshed. They have then tried to claim that this fact means that their overture won't diminish the church's life because we will not be limited by a singular focus on a single Great End. One can only conclude that if that is the case, then this overture does not appear to be thought through theologically.

2. Putting the Great Ends on a rigid eighteen-year-cycle will prevent future General Assemblies from responding to the needs and challenges of the church and culture in a timely way. The great length of time between opportunities for consideration might tend to rush General Assemblies to make decisions that they might otherwise consider more wisely at later assemblies, while leaving church agencies without effective guidance or oversight for years at a time. If we were dealing with the "proclamation of the gospel" this year, for example, it would have been the first time since 1998. Although we respect the place of scholarly symposia on particular themes, the purpose of the assembly is to lift up and strengthen mission in a holistic way, open to the Holy Spirit more than to a new form of legalism.

3. This overture's rationale reflects a faulty, congregational understanding of the church when it says, "The General Assembly exists to serve the individual churches that makes up the PC(USA), and not the churches to serve the General Assembly." In congregational polities the "church" is always and only the local church and denominational bodies exist solely to resource local bodies.

By contrast, Presbyterians believe that the General Assembly is an expression of the body of Christ along with presbyteries, synods, and General Assemblies. Just as our polity does not privilege local and individual congregations, neither does it privilege the higher bodies as “the church,” the way Episcopal polities do or as the writers of this overture charge. Each part exists for the sake of the Christ’s body, considered both as parts and together. In, congregational polities there are only fingers and toes and there is no organic whole.

The localism of congregational polities produces blind spots. We see this in the New Testament, when the Jerusalem Church mandated circumcision and strict adherence to Jewish ceremonial law. At the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15), the church heard compelling testimony from representatives from other locales and made the controversial decision to welcome gentiles into fellowship without requiring circumcision. This decision continued to be controversial in much of the church decades after it was made (see Paul’s letter to the Galatians).

The promise of councils, such as the General Assembly, is that commissioners hear testimony from the broader church and are enabled to see beyond the blind spots of their local ministry contexts. We’ve seen this happen over and over again in the life of the church. In the 1950s, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, for example, was able to see the evil of “separate but equal” schooling in ways that many local congregations found challenging and resisted. By preventing the General Assembly from speaking, only a local, congregational witness would remain if this overture were approved.

4. Almost everything this overture says about conflict in the church is incorrect. Reading this overture one would never know that, with rare exception, General Assemblies have approved social witness policy on the consent agenda or by wide margins. Certainly the church does not seek conflict for conflict’s sake, but conflict avoidance is not peace, and avoiding choices also means making choices. (See ACSWP’s Advice & Counsel (A&C) on Items 11-01 and 11-02).

5. By muting the General Assembly’s prophetic voice, this overture compromises the church’s ability to confront evil and would lead back to the “spirituality of the church.” The “Spirituality of the Church” is a long discredited view held by Presbyterians who resisted attempts to overturn Jim Crow laws. Observing that confronting segregation cost the church certain members (though it may have made it possible for the church to reach others), they claimed that prophetic speech distracted the church from its true, spiritual mission, which they thought was gathering believers for heaven. They encouraged the church to be silent in the face of prejudice and institutional racism, or to address it only as individuals. The framers of this overture protest very much that this is not their intent and we do not accuse them of holding racist views held by previous advocates of the spirituality of the church. But, at the same time, we note that, had previous General Assemblies been hindered the way this overture would hamstring future General Assemblies, they could not have spoken against segregation. They would not have been able to create the discomfort and, yes, constructive conflict, that challenged long-held prejudice and was integral to changing church’s culture and promoting social righteousness.

6. This overture does not, in our view, reflect the full gospel of Jesus Christ. Jesus preached, “Repent, for the kingdom of heaven has come near” (Mt. 3:2). A kingdom is more than a king, but is a system of governance. Jesus’ proclamation included a confrontation with sinful systems and structures that diminished people’s lives. For people living without hope, who despaired that evil earthly powers held their destiny, the announcement of God’s kingdom was good news. Rebellious earthly kingdoms, however, responded to the challenge of God’s in-breaking rule by crucifying Jesus. Yet God, by raising Jesus from the dead, defeated these powers, named as sin, evil, and death. The promotion of social righteousness and confrontation with the powers of evil were not incidental to Jesus’ ministry. They cannot be incidental to our ministry.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 04-01.

In reading this overture, ACREC believes it is not a good idea, if even possible, to separate the “Great Ends of the Church” for the purpose of focusing on just one at each biennial General Assembly on a rotating basis. Also, why focus only on the Great Ends of the Church? This overture limits the level of creativity and newness of our General Assemblies.

The overture also proposes that, “Every third General Assembly [every six years] ... be called together to consider all amendments to the Constitution that have been properly submitted. All overtures to ... be considered by the General Assembly ... must have the endorsement of no fewer than [one-third] of the presbyteries in the PC(USA).” Six years is too long a period of time before considering and making necessary changes. (Book of Order F-2.02: “Yet the church, in obedience to Jesus Christ, is open to the reform of its standards of doctrine as well as of governance. The church affirms Ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda scundum verbum Dei. ...”) We must continue to be able to respond to changes within the church as guided by the Spirit. Also this proposal would require that one-third (fifty-eight) presbyteries concur in any overture before it can be considered. This would place an enormous burden on presbyteries, particularly small presbyteries, to obtain that number of concurrences. Currently, overtures submitted must have the concurrence of at least one other presbytery in order to be considered. It is then the work of the General Assembly committees to study, debate, and perfect overtures before recommending to the assembly of the whole. Minority reports on overtures are also submitted to the assembly for consideration.

04 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THE WAY FORWARD

This procedure would obviously reduce both the frequency of considering Book of Order amendments, and the number of amendments reaching the General Assembly even in the designated year.

This overture may affect the capacity of General Assembly entities such as the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) or special committees to propose amendments, limiting proposals to presbyteries alone. If not, it would result in a higher percentage of business coming from those sources compared to presbyteries.

The overture would preclude projects such as the revision of the Directory for Worship, unless those working on such projects first submitted their work to the presbyteries for a vote prior to consideration by the more inclusive group gathered in General Assembly. How would differences among the presbyteries be handled? It also may conflict with the responsibility of synods to propose measures to the General Assembly (G-3.0402), or remove from synods the ability to propose this sort of measure.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 04-01.

The General Assembly does not exist to serve the individual churches that make up the PC(USA), nor do the churches exist to serve the General Assembly. The General Assembly is the church, an extension of the mission, ministry, and work of the individual congregations to create a connectional, unified, and greater witness for Jesus Christ in the world. A collective voice for justice in the world and in the church is important and does more than any one congregation could do.

The Six Great Ends of the Church collectively speak to the call and ministry of the church, and each is interwoven and builds on the others. While each one could arguably have a gender justice bend to them, it is unclear who decides what issues will fit for each General Assembly and what the criteria will be for each of the Six Great Ends.

Issues of gender justice, sexism, and patriarchy are recurring and must be addressed in a timely matter. Silencing and telling women who are oppressed to wait for the appropriate assembly gathering further marginalizes and silences the voices of women and the issues important to women.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-01

Comment on Item 04-01—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 04-01, on amending G-3.0503 and G-6.04 regarding meetings of the General Assembly and amending the Constitution.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the experience of commissioners and advisory delegates at the assembly.

COGA sees no issue with using the six Great Ends of the Church as guides in the assembly’s discernment, but cautions the assembly to remember that the six Great Ends of the Church could be used in one voice and not broken into six individual mandates.

Item 04-01 brings an idea to the General Assembly that would radically re-form the focus and function of its work. The General Assembly, as the highest council in our Form of Government, exists to speak as an expression of the churches that form the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We meet as the General Assembly to “[constitute] the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love, and witness” (G-3.0501). COGA’s chief concern with this overture is the ability of the General Assembly to be able to live into its mandate from the Book of Order to “... constitute the bond of union, community, and mission...” If the General Assembly only discerned, passed, and sent to the presbyteries overtures to amend the Book of Order every three assemblies, or six years, could the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) fully live into the above Book of Order prescription? COGA is convinced that God’s spirit moves in new and exciting ways each day, so it is our calling as God’s church to respond to God’s movements in the world quickly, faithfully, and creatively. COGA respectfully asks commissioners and advisory delegates to consider how we live into the hope that is our calling as we discern the mind of Christ and speak that discernment to the presbyteries.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 04-01

Comment on Item 04-01—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

This overture asks the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to require certain proposed actions and votes to achieve percentages of support at levels that assure they will not be considered by future General Assemblies and assure defeat of those that are.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully reminds the assembly that any General Assembly cannot bind the subsequent General Assemblies. Historically, actions that require supermajority of approval of presbyteries have not passed because it limits access to and limits participation in the decision-making process of the church. In effect, it limits the ability of assemblies to discern the will of God.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching, from across the church in accordance with F-1-0403. Its Constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

On Amending Standing Rule B.2.b. to Add the Category “Presbyter Advisory Delegates”—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

The Presbytery of the Foothills overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to amend the Standing Rules of the General Assembly as follows:

1. Amend Standing Rule B.2.b. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“b. There shall be ~~four~~ five categories of advisory delegates: young adult, theological student; missionary, ~~and~~ ecumenical, and executive presbyter. When the ratio of advisory delegates to commissioners exceeds one to three, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall be authorized to make changes to the Standing Rules to create a ratio of less than one to three. The expenses of each of the first four advisory delegates shall be paid by the General Assembly (see Standing Rule I.3.) on the same basis as the expenses of commissioners (see Standing Rule B.2.f.(2) below for exception). The expenses for the executive presbyter advisory delegate shall be paid by the presbytery on the same basis as expenses for commissioners.”

2. Amend Standing Rule B.2. by adding a new paragraph “h.” to read as follows

“h. Presbyter Advisory Delegates

“For each General Assembly, 20 percent of the presbyteries may elect an executive presbyter advisory delegate (EPAD) who shall ordinarily be the presbytery executive (or person operating as the chief executive of the presbytery by any other title) to be an advisory delegate to the General Assembly. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall design a rotation system among the presbyteries to accomplish this.”

Rationale

Presbytery executives have a unique perspective, seeing intimately into the lives of congregations and closely into the life of the General Assembly at the same time.

This perspective gives them a view of the whole church in a way that few others have.

They care deeply about the life of the congregations and pastors they serve, and they care about the mission of the General Assembly as the whole Church ministers to the world.

The voice of presbytery executives has been systematically diminished for more than thirty years because they have no say at General Assembly meetings unless they are elected a commissioner. This might happen only once in an executive’s career because of the method commissioners are chosen. This important voice is effectively minimized at the assembly.

The voice of presbytery executives is very much needed at the assembly to keep the whole church in perspective and to prevent the assembly from seeming like an “other.”

Standing Rule B.2.c. would not be changed, so executive presbyter advisory delegates would have the same privileges as other advisory delegates. That is, they would serve on a committee with voice and vote and would have voice on the floor of the assembly.

Presbyteries would cover the expenses of executive presbyter advisory delegates, so financial implications to the assembly would not be a concern.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 04-02.

Many understand that the purpose of advisory delegates is to provide a voice to those who are likely to be underrepresented in presbyteries. Presently, in addition to the teaching and ruling elder commissioners, advisory delegates consist of youth, theological students, missionaries, and ecumenical delegates. Executive presbyters (EPs) are (usually) members of the presbytery and eligible to be commissioners should the presbytery highly value their voice in this role; If not commissioners, they usually have close access to them, with great ability to make their views known.

Are some EPs seeking even more opportunity to influence their own presbytery's commissioners, sitting among them in plenary—half of whom know that their ability to find another call will be affected by the EP during reference checks? Sometimes EPs are perceived as controllers and authoritarians and certainly not advisers. Further, insofar as EPs can interpret the actions of the General Assembly so that General Assembly does not seem like an “other,” if they are not already working at that task, they are derelict in their duty regardless of whether or not they personally agree with the actions of the General Assembly.

Adding more advisory delegates would exacerbate the identified problem of the high proportion of advisory delegates to commissioners, especially in committees. The current Manual mandates that the ratio of advisory delegates to commissioners cannot exceed one to three [Standing Rule B.2.b], and in 2016 the OGA will be strict about the deadline for receiving the names of YAADs (December 21) in order to stay within that mandate (expecting that some presbyteries will lose their opportunity to have a YAAD by missing the deadline). With thirty plus more advisory delegates, what has to give? Or, this would require another amendment to the Manual, to remove the mandated limit on the ratio.

Since expenses of commissioners are paid by the General Assembly, what does it mean that “The expenses for the executive presbyter advisory delegate shall be paid by the presbytery on the same basis as expenses for commissioners”?

Why the EP and not the stated clerk—which is, at least, a constitutional office?

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-02

Comment on Item 04-02—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 04-02, on amending Standing Rule B.2.b. to add the category “Presbyter Advisory Delegates.”

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly's oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the experience of commissioners and advisory delegates at the assembly.

Item 04-02 is similar to Item 03-14 from the 221st General Assembly (2010), which came as a commissioners' resolution to the assembly. This motion was defeated by a margin of 63-452. In addition to issues of changing presbytery leadership models—specifically the elimination of presbytery “executive” positions and the reality that many presbytery leader position remain unfilled (twenty-five unfilled and most are not searching for permanent leadership)—COGA remains concerned that the addition of 35 voices to the approximately 120 voices already granted permission to speak on issues related to their entity may bog down the General Assembly with too many voices wishing to speak on business before the assembly. Additionally, as the membership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) dwindles and we struggle to achieve the one advisory delegate to every three commissioners mandate in the Standing Rules, COGA sees this item as a barrier to achieve the parity that is unique to our polity.

On Amending G-6.04e. to Require a Two-Thirds Majority Vote to Amend the Constitution—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

The Presbytery of the Foothills overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to do the following:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-6.04e be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

~~“e. The Stated Clerk receives written advice that a proposed amendment to the Book of Order has received the affirmative votes of a majority two-thirds majority of all the presbyteries. The proposed amendment so approved shall become effective one year following the adjournment of the assembly transmitting the proposed amendment. The proposed amendment, if approved and enacted by the next General Assembly, shall become effective at the close of that General Assembly meeting.”~~

2. Engage the following approval process:

The thusly amended Book of Order, along with whatever other Book of Order amendments approved by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), will be sent out to presbyteries for a vote, and upon achieving a two-thirds majority, the 223rd General Assembly (2018) shall vote to ratify this change.

Rationale

Constitutions are social documents that assert and affirm the core beliefs, values, principles, and appropriate rules to express the given identity of a people. As such, constitutions are core social identity documents and should be stable across extended periods of time. In our American political experience this has been the case. The United States has only amended the Constitution a total of twenty-seven times across its near two and a half centuries (and only 17 times since the original first ten amendments).

In the formation of the PC(USA), the church chose to dilute its understanding of Constitution by creating a Book of Order that was a hybrid of a constitution and manual of operations. In doing so the democratic principle (“majority rule”) was raised above the constitutional principle (“supermajority to amend”). This choice led to not only a loss of a stable understanding of our core identity, but it also promoted factionalism within the denomination. The passage of this amendment will appropriately restore stability to our core identity document, reassert the constitutional principle, and aid the church in regaining an appropriate understanding of engaging in patient discernment of the Will of Christ for His Church.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 04-03

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 04-03.

This overture would change the requirements for approval of amendments to the Book of Order to mirror the requirements for amending the Book of Confessions: General Assembly approval, two-thirds of presbyteries approval, and enacted by a second General Assembly. Approval of this overture would overturn the historical and constitutional rights of the majority and minority.

Item 04-03 raises a fundamental issue of fairness. Everything in the current Book of Order was approved by a majority vote of the presbyteries.

In 1989, 1993, 1998, and 2000, the General Assembly considered requests to increase over a majority vote by which some or all of the steps in the process of amendment of the Book of Order may be approved. Most recently, this concept was considered in Item 03-06 during the 219th General Assembly (2010), which rejected increasing the approval requirements to a two-thirds vote.

The PC(USA) has historically understood since 1797 that a majority shall govern (F-3.0205). This overture creates a scenario in which the votes that produce an amendment at the General Assembly or approved in the presbyteries are by majority vote, but the ultimate approval of the amendment requires a cumulative two-thirds vote of the presbyteries.

The process to amend the Book of Order has a long history of governance by a majority that protects the rights of the minority while enabling the majority to exercise its will. While there are instances within the Book of Order that require more than a majority vote for approval, these are usually for specific exceptions to rules and requirements established by majority vote. The two-thirds vote required in “the process [of amending] the confessions of the church is deliberately demanding, requiring a high degree of consensus across the church” (F-2.02). The confessions establish standards by which we order our common life and mission.

Section G-6.01 states that the current procedures for amendment “are understood as a means to faithfulness” to the PC(USA) seeking to be “‘the church reformed, always to be reformed according to the Word of God’ in the power of the Spirit” (F-2.02). Those procedures include the balancing of majority and minority rights by requiring a majority of both the General Assembly and the presbyteries for amendments to the Book of Order.

The concerns over minority viewpoints have been considered previously. For example: (1) The Report of the Special Committee on Historic Principles, Conscience and Church Government (adopted by the UPC General Assembly, 1983) states, “The church protects its own minority point of view as if it were protecting its future, recognizing that the dissenter may well represent the will of God. The church makes explicit provisions for the protection of those whose positions are in the minority” (p. 8). (2) The 1952 General Assembly (PCUSA) considered the rights of a majority to decide issues stating, “It is of the very essence of the Presbyterian Church’s faith that a majority of Christians are more likely to understand the will of God aright than are a minority.” The rights of a minority, which are less than a majority, should not block an action of the majority.

The final paragraph of this overture is confusing as to its intent. It appears to apply the proposed amendment, if approved, to all amendments referred to the presbyteries by the 222nd General Assembly (2016). Until the current G-6.04 is amended, all amendments are governed by that section: General Assembly action, majority vote of the presbyteries, and enactment on the one-year anniversary of the adjournment of the General Assembly. If approved, this amendment cannot be retroactively applied to other amendments referred to the presbyteries by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), but will govern amendments referred by future General Assemblies.

The ACC notes that Robert’s Rules of Order (pp.400–402) uses the terms “majority” and “two-thirds vote.” These are the terms used throughout the Book of Order and in this rationale.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 04-03.

In addition to requiring a supermajority of the presbyteries to approve an amendment, this overture seems to propose requiring a second General Assembly (GA) vote, and the delay of another year—becoming effective not a year after adjournment of the General Assembly that proposes it, but after the close of the General Assembly two years later. (So it seems that the GA following the General Assembly for Constitutional Change proposed in Item 04-01 will also have to deal with amendments.) Not very nimble or adaptable in a changing world.

Supermajorities are required in Robert’s Rules of Order primarily to protect the rights of minorities to be heard. This would extend the power to a minority to obstruct change that the majority favors, threatening the principle that “a majority shall govern” (F-3.0205).

The Foothills authors have made reference to the few times that the United States Constitution has been amended, in contrast to the fairly regular amendment of the Book of Order; however, this is not an apt analogy. Governing the USA requires thousands of federal laws and regulations in addition to a Constitution, not to mention fifty state constitutions and thousands more state and local laws.

The proposed “approval process” isn’t entirely clear. Does this mean that presbyteries would vote on the whole Book of Order as it would be amended by the 222nd General Assembly (2016), with the amendment proposed in Item 04-03 and any others coming out of the 222nd, and that this approval would have to be made by a 2/3 supermajority and the 223rd General Assembly (2018)—in order to establish a base line Constitution (Part 2) that is forever after harder to amend? Or just that this amendment would need 2/3? It could be pretty challenging to get a 2/3 vote for effectively freezing every single provision in the current Book of Order; and would seem to require a 2/3 vote for every amendment proposed by the 222nd. Would they all have to wait until 2018 to take effect? (In response to a question, the Foothills authors were unclear about what they were proposing, but did not seem to be contemplating a vote on the whole Book of Order.)

In either case, the General Assembly does not have the power to set aside the provisions of the current Book of Order in order to do this. At the point of voting on this proposed amendment, it would be subject to the simple majority of the presbyteries.

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) does not have the power to instruct the 223rd General Assembly (2018) that it “shall vote to ratify.”

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-03

Comment on Item 04-03—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 04-03, on amending G-6.04e. to require a two-thirds majority vote to amend the Constitution.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk . . .” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the experience of commissioners and advisory delegates at the assembly.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) understanding of church polity tells us that we look first to Scripture, which is the expressed essence of who we are as the people of God (Book of Order, F-1.01); second to the Book of Confessions, which bear witness to God’s grace in Jesus Christ (F-2.01); and third to the Book of Order, which orders the church for mission and ministry (Chapter Three of the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity, F-3.00). If the assembly chooses to approve Item 04-03, this would delay amendments to the Book of Order deemed necessary by the previous assembly, which would cause confusion and divisiveness in our mission and ministry. COGA respectfully asks commissioners and advisory delegates to consider how we live into the hope that is our calling as we discern the mind of Christ and speak that discernment as an expression of the church and apply it to God’s tasks for us. Additionally, COGA notes the peculiar nature of voting to increase the majority to two-thirds with a simple majority vote.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 04-03

Comment on Item 04-03—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

This overture asks the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to require certain proposed actions and votes to achieve percentages of support at levels that assure they will not be considered by future General Assemblies and assure defeat of those that are.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully reminds the assembly that any General Assembly cannot bind subsequent General Assemblies. Historically, actions that require supermajority of approval of presbyteries have not passed because it limits access to and limits participation in the decision-making process of the church. In effect, it limits the ability of assemblies to discern the will of God.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching, from across the church in accordance with F-1-0403. Its Constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

Item 04-04

On Adding G-3.0105c. to Permit a Presbytery to Abstain on Constitutional Changes—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

The Presbytery of the Foothills overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-3.0105 be amended by adding a new paragraph “c.” to read as follows:

“c. A presbytery may register as ‘Abstaining’ when voting on General Assembly proposals recommending constitutional changes.”

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to work for peace, unity, and purity, and its member congregations are committed to reducing any factors that obscure Christian unity.

Church unity depends solely on Jesus Christ and not an unlikely if not impossible unanimity on the range of particular and partisan issues we encounter in society and culture.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) continues to press votes on divisive issues that have disrupted the peace, unity, and purity of the church and diminished membership and mission momentum.

When abstaining on constitutional matters, a presbytery decision to abstain will not be recorded as a “no” vote. However, a majority of presbyteries will be required to vote “yes” for a constitutional amendment to pass.

A presbytery decision to register as abstaining may be accompanied by that presbytery’s rationale for abstaining. The abstaining presbytery, for instance, may abstain from conviction that a vote to change the constitution at that time is inadvisable, divisive, and that further prayer, discussion, and discernment will benefit the church.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 04-04

Advice on Item 04-04—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the General Assembly disapprove Item 04-04.

Under the current process of amending the Constitution of the PC(USA), no presbytery is required to vote on any particular amendment. The freedom to not vote already is present. If a presbytery wishes to abstain, they simply should not vote.

Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised (RONR), 11th edition, specifically states that the chairperson “should not call for abstentions in taking a vote, since the number of members who respond to such a call is meaningless” (p. 45, ll. 14–18). In RONR, an abstention does not count as a “no” vote, but has the same effect—it does not move the affirmative vote forward.

If the assembly wishes to allow the option of presbyteries abstaining on voting on Constitutional amendments, the better place to make that amendment would be G-6.04, by inserting this as a new paragraph “e,” and renumbering the following paragraph.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 04-04.

The rationale on Item 04-04 explains this as yet another way for presbyteries to avoid taking a stand on anything that people might disagree about. But since they would still have to vote (unless someone in the leadership has been given unilateral permission to deny the presbytery the opportunity to consider the matter), it's unclear how voting to “abstain” on a matter that generates enough passion to make it worth abstaining would be more acceptable/less divisive than letting your “yes” be “yes” and your “no” be “no.”

Both those in favor and those opposed should be aware that an abstention has the effect of a negative vote in situations like this where a majority of the total number of presbyteries (or if Foothills prevails in other overtures, a supermajority) is required. Robert's Rules of Order for parliamentary guidance says: “Do abstention votes count? Answer: The phrase “abstention votes” is an oxymoron, an abstention being a refusal to vote. To abstain means to refrain from voting, and, as a consequence, there can be no such thing as an “abstention vote.” In the usual situation, where either a majority vote or a two-thirds vote is required, abstentions have absolutely no effect on the outcome of the vote since what is required is either a majority or two thirds of the votes cast. On the other hand, if the vote required is a majority or two thirds of the members present, or a majority or two thirds of the entire membership, an abstention will have the same effect as a “no” vote. Even in such a case, however, an abstention is not a vote and is not counted as a vote. [RONR (11th ed.), p. 400, ll. 7-12; p. 401, ll. 8-11; p. 403, ll. 13-24; see also p. 66 of RONRIB.]”

It's rare, but presbyteries have abstained or voted to take no action already, without this encouragement/authorization, so why is this needed?

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-04

Comment on Item 04-04—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 04-03, to permit a presbytery to abstain on constitutional changes.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly's oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the experience of commissioners and advisory delegates at the assembly.

On Adding a New Standing Rule L.2. Identifying the Right of Presbyteries and Synods to Submit Overtures Changing the Standing Rules—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

The Presbytery of the Foothills overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to amend Standing Rule L. by adding a new section 2. and renumbering current sections 2. and 3. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Amending the Standing Rules

“2. Presbyteries and synods may submit overtures to amend or suspend the standing rules. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), in consultation with the Stated Clerk, may offer their advice on any such overtures in the same way that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) offers advice on amendments to the Constitution.”

~~“2. 3.~~ The Standing Rules of the General Assembly may be amended by a majority vote of the commissioners present and voting. A motion to amend the rules is debatable.

“Suspending the Standing Rules

~~“3. 4.~~ A motion to suspend the standing rules is not debatable and shall require a two-thirds vote of the total enrollment of the commissioners.”

Rationale

A fundamental principle of Reformed polity is that the people shall have a vote in the way they are governed. The standing rules govern the meetings of the General Assembly in much detail, and the structure of these meetings has a great impact on synods, presbyteries, churches, and church members.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, together with the Stated Clerk, constitute a body much too limited to adequately represent the broader church in structuring General Assembly meetings.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 04-05.

A governing body or council should be the only one responsible for amending, deleting, or suspending the rules that govern them. Currently, the Stated Clerk, in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), reviews and recommends to the next session of General Assembly any changes in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly deemed necessary. A process to regularly review the Manual and Standing Rules and make recommendations is in place. The General Assembly may amend the rules by majority vote and may suspend rules by two-thirds vote. (The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) consists equally of fourteen ruling and teaching elders from across the United States, plus the Stated Clerk and the Moderator and Vice Moderator of General Assembly.)

Has the General Assembly the right to amend, change, delete, or rewrite the manual and standing rules of presbyteries and synods? Why should these two councils have the power to change the manual and rules of the General Assembly?

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-05

Comment on Item 04-05—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 04-05, on adding a new Standing Rule L.2., identifying the right of presbyteries and synods to submit overtures changing the Standing Rules.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the experience of commissioners and advisory delegates at the assembly.

Presbyteries and synods are given permission in the Book of Order (G-3.0302d) and the Manual of the General Assembly (Standing Rule A.3.c.) to overture the General Assembly and are not given restriction as to what business can be brought to the assembly. COGA advises that Item 04-05 is already allowed by the above citations and, additionally, by Standing Rule L.2.

On Amending G-3.05 On the Review of the Manual of the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of the Foothills.

The Presbytery of the Foothills overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-3.05 be amended by inserting a new section, G-3-0502 and renumbering section G-3.0502 as G-3.0503 and section G-3.0503 as G-3.0504 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“G-3.0502 Organizational Review

“The General Assembly has the responsibility to regularly review the Manual of the General Assembly. Presbyteries and synods may submit overtures to amend, delete, or suspend sections of the Manual of the General Assembly.

~~“G-3.0502~~ G-3.0503 Relations with Other Councils [Text remains unchanged.]

~~“G-3.0503~~ G-3.0504 Meetings and Quorum [Text remains unchanged.]”

Rationale

A fundamental principle of Reformed polity is that the people shall have a vote in the way they are governed. The General Assembly Manual of Operations and standing rules govern the meetings of the General Assembly in much detail, and the structure of these meetings has a great impact on the synods, presbyteries, churches, and church members.

Both church and secular history show that bureaucracies, once established, have a tendency to become entrenched, isolated, and self-perpetuating far beyond their original purpose and function. As there has been a revolution in communications and as the rapidity of social and political change shows no sign of abating, it is important for us to have structures that are nimble and adaptable. Therefore, it is important for the Body of the General Assembly to regularly address and review the operations of the church.

Advice on Item 04-06—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 04-06.

Constitutional amendment is not necessary to achieve the desired result. The Manual of the General Assembly is reviewed prior to each biennial assembly. Presbyteries and synods may currently send overtures that deal with all aspects of the General Assembly, including its manual.

On Merging the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly into a Single Entity—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

The Presbytery of Santa Fe overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to merge the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly upon the following time schedule and to replace them with the following structure and staffing:

1. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs that at the conclusion of the 223rd General Assembly (2018) the Presbyterian Mission Agency and its Board, the PC(USA), A Corporation, and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly be dissolved.

2. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs that a Council of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Council”), be established, effective at the conclusion of the 223rd General Assembly (2018) composed of the following voting members:

- a. A chair who shall be the Moderator of the General Assembly.
- b. A vice chair who shall be the Vice-Moderator of the General Assembly.
- c. A secretary who shall be the Stated Clerk/Director of Presbytery Mission Support of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
- d. A treasurer who shall be elected by and from among the other members of the Council.
- e. The stated clerks of each synod, during their respective tenure as synod stated clerk.
- f. One representative from each synod, elected as follows:

(1) Nominees to serve as representatives of the synods shall be nominated utilizing the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) and its processes, to ensure balance/diversity, insofar as possible, of racial ethnic, teaching/ruling elder, gender, age, and theological perspective.

(2) Nominees for the position of synod representative to the Council shall be open to anyone interested in the position; however, their presbytery of record must endorse their candidacy. A presbytery may endorse more than one candidate.

(3) The GANC shall seek candidates with the following credentials/experience, recognizing that younger persons may not have the experience in the life of the church to meet all of these church credentials/experience:

- (a) Be an elder (teaching or ruling) in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
- (b) Active participation at all levels of life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through
 - (i) demonstrated leadership/active participation within mid councils (i.e. moderator of synod, moderator of presbytery, etc.);
 - (ii) demonstrated leadership/active participation at national levels of the church [i.e. service boards of agencies of the PC(USA)];
 - (iii) active participation at meetings of the General Assembly (i.e. as a commissioner or volunteer staff—not simply as an observer);
 - (iv) demonstrated understanding of the polity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

(4) The GANC shall give consideration in making its nominations that synod representatives shall have the following responsibilities/expectations as members of the Council to their respective synod and presbyteries:

- (a) Actively engage in two-way communication/dialogue between the Council and the synod, and presbyteries of that synod.
- (b) Report to the synod assembly at each of the respective synod assembly’s meetings.
- (c) Insofar as the respective synods may by their manual of operation provide that their synod representative on the Council shall be an ex-officio, without vote, member of their synod.

04 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THE WAY FORWARD

(5) Direct that the elected synod representatives set forth above shall be elected for a term of two years and for a total of no more than six years of continuous service on the Council.

(6) Direct that the elected synod representatives shall not automatically be reelected and that the decision of whether to re-nominate a person shall be subject to the approval of the respective synod before being considered for re-nomination.

3. That the 222nd General Assembly (2016) direct that the day-to-day operations of the Council shall be overseen by one person who shall be the Stated Clerk/Director of Presbytery Mission Support effective at the conclusion of the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

4. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs that effective at the conclusion of the 223rd General Assembly (2018), the Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) become the Interim Director of Presbytery Mission Support.

5. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs that the major functions of the Council shall include

- a. Constitutional Services, in support of the synods, presbyteries, and congregations;
- b. Presbytery Mission Support, including support of Domestic and International Mission;
- c. Service as the secular corporate expression of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

6. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs that the committee structure of the Council shall include, at a minimum:

- a. Leadership (Council Chair, Vice-Chair, Stated Clerk/Director of Presbytery Mission Support, Treasurer and four others from the Council to ensure teaching/ruling elder, racial ethnic, theological, and gender balance);
- b. Finance & Audit;
- c. Domestic Mission Support;
- d. International Mission Support;
- e. Personnel Committee;
- f. Task forces, etc., as the need may be identified).

7. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs the establishment of a committee composed of four members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board of Directors, four members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and two commissioners from the 222nd General Assembly (2016), staffed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director and the Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to, consistent with this overture:

- a. work out the details of merging the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and PC(USA), A Corporation, including addressing secular legal issues, and changes to the Book of Order and the General Assembly Manual of Operations;
- b. establish a two-year staffing plan (including budget) and plan of reorganization to be brought to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) for its consideration and approval;
- c. create such other positions as may be necessary for the work and administration of the organization, including a Chief Financial Officer, Deputy Director for Presbytery Mission Support, Associate Stated Clerk for Constitutional Services, etc.). (Other staffing will be subject to realignment of the entire organization and its mission to serve the presbyteries and congregations in their mission and ministry; BUT it shall include support of racial ethnic domestic mission & ministry and the 1001 Worshipping Communities Initiative.)

8. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs that the Council

- a. establish a two-year staffing plan and plan of organization (including a budget) for the work and mission of the Council to be brought to the 224th General Assembly (2020) for its consideration and approval;
- b. propose plans of staffing, work, and mission, and a budget for consideration by the General Assembly every two years subsequent to the approval of the initial plan of reorganization;
- c. create such other positions as may be necessary for the work and administration of the organization, including a Chief Financial Officer, Deputy Director for Presbytery Mission Support, Associate Stated Clerk for Constitutional Services, etc.). (Other staffing will be subject to continued review of the entire organization and its mission to serve the presbyteries and congregations in their mission and ministry; BUT it shall include support of racial ethnic domestic mission & ministry and the 1001 Worshiping Communities Initiative.)

9. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs that the Council nominate persons to serve on a search committee to be established for the purpose of nominating and recommending for election by the 224th General Assembly (2020) a Stated Clerk/Director of Presbyterian Mission Support to oversee the day-to-day work and mission of the Council.

10. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs that the Council shall also serve as the secular corporate expression of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with

- a. its officers being:
 - (1) President—the Moderator of the General Assembly,
 - (2) Vice President—The Vice Moderator of the General Assembly,
 - (3) Executive Vice-President/Secretary—The Stated Clerk/Director of Presbyterian Mission Support,
 - (4) Treasurer—The Treasurer of the Council elected by the Council from within its own membership;
- b. and its directors being the members of the Council.

Alternate Resolution:

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) recommends that the Co-Moderators of the 222nd General Assembly (2016), together with the Moderator and Vice-Moderator of the 221st General Assembly (2014), name a Way Forward Commission to study and identify a vision for the structure and function of the General Assembly agencies of the PC(USA). That vision shall take into account the ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), but shall not be bound by the current configuration of those ministries, except where mandated by the church’s Constitution. The mandate of the commission is to engage/contract a qualified, examination team that may include some or all of the All Agency Review team, with the requisite skills and abilities to assess institutional performance, both internally among the agencies and externally as they interface with the congregations. This examination team is charged with conducting a comprehensive, detailed analysis that will provide clearly detailed, measurable recommendations for improvements to the commission for implementation by the agencies. The commission shall further describe and implement a General-Assembly level staffing pattern that will accomplish its vision. The commission shall be guided in its development and articulation of this vision and structure by Reformed ecclesiology as expressed in our Constitution.

In the discharge of its responsibilities, the commission shall:

- 1. Integrate the recommendations provided by the All Agency Review Committee, the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and the Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly.
 - a. All recommendations should be reviewed by the commission to determine which should be implemented by the appropriate agencies.
 - b. The commission will monitor implementation across the agencies
- 2. Visit with and explore
 - a. the best practices of other national church bodies,
 - b. the best practices of corporations and nonprofits, as deemed helpful.
- 3. Consult with
 - a. seminary faculty and presidents,
 - b. presbytery and synod leaders.
- 4. Explore other resources they deem helpful and prudent

And shall be empowered to

- 1. take such administrative actions in both OGA and PMA as may move the General Assembly staff in the direction of its vision;

2. recommend to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) such changes in Standing Rules as may move the church in the direction of its vision;
3. recommend to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) any amendments to the Book of Order as may move the church in the direction of its vision.
4. explore the best way for Shared Services to serve these agencies.

The commission shall be comprised of no more than twelve voting members (with a quorum to be a simple majority of seven) at least two of whom should be members of the 2016 Assembly Committee on the Way Forward, with every effort made to include an advisory delegate from that committee. The commission membership will include a representative from both the PMA Review Committee and the OGA Review Committee, a representative from both the current Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), and at least one mid council staff person.

We agree with the PMA Review Committee that the commission consist of the following:

1. The commission shall be made up of ruling and teaching elders with broad geographic, racial, ethnic, and gender diversity, a total of at most twelve commissioners.
2. The PMA and OGA will each appoint a staff person to serve as staff support for the commission.
3. The commission's work will be informed by other churchwide conversations on the future of the church and its structure.
4. The assembly will allocate sufficient resources so that this commission can meet regularly and consult with other PC(USA) constituents, as well as others who could provide insight into the process. There should be at least two face-to-face meetings in one year and with as many electronic meetings as deemed necessary.
5. Recommendations for any missional and structural changes will be brought to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) in compliance with all Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

Rationale for Alternate Resolution

The business before this committee consistently called for study of our current structure, expressed concern for the culture and administration of the PMA and OGA bodies, and posited a hope for change that will make us a more efficient, inclusive, culturally sensitive, and visionary denomination.

We appreciate the substantial work of the PMA and OGA review committees and those who developed and concurred with the amendments that have been brought to our committee. As we pursued responses to what was proposed, we recognized that it would be better to first identify the purposes and immediate foci that will govern our next steps and then address issues of structure and staffing.

We have limited the size of the commission in response to studies, and in consideration of our own process, which indicate that the decision-making abilities of committees is diminished as size increases. The inclusion of a young adult advisory delegate (YAAD) is a direct response to the insightful, articulate input our committee has received from its YAAD participants. We believe their involvement is an important component in achieving greater inclusivity and broadened perspective as we make our way forward.

Rationale for Original Overture

A bicameral system is no longer the norm throughout the rest of the church and it can reduce duplication of effort/financial expense. National expression of the church should be no different.

Direct accountability to the General Assembly is essential.

This should facilitate clarity of purpose and mission—forces review and reconfiguration. Form should follow function (support of presbytery mission).

As currently structured, members of the PMA Board and COGA rarely have any accountability to, or connection with, their synods and presbyteries.

Members of a new unicameral council should be directly accountable to the General Assembly and be required to interact with their respective mid councils. This should make that connection more important and more accountable. This will require connection and a reporting stream that now does not exist between the Board of PMA and COGA and the rest of the church.

The hope is that eventually the Stated Clerk and Executive (or its equivalent) positions will become one throughout the synods and as members of the Council; the new national expression of the church will become even more accountable and representative of the needs and concerns of the presbyteries and their congregations.

This creates a structure that is more related to the church and its function than to a national corporation that seems to have lost its identity as a church organization engaged in the work and ministry of our Lord, as expressed by the presbyteries and their congregations.

This is about being an ecclesial body, not a secular corporation. For a long time that has been the greatest criticism of the national expression of the PC(USA), that it has become a secular corporation rather than a national organization engaged in and governed as an ecclesial body.

This should create an environment in which the role of the national expression of the church is to serve the presbyteries and their congregations, rather than ensure the institutional life of the national expression of the PC(USA).

This reorganization will clarify roles and who speaks on behalf of and represents the PC(USA) in all facets of its national expression.

The tension between a Stated Clerk and Executive Director will be eliminated.

Further, with the Moderator of the General Assembly serving as chair of the Council and president of the secular corporation, and the elected voice of the assembly, coupled with one person on staff, the Chief Ecclesial/Executive Officer (the Stated Clerk), with a complimentary role makes mixed messages from “the top” less likely.

Decreasing funding makes it imperative to consider alternative models of leadership—both per capita and mission, and reduction of reserves in each area (per capita and mission).

Other mainline/partner denominations have functions consolidated into one position.

This provides for more strategic partnerships with mid councils and partner denominations.

Current upheaval in PMA and timing of election of a new Stated Clerk and a new Executive Director of PMA provides an opportunity for assessment and revision in response to changing realities.

Reduced staffs in both OGA and PMA within last twelve to twenty-four months speaks to a need to streamline our national structure.

This should increase our capacity to be nimble in response to evolving denominational issues, funding patterns, mid council and external mission priorities, and responses/reactions.

This creates an opportunity for a more cohesive presentation of ecclesial and mission priorities across PC(USA) that reflects the realities of the life of the congregations, presbyteries, and synods.

Increasing financial pressures on mid councils are resulting in decreased staffs in mid councils (including some with no staff), and moving toward significant decreases in amounts of any money sent to the national structures.

Accountability to the General Assembly is critical. For example, money is diverted to a non-PC(USA) agency. Four months later, PMA goes to the General Assembly and does not disclose that information. There must be a direct accountability to the General Assembly by PMA.

The expression of the church in all manifestations—synods, presbyteries (mid councils), General Assembly—has become increasingly corporate in its expression rather than mission-driven. This is an opportunity to put the ecclesial expression of the church as the primary focus and to acknowledge as a church that we are called into being (Book of Order, F-1.0203, F-1.0401, F-1.0404, F-3.0203).

There needs to be an understanding that the national expression of the church exists to facilitate the work of presbyteries and their congregations. It does not exist to be served and financed by the other councils of the church to further its own purposes.

In 1983, we moved from two corporations in PC(USA) (pensions and PC(USA), A Corporation) to six. For more than forty years we have lived with this model and though it has proved valuable in many instances, relative to the expressions of the church most related to the General Assembly, that has proven not to be true.

Money is fading. Presbyteries have pulled way back, designated some, sent other money directly to mission coworkers.

The PMA and the OGA have both downsized because of decreasing funds. They have not collaborated as they’ve done that—there is nothing compelling them to do so.

The experience of 1001 Worship Communities is a firm example of the way the national church should be resourcing the presbyteries and their congregations, allowing for proactive response to changing circumstances within and without the church.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that this item be disapproved.

First, we address our basis for speaking to this item. While the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is clearly assigned matters of Christian conscience related to social witness, it is also tasked to advise on matters that affect the church's capacity for social witness as a church within the Reformed tradition, guided by our confessions and the needs of our time.¹

Second, we agree with some of the concerns in the proponents' rationale concerning the need for a distinctively Christian character to our assembly agencies. They make some of the same points made by the Review Committee of the Presbyterian Mission Agency about secular approach and management distance from the congregations, presbyteries, and synods. But it is important to be clear: those criticisms were not made of the Office of the General Assembly, where form seems to follow function pretty consistently. As in the case of the review committee's report, however, the proponents have gathered some accurate symptoms without sufficient metrics or analysis, and are prescribing the wrong medicine, reorganization on a larger scale than is necessary. Rather than a new combined structure, the need is new vision, theologically driven program support, and effective, church-savvy leadership in the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

This Advice & Counsel memorandum will start with a summary of our objections, then turn to the logic of the council structure proposed by this overture, and conclude with an analysis of the theological, polity, and pragmatic arguments presented for this reorganization.

To summarize, the overture's proposal is not based on an actual study of the tasks performed by both bodies, it does not address the reasons why the Presbyterian Mission Agency sought a nonprofit board rather than council structure, it clearly minimizes the importance of any mission program (other than racial ethnic ministries and the 1001 worshipping communities effort), and does not reflect the complementary roles of the four councils of our church described in the Form of Government (Book of Order), specifically the purposes for General Assembly programs laid out in G-3.0501a-c.

The assertion that many bodies have combined clerk and executive functions is not a strong argument but one based primarily on the relative lack of funds and program work in those presbyteries and synods, as Presbyterian polity generally does not favor combining all powers in one executive (bishop) at any level. This item would put two key and different leadership roles in one "basket," so to speak, doubling down on a concentration of power. The recent leadership transition in the already centralized PMA would suggest that such a combination is unwise. There is certainly an ongoing need for coordination, which could be met in part by returning the Stated Clerk to be an ex officio member of the PMA Board's Executive Committee. The Stated Clerk served in that role until the early 2000s.

As for cost savings, as often predicted in corporate mergers, we see little duplication in operations. It is more important to assess the purposes served by either or both entities. The decision of the Presbyterian Foundation to outsource much of its actual funds management and to do certain kinds of program is an argument for the role of the six agency review to play a role in any study of potential consolidation. But financial arguments alone cannot address the OGA's independent responsibility to steward a deliberative council—the General Assembly, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency's responsibility to continue the mission of the many prior boards whose funds are held by the Foundation. The OGA is not a mission agency, and in our view, the PMA should be as much a mission agency as possible.

With regard to structure, the overture proposes a council comprised of synod representatives that would come into being after the 223rd General Assembly (2018), a body that would be headed by the most recent Moderator, and whose members would be elected for a maximum of three, two year terms, with higher turnover encouraged, perhaps to meet existing diversity goals with a smaller body. The immediate effect would be the loss of institutional memory in elected members, intensifying the power concentrated in the director and staff associated with finance and administration. Immediate past Moderators of the General Assembly currently become members of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, but the proposal that they would chair a combined PMA and OGA council underestimates the various kinds of work involved, and the need for informed continuity for both General Assembly functioning and the guidance of national and international mission programs.

To examine the use of synod representatives as members of the council, we note that synod executives had an ex officio role in the former United Presbyterian Church's General Assembly Mission Council, a considerably larger body that had some oversight over all assembly agencies. The overture is seeking a measure of accountability for the council members, but the content of the work of the OGA and PMA, or even their combination, should play the larger role in determining membership needs. It is also instructive to look at the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, one of our Full Communion partners. The Lutherans have nine synod-type bodies, rather than fifteen, and sixty-five presbytery-type units rather than 170, for a denomination with about 4 million members. In contrast to PC(USA) mid councils, many of which only do administrative tasks, the Lutheran units often have enough staff to maintain some capacity for mission program. If the de facto model for a council of the General Assembly proposed in Item 04-07 is a synod, and most of our Presbyterian synods do little program at this point, commissioners may see why ACSWP would be concerned about maintaining General Assembly mission capacity under this plan.

With regard to theology and vision, the limited outline provided in this item does not suggest that the combined body would have the capacity to be in serious conversation with the seminaries and mid councils of our church, and with our ecumenical partners. That conversation includes tensions and disagreements, within a bond that is based on a commitment to Jesus Christ as he is witnessed to in scripture, read with the help of our confessions. This is not to say that the current structures of the PMA have functioned at full capacity, but there are some signs of staff rebalancing and improvements in board organization. For all that the rationale to this item speaks against the “secular corporation,” their argument seems to be for a “CEO” approach. This would also eliminate the function both agencies have performed in holding each other accountable to the church as a whole.

The purpose of national agencies is not institutions for institutions’ sake, but programs that provide models and resources for identity formation and mission opportunities and care to the whole body. Historically, the General Assembly agencies play a key role in churchwide initiatives. Leaders of both the mission boards (predecessors to the PMA) and the Stated Clerk contribute unique gifts to our Presbyterian culture. “Let all be done decently and in order,” remains a key motto for our church. In our view, this proposal is not that.

Endnote for ACSWP Advice & Counsel on Item 04-07

1. The Advisory Committee draws on its own history as a distinct group of elected members dating back to 1936 in both main predecessor churches (see Item 11-09). The policy work done by ACSWP functions at the intersection of the two agencies under consideration, as the assembly assigns matters of Christian conscience to ACSWP for study, and only after approval by subsequent General Assemblies do any recommendations from those studies become policy. Policies, rather than simple “pronouncements,” require action or implementation by agencies of the General Assembly and are advisory to the other councils and individual members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Like other ongoing committees of the assembly, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is comprised of Presbyterian volunteers; due to our subject matter, a majority of our members are not pastors but persons with careers in a range of fields.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 04-07.

The structure, as proposed in this overture, does not include programmatic emphasis or advocacy for women, women’s ministries, women’s leadership development, or women in ministry. As a church that has committed to work against oppressive structures of patriarchy and sexism (Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, <https://www.pcusa.org/resource/hearing-and-singing-new-songs-god-shunning-old-dis/>), we need to commit resources and staff persons to dismantle said structures and to support women in the church. In the policy statement, Building Community Among Strangers (1999), the 211th General Assembly (1999) not only explicitly named the systemic nature of sexism and its prevalence in both society and the church but also committed to doing the work to reverse the damage of this oppression. All levels and entities of the church were urged to: “address the brokenness of male-female relationships caused by sexism and gender inequality by educating men and women about the damaging spiritual, communal, and social effects of sexism ...” (Building Community Among Strangers (1999) https://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/acswp/pdf/building-community-among-strangers.pdf, p. 15).

The 218th General Assembly (2008) renewed the call to the church to “[develop] an understanding of and ability to use a “gender lens,” that is—to view issues, institutions and actions through the lens of gender specific needs and realities; ... recognizing the intersectionality of gender and race, along with other factors such as ethnicity and class, that contribute to unique or particular experiences of oppression and/or privilege” (Hearing and Singing New Songs to God, <https://www.pcusa.org/resource/hearing-and-singing-new-songs-god-shunning-old-dis/>, p. 8).

At a minimum, ACWC would urge that if this merger is considered, gender justice is held as a priority for the PC(USA) and that priority is reflected in whatever new structure may be created.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-07

Comment on Item 04-07—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 04-07, on merging the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly into a single entity.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the Office of the General Assembly.

COGA acknowledges that the structures of the church as they were shaped in 1983 may no longer serve the needs of the changing PC(USA). However, COGA is concerned that as the assembly, and any task force or committee created by the General Assembly, consider changes to structure, it first be clear as to our denominational and ecclesial identity before we change any structure. While the overture asserts, and COGA agrees, that one function of the General Assembly and mid councils is to serve as a resource to congregations, a firmer understanding of what that means needs to emerge before the denomination undertakes a full restructuring.

The committee urges that in any action the assembly considers, appropriate steps are taken to ensure that the Stated Clerk, the denomination’s highest elected ecclesial officer, remain independent. The Stated Clerk serves an irreplaceable role in our polity by offering independent parliamentary and constitution advice to the Moderators of the General Assembly as it conducts its work. She or he thereby protects both the appearance and the reality of fairness in the General Assembly’s deliberations. Such independence could be compromised in at least two ways in a restructuring of the OGA and PMA. Placing the Stated Clerk under the supervision of another employee of the General Assembly could directly compromise his or her ability to give independent advice. On the other hand, combining the current roles of the Stated Clerk and the Presbyterian Mission Agency Executive Director could place a future Stated Clerk in the position of having to evaluate whether the right parliamentary advice on a controversial issue could cause a loss of mission funding, thereby creating an internal conflict of interest. COGA urges these concerns be weighed carefully in any decisions regarding restructuring.

COGA also suggests that if the assembly believes a task force should be formed to explore the possibility of restructuring, said task force not be limited to considering only a merger model. Similarly, the COGA supports such a task force exploring, with care, the reality of proposed synergies between the two agencies, not assumed synergies. For example, the Office of the General Assembly currently is able to procure its IT services more inexpensively from another vendor than from the Presbyterian Mission Agency. Actual review of the costs and benefits of any proposal is essential in consideration of any approach to restructuring.

If a task force is formed, COGA urges that the membership specifically include two to three current and immediate past board members from each agency. The complexity of the agencies demands that more than one person with knowledge of each agency’s history, ethos, and effectiveness be included on the task force. Further, COGA urges that no former staff members of either agency be appointed to such a task force.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 04-07

Comment on Item 04-07—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

This overture seeks to merge the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) into a single entity.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully advises that as the national structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is considered and changed, that the GACOR be included in all levels of discussion and where staff and volunteers are sought to serve. With the task to be an accountability structure for participation and representation at the national level of the church and in light of Constitutional requirements at F-1.0403 “Unity in Diversity” and G-3.0103 “Participation and Representation,” GACOR is a necessary advisor.

As all church councils above session must have implementation plans for full participation and representation and they are required to have committees on representation to advocate for diversity in leadership (G-3.0103); GACOR is an essential partner and accountability structure to enable the church to live into its foundational principles. The committee provides a portion of its role of “advocating for diversity in leadership” by advising the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC). We ask that GACOR’s role be included in any action that prescribes new decision-making bodies. Recommendations 2.f (3) and (4), 7 and 9 are such places. To do so without GACOR is to bypass the purposes of assembly actions to date. The GANC and any person or persons charged with nominating leaders should be directed to consult with GACOR in those selections and process.

Recommendation 7 directs the creation of a small council with considerable power. The responsibilities of F-1.0403 and G-3.0103 should always be operational and need to be reflected in assembly directives to remind the body of the concern for selecting decision-making bodies from the full diversity available in the church.

Recommendation 9 directs the council to nominate the search committee, which is an alteration from the common nomination processes used for executive search (GANC, with GACOR consultation). If this action is taken, GACOR requests it be a mandated consulting partner to the body offering the nominations to the church.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching, from across the church in accordance with F-1-0403. Its Constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-07

Comment on Item 04-07—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Response to Recommendation 1

The Presbytery of Santa Fe has overtured the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to merge the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board and the Office of the General Assembly in the manner and following a time schedule that is set forth in the overture. This comment does not seek to weigh in on the topic of agency consolidation, but instead focuses on one line in the overture from the Presbytery of Santa Fe: “The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs that at the conclusion of the 223rd General Assembly (2018) the Presbyterian Mission Agency and its Board, the PC(USA), A Corporation, and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly be dissolved.”

Dissolving the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (“Church Corporation”) is an unnecessary, and possibly very costly, action that should not be taken absent a compelling reason. No compelling reason to dissolve the Church Corporation has been provided in the recommendations. Neither the Office of the General Assembly nor the Presbyterian Mission Agency is a corporation. The Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency conduct all secular activities through the Church Corporation. This is in compliance with the Book of Order mandate at G-4.0101, which states in relevant part “Where permitted by civil law, each presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly shall cause a corporation to be formed and maintained and shall determine a method to constitute the board of trustees by its own rule.”

If the Church Corporation were to be dissolved, a new corporation would have to be created. If the General Assembly wishes to make changes in the Office of the General Assembly or the Presbyterian Mission Agency, a more cost-effective alternative would be to leave the Church Corporation intact and determine which functions of the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency are redundant or duplicative and consolidate those functions. (This, too, is not a simple process, but it would be less intensive than dissolving the Church Corporation and starting over with each of the church’s secular agreements and relationships.)

Any Church Corporation governance issues can be implemented through changes to the Church Corporation’s Deliverance and Articles of Incorporation with approval from General Assembly and changes to the Church Corporation’s bylaws with approval from the Presbyterian Mission Agency at the direction of the General Assembly.

[The assembly answered Item 04-08 by the action taken on Item 04-07. See pp. 37, 40.]

On Authorizing the Hiring of a Consultant to Assess the Relationship of OGA and PMA and the Need for Their Continued Existence as Two Separate Entities—From the Presbytery of St. Andrew.

The Presbytery of Saint Andrew overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to:

1. Authorize the Moderators of the 222nd and 221st General Assemblies (2016 and 2014), the moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and the moderator of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, in consultation with the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, to hire a top-tier national consultant with expertise in organizational analysis to assess and make recommendations on the nature, function, and relationship of the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency to each other and to the presbyteries and congregations of the PC(USA), including the need for their continued existence as two distinct entities.
2. Direct the Advisory Committee on the Constitution to receive the report of the consultant and make recommendations regarding the implementation of the report’s recommendations to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

Rationale

The charge given to the Mid Council Commission appointed by the 220th General Assembly (2012) (MCII) included the charge to “review the nature and function of the [Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA)] and the Office of the General Assembly [(OGA)] ... with respect to their relationship with and support of mid councils” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 22).

This portion of the charge was, presumably, the response of the 220th General Assembly (2012) to a section of the first Mid Council Commission’s report that stated:

04 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THE WAY FORWARD

In addition, even the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Mission Council need to be reviewed as to how their practices serve presbyteries in their mission to serve congregations. Over and over, stories were told about the pervasive distrust of General Assembly, about the amount of resources that go into our six-part structure, the lack of an effective and clear national strategy toward immigrant populations, and the ways in which the GAMC “competes” with presbyteries and synods for giving dollars. A flatter hierarchy with a focus on the congregation as the center of the mission of the church will not be complete until the church reconsiders the bureaucratic structures of GAMC and eliminates any competition for power or resources between the GAMC and OGA. These conditions foster a bureaucratic mentality at a time when we need to do get back to mission and ministry, doing “whatever it takes” to revitalize local congregations. It is not within the purview of commission to make such recommendations, so we call on the 220th General Assembly (2012) to establish a task force to review the nature and functions of the General Assembly offices and departments in light of the charge given to us (MCC Final Report, pp. 38 ll. 8-21; see also Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 294).

In response to its charge, MCII appointed a sub-committee to conduct an assessment of these entities from the perspective of presbyteries and synods. That sub-committee concluded that:

This admittedly limited review of the relationships that characterize the presbyteries and synods with the PMA and OGA respectively offers some insights even though it was neither broad enough nor deep enough to be definitive. Positively, the collected data do not reveal any acute or critical points of tension. Yet, the review did reflect a rather disquieting and widespread malaise concerning a sense of shared identity of the church as a whole. In the present moment, there was expressed a concern for whether the church can afford, financially and in terms of human resources, the continued existence of what are seen as two large and expensive national agencies, as well as two levels of mid council structures . . . (MCII Report, Section V.C.; see Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 326).

However, although MCII reached the conclusion that we do need “two levels of mid council structures” moving forward, it did not make any recommendations regarding the reported “concern for whether the church can afford, financially and in terms of human resources, the continued existence” of the two separate and distinct entities.

We believe that the time has come to step back and take a look at the big picture of the PC(USA)’s governance and structure for mission, which were created in an era that nearly everyone agrees is no longer our reality.

We further believe that an outside, objective assessment, while its results may need to then be interpreted in light of our Reformed faith and polity, is nevertheless not only warranted but necessary.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that this item be disapproved.

The issue is one of theology more than management. The Presbyterian Mission Agency, the real focus of this overture, has persons with management, management consulting experience, and executive search expertise on its board. For the last ten years plus, management consulting books have been a regular feature of agency board and executive staff meetings. Yet it may be that management itself cannot be separated from the content of what is being managed, perhaps especially in the case of the church. Thus, in the first instance, the definition of how one arrives at a judgment about the merger of two church agencies must be challenged. And for those who believe the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) has become too similar to a secular corporation in its operation and values, this recommendation would tend to reinforce that criticism, whatever good analysis the person (or firm) might perform.

In our Advice & Counsel memorandum on Item 04-07, we identified our assigned role as a servant of the General Assembly working within the Presbyterian Mission Agency. While our focus is on “social witness policy,” it is also on the capacity of the church’s agencies to fulfill the hopes that are in our confessions and our tradition of “world-formative Christianity,” to quote Nicholas Wolterstorff, the Reformed Christian philosopher. This is one of the reasons why the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy believes the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board needs to be more intentional in hiring Presbyterian staff, especially as the percentages involved in mission program are steadily reduced. Thus, as with the report of the Review Committee on the Presbyterian Mission Agency and Item 04-07, symptoms are being correctly identified, but the diagnosis is misdirected.

We are concerned that if the work of any General Assembly agencies are to be measured, that the forms of measurement be intrinsically theological. Otherwise, the danger is that church structures may be viewed in a reductionist or overly functionalist way. The PMA also retains a Research Services office for survey and analysis. But to “benchmark” what we are in fact doing as a denomination, serious conversations with seminary faculty and administrators, and ecumenical partners, would be very important. In our view, it should be part of the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s normal work to help convene those conversations, and the self-study process should have contained more of it, with appropriate metrics where possible.

Our predecessors since 1729 built a denomination to accomplish God’s purposes on this continent and countless faithful Presbyterians contributed to endow national boards to do specific kinds of mission. If commissioners want a hard-headed analysis of the areas of possible overlap and cost savings, or for a more transparent analysis of administrative and program costs, they should ask the agencies for it, individually and jointly, and go carefully over the audits that already exist.

Although we recognize that there should be a work of restructure within the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Six Agency review should always address areas of overlap and possible cooperation. Commissioners may want to ask the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board for another response to the review committee report in 2018, when the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board currently plans to present a candidate for Presbyterian Mission Agency Director. Commissioners may want to ask for a real “platform” to be presented by that person being nominated, with clear targets, objectives that would reinforce moves toward transparency, and above all a vision for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Such a real process of approval for the new Presbyterian Mission Agency Director would build accountability more than any “rubber stamping” of the board’s chosen candidate, just as the possibility of an open election does for Stated Clerk.

If commissioners do want an outside assessment, at whatever cost, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that any management consulting report itself be critiqued by Presbyterians with training and experience in theology, ethics, and pastoral ministry, within and outside the agency or agencies examined.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-08

Comment on Item 04-08—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 04-08, on authorizing the hiring of a consultant to assess the relationship of OGA to PMA and the need for their continued existence as two separate entities.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the Office of the General Assembly.

COGA refers the assembly to its comments on Item 04-07, On Merging the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly into a Single Entity.

Additionally, COGA would urge that in any consideration of the restructuring of the PC(USA), the full depth and breadth of the theological, regional, racial, gender, and ethnic constituents of the PC(USA) be represented. Such representation cannot be reflected in one person.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-08

Comment on Item 04-08—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency’s first recommendation is to forgo the normally scheduled All Agency Review* and instead spend that time (and financial resource) to examine the possible merger of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly. The All Agency Review was mandated by the General Assembly in 2008 as a way of ensuring that agencies worked cooperatively together and that there were no duplication of services by the national agencies of the PC(USA).

We support the goal of enhancing coordination and effective missional and ecclesiastical support for our denominational agencies, mid councils, and our congregations. The scheduled All-Agency Review would give an overarching view of the six agencies and reveal a range of possible approaches to restructuring or for more collaboration and sharing of resources. That review would also help ensure that we are moving together with a sense of unity of mission and ministry rather than proceeding in a piecemeal fashion.

For these reasons, we find the proposals for considering a Presbyterian Mission Agency/Office of the General Assembly merger presently pending before this assembly to be premature and unduly narrow in scope. It is also without the benefit of having all our agency partners, General Assembly commissioners, and others at the table. Proposing that a different committee move directly to examining a structural merger of only two agencies prematurely forecloses the benefits of a wider, more careful analysis.

In a time of unprecedented and rapid change, our first step should be careful, prayerful, and thoughtful discernment of how we can best serve God, our congregations, and global partners. We believe understanding contextual realities will inform a wider, careful assessment of the various needs and strengths of all the agencies of the denomination. It will help us identify the best structural, financial, and staffing synergies with confidence that these proposals will help the PC(USA) be responsive to the challenges of our times at every level of the life of our denomination.

While a full exploration of the best approaches is wise, we recognize that structural changes for all agencies may not be needed or appropriate. Nonetheless, the perspective and experience of all six agencies would be valuable additions to a discernment process. Under the provisions of Agency Review Manual, the All Agency Review Committee is to be composed of a representative from each assembly agency, commissioners to recent General Assemblies (representing mid councils) and at-large members. With the benefit of the established process of the All Agency Review, having all our agency partners, and others at the table will best inform such an important structural decision and its possibilities for the coordination of resources.

In order not to lose the important work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Review Committee, we suggest that Recommendation 1 be referred to the All Agency Review Committee as an intentional part of their work.

*In 2008, the General Assembly approved a recommendation from the last Presbyterian Mission Agency Review Committee to create an additional cycle in the six-year review process that provides for a review of the “service of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies in implementing the General Assembly’s mission directives” at the end of each cycle. Such a review occurred in 2010, and another is scheduled for 2016. In its rationale, the review committee wrote: “Such a review should focus broadly on the effectiveness of the six agencies and other governing bodies in implementing the General Assembly’s mission directives and should not duplicate the more detailed work of the individual agency review committees. Particular attention should be given to how or if these agencies work cooperatively and where or if there is duplication of services in the system.”

On Creating a General Assembly Reform Coordinating Committee to Renew the Practice of Our Reformed Polity for the 21st Century—From the Presbytery of Foothills.

The Presbytery of Foothills overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to create a General Assembly Reform Coordinating Committee, with the aim to reform, renew, and refresh the practice of our Reformed polity for the 21st century, centered in the koinonia of our shared participation in Jesus Christ, the true Head of the Church (Book of Order, F-1.02). The General Assembly Reform Coordinating Committee will:

1. Coordinate with synod and presbytery stated clerks and executives to organize regional gatherings of the commissioners to the 222nd and subsequent General Assemblies, plus ruling elders, teaching elders, deacons, educators, presbytery and synod staff persons, and lay persons, to come together to study the core principles of our historic polity, to reflect upon the sweeping religious, political, cultural, and social changes in which we find ourselves, and advise the General Assembly Reform Coordinating Committee regarding the content and organization of the Constitution, the creation of a strategic ten-year, shared denominational mission plan, and to devise the most effective structures to faithfully and boldly uphold our Reformed polity and practice.
2. Study and devise a strategy to most effectively use the modern communication that is afforded to us through the internet and social media.
3. Receive, organize, and report to the 223rd and subsequent General Assemblies faithful summaries of the regional gatherings.

Rationale

The Presbytery of Foothills, affirming G-3.0501 that, “The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and councils, to the end that the whole church becomes a community of faith, hope, love and witness,” has submitted eight overtures with the aim of engaging our denomination in the sustained work of reform, renewal, and modernization. These individual overtures represent key strategic changes in our recent practice that we believe will instigate the church to enter a new era of reform. Binding these diverse overtures together are the following principles:

1. Stability of Identity: The PC(USA) needs a stable Constitution that is undergirded by renewing the Constitutional Principle above the Democratic Principle (Item 04-03).
2. Change through Building Broad Consensus: The PC(USA) needs to move away from seeking change by legislation, and rather move to broad consensus building in and between the Councils of the Church (Item 04-01).
3. Holistic Witness: Through a balanced focus upon “The Great Ends of the Church” (F-1.0304) at the meetings of the General Assembly, the PC(USA) needs a more holistic and faithful practice of living out the breadth of our calling (Item 04-01).
4. Focus and Depth: The PC(USA) needs to improve and deepen its commitment to and practice of meaningful social witness by moving away from the practice of pushing “yes/no” votes on highly partisan issues at the biennial meetings of the General Assembly, and rather work to engage every congregation and every council of the church to find deep and rich consensus (Item 11-01 and Item 11-02).

5. Mutual Interdependence: As presbytery administrative leaders are in the unique position of relations between congregations and all higher councils, the PC(USA) needs their wisdom and perspective as advisory delegates to the meetings of the General Assembly (Item 04-02).

6. Adaptability and Nimbleness: As the world of the 21st century is rapidly changing and as bureaucratic structures, once established and funded, tend towards outliving their original purpose, the PC(USA) needs the regular input of presbyteries into the issue of best practices and most fitting structures of the national church (Item 04-05 and Item 04-06).

7. More Than Yes or No: As complex and multifaceted issues are often made simplistic by simple “yes” or “no” choices, the PC(USA) needs to create a third category of voting that allows for the message, “no, not now.”

Believing the whole church and every level of council in the church must be engaged in this work of reform, renewal, and refreshment, the creation of a General Assembly Reform Coordinating Committee is the best method to engage in serious season of reform that is neither too hasty nor too tardy, but will help the PC(USA) reform, renew, and modernize its practice in a manner that upholds the venerable standard, “let it be done decently and in order.”

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-09

Comment on Item 04-09—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 04-09, on creating a General Assembly Reform Coordinating Committee to renew the practice of our Reformed polity for the 21st century.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the Office of the General Assembly.

COGA appreciates the concern for the continued reformation of the church, and the ongoing need for renewal of our Reformed polity in the 21st century. However, it is unclear how the proposed General Assembly Reform Coordinating Committee would be constituted, what the body would be empowered to do, and how long it would serve.

On Amending Book of Order G-6.04e and Standing Rule F.5.b.(1) to Require Two-Thirds Vote on Constitutional Changes—From the Presbytery de Cristo.

The Presbytery de Cristo overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to do the following:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-6.04e of the Book of Order be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“e. The Stated Clerk receives written advice that a proposed amendment to the Book of Order has received the affirmative votes of a ~~majority~~ two-thirds majority of all the presbyteries. ~~The proposed amendment so approved shall become effective one year following the adjournment of the assembly transmitting the proposed amendment. The proposed amendment is approved and enacted by the next General Assembly following the amendment’s receipt of the necessary two-thirds approval of the presbyteries.~~”

2. The Presbytery de Cristo overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to amend Stand Rule F.5.b.(1) as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“b.(1) The General Assembly shall ordinarily decide questions by electronic voting. The Moderator may also call for unanimous consent by voice vote or show of hands. All decisions made by assembly standing committees by a three-quarters (supermajority) vote shall be placed on the assembly plenary consent agenda to be considered as the first order of plenary business following committee meetings. Any actions requesting constitutional change must be considered in plenary and shall require a two-thirds majority for passage.”

Rationale

The General Assembly has frequently experienced extremely close votes while meeting in plenary session, particularly in recent sessions.

These votes result in slim margins of passage or rejection.

Such margins reveal deep diversity in faithful discernment of issues of considerable controversy and importance.

While the prophetic role of the minority or slim majority of a body seeking God's will cannot be dismissed, nonetheless, in matters of broad interest to the entire church, striving for consensus in matters of faith and practice gives greater opportunity for the diversity of voices within the church to be thoroughly understood. In seeking unity within the faithful, broad consensus would allow both for greater support within the church and greater weight in the church's witness in the world.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 04-10

Advice on Item 04-10—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 04-10.

The first change proposed by this overture would require a "two-thirds majority" of the presbyteries to approve amendments. This is similar in part to Item 04-03. See the ACC rationale and comments on that item. The second and third proposed changes to G-4.02e require additional constitutional interpretation.

The second proposed change is to require all amendments be "approved and enacted by the next General Assembly." This process is not necessary. The next General Assembly, should it desire to change the outcome, could simply approve an amendment that changes the presbytery-approved amendment(s). This inverts the power of General Assembly relative to the presbyteries by giving authority to the General Assembly over the expressed will of the presbyteries.

Section G-6.01 states that the current procedures for amendment "are understood as a means to faithfulness" to the PC(USA) seeking to be "the church reformed, always to be reformed according to the Word of God' in the power of the Spirit" (F-2.02). Those procedures include the balancing of majority and minority rights by requiring a majority of both the General Assembly and the presbyteries for amendments to the Book of Order.

The third change proposed by this item would amend the time at which approved amendments become effective. Currently the amendments take effect one year after the proposing General Assembly adjourns (G-6.04e). This proposed change would make the approved amendments effective when the next General Assembly both approves and enacts the amendment(s). Section G-6.04d currently requires presbyteries to transmit their votes to the Stated Clerk no later than one year following the adjournment of the transmitting assembly. This overture does not address this section; adoption of the two-year period does not change the one-year transmittal requirement. There is no compelling reason to extend the time other than to provide for an additional vote by the second General Assembly.

The final change proposed by this item is to amend Standing Rule F.5.b (1). The ACC has no mandate to consider changes to the Standing Rules concerning voting requirements.

Item 04-11

[The assembly answered Item 04-11 by the action taken on Item 04-07. See pp. 37, 40.]

Report of the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency

The Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) do the following: [Note: We recognize that approval of some of these recommendations may make others unnecessary.]

1. That the General Assembly delay the appointment of the All Agency Review scheduled for 2016 and instead direct the Moderators of the 220th, 221st, and 222nd General Assemblies (2012), (2014), and (2016), in consultation with the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC), to name a committee of fifteen people to explore the possibility of a merger between the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

a. The committee shall be made up of ruling and teaching elders with broad geographic, racial, ethnic, and gender diversity.

04 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THE WAY FORWARD

- b. The committee membership will include a representative from both the PMA Review Committee and the OGA Review Committee, a representative from both the current Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), and at least one mid council staff person.
- c. The PMA and OGA will each appoint a staff person to serve as staff support for the committee.
- d. The committee's work will be informed by other churchwide conversations on the future of the church and its structure.
- e. The assembly will allocate sufficient resources so that this committee can meet regularly and consult with other PC(USA) constituents, as well as others who could provide insight into the process.
- f. Recommendations for any missional and structural changes will be brought to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

Rationale for Recommendation 1

The review committee has done its work during a time of calls for churchwide introspection, including an invitation by the General Assembly Moderator to explore the church's identity, a conversation led by COGA on the future of the church, as well as many other concurrent dialogues. In addition, transitions in both the PMA and OGA leadership offers a unique opportunity to envision new ways of leading the church.

The committee found significant duplication and siloing within the Presbyterian Mission Agency and between the PMA and OGA. This has contributed to the ongoing confusion regarding who speaks for the denomination and bears the primary responsibility for communicating the church's message to its constituents and the world.

This moment in our church's history presents us with a unique opportunity to become a more nimble organization that can better serve the mission of the denomination. We believe that the proposed committee would be the best way forward in crafting and clarifying the future structure of the church.

2. That the General Assembly direct the Moderator of the 222nd General Assembly (2016), in consultation with the GANC, to name a committee of eight people to review the responsibilities of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB) and provide a plan for restructuring the Board so that it can be better able to do the adaptive work necessary to provide leadership and guidance for the PMA and the church, today and into the next generation.

It was apparent to the review committee that the current Board size (57) and structure are unwieldy and outdated. While this served as an important transitional body, the current composition hinders the body from the adaptive change required for today.

While both technical tasks and strategic vision are within the purview of the PMAB, the strong emphasis on oversight and compliance has moved the Board into a narrower, hands-on prescriptive approach with many layers of accountability and decision-making. This has come at the expense of both the broader strategic work of vision-casting and the necessary commitment to communicating that vision.

3. That the General Assembly direct the directors of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) to appoint a staff committee to explore the best ways for Shared Services (finance and accounting, information technology, payroll, communication, translations, human resources, legal and risk management, internal audit, building services, mail and print, Presbyterian Distribution Service, and the Hubbard Press) to serve those four agencies.

- a. The committee shall be made up of equal staff representation from the four agencies using the Shared Services.
- b. The committee shall bring recommendations to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

Rationale for Recommendation 3

Currently, Shared Services is housed with the Presbyterian Mission Agency and is accountable to the PMA Executive Director. However, the department serves OGA, PILP, PPC, and PMA. We heard about expensive duplication of shared services in all four of the agencies. In addition, we heard of difficulties in sharing services without shared supervisory authority.

Executive Summary

Responding to the call to join God's mission for the transformation of creation, the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) equips, inspires, and connects the church to share the love of God in Jesus Christ. God has blessed the church with many talented and faithful servants at the PMA who feel called to minister with the church in their various capacities. Their hard work is all the more admirable in light of recent transitions and controversies.

Though the PMA has produced good work, it is evident that there are significant weaknesses in a number of areas, including: strategic decision-making and priority-setting; organizational culture and work environment; and collaborative efforts with other General Assembly agencies. This report outlines what we gleaned from interviews, correspondence, and promotional materials. We believe that what we observed permeates PMA organizational structure and culture and should not be considered isolated to particular situations or departments.

In addition to the recommendations above, the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to consider the following:

1. That the PMA develop internal educational opportunities for staff to become better informed about the other five agencies in order to foster creative collaboration.

In our interviews it was apparent that PMA staff is in need of a broader understanding of the work of the other agencies to foster greater collaboration. While we understand there are existing staff development days, these have not been sufficient to provide the information and opportunities for building relationships that staff need.

2. That the PMA develop and implement a plan to educate all donors about how their donations are allocated, including a clear breakdown of what percentage goes directly to mission funding and what percentage is applied to administrative costs. This information should be easily accessible.

The review committee had great difficulty obtaining information regarding the allocation of mission funds. We discovered it is a variable amount between 5 percent and 22 percent for donor designated contributions. It seems that it is not fully understood by the program staff or senior leadership. Allocating for administrative costs is a common standard and is a standard measure of efficiency of a charity. We believe transparency in education and communication related to these allocations also provides an incentive for PMA to keep these costs as low as possible.

3. That the PMA provide a chaplain for the Presbyterian Center.

After several years of what many characterized as an environment of anxiety and grief related to precipitous and/or impending layoffs, almost constant restructuring and organizational shifts all on top of general life events, the review committee found staff at every level in need of spiritual support. As a church agency, the PMA has a serious responsibility and unique opportunity to create a work environment that fosters health for the whole person. The chaplain would provide spiritual care for people of all faith traditions.

4. That PMA engage in regular cultural humility training provided by outside consultants for PMAB and staff.

Recent events (including culturally stereotypical and offensive printed materials for Special Offerings and the confusing “Ask Me Why You Matter” campaign) highlight the systemic lack of cultural humility and awareness at the agency. We recommend ongoing and regular education for all personnel led by experienced professionals in this discipline not employed by the agency. We view this as a necessary first step toward expanding cultural humility that can then lead to models for the wider church.

Overall Rationale

I. INTRODUCTION

The Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency was charged by the 221st General Assembly (2014) to evaluate the relationship of the PMA with the mission of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We were guided by the Agency Review Manual, prepared by the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), which is based on the agency review committee guidelines in the Manual of the General Assembly: Organization for Mission. Over a period of more than sixteen months, beginning in Fall 2014, we met in person on three separate occasions, communicated via email and conference calls regularly, and interviewed more than sixty-five individuals. These interviews were with PMA staff, Board members, mid council representatives, staff of other General Assembly agencies, and other stakeholders. We also consulted with the Committee to Review the Office of General Assembly. Because there was a significant amount of existing data from previous surveys, we decided not to conduct yet another formal survey for this review.

We began our review by reading a self-study document prepared for us by PMA staff and the PMAB. We were very thankful for this document and the work that went into it. The report did a very good job of orienting us to the PMA and of documenting the PMA’s work in response to the recommendations of the last PMA review committee. The report also highlighted the breadth and quality of the PMA’s mission around the world. Our committee also reviewed additional documents provided by the PMA as well as reports from the General Assembly.

It is important to note that during the course of our work PMA experienced significant challenges and controversies, all of which were highly publicized by church-related press and in social media. The agency discovered that some staff assigned to the 1001 New Worshipping Communities initiative had established a separate, nonprofit organization to receive funds to support that initiative. A routine audit of the 2013 Presbyterian Youth Triennium showed larger losses than had previously been reported. The Special Offerings department released promotional materials for the One Great Hour of Sharing offering that were culturally insensitive. In addition, since our review work began, the Executive Director of the PMA has resigned and the PMAB has named an Interim Executive Director. While it was not this committee's responsibility to address these specific incidents, we did look closely at how the culture and systems within PMA might have allowed these incidents to occur.

The committee members include: Teaching Elder Debra Avery, Oakland, California, San Francisco Presbytery; Teaching Elder Eric Beene, Savannah, Georgia, Savannah Presbytery; Ruling Elder Tacey Braithwaite, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, South Dakota Presbytery; Teaching Elder Eliana Maxim, Seattle, Washington, Seattle Presbytery; Teaching Elder Nancy Muth, Wyndmoor, Pennsylvania, Philadelphia Presbytery; Teaching Elder Ken Page, Phoenix, Arizona, Grand Canyon Presbytery; Ruling Elder Stephen Proctor, Dillsburg, Pennsylvania, Carlisle Presbytery; Ruling Elder Chris Rhodes, Santa Rosa, California, Redwoods Presbytery; Ruling Elder Barbara Sarjeant, Orangeburg, South Carolina, Charleston Atlantic Presbytery; Ruling Elder Elizabeth Swee, Moorhead, Minnesota, Northern Plains Presbytery; Ruling Elder James Tse, Woodhaven, New York, New York City Presbytery; Teaching Elder Perry Wootten, Mt. Kisco, New York, New York City Presbytery.

II. A BRIEF OVERVIEW

A. Accolades

Throughout this process, our committee found much to be affirmed in the work and ministry of the PMA. The PMA is determined to share the good news of Jesus Christ by demonstrating a true and meaningful commitment to those in need in every area of life and the world, regardless of economic or social strata, including providing assistance in times of disaster, offering guidance to congregations, assisting displaced persons, helping the unemployed, supporting youth in developing faith, and raising the level of education. Not only is the PMA doing good work, but successes are communicated broadly throughout the denomination.

The use of denominational magazines, news reports, annual reports, promotional materials, websites, social media, and many other sources makes it possible for everyone to learn about the many successes of the PC(USA). We were provided with many well-written articles and colorful images describing the wonderful works of ministry and mission accomplished on behalf of the whole church. Our committee celebrates the scope of the ministries and the successful outcomes of the work of PMA. We are also encouraged by new initiatives of the PMA communications staff to better share the stories of the accomplishments of the PMA and encourage greater commitment by the whole church to the work of PMA.

B. Mission and Values

To focus the broad range of work the PMA is tasked with completing, PMA executive staff and PMAB members have developed and clearly articulated statements on the mission and core values of the PMA. The PMA's mission is "to inspire, equip and connect the PC(USA) in its many expressions to serve Christ in the world through new and existing communities of faith, hope, love and witness." The PMA lives out this missional expression through the core values of Collaboration, Accountability, Responsiveness, and Excellence. The materials provided to us by the PMA for the review make clear that these statements of the organizational mission and values are meant to serve as the guideposts for the agency's work.

C. Staff

Our committee was impressed by the quality of the PMA staff. The PMA has many talented and faithful employees doing ministry in Louisville, deployed across the United States, and around the world. We want to emphasize that the staff we interviewed are passionate about their jobs, have a deep love of Christ and the work of the church, and feel called to serve. It is apparent that PMA staff members are highly qualified for the work they do. This shows in the high quality of the materials and programs that are developed and presented. In addition, PMA staff should be commended for their high level of commitment, especially when significant upheaval and controversy has been the norm.

Despite the many successes, the clearly articulated mission and values, and the great talent and commitment of PMA staff, we found some important areas of concern. Our concerns center in three areas:

- A lack of a clearly communicated strategic direction for the PMA among staff and PMAB members.
- Poor coordination with other agencies of the General Assembly.
- An organizational culture and work environment characterized by anxiety, distrust, and a clear lack in the areas of spiritual leadership, transparency, and cultural humility.

III. PMA STRATEGY OBSERVATIONS

In our research, we found that there was a frequent disconnect between decision-making and priority-setting and operational strategy. In some cases, though Mission and Values were clearly articulated, in the execution of the work, there seemed to be no strategic plan guiding overall priority setting and decision making. This seemed to contribute to tension among staff and may have served to dilute the overall effectiveness of the PMA.

A. Resource-Driven

The entire PC(USA) recognizes that the membership and the resulting revenue of the church have been declining. The PMAB and staff have communicated internally and externally about the financial limitations at PMA and the expected short-falls in the near future. The reality of decreasing resources requires the denomination to be more aware of and concerned about balancing the need to demonstrate fiscal responsibility with the importance of sustaining current programs and leaning into the ongoing challenge of creating programming that leads us into the future. However, as our work progressed, it seemed clear that there has been a shift from attending to the strategic priorities that emerge from the Mission and Values to an overwhelming focus on decision-making driven solely by the availability of resources.

Though it may be that some denominational programs will not be sustainable in our more resource-constrained church, it is critical for the church to become more open to inspiration rather than allowing financial desperation to dictate the terms of change. Inspiration needs to be rooted in missional identity and shared values. Though more limited financial resources characterize the current context for decision-making, it is imperative that the PMA be more intentional about attending to the Mission and Values as a first priority as strategic decisions are made.

B. Communication

Our committee found that PMA communications also do not reflect strategic decision-making. This is not to imply that there is a lack of information being shared. In fact, from a messaging standpoint, there is a blizzard of information that comes from the PMA. The overwhelming amount of information provided for denominational use hinders clarity about the mission and work of the PMA. For instance:

- At the time of our study, there were more than 100,000 pages on the denomination's website. Staff has primarily maintained the information in their respective departments. We understand that each area within the PMA has a compelling story and that each area needs to respond to requests for information and resources that come from mid councils and congregations. Unfortunately, while important content continues to be added, information is rarely removed and the indexing of each additional page has created a labyrinthine agglomeration of data, which is barely accessible even through a Google search.

- Beyond the official website, there are a number of stand-alone sites that are maintained outside of the PMA's administration. For example, the 1001 Worshiping Communities site utilized a tool that was not part of the range of tools utilized by the IT staff, making it difficult for them to provide support. Issues of standardization of platforms and the need for security are obvious.

- In addition to the PMA's communication through websites, there are more than 100 electronic newsletters. According to the Communications staff, fifteen of those electronic newsletters are on the issue of hunger alone. At the time of our interviews with staff, attempts to consolidate these publications had been unsuccessful.

We believe that the PMA has good intentions behind the desire to share more information. However, there is a lack of clarity around vision and focus. A collaborative communication plan developed by communication experts and with consensus of leaders is essential for the PMA to be better equipped to communicate its strategic direction and align vision and values across the denomination.

Finally, there is a lack of a unified, strategic denominational voice in the public arena. In ecumenical, interfaith, and secular engagement, there are multiple voices offering a multiplicity of identities. This lack of a single person empowered to speak as the "voice" of the General Assembly was raised in previous agency reviews. While the Stated Clerk was named as the person empowered in that role, with the volume of communication coming from the PMA touching on such a breadth of issues, it is easy to see why some would be confused about that role.

C. Board Involvement

Our committee understood that the primary responsibility for setting strategic direction for the PMA rests with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB). However, we do not believe the PMAB has a good understanding of the big picture that includes both the work of the PMA and the PMAB's role in that work. In actual practice, we observed that missional goals seem to be set by a subset of PMA staff.

The PMAB has changed significantly in its responsibilities, structure, and composition in recent years. Previously, the General Assembly Council was comprehensive of all agencies of the denomination and had broad authority to act on behalf of the General Assembly between meetings. It was a large body meant to be representative of the whole church. In recent years, how the six agencies are structured and relate to each other and the General Assembly have changed. When the General Assembly Council was eliminated, the PMAB was created. It is clear to us that the current configuration of the PMAB is not effective. Board members, staff, and other stakeholders we interviewed shared the following insights:

04 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THE WAY FORWARD

- There is a lack of clarity in the church at large as well as among Board members related to the scope of their work.
- There is significant pressure to “be all things to all people.”
- The size of the PMAB is too large, with a total of forty-seven voting and ten non-voting members.
- The process by which Board members are nominated and assigned lacks the focus and intentionality required to assure that the PMAB is flexible enough to accomplish their work.
- There is confusion regarding specific responsibilities and lines of accountability between the PMAB and the advisory committees, including the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, and how they relate to other agencies including the General Assembly.
- The inclusion of Shared Services (Information Technology, Finance and Accounting, Building Services, etc.) within the PMA creates problems because, while they provide services to several agencies, they are accountable only to PMA.

PMAB members told us that they believe it would be helpful to them to reconfigure and envision the structure and role of the PMAB in order to align Board governance with strategic and fiduciary roles. In the past two years, to overcome a feeling that the Board was unable to achieve more than routine approval of the recommendations of staff and others, the PMAB has spent time in training on their governance role. Members of the Board told us of their desire to be more engaged in their roles, particularly in setting priorities for their work and using their time together as a Board more wisely.

IV. ORGANIZATIONAL CULTURE

We observed a tendency for PMA staff to emphasize their many successful outcomes and outputs while attention to organizational culture, processes, and management are inconsistent. In our interviews, PMAB leaders and senior management maintained that recent controversies are isolated incidents and not evidence of any systemic problems in the agency. However, our committee believes that there is a direct relationship between systemic organizational culture and these incidents.

A. Work Environment

In interviews and conversations, the PMA staff, PMAB members, and other stakeholders repeatedly told us that even though there are clear successes in mission and ministry, these successes have been accomplished despite an organizational culture that is heavy-handed and a management style that has made for a highly stressful and sometimes even unhealthy work environment. In recent years, a secular corporate model has emerged as the primary organizational form. In that shift, it seems that the PMA has lost what is essential and unique to this organization: an ecclesial identity, a foundation in the Form of Government, and a sense of corporate spirituality. This has been seen not only in frequent downsizing actions, but also in the handling of specific personnel concerns connected with recent controversies connected to PMA work.

The organizational culture has not only hindered the best intentions and efforts of staff, but also come at a spiritual cost. We consistently heard concerns about the following:

- Low morale and often unbearable anxiety among staff and PMAB members.
- Cumbersome and unresponsive hierarchy with more layers of management than are appropriate for an organization the size of the PMA.
- Failure to include staff in decision-making processes that affect the programs they manage.
- A “silo mentality” fostered by poor internal communication, competition for scarce resources, and interdepartmental distrust.
- The perception that staff members are not trusted by management.
- Responsibility for accomplishing significant work without the authority to make and implement decisions.
- A sense that some individual staff members have special status allowing them to bypass processes and systems designed to assure accountability.
- Inconsistent leadership training and skills for managers and supervisors.

We believe that outcomes are important and should be properly acknowledged and affirmed. But the long-term success of the PMA, as an organization committed to following Jesus Christ, is dependent on healthy relationships fostered in a culture that rewards collaborative behavior and nurtures health and wholeness for the whole person. This is especially true in a time of significant change.

B. Anxiety and Distrust

In our interviews, our committee discovered that the overarching problem of the current culture of anxiety, fear, distrust, and conflict avoidance was a significant factor in the difficulties within the PMA. The incidents involving the 1001 New Worshipping Communities program, the Youth Triennium, and the production of Special Offering materials that many found to perpetuate disturbing stereotypes, both illustrated and perpetuated that anxiety and distrust. Several people that we interviewed even used the term PTSD to describe the mood at PMA before and, especially, after those incidents. Others referred to distrust between staff and leadership. Several times, comments made in interviews provided evidence of this low-trust, high anxiety environment, such as:

- We don't want to consult the bean counters in accounting—we just want to get things done.
- We built a “rogue website” because we don't believe the tech department is capable of creating something that will meet our needs.
- We don't want to consult with the advisory committee or program area because that would be a pain.
- We don't want to go through the legal department, so we'll just use a website to provide legal advice.

We often heard the objection that collaboration can make for slow decision making. For example, when some departments have worked outside of established systems to set up stand-alone websites, the staff in those departments told us they did so because they needed to be more nimble and responsive. While it is true that in the past administrative departments such as accounting or legal have slowed down or advised against programming and working with advisory committees can be ponderous, it is also true that these consultative processes provide necessary checks and balances and offer appropriate checkpoints for program staff. We do not believe that transparency, collaboration, and clarity need to be sacrificed for the sake of speed and decisiveness. Given current realities, it is clear to us that it is important for PMA to encourage this kind of departmental collaboration in order to avoid the kinds of problems that we have seen at PMA over the past year.

C. Spiritual Life

As a faith-based organization, the PMA has a unique opportunity and responsibility to create a work environment that fosters health for the whole person. The PMA's open hiring policy means people of different faith backgrounds work together. However, the values inherent in Reformed spirituality can provide a starting point from which diverse spiritual practices can emerge and be part of the overall plan for employee support. Though some individuals in the organization are living into this potential, there seems to be a general lack of spiritual leadership among the staff. Three areas in particular were noted:

- Spiritual Care: After several years of what many characterized as an environment of precipitous and/or impending layoffs, almost constant restructuring and organizational decision making driven more by budget demands than ministry needs, staff at every level are in need of pastoral care. Currently, there is no overarching program for the spiritual care of PMA employees.
- Worship Life: Chapel attendance is low. In fact, some staff reported fear that chapel attendance signals a light workload, which could trigger elimination of their position. Other staff shared that they had been actively discouraged from attending chapel by supervisors. To be sure, chapel attendance cannot be required. However, staff members should be encouraged to engage in specific times of prayer and praise as part of community life.
- Reformed Theology and Presbyterian Polity: PMA staff comes from a variety of faith backgrounds. While this diversity is a gift, it also presents a unique challenge with regard to how staff represents the unique witness of Presbyterian theology, history, and polity.

D. Transparency

In our interviews, we found a significant lack of trust and silo behavior across all departments. This is part of a “vicious cycle” that is both derived from and contributes to a lack of transparency. It is apparent that collaborative efforts have suffered when individuals and departments have felt outside of the loop in the decision-making process. It is no surprise that those working in this kind of environment have become wary and protective of their own interests rather than reach out to work with others. We observed that open communication is particularly lacking when the lack of resources has threatened existing programs.

While it is understandable that staff would be reluctant to communicate bad news, transparency in difficult times is all the more important. In addition, lack of transparency often contributes to a sense that there is a corresponding lack of self-understanding. A clear example of this was seen in the PMA's own self-study, which was provided for our committee. Though there is plenty to celebrate, there no section that details growing edges. This concerned us. In order to foster a culture of trust and transparency, PMA will need to demonstrate a willingness to share all news even when disclosure is unflattering.

Our committee believes that there is a sincere desire among PMA staff and PMAB members to be more transparent and engaging. Because of this, culture has shifted some. For instance, there was a greater openness to input from all staff and departments in the budget planning in the past two years. However, we discovered other areas in which transparency actually seems to be discouraged. For example, it is very difficult for a donor to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to fully understand what portion of their donation is allocated to administrative costs and what portion actually goes to mission. We were unable to get a firm answer to this question, even in our multiple interviews.

E. Cultural Humility

Cultural humility has been defined as the ability to maintain an interpersonal stance that is “other oriented” (or open to the other) in relation to aspects of cultural identity that are most important to the person. The PMAB has a high commitment to the mandate of racial and ethnic inclusiveness at the national level. Cultural proficiency and competency is underscored through agency training and responsible engagement. The PMA has also made some efforts to develop a more culturally inclusive staff, and we encourage them to deepen this effort in PMA and at all levels of the church.

However, our committee observed a need for further expansion and affirmation of cultural humility within the PMA. This assessment is confirmed by the admission of Board members that the PMAB as a whole has a long way to go in regards to cultural awareness and humility. In several interviews with staff, we also heard that privileged staff (often Caucasian) operate outside of policies with no communication with other departments. In addition, when racial ethnic staff raised concerns it was disregarded. That was certainly the case with the decision to use racially biased materials for the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering. Even though there was some consultation over racial ethnic concerns, the decision to go ahead with the objectionable materials was made unilaterally and ignored those concerns.

Because racial ethnic concerns are at the heart of denominational values and vision, collaborative efforts should always include the advice and/or participation of people of color. Further, when that advice is sought, decision-makers, particularly those who are white, need to be aware that they may lack cultural perspective. For example, we noted that the only resources produced by PMA in languages other than English are those that the PMA staff, not the communities of color who are the recipients of those resources, deem important to be translated. The privileged determine what the rest need to know. This lack of cultural perspective often makes it impossible for the experience and knowledge of people of color to be truly known and understood.

At every level of the denomination, we need to hire and call people of all races. In addition, white staff members need to be especially aware of the seen and unseen effects of privilege on collaboration. Our committee believes that in our efforts to be a more inclusive church it is essential that the PMA staff lead us by example in deepening personal cultural humility and integrating it into every aspect of the church.

V. COORDINATION WITH OTHER AGENCIES

Our committee’s investigation of the overall work of the PMA revealed that there is a paucity of coordination with the other agencies. This has resulted in a lack of integration and uncertainty regarding their common purpose. This lack of coordination leads to competition and distrust between the agencies rather than appreciation and collaboration. We noted frequent themes of siloing not only within different program areas within PMA but also among the six different agencies of the PC(USA). Such stories included:

- The PMA has launched a number of new fundraising initiatives on its own in the last several years. While this may be an appropriate and necessary endeavor in the times we live in, it seems to us that this kind of effort would be much better undertaken in partnership with the Presbyterian Foundation, which has significant expertise in this area.
- The Office of the General Assembly bid out a computer programming services contract for $200,000. PMA’s tech department had been providing those services, but OGA was dissatisfied because they were unable to provide oversight and accountability. PMA was invited to be one bidder among several on the contract, but the PMA bid expressed no interest in meeting the OGA’s request for changes in programming support and accountability.
- In March 2015, the PMA produced an issue of Presbyterians Today entitled “The Presbyterian Resource Guide for Ministry.” It is an excellent issue, full of helpful resources from PMA. However, we were told that a few weeks before publication, OGA noticed that the issue being produced did not include anything about OGA’s resources for ministry. OGA was given a page or two at the last minute, which was the immediate response to this concern.
- In July 2015, the PMA launched an antiracism awareness campaign “Ask Me Why You Matter.” The campaign was rolled out at Big Tent 2015 after three months of development and minimal collaboration with other denominational agencies. This was glaringly apparent when there was no communication between the PMA staff working on the campaign and the General Assembly appointed committee on churchwide conversation on race, racism, ethnicity, and ethnocentrism.

Approaching the issue of collaboration among all six agencies from a review of only one agency, we are not completely able to fathom whether and/or to what extent this disconnect exists between all the agencies. The perceived and perhaps intentional disconnect between the agencies concerns us. Situations such as these highlight missed opportunities to draw on shared “in-house” expertise and denominational wisdom.

It is clear from the interviews we conducted that the staff sincerely desire better coordination and communication between the PMA and the other agencies of the PC(USA). We did learn that concerns about better coordination and collaboration have been discussed and reviewed on a number of occasions. However, it is clear to us that these periodic reviews and discussions did not always bring about action. It should be noted that the 2010 PMA Review Committee also called for a closer collaboration between the six agencies. We acknowledge that efforts have been made to respond to this goal, including quarterly meetings of agency heads (two of which include the PMAB chairs); the identification and pursuit of joint projects between agencies; collaboration on the six-agency annual report; collaboration on the Big Tent conference, etc. However, we believe that more needs to be done in this area in order to ensure greater efficacy of ministry and mission.

VI. CONCLUSION

There is no doubt that something new is happening in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Congregations and mid councils are pursuing new models for planning, staffing, and funding ministry. As a church, we can be inspired by the growing cultural diversity found in local congregations. We can work to support each other as we learn to live into the reality of smaller congregations with limited financial resources and unlimited possibility for mission in their communities. We can celebrate the emerging energy for collaboration within creative ecumenical and entrepreneurial partnerships both within and among our congregations. Even in the midst of this reality of such great change in the life of our denomination, there is still significant passion and excitement around evangelism, social justice, biblical scholarship, world mission, and church planting.

We believe it is essential for the future of our denomination that the PMA embrace the change that is already among us. We pray that the PMA will begin to make the adaptive organizational changes needed to serve in this new reality. This is not simply another appeal for restructuring endeavors. Our opportunity now is change on a deeper systemic level. It is our strong hope that in addressing the strategic, spiritual, and functional challenges presented in this report, the PMA will be better able to lead the church in creatively, strategically, and adaptively leaning into the future God is bringing us with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love.

ADDENDUM TO THE REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE TO REVIEW THE PRESBYTERIAN MISSION AGENCY (PMA)

Since the January 6, 2016, release of this committee's report, we have been made aware of changes and one lapse in process that merit addressing.

1. The committee apologizes for neglecting to provide an advance copy of our report to the PMA Executive Board and Interim Director as requested in our charge. This was regrettably (and simply) an oversight on our part.
2. Information PMA staff provided us in spring 2015 regarding the triennium audit and agency communication strategy were at that time in process. We understand that these situations have been resolved and implemented since then.
3. The number of email newsletters and stand-alone websites we cited in our report has been disputed by PMA executive staff. Our committee members, through several interviews with various PMA employees, obtained information regarding PMA electronic communication. Although we do not dispute the actual number of electronic newsletters on the issue of hunger, for example, we do question why different PMA staff members would provide us with varying numbers.

The goal of this review report was to take a snapshot of the agency; to celebrate accomplishments and address issues occurring at one particular time in the life of the agency's mission and ministry. Our hope is that by identifying systemic matters, we would provide both the PMA and the assembly with a working document that will be a useful tool as our denomination moves forward in this next season of ministry.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 04-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 04-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises disapproval of Recommendations 1 and 2 of the Report of the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency in their current forms.

The Advisory Committee is authorized to speak to specific matters of Christian conscience related to social witness and to the capacity for social witness within the assembly agencies, primarily the Presbyterian Mission Agency. As it has noted on Items 04-07 and 04-08, the danger in any reorganization proposal is that it be insufficiently theological and not address the mission and polity purposes for which the agencies were designed. These purposes are outlined in the Design for Mission and in G-3.0105a-c of the Form of Government, and were given extensive analysis in prior reorganizations by committees drawing on considerable management expertise. Yet the basis of any structures should be a theological vision of how the church should be serving Jesus Christ, "in the world but not of it."

The Report of the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency named many hard truths and is to be commended for their wide-ranging conversations. Yet neither the self-study nor the review contain much structural analysis or use of metrics. Thus, claims about duplication with the Office of the General Assembly are hard to assess, and seem overstated. In one example given, that of speaking for the General Assembly, multiple voices are mentioned, but the role of General Assembly policy as a basis for speech or action by any agency representative was not examined. In fact, specific offices (such as the Office of Public Witness) are directed to address specific kinds of issues, the Presbyterian Mission Agency Director speaks primarily to program initiatives and the Stated Clerk authorizes all “head of communion” statements. At this and other points, the question for commissioners is whether the symptoms identified partly by anecdote match the overall recommendation of merger, with all the reorganization it would entail.

More fundamentally, the review committee did not analyze why and with what consequences the General Assembly (Mission) Council changed itself into a Mission Agency with a board and centralized and hierarchical staff structure. The review committee calls it a “secular corporate model,” but senior staff and board sought to become a nonprofit body. Though the review committee comments on morale and competition among silos, they did not analyze staff structure and did not feel they had enough transparency to weigh cost-effectiveness. The comments made about the roles of the advisory and advocacy committees, and other corresponding bodies, do not note the way these groups were designed to provide ethical and theological perspectives to a deliberative body that implements mission program determined by the assembly. These committees reflect the care taken in the past to distinguish polity, policy, and program, precisely for clearer accountability and transparency.

The review committee was right to lift up the governance issues related partly to the shift from a council to a board. Yet this shift underlines the degree to which the Office of the General Assembly has a very different assignment to steward the most inclusive council of the church, the General Assembly. Theologically, would any merger be wise that put two important and distinct leadership functions in “one basket,” so to speak, merging constitutional judgments and program considerations? Coordination between the agencies could be improved by simple things like putting the Stated Clerk back on the Presbyterian Mission Agency executive committee, ex officio. Overall, the review process shows the importance of a separate body to hold the Presbyterian Mission Agency (in this case) accountable. Despite the weaknesses identified in the review, it cannot be forgotten that the Board of the Presbyterian Mission Agency stepped up and took considerable responsibility in last year’s leadership transition. They deserve respect for that institutional stewardship.

Whether in a special committee or in an enhanced six agency review, the church has an opportunity for an intentional and informed conversation about the purposes of General Assembly agencies. Theologians and experts on church organization should be commissioned to analyze the best data, best practices, and best preaching about what the church is called to do and how best to do it. Yes, there are organizations in the church addressing pieces of this, and management consultants should also be heard, but any committee or review group would need to frame its own questions rather than bring in unexamined assumptions or agendas. The PMA itself needs opportunity to present a vision of its work in dialogue with other agencies and perhaps in fuller response to the review committee’s observations. (In past council forms, the Presbyterian Mission Agency was a place where significant theological, ethical, and missiological discussions were held.)

In practical terms, the review committee’s Recommendation 1 has several weaknesses. While it rightly emphasizes representation, it does not address expertise and resources needed, allowing for the possibility of more political process. The proposed committee size seems large but even in a nine-member team at least two persons each would be needed from both agencies for a fair assessment of their respective functions, strengths, and weaknesses. The scope of mission being done by other of the four agencies also needs to be understood, as bodies with more abundant funding are always tempted to “mission creep” and yet were designed for specialized functions in accord with General Assembly policies. The advantage of the larger agency review would also be that it is already structured, even if a focused public theological consultation were attached to it. Last but not least, serious ecumenical comparisons should be made as to national denominational structures, purposes, locations, and costs.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 04-11

Comment on Item 04-11—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The Board of Pensions supports the review process recommended by the Review Committee in Recommendation One of Item 04-11—to explore the possibility of a merger between the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA)—and urges its approval.

The Board of Pensions observes that the issues identified by the Review Committee involve governance and finances, but says nothing about the six agency structure. The report specifically calls out “significant duplication and siloing within the Presbyterian Mission Agency and between PMA and OGA.” The committee that reviewed PMA noted that there exists the “Responsibility for accomplishing significant work without the authority to make and implement decisions.” Unified governance for the PC(USA) will allow the denomination to set priorities for the whole communion and escape the damaging cycles of budgetary decline.

In contrast to a perceived budgetary crisis, over the last three years the assets and wealth of the PC(USA) have grown larger by approximately $15 million. The PMA and OGA already exist as one legal entity inside PC(USA), A corporation. This is the urgent problem:

- one legal entity,
- one financial statement,
- two boards,
- two budgets,
- multiple leaders, and
- too few solutions implemented.

The suggestion proposed by PMA in its comment that there should be an “All Agency Review” would only delay the needed work of reevaluating the governance, structure, and finances of the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and how it relates to the Office of the General Assembly in particular. Nothing in the Review Committee recommendation would preclude input and participation from the other four agencies.

The Review Committee’s concerns on issues of trust, leadership, transparency, financial efficiency, and legal disputes are unique to PMA and not the six-agency structure. The Board of Pensions believes that the review process recommended by the Review Committee in Item 04-11 is an excellent first step in solving these structural problems and commends its approval.

COMMITTEE TO REVIEW OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-11

Comment on Item—From the Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

The Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly urges the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to approve Recommendation 1 in the report of the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency as written in Item 04-11.

The committee echoes the concerns expressed by the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency, and sees the need for a focused and complete assessment of the roles of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), and whether or not it would serve the mission of the church to merge these agencies. It should be noted that our advice does not presume an answer to this question, but reflects our belief that it is a question worth asking.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 04-11

Comment on Item 04-11—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

These recommendations direct the creation of several bodies: (1) to implement merger of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA); (2) to restructure the PMA Board; and (3) to explore the Shared Services of four agencies.

Comment on Recommendation 1

The General Assembly Committee on Representation commends to the assembly Standing Rule K.1.c, which lists GACOR with GANC as consulting partners to General Assembly Moderator(s) in appointing special committees and bodies created by General Assembly action. The GACOR advises and advocates ensuring the widest participation, diversity, and representation be attained throughout the review process and any resulting slate.

Comment on Recommendation 2

The GACOR reminds the assembly that the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) and the GACOR work together to fulfill F-1.0403 and that relationship is reflected in the Standing Rules and The Organization for Mission.

Comment on Recommendation 3

Any group selecting a decision-making body in the PC(USA) must be mindful of F-1.0403 and would be enriched including a consultation with GACOR in their processes of creating their slate(s) of leaders.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching, from across the church in accordance with F-1-0403. Its Constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-11

Comment on Item 04-11—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

Comment on Recommendation 1

The Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency's first recommendation is to forgo the normally scheduled All Agency Review* and instead spend that time (and financial resource) to examine the possible merger of the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly. The All Agency Review was mandated by the General Assembly in 2008 as a way of ensuring that agencies worked cooperatively together and that there were no duplication of services by the national agencies of the PC(USA).

We support the goal of enhancing coordination and effective missional and ecclesiastical support for our denominational agencies, mid councils, and our congregations. The scheduled All-Agency Review would give an overarching view of the six agencies and reveal a range of possible approaches to restructuring or for more collaboration and sharing of resources. That review would also help ensure that we are moving together with a sense of unity of mission and ministry rather than proceeding in a piecemeal fashion.

For these reasons, we find the proposals for considering a Presbyterian Mission Agency/Office of the General Assembly merger presently pending before this assembly to be premature and unduly narrow in scope. It is also without the benefit of having all our agency partners, General Assembly commissioners, and others at the table. Proposing that a different committee move directly to examining a structural merger of only two agencies prematurely forecloses the benefits of a wider, more careful analysis.

In a time of unprecedented and rapid change, our first step should be careful, prayerful, and thoughtful discernment of how we can best serve God, our congregations, and global partners. We believe understanding contextual realities will inform a wider, careful assessment of the various needs and strengths of all the agencies of the denomination. It will help us identify the best structural, financial, and staffing synergies with confidence that these proposals will help the PC(USA) be responsive to the challenges of our times at every level of the life of our denomination.

While a full exploration of the best approaches is wise, we recognize that structural changes for all agencies may not be needed or appropriate. Nonetheless, the perspective and experience of all six agencies would be valuable additions to a discernment process. Under the provisions of Agency Review Manual, the All Agency Review Committee is to be composed of a representative from each assembly agency, commissioners to recent General Assemblies (representing mid councils) and at-large members. With the benefit of the established process of the All Agency Review, having all our agency partners, and others at the table will best inform such an important structural decision and its possibilities for the coordination of resources.

In order not to lose the important work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Review Committee, we suggest that Recommendation 1 be referred to the All Agency Review Committee as an intentional part of their work.

*In 2008, the General Assembly approved a recommendation from the last Presbyterian Mission Agency Review Committee to create an additional cycle in the six-year review process that provides for a review of the "service of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies in implementing the General Assembly's mission directives" at the end of each cycle. Such a review occurred in 2010, and another is scheduled for 2016. In its rationale, the review committee wrote: "Such a review should focus broadly on the effectiveness of the six agencies and other governing bodies in implementing the General Assembly's mission directives and should not duplicate the more detailed work of the individual agency review committees. Particular attention should be given to how or if these agencies work cooperatively and where or if there is duplication of services in the system."

Comment on Recommendation 2

We support the importance and timeliness of this recommendation to consider revisions to the structure, composition, and work of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board (PMAB). In fact, in February 2016 the board itself appointed a Governance Task Force with a similar charge to work intensively to propose changes in the structure and size of the board and to clarify strategies for electing persons to the board whose skills and experience will be helpful for its work. Clearly this action reflects the board's priority for moving ahead immediately with adaptive changes to clarify our relationship with the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA). This PMAB Task Force also includes two at-large members who bring history and experience from the initial General Assembly Council (GAC) in 1983 formed following reunion and modifications to that structure in 2006. The task force has worked intensively in order to bring initial recommendations to the board for action in April 2016 with the expectation that a complete reorganization requiring General Assembly action will be developed for 2018.

The interim model proposes substantive structural and procedural changes to the board's current practices that will assure focused attention at every meeting to three primary tasks:

- generative discernment of God's calling for the energies of the PMA,
- programmatic planning to implement its discernment through the use of ad hoc strategic teams, and

- oversight of fiduciary, missional, and corporate responsibilities of the board through standing ministerial committees.

The model also assures more effective use of the current voting members of the board as well as at-large and nonvoting members and staff.

(A detailed description of the proposal is posted at www.presbyterianmission.org/governance-task-force-report.)

Because we believe it is wise to move ahead now, we propose that the General Assembly take advantage of the interim model and future work of the PMAB Task Force to respond to this recommendation. The assembly could also consider appointing several additional at-large members to join the PMAB Governance Task Force.

Comment on Recommendation 3

We affirm and support the value of interagency collaboration and thus support this recommendation for consultation among the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, and the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. We believe strategies for enhancing this collaboration could be achieved effectively as part of the All Agency Review proposed in response to Recommendation 1.

Item 04-12

Report of the Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly.

[The assembly approved Item 04-12, Recommendation 1. See pp. 12, 40.]

The Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) take the following actions:

1. Instruct the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) to conduct regular assessment on the progress of their response to the recommendations in this report, and to include the results of this assessment in the minutes of their committee meetings.

Rationale for Recommendation 1

Currently, there are two points at which agencies are accountable for follow-through on General Assembly recommendations stemming from the review process: First, as part of the “response to referrals” at the subsequent General Assembly to the review in question and, second, as part of the next six-year General Assembly-level review. Thus, as part of its agency self-study, the agency has listed its responses to recommendations passed at the 218th General Assembly (2008). In the committee’s review of these recommendations and responses, we have found that a number of the concerns listed in 2008 remain growth areas in 2014. A mechanism for annual progress reporting may help direct the agency’s responses more effectively, and for COGA to help shape the work of the Office of the General Assembly accordingly.

[The assembly approved Item 04-12, Recommendation 2. See pp. 13, 40.]

2. Instruct the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to strengthen its long-range planning process and document a three- to five-year plan.

Rationale for Recommendation 2

In the last six years, the OGA has undertaken a major study, with the assistance of outside consultants, of its operations and efficiencies, and made significant changes to both. Acknowledging that the OGA is still living into these shifts, the committee still feels that this recommendation, which mirrors a recommendation from the 2008 review, is warranted. In our interviews with staff across the OGA, it was acknowledged by leadership that perhaps because of the upheaval of reorganization, the OGA is “woefully weak on a work plan.” A three-to-five year plan, undertaken after the election of the new Stated Clerk, could assist the OGA in realistically addressing its mission and vision with the resources at its disposal.

[The assembly approved Item 04-12, Recommendation 3. See pp. 13, 40.]

3. Instruct the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to consult with the other General Assembly agencies on strategic alignment for certain departments that might service more than one agency (finance, human resources, audit, communications and funds development, building services, etc.) and to assess, in consultation with the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board, potential programmatic synergies around immigration and ecumenical/interfaith relations.

Rationale for Recommendation 3

Agencies of the General Assembly, particularly the four agencies primarily located at the Presbyterian Center, routinely assess how they can serve most effectively for the good of the whole church. A focused discussion on those services that might be duplicated within or useful to other agencies, whether conducted in a manner consistent with the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency's Recommendation 3 (Item 04-11) or not, would be of value to the OGA before embarking on a long-range planning process. Further, while programmatic alignment with the Presbyterian Mission Agency may be answered with action on Recommendation 1, if it is not, the committee believes that these two areas are deserving of particular attention, as significant work on behalf of the PC(USA) regarding immigration and ecumenical/interfaith relations are housed in both PMA and OGA ministries.

[The assembly approved Item 04-12, Recommendation 4. See pp. 13, 40.]

4. Instruct the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to take the following recommendations under consideration and to include their response to or progress on these items in their accountability process:

a. Recognizing that difficult decisions on the allocation of resources are being made quite often, the committee suggests that COGA look to prioritize the staffing and resourcing of the Mid Council Relations Office (a shared office with the PMA) in light of the significant challenge of increased demand from both presbyteries and congregations.

b. While it is appreciated that leadership from the six agencies meet informally to discuss General Assembly business prior to the convening of the assembly, it may be that this overlooks the reality that the business coming out of a committee may be significantly different than initial overtures. Our committee would recommend the COGA consider initiating a conversation with leadership from the other five agencies during the proceedings of the assembly itself, in order to discuss business that has been amended in committee and to formulate collaborative response, if deemed necessary, for presentation where appropriate in the plenary session.

c. In order to assure that the priorities set by the General Assembly and COGA would be the same priorities for work adopted by the staff of OGA, we recommend that benchmark goals for the OGA should be presented, discussed, reviewed, approved, and reported upon afterwards at COGA meetings, as was done in 2009 and 2011.

d. We recommend that annual or otherwise periodic reviews of the Stated Clerk be conducted and reported upon in the COGA minutes. As required in the Organization for Mission (IV.C.2.d.(2)), COGA should prioritize a formal, annual, review process for the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. While the COGA moderator indicated, and our committee observed, an excellent working relationship with the Stated Clerk, including time at each COGA meeting for the Stated Clerk to present and update the board with progress, issues, and concerns, a more structured review of the Stated Clerk should be helpful, particularly as the denomination elects a new Stated Clerk in 2016.

e. Our committee recommends that COGA review and ratify the Stated Clerk's recommendations on the staffing of agency review committees in order to ensure they are staffed in a manner consistent with the Agency Review Manual. While staff support for this review committee has been capable and helpful, the appointment of a (now retired) staff person from the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., does not meet with the expectation outlined in the Agency Review Manual, Chapter 1, II, which states that "Staffing is provided by the General Assembly Mission Council (now Presbyterian Mission Agency) in the year the Office of the General Assembly is reviewed." While the committee assumes no malice on behalf of the Stated Clerk, and understands a desire for efficiency, in an environment where trust of national church leadership is at a premium, it is best to ensure accountability that meets or exceeds the standards that the church has established.

f. The committee recommends, echoing the recommendation of the 2008 review committee, that the OGA Self-Study report be made available in a more timely fashion. Our committee received the document on the same day as our first meeting, and it was challenging to prepare adequately without having reviewed the material prior to our gathering.

Rationale for Recommendation 4

The review committee would like very much for these items to be taken under consideration by COGA, but acknowledges also that COGA has much more intimate knowledge of its work, policies, procedures, and process than this review committee, and may already have addressed or be addressing some of these concerns. The review committee is reluctant to ask that these recommendations become mandated by action of the General Assembly; rather, we are asking that the General Assembly mandate their consideration by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, trusting that COGA will welcome these suggestions and the spirit in which they are offered.

Overall Rationale

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY

The Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) met in Dallas on March 11–13, 2015, and in Louisville on October 28–31, 2015, and conducted its work according to the guidelines of the Agency Review Manual of the PC(USA). The committee concludes that the OGA is fulfilling its mandate according to the accreditation standards set forth in the manual, which are church relatedness, policy and program effectiveness, and collaboration.

The review committee uniformly found that staff members in the Office of the General Assembly are deeply committed to Jesus Christ and to the work of the church. The sense of vocation among the staff is profound. More than once we were inspired by the passion with which staff members support the mission of the PC(USA). We found not only great personal alignment with the mission of the church but also strong interrelatedness among staff members, creating a positive spirit within the organization.

The review committee finds two major areas of concern for the Office of the General Assembly (OGA). The first stems from the OGA undertaking a significant reorganization and restructure in 2013, impacting nearly every aspect of the agency. Elimination of positions, shifting of full-time positions to part-time, consolidation of responsibilities as a result of restructure, deployment of staff outside of Louisville, and reduction or elimination of support staff create a larger work load for a smaller staff. There seems to be no clear sense of how responsibilities can be prioritized with reduced personnel and resources. These factors have a potentially negative impact on morale and the health and wellness of staff members.

The second issue of concern is the changing situation in the church, particularly at the level of mid councils. As mid council staffs are reduced or eliminated entirely, increasing amounts of OGA staff time are spent doing the resourcing that presbyteries and synods previously have done. With the challenge of departing congregations and an increasing percentage of mid council leadership with little or no experience, communication that once proceeded along a relatively stable network of presbyteries and synods now relies more on OGA staff itself.

The review committee concurs with a proposed resolution of the Committee to Review the Presbyterian Mission Agency to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) regarding merger of the OGA and the PMA. Our committee makes no comment on the advisability of merger, but commends to the church the merits of a deliberate and thoughtful conversation on the subject. At the beginning of this report are recommendations for this assembly and that we hope will be helpful in the work of a task force considering the future structure of our denomination at the national level.

The Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly is composed of Teaching Elders Raymond Anglin (Plantation, Fla.), Catherine Rice Harrison (Spokane, Wash.), Diane Kareha (Allentown, Pa.), Cliff Lyda, moderator, (Elmhurst, Ill.), Carmen Rosario (Bradley Beach, N.J.), Matthew Schramm (Bay City, Mich.), Jane Searjeant Watt (Pittsford, N.Y.); and Ruling Elders Kenneth Kim (Knoxville, Tenn.), Marcy Moody (Jacksonville, Fla.), Manley Olson (Minneapolis, Minn.), and Patricia Valentine (Charlottesville, Va.). The committee is staffed by Ruling Elder Ben Blake (Louisville, Ky.) of the Presbyterian Loan and Investment Corporation, Inc.

CHURCH RELATEDNESS

The first criterion for assessment set forth in the Agency Review Manual is church relatedness. Is the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) doing what the church and its congregations and governing bodies need for it to be doing, and in a way that is faithful to its defined role? How does OGA serve and support the church's mission and exhibit a constant awareness of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA)? Accountability, the exercise of appropriate leadership, and cooperation with other agencies of the church in areas where responsibilities may overlap were part of our consideration.

The Executive Summary in the self-study from 2008 to 2014 of OGA, announces that the office is "alive and well." The staff continues to navigate through the "troubled waters" of diminishing membership and diminishing per capita. Diminishing resources and fewer staff are the major challenges. As the Stated Clerk said in our interview, "we have a thin bench, but it is the bench that the church affords us to have." There may be a need for further assessment as to whether the strategy and vision of OGA needs to be reduced to more accurately reflect the staff afforded them by the church. The self-study enumerates several significant accomplishments and a rearranging of tasks, especially relating to the meetings of the General Assembly and the election of a new Moderator every two years. The report also explains very well the role, support, and contributions of the COGA as it discerns the mind of Christ and strives to be the church.

The committee believes that the Office of the General Assembly is accomplishing the work it has been assigned. It has a skilled, diverse, and dedicated staff resourcing the PC(USA) in three areas: Churchwide Ministries, Mid Council Ministries, and Ecclesial and Ecumenical Ministries. It demonstrates constant awareness of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA).

As part of this committee's work, we issued a survey to key constituencies of the OGA. After assessing the responses from surveys, the committee finds that there is a slight increase from 2007 to 2015 in constituents being familiar with the OGA in general and its exhibition of leadership. The dedicated and knowledgeable staff were noted several times, and the Stated Clerk received excellent reviews. On the other hand, several comments were made concerning workload of a downsized staff and the resulting inability to respond in a timely manner. This is compounded by the downsizing of middle governing bodies, the increase in new or transitional presbytery leaders, the elimination of some staff in presbyteries and synods, and a corresponding decrease in responsiveness from mid councils to congregations and leaders. The staff is spread too thin to do much constitutional interpretation in the field, especially explaining the new Book of Order and interpreting the impact of General Assembly decisions. The staff of Constitutional Services relates to the whole church for training and field work with only one person with this job description and minimal help from support staff.

Presbyteries are struggling with leadership challenges. There are a substantial number of new executives and clerks in our presbyteries, and a significant number of presbyteries have no executive staff. The OGA staff is now doing much of the constitutional interpretation required by the mid-level bodies. OGA staff would like to be more proactive, but there is not sufficient time for this.

Fulfilling the mandates and instructions from General Assembly action provides a significant OGA staff workload. Combining these demands with the resourcing of congregations and mid councils makes for an almost unrealistic expectation. As part of that resourcing, OGA must respond, expertly and with authority, to congregations and mid councils that have vastly different needs. For example, the needs of a presbytery without any staff, comprised of a dozen congregations, are usually quite dissimilar to the needs of a presbytery with multiple full-time ordained staff and 40,000 Presbyterians in its membership. Further, this challenge is exacerbated by the significant staff hours committed to working with congregations and presbyteries in discernment and dismissal processes, a major factor in the increased workload at the OGA since 2008. The review committee was impressed with and grateful for the dedication, expertise, and passion of OGA staff, particularly in light of a crushing workload and nearly impossible expectations.

With the advent of a new Stated Clerk and a new Executive Director for the Presbyterian Mission Agency, there is a feeling of anxiety among the OGA staff. There is widespread call in the church for merger of the agencies, but we have observed a desire among staff for stability and clarity. It seems to be a painful time for both the OGA and the PMA to keep their heads above water while others make decisions around them.

The OGA is accountable to the General Assembly through the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The OGA sees as its charge to “encourage the PC(USA) to be a people of hope—seeking together the mind of Christ; working for justice and mercy in the world; and participating in God’s continual reformation of the church.” As we interviewed OGA staff and read their self-study, it was clear that this mission is truly internalized in their ministry. It seemed clear to the review committee that any shortcoming in delivering services is not due to a lack of fidelity and accountability of staff but rather due to the lack of staff time and resources to meet all of the demands on their offices. This deficiency in resources exists because OGA functions come from per capita, and per capita income has been in steep decline.

As far as the review committee could determine, the diverse, dedicated, skilled staff of the OGA faithfully honors and responds to General Assembly policy statements to the best of their abilities. The OGA responds to directives and requests from the General Assembly, and, where appropriate, seeks to ensure that other agencies of the PC(USA) respond to directives and requests from the General Assembly. The OGA is the clearinghouse for all General Assembly overtures, directives, and requests. It is the agency that is the recipient and sender of communications to and from the General Assembly. The OGA staff honors the policy statements of the General Assembly of the PC(USA), and both Presbyterian (who are the majority) and non-Presbyterian staff who were interviewed understand, respect, and express loyalty to the PC(USA).

POLICIES AND PROGRAM EFFECTIVENESS

The second criterion for assessment is policies and program effectiveness. The committee finds that the assets of the Office of the General Assembly are well managed. We do believe, however, that the OGA is severely understaffed. The 30 percent reduction in staffing in the spring of 2013 due to budget concerns does not appear to have been accompanied by a similar reduction in required job duties and responsibilities. It appears that some job responsibilities might benefit from a more comprehensive review of what is essential and what is not to address the overall OGA mission and vision. This review should be part of a three-to-five year strategic planning effort to be sure that OGA can realistically address its mission and vision with the resources at its disposal from the per capita budget.

The OGA receives its oversight from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA). COGA is well constituted to provide leadership and oversight to the OGA with a diverse group of fourteen elected members plus the General Assembly Moderator. COGA meeting minutes over the past seven years show that its members met regularly, at least twice a year in person with additional conference calls for specific issues as needed on a timely basis. Subcommittees, work groups, and task forces were regularly organized to address specific areas of responsibility. Orientation sessions were provided to help new members get up to speed quickly. An executive Coordinating Committee held numerous conference call meetings to address issues needing timely action between face-to-face meetings.

The Stated Clerk, Moderator of the General Assembly, and Vice Moderator of the General Assembly all made regular reports and appeared integral to the work of COGA. OGA staff (including staff of the Presbyterian Historical Society) and other bodies were in frequent attendance to address their areas of responsibility and expertise. Regular financial progress reports were provided by the Stated Clerk and the full committee discussed and approved per capita budgets on an annual basis. Many subcommittees and task forces were organized to respond to General Assembly mandates and there was an enthusiasm and sense of spiritual devotion in subsequent progress reporting on the all the issues mandated by the General Assembly. COGA appears to understand well its leadership responsibilities and it appears to tackle each General Assembly-directed responsibility with positive energy and a broad concern for the larger church body and its long term future. While the minutes of two meetings in 2009 and 2011 reflected a review and approval of benchmark goals for OGA for 2009–10 and 2011, those were the only two meetings where OGA benchmark goals appeared to be approved. One recommendation would be for annual benchmark goals for OGA to be presented, discussed, reviewed, approved, and reported upon afterwards. This would help assure that the priorities set by the General Assembly and COGA would be the same priorities for work adopted by the staff of OGA.

The OGA financials are audited as part of the larger PC(USA) consolidated financial picture by an independent accounting firm, Crowe Horwath. The accountants' report provided a clean opinion, indicating no problems with maintaining or reporting financial activity by any of the PC(USA) entities, including the OGA.

The Stated Clerk is elected by the General Assembly of the PC(USA). In accordance with the Organization for Mission, the COGA minutes of February 2008 reported an end-of-term comprehensive review of the Stated Clerk that was very complimentary. Subsequent COGA minutes from then through 2014 did not reveal any annual or otherwise periodic reviews of the Stated Clerk. We recommend that annual or otherwise periodic reviews of the Stated Clerk be done and reported upon in the COGA minutes. While the COGA moderator said that the committee regularly gave the Stated Clerk time at each meeting to discuss his issues and concerns, it might be helpful to provide a more structured review to the Stated Clerk on an annual basis.

During our interviews we found that anticipated succession in the Stated Clerk's office makes long-range planning a primary challenge. This is followed by uncertainty as to whether the OGA will need to again downsize staff. No long-range planning is a major symptom of the staff drawdown. Long-range planning (three to five years) should be undertaken as soon as possible after the new Stated Clerk is elected at the next General Assembly in June 2016. Intentional organizational long-range planning should help the long-term vitality of the OGA and the church at large.

In the last eight years there seems to be a strong and personable relationship between senior staff, the Stated Clerk, and all other staff. All interviewees stated that they felt that they had easy access to all senior staff. The healthy collegiality has helped accomplish staff input and output.

In the seven years under review (2008–2014), the OGA reported operating deficits in four years and surpluses in three. The combined net was a positive surplus for the seven-year period. The OGA appears to manage its ongoing operating budget in a very fiscally responsible manner, making adjustments quickly when events suggest changes are needed. When the expense budget has needed to be reduced due to shrinking per capita revenues, staff have acted quickly to make hard but necessary adjustments. The Stated Clerk and his team should be complimented for responding so quickly and decisively to the shrinking per capita revenue budget. Salary levels have been watched carefully with few increases and changes in ranges over the past seven years. Creative one-time bonuses were used in lieu of raises when the budget was most uncertain in order to avoid building in a larger base salary expectation that OGA might not have been able to sustain. When the Presbyterian Historical Society needed a loan ($790,000) for capital repairs and improvements to their facility in Philadelphia, the COGA Coordinating Committee (Sep 8, 2014 minutes) carefully reviewed the request and approved it as part of the COGA approval process before it was sent to the PMA board for its approval.

Should a surplus exist, the committee believes budget funds should be used to add staff to work with the mid council bodies and for contract tech staff support (more cost-effective than in-house staff). The staff seems well-versed in new technologies, but an OGA dedicated tech contract could truly help. It seems to be very difficult for staff to produce additional communication with its constituencies as they spend almost all of their time responding to calls of constituents in crises. They cannot be truly proactive in this climate.

There is one person in human resources/personnel to deal with accreditation of all OGA staff. This is working insofar as the staff does not turn over that greatly but it does not provide for counseling and educational input that an additional staff person could give. The COGA minutes refer to various updates on different policies within the Personnel Policy Manual so they are probably very current and up-to-date.

COLLABORATION

The third criterion for assessment is collaboration. The review committee finds that the OGA is collaborative, insofar as it is able, with the other agencies of the General Assembly. This is an area of demonstrable improvement over the past six years, and continues to be a point of emphasis as the OGA navigates a continually changing church landscape that is impacting both national bodies and their constituents. A restructure and downsizing of the OGA staff, along with shifting leadership models and staff instability at the mid council level has impacted every aspect of the OGA's work, forcing the OGA to do as much, or more, ministry with fewer resources.

Our conclusions with regard to this criterion are based on the impressions and research of the OGA review committee itself, and not informed by any direct self-assessment by the OGA, as this was not included in the materials received by the committee or prepared by the OGA. In order to form our opinion, the committee was grateful to consult with leadership from the other five General Assembly agencies. It should be noted that the focus of this review is 2008–2014; thus, reviewing these relationships in 2015–2016 is somewhat more challenging because of significant leadership turnover in four agencies. However, we are confident that our findings accurately reflect the climate in the evaluative period on the topic of collaboration. Additionally, the committee has benefitted from contracted work by the Office of Research Services, which surveyed various constituencies, including leadership of other General Assembly agencies, in collecting data on our behalf.

The committee finds that, where appropriate and directed by the General Assembly, the OGA presses beyond communication and consultation to genuine collaboration, sharing agendas and work with other agencies toward fulfillment of shared goals. Unfortunately, there are times when the General Assembly directive, or at least the agencies' interpretation of it, have discouraged, rather than encouraged, equalitarian collaboration. For instance, the 221st General Assembly (2014) amended an overture, Item 15-04, to include the directive, instruct the Office of the General Assembly to immediately fill the vacancy of the position of coordinator of immigration issues in the Office of Immigration Issues. This position will help facilitate the Presbyterian Immigrant Defense Initiative. This staff person should be multilingual, have theological and legal training, community organizing experience, and a passion for justice for all the people of God but especially those who find themselves marginalized and discriminated against by unjust immigration policies. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 1030)

It was the desire of the assembly that the national church resource a new, grassroots organization (PIDI) and concentrate on advocacy and civil liberties for immigrant communities. Indeed there was a vacancy for a "co-manager" in Immigration Issues at that time. Thus, the assembly's action called for one co-manager to be hired to focus on public advocacy and the other co-manager to continue work centered on legal resources for immigrant and immigrating Presbyterians. A large percentage of the advocacy work within this office, as directed by previous assemblies, includes specific instruction to engage with the PMA's Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C., for immigration advocacy. Thus, the insistence of the assembly that the OGA fill this particular role within the OGA structure in Louisville may have prevented a more synergistic and efficient model that could have housed this work at the Office of Public Witness itself. However, it may also be that this type of collaboration between the OGA and the PMA is difficult from a purely financial perspective, in that General Assembly directives to OGA are funded by adjustments to per capita, whereas General Assembly directives to PMA ministries must be absorbed into the mission budget, thus forcing reductions in budget allocations and/or programming in other PMA ministry areas. It may be that there exists a perception amongst overture advocates that because the six agencies, particularly the PMA and the OGA, have different streams of funding, programs are more "safely housed" within the OGA and its "adjustable" and constitutionally obligatory per capita funding stream rather than the "voluntary," uncertain nature of unrestricted mission giving to the PMA. While this does not assert by any means that this work is ill-suited to the OGA, the OGA and PMA did not consult to consider these questions in advance of the action, and there may be issues of perceived financial "security" impacting decision making on how best to accomplish a General Assembly priority. It may be helpful to create some mechanism whereby such consultation can occur.

The OGA maintains regular communication with, and provides timely and appropriate access to information to other agencies and PC(USA) constituencies. From our interviews, it is clear that "top-level" communication and collaboration is very good. Board leaders and top executive leadership of the six agencies regularly prioritize spending time together, building collegiality that has proven fruitful in offering consistency and creativity across the General Assembly's work, as well as an opportunity to collaborate. Projects such as 2012's "Six Agency" video for General Assembly commissioner orientation, as well as the "One Church, One Field, One Staff" events have grown out of this collaboration and are to be commended.

PC(USA) agencies are encouraged to conduct an evaluation of potential gains and risks associated with collaborative endeavors with other agencies whenever new programs are initiated. During the time period this review covers, the OGA did undertake a major restructuring of its operations, guided by outside consultant recommendations. From interviews with the other five agencies of the General Assembly, it is indicated that the input or consultation of leadership from these Presbyterian agencies was not sought in advance of said restructure. While top-level leadership was informed of the changes that were being made, there was no collaboration on the planning for or initiation of those changes, or focused conversation regarding potential synergies. Whether this was an intentional strategy in order for the OGA to work in a more focused manner, the byproduct of a territorial impulse that can emerge in times of uncertainty, or simply an oversight is not something that this committee can conclude, but it is a potential growing edge as further changes are considered.

Agencies are also encouraged to seek pragmatic solutions to operational challenges by relying on the assets, resources, and strengths of other agencies. As stated, it appears that collaboration "at the top" is quite good. Notably, the Presbyterian Historical Society (PHS) has initiated what they described as a "full-tech partnership" with the Board of Pensions, as they are both located in Philadelphia, which has been quite successful thus far. The PHS has also received a loan through the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and been in conversation with the Presbyterian Foundation about fundraising and expanding the reach of their funds development efforts.

However, this is not an area without challenges, particularly “down the chain” on a day-to-day operational level. For example, while PHS has collaborated successfully on many “larger” projects, since the elimination of a local records manager in Louisville, there has been a significant struggle in obtaining operational records from the six agencies, creating a significant backlog. And while GA Meeting Services has been lifted up by other agencies as particularly helpful and willing to collaborate, assist, and work collegially on items of mutual interest, there are aspects of the OGA’s work in Louisville and at the General Assembly that lag behind with regard to collaboration, notably information technology and communications. Staff reductions at both OGA and PMA, shifting responsibilities, and unclear lines of accountability have made the attempt to share technical support services fairly unsuccessful. IT staff are outnumbered by the work needed from them in such a tech-dependent environment and spreading services across the agencies has been difficult at best. Even at the OGA, for IT to function at an acceptable level has demanded cooperation and collaboration and patience from all.

Regarding communications, it is noted that communications at the General Assembly meeting and the General Assembly “communications tent” have been a collaborative effort across agencies for many years. However, in interviews with the committee, OGA staff indicated they plan to take responsibility to “cover all that is going on at General Assembly” without collaboration from Presbyterian News Service or communications staff from the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the Presbyterian Foundation, the Board of Pensions, the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, or the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. While the General Assembly meeting is the responsibility of the OGA, with the Stated Clerk directing communications about its proceedings, a collaborative vision should make a “place at the table” for other agencies and the news service of the denomination to collaborate on the most significant expression of our national, shared identity. In a time when collaboration is perhaps more crucial than ever, working together at the General Assembly meeting models mutuality for the denomination rather than exhibiting division between agencies. Again, whether this was an intentional strategy in order for the OGA to work in a more focused manner, the byproduct of a territorial impulse that can emerge in times of uncertainty, or simply an oversight is not something that this committee can conclude, but it is a potential growing edge as further changes are considered.

From the interviews with staff members it became increasingly evident that there was a great deal of internal collaboration at the OGA. With the drastic reduction of staff across the units, it has been necessary for staff to combine their efforts and energy in order to maintain the level of performance and production that was established. All staff indicated that both “superiors and subordinates” within the OGA were open to working together for the good of the church, and accessible for collaboration when necessary.

It needs to be noted as well, that reductions in workforce have included the shifting of some full-time staff positions at the OGA to part-time. While very capable staff have filled these roles admirably, perhaps even in an environment where job expectations and working hours were not decreased proportionally, the committee observes that some of these part-time positions are only “part-time” because they are filled by longtime employees of the PC(USA). Were these staffers to retire or move on, the steep learning curve of these roles would make it nearly impossible for them to be done effectively as part-time staff positions.

As a general comment, one staff member indicated that the amount of work needing to be done could only be accomplished on the strength of collaboration among “amazing colleagues.” While this level of collegiality and trust is admirable, internal and external collaboration are always worth exploring when assessing the health of an organization. For the OGA, it could be that challenges in the work of collaboration find their origin in a disproportional workload to staff ratio. When staff persons have job descriptions that completely occupy their working hours, it is unreasonable to assume that they will take additional, valuable time to solicit the resources of other agencies in the exercise of that work. It is our view that collaboration is an early casualty of an outsized expectations and downsizing. The unfortunate irony is that this area could potentially have a positive impact in alleviating the burdens of the same.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-12

Comment on Item 04-12—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) offers the following comment in response to Item 04-12, Report of the Committee to Review the Office of the General Assembly.

In response to Recommendations 1 & 2, COGA agrees that it would be good practice to conduct regular assessments of the recommendations of the report and to strengthen our long-range planning process by conducting a three-to-five year plan. Especially following the major restructuring of the OGA, a long-range plan and regular assessments of progress of the goals and tactics of that plan would help COGA to prioritize issues and work as directed by the actions of the General Assembly.

In response to Recommendation 3, COGA agrees that continuing to find strategic alliances and to build relationships with other agencies of the church will only bring positive results.

In response to Recommendation 4, COGA has accepted and is implementing the recommendations of the review committee that we take into consideration the suggestions made about staffing of the OGA, having a more formal review process of the Stated Clerk, consulting with representatives from the other church agencies during the General Assembly when possible, and formalizing the process of aligning goals of OGA staff with those directed by the General Assembly and COGA. We also agree that the staffing of the OGA Review Committee be done in accordance with the Agency Review Manual.

Item 04-13

On Amending Book of Order, G-6.04e, Concerning the Role of the ACC and PJC When Constitutional Questions Are Considered by the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

The Presbytery of Grand Canyon overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Amend G-6.04e as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“e. The Stated Clerk receives written advice that a proposed amendment to the Book of Order has received the affirmative votes of a ~~majority~~ two-thirds majority of all the presbyteries. ~~The proposed amendment so approved shall become effective one year following the adjournment of the assembly transmitting the proposed amendment.~~ The proposed amendment is approved and enacted by the next General Assembly following the amendment’s receipt of the necessary two-thirds approval of the presbyteries.”

Rationale

It seems obvious that some changes need to be made in the General Assembly’s Standing Rules so that they more clearly and explicitly define the governing procedures and express the scriptural basis upon which our denomination was ordained.

Understanding that recommendations of the Advisory Committee of the Constitution (ACC), which become authoritative interpretations (AI) when passed by the General Assembly, commissioners not only carry with them the authority of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) but also become effective immediately. Nevertheless, they should not be enacted in haste. The importance of such action and its effect upon the numerous individual church bodies requires much thought and prayerful deliberation in order to prevent the abuse of power by a few.

The commissioners to General Assembly must have the ability to clearly understand the implications resulting from their support of an authoritative interpretation (AI), the rationale of the issues placed before them, and the process by which an AI is both rendered and implemented. The existing procedure has a tendency to be self-serving and does not provide for transparency. The ability of the permanent judiciary committee to issue a stay of enforcement of an enacted AI is essential to protecting the integrity and the credibility of the Presbyterian denomination.

The current rules for amending the Book of Order by a simple majority vote of one General Assembly and a simple majority of the presbyteries has fostered the instability of the church’s Constitution. The result of this condition has led to both the loss of support for the work we are commissioned to achieve and a decline in the denomination’s membership.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 04-13

Advice on Item 04-13—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

This overture would change the requirements for approval of amendments to the Book of Order: General Assembly approval and two-thirds of presbyteries’ approval. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 04-13.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 04-13

Comment on Item 04-13—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of General Assembly respectfully advises the assembly to disapprove Item 04-13.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It also regularly reviews the Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

To require a two-thirds majority of presbyteries to enact constitutional change is contrary to our Reformed tenet that the Church is reformed and always to be reformed according to the Word of God (G-6.01) (“Ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda secundum verbum Dei”). When this recommendation has come before previous assemblies, it has been repeatedly rejected. Finally, it would be anomalous for the Form of Government, which was adopted by a majority vote, to be amended by majority vote in a manner to require future Presbyterians to gain a 2/3 vote of the presbyteries to make further changes.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 04-13

Comment on Item 04-13—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

This overture asks the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to require certain proposed actions and votes to achieve percentages of support at levels that assure they will not be considered by future General Assemblies and assure defeat of those that are.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation respectfully reminds the assembly that any General Assembly cannot bind subsequent General Assemblies. Historically, actions that require supermajority of approval of presbyteries have not passed because it limits access to and limits participation in the decision-making process of the church. In effect, it limits the ability of assemblies to discern the will of God.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation is made up of fourteen persons, elected by the General Assembly, who are drawn from members and elders, ruling and teaching, from across the church in accordance with F-1-0403. Its Constitutional mandate and central functions are described in G-3.0103 of the Book of Order (Form of Government).

Item 04-NB

2020 Vision Team.

Approved. [See pp. 37, 40–41.]

The Assembly Committee on the Way Forward recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) direct the Co-Moderators, in consultation with the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) and the General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR), to name a “2020 Vision Team” of fifteen people to develop a guiding statement for the denomination and make a plan for its implementation with all deliberate speed. The process of developing such a guiding statement will help us to name and claim our denominational identity as we seek to follow the Spirit into the future.

1. The committee shall be made up of the following:

- a. At least six teaching elders and at least six ruling elders.
- b. The following demographic traits should be considered when naming members of the committee: gender identity; geographic location; inclusion of people under the age of forty (with special attention paid to young adult advisory delegates (YAADs) serving on the Assembly Committee on “The Way Forward” of the 222nd General Assembly (2016)); racial ethnic minorities; those engaged in both parish and validated ministries; theological diversity (people representative of all the “clusters” identified in “When We Gather at the Table”).
- c. The following skill sets should be considered when naming members of the committee: strategic planning, visioning, experience on administrative commissions.
- d. The Co-Moderators of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall serve as additional, ex officio, members of this committee.

2. The committee shall build upon the work begun in “When We Gather at the Table” as well as Moderator Heath Rada’s report made to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

3. The committee should conduct targeted listening exercises with various constituencies throughout the PC(USA) in an effort to discern where the Spirit is leading the church in the future. These may include, but are not limited to, congregations, presbyteries, synods, and seminaries. Such conversations should center on the calling of the church (Book of Order, F-1.03) as well as the vision these constituencies have of how God is calling them to respond to “what breaks God’s heart” in their communities.

4. The committee should also look outside the walls of the church to seek best practices and resources for being relevant to the changing landscapes of local, national, and international communities.

5. The committee will develop recommendations that shall be the only business for the Assembly Committee on The Way Forward to review at the 223rd General Assembly (2018). The only exception would be overtures that respond directly to any reports from the 2020 Vision Team. The intention is that there will be a new vision for the denomination by the 224th General Assembly (2020).

6. The assembly shall allocate sufficient resources for this committee to effectively accomplish its work.

WHEN WE GATHER AT THE TABLE

A PC(USA) Snapshot

FAMILY PORTRAIT

Across the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), congregations, mid councils, and other interested groups are discerning together who we are as a church and who God is calling us to be. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) has also engaged in this discussion as it sought to understand the current nature of our ecclesiology, the theology of church. In the summer of 2015, COGA came to an understanding that it would be valuable to attempt to bring these many conversations and their insights together for the benefit of the whole church. COGA worked with the talented people of the Presbyterian Mission Agency Research Services and developed an instrument to gather these conversations. The key goals of the process were:

- Open to anyone who wished to participate
- Open-ended questions with no preset list of answers
- Open to wherever the data lead

This report is the results of the gathered data. The full report, “Final Report: The Church in the 21st Century,” can be found at <http://www.pcusa.org/resource/final-report-church-21st-century>. Another report, “Coding Instrument for PC(USA) Identity Survey Data” can be found at <http://www.pcusa.org/resource/coding-instrument-pcusa-identity-survey/>.

COGA offers it to the PC(USA) as a portrait of who we, the PC(USA), see ourselves to be.

COGA commentary of our findings is presented with “shaded” background. All other text in the report is provided by Research Services in their work in collecting and analyzing the data which COGA sought.

Study Design and Implementation

Areas of Investigation

This work originally sought to explore several general research questions, though the instrument that was used ultimately focused on these:

- What does it mean to be part of this denomination? How important is that to Presbyterians, and why?
- What is the church better equipped to do as a national denomination that it could not do as well as individual congregations and mid council offices?
- What is the church called to be and do in the context of 21st-century American culture?
- What is central to our shared identity, and how do we express it?
- On what things do we achieve a strong consensus, and on what things do we have a broad diversity of opinions?

Who Participated

Because this project invited the input of any and all people and entities of the PC(USA) (individuals, congregations, seminaries, mid councils, and various affiliated groups [e.g. New Worshiping Communities, immigrant fellowships]) within a short timeframe, creating a probability sample to ensure a representative group of Presbyterians was not feasible. Instead, a convenience sample (that is—a sample of volunteers) was used. As such, we cannot calculate a response rate.

Findings from the resulting convenience sample will not be as generalizable as findings would be if they had been taken from a (random) probability sample. However, an analysis of the demographics of those who participated in the study reveals that the sample somewhat matches the known demographics of Presbyterians as a whole.

Exceptions are noted in the Demographics section, which follows.

Demographics

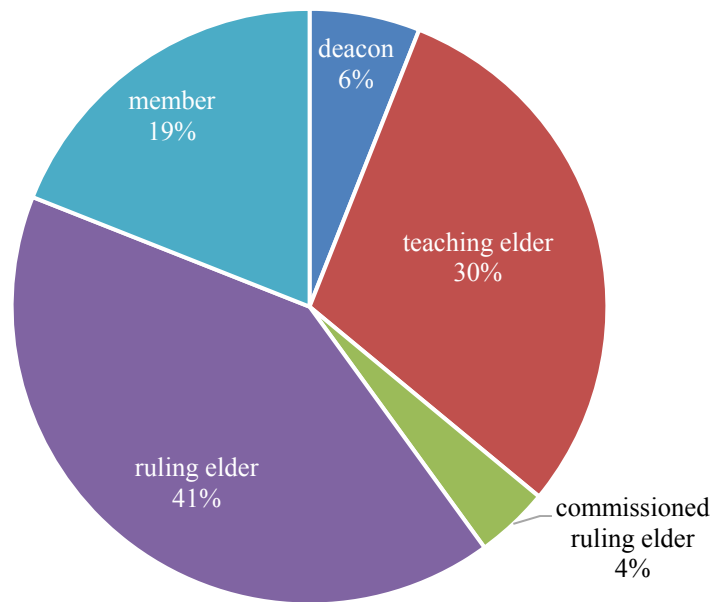

Length of Membership: Because we were specifically interested in hearing from PC(USA) members, we asked, “Are you a member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)?” Participants were presented with four different response options:

- Yes, I am a member of the PC(USA).
- Yes, I consider myself Presbyterian but don’t identify with any particular denomination.
- No, I belong to another Presbyterian denomination.
- No, I’m not Presbyterian.

If participants answered “no” to this question, they were sent to an exit screen where they were thanked for their participation and were asked no other questions. Of the 3,427 who answered this question affirmatively, 98 percent said they are members of the PC(USA) and 2 percent said they consider themselves Presbyterian but do not identify with any particular Presbyterian denomination. About half (55 percent) of the participants were raised in the denomination. Those who joined or converted to the PC(USA) average 24 years with the denomination, with a range of 1–71 years.

Role: Participants were asked which role(s) they have in the PC(USA) (see Figure 2). Though many participants hold more than one role, a hierarchy was used to show only one role for each.

More than a third (41 percent) of all participants are ruling elders (but not commissioned ruling elders), about a third (34 percent) are commissioned ruling elders or teaching elders, and one fourth (25 percent) are neither (members, 19 percent, and deacons, 6 percent). These proportions are consistent with our expectations for who would be most informed about the denomination and, therefore, more likely to participate in this process. Overall, 16 percent of the participants serve as a pastoral leader of one or more congregations, and 18 percent are commissioned ruling elders or teaching elders serving in some other capacity.

Those who checked “teaching elder” or “commissioned ruling elder” were asked to select from among fourteen categories to describe their current employment. They were able to check all that apply. Among the 34 percent of the participants who are either commissioned ruling elders or teaching elders:

- 61 percent of teaching elders and 14 percent of CREs serve as a pastoral leader of one or more congregations (16 percent overall)

- 10 percent of teaching elders and 3 percent of CREs serve as PC(USA) presbytery, synod, or national staff
- 3 percent of teaching elders and 21 percent of CREs serve in a non-pastoral position in one or more congregations
- 5 percent of teaching elders and 3 percent of CREs serve as faculty or staff at a seminary or theological school or other educational institution
- 6 percent of teaching elders and 2 percent of CREs serve as a chaplain in the military, a hospital or other health-care facility, or some other location
- 28 percent of teaching elders and 79 percent of CREs serve in some other way, have positions outside the church, are not currently employed, or are retired

Gender: More than half of the participants (54 percent) are female, and almost half (46 percent) are male. This compares to a 58 percent female/42 percent male PC(USA) ratio for members of PC(USA) congregations, according to the most recently available OGA data (2014).

Age: Three in five participants (61 percent) are over age 55. In comparison, the median age range of Presbyterian members is 56–65, according to 2014 OGA data, which tells us that more than half of Presbyterians are in this age range or older.

- 25 or under: 2 percent
- 26–45: 19 percent
- 46–55: 18 percent
- 56–65: 27 percent
- over 65: 34 percent

Race/Ethnicity: Ninety-five percent of participants self-identify as White or Caucasian; in addition, 2 percent identify as Hispanic, Latino/a, or Spanish origin, and 2 percent as Black or African American. Few participants identify with other racial ethnic groups (1 percent Asian, 1 percent multiracial, and less than 1 percent Middle Eastern or Native American). White or Caucasian participants are slightly overrepresented compared to 2014 OGA statistics; Hispanic, Latino/a, or Spanish Origin participants are similar in proportion to 2014 OGA statistics, as are Middle Eastern and Native American participants. Black or African American participants are slightly underrepresented, as are Asian or Pacific Islander participants.

Region: Teaching elders were then asked to which presbytery they belong; all others were asked the name, city, and state of their congregation. These data were used to identify the geographic regions in which participants belong (see Figure 3). When a congregation or presbytery name was not listed by participants, we used the location from which they logged in to fill in the instrument to map their state and region. A list of participants by state is also provided in Figure 4, with counts in each state. The darker the color, the more participants who were from that state.

Due to rounding, percentages do not add up to 100 percent

Educational Level: Compared to the general U.S. public, Presbyterians are more educated and have higher total household incomes. Teaching elders all have graduate degrees, so to compare education, only the participants who are not teaching elders are examined here. Member participants in this study are slightly more educated in comparison to Presbyterian members in general (Figure 5), based on data from the 2016 Presbyterian Panel demographic report.

Household Income Level: Member participants in the COGA study are slightly less likely than the PC(USA) member population as a whole (again, compared to the profile of the Presbyterian Panel, recruited in 2015) to have a household income of $195,000 or more (Figure 6). Since the income levels of members and teaching elders differ, the comparisons in Figure 5 are restricted to members.

Social and Theological Orientations: Participants were asked, “Would you say that you are more POLITICALLY liberal, conservative, or neutral?” (1–7 scale with 1 as “liberal” and 7 as “conservative”). Then they were asked a similarly worded question to place themselves on a THEOLOGICAL spectrum. See Figure 7.

Liberals and conservatives are both over-represented in this sample, by about the same amount. Social (political) and theological “moderates,” (shown in Figure 7 as “neutral”) on the other hand, are under-represented. This is understandable, as those with a political or theological leaning may have been more vested in providing their opinion on the state of the denomination.

In comparison to participants in this study, PC(USA) members are 41 percent theologically liberal, 26 percent theologically conservative, and 32 percent neutral. Teaching elders are 45 percent theologically liberal, 20 percent theologically conservative, and 35 percent neutral.

The response to this COGA inquiry exceeded all our expectations. It seems evident that within the PC(USA) we are eager both to give expression to their interests and concerns and to participate in shaping the future of the church. While our sampling methodology allowed any who wished to participate to do so, the responses largely mirrored and are reflective of the known demographics of the church as a whole.

Is It Important to Be Part of the PC(USA)?

One of the first questions we asked was whether it is important to participants that any congregation to which they belong has a relationship with the PC(USA). Of the 2,871 participants answering this question, 56 percent said “yes” and 44 percent said “no” or “I don’t know.” Participants were also asked if they could explain further.

Yes

Among the 1,598 participants who said that it is important, the most frequently reported reason participants cited was the connectional nature of the church (Figure 8); particularly the sense of community and friendships that they enjoy, and the way that this connectionalism leads to pooled resources for more effective ministry (if they referred to the connectional nature in terms of accountability structures or discipline, we counted those as part of the polity/governance theme instead).

Figure 8: Why It's Important That My Congregation Is PC(USA)

No/NotSure

It may be surprising that only 56 percent of the participants said yes (34 percent said no; 10 percent didn't know). It might lead one to wonder if fully a third of Presbyterians are unhappy.

However, we also asked these participants to explain their answers, and when we started analyzing the "No" and "I don't know/Can't decide" responses, it became clearer that for many, it's really the congregation that matters, not the denomination. (Figure 9).

Figure 9: Why It's NOT Important That My Congregation Is PC(USA)

■ Percentage of Participants Who Answered "No" or "I Don't Know"; n = 1,273

We could divide the 1,273 participants who said "No" or "I don't know/Can't decide" into two main groups. The larger group (62 percent of those who said "No" or "I don't know/Can't decide") consists of those for whom it doesn't really matter to which denomination they belong. Their comments suggest one of two things:

- First, that the denomination isn't all that important, as long as it's either
 - Mainline,
 - Reformed,
 - Open to the ordination of women,
 - Progressive,
 - Theologically aligned with their beliefs.
- Second, it wouldn't matter which denomination they belong to as long as they like their congregation. They pointed to the health and vitality of the congregation as being more important than denominational affiliation.

The smaller group (38 percent) consists of those who seem genuinely unhappy to be part of the PC(USA), citing either that they feel that the denomination

- has lost its way (32 percent say the PC(USA) has turned its back on God, ignored scripture, is too political, or has caved to the secular culture);
- is too top-down and out of touch with congregations (4 percent);
- has changed or cannot be trusted, without being specific (2 percent).

This suggests that the percentage of participants who are unhappy with the denomination can be estimated at 17 percent (38 percent of the 1,273 who answered "no" or "don't know" is equal to 17 percent of the 2,871 participants answering the question).

Importance of Belonging to PC(USA) by Social and Theological Orientation

There is a significant difference in how participants responded to this question by their social and theological orientation (Table 1). Whereas 74 percent of liberals in this sample (theological and social) say it is important that any congregation they belong to is in relationship with PC(USA), only 29 percent of social conservatives and 33 percent of theological conservatives say the same. Furthermore, more than half of conservatives (59 percent of social conservatives and 55 percent of theological conservatives) state that it is NOT important that they belong to a PC(USA) congregation.

Table 1: Orientation by Importance of Belonging to PC(USA)

	Social Orientation (n=2,911)
	liberal	neutral	conservative
Yes	74%	44%	29%
No	19%	42%	59%
I don't know	8%	14%	12%
	Theological Orientation (n=2,888)
	liberal	neutral	conservative
Yes	74%	55%	33%
No	18%	33%	55%
I don't know	9%	12%	11%

Due to rounding, percentages may not add up to 100%*

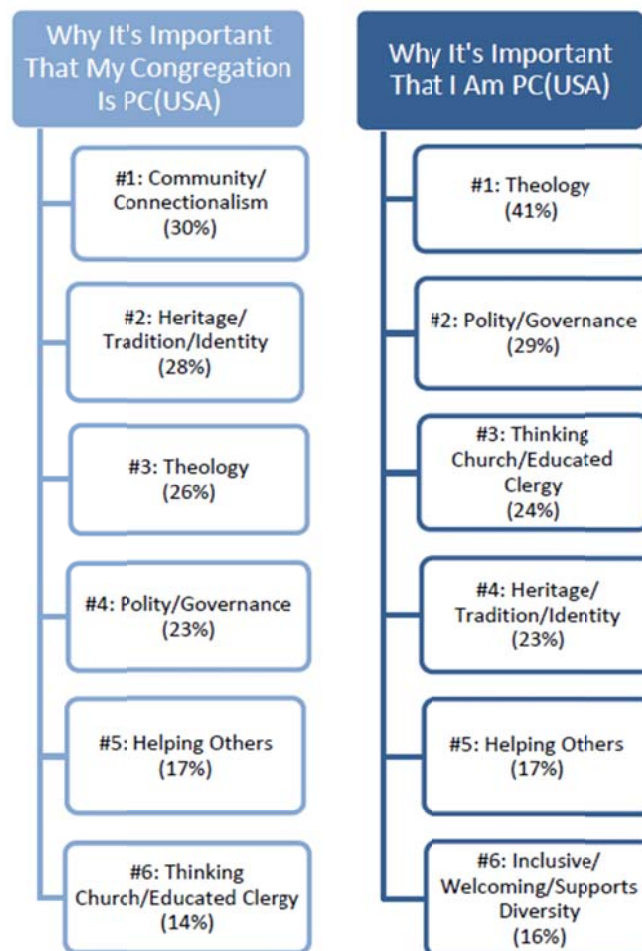

Liberals in this sample are more connected to the denomination; in general, it is more important to liberals that they belong to PC(USA). Conservatives in this sample, on the other hand, are not as likely to say their PC(USA) affiliation is important to them.

What Presbyterians Value about the PC(USA)

Why Presbyterian?

Participants were then asked, "If someone asked you why you are Presbyterian rather than belonging to some other denomination, what would you tell them?" Results are shown in the right-hand column in Figure 10; 3,052 participants answered this question.

Figure 10: What Presbyterians Value about the PC(USA)

Not surprisingly, the themes found in these responses closely mirror those of the previous question, which asked why it's important that their congregation be associated with the denomination. However, the relative importance of these themes (based on the number of people who gave similar responses) shifts as they move from thinking about their congregation to themselves (Figure 10 compares the rank ordering of the top themes from the previous question, shown on the left, with the ordering of the top themes from this question, shown on the right). It's important to note that many of the participants offered multiple reasons.

In the most frequently appearing theme from responses to this question (41 percent), participants said that the theology is the main reason (or one of the main reasons) they are Presbyterian.

About a third (29 percent) say that one of the reasons is polity. Participants especially value the ruling elder/teaching elder balance, the Presbyterian Constitution, and the clear processes for decision making.

About a fourth (24 percent) cited the fact that we are a thinking church: being intentional about thinking and praying through a discernment process when faced with difficult decisions, being open to listening to different voices, and valuing intelligence and education, especially when it comes to having highly educated clergy.

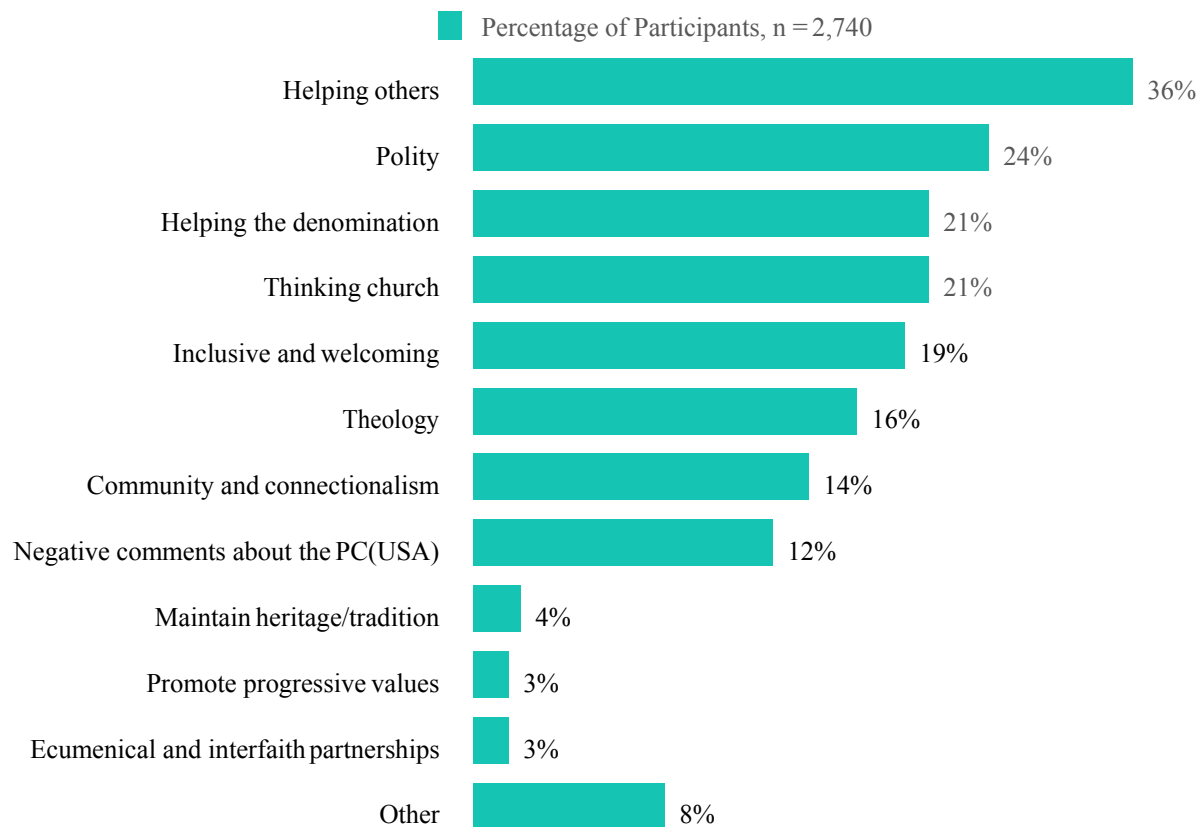

Another fourth (23 percent) mentioned something about personal or denominational identity, heritage, or tradition as a reason why they are Presbyterian. For many, it goes so far back in their family history they cannot imagine not being Presbyterian. For others who may be newer to the denomination, some personal exploration or research has led them to value the rich history of the Presbyterian tradition. And for a few others, it simply means that they were ordained as PC(USA) ministers and have made a historic commitment to the denomination.

In the next largest category, 17 percent said they appreciate that the church helps others and/or provides opportunities for participants to help others, through advocacy, mission work, evangelism, and/or disaster relief/assistance.

These comments suggest that respondents, intellectually and emotionally, place a high value on our Reformed identity. Being part of a community that wrestles together to make decisions ranging from the essentials of our faith to the structure of a youth program is a tie that binds respondents to our denomination. Indeed, often the attachment is one that words cannot capture, but that is a defining part of the identity of those who responded.

What PC(USA) Does Well

We also asked participants to imagine the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in its ideal form, and then asked, "What does the church already have/do that fits your ideal?" as another way to understand what they value about the denomination (Figure 11).

Figure 11: What the Church Already Has/Does That Fits My Ideal

This way of thinking of the PC(USA) influenced participants to think more about actions than about heritage, polity, or theology (except when they mentioned how theology motivates action).

The number one theme, coming from responses provided by 36 percent of the participants, was helping others, and includes: mission, advocacy, disaster, evangelism, and having a strong national voice on issues important to the public. So, while helping others was only the fifth-highest value in the previous two questions (refer back to Figure 9), it receives the highest mention here.

The second most frequently appearing theme is polity, mentioned by 24 percent of the participants.

This is followed by two themes that are tied in importance, with 21 percent of the participants making a comment about either of these:

The first theme is the way we are able to help ourselves and each other as a denomination. Participants outline four key ways they believe we help the denomination:

- 43 percent of the comments about helping the congregation were regarding how we provide worshiping community support and resources (9 percent of the comments overall);
- 35 percent of the comments about how we help the overall church; (7 percent overall) were about how we support and develop seminaries, pastors and church workers;
- This tied closely with training, leadership development, and spiritual formation of members (34 percent of “helping the denomination” and 7 percent of overall comments);
- Finally, 15 percent of the comments about how we help the church’s members and teaching elders (3 percent overall) regard providing denominational leadership and direction.

The second theme, tied in importance with the way we help the church (21 percent) is the fact that we are a thinking church (i.e., intentional about dialogue and debate, collective discernment, and valuing education and educated pastors).

The belief that we are an inclusive, welcoming church that supports diversity in the church is mentioned by 19 percent of participants.

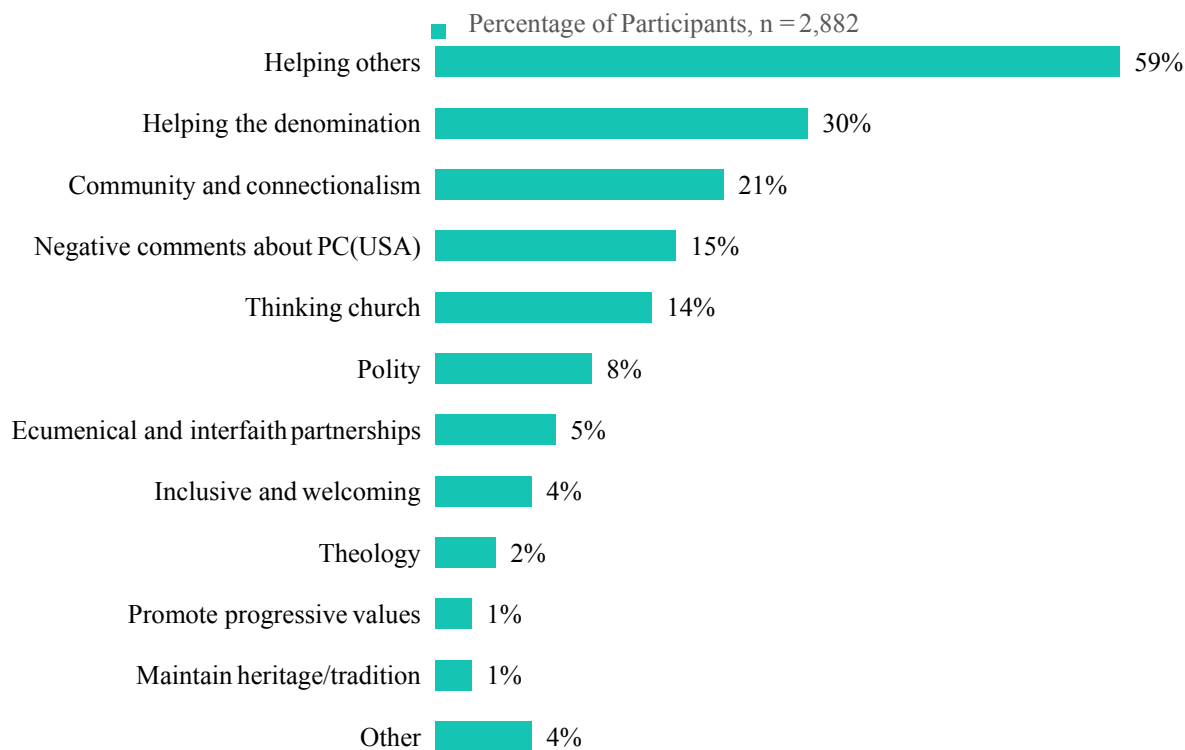

About 16 percent mention theology as something they value about being PC(USA). Many made mention specifically of the Reformed faith, the Confessions, or aspects of theology that were clearly Reformed; others did not, but gave vague references to theology or shared beliefs.

About Structure: What We Are Better Equipped to Do as a National Denomination than as Individual Congregations, Mid Councils, or Networks

We then asked participants, “What are we better equipped to do as a national denomination that we could not do (or do as well) on our own as congregations, mid councils, or networks?”

The themes that emerged from these responses also closely mirrored those from the previous questions that asked why participants would say they are Presbyterian, and what the church already has/does that fits their ideal, though they appear in a different order once again (Figure 12).

Figure 12: What We Are Better Equipped to Do as a National Denomination

By far, the most frequently occurring theme is “helping others” (59 percent of the participants mentioned this). Many of these responses were generically stated as helping others, helping people, helping a hurting world, and similar statements. We also included in this theme mentions of mission, both local and worldwide, as well as advocacy, being a strong voice for our society, disaster relief and assistance, outreach, and evangelism.

After helping others, the next most frequently occurring theme is “helping the denomination,” with 30 percent of the participants mentioning either denominational leadership, spiritual formation, leadership development, or pastor or worshiping community support.

Community was the third most-mentioned thing that we are better equipped to do as a national denomination, with 21 percent of the participants mentioning either its connectional nature, the people, or the fact that we can accomplish more by pooling resources.

Of course, as suggested earlier, not everyone feels that the national church model is the best way to accomplish the work of the church; 15 percent of participants gave answers that can best be summed up as “little or nothing.” The primary reasons appear to be a belief that the denomination has turned away from scripture/God; that denominational leaders present only the liberal views to the American public, while ignoring the conservative voices; that the organization is too bureaucratic/top down; or too political/involved in politics; and that our consciences are informed by public sentiment/worldly values, rather than by God’s Word.

For the next most-frequent theme: 14 percent of participants say that what we are better equipped to do at the national level is be a “thinking church”: engage in intentional dialogue, share expertise, and discern God’s will together; having these conversations at the national, not just congregational, level. One participant summed up the comments about this theme nicely:

I think how we make decisions as a national denomination is important. Although we don’t always agree, I do always feel the spirit while watching General Assembly meetings moving us forward. I feel if these decisions were each made on [a] congregational level, [it] would leave the motion of the spirit leading the church based off of individual interpretation instead of interpreting as a larger community.

What Changes Are Recommended by Participants?

What the Church Needs to Change

After we asked, “What does the denomination already have/do that fits your ideal?” (results reported above), we followed it with this question: “What does the church need to change in order to reach this ideal?” (See Figure 13.)

Of the themes that emerged from comments on this question, an outward focus is the one that stood out the most, with 24 percent of participants mentioning mission, advocacy, disaster relief/assistance, evangelism, and/or being a strong voice to the public as things they’d like to see happening more in the church.

The second most common theme focuses on faithfulness: to God, to scripture, to Jesus, with 19 percent of the participants mentioning this as a needed change.

This is followed closely by a theme that is more inward in its focus, with 17 percent of participants saying that the church should focus more on spiritual formation, leadership development, pastor support, and worshipping community support.

The next most frequently occurring theme is about reconciliation, with 16 percent of participants asking the church to promote reconciliation within its walls, be more tolerant of theological diversity, discern together what the future should looklike, and/or educate one another about different views.

Some of the suggestions (14 percent of participants) concern streamlining what the national church was trying to accomplish, flattening the hierarchal structure, and listening more to congregations, who feel disconnected from the national offices and/or mid councils.

There is also a sizeable number of participants (13 percent) who wish that the PC(USA) would steer clear of politics, liberalism, and secular culture.

What the Church Is Called to Be and Do

We also asked, “What is the church called to be and do in the context of 21st-century American culture?” Although we had hoped that this question would give us some sense of our shared identity as a denomination, many of the 2,763 responses seem to be more prescriptive, somewhat reflecting the responses people gave to the previous question, above, about changes that they would recommend (Figure 14).

Figure 14: What Participants Think the Church Is Called to Be and Do in the 21st Century

Consequently, the two most frequently appearing themes are once again an outward focus, with 59 percent of the participants mentioning mission, advocacy, disaster, evangelism, and/or being a strong voice to the public as things they’d like to see happening more in the church (and with stronger resolve this time, as only 24 percent had mentioned it in the previous question), and a focus on God/scripture. This featured more prominently too: whereas 19 percent mentioned a focus on God and scripture in the previous question, 49 percent mentioned it here.

Of those who mention this theme, three-quarters (37 percent of all participants) emphasize the need to be biblical (without mentioning anything about the denomination having strayed from the Bible), while one in five contend that we need to get back to the Bible and one in ten say that we need to live Christ-like lives.

Likewise, loving others and being more inclusive and welcoming was lifted as being very important for the church to be and do; 27 percent of the participants mentioned one of these.

Once again, avoiding politics, liberalism, and bowing to the secular culture was mentioned (by 12 percent this time, which is about the same as the 13 percent who mentioned these themes in the previous question).

Mentioned by an equal number of participants is an inward focus, with 13 percent mentioning spiritual formation, leadership development, pastor support, and worshiping community support (though 17 percent had listed these as things to do more of in the previous question).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly notes that when the instrument transitioned from asking about change to asking respondents about call (what is the church called to be and do), the respondents spoke significantly about the place of scripture. Our identity as a scriptural church, called by scripture in this case to ministry outside the church and to welcoming love, is a significant affirmation about who we are and who we are summoned to be. The reliance and centrality of scripture is seen not only as a legacy from our past but an expressed hope for our future.

Our Shared Identity: Suggestions for a Guiding Statement

We asked participants the following question, hoping that we would get a long list of potential guiding statements for the denomination:

Some denominations have short guiding statements. For example, the United Church of Christ is guided by the statement: “God is still speaking.” The United Methodist Church also has a statement: “Open hearts, open minds, open doors.” Additionally the Church of the Brethren has “For the glory of God and my neighbors’ good.” More than a motto, these are their mantras. If you could imagine a mantra for the PC(USA) that could be used in a similar way to tell the world what sets us apart as a denomination, what might that look like?

We were not disappointed; after cleaning out the explanations of why people didn’t want to answer the question, whether they thought the word “mantra” was a good word choice, how difficult an exercise this was, or why they made the choices they gave; and after removing the ones that were clearly intended to be funny or snarky, or hurtful (which we saved and included as a separate document), there were still about 2,000 mottos! Some people offered two or three.

The response to the question about a phrase or mantra that might express our Presbyterian identity drew many creative and thoughtful responses—more than a thousand of them. These brief phrases variously capture the passion, energy, and outlooks among us. Many were similar. Throughout the General Assembly a number of the suggestions will be projected on the screen as a way of informally sharing our perspectives on how we wish to be known and understood.

Segments within the PC(USA) and What They Want

As we worked through the analyses of the participants’ comments, looking for the common threads that unite us as a denomination, we became aware of various clusters of individuals who share particular values distinct from other clusters of Presbyterians. While these “clusters” are informal and fluid, their identification may aid us in viewing the diversity within the PC(USA). We refer to them as the four segments within the PC(USA), and ran statistical analyses to identify the relative size of each of these segments (Figure 15).

Fully 79 percent of the participants clearly fit into one of these four segments, based on a combination of their comments on the open-ended questions, and their responses to the demographic questions; 21 percent did not give us enough information to be categorized. Keep in mind that, while these participants are somewhat representative of Presbyterians overall, exceptions are noted in the demographics section of this report, and caution should be exercised when making broad comparisons of the sizes of each of these segments to the overall Presbyterian membership.

Purposeful Progressives (35 percent)

The largest segment among the participants consists of those who are mostly pleased with the denomination and would prefer that we narrow our focus to claim a more progressive identity both for theological reasons and to gain cultural relevance and our own societal niche. Many in this group feel we need to get more involved in politics and in social action. They are less tolerant of conservative theologies within the denomination. Some remain hopeful that conservatives who are upset with the 221st General Assembly (2014) decisions on marriage will see that there are different ways to interpret scripture, and will choose to stay and accept the changes, over time. Others would simply be happy if the conservatives left the PC(USA), and a few offered suggestions for helping dissenting congregations to leave the denomination with grace and dignity. About a third of this segment are teaching elders (32 percent); most of this segment are female (63 percent).

I would like to see PC(USA) be more clear and strong in what it believes. Sometimes I feel it makes decisions almost apologetically. I don't want to have a schism but I think having a clear identity (even if it will change again sometime in the future), own that identity, and be proud of that identity. Name it and claim it!

Disappointed and Discerning (19 Percent)

Though the name given to this segment might appear to be strong, it truly reflects how they feel: forsaken, abandoned, and for some, held hostage by their denomination. They are the most displeased. This group includes those who either (1) do not like their PC(USA) affiliation but are stuck in the denomination for various reasons, or (2) are conflicted and thinking about leaving the denomination. This segment is mostly conservative, and feels betrayed by recent decisions made at General Assembly, by stands taken by the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA) on social issues, and by their perception that the denomination is hostile toward conservatives in general. They tend to feel that there is little room left for them at the table; that the liberals in the denomination treat them disparagingly. They argue that the denomination is too involved in politics. About one-fifth of this segment are teaching elders (17 percent); most of this segment are male (64 percent).

Family Facilitators (15 Percent)

These are peacemakers; those who value our theological diversity and would prefer reconciliation between liberals and conservatives. They are generally pleased with the denomination but worry about their brothers and sisters in Christ who are distressed by recent changes. They look to national staff for leadership in resourcing an ongoing dialogue that would help everyone stay in the "family," while also promoting theological diversity and unity within the denomination. Some are frustrated or angry with their sister and brother congregations who have chosen to leave, seeing it as an “easy way out” or placing undue importance on what they perceive to be secondary issues. This group consists mostly of those who are liberal/progressive. A little fewer than half (42 percent) of this segment are teaching elders; many of this segment are female (53 percent).

Rooted and Resolute (10 Percent)

This group considers their PC(USA) identity to be very important, but feel the denomination has strayed from the Bible and/or gotten too involved in liberal politics. Though unhappy with recent trends, they appear to have no current plans to leave the denomination, preferring to stay and fight for the denomination they believe in. Some believe liberals are merely a vocal minority with disproportionate control of the denomination, and believe that they can convince the denomination to repent and return to the Bible. They tend to prefer a literal reading of scripture and feel that liberals/progressive Presbyterians will see their error and repent, when they are reminded that they’ve turned their backs on God. They tend to think that the denomination should not have diverse theologies, though this group is theologically conservative but socially moderate/mixed. They tend to want to return to an earlier time in which they felt that things were better. About a third of this segment (30 percent) are teaching elders; most of this segment are male (60 percent).

The Unsegmented (21 Percent)

These are the people who do not easily fit in any of the above categories, based on the answers they gave. A little under a third (29 percent) of this segment are teaching elders; most of this segment are female (59 percent).

Figure 16 shows the analyses of the four segments and those we could not fit into one of the four segments, comparing three groups: (1) those who are both socially and theologically liberal, (2) those who are both socially and theologically conservative, and those who are both socially and theologically moderate or are mixed on the social and theological scales. Those who did not provide information on their orientation are omitted from this analysis.

It is clear here that when combining the social and theological orientation scales, the Disappointed and Discerning segment is the most prominently conservative (76 percent), and the Energized and Hopeful seekers of the Common Good segment is the most prominently liberal (85 percent). The Rooted and Resolute segment is more moderate/mixed and conservative (50 percent and 38 percent, respectively), though they are more theologically conservative than socially conservative. The Seekers of the Common Good and Unsegmented are mostly liberal (58 percent and 52 percent, respectively) and moderate/mixed (32 percent and 33 percent, respectively). There does not appear to be much difference between the Unsegmented and the Reconcilers when combining social and theological orientation; both are a little over one-half liberal, but with large minorities of moderate/mixed members as well.

Both are more liberal socially than theologically, though they are still more liberal theologically than neutral or conservative theologically.

The Common Denominator: On What We DO Agree

Though the four segments identified among the study participants don't seem to agree on much, we did some additional analyses to determine where they do come to some agreement. We also did some additional analysis to see if answers to each of the questions differ based on liberal/conservative orientation. These analyses compare three groups: (1) those who are both socially and theologically liberal, (2) those who are both socially and theologically conservative, and (3) those who are both socially and theologically moderate OR who are mixed.

Liberals, conservatives, and moderates all agree that community, theology, and polity are key reasons why they are Presbyterian, and why they specifically value their PC(USA) affiliation. However, there is a difference among those for whom belonging to PC(USA) is not important. Liberals are more likely to say that denominational affiliation in general is simply not important to them, whereas conservatives are more likely to say that they have specific issues with the PC(USA).

There was a general agreement that "helping our neighbor" is something that we as a denomination do well, and that this outward focus is what we should be focusing on as a church, along with being biblical, nurturing and supporting the church and its leaders, and being a beacon of light and love in the world.

The disagreement tends to lie in what these goals and actions actually mean. Whereas liberals tend to think of "helping our neighbor" in terms of social action and advocacy, conservatives tend to think of it in terms of mission and evangelism. Also, whereas when liberals talk of being a beacon of light and love, they tend to frame it as a form of radical welcome and inclusion (and are more likely to specify certain marginalized groups such as LGBTQ), conservatives tend to focus on more general welcome, or a more specific goal of welcoming conservative theologies.

These four "clusters" are not meant to divide us into theological or ecclesiological camps. Instead, they are meant to give us a deeper understanding idea of what our PC(USA) family portrait looks like. It is COGA's hope that the identification of these groups will assist us in seeing anew the breadth of our diversity and the unique witness we share in our denomination.

Summary Comments

This project sought to provide information for use by commissioners at the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to consider as they weigh matters of purpose, function, mission and ministry, and to provide opportunities for individuals and groups within the PC(USA) to discern some consensus on what we are called to be and do as a denomination in the 21st century. It is our hope that we have accomplished both of these tasks. We were very pleased at the overwhelming number of responses to a call for a churchwide conversation: about 3,427 people responded to this instrument, and many thanked us for opening the conversation to the whole church. After analyzing more than 18,000 comments, we believe that voices of Presbyterians from nearly every state and region were heard; voices of the contented and the discontented; voices of new Presbyterians and lifelong Presbyterians. And we want them to know that we appreciate their honesty, their creativity, and their willingness to share their wonderful ideas and even their frustrations.

Although we didn't enter into this project intending to categorize Presbyterians into segments, it seemed a natural path to follow when we were coding the data and began to realize that people meant different things when they talked about what it means to be biblical, to be inclusive, or to follow Jesus. We began to see patterns and came to understand that these different groups within the church have very different worldviews, different understandings of scriptural interpretation, and different sets of values.

The General Assembly has before itself a monumental task: not only to think about the structure for a national church that best suits us moving forward, but also what our identity should be going forward.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly wants to thank everyone who gave thought, prayer, and insight to Research Services. It was clear in all responses that all people care about their Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). If our church was only fueled by passion there is enough to carry us well into the future.

We are a blessed and fortunate people who have a heritage that still inspires us to be hearers and doers of the Word; to treasure the role of laity and clergy together; that privileges thoughtful discernment and compels us to act for justice. There is a widespread appreciation for Reformed Theology and how it has shaped us a church.

There is an urgent sense that our efforts must now address the needs of congregations, mid councils, and agencies of the church—venerable and emerging, as an expression of faithfulness to the Lordship of Christ. COGA notes a healthy restiveness to reform our structures and perhaps even our Presbyterian culture in service to a renewed vitality of witness in our nation and around the world. There is a common desire to find ways to support healthy congregations and our commitment to helping others.

We are not satisfied with our hospitality to all God's children both inside and outside the church and recognize the need of the Spirit's work that we may become a more diverse people who feel empowered and treasured.

We know the limits of this self-portrait and know, too, the ever-changing nature of our church and the world. Though we know that we presently "see dimly," we find contained within the responses the hope and conviction that we have a future that can grow out of the strengths of the past and be chastened by its errors. We hold a high and confident view of God's abiding Grace toward the PC(USA).

COGA again wants to express its thanks for partnership with Dr. Deborah Coe, Dr. Angie Andriot, and Dr. Perry Chang from PMA Research Services and for additional insights from Dr. John Brueggemann.

[The assembly approved Item 05-01 with comment. See p. 33.]

[Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) would like to recommend to synods that they continue conversation and collaboration of ministry and mission between and among synods. This includes encouraging synods to offer assistance to struggling synods, including the possibility of changing boundaries to increase the vitality and viability of synods. Further, the assembly urges synods to undertake an intentional system of review and self-study and to report to General Assembly on a biannual basis.]

On Rescinding the Actions of the 221st General Assembly (2014) That Directed the Establishment of a New Configuration of Synod Boundaries (Item 05-04)—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe.

The Presbytery of Santa Fe respectfully overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to rescind the action taken by the 221st General Assembly (2014) regarding Item 05-04 (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 319ff), the report of the Mid Council Commission, directing the establishment of a new configuration of synod boundaries.

Rationale

The ability to form and re-form synod boundaries already exists in the current Form of Government (Book of Order, G-3.0502a-e).

The requirement to reduce the number of existing synods to “10–12” is an onerous burden upon the synods in the western half of the United States because of our vast geographic reality. It is impossible to conceive how the mission and ministry of any one presbytery could be enhanced by enlarging synod boundaries to encompass a span (for example) from Canada to Mexico, Hawaii to New Mexico, or Alaska to the Dakotas to New Mexico to Hawaii.

Some plans posited to meet the requirements of this report fulfill only the letter of the requirements and change nothing else. For example, the “Synod of the West” idea seeks to combine the five westernmost synods into one, while retaining a permanent judicial commission and establishing geographic administrative commissions within the existing bounds of each synod or presbytery. Each would continue to oversee its own assets, and likely continue its own ministry, without any real change. Such an exercise would be shallow at best and hypocritical at worst.

The Synod of the Southwest, in consultation and collaboration with its four presbyteries, has embarked upon a project to enhance the leadership of its historic racial ethnic populations that would be placed on hold, if not in fact halted, as a result of the attention that is required to effect a change in boundaries. This diminishes our joint emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call.

The establishment of new synod boundaries, as previously noted, does not serve to enhance our ministries or our ability to work across current synod boundaries. Already the Synod of the Southwest, in consultation with and at the encouragement of its presbyteries, has reached out to the Synods of Mid America, Lakes & Prairies, and Lincoln Trails in establishing the Theocademy, for use not only with the dominant culture but also with the Native American people, and is in the process of establishing Teocademia for people of Hispanic descent.

The Synod of the Southwest and its constituent presbyteries, at the direction of the assembly, have earnestly entered into the requested collaborative process with three other synods. While those conversations have proved meaningful and fruitful, the presbyteries represented were able to find common ground for mission that could be accomplished within the present alignment of synod boundaries. None of the presbyteries, or the synod, of the Southwest was able to conceive of ministry that could only, or even best, be accomplished by the realignment of synod boundaries.

The Synod of the Southwest, in consultation and collaboration with its four presbyteries, has established a common understanding of, and relationship based upon, their mission and ministry and an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call.

If the report seeks to combine synods in order to save money, it is not evident that any study has been done to show actual costs and savings. In fact, in addition to other unidentified expenses, the realignment of synods is certain to create expenses associated with partitioning of restricted funds.

Concurrence to Item 05-01 from the Presbyteries of Central Washington and the Northwest Coast (with Additional Rationale).

The assembly's action to reduce the number of synods to "10–12" has proved to be impractical, costly, and unnecessary. Several synods have already or are in the process of reducing their functions as provided by G-3.0404, which has, or will, effectively reduce the number of active synods.

These synods have discussed combining into a single synod, which would achieve the "letter" of the requirement of reducing the number of synods to "10–12," but it would defeat the intention and spirit of the idea of actually reducing the number of synods. Furthermore, we have discovered that untangling the assets and legal entities of these reduced functioned synods in order to combine them would be time consuming and costly, with nothing effectively achieved, while diverting the time, energy, and resources away from meaningful mission and ministry.

Reduced function in the Synod of Alaska-Northwest occurred at the request of its presbyteries, and it is serving them well. The perception within this synod is that in other regions, presbyteries may be dissatisfied with the actions or functions of their synods, and that a General Assembly mandated reduction in the number of synods would somehow solve this problem. Instead, the mandate is creating more tension and issues between and among mid councils.

The Book of Order, at G-3.0404, provides an adequate solution for the "problem" of synods. Synods that function at a high level, providing services and support for their constituent presbyteries, should be able to continue meaningful ministry. Synods that were unable, for whatever reason, to provide this kind of support, that have moved or are moving to reduced function, should be allowed to continue without the burden of forced consolidation and restructuring, which will increase the need for more staff and legal fees.

Where synods and their constituent presbyteries disagree on their functions and mutual support, these bodies should do the good and challenging work of finding mutual purpose, ministries, and support, instead of foisting their issues on synods who are healthy and fulfilling their "emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call."

Concurrence to Item 05-01 from the Presbytery of Kendall (with additional rationale)

The geographic area that would be covered if all or some of the Western synods were combined is vast. Physical distance would be a barrier to the effective participation in conducting synod business and could result in gaps in representation at and participation in synod meetings and decision making.

The burden of expense in changing boundaries would result in little administrative savings due to the costs associated with the administrative changes and the likely increased cost in travel over an even greater area.

The Synod of the Pacific generously supports, through its Mission Partnership Funding Program, the mission and witness of churches that make up the Presbytery of Kendall. Some of the churches are small and have limited financial resources. Yet, they also are the sole Christian witness in large geographic areas where the LDS faith is the dominate religion. Adding presbyteries to our synod would reduce the portion of synod mission distributions based on investments and the savings and loan program.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 05-01.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to approve Item 05-01 based on the following rationale:

The overture affirms that the authority and ability "to form and re-form synod boundaries already exists in the current Form of Government (Book of Order, G-3.0502a–e)." This ability should be executed as a result of a concrete and detailed plan to enhance the ministry and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on each geographical area where our church is present.

In 2006 the PC(USA) published a booklet about church growth strategy, "Racial Ethnic Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy," which affirmed that "racial ethnic membership in this denomination is only 4.7 percent when racial ethnics are more than 20 percent of the population of the United States." The document stated that "this is a testimony of the lack of emphasis the denomination has placed on racial ethnic evangelism ..." (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 378, paragraph 33.143). In making the above statement, the 208th General Assembly (1996) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) acknowledged the compelling need for an intentional churchwide strategy for racial ethnic church growth.

A plan to enhance the ministry and mission of the church in any particular geographic area has to be oriented to the strength of our racial ethnic groups if we want to reach out to the emergent population in the United States of America. It is not clear how the survey and conversations developed in the different synods that resulted in the actual recommendation to reduce the numbers of synods addressed this particular topic of racial ethnic and immigrant growth.

The overture affirms “It is impossible to conceive how the mission and ministry of any one presbytery could be enhanced by enlarging synod boundaries to encompass a span (for example) from Canada to Mexico, Hawaii to New Mexico, or Alaska to the Dakotas to New Mexico to Hawaii.” Same argument is applicable to the racial ethnic ministries.

In particular ACREC feels that this reduction of synods will definitely affect the ministries to racial ethnic people who will be losing representation and financial resources. This also will put more difficulties to the interaction and relations among the racial ethnic groups across the new huge geographic area in which they will be located.

For these reason, ACREC strongly encourages the approval of this overture.

Item 05-02

[The assembly approved Item 05-02 with amendment. See pp. 13, 33]

On Restoring the Boundaries of the Presbytery of the Pacific to Its Status Prior to the 2012 Revisions—from the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii.

The Synod of Southern California and Hawaii overtures the General Assembly to restore the boundaries of the Presbytery of the Pacific to their status prior to the 2012 revisions, which allowed Malibu Presbyterian Church to become a part of the Presbytery of Santa Barbara and allowed the First Presbyterian Church of Honolulu to become a part of the Presbytery of San Diego.

The description of the Presbytery of the Pacific would return to the following:

“The Presbytery of the Pacific is the corporate expression of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) consisting of all the churches and ~~[ministers of the Word and Sacrament]~~ [teaching elders] within the County of Los Angeles in the State of California lying southerly and westerly of the following described line: commencing at the intersection of the Pacific Ocean and Mulholland Highway; thence northerly and easterly along Mulholland Highway to its intersection with Mulholland Drive; thence easterly along Mulholland Drive (including the Bel Air Presbyterian Church) to the Hollywood Freeway; thence southeasterly along the Hollywood Freeway to Franklin Avenue; thence easterly along Franklin Avenue to Western Avenue; thence southerly along Western Avenue to Sunset Boulevard; thence easterly along Sunset Boulevard to Fountain Avenue; thence easterly along Fountain Avenue to Hyperion Avenue; thence northerly along Hyperion Avenue to Rowena Avenue; thence southeasterly along Rowena Avenue to Fletcher Drive; thence northeasterly along Fletcher Drive to the Southern Pacific Railroad; thence southerly along the Southern Pacific Railroad to its intersection with Alhambra Avenue; thence easterly along Alhambra Avenue to the Los Angeles River; thence southerly along the Los Angeles River to the city limits of Vernon; thence along the westerly city limits of Vernon, Huntington Park, South Gate, Lynwood, Compton, and Long Beach to the Pacific Ocean; also all the churches and ~~[ministers of the Word and Sacrament]~~ [teaching elders] within the State of Hawaii and the Midway Island Group. Churches and ~~[ministers of the Word and Sacrament]~~ [teaching elders] who are members of the Hanmi Presbytery are excepted.¹

Rationale

The boundaries of the Presbytery of the Pacific were changed to allow two churches to become members of neighboring presbyteries. Both churches subsequently left the denomination and are, therefore, no longer members of those neighboring presbyteries. There is no longer a reason to maintain the somewhat unusual boundary adjustments made to accommodate the desires of these two churches to become members of the neighboring presbyteries.

Item 05-05

[In response to Item 05-05, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 30, 33.]

On Amending G-3.0106 Requiring All Councils to Adopt a Dependent Care Policy—From the Presbytery of Great Rivers.

The Presbytery of Great Rivers overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Amend the fourth paragraph of G-3.0106 by adding a new sentence to read as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“All councils shall adopt and implement a sexual misconduct policy and a child protection policy. All councils shall adopt and implement a dependent care policy.”

Alternate Resolution:

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to develop resources for councils of all levels to provide for dependent-care policies.

Rationale

The 205th General Assembly (1993) approved “A Vision for Children and the Church.”

... Because Jesus welcomed children and encouraged us to welcome them in his name; Jesus lifted up a child as an example of what the realm of God is like.

Therefore we hope for a church where we take seriously our baptismal vow to nurture all children committed to our care; where we bring good news to all those places where children are in need; where adults and children alike share in ministry. We covenant to act so that this vision may be made real for all children, now and in times to come. (Minutes, 1993, Part I, p.644)

In 1995, the church published “Guidelines for Child Care at Church-Sponsored Meetings.” This resource was recommended by the 207th General Assembly (1995) to offer extensive support for governing bodies, congregations, providers, and families as they worked together to provide high-quality childcare for the ministry and mission of church councils.

The 211th General Assembly (1999) fortified the PC(USA)’s pastoral care for elderly, disabled, and homebound members. When the church adopted W-3.3616e, we expanded opportunities for “... pastoral ministry to persons in a variety of isolating circumstances.” Extended serving of communion was envisioned as a means to embody our pastoral and spiritual obligation to all the members of the church’s fellowship.

Presbyterians for Disability Concerns of the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association has distributed a Congregational Audit of Disability Accessibility & Inclusion. This inventory can “... assist a congregation in taking seriously the call for the church to be the full embodiment of the household of God and a “house of prayer” for all peoples (in this instance persons who have a disability) [a]s approximately 19 percent of any given population has some type of disabling condition.”

And yet:

In the September 2011 edition of Presbyterians Today, Jack Marcum, coordinator of Research Services, General Assembly Mission Council, reported that while both membership and child baptisms had been dropping for decades, the rate of child baptisms had dropped at nearly twice the rate of membership.

... the declining numbers of child baptisms and professions of faith are troubling. These trends strongly suggest that membership drops will accelerate in coming years, even as they have already recently accelerated. Having endured 45 straight years of net membership losses, perhaps Presbyterians have grown inured to the steady drip, drip, drip of declines. If so, it’s time to take notice. The findings presented here are the most sobering I’ve seen in more than two decades studying the PC(USA). (<http://pt.epubxp.com/i/39651-sep-2011/8>)

In 2014, Sue S. Montgomery, team leader for the PC(USA) Disability Concerns Consultants, wrote “A Story in Anywhere USA That Didn’t Have to Happen” for The Seasons of Life in the Family of Faith: Resources for Worship and Inclusion published by Presbyterians for Disability Concerns of the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association. Rev. Montgomery wrote:

... The story included here reflects what people with disabilities experience when the people around them have no awareness training or sensitivity to the ministry needs of the brother or sister with a disability who sits in their midst,” in but still out. ...

05 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MID COUNCILS

Simple things would have made a difference. The lack of awareness, training, and sensitivity to what happens to our brothers and sisters in faith in the presence of disabling conditions created unnecessary exclusion and its subsequent pain that day. For the teaching elder it was an eye-opening experience, one that was never imagined until that day. The disbelief, the raw and painful rejection of all that had once been in the person who once served, being replaced by the person in the wheelchair who could no longer do anything, was worse than all the disability the disease created.

It didn't have to happen. But it did. Now is the time to prevent it from ever happening again in any place, at any time, and to anyone. This is what it means to be the family of God—different gifts, different members, one body, the Body of Christ. (<http://www.phewacomcommunity.org/images/PDC2014fullreduced.pdf>)

A commissioners' resolution to the 221st General Assembly (2014) asked for the "... Office of the General Assembly to ensure that childcare and child-friendly spaces are provided at all General Assembly meetings, following models used for other Presbyterian meetings, such as Presbyterian Women's Gatherings and Big Tent" (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 23, 203). The commissioners' resolution was referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), which approved a policy to reimburse commissioners and advisory delegates to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) for caregiving costs for their dependents.

This new policy is a sign of hope. However, as sincere as our faith community might be about dependent care, as deeply as we hold our responsibility to provide a safe and nurturing environment for the vulnerable among us, after decades of advocacy, we are still waiting. The time is ripe for significant churchwide progress in our efforts to create settings of full inclusion that honor the humanity and dignity of all God's children.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-05

Advice on Item 05-05—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 05-05.

The item seeks to add the requirement of a dependent care policy to the list of policies councils are to adopt and implement. The item would provide a constitutional remedy for actions that all councils should be both cognizant of and sensitive to in the life of the council. Policies are clearly the responsibility of the councils of the church, and councils already have the authority to implement policies in their standing rules and manuals of operations. The Book of Order is a constitutional document, not a manual of operations.

The intent of the policy is unclear—who is the policy intended to protect? Councils are to protect and provide care (sexual misconduct policy, child protection policy) for both participants and caregivers.

If approved, councils would be required to adopt and implement another policy. The ACC recommends disapproval of this item; this does not mean that this issue is not important. Constitutionally mandating a policy is not the only way to express its importance in the life of the church.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-05—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

In concurrence with the intent of the overture, nonetheless the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 05-05 be disapproved.

In addition to our own policy statements, the PC(USA) must also adhere to federal and state laws, most notably Family Medical Leave Act (FMLA). While FMLA does not usually apply to local congregations, it can come into effect at the presbytery, synod, or national level depending on the number of employees within a seventy-five-mile radius, including those who telecommute.¹ It is the responsibility of each council to consult with a lawyer knowledgeable about local, state, and national laws regarding their leave policies. By establishing policies that comply with all applicable laws, councils can be assured that they are in compliance with the laws that protect those who care for dependents. Because of this legal reality, ACSWP advises this overture be disapproved. However, each council, whether the local congregation, presbytery, synod, or at the national level, should create a dependent care policy that complies with local and current laws. Commissioners may wish to indicate this in a comment or alternate resolution along these lines.

For several decades, including before reunion, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has called for men and women to be equal partners in the work of the church. In the American context, however, the care for dependents, including but not limited to children, often but not exclusively falls to the oversight of women. For many who care for dependents, the cost and logistics can be prohibitive to a full participation in the life of the church and a barrier to living into their call from God to participate in the life of the church, which results in caretakers self-selecting out of participation in the life of the church.

Requiring councils at all levels from the local congregation, mid councils, and at the national level to have a dependent care policy will be an important step towards helping those caring for dependents more fully participate in the life of the church.

A 1965 Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) statement reminded the church that women should be considered eligible for all elected officer positions. The statement also requires that the election process “shall be designed to provide for women on the same basis as men.”²

In a 1971 United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA) statement, “men and women must act as equal partners and contribute to the ministry of the Church all the talent God has given them ...” and “they [women] must accept all forms of service in the Church including leadership positions” In addition, the church is called to “challenge and change anything which interferes with a person’s full development and wholeness.”³

A 1972 UPCUSA statement demonstrated the church’s awareness on the limited availability of quality childcare.⁴ This care for mothers with young children is not a new concern, but in the last four or more decades, the Presbyterian church failed to live into its own call to support parents, traditionally viewed through the lens of motherhood, as an integral part of the life of the church. Both predecessors of the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns have sought to equalize these burdens of responsibilities at home and at work, especially as stagnant wages have put more and more parents into the labor market, sometimes cobbling together part-time jobs.

In two 1999 PC(USA) statements, the church called the ordination of women to all offices in the church is reflected in “our belief that God works through all persons in a variety of ways without regard for a hierarchy based on gender.”⁵ In a second statement that year, the PC(USA) reaffirmed need for the full participation of women in the church so that “the image of God in women be fully recognized and valued.”⁶ Both, of course, reflect A Brief Statement of Faith’s line 64: the Holy Spirit “... calls women and men to all ministries of the Church” (Book of Confessions, 10.4).

The 2001 “Resolution on the Ministry of Caregiving in Relation to Older Adults” approved at the 213th General Assembly (2001) affirms the corporate responsibility to care for older persons in need. Out of our vision of the church as a family and a recognition of changing social structures that has resulted in the kinship connectedness being stretched thin, the church is called to support through education and support of caregivers. However, this resolution stopped short of calling for councils to develop dependent care policies so that caregivers can participate in the church beyond the role of providing care for dependents.

The 2004 Statement “Transforming Families” reminds the church what their duties to all people is “to provide for them, to keep them safe, to ensure that they will not be hungry or homeless, to prepare them for life, and to encourage their participation in the mission of the Triune God. In this way, families, individuals, and the entire church learn to live lives of service and love for the whole world.”⁷ In living into this vision, sessions were to review their programs and policies to ensure that they are family-friendly [Recommendation 3.b.(1)]. Part of making your church family-friendly is to ensure that dependent care is available for any church event where caregivers are invited to participate. In Recommendation 3.h., all councils were to find flexible solutions and paid leave for those caring for dependents within their communities. This recommendation again does not extend to providing care for council activities so that caregivers can attend and fully participate in the life of the church.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 05-05.

Our relational nature is one of the defining aspects of who we know ourselves to be as Presbyterians. We express this in the ways that we worship, learn, and make decisions. We also express it by how we care for those we love, and especially those who are dependent upon us for support with their daily tasks.

Mandating that councils create and implement a dependent care policy is a way of reaffirming the value we as Presbyterians place on our relationships, especially for the most vulnerable among us. This policy does not mandate the content for the policy and therefore will allow each council to determine how to best implement this aspect into their contexts. We believe it is important for these conversations to occur so that policies that reflect our values as Presbyterians can be explicitly stated and consistently implemented.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-05

Comment on Item 05-05—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) concerning Item 05-05, on amending G-3.0106 requiring all councils to adopt a dependent care policy, with the following comment.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the Standing Rules of the General Assembly. As the assembly considers Item 05-05, COGA suggests that it consider the follow concerns regarding the proposal. First, the proposed constitutional amendment does not contain any guidance as to what a “dependent care policy” is or needs to contain. COGA has adopted a dependent care policy as part of a referral from the 221st General Assembly (2014). However, such a policy would not be suitable to the needs or resources of other councils. It is unclear what a dependent care policy at the level of a session would contain. Presbyteries and synods may struggle to find the resources to fund this mandate if this item is interpreted to require them to cover the full cost of care for all commissioners at all of their meetings. Moreover, imposing this specific mandate through the Form of Government on all councils, as opposed to urging their consideration of such policies, appears to have the effect of returning the Form of Government to a manual of operations, rather than a constitutional document. Accordingly, COGA urges clarity and caution in the consideration of this item.

On Developing a National Child Protection Policy Model—From the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley.

The Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to develop a national child protection policy model and provide training resources and materials for presbyteries and congregations.

Rationale

The 221st General Assembly (2014), by approving an amendment to G-3.0106 of the Book of Order, required all PC(USA) church councils to adopt and implement a child protection policy. The General Assembly did not supply models, templates, or an overarching policy on child protection. Many congregations in the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley do not have the resources or expertise on their own to develop a policy on child protection. It would be beneficial to have consistent policies throughout the PC(USA). Other organizations that work with children have model policies and training materials for their subsidiaries to follow, for example, the United Methodist Safe Sanctuaries and the Boy Scouts of America Youth Protection program.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 05-06 not be approved.

The main reason why ACSWP advises not approving this overture is that the PC(USA) has already created resources on creating a policy to train those working with vulnerable populations in the local congregation, presbytery, or synod levels. This free pdf document is available at this link: <https://www.pcusa.org/resource/presbyterian-church-us-sexual-misconduct-policy-an/>.

In addition, many states and local levels of government pass and update their laws to reflect changing statewide or local realities. This may create situations where a congregation or presbytery would not be in compliance with local laws. In order to prevent this, the presbyteries and local congregations should consult their insurance company and a licensed legal professional to ensure they are properly covered.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved “Resolution on Allegations of Child Sexual Abuse Against Educators,” which includes a study guide (<https://www.pcusa.org/resource/resolution-allegations-child-sexual-abuse-against-/>). This resolution and accompanying study guide are available on the denomination website for free. This material can help councils shape their own policies as well as guide the training of those who work with vulnerable populations.

Certainly, in the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s understanding of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to children and responsible regulation to protect them, the intent of Item 05-06 is commendable. The current education initiative also includes material from earlier child advocacy efforts to improve the lives of children in all states of the Union.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 05-06.

The ACWC fully supports the further development of child/youth protection policy training resources and materials for presbyteries and congregations. The recommendation and rationale for the original resolution passed at the 221st General Assembly (2014) (Item 08-14: <https://pc-biz.org/#/search/4763>), asked directly for new/updated resources to be created and be readily available for councils. To our knowledge, this has yet to be done. The online resources we do have, such as We Won’t Let It Happen Here: Creating a Child Safe Church is very helpful and well-done, but also needs updating to include new and evolving issues such as technology use and children/youth, social media boundaries, rules for transportation, and possibly general outlines of sample policies (with the indicator that each policy’s specifics would vary according to state and insurance company regulations) (We Won’t Let It Happen Here: Creating a Child Safe Church, A Project of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Presbyterian Child Advocacy Network (PCAN), a Network of the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA), https://www.presbyterianmission.org/site_media/media/uploads/compassion-peace-justice/pcan-we_won't_let_it_happen_here-052214.pdf, April 7, 2016). Resources that we do have, such as the aforementioned, are also widely unknown in the PC(USA). Councils are not aware that these resources exist or where to find them. The ACWC has received feedback from various presbyteries that more materials and training resources are needed and would be highly useful for the writing and implementation of child/youth protection policies. We fully support this measure.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-06

Comment on Item 05-06—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency has been working with the Office of the General Assembly to respond to requests for the development of model policies for Child Protection.

There is not a “one size fits all” policy model or training process as the laws regarding child protection vary from state to state. The Department of Health and Human Services has resources available on their site that can be used to develop policy and provide training and technical assistance: <https://www.childwelfare.gov>.

Additionally, the Office of the General Assembly has developed a partnership with the Insurance Board and Praesidium, an abuse prevention organization <http://www.praesidiuminc.com>, to develop resources, training materials, and guidance that will equip presbyteries and congregations to develop policies, training, and other materials appropriate to their jurisdiction. A brochure outlining these resources is being developed by the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

On Amending the Current Authoritative Interpretation of G-3.0403c Concerning Nongeographic Presbyteries—From the Eastern Korean Presbytery.

The Eastern Korean Presbytery overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to amend the current authoritative interpretation of G-3.0403c as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown as italic.]

“If there is no nongeographic presbytery within their synod, then a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation can apply for transfer to a nongeographic presbytery in a synod that has contiguous boundaries with their current synod. In cases where the racial ethnic or immigrant congregation is in a synod that does not share a contiguous boundary with a synod having a nongeographic presbytery, then transfer to a nongeographic presbytery in another synod may be considered. The transfer must be shown to meet the ‘mission needs’ of the racial ethnic or immigrant congregation. This transfer requires the approval of both the sending and receiving presbyteries, as well as the synods and the General Assembly.

“A nongeographic presbytery shall only accept fellowships, new church developments, Bible studies, worshipping communities, or other forms of corporate witness into its presbytery from within its own synod. Only an organized congregation may be transferred to a nongeographic presbytery in another synod, by obtaining approval from the geographic and nongeographic presbyteries, as well as the synods and the General Assembly.

“Nongeographic presbyteries shall not unilaterally start ministries in other presbyteries and synods without the approval of those councils.”

Rationale

The 221st General Assembly (2014)'s approval of the current authoritative interpretation of G-3.0403c created the situation where presbyteries within the bounds of Synods of the Sun, Southern California and Hawaii, the Rocky Mountains, the Southwest, the Pacific, and Alaska-Northwest have no option for transferring a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation to a nongeographic presbytery, even when the mission needs of the congregation and presbytery would warrant doing so since their synods do not share a contiguous boundary with any synod having a nongeographic presbytery. This addition to the authoritative interpretation would allow for all congregations and presbyteries to have an option for the transfer of racial ethnic or immigrant congregations to a nongeographic presbytery as mission needs would determine.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-07

Advice on Item 05-07—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 05-07.

The current authoritative interpretation (AI) of G-3.0403c, which was approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014), makes it possible for a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation in a synod that has no nongeographic presbytery to apply to be dismissed to a nongeographic presbytery in a different synod with contiguous boundaries with their current synod. This overture would amend the current AI so that where there is no such synod, membership in a nongeographic presbytery in some other synod may be considered. The transfer of a congregation must be supported by clearly demonstrable mission needs, and the required approvals must be sought and granted. This overture presents the same issues inherent in Item 05-08 regarding the possible distances between the location of a congregation and the location of the nongeographic presbytery of which it is a member. (For a fuller analysis of those issues, see the ACC advice on Item 05-08.

This is not the first time the assembly has considered overtures that would change the bond between congregations and the geography in which they are located. In 2012, the ACC advised the assembly on Item 05-05, noting that “The geographic nature of a presbytery, as it corporately expresses the mission and ministry of at least ten duly constituted sessions and ten teaching elders (G-3.0301), facilitates and significantly informs its capacity for participating in its mandated relationships of accountability and review with its member congregations and its teaching elders, as well as with its synod” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 264).

The intent of the current authoritative interpretation in limiting the transfer of a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation to a presbytery in a synod with contiguous boundaries was to limit the distance between a congregation and the presbytery in which relationships “nurturing the covenant community of disciples of Christ” and “mandated relationships of accountability and review” take place.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advised the 218th General Assembly (2008) in its advice on Item 03-07, noting “When a congregation that is located within the bounds of one synod joins a presbytery that is within the bounds of another synod, there are serious implications for each synod and for the geographic presbytery involved. ... The Advisory Committee on the Constitution has concerns about the potential for conflicts across multiple boundaries ...” (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 148)

One of the core commitments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is to find unity in diversity. “The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership” (F-1.0403). While nongeographic presbyteries may address the particular “mission needs” of a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation, in the larger view it may diminish the whole church by limiting diversity in the body of a particular presbytery.

However, if the assembly believes that the intent of this overture is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that it is better accomplished through the approval of Item 05-08.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 05-07.

Nongeographic presbyteries exist because of the church’s failure to fully welcome immigrant and racial ethnic congregations. While we understand the need for safe spaces for congregations to gather and be in ministry together, nongeographic presbyteries have, in the past, raised concerns for women in the church.

Nongeographic presbyteries have a checkered history when it comes to supporting women in ministry and church leadership. A motion to form a new, nongeographic presbytery was defeated at the 219th General Assembly (2010) due to the testimony of 1.5 and 2nd generation Korean American clergywomen.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency documents the motion on Korean language presbyteries from 2010 in this way:

The GA Assembly Committee on Middle Governing Body Issues proposed a motion for a formation of a fifth Korean Language Presbytery as requested by ten Korean PC(USA) churches in the Synod of the South Atlantic. The motion was supposed to pass without much controversy especially because the details had been discussed in the Committee on Middle Governing Body Issues and the Committee overwhelmingly supported the motion. But three young Korean American 1.5 and 2nd generation women clergy delegates spoke against the motion and the motion was overwhelmingly defeated. ...

The three minister delegates articulated at least three reasons against the motion. First, Korean language presbyteries traditionally do not value the leadership of women, especially second generation women pastoral leadership. Second, Korean language presbyteries do not include second generation pastor leaders, both male and female, especially those who do not speak Korean. And third, Korean language presbyteries are not sufficiently accountable to the larger church. The presentations were clear, compelling, and powerful. ... <http://www.presbyterianmission.org/ministries/theologyandworship/korean-language-presbyteries-219th-general-assembly/>

The three reasons raised at the 219th General Assembly (2010) are a concern still today. While some changes and steps have most likely been made in these nongeographic presbyteries, their history should give us pause before allowing even more congregations to join these presbyteries. Our concerns are particularly for those at the intersections of race and gender, namely women of color who may be further marginalized through this action.

While we understand that racial ethnic or immigrant congregations may find their particular needs more easily met through a nongeographic presbytery, we encourage and challenge geographic presbyteries to be more welcoming spaces for these congregations, living more fully into the church’s commitment to unity in diversity rather than creating more ways for division and separation.

[The assembly approved Item 05-08 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 32, 34.]

[Comment: The General Assembly invites and encourages all Korean-speaking congregations located in the six western synods (Alaska-Northwest, the Pacific, Southern California and Hawaii, the Southwest, the Rocky Mountains, and the Sun) to remain in contact with the synod in which they are physically located in order to have voice in the intentional consideration of a Korean-language presbytery in the western United States called for in Item 05-11, Recommendation 3.]

On Replacing the Current Authoritative Interpretation of G-3.0403c with New Text—From the Eastern Korean Presbytery.

Eastern Korean Presbytery overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to replace the current authoritative interpretation of G-3.0403c., approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014), with the following authoritative interpretations:

1. Authoritative interpretation of G-3.0301a and G-3.0403c:

“A presbytery may transfer an organized racial ethnic or immigrant congregation to a nongeographic presbytery that can meet the congregation’s particular mission needs. Ordinarily, this nongeographic presbytery would be within the bounds of the same synod. Such transfers require approval of both the sending and receiving presbyteries, as well as the synods and the General Assembly.”

Rationale for Recommendation 1

“The mission of God in Christ gives shape and substance to the life and work of the Church.” (F-1.01). It is mission that leads a synod to create a nongeographic presbytery (G-3.0403c.), a presbytery to dismiss a congregation to a non-geographic presbytery (G-3.0301a.), and a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation to seek “relationships of accountability and responsibility” (G-1.0101) with a presbytery best able to support their unique mission. In determining whether a particular congregation should be transferred to a nongeographic presbytery, the councils of the church are to give consideration to the unique mission needs of the congregation and the ability of a specific nongeographic presbytery to meet those needs. While it would be ideal for that nongeographic presbytery to be within the same synod or neighboring synod where the congregation is located, this is not always possible. There may not be a nongeographic presbytery nearby or the closest presbytery may not be best able to meet the mission needs of that congregation. Currently, presbyteries within the bounds of Synods of the Sun, Southern California and Hawaii, the Rocky Mountains, the Southwest, the Pacific, and Alaska-Northwest have no option for transferring a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation to a nongeographic presbytery, even when the mission needs of the congregation and presbytery would warrant doing so since their synods do not share a contiguous boundary with any synod having a nongeographic presbytery. Replacing the current authoritative interpretation gives councils the flexibility to make the best possible mission decision for a particular racial ethnic or immigrant congregation.

2. Authoritative interpretation of G-3.0301:

“~~[Presbyteries, including nongeographic presbyteries,]~~ [No presbytery] shall ~~[not]~~ start ministries within the geographic bounds of other presbyteries and synods without the approval of those councils.”

Rationale for Recommendation 2

The presbytery and synod are the councils serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district (G-3.0301 and G-3.0401). As such, a presbytery desiring to start ministries or engage in ministries within the geographic bounds of another presbytery are to seek approval of the geographic presbytery and synod, thus demonstrating the “mutual interconnection of the church” we have through the councils of the church (G-3.0101).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-08

Advice on Item 05-08—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 05-08, Recommendation 1, and approve Item 05-08 Recommendation 2 with amendment.

This overture seeks to change the substance of the current authoritative interpretation of G-3.0403c that was approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014) and to add an authoritative interpretation of G-3.0301.

Recommendation 1, Proposed Replacement of Current Authoritative Interpretation

The current authoritative interpretation of G-3.0403c was approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014). This makes it possible for a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation in a synod that has no nongeographic presbytery to request dismissal to a nongeographic presbytery in another synod. Both synods must share contiguous boundaries. Recommendation 1 of Item 05-08 would remove the restriction that the receiving presbytery be in the same synod or a synod with “contiguous boundaries.”

This overture contains the weaknesses inherent in Item 05-07 regarding the possible distances between the location of a congregation and the location of the nongeographic presbytery of which it is a member.

This is not the first time the assembly has considered overtures that would change the bond between congregations and the geography in which they are located. In 2012, the ACC advised the assembly on Item 05-05,

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that the Constitution defines a presbytery as “the council serving as a corporate expression of the church within a certain district and is composed of all the congregations and teaching elders within that district” (G-3.0301). The geographic nature of a presbytery, as it corporately expresses the mission and ministry of at least ten duly constituted sessions and ten teaching elders (G-3.0301), facilitates and significantly informs its capacity for participating in its mandated relationships of accountability and review with its member congregations and its teaching elders, as well as with its synod. The geographic nature of a presbytery is not solely related to the G-3.0403c restriction on synod creation and General Assembly approval of non-geographic presbyteries. (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 264)

The intent of the current authoritative interpretation in limiting the transfer of a racial ethnic or immigrant congregation to a presbytery in a synod with contiguous boundaries was to limit the distance between a congregation and the presbytery in which relationships “nurturing the covenant community of disciples of Christ” and “mandated relationships of accountability and review” take place.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution also advised the 218th General Assembly (2008) in its advice on Item 03-07:

When a congregation that is located within the bounds of one synod joins a presbytery that is within the bounds of another synod, there are serious implications for each synod and for the geographic presbytery involved. Such a transfer would enlarge the district of the nongeographic presbytery, increasing the overlap with the districts of the geographic presbyteries. Because presbyteries are responsible for the mission and government of the church throughout their geographical districts, the overlapping of districts raises the potential for conflict. ... The Advisory Committee on the Constitution has concerns about the potential for conflicts across multiple boundaries ...

(Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 148)

Widening the distances increases that potential.

The word “ordinarily” used in the proposed authoritative interpretation expresses normative practice, but does not effectively limit such transfers to any particular circumstances, such as when there are no nongeographic presbyteries within the boundaries of the current synod. Wider distances between congregations and the presbyteries of which they are members increase the potential for isolation of the congregation. It makes more difficult development and maintenance of relationships of accountability and nurture.

One of the core commitments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is to find unity in diversity. “The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction” (F-1.0403). The goal of all councils is to include believers of all backgrounds in worship and ministry. When it is necessary for racial ethnic or immigrant congregations to find their relationships of nurture and accountability in nongeographic presbyteries, there should always be a plan for education and preparation that will lead to participation and membership in the geographic presbytery in which they are located. Likewise, those geographic presbyteries should be preparing to welcome racial ethnic and immigrant congregations back into their membership and fellowship in the fullness of time.

This proposed replacement authoritative interpretation deletes the specificity of the second paragraph of the current AI concerning “fellowships, new church developments, Bible studies, worshipping communities, or other forms of corporate witness” altogether. It does make clear that only “organized” racial ethnic or immigrant congregations are eligible to be transferred.

If the assembly believes that the intent of this overture is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the language of the proposed amendment, Recommendation 1, is clear and would accomplish the stated intent of the overture.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution Advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to Approve Item 05-08, Recommendation 2, with Amendment.

Recommendation 2 of this overture proposes enlarging the scope of the current AI in another way. The current AI prohibits nongeographic presbyteries from “unilaterally start[ing] ministries in other presbyteries and synods without the approval of those councils.” The proposed AI extends this restriction to all presbyteries. This clarifies the current AI. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the text in Recommendation 2 of Item 05-08 be amended by striking the phrase “Presbyteries, including nongeographic presbyteries,”; inserting the phrase, “[No presbytery]”; and striking the word “not”; and that this sentence replace the final paragraph of the current AI to G-3.0403c and a new AI of.

“~~[Presbyteries, including nongeographic presbyteries]~~ [No presbytery], shall ~~[not]~~ start ministries within the geographic bounds of other presbyteries and synods without the approval of those councils.”

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 05-08.

See Advice and Counsel for Item 05-07.

Item 05-09

[The assembly approved Item 05-09 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 32, 34.]

[Comment: The General Assembly notes that two separate policies are intended by this sentence, with different intents. The child and youth protection policy is intended to address interactions involving children and youth within the church or in church-sponsored activities. The sexual misconduct policy is directed toward proactively preventing and responding to sexual misconduct involving all people of all ages within the church and in church-sponsored activities.]

A Resolution to Ensure Adoption and Implementation of Child/Youth Protection Policies and Resources in the PC(USA)—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Amend the fourth paragraph of G-3.0106 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“All councils shall adopt and implement a ~~[sexual misconduct policy and a]~~ child and youth protection policy. ~~[In addition, all councils shall adopt and implement a sexual misconduct policy. These two policies shall be two different policies with differentiated intents. The child and youth protection policy is directed specifically for working with and interactions involving children and youth within the church or in church-sponsored activities, while the sexual misconduct policy is directed toward proactively preventing and responding to sexual misconduct involving all people of all ages within the church and in church-sponsored activities.]”~~

Rationale

Since the child protection policy amendment went into effect after the 221st General Assembly (2014), issues have arisen regarding the interpretation of the text. Some councils have interpreted the amendment to mean that the sexual misconduct policy and child protection policy are one policy with one intent and purpose. However, the intent of the original amendment, when further reading the rationale, is that these would be two separate policies with two separate purposes.

The original rationale of the amendment states:

It is important to understand in developing these policies that these policies and procedures are completely separate from sexual misconduct policies, and there is a need to differentiate between these resources and policies. That is why we request an amendment in the Book of Order to require all councils of the PC(USA) to make this differentiation and adopt and implement a child/youth protection policy alongside a separate sexual harassment policy. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 532, Item 08-14, see also <http://pc-biz.org/%28S%28jhy0qnlj2nsbl1du0zoy3nwr1%29%29/Explorer.aspx?id=4763>)

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns is also requesting we expand the language of this amendment to include “youth” as well as “child” so as to clarify the intended scope of the policy.

The overture presented at the 221st General Assembly (2014) also requested that resources be created for councils to use in the process of creating their own youth and child protection policies. New resources have yet to be created, and we still ask that these resources be created and be made readily available for council use.

It is the church’s responsibility to provide a safe and sacred space for children and youth to discover their God-given potential, “and we must take seriously how our faith informs this responsibility. Our theology of the child is reflected in how we care for and nurture children and youth who are under the care of the church. This theology must reflect the love, care, and high regard for the humanity and dignity of the child reflected in the Gospels” (Proposed Amendments to the Constitution, approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014), 14-C. Child Protection Policy, p. 11: [http://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/oga/pdf/2014-proposed-boa-electronic-version\[1\].pdf](http://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/oga/pdf/2014-proposed-boa-electronic-version[1].pdf)).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 05-09

Advice on Item 05-09—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) that Item 05-09 presents the following issues that the assembly should consider.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recognizes the importance of the purposes of the policies listed or proposed for G-3.0106. The ACC directs the attention of the General Assembly to its advice on Item 05-05 regarding the practice of listing required policies in the Constitution; and thus moving its function from a constitutional document towards a manual of operations.

If the General Assembly decides to proceed with Item 05-09, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that, while the text of the recommended amendment is clear as to its intent, much of the amendment includes language that is interpretation of the two policies in G-3.0106. The result is a section that is unnecessarily long and not in keeping with the direction of the Form of Government, by including language better provided by a manual of operations or advisory handbook.

Therefore, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that these issues are best addressed as follows:

1. Approve an amendment to insert “and youth” after “child” in G-3.0106.
2. Approve the following comment:

Two separate policies are intended by this sentence, with different intents. The child and youth protection policy is intended to address interactions involving children and youth within the church or in church-sponsored activities. The sexual misconduct policy is directed toward proactively preventing and responding to sexual misconduct involving all people of all ages within the church and in church-sponsored activities.

The ACC endorses the call of the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns for resources to be created for councils to use in the process of creating the child and youth protection policy. These resources can include the comment, clarifying that this policy has a different intent from the sexual misconduct policy and is to be a separate document.

Item 05-10

[The assembly approved Item 05-10 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 32, 34.]

[Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) urges the six agencies of the General Assembly to evaluate leaves of absence, considering at least six weeks paid leave as a minimum for new parents for the birth or adoption of, or to care for, a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance.]

A Resolution to Require and Expand Family Leave Policies—From the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016):

~~[1. Urge all presbyteries and congregations to create a family leave policy that each member congregation can adopt, which includes at a minimum six weeks paid leave and an additional six weeks unpaid leave during a twelve-month period for new mothers and fathers for the birth or adoption of or to care for a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance.~~

~~[2. Direct the six agencies of the General Assembly (Board of Pensions, Foundation, Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., Presbyterian Mission Agency, and Presbyterian Publishing Corporation) to improve their family leave policies by the 223rd General Assembly (2018) to include at a minimum six weeks paid leave and an additional six weeks unpaid leave during a twelve-month period for eligible (individuals employed full-time for twelve months before taking the leave) new parents for the birth or adoption of, or to care for a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance.]~~

[Urge all presbyteries, synods, and sessions to evaluate their leave policies for new mothers and fathers for the birth or adoption of, or to care for, a child or other family member, such as seniors or those who require health assistance.]

Rationale

Quality family leave policies are clearly a gender justice concern, as childcare still falls heavily on mothers; but it also encourages fathers to participate as directly as mothers by offering benefits to them as well.

Work normally occurs in community and expresses our social being. Therefore, work must be sustaining of the fabric of social life: sustaining of the individual, of the family, of the community. Yet the community, and the shape of the families that comprise that community, is changing also. ... These changes mean that a greater economic burden falls upon women. (207th General Assembly (1995), God's Work in Our Hands: https://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/oga/pdf/gods-work-in-our-hands-1995.pdf, 2)

The church's present emphasis on inclusion of young adults in the life of the church requires policies that allow them to serve the church and to care for members of their families as well. While the 221st General Assembly (2014) approved a commissioners' resolution that addressed birth and adoption in family leave policies, ACWC would like to expand the coverage to those caring for seniors or sick family members and ensure that our denominational agencies have robust policies (221st General Assembly (2014), Item 09-22: On Encouraging Parental Leave Policy, <http://pc-biz.org/%28S%28kggig3xmvpcphnfh2ivolab%29%29/Explorer.aspx?id=5121>).

In 2012, ACWC received feedback from Women's Ministries of the Presbyterian Mission Agency as a result of listening visits done with women in leadership in the PC(USA) around the country. The first issue listed in the report was related to Family Leave policies:

There is no consistency in regards to family leave policies. Some presbyteries have them for presbytery staff but not for congregations, for instance. Women have taken calls as single women, gotten married, become pregnant, and been told they have two weeks of sick leave. Some congregations rejoice with their pastor and are incredibly supportive, providing paid leave and a willingness to accommodate flexible schedules. However, this is not simply about maternity leave. There is a need for family leave policies for all church workers, as any illness of a family member may require leave time. (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1087, Item 11-12, A Resolution to Continue the Work of Deborah's Daughters)

The PC(USA) should model justice through Family Leave policies that encourage balance in life between work and family and are consistent with our theology and policies on work and workers:

"The church must seek to become a model employer by providing workers with adequate compensation, meaningful opportunities for participation in decision making, leisure time in which to participate in family and community life. ... (207th General Assembly (1995), God's Work in Our Hands: https://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/oga/pdf/gods-work-in-our-hands-1995.pdf, 18).

05 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MID COUNCILS

The foundation upon which all just employment policies are built is access to employment at a level of compensation that allows people to live in dignity and security. ... All conditions of paid employment, including compensation and working conditions, should sustain and nurture the dignity of individuals, the well-being of households and families. ... (Ibid., 19)

Beyond the church’s call to model just policies for employees, paid leave increases worker productivity, improves loyalty and morale, and may improve worker retention, which saves money through reduced turnover costs (National Partnership for Women and Families: <http://www.nationalpartnership.org/issues/work-family/paid-leave-fact-sheets.html>).

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-10, RECOMMENDATION 2

Comment on Item 05-10, Recommendation 2—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The recommendation from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns seeks, at a minimum, thirty days (6 weeks) of paid time off for employees with specific qualifying family leave events: parental (for the care of new child) and non-parental (for the care of other family members). These benefits would be in addition to the existing benefits offered by the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency offers its employees a generous benefits package, including several forms of leave. The benefits program of the Presbyterian Mission Agency is comparable to that offered by other Christian and nonprofit organizations. The program is less attractive than what is often provided to employees of successful for-profit organizations, since many of these organizations use their revenues to provide incentive programs for prospective employees.

Types of Leave (annual average days)	Presbyterian Mission Agency	Christian organizations*	Non-profit sector **
Vacation Leave	22	22	15–24
Sick Leave (unused accumulate)	10	12	12 (Note: 1/3 offer no designated sick days, but may have leave pools)
Emergency Leave	3	No data	No data
Short-term disability	Yes (60% pay)	No data	Yes (generally at 60%–67% pay) (Note: 25% offer no short-term disability)
Family Leave	Complies with Family Medical Leave Act—12 weeks, unpaid, unless employee has other leave available or qualifies for short-term disability (parental leaves qualify for short-term disability pay, non-parental leaves do not qualify)	No data	No data

* Christian Leadership Alliance—an alliance of more than 6,000 mission-focused Christians who lead in today’s high-impact Christian nonprofit ministries, churches, educational institutions, and businesses (<http://www.christianleadershipalliance.org>).

 PRM Consulting Group study of nonprofit organizations.

The proposal from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns would provide an additional six weeks of pay for either form of parental leave, so that the employee would not need to use other benefit time to receive pay during this period. The ACWC proposal provides no compensation during the second six weeks of the twelve week leave.

During 2015, the Presbyterian Mission Agency had fourteen instances of family leave, covering 420 days. If the ACWC proposal had been in effect, there would have been a cost of $129,078. The Presbyterian Mission Agency estimates that perhaps twice as many employees would make use of this additional leave if the ACWC proposal were to be approved. Therefore, our estimate is that approval of the proposal would cost roughly $260,000 a year.

Beyond financial considerations are the impact on working conditions, morale, and lost productivity for other employees, which would be made more difficult by providing an additional six weeks of paid leave in these instances.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency Board believes its leave policies and supervisory practices are both reasonable and compassionate. If the General Assembly believes that the leave benefits of the Presbyterian Mission Agency are not adequate, it would be helpful to direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency Board to conduct a study of the cost/benefit analysis for enlarging the its benefits policies as part of its next annual review of employee leave benefits, and to bring a report to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

Item 05-11

[The assembly approved Item 05-11 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 32, 35.]

[Comment (Comment to Overture): The 216th General Assembly (2016) strongly advises that the western synods consider forming a nongeographic Korean presbytery.]

[Comment on Rationale to Overture: <https://www.pc-biz.org/#/search/3000089> The rationale that accompanies this report implies that the only issues for ministry to LGBTQ persons in Korean-speaking congregations are related to ordination and marriage. This implication is incorrect. The General Assembly reminds all Presbyterians and congregations of the long-standing advocacy of the PC(USA) for the civil rights and personal safety of LGBTQ persons.]

The Task Force for Korean-Speaking Congregations recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016):

1. Direct the [~~Presbyterian Mission Agency or the~~] Office of the General Assembly to create a [~~permanent~~] staff position, working in coordination with the Office of Mid Council Ministries [~~and the Presbyterian Mission Agency~~], for the purposes of supporting and nurturing healthy, connectional Korean-language congregations and presbyteries and second-generation Korean congregations, and request that any committee or task force created by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to study the structure of the General Assembly agencies consider continuing such a position in any recommendations it makes.

2. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency and the Office of the General Assembly, and urge all synods, to support and strengthen the existing system (the Coordinating Committee for Korean American Presbyteries) between geographic and Korean-language presbyteries in which partners are assigned to educate each other as to the nuances and customs of both presbyteries, as well simply to engage in fellowship with one another.

3. [~~Direct any administrative commission, committee, or task force created by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to consider reorganization of synod boundaries to include in its work consideration of whether a nongeographic, Korean language presbytery can be created in the western United States,~~] [Ask synods of the west (Alaska-Northwest, the Pacific, Southern California and Hawaii, the Southwest, the Rocky Mountains, and the Sun) to intentionally consider the viability of creating a new Korean, nongeographic presbytery in the western United States,] consistent with the concerns addressed in this report regarding healthy relationships between Korean-language and geographic presbyteries and the constitutional protection of full representation of men and women in the leadership of such a presbytery and the congregations therein.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to seek to lift up the heritage and history of Korean Americans through events such as retreats or joint worship services.

5. Urge all councils of the church to actively seek to include diverse voices of the Korean community in their work.

6. Request that the 224th General Assembly (2020) conduct a review of the progress being made in implementing Recommendations 1–5, the health of Korean-language congregations and presbyteries in the PC(USA), and the effectiveness of the recommended staff position in carrying out this work.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2014 Referral: Item 05-06. On Forming a Task Force to Study How Korean-Speaking Churches Can Develop into Healthy Members of the PC(USA)—From Midwest Hanmi Presbytery. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 349–50 of the electronic copy).

The Task Force for Korean-Speaking Congregations was created by the 221st General Assembly (2014) for the purpose of studying how Korean-speaking churches can grow and develop into whole and healthy members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The recommendations in this report are intended to further that work by seeking to put words to two crucial issues the task force has identified: (1) the need to communicate with clarity as to actions taken by the PC(USA) regarding ordination and marriage, and the freedom of conscience that all Presbyterians retain in light of those actions; and (2) the need to create space within Korean-speaking congregations and the PC(USA) to allow full participation by all Korean Presbyterians in the life of their own congregations and the larger church.

The task force recognizes that these recommendations require resources from the denomination to be successfully implemented. However, Korean-language congregations and second-generation Korean Presbyterians are a vital part of the PC(USA). The number of Korean congregations in the PC(USA) has increased from 180 to 400 in the last two decades. Moreover, twenty-three Korean new worshiping communities have been created in the last three years in partnership with both Korean-language and geographical presbyteries. More than 500 Korean pastors are now engaged in Korean congregational ministries. Korean congregations have contributed more than $1.5 million annually to the denomination as per capita and mission giving. Per capita sent from Korean congregations to PC(USA) itself is more than $200,000.

The Korean Congregational Support Office in the Presbyterian Mission Agency has been the focal point of Korean American ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The associate for Korean Congregational Support serves as the coordinator for the Coordinating Committee for Korean American Presbyteries (CCKAP), which has been instrumental in networking, leadership training, and development of mission and polity strategies of Korean American presbyteries. The office also works in partnership with the National Council of Korean Presbyterian Churches (NCKPC) in seeking to develop 100 new congregations by 2025.

The denomination, particularly in this time of transition in the national agencies and stress within the Korean Presbyterian community, needs to make a long-term commitment to a structure supporting Korean language and second generation congregations at the General Assembly level. This effort should be coordinated with the work of the associate for Mid Council Relations. Efforts should also be made to ensure the position is not lost in any reorganization of the denomination's national agencies.

The Right of Conscience of Presbyterians in the Face of Changes in Polity and Theology Regarding Ordination and Marriage

The task force believes that a significant source of concern in Korean-speaking congregations is that recent changes in the PC(USA)'s polity and theology regarding ordination and marriage will lead to a loss of freedom of conscience with respect to decisions as to whom to ordain or whether a teaching elder should participate in a marriage. While confusion as to these issues is very real, the task force finds that the concern that freedom of conscience will be lost is unfounded.

Freedom of conscience lies at the heart of the history of the PC(USA). As the Westminster Confession of Faith affirms:

God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men which are in anything contrary to his Word, or beside it in matters of faith or worship. So that to believe such doctrines, or to obey such commandments out of conscience, is to betray true liberty of conscience; and the requiring an implicit faith, and an absolute and blind obedience, is to destroy liberty of conscience, and reason also. (Book of Confessions, 6.109)

In the PC(USA)'s polity, this means:

[W]e consider the rights of private judgment, in all matters that respect religion, as universal and unalienable: We do not even wish to see any religious constitution aided by the civil power, further than may be necessary for protection and security, and at the same time, be equal and common to all others. (Book of Order, F-3.0101b; see also G-2.0105).

While it has not always been clear from the rhetoric surrounding the discussion and reporting of the recent actions of the PC(USA) regarding ordination and marriage, those actions reaffirm that Presbyterians who believe that Scripture condemns homosexual behavior retain the freedom of conscience in ordination decisions and to decline to conduct a service of marriage between persons of the same gender, or to decline the use of their facilities for such a service. Specifically, the amended language of G-2.0104b regarding ordination of teaching and ruling elders, and deacons, make clear that each officer participating in the decision as to whether to ordain or install a candidate retains his or her freedom of conscience to determine whether the candidate meets the standards for service:

Standards for ordained service reflect the church's desire to submit joyfully to the Lordship of Jesus Christ in all aspects of life (F-1.02). The council responsible for ordination and/or installation (G-2.0402; G-2.0607; G-3.0306) shall examine each candidate's calling, gifts, preparation, and suitability for the responsibilities of ordered ministry. The examination shall include, but not be limited to, a determination of the candidate's ability and commitment to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (W-4.4003). Councils shall be guided by Scripture and the confessions in applying standards to individual candidates. (Book of Order, G-2.0104b)

No Presbyterian is required to concur in the ordination or installation of any candidate he or she concludes is not suitable for the responsibilities of ordered ministry, whether because of the candidate's sexual conduct or otherwise.

Similarly, while the concern has been raised that now or in the future, teaching elders will be required to participate in services of marriage of individuals of the same gender, or that session will be required to allow the use of church buildings for such services, the changes made to the Directory for Worship specifically protect the freedom of conscience for those teaching elders and sessions. Specifically, the amended provision of the Directory for Worship provides:

Nothing herein shall compel a teaching elder to perform nor compel a session to authorize the use of church property for a marriage service that the teaching elder or the session believes is contrary to the teaching elder's or the session's discernment of the Holy Spirit and their understanding of the Word of God. (Book of Order, W-4.9006)

Concern has also been raised that civil law might eventually be used to require ministers to participate in same-sex services or to require sessions to allow their property to be used for such services. The task force reminds those concerned that even the language of the Supreme Court decision allowing for same sex marriages took the contrary view: "Finally, it must be emphasized that religions, and those who adhere to religious doctrines, may continue to advocate with utmost, sincere conviction that, by divine precepts, same-sex marriage should not be condoned. The First Amendment ensures that religious organizations and persons are given proper protection as they seek to teach the principles that are so fulfilling and so central to their lives and faiths, and to their own deep aspirations to continue the family structure they have long revered" (Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. (2015), emphasis added). This statement is entirely in accord with the long-standing affirmation of the PC(USA):

We believe that the free exercise clause protects religious exercise in all its manifestations. It protects religious belief and basic religious observance. It protects religious proselytizing, the religious teaching of moral values, and the churches' invocation of those values in the political process. It protects the right of churches and individual believers to exercise religious conscience in the face of laws that would force them to violate that conscience. It protects the right to build religious institutions and to manage those institutions autonomously with a minimum of interference from government regulation. Some of these rights may on occasion be overridden by a compelling government interest, but such interests must be truly compelling, involving intolerable threats to public health and safety or serious impositions on persons not affiliated with the church. (God Alone Is the Lord of Conscience: A Policy Statement adopted by the 200th General Assembly (1988) at p. 8.)

The task force affirms and calls for the whole of the PC(USA) to respect that protection of the freedom of conscience found in these provisions and the history of the PC(USA) is fundamental to our unity in a time of deep theological tension. The task force believes that the words of the Special Commission of 1925 to the General Assembly of 1926 speak for many Korean language churches:

Presbyterianism is a great body of belief, but it is more than a belief; it is also a tradition, a controlling sentiment. The ties which bind us to it are not of the mind only; they are ties of the heart as well. There are people who, despite variant opinions, can never be at home in any other communion. They were born into the Presbyterian Church. They love its name, its order and its great distinctive teachings. In its fellowship they have a precious inheritance from their forbears. Their hearts bow at its altars and cherish a just pride in its noble history. Attitudes and sentiments like these are treasures which should not be undervalued hastily nor cast aside lightly.

In times such as this, it is important that the PC(USA) affirm not only its welcome for Korean-language congregations, but also the vital part they play in our life as a denomination: the admonition that “the church protects its ... minority ... as if it were protecting its future” (Historic Principles of Church, Conscience and Church Government, PC(USA), 1983, the Synod of New York and Philadelphia adopted these principles as a Preface to the “Form of Government” in 1788) is of particular importance today, as the PC(USA) and Korean-language congregations seek God’s will together. Ensuring that a national level staff person has the responsibility to work with Korean-language presbyteries and congregations will improve communication and clarity of the positions of the denomination and reinforce understanding of the principles of Presbyterian polity in those presbyteries and congregations.

Creating Space within Korean-Speaking Congregations and the PC(USA) for Full Participation

The task force also recognizes the need to create space within Korean-speaking congregations and the PC(USA) to allow full participation by all Korean Presbyterians in the life of their own congregations and in the larger church. The task force believes that creating safe spaces has two components. First, within Korean-speaking congregations and Korean-language presbyteries, safe and healthy space must be provided for all members to grow in their faith and in their participation in the life of the church. Second, while the task force reaffirms the need for Korean language, nongeographic presbyteries, such presbyteries, and their congregations, must seek to participate fully, and must be invited to participate fully, in the life of the denomination.

The task force urges all Korean-speaking congregations and Korean-language presbyteries to work to intentionally create safe and healthy space for all members. Such space must include recognizing, affirming, and using all of our peoples’ gifts and beliefs.

The task force urges each Korean-speaking congregation and each Korean-language presbytery to work intentionally to ensure that such safe space exists for all in ordered ministry and for all members.

The task force reaffirms the continuing need for Korean-language, nongeographic presbyteries. This does not mean that every Korean-language church will join a nongeographic presbytery. Many participate in healthy relationship and ministry to their regional presbyteries. However, in our conversations with some teaching elders from Korean-language congregations we heard a particular concern that in the western United States, where a large number of Korean-language congregations are located, there is no longer a Korean-language presbytery. The task force recognizes the difficult decision the 221st General Assembly (2014) made to dissolve the Hanmi Presbytery. It does not wish to recreate a situation that needed to be addressed by that action. Rather, it urges consideration of whether a new beginning is possible, one in which a healthy presbytery can be created that fully respects and is committed to doing its work in a manner that respects our polity and commitment to full participation by all who God calls into ordered ministry.

Full participation by Korean teaching and ruling elders in geographic presbyteries is not yet realistically possible. Some of the barriers Korean teaching and ruling elders face in geographical presbyteries include:

1. The impression given by the leadership of geographic presbyteries that the English language and the presbytery’s practices are what is normal, and that any departure from English or those practices is not normal or an accommodation.
2. A discomfort at not being well-versed in Presbyterian polity.
3. Being overwhelmed by procedural processes, which leads to less willingness or comfort in participation because of the uncertainty as to what is appropriate.

4. Feeling uncomfortable and unsafe in addressing issues of theology, particularly due to the fear of being stereotyped or labeled.

The task force therefore believes that Korean-language presbyteries remain necessary in the PC(USA), but that new and existing Korean-language presbyteries must face the need to minister to both first- and second-generation Korean Presbyterians. Leadership among women and second-generation Korean Presbyterians must be nurtured and encouraged.

The task force urges both the denomination and Korean-language presbyteries and congregations to look for creative ways to move forward. Pastoral leadership by Korean-language and second-generation Korean teaching elders is particularly important to encouraging congregations and presbyteries to deepen their commitment to relationship within the Korean Presbyterian community and across the whole church.

Changing the status quo across the denomination will require effort both within the community of Korean-language Presbyterians and in the PC(USA) as a whole. Necessary steps on the part of Korean teaching and ruling elders include:

- Systematic, structured education of teaching and ruling elders, and congregation members, as to the particular Presbyterian identity of the PC(USA) and the necessity of modeling healthy relationships in congregations and presbyteries.
- Training as to the processes and rules followed in nongeographic presbytery meetings.
- Development of relations with non-Korean-speaking congregations to facilitate mutual understanding of our expressions of our Presbyterian faith and heritage.

The task force is firmly convinced that these goals can be met, but that to be met they require a commitment of support from the denomination. Specifically, in a time of denominational transformation, the task force urges the General Assembly to reaffirm the denomination's commitment to these goals by directing the Presbyterian Mission Agency or the Office of the General Assembly to create a permanent staff position, who would work in coordination with the Office of Mid Council Ministries for the purposes of supporting and nurturing healthy, connectional Korean-language congregations and presbyteries and second-generation Korean congregations. So that such a recommendation does not get lost in any restructuring of the denomination's agencies, the task force also asks that this recommendation be communicated to any committee or task force the General Assembly creates to study such restructuring.

Creating space within the PC(USA) for Korean-speaking congregations to thrive and to enter into fellowship with non-Korean-speaking congregations is not only necessary to the health of Korean-speaking congregations, it is necessary to the health of the whole PC(USA).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 05-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 05-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 05-11 with comments.

The ACREC commends the Task Force for Korean Speaking Congregation that was approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014) for their role in facilitating this important conversation and engaging in strategic planning and reflection regarding the current trend and future status of the Korean-speaking congregations within the PC(USA). The ACREC affirms the belief that we are all “one body with many parts” and are all “individual members of the same body.” We value the many gifts, talents, and contributions that are being made among all racial ethnic constituents within the body of Christ, while we also acknowledge our diversities as a gift that enhances our unique identity and affirms our calling as Christ's ambassadors, as we bear witness to society and to one another within the church.

We value the vital importance of the various voices, theological convictions, and personal conscience expressed, which are to be mutually respected and valued as we discern God's calling in our lives. Christ has come to unite us rather than divide us and has called upon us to lead a life of reconciliation, missional engagement, and witness.

Consequently, we acknowledge the pivotal role of the congregational support staffs in connecting the various congregations with the denomination, not just for the Korean-speaking congregations, but for ALL other racial ethnic groups as well that have sustained vital ministry growth and new worshipping communities within the PC(USA). The various support staffs who serve the racial ethnic constituents of the PC(USA) would be vital resources and point-to persons to the local ministries during such time of organizational changes and restructuring for the PC(USA). The role of the congregational support staffs would not only bring stability but would serve as the critical links in affirming the relationship and commitment between the local congregations and the PC(USA) denomination.

The ACREC affirms the task force's recommendation to maintain the congregational support staff not only for the Korean-speaking congregations (Recommendation 1), but for the other fellow racial ethnic constituent groups as well that have demonstrated growth and viability, in times when the general membership of the denomination has been on decline in recent years.

The ACREC affirms the task force’s recommendations to engage in a season of mutual learning and exploration of new ways of relating with one another, as the Spirit leads us, between those of the nongeographic and Korean-language presbyteries (Recommendations 2, 3, and 4). We recognize these efforts may at times be difficult and present many levels of challenges; however, they are necessary and vital in reestablishing mutual trust and building bridges that connect us rather than walls that separate us within the body of Christ.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 05-11

Comment on Item 05-11—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency has an associate for Korean Emerging Ministries in the current Presbyterian Mission Agency budget and also in the proposed 2017–2018 budget. The Presbyterian Mission Agency welcomes and affirms Korean American congregations and leaders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and is grateful for the witness that Korean American Presbyterians have exhibited for mission, evangelism, church growth, and faith formation.

The Office of Korean Emerging Ministries in Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries within the Presbyterian Mission Agency equips Korean first generation congregations, as well as 1.5 and second generation Korean-language, English-language, and intercultural congregations, the National Council of Korean Presbyterian Churches (NCKPC), the Coordinating Committee for Korean American Presbyteries (CCKAP), the Consulting Committee for Korean American Ministries (CCKAM), National Korean Presbyterian Women (NKPW), National Korean Presbyterian Men (NKPM), young adult and English ministry networks, and other groups in the church.

The overture asks that the Presbyterian Mission Agency or the Office of the General Assembly “ensure that a national level staff person has the responsibility to work with Korean-language presbyteries and congregations.” The overture also asks that a “permanent staff position” be created to support Korean congregations, “coordinated with the work of the associate for Mid Council Relations” in the Office of the General Assembly.

It is not possible to guarantee that any office or position will be permanently located in the Presbyterian Mission Agency due to declining revenue sources in the church and limited funding. The office is currently working to connect and equip Korean Presbyterians, through partnering with mid councils, to support healthy and growing Korean American ministries in the church.

Item 05-12

[The assembly approved Item 05-12 with comment. See pp. 13, 35.]

[Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) recognizes the value of making room for all people at the table of decision-making in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We urge councils, at all levels, to actively consider ways to involve, in the whole life of the church, those previously left out from the table. This includes, but is not limited to, young adults and those involved in new worshiping communities. We further recommend to the Synod of the Northeast to continue their productive conversations regarding this issue and bring to the 223rd General Assembly (2018) a tangible recommendation.]

Request for Constitutional Interpretation of Resolving Tensions between F-1.0403, F-1.0404, and F-3.0202—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

In response to the question from the Synod of the Northeast, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) that no authoritative interpretation of F-1.0403, F-1.0404, and F-3.0202 be approved.

Rationale

Pursuant to G-3.0501c and G-6.02, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution makes the following findings with respect to the questions presented:

1. With respect to the supposed tension between F-1.0403–F-1.0404 and F-3.0202, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the synod’s identification of a tension between these provisions overlooks an important sentence at the end of F-1.0403: “No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution.”

Participation and representation in the governance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is limited in several ways by the Constitution. Among these requirements are profession of faith in Jesus Christ and membership in a congregation (G-1.0301), election by a community of God's people (F-3.0106, G-2.0102), and the willingness, upon examination by a council, to fulfill all requirements as expressed in the constitutional questions for ordination and installation (G-2.0104b).

2. The synod requests the General Assembly to resolve its identified tension between constitutional provisions by one of three routes. The first two are not possible, according to the very authority the synod cites as the basis for the proposed resolutions, F-3.03. Both of these options have the effect of weakening, if not invalidating, other provisions of the Constitution.

Section F-3.03 establishes that the Constitution is to be read as a whole, and that if tensions and ambiguities are identified, they must be resolved in a manner that gives effect to all provisions. The language of F-3.03 was drafted in light of an authoritative interpretation established by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in 2001 in its decision in Case 213-2: Session of Londonderry v. The Presbytery of Northern New England:

It is not unusual for a document such as our Constitution, written at different periods of time and under different circumstances, to exhibit tensions and ambiguities in its provisions. Nevertheless, it is the task of governing bodies and judicial commissions to resolve them in such a way as to give effect to all provisions. It is not within the power of any governing body or judicial commission to declare a properly adopted provision of the Constitution to be invalid. The only appropriate avenue to change or remove a provision of the Constitution is through the process for amendment provided within the Constitution itself. (213-2 Decision, p. 4f.)

This authoritative interpretation, in part, was elevated to constitutional standing by the adoption of the current Form of Government, in F-3.03. Therefore, it is not permissible for any council to attempt to identify any section of the Book of Order as having a higher level of importance than other provisions. The Book of Order is to be read and interpreted in its entirety, and any perceived tensions and ambiguities must be resolved in a manner that gives effect to all provisions.

3. As to the proposed third option, the question arises, should the General Assembly consider an amendment to "mitigate the tension between these provisions?" It is difficult to see what amendment can be offered that will lessen the perceived tension identified by the synod. It is not likely that the General Assembly would be willing to lessen its commitment to unity in diversity (F-1.0403). Likewise, the provision that the church is to be governed by presbyters is long established. Section F-3.0202 was first articulated in the Book of Order by one of our antecedent denominations in 1797. Furthermore, the requirement that commissioners be presbyters assures their consent to the ordered ministries' constitutional questions.

The Book of Order already contains provisions designed to mitigate the tension felt by the synod. Congregations and sessions determine the persons who will serve in its ordered ministries, and can nominate and elect any active member it believes is qualified according to the standards necessary for service. The length of terms may be adjusted to make it possible for a younger member to serve. The regular review of a congregation through consultative visits by the presbytery or through session records reviews can be avenues for raising concerns of representation and inclusiveness, and developing strategies for addressing these concerns. Committees on representation in particular exist to keep issues of participation and inclusiveness at the forefront, including informing the work of nominating committees. There are avenues open for sessions and presbyteries within the synod to address the concern raised by this request. The inability to fulfill the ideals of inclusiveness in particular circumstances of the election of presbyters does not rise to the level where long-standing and essential Presbyterian polity should be altered.

Questions Presented to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

This request from the Synod of the Northeast presents the following questions upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

1. There is tension between F-1.0403, "Unity in Diversity," and F-1.0404, "Openness," on the one hand, and F-3.0202, "Governed by Presbyters," on the other, as relates to the church's procedures for calling and ordaining presbyters, particularly young persons.
2. That the General Assembly resolve this tension by one of three routes:
 - a. If the GA determines that F-1.0403 and F-1.0404 are of higher importance than F-3.0202, that it issue an authoritative interpretation to that effect.
 - b. If the General Assembly finds that F-3.0202 takes precedence over F-1.0403 and F-1.0404, that the General Assembly provide advice and counsel on how to achieve age-diversity within its entities.
 - c. If the General Assembly finds that F-3.0202 is of equal importance to F-1.0403 and F-1.0404, that the General Assembly devise a constitutional amendment to mitigate the tension between these provisions.

Item 05-13

[The assembly answered Item 05-13 by the action taken on Item 05-01. See pp. 13, 35.]

In that our current Form of Government commends shared purpose, partnership, context, and call through the sharing of administrative functions and permanent judicial commissions, the synods of the PC(USA) recommend that the 222nd General Assembly (2016):

1. Act to rescind the recommendation of the 221st General Assembly (2014) with regard to reducing the total number of synods.
2. Retain the current boundaries and ecclesial responsibilities of the sixteen synods of the PC(USA).
3. Encourage synods to continue accelerating mission partnerships and exploring shared functions to the maximum extent practicable to effectively and efficiently meet the requirements of the Book of Order for synods.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral:

2014 Referral: Item 05-04. Recommendation 1. Direct That a New Configuration of Synod Boundaries Be Established Based on an Emerging Sense of Purpose, Partnership, Context, and Call Through a Collaborative Process Between the Synods and Presbyteries Resulting in No More Than 10–12 Synods. The Synods Shall Report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016)—From the Mid Council Commission II (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 53, 54, 319–48).

Synopsis

In response to the mandate from the 221st General Assembly (2014), each synod of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) individually met to consider “an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call” with other synods (Ibid. p. 319). Those meetings included a wide representation from the presbyteries as well as people involved in the day-to-day activities of the synod. They also met with adjacent synods to discuss possibilities and partnership. Representatives from fifteen synods then met in late-2015 to discuss realigning synod boundaries; the discussion expanded to encompass ministry possibilities, decline of racial and ethnic diversity, sharing time and human resources, and potential financial complexities. Through this diligent and intentional approach, synods emerged with a renewed sense of purpose and commitment to collaborative mission and ministry in their contexts.

After careful and faithful consideration and research, the synods of the PC(USA) concluded that larger structures will have little, if any, positive impact on mission, ministry, and partnership between presbyteries. It was also determined that the sheer enormity of such expansive synod boundaries as those being proposed would not facilitate the work of mid councils, and would further restrict and limit the involvement and voice of racial and ethnic Presbyterians working within the current synod structure. It therefore is being recommended that no changes be made to synod boundaries at this time.

Background of the Report

In its report to the 221st General Assembly (2014), the Mid Council Commission II (MCC II) recommended that the assembly “Direct a new configuration of synod boundaries ... resulting in no more than eight larger regional synods. ...” This was to be accomplished “through a collaborative process between the synods and presbyteries” resulting in “... an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call” [Ibid. p. 319]. The General Assembly, in response to the recommendation, approved multi-part Item 05-04 that, inter alia, directed the synods to report on their progress toward configuring no more than 10–12 synods at the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

The Stated Clerk has interpreted a report of the synod representatives gathered in Dallas, Texas, to be a kind of special committee report that falls under Standing Rule E.2. Accordingly, this written report is submitted as that special committee’s report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

History of Synods in the PC (USA)

The first presbytery in colonial America was formed in 1706. The Presbyterian presence grew over the next ten years and the “General Synod” was created in 1716, and later was named the Synod of Philadelphia. The General Assembly first met in 1798 and has, on many occasions, reconfigured the boundaries of synods and the presbyteries to meet the needs of the church. The current synod configuration was established in 1983 with the merger of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America and the Presbyterian Church in the United States to form the PC(USA).

A debate about the existence and role of synods has continued since before the 1983 merger; the debate picked up in earnest in 1993 as a reflection of denominational decline. A decade later, the Presbytery of Southern New England recommended synods be completely eliminated so that synod property could be divided between presbyteries and the General Assembly. The 205th General Assembly (1993) disapproved the overture and opted instead to create a special committee, which later recommended to the 211th General Assembly (1999) that the PC(USA) move to a three-governing-body system. The rationale was that such a structure offered more opportunities for relationship-building between the General Assembly, presbyteries, and congregations. The 211th General Assembly (1999) chose not to be bound by this recommendation and commended the report for further study.

The Presbytery of Central Washington submitted an overture to the 218th General Assembly (2008) to streamline the current synod structure into fewer synods. This overture was also disapproved. In response to other coordinated “requests for action related to the form and function of synods ...” the 220th General Assembly (2012) commissioners created a Commission on Mid Council, which became known as MCC I. MCC I concluded that “the strengthening of presbyteries and the overall denominational structure was best accompanied by repurposing synods as Multi-Presbytery Missional Partnerships” (Minutes, 2012, Part 1, p. 279) which would, in effect, eliminate synods as ecclesial bodies from the constitutional structure. That General Assembly received the MCC I report and did not take substantive action; rather it created MCC II for further study. MCC II subsequently invited the 221st General Assembly (2014) commissioners to “envision a church with mid councils [composed of] fewer people at larger tables ... as they define their purpose and the best way to live out a new identity.”

Current Status

The current configuration of sixteen synods within the PC(USA) is shown by Exhibit A (p. 307) to this report. That exhibit shows the distribution of membership on December 31, 2013. Geographic boundaries of each presbytery are shown by Exhibit B (p. 308).

Each of the sixteen synods responded to the mandate of the 221st General Assembly (2014) in anticipation of presenting a response at the 222nd General Assembly (2016). Most synods held conversations with adjacent synods to discuss possible realignment options. No two synods used exactly the same process. However, there were a common number of features of those processes. Most synods started with meetings with representatives from each presbytery within the synod and involvement of representatives from multiple presbyteries when conversations were held with adjacent synods.

All synods did self-reflection on their status as well as their vision for the next several years. One consideration in almost all of the conversations was the diversity of people within presbyteries and cultural connections both within the synod and with presbyteries of adjacent synods (see Exhibit B., p. 308).

Each of the synods sincerely and fully engaged in the process mandated by the 221st General Assembly (2014). Participants in the various conversations took the direction for change seriously, seeking ways to achieve the number of 10–12 synods from among the 16 synods. Ideas included such concepts as merging with the Synod of Puerto Rico or dividing a synod into pieces and having the separated parts merge with separate, adjacent synods. Virtually no option that was considered was ruled unworkable without serious examination. In addition to the time and talents of all participants, synods have expended, up to $48,000 each on meetings since the process began.

Each synod is a repository of grand gifts to the church over the past three centuries. Each has its own historic richness in programs and financial support for mission work within its geographic area. Part of the success of this work is having an understanding of the cultural traditions among the constituent cultures of a given synod. Synods historically have been adaptive to the financial, cultural, and mission needs of a variety of constituent presbyteries. All of the representatives gathered in Dallas agreed that a major consideration of realignment was the contextual significance it would have for diversity within specific presbyteries and synods, and all recognized how boundary changes would impact the synods’ ability to continue equipping the church to use these gifts.

Dallas Meeting

In further response to the 221st General Assembly (2014) mandate, thirty-six representatives of fifteen synods gathered in Dallas, Texas, on November 30 and December 1, 2015, for conversations around realignment. Fifteen ruling elder and twenty teaching elder moderators, vice-moderators, research team members, past officers, and others were present. The Synod of Puerto Rico chose not to send representatives. The conversation was facilitated by the Reverend Dr. Laurie Ferguson.

Synod executives, stated clerks, General Assembly staff, and a representative of MCC II were invited to attend as observers without voice or vote. Nevertheless, at the request of the special committee, individual observers were asked to answer direct questions in their field of expertise. The participants met in two closed sessions at which observers were not present.

Representatives shared their synod’s progress on and discoveries around the mandate from the 221st General Assembly (2014). In these conversations, a number of common themes arose.

As a result, synods emerged from the two-year process with a renewed sense of purpose and ministry in their contexts. The synods of the PC(USA) were able to strengthen their relationship and ministry with partner presbyteries, fortify existing partnerships between synods, and break new ground on emerging ministries together.

Participants

Observers

The continuation of these conversations is vital to the continued innovation, partnership, and relevance of the PC(USA)'s regional bodies. Those gathered in Dallas considered an annual gathering of synod leadership, like the one held in Dallas, to share ideas and proposals, listening posts and circuit tours within the synods' bounds to promote interaction with the presbyteries, and cross-synod conversations based on geographic, missional, and other commonalities that may be identified in ongoing work together. Despite these commonalities, it became clear in discussions that a single approach or structure cannot meet the needs of each presbytery across the PC(USA). Synods do and must function across a range of needs according to their constituent presbyteries.

Current synod boundaries are not perfect, yet each synod reflected that enlarging those boundaries would impede ministry with and for its partner presbyteries. The geography involved, especially in the central and western parts of the United States, would necessitate regional offices in the place of existing synod offices, to facilitate stated regional mission and ministry, if boundaries were to enlarge. Along the east coast, enlarging boundaries could necessitate an increase in staff as synod staffs would conceivably have twice as many presbyteries to serve. There would also be significant costs involved in amending endowed funds held by synods, many of which are donor-restricted.

Synods were able to see the openness and possibilities of its institutional forms rather than simply its perils while embracing openness to God's mission in the world (see F-1.0404) and the mandate of the 221st General Assembly (2014). Synods have the ability to be more diverse than presbyteries and respond more rapidly than the General Assembly. These characteristics empower synods to continue becoming more culturally appropriate and contextually relevant.

Shortcomings, failures, and ways to provide mutual support were discussed, girded by the understanding that synod boundaries are not fences. As such, ministry, resources, and support can and should flow freely between synods, toward the larger goal of nurturing ministry within the PC(USA).

Conclusions

Every problem is accompanied by an opportunity. The right timing and set of circumstances can transform an obstacle into a possibility that can lead to deep and meaningful change. But if the problem has not been framed correctly—if the problem has not been clearly stated or clearly identified—the change that comes to pass may not be what is needed to solve the problem. According to MCC II, the problem facing the PC(USA) is that “the composition and organization of the mid councils” is inadequate to undergird and promote “missional congregations ... and [the] ecclesial nature and character of [our] presbyteries. ...” Its solution was to grant MCC II the “authority to organize, unite, and divide synods and presbyteries.” The solution proposed by MCCII and others was to reconfigure boundaries in such a way as to reduce synod presence and/or responsibilities, literally reducing the number of synods by half. That authority was not granted; rather the synods were tasked to carry out a modified version of the MCC II recommendation.

The representatives of the synods of the PC(USA) have no objection to meaningful change as it relates to synod boundaries. They affirm the act of reform in response to opportunities to become something greater for the glory of God. They take exception, however, to modifications in lieu of deep and meaningful change. Meaningful change is the substance of the words Ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda secundum verbum Dei (The church reformed, always being reformed according to the Word of God).

Long before MCC I or MCC II, some synods were already engaged in collaborative conversations, partnerships, and networking. Conversations and meetings between synods during the past three years (see Exhibit C, pp. 309ff), particularly the gathering in Dallas, Texas, have been tremendously helpful to a common understanding of issues and potential solutions. The conversations about failures and missed opportunities were candid and open, and several synods discovered a shared interest and found common ground on which to do fruitful and faithful ministry together. For these reasons and more, the synod representatives are deeply indebted to the MCC II for recommending a time of “collaborative process.”

The synod representatives that met in Dallas are gratified that MCC II has acknowledged that “synods are providing a space for advocacy and development of racial ethnic constituencies ... that would not easily be filled at either the presbytery or General Assembly levels of the PC(USA).” Synods are instrumental in maintaining racial and cultural diversity within the denomination. A synod in the southeast is not as aware of Native American sensitivities as a synod in the southwest. And synod staff far removed geographically from presbytery staffs will not be as responsive to needs of those staffs. The potential for sharing administrative functions and permanent judicial commission duties also is diminished with larger synods.

People of color will become a majority of the U.S. population by 2042 according to the U.S. Census Bureau’s latest projection. It is troubling that some may find themselves asking whether the genesis of the phrase “fear of loss” might actually be traced back to those who feel most threatened by the certainty that they will one day become a racial minority. Preserving the current synod boundaries is appropriate, but not because of “fear” of loss or because of vested interests “... in the system as it currently exists,” as was suggested by MCC II. The emphasis should be on providing adaptive structures that enables the church to proclaim the gospel of Jesus Christ, bearing witness that diversity means age, gender, disabilities, cultures, ethnicities, theology, and race.

From the time when five pastors gathered in Philadelphia in 1706 to form the first presbytery until today, mid council bodies are a group of colleagues in ministry who willingly serve the people with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love. This is what we do to strengthen the life and work of the church.

MCC II COMMENT ON ITEM 05-13

Comment on Item 05-13—From the Mid Council Commission II.

The Mid Council Commission II advises that the assembly carefully consider whether the synods’ report reflects a genuine effort to comply with the direction of the 221st General Assembly (2014) to reorganize their boundaries into not more than ten to twelve synods or is simply an attempt to reargue issues resolved, in an overwhelming vote, by that assembly. From the commission’s vantage point, the synods have chosen not to follow the direction of the 221st General Assembly (2014):

- They have not suggested the redrawing of even a single boundary.
- They have not consulted with members of the commission except for a few conversations shortly after the 221st General Assembly (2014) with a few commission members.
- They declined even to hear from a representative of the commission that they invited to their November 2015 gathering.

The synods’ recommendation, simply put, urges the rejection of the work of at least three assemblies and two commissions in favor of the status quo. At a time in which the whole church, at each council, is engaged in serious discussion and reassessment of its identity for the church in the 21st century, the commission concurs with the overwhelming action of the 221st General Assembly (2014), advises that this assembly carry forward with that work, and confirm the 221st General Assembly (2014)’s recommendation that an administrative commission be formed to reconfigure the boundaries of the synods in a manner that protects ongoing mission, but realigns those nearly thirty-five-year-old boundaries with the current realities of the denomination.

The 221st General Assembly (2014), by a vote of 449 to 128 (78 percent to 22 percent) following a 65-1 vote in committee, directed a reconfiguration of the synods into not more than ten to twelve synods, from the current sixteen synods. The action was the result of the work of two commissions and years of reflection and debate regarding the role of synods in our denomination. (The full report of Mid Council Commission II is available in PC-Biz, under the Committee tab, by selecting the 221st General Assembly (2014) and going to Committee 05 (Mid Councils), at Item 05-04.) That vote was the result of neither precipitous action nor a disregard for the role of synods. To the contrary, the role and number of synods has been studied by the denomination since at least 1993. More recently, in 2010, the General Assembly, faced with a variety of requests for action related to the form and function of synods in the mid council structure of the denomination, created a Commission on Mid Council. The first Mid Council Commission listened intently to the varied voices in the denomination by means of surveys, conference calls with key constituents, and numerous conversations in every synod, at every major gathering of the church, and with key leaders in every level of the church’s life. Importantly, it found:

We live in a rapidly changing world and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is not the same denomination it was sixty or thirty years ago, when the structural framework of our current version of Presbyterianism was developed and implemented. As we have envisioned what the Presbyterian Church

(U.S.A.) of our post-Christendom world may look like, our Commission has assumed the role of those who prepare the space, invite the artists, and affirm the creativity that already resides in our mid council system. (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 279)

Based in part on what it heard from its broad consultations, the first Mid Council Commission recommended that the best way of strengthening presbyteries and the overall denominational structure was by “repurposing synods as Multi-Presbytery Missional Partnerships” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 279) and eliminating synods as ecclesial bodies within our constitutional structure. The 220th General Assembly (2014) charged this commission to study that recommendation further.

Based on that work, in 2014, this commission invited the 221st General Assembly (2014) to envision:

- A church whose existing mid councils come together at a bigger table or multiple tables to aspire to what God is calling them to do, to aspire to what God is calling us to be.
- A church with mid councils that engage in conversations about collaborating, partnering, and networking, as they define their purpose and the best way to live out a new identity.
- A church whose mid councils may focus on relationships or mission, leadership development, administrative support, or essential ecclesiastical functions as the glue that helps presbyteries be in covenantal community with one another.
- A church whose mid councils are prepared to engage in significant structural change for the sake of enabling adaptive and creative change within broader borders. (Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 320)

Instead of eliminating synods, after many meetings and much consultation, this commission found that “the time has come for fewer synods within a structure of mutual accountability that encourages each synod to discern God’s call to find its unique role in affirming the creativity that already resides in our mid council system” (Ibid). Ruling Elder Commissioner Courtenay Willcox of the Presbytery of Philadelphia, moderator of the Mid Councils Issues Committee at the 221st General Assembly (2014), aptly quoted a committee member in describing the way forward: “It may feel messy and chaotic, but we serve a God who brings order out of chaos.”

To accomplish this redrawing of boundaries, this commission suggested it begin with a collaborative process to include all those with a stake in the restructuring and to allow synods and presbyteries most affected to have agency in controlling their alignments. However, the collaboration was never intended to revisit the decision the 221st General Assembly (2014) overwhelmingly made to reconfigure the current synods into not more than ten to twelve synods. As this commission said in its report:

While the MCII concluded that eliminating synods as ecclesial bodies at this time would not accomplish the goal of simplifying and streamlining the governance structure of the PC(USA), the commission believes that the PC(USA) has a denominational structure that no longer fits the church of today. The current synod structure was established when we were a significantly larger church, when denominational loyalty to the mission decisions of higher councils was significantly deeper, and when geographic distance was an obstacle to efficient administration. Today our size, our understanding of denominations, and technology help to create opportunities for new ways of being church. (Ibid, p. 323)

To that end, this commission proposed, and the 221st General Assembly (2014) overwhelmingly recommended to this assembly that if the collaborative process for reconfiguration did not work, the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve and the Moderator appoint a commission to redraw the synod’s boundaries. The two-year period authorized by the 221st General Assembly (2014) was intended to allow synods to redraw boundaries themselves. The charge to the synods was not to consider whether their boundaries should be redrawn, but how they should be redrawn. The commission urges this assembly to carry through with that directive rather than abandon the work of the last three assemblies, of this commission, and its predecessor.

The commission recognizes that the status quo is often more comfortable than living into the future to which we are called. But at a time in which the whole church is actively and energetically engaged in a process of discerning its future, abandoning the work done by the 221st General Assembly (2014) to make synods meaningful and viable councils for a future church would send the unmistakable signal that the denomination is not prepared to reform itself. Such an action would harm not only the synods, but the whole denomination as it moves into God’s future.

On Merging the Presbyteries of Central Washington and Northwest Coast—From the Synod of Alaska-Northwest.

The Synod of Alaska-Northwest overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to approve the merger of the Presbytery of Central Washington and the Presbytery of Northwest Coast to form a new presbytery to be known as the Presbytery of Northwest Coast.

Rationale

The geographical territory of the merged presbytery includes the counties of Okanogan, Chelan, Douglas, Grant, Kittitas, Yakima, Benton, Franklin, Walla Walla, that part of Adams known as the Panhandle, and that part of Klickitat east of Rock Creek, all said counties lying within the State of Washington; and the counties of Clallam, Jefferson, Island, San Juan, Skagit, Snohomish, Whatcom, and those portions of King County north of NE 160th Street, Seattle, Washington; and within the following district of the State of Alaska including the organized and unorganized boroughs and cities of Yakutat, Haines, Skagway, Juneau, Hoonah-Angoon, Petersburg, Wrangell, Sitka, Prince of Wales-Hyder, and Ketchikan.

Item 05-15

[The assembly answered Item 05-15 by the action taken on Item 05-01. See pp. 33, 36.]

On Requesting Exemption on any Action the Assembly Might Take to Reduce the Number of Synods—From the Synod of Alaska-Northwest.

The Synod of Alaska-Northwest respectfully overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) exempt the Synod of Alaska-Northwest from any action the assembly might take to reduce the number of synods, which may include forcing the Synod of Alaska-Northwest to merge all or in part with another synod, in order that it might continue as a reduced function synod as provided by G-3.0404.”

Rationale

The Synod of Alaska-Northwest, at the request of and in consultation with its presbyteries, has reduced its function to “the provision of judicial function process and administrative review of the work of the presbyteries” [Book of Order, G-3.0404].

The Synod of Alaska-Northwest meets annually “for the purposes of setting a budget, electing members to its permanent judicial commission, and admitting to record the actions of its permanent judicial and administrative commissions.”

The presbyteries of this synod have assumed “for themselves, by mutual agreement, such other synods functions as have and may be deemed necessary by the presbyteries and the synod.”

In 2012 the presbyteries of the Synod of Alaska-Northwest called a forum of the leadership of the presbyteries to discuss their relationships with the synod. The driving principle of the forum was the following statement by the 211th General Assembly (1999), which “commend[ed] these principles:

- a. The primary organizational focus of the life and work of the PC (USA) is on developing, encouraging, equipping, and resourcing its congregations and their leaders as the Living Body of Christ.
- b. The primary focus of the life and work of presbyteries is to enhance the effectiveness of congregations
- c. It is essential that simplified, flexible and more responsive ways be found for the PC (USA) to do its work as it moves into a new millennium in a rapidly changing environment.” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 521)

In a written, joint agreement, the presbyteries of Alaska-Northwest expressed to the synod:

- The structure of the Synod should reflect the reality that mission and ministry best happens at the congregational level to transform the lives of those engaged;
- Most ministry and mission existing at the synod level would be best stewarded by congregations and presbyteries, or at the very least, be affirmed and/or supported by them;
- The governance structure of the synod hindered it from being responsive, supportive and it was unable to react to current realities of congregational ministry;
- There was a lack of accountability in the relationship between the synod and its presbyteries; that is higher councils should offer lower councils accountability for the health of the ministry done at those lower levels, while higher councils must be accountable to resource, support and encourage those lower councils, but it was perceived that this latter form of accountability was lacking;
- In summary, the presbyteries expressed that from their viewpoint, the synod’s mission and purpose had become separated; even estranged, from the respective missions of the presbyteries and that the presbyteries no longer supported or affirmed the mission of the synod as it had evolved over several decades.

The presbyteries requested that the Synod of Alaska-Northwest reduce its function according to G-3.0404 to “provision of judicial process and administrative review of the work of the presbyteries,” and that the presbyteries would “assume for themselves, by mutual agreement, such other synod functions as may be deemed necessary by the presbyteries and the synod.”

In October of 2012 the elected synod commissioners approved the request of the presbyteries and restructured the synod to accomplish the goal. The synod’s entire organization now consists only of two commissioners from each of the presbyteries who must be members of or be directly related to their respective presbytery councils (now called by many other names to avoid confusion with the term “council” used in the Book of Order). Presbytery executives and stated clerks were given voice but no vote in the synod. The principle is that when the synod gathers, those present are empowered to speak for their presbyteries, and thus a meeting of the synod is a gathering of the effective leadership of each of the presbyteries.

Feedback from the presbyteries is that the synod has found “simplified, flexible and more responsive ways” for the church to do its work.

This model of a “reduced function” synod has been implemented and continues to work very well for the member presbyteries and their congregations. All of the ongoing ministries executed by the synod were reviewed, and were offered to the presbyteries. Where presbyteries were willing to continue a ministry, the ministry was continued. Those ministries that found no support at a presbytery or congregational level were discontinued.

When the presbyteries have needed support, sometimes in a critical way as when former Alaska Presbytery fell below the constitutionally required number of churches, this new, nimble expression of “synod” has been able to respond quickly and effectively.

For years this synod held a very large amount of funds, the original source of which were National Mission Partnership Funds, and valuable real estate holdings. In many cases these assets were used to support institutions no longer supported or affirmed by the presbyteries or congregations. These resources have now been allocated to the presbyteries, who are unleashing new ministries and mission projects. Donor restricted assets that must be held by the synod will continue to generate future resources for presbyteries and congregations to engage in innovative mission and ministry. A forced merger with another synod or realignment would be costly, and would drain resources now used directly for ministry to untangle, transfer and reallocate assets to some new entity.

As a result of reducing its function, the Synod of Alaska-Northwest now employs only a part-time stated clerk. Accounting and negligible administrative support is provided by contracted presbytery staff. There are no committees staffed by non-synod commissioners. Per capita has been reduced from $6.63 in 2012 to $1.50 in 2016. The Synod of Alaska-Northwest believes it would be ineffective and expensive to force it to merge with another synod of higher function with its related costs, and contrary to our covenantal purpose, such a merger would force our congregations to pay for staff and services that our presbyteries and their churches do not desire and would not use.

The Synod of Alaska-Northwest has fully embraced the General Assembly’s directive that “the primary organizational focus of the life and work of the PC(USA) is on developing, encouraging, equipping, and resourcing its congregations and their leaders as the Living Body of Christ,” and has found a “simplified, flexible, and responsive way” to accomplish this by reducing its function and revising its structure so its agenda is determined by the congregations and presbyteries it serves and supports. This process has provided us with the “clarity as to [our] ecclesial and missional identity, purpose, structure, and strategies, as mandated by the 221st General Assembly (2014).”

During its many discussions among the presbyteries and synods, the Synod of Alaska-Northwest has come to believe that forcing realignment and mergers is impractical and would be excessively costly. A better solution would be to identify those synods and presbyteries where there is congruency between mission, purpose, and function, and to allow them to continue in their present configurations, as is the case with the Synod of Alaska-Northwest. Where there is regional affinity or common levels of function, mergers may still increase both efficiency and effectiveness and could and should be pursued--but not imposed.

Reduced function, as provided by the Book of Order, is working very well for the Synod of Alaska Northwest and its constituent presbytery. Please let us continue this healthy, efficient, and effective ministry in its current form.

Synod of the Covenant Response to the 221st GA (2014) item 05-04

In response to the 221st GA (2014) item 05-04, the Synod of the Covenant invited all eleven of its presbyteries and neighboring synods into conversation to discuss possible boundary changes and/or new partnerships. Regretfully, we were unable to fulfill the 221st (2014) GA item 05-04 as issued. However, what did emerge from our contextual discernment process was a renewed purpose and sense of call as A Just- Peace church.

Recommendations:

1. That the Synod of the Covenant maintain its current geographic boundaries
2. That the Synod of the Covenant be permitted to affirm its calling as A Just-Peace church
3. That the Synod of the Covenant invite the presbyteries and congregations that lie within its bounds to adopt The Five Peacemaking Affirmations

Rationale:

1. That the Synod of the Covenant maintain its current geographic boundaries

As a result of our conversations with the Presbyteries of Detroit, Eastminster, Lake Huron, Lake Michigan, Mackinac, Miami Valley, and Muskingum Valley and with the Synod of the Trinity, we concluded that each of us is wrestling with understanding God's mission in a world rattled by the clash of cultural and contextual identities. Yet, it is through the sharing of expertise and experiences and actively engaging in discussion that mutual movement is achieved. Hence, the Synod of the Covenant is committed to continued dialogue toward the unity of the PCUSA. However, the Synod of the Covenant must be faithful to the movement of the Holy Spirit and the maintenance of our integrity and clear sense of call.

- 2 That the Synod of the Covenant be permitted to affirm its calling as A Just-Peace church

During an extensive period of discernment, and after engaging in a process of consultation¹ with our constituent presbytery councils and/or executives regarding item 05-04, several important points emerged. Most notable was the importance of both the Synod of the Covenant and its presbyteries to live out faithfully our respective mission, call and purpose. Given that so many people within our urban and rural communities are struggling with issues of poverty, injustice, racism, unemployment, inadequate health care and education, violence and militarism, and other social ills, the Synod was compelled to promote not only peace but a justice-peace, because there can be no peace without justice. Thus, the call for A-Just-Peace church. What this means for our communities and common life together is that the Synod of the Covenant cannot be content to 'do' any type of ministry that disconnects us from the pervasive culture of violence, suffering and reality of peoples' lives. In response, we have begun the process of making internal changes that are vital to our 'walking with' rather than 'ministering to' our people.

- 3 That the Synod of the Covenant invite presbyteries and congregations that lie with its bounds to adopt The Five Peacemaking Affirmations

Synod of the Covenant Report

In response to three primary questions asked of presbyteries, what emerged was a shared understanding and commitment to promoting peace and justice, although the ‘how’ this should be done varied. Subsequently, what the Five Peacemaking Affirmationsⁱⁱ do is nurture and enhance the existing commonalities and relationships between this Synod and its presbyteries. We recognize that this is an intentional journey full of risks and challenges which may conflict with the institutional/membership church model.

ⁱ Outline of the Synod Discernment Process:

- The Synod Moderators’ Committee oversees the discernment process and has approved the outlined process on 9/25/2014.
- Synod Assembly affirmed the process on 11/8/2014.
- The Synod designed a Survey/Study electronic tool in partnership with the Presbyterian Research Services for a cost. The study also factored in the Synod’s latest study of 2007.
- Survey/Study circulated via email on 10/29/2014 to Synod and Presbytery leadership, and postcards post-mailed on 11/4-5/2014 to all congregations.
- Invitation to all 11 Presbyteries for a conversation between presbyteries and synod executive 11/2014.
- Due date for responding to the electronic Survey/Study 1/15/2015.
- A contract staff completed a project of two phases: Brief History of the Synod and its impact on Church and Society 3/1/2015, and a Brief Review of Synod Policies, Mandates, and Expectations 6/1/2015.
- Synod Executive explored conversations and partnerships with neighboring synods as invited through their respective Executives or Councils. Invitation circulated to all neighboring Synods 3/2015.
- Second invitation to 11 Presbyteries for conversation between presbyteries and synod executive 3/2015.
- Survey/Study report and visits with councils helped shape the conversation during the Synod Assemblies, 3/18-20/2015 & 8/7-8/2015.
- Seeking consultation with Presbyteries, the Synod Executive was available for face-to-face listening and conversations with every presbytery council and other entities through 7/2015.
- Synod Executive was also available for face-to-face listening and conversations with Executive/General Presbyters through 7/2015, including EP/GP Forum 3/16-17, regarding the discernment.
- Four representatives of the Moderators’ Committee met with a delegation from Synod of the Trinity on 7/22/2015 for conversation exploring possible merger or partnerships. Both concluded to continue the conversation.
- Draft recommendation presented by Moderators’ Committee at the Synod Assembly 8/7-8/2015.
- Synod Executive is scheduled to share a progress report at the Synod Executives Forum 8/23-26/2015.
- Vote on Synod’s response during Synod Assembly 11/6-7/2015.

The following seven Presbyteries invited the Synod Executive for conversation:

Mackinac, Lake Huron, Lake Michigan, Detroit, Eastminster, Miami Valley, Muskingum Valley.

ⁱⁱ The Five Peacemaking Affirmations:

1. We affirm that peacemaking is essential to our faith in God’s reconciling work in Jesus Christ, whose love and justice challenge hatred and conflict, and whose call gives our church a mission to present alternatives to violence, fear, and misused power.
2. We confess our complicity in the world’s violence even as we pray for the Spirit’s courage to

Synod of the Covenant Report

“unmask idolatries,” to speak truth about war and oppression, to stand with those who suffer, and to respond to acts and threats of violence with ministries of justice, healing, and reconciliation.

3. We reclaim the power and authority of Jesus Christ, Prince of Peace and Reconciler, who proclaims God’s reign, who inspires the prophetic church, [by] forgiving, healing, and undoing violence, and who overcomes evil through the cross and resurrection.

4. We seek to understand the nonviolent revolutions and armed struggles of our time by drawing on the traditions of Christian pacifism, just war, just peacemaking and active nonviolence, and by cultivating moral imagination through prayer, study, and engagement with friends and enemies. Even as we actively engage in a peace discernment process, we affirm our responsibility of continuing the long tradition of support by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for our sisters and brothers who serve in the U.S. military, veterans, and their families.

5. As disciples of Jesus Christ, we commit ourselves earnestly to seek and promote loving, nonviolent responses to conflict in our daily lives, in our communities, and in our world, to risk calling our nation back from the practices of empire to the highest ideals of our heritage, and to practice boldly the things that make for peace.

Synod of Lakes and Prairies

Ministry and mission in purpose, partnership, context, call

December 2015

In early April 2015 representatives from the Synod of Lakes and Prairies met in Minneapolis with representatives from the synods of Lincoln Trails and Mid-America. Lakes and Prairies provided substantial financial support, about $15,000, to be host to the meeting.

Representatives of the three synods — which had been meeting together in a variety of formats since 2011 — met to respond to the mandate from the 221st General Assembly to reduce the number of synods “based on an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context and call.”

Using a “red light/green light” format for discussion, representatives addressed several topics, including merger.

- While the Lakes and Prairies representatives green-lighted a discussion of merger, representatives of the other synods red-lighted the conversation.

The red lights effectively ended discussion of merger. However, representatives agreed that reconfiguring boundaries, aligning missional priorities, and combining long-standing processes create obstacles that are detrimental to the shared vision of the synods’ future together.

Representatives did agree that maintaining a relationship among the synods is important. After several days of prayer, conversation and worship, those gathered discovered many things in common and much they believed that could be done better together than apart. As Lakes and Prairies Executive Elona Street-Stewart pointed out, when the synod met later in April, “While we did not get the green light for a unified reconfiguration, we did achieve clarity of interest and made significant progress in creating a focus on our missional potential.”

The representatives identified two common areas of ministry in which they could be strong and effective working together: to engage in strengthening small and rural church ministry, and to engage in issues of racism, oppression, disenfranchisement of racial ethnic communities.

Those areas of ministry led to a covenant among the three synods that calls for a commitment of the synods to work together, an effort that Street-Stewart said would “address large goals, but will not limit any other synod’s self-generative work.”

- The covenant, in which identify “an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context and call,” is an addendum to this report.

A timeline of events and activities leading to the covenant shows the development of deeper cooperation among the three synods.

- In January 2009 the Synod of Lakes and Prairies, acting on a recommendation from its steering committee, created a task force “on the future of the synod.”
- The task force convened in the summer of 2009, and presented its report at the synod’s fall meeting in 2011. Within its final report, the task force called on the synod to “take a leadership role to identify the areas where service can be shared between one or more presbyteries or between one or more synods to improve efficiency without decreasing effectiveness where it is so important to conserve resources.”
- By the synod’s spring meeting in 2012, representatives of the three synod’s had met and created the Heartland Resource Network, a somewhat loosely connected arrangement of the three synods to work together. The Synod of the Rocky Mountains initially had been a participant in the discussion, but it chose to withdraw from future conversations.
- Lakes and Prairies commissioners put funds behind Heartland Resource Network mission efforts, allocating $4,000 to support just.good.food., an initial mission project of the Network, designed to support local congregations in their efforts to grow and distribute food to those in need. The synod also provided a $5,000 grant to support “Theocademy,” a web-based training resource for deacons, ruling elders and teaching elders. Physically produced by the Synod of Mid-America, other partners included the Presbyterian seminaries of Dubuque, Louisville and McCormick, and the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation.
- At its fall 2012 meeting, the synod affirmed its participation in the Heartland Resource Network, endorsing participation in other Network planning activities.
- When the synod met in the spring of 2013 commissioners passed a resolution – submitted later as an overture supported by a number of presbyteries – calling on the 221st General Assembly “to take no action regarding the future of synods, including the elimination thereof, merger, or functions that are appropriate to synods.” The resolution noted “there appears to be widespread recognition that the needs of presbyteries and congregations across the nation vary greatly and that ‘one size does not fit all.’” And the overture noted that a “bottom up” approach would work better than a “top down” approach.
- In the fall of 2013 Lakes and Prairies engaged in prayerful discussion and study of its mission and vision for the future. The synod added an extra day to its fall assembly and invited each of its presbyteries to send extra representatives to engage in “World Café” like discussions around the future of the synod. Those discussions led to the creation of a task force that would listen to the needs of the synod’s presbyteries; provide strategies for moving forward; consider resources available to presbyteries and the synod, including money, people and congregations; and communicate with the synod’s personnel committee regarding staffing implications. The task force was directed to complete its work by the spring meeting of 2014.
- In the spring of 2014, the task force recommended the synod look “beyond the synod boundaries to establish partnerships with other synods and church groups.”

Synod of Lakes & Prairies Report

- When the synod met in the fall of 2014, commissioners reviewed the varied ministries and missions of the synod and confirmed four areas in which the work of the synod should be carried out: management, leadership, collaboration, and diversity and inclusion. The synod is now beginning to work within that framework to move forward in the areas addressed in the three-synod covenant. The work begins in earnest in 2016.

Respectfully submitted,
The Rev. Paige D. Loveall
Moderator, Synod of Lakes and Prairies

Preliminary Report from the Synod of Lincoln Trails Scouts

Since 2011, the Synods of Lincoln Trails, Lakes and Prairies, and Mid-America have been in conversation about sharing resources and ministries. While there have been conversations around the edges about the possibility of merger, no formal conversation has been had, nor decision made.

At the 221st General Assembly, meeting in Detroit in June, 2014, the following action was taken: “Direct that a new configuration of synod boundaries be established based on an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call through a collaborative process between the synods and presbyteries resulting in no more than 10-12 synods. The synods shall report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).”

In light of the General Assembly’s action, representatives from the three synods gathered in Minneapolis April 6-9 for a green light / red light conversation on merger. The Rev. Dr. Laurie Ferguson facilitated the conversation. Synod of Lincoln Trails representatives (who were approved at a recent synod assembly) were David Comstock, Sara Dingman, Karen Hahn, Susan McGhee, and John Rickard. Jennifer Burns Lewis was unable to attend, due to a family emergency.

Following a day of discussion among the three synods, the representatives met with their own synod group to discuss the green light / red light question. The next morning, it was reported that the Lakes and Prairies group favored merger, while the Mid-America and Lincoln Trails groups did not.

While the conversation did not lead to a decision to recommend merger, it did reveal a desire on the part of those gathered to collaborate on areas of mission that might best be accomplished together. A decision was made to identify initiatives and begin to formulate a plan for our work. The group chose two: small member congregations and racial ethnic diversity / white privilege.

Each synod group agreed to appoint three persons (the synod moderator, executive, and a third person of their choosing) to a team to develop a covenant to be presented to the fall meeting of each synod. The covenant will include the two initiatives, an outline for how to begin the work to achieve each, and what each synod will be asked to commit to the endeavor. Karen Hahn, Sara Dingman, and David Comstock are our representatives.

In addition, John Rickard and Susan McGhee will work together to draft our synod’s response to the General Assembly.

Further information will be available as the process continues.

Report on Mandate of the 221st General Assembly to Participate in “A Collaborative Process Between the Synods and Presbyteries Resulting in No More Than 10 – 12 Synods”

Overview

The Synod of Living Waters (SLW) is comprised of twelve presbyteries in the states of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi (plus several counties in eastern Missouri and Arkansas). One of SLW’s distinctions is that it has contiguous boundaries with seven other synods – more than any other synod in the PC(USA). For this reason, as well as the reality that at different times in history its presbyteries have been parts of synods in several geographical directions, its presbyteries have missional connections with presbyteries in a number of other synods – in some cases, connections of long standing.

SLW also has a vibrant and unifying outreach ministry, Living Waters for the World (LWW), whose mission is to bring clean, safe drinking water to those places in the world where the water is unsafe to drink. There is much undisputed evidence that safe drinking water is one of the world’s greatest health needs. Most infant and child deaths around the world can be traced to unsafe water. LWW is quickly approaching 1,000 systems installed and providing clean, safe drinking water in areas of great need around the world. As “Clean Water U” sessions run by LWW continue to train mission partners to establish connections with local churches and leaders around the world, to educate people about the importance of clean water, and to install, and maintain water systems, the ministry’s focus has recently shifted to sustainability, to ensure that a system installed this year will still be producing clean water 5, 10, even 50 years in the future.

For all of these reasons, while SLW is willing to contemplate being divided up and becoming parts of synods to its north, east, and west if doing so would somehow further or enhance the ministry and mission of the PC(USA), and provided that some place is found to sponsor the continuation of the LWW mission, SLW does not feel called to move in such a direction, and its first preference would be to retain its current boundaries and focus on continuing to strengthen its missional connections both among its own presbyteries and with its neighbors.

Process

SLW held a series of multi-day Consultations on Shared Futures (Consultations) in which all twelve of its presbyteries participated. It then directly considered input from those gatherings at its 2015 Annual Meeting, and asked its presbyteries to do the same. On the basis of that discussion, SLW authorized its Permanent Administrative Commission to act on its behalf in any further boundary negotiations, so that the presbyteries could report their findings and conclusions to that Commission.

Synod of Living Waters Report

The first consultation, held in 2013, focused primarily on evolving presbytery partnerships in the synod, including both shared program and staff. Charles Wiley, PC(USA) Coordinator, Office of Theology and Worship, addressed the participants on the first day of the Consultation regarding the history and purposes of mid-Councils in the Presbyterian and Reformed Church, after which discussion focused on what we value in our mid-Councils. On the second day, Jill Hudson, then PC(USA) Associate for Mid Council Relations delivered a presentation entitled “Trends in Mid Council Partnerships and Shared Approaches,” leading to discussions about ways in which the presbyteries in our synod are increasingly – and creatively – sharing staff and working together in a variety of ways (mission, skills training, evangelism). Some of these joint ministries are occurring as SLW “Presbytery Partnerships,” with direct synod involvement. Others are being developed on their own. And as discussed above, some of them also involve presbyteries in other synods.

While the concept of synod realignment – and at that time, the elimination of synods altogether – was considered, the participants intentionally decided to focus primarily internally among our own presbyteries. Discussions were held in both table groups and gatherings by state, as well as in plenary session.

The next consultation, in 2014, followed the 221st General Assembly, and therefore focused specifically on options for synod realignment and consolidation, as directed by that Assembly. A report from the Consultations was delivered to the 2015 Annual Meeting of SLW at which Commissioners spent time discussing the matter in table groups and plenary session. Communications from the Synod of the Sun, the Synod of Mid-Atlantic, and the Synod of the South Atlantic were also delivered to the Synod, regarding realignment possibilities as well as shared mission concerns, and several presbyteries reported on their discussions with neighboring presbyteries regarding their synod membership and boundaries.

SLW’s conclusion, as described in the “Overview” above, was that its strong preference is to retain its current boundaries, which are believed to contain enough diversity as well as a regional commonality to function well as a regional expression of the PC(USA). The Permanent Administrative Commission received no input from any of its presbyteries in objection to the Synod’s conclusion, although at least one of its presbyteries has ongoing conversations about a possible realignment at some point in the future with one of its bordering presbyteries.

Synod of Mid-America Report

Tri-Synod Boundary conversation

The synods that gather as part of the Heartland Region Network (Mid America, Lincoln Trails, and Lakes and Prairies) decided to have a conversation to be proactive about exploring the possibilities of new boundary lines. Prior to the in-person meeting, documentation from each Synod and other information were provided to each participant as a way to prepare for the conversation.

In early April five SoMA representatives convened in Minneapolis with representatives from Lincoln Trails and Lakes and Prairies for a “Green Light/Red Light” discussion. A room full of 30 faithful Presbyterians spent three days and nights worshipping, talking, praying, playing, and discerning whether or not there was benefit to formally merging the three operations into one synod. The representatives from SoMA were Mary Newberg Gale, Matthew Roberts, Jesse Swanigan, Denise Pass, and Jennifer Keim.

Many topics of conversation were addressed including:

- the scope and scale of each of our programs,
- our financial pictures,
- our demographic makeups,
- potential (rough) ideas of what the governing structure of a new synod might look like,
- how to better include Ruling Elders in the life of a synod, especially in a larger synod with more geography,
- how we might overcome the geographic expanse of a new synod,
- what kind of staffing a new synod might require

On Tuesday evening, the three synods met individually to process the day’s conversation. In our private meeting the consensus among our team was quickly framed this way: “Could we merge our operations? Sure, we could. Would doing so bring enough measureable benefit to our ability to serve our presbyteries? No, we do not think so.” The SoMA Boundary Team decided: Red Light.

Wednesday morning we shared with our partners that, while we did not wish to merge, we did see benefit to forming a strong, intentional partnership with them to accomplish some shared missional goals across boundary lines. After another day and a half of discussion, we agreed to pursue a covenant of partnership focusing on two items:

- 1) The support of presbyteries as they support small, rural congregations, and
- 2) Commitment to an initiative addressing racism and white privilege in our region.

A writing team drafted a covenant of partnership that each of the three synods reviewed and adopted at their fall Assembly meetings.

The Moderator of SoMA, Mary Newberg Gale, along with the Synod Executive and the General Assembly Report Writer, Jennifer Keim, traveled to Dallas for a conversation with other representatives from other synods. The meeting focused on learning the strengths and struggles of each synod as well as debriefing on the various conversations that each synod regarding potential merger partners.

As of today, the expense of these conversations has totaled $14,505.76 * (waiting on invoice for lodging, food, and an airline ticket) and the final expense is estimated to be between $16k-$18k. The Synod of Mid America has had some thoughtful conversations about the boundary realignments and after careful discernment decided that it is in the best interest of our partner presbyteries to maintain our current structure.

Covenant

Synod of Lakes and Prairies, Lincoln Trails, and Mid-America

Approved

September 29th, 2015 – Lakes and Prairies

October 10th – Mid-America

October 24th – Lincoln Trails

We, the Synods of Lakes and Prairies, Lincoln Trails, and Mid-America have been in conversation and discernment since January of 2012. We have joined together in fellowship on a number of occasions and have set up instances of limited programming.

We recognize the unique joy and struggle of life in the Midwest, and commit to journey together to continually discover how our regional identity plays itself out in particular ways across our ten states.

Following the 221st General Assembly's mandate for Synods to 'explore an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call', the Synods of Lakes and Prairies, Lincoln Trails, and Mid-America have engaged in the process of discernment of our continuing connection for the future. Through worship, prayer, and discussion, we could not see any benefit to our member Presbyteries in becoming a single merged synod, yet we feel a distinct call to foster and deepen our relationship through work in the areas of small and rural church ministry and racism and white privilege.

We hear our call to action reflected in our governing documents:

The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church's membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. (F-1.0403)

As councils of the church we are called to particular response by giving "full expression to the rich diversity of the church's membership and shall provide for full participation and access to representation in decision-making and employment practices. (G1-3.0103)"

Believing Christ's assurance to the gathered disciples,

“For where two or three are gathered in my name, I am there among them.” (Matt 18:20)

we recognize that the majority of the congregations in the Presbyterian Church (USA) and in our synods are small and rural congregations. Small and rural congregations provide the leadership for our governing bodies and are the front lines of community engagement in our cities and towns. Yet often the complexity and beauty of small and rural church ministry is lost in the ever increasing crush of ‘bigger’ and ‘better’ in our society and our church.

To that end, the Synods of Lakes and Prairies, Lincoln Trails, and Mid-America respond to an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call by covenanting to:

- Together, and individually, celebrate the unique joys and struggles found in small and rural church ministry in our contexts.
- Together, and individually, commit to the development, encouragement, education, and training of small and rural church leadership.
- Together, and individually, provide spaces for dialogue and education around the approaches, techniques, and resources available for small and rural church ministry in our churches and contexts.
- Together, and individually, bring the resources of the larger expression of the church to bear on the smaller expressions of the church.

It is our hope that these approaches will enable us to celebrate small and rural church ministry, deepen and sustain inclusion in our synods, and journey with our sisters and brothers as they live into the future of the church in our communities.

Trusting in God’s promises as reflected in the letter to the Galatians,

“As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus.” (Gal. 3:27–28)

we find ourselves convicted and brokenhearted by the divisions we see in our world and reflected in the church. We recognize that we are complicit in the pain and oppression of others. When Ferguson, Baltimore, Chicago, or Cleveland make the news, we are reminded that our lives are filled with smaller scale injustices and micro-aggressions. This is not happening TO others BY others. In ways large and small, consciously and unconsciously we perpetuate the systemic reality of oppression and disenfranchisement in our communities and in our nation.

To that end, the Synods of Lakes and Prairies, Lincoln Trails, and Mid-America respond to an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call by covenanting to:

- Together, and individually, confess to the benefit they have received and continue to receive through the marginalization and exploitation of people of color.
- Together, and individually, engage in providing anti-racism training to their stakeholders.

Synod of Mid-America Report

- Together, and individually, provide spaces for conversation and dialogue around the issues of white privilege and systemic racism in our church.
- Together, and individually, to stand with our sisters and brothers as they speak out against racist systems and to take action to witness to God's commandment to 'love one another as I have loved you" (John 13:34)

It is our hope that this fourfold approach (recognition, education, discussion, action) will enable us to engage privilege where it lurks, to interrupt systemic biases in structures that are being perpetrated, to join our brothers and sisters in their protest of unjust systems, and to witness to the unity and diversity of the body of Christ.

Through our work on the issues of racism and small and rural church ministry, we hope to bring the particular strengths of each synod to bear on the needs of all three synods and to continue to strengthen our work together. It is our belief that this partnership is connectionalism in action.

Background and Timeline for the Covenant

Representatives of the Synods of Lakes and Prairies, Lincoln Trails, and Mid-America met in April 2015 in Minneapolis over three days to discuss, pray, and discern our emerging sense of partnership, purpose, context, and call. At the close of that gathering, a team was established to develop an emerging covenant between the three synods around the work of small and rural church ministry and addressing racism and white privilege in our structures.

The team began work in May and continued throughout the summer to develop the proposed covenant. The covenant will be presented to each of the Synods at their fall meeting for ratification.

Synod of Lakes and Prairies gathers on September 28th- 29th 2015. Synod of Mid-America gathers on October 11th 2015. Synod of Lincoln Trails gathers on October 23rd – 24th 2015.

The three synods will address the action items of the covenant in varying configurations, as determined by the synod assemblies. It is the recommendation of the covenant team that work in earnest starting in 2016.

In presenting the covenant to the Synods for ratification, the covenant team has completed their mandate.

Synod of the Mid-Atlantic
Summary Report for the Future of Synods Conversation
December 11, 2015

OUR MOMENT:

The Synod of the Mid-Atlantic eagerly seized the opportunity to engage its presbyteries and “constituent groups” in framing our response to the 221st G.A. Overture which directed that: “a new configuration of synod boundaries be established [based on an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context and call] through a collaborative process between synods and presbyteries resulting in no more than 10-12 synods.”

In October of 2014 the Synod approved a motion inviting Synod’s Executive and Moderator in consultation with presbytery leadership to convene a “Discernment Committee” accountable to the full Synod Assembly whose work it would be to engage commissioners and presbyteries in exploring the common mission and purpose of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic. This began our period of discernment.

OUR MANDATE:

The particular mandate under which the Discernment Committee functioned was... “to recommend to the full synod Assembly a clarification and or redirection of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic’s core mission and ministries in light of actions taken by the 2014 General Assembly.”

OUR MEMORIES:

The Synod of the Mid-Atlantic is unique among the Synods of the P.C.U.S.A. as it is the largest in membership and it was the last synod to be organized. Prior to reunion, the synod encompasses within its present boundaries four former African American bodies, all Black presbyteries and one synod. They include Catawba, Cape Fear, Yadkin, and Southern Virginia; together, they were the Catawba Inter-Presbytery Agency or Catawba Synod. United Presbyterian efforts planted those member congregations in Southern States of the P.C.U.S. denomination. Because of reunion, the reassignment of these congregations to newly organized presbyteries critically reduced their visibility, leadership and, in some instances, jeopardized their viability. This feature of our history informs our culture as a synod ever learning to recognize our diversity as our strength.

OUR MEMBERSHIP:

Fourteen presbyteries encompassing North Carolina, the vast majority of Virginia, a small piece of West Virginia, all of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia make up the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic. The Atlantic Korean American Presbytery (AKAP) is a non-geographical presbytery within our bounds. The geographical features of our Synod define us only in part for

Report of Synod Committee
Exhibit C

Synod of the Mid-Atlantic Report

we are an intensely multi-cultural body as well. As many as six culturally defined constituency groups have been active in the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic. These include: Women of Color, Presbyterian Women, Presbyterian Men, Latino Caucus, Korean Caucus and the Black Caucus.

OUR METHOD:

The Discernment Team understood that our task would eventually require us to make recommendations regarding our geographical/administrative boundaries. However the energy and enthusiasm for the work focused early on discussions of mission and how boundaries affected the ability of presbyteries to collaborate on mutual projects. The design for engaging the presbyteries and groups was three fold.

- A first conversation was held with Commissioners at “table top” discussions with guided questions to help the Discernment Team capture the sentiments and concerns of those duly elected presbytery leaders.
- A second task was to conduct interviews with the nine identified constituency groups inclusive of those mentioned in the “Membership” paragraph and in addition; Stated Clerks, Presbytery Executives and the Board of Massanetta Springs Conference Center.
- The third piece was a survey composed and placed online for members of the Councils of each presbytery.

The results and anecdotal comments were studied, collated and drafted into a report for Synod’s Assembly in September of this year.

OUR MUSINGS:

- Above all else community and relationships are valued. The greatest resistance to merging with another synod is fear of losing the sense of community treasured primarily by our constituency groups.
- The relational vitality of the church is not enhanced by increasing the size of our councils.
- There is widespread appreciation for synod as a funding entity and anxiety among many presbyteries that if not “checked” the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic would return to a programmatic body requiring increased funding.
- The survey indicated that the top concerns and priorities of presbyteries were reversing the decline in stewardship, membership and discipleship.
- Minority, immigrant and racial-ethnic groups continue to struggle for visibility and viability.
- There was low interest among presbyteries to participate in new efforts to discuss boundaries.

OUR MOTIONS:

The Discernment Committee developed seven distinct recommendations, which were reported to and approved by the September Synod Assembly. Among these the following three recommendations address specifically the G.A. Overture and the “Mandate” from the Synod seeking greater clarity on our mission and our interest in further conversations on amending the boundaries of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic.

Report of Synods Committee

1. Recommendation, in response to the mandate from Synod and General Assembly Overture, there should be no change in the administrative boundary of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic.
2. Recommendation, The Synod of the Mid-Atlantic should continue conversations with other synods on specific mission/program partnerships.
3. Recommendation, to host a gathering for education, information sharing, fellowship and community building in the model of the “Big Tent”.

See, I am doing a new thing! Now it springs up, do you not perceive it? I am making a way in the desert and streams in the wasteland. ~ ISAIAH 43:19

The Synod of the Northeast has been engaged in a season of reflection and discernment well before the actions of the actions of the 221st General Assembly (05-04). Since this action, the 2014 Assembly of the Synod of the Northeast unanimously adopted the following response:

For more than four years our Synod's leadership and its assemblies have been following and attempting to respond to the work of both Middle Governing Commissions of the General Assembly (MCCI and MCCII). Over the past three years, we have engaged in a deep season of reflection upon our purpose and function, as well as considering our geographic and other parameters that define us as a synod. We have spent significant time and energy in listening among our presbyteries with full transparency.

Therefore, in response to the 221st General Assembly action on item 05-04, we recommend that the 2014 Assembly of the Synod of the Northeast establish the following three principles of how we will respond to this action of the General Assembly and instruct our officers to work on our behalf in this matter according to these principles.

Our strategic mission, ministry and governance plan outlined in the New Way Forward must remain the guiding principles for how we live together as a regional body of presbyteries. This plan has been overwhelmingly adopted and celebrated throughout our Synod community for two consecutive years. In the actions of our annual assembly it both directs how we choose to exercise our governance responsibilities and how we will direct our mission and ministry. It more importantly establishes essential values in how we live together in community and clearly articulates our purpose as a missional body.

The values established in the New Way Forward call us to act in ways that are fully hospitable and gracious. This includes our relationship with neighboring presbyteries and synods. We therefore make a full and deep commitment to encourage our member presbyteries who share borders with other presbyteries, both within our current Synod boundaries and those within neighboring Synods to engage in mutual conversation to explore ways in which they might re-align in order to more effectively engage in mission. We will support this work providing both staff and financial resources as needed by the presbyteries. We commit to graciously support those presbyteries that wish to become members of our neighboring synods. We will fully welcome those neighboring presbyteries from other synods into our synod community offering them full access to the support and resources of our Synod as established in the New Way Forward.

We will fully commit to establishing more porous boundaries with our neighboring synods in order mutually to share good work and mission opportunities wherever possible. Living out our values of gracious hospitality we are eager to encourage partnership with all our neighbors both within the PCUSA as well as our ecumenical and interfaith partners. We will (and have already begun to) intentionally reach out to our neighboring synods and their presbyteries.

By acting in accordance with these three simple guidelines, we believe we will remain faithful to our commitment to living into our New Way Forward and fulfill our commitment to the mandate of the General Assembly.

In an effort to faithfully carry out the above actions of the Synod's Mission and Ministry Commission and its Leadership have held exploratory meetings with potential partners in the Synods of the Trinity, Mid-Atlantics and Boriquén. In all three cases we have established a strong cooperative spirit and the outlining of potential partnerships. These initiatives have been hopeful and gracious in what has otherwise seemed to be an unproductive top down mandate.

It is essential to understand both the size and geography of the Synod of the Northeast. Encompassing the region of New England, New York and New Jersey the Synod sits in a corner of the United States. Our only open borders are with The Synods of the Trinity and Mid-Atlantics that are both of equal size or larger. The Synod of the Northeast consists of 22 presbyteries, 1130 congregations and 180,000 members. To add even a portion of a neighboring Synod would create a new synod of disproportionate size. Further, in analysis of the cultures of the Synod of the Trinity and Mid-Atlantics reveals we have three very distinct cultures that would not easily be blended. Finally, the Synod of the Northeast would determine that any action on its part or on the part of the General Assembly to change these boundaries to be harmful to current positive changes in all three Synods.

New relationships and future partnerships for our Synods will need to emerge organically and are already beginning. Our relationship with the Synod of Boriquén is growing and holds great promise. The Synod of Boriquén originated out of the former Synod of New York and continues to share strong relationships between the members of both Synods. Our Leadership Team recently participated in a week of reflection upon the mission and theology with the leaders of the Synod of Boriquén and its presbyteries. We had the opportunity to share our New Way Forward with members of the Synod of Boriquén, including three days of theological and cultural reflection with members of the faculty at the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico. New partnerships and resourcing have begun including the sharing of staff resources. We believe this sort of partnership is far more productive than simply re-configuring boundaries.

Following this new model of cultivating organic partnerships, the Synod of the Northeast recently convened its first Moderator's conference at which presbytery moderators and other leaders gathered to share best missional practices and challenges. Many new partnership opportunities were initiated at this convention. It is clear that future conventions will move our presbyteries into more productive partnerships and perhaps mergers and realignment all derived from the ground up rather than through forced consolidation.

Report of the Synod of the Pacific To the 222nd General Assembly In Response to Item 221.05-04.1 on Synod Boundaries

The directive of the 221st General Assembly (2014) in item 221.05-04.1 is as follows:

“Direct that a new configuration of synod boundaries be established [based on an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call] through a collaborative process between the synods and presbyteries resulting in no more than 10–12 synods. The synods shall report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).”

The Synod of the Pacific (the synod) has vigorously conducted a thorough, in-depth and open-minded series of consultations with its eleven presbyteries and the four other synods with which it shares geographic borders focused on the issue of realignment of synod borders.

At its October, 2014 assembly, the synod repurposed a task force previously elected to evaluate the future of the Synod of the Pacific. The task force’s new charge was specifically to respond to the action of the 221st General Assembly to undertake consultations with its presbyteries and other synods on the realignment of synod borders and to report to both the synod assembly and the 222nd General Assembly.

The full task force met face-to-face five times - including a meeting with the executives of the synod’s presbyteries - and twice by teleconference. Sub-groups of the task force (i.e. the listening group and staff) met separately four times with the executives and stated clerks of the presbyteries and with representatives from the other synods in the Western United States. The Synod of the Pacific hosted meetings with the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii, the Synod of the Rocky Mountains and the Synod of the Southwest, with the Synod of the Pacific bearing the cost of meal and lodging for the visitors. The financial cost to the Synod for the work of the Task Force as of August 13, 2015 was $47,744 and rising. Also, The Synod’s Transitional staff members (Executive and Stated Clerk) leveraged their own travel budgets by using travel for other purposes as opportunities to have informal conversations with staff from other Synods.

Summary of the work of the task force of the Synod of the Pacific:

- The Synod of the Pacific anticipated the report of the second GA Mid-Council Commission, and organized a visioning task force before that report was issued to the 221st General Assembly.
- The synod task force and/or its staff met at least three times with representatives from its presbyteries, to discern the needs of the presbyteries and their constituent churches, and to elicit the opinions and conclusions of presbytery leaders on the issues involved in realigning the borders of the synod in which they reside.
- The task force and/or its staff met with representatives from the other contiguous synods

Report of Synod Committee

21

Synod of the Pacific Report

to determine areas of common mission and to assess the potential costs and benefits that realignment or merger of the synods would likely bring about.

- The task force expended enormous amounts of financial and human resources to organize, conduct and attend these consultation, and carefully considered numerous scenarios of synod merger and border realignment.

What we have learned:

- We have learned that there are areas of ministry and mission which the Synod of the Pacific can and should participate in cooperation with other synods in the Western United States. However, we have also learned that the Synod of the Pacific is unique – at least in the West – in being a synod which generates funding for our presbyteries. Every year the Synod of the Pacific's savings and loan program generates an average of over $800,000 which divided into equal amounts and paid to each of its eleven presbyteries.
- We have learned that consultation with other synods strengthens the bonds between staff and commissioners of the Synod of the Pacific with the staff and commissioners of the other contiguous synods.
- We take note that the Synod of the Pacific has already developed services to its presbyteries (such as its personnel service, its insurance program and bookkeeping service) which can be promoted for development in other synods.
- We have learned that although three of the four synods contiguous to the Synod of the Pacific all do successful mission of various kinds from which we can learn, the Synod of the Pacific is by far the most successful synod in the West in fulfilling the Constitutional responsibility of synods to support the ministry and mission of our presbyteries.
- We have learned that expanding our borders to include one or more additional synods threatens to dangerously dilute the financial support the synod could provide from its savings and loan program to each of its existing presbyteries.
- We have learned that there would be extravagant legal costs involved in securing the assets of the synod in the case of a merger, e.g., preserving the income from savings and loan program for the benefit of our current eleven presbyteries; for ensuring continued PC(USA) ownership of the Zephyr Point Conference Center; and for transferring bequests and designated funds held by the synod.
- We have learned that our savings and loan program, by being confined to the current area of the Synod of the Pacific, operates with a pastoral and personal touch which provides churches taking out loans with flexibility that cannot be easily scaled upward.
- Finally, our presbyteries unanimously tell us that the financial resources the Synod of the Pacific generates from its savings and loan program and returns to its presbyteries must not be diluted. The mission of each and every presbytery in the Synod of the Pacific is underwritten in significant part by this income, and the very survival of several of our presbyteries and their support of the constituent churches within them depends on the continued high level of this financial support.

What we have concluded:

- The risk to the presbyteries of the Synod of the Pacific of reduction or loss of the financial support provided by their full participation in the important but limited resources of our savings and loan program is great if the Synod of the Pacific merges with one or more other synods. Spinning the program into a separate corporation is possible, but entails risk in loss of flexibility in its ability to serve particular situations. Any merger also raises the possibility of loss of presbytery management and benefit of the saving and loan program.

Synod of the Pacific Report

- While we remain committed to the GA mandate insofar as continuing to develop efficient collaboration with neighboring synods, we have already spent a considerable amount of the Synod's limited resources and our mission has suffered as a result. We cannot afford to divert mission resources to the expensive project of synod realignment.
- And, we believe that in order to preserve the mission of the Synod of the Pacific to our presbyteries and best further the mission of the church, the Synod of the Pacific must stay within its present bounds.

Synod of the Rocky Mountains Synod Merger Conversations

The Synod of the Rocky Mountains has been considering the future of our Synod for quite some time. After consultations with our 8 Presbyteries, we have been considering what our Synod can do to follow our mission to resource and support the work of the presbyteries. SRM is not an administrative entity: each presbytery and church in our bounds moves from the “bottom” up to access resources. Because of our size, travel and our meetings take an inordinate amount of time. To address this issue, we have been seeking new ways of communicating and providing resources. Many of our presbyteries no longer have full time executive staff. We have to rely on ourselves. Because of this we are not always connected to the Synod and many prefer to work from the church level up to the presbytery. Because of this ethic, the Synod has been moving toward a reduced function model for the past several years. We have divested ourselves of most programs and have been spending down assets to provide continuing economic support to the presbyteries. We have reduced the number of board members and staff. Other than providing monetary resources for our Presbyteries, our main mission event is the Western National Leadership Conference.

Process

We have explored the possibility of joining with other synods/presbyteries before so this was not a new idea. Because of the distance we might have to travel this has not been deemed feasible. Our Synod Executive, David Ezekiel, has kept us informed about conversations that have been happening at the national level. After the action taken by the 221st General Assembly, we decided to meet with as many of the western synods as possible to consider what form this might take. After contacting all the other synods, we met with the Synod of the Pacific and with the Synod of the Southwest to talk about mission and ministry together in response to the mandate. We noted that we already do mission across Synod boundaries; but that merger would do little to enlarge that opportunity.

We met with the Synod of the Pacific twice: once in Denver and once in San Francisco. On April 28/29, 2015 SOP members Clover Bailey (TE), John Kelso (TE) Jane Odell (RE), Andy Rausch (TE), Jim Rogers (RE) met with SRM members Joanne Dobie (TE and Synod Moderator), David Ezekiel (TE and part time Executive), Ron Hanson (RE), Michael Rogers (RE) Lynn Smit (RE and Clerk)), Laura Stellmon (TE) and Adrian Washington (TE). After a time of sharing about we considered what each would bring to a merger. The conversation was positive but we concluded that we would not be having this particular discussion if it were not mandated by GA.

We continued our conversations in San Francisco on July 19/20, 2015.

Again, we celebrated our compatibility but did not sense an urgency to continue the conversations mainly because of our different governing styles and programs. The distance to be covered by such a merger was a definite negative to our ability to do so.

On June 19 and 20, 2015 we met with the Synod of the Southwest. In attendance were Maribeth Culpeper (moderator, Larry Loy (Stated Clerk), Brad Munroe (Presbytery Pastor Grand Canyon and de Cristo), Conrad Rocha (Synod Exec. /Stated Clerk) and Sallie Watson (Executive Presbyter/ Stated Clerk (Santa Fe Presbytery. SRM was represented by Ron Anderson (Executive Presbyter, Pueblo Presbytery), Sharon Celey (RE, Plains and Peaks Pby.), Joanne Dobie (TE/Synod Moderator), David Ezekiel (Transitional Synod Executive, Ron Hanson (RE Stated Clerk, Yellowstone Pby.), Lynn Smit (RE/Stated Clerk, Plains and Peaks Pby. and Synod), and Adrian Washington (TE, Pueblo Presbytery.

Synod of the Pacific Report

Again, sharing our programs and mission emphases was a positive aspect of our conversations however, it was clear that a merger was not to be forthcoming with SSW and SRM. Additionally, all of the presbyteries in the SSW are supporting an effort to rescind the GA mandate regarding synod merger.

A meeting with all 5 western synods was tentatively scheduled, but did not take place.

Expense

The costs of our meetings were hosting SOP and SSW meetings, room and board and meeting rooms. Each Synod shared in the costs associated with the meetings that consisted of air fare and mileage and other related expenses. The expense of these meetings was $10,872 and an approximate cost of $2000 for Synod Moderators conference and additionally, did not include the amount of “person-hours”, telephone calls and time worked factors associated with these meetings. There were also related costs for the Synod Executive’s meetings with other Synod Executives

Conclusion

Although our meetings were informative and were positive about what mission and ministry we could do together, the conclusion was reached independently and together that merger was neither feasible nor expedient at this time and would have diminished our ability to function with our independent programs. Other factors that we have to consider are the distances we already travel to meet together and the lack of a positive groundswell movement to make this happen. We know that we would need approval of all of our presbyteries and the movement to merge would need to come from them and not from an imposed structure.

SUBJECT: A New Configuration of Synod Boundaries

Dear Rev. Gradye Parsons,

Greetings in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ!

The 221st General Assembly (2014) directed an action to the Synods that a new configuration of synod boundaries be established [based on an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call] through a collaborative process between the synods and presbyteries resulting in no more than 10-12 synods], (Item 05-04), and report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Thus, the purpose of this letter is to report the result of the Synod of South Atlantic's collaborative process with its Presbyteries and neighboring Synods for the subject matter to the 222nd General Assembly (2016):

Initiation:

- The Synod of South Atlantic invited a member from Mid-Council Commission II, Rev. Liza Hendricks, to our 28th Synod Stated Meeting (September 18-19, 2014) to give us a presentation of the Mid-Council Commission II's perspective on the subject matter. A question-and-answer session followed the presentation.
- All participants of the 28th Synod Stated Meeting were given a copy of the 221st General Assembly's directive, Synod year-end (2013) statistics, and a proposed timeline for the process.
- At the 28th Synod Stated Meeting, a Synod Boundary Consultation Team (SBCT) was created to lead the process, adopted a question to ask the Presbyteries, along with instructions, and approved the processing timeline.

Report of Synod Committee
Exhibit C

26

222nd General Assembly (2016)

- A letter was sent out to all 16 Presbyteries on October 2, 2014.

Collaboration with Presbyteries:

- A member of the Synod Boundary Consultation Team (SBCT) was assigned to each state cluster (Florida, Georgia, South Carolina) to assist the Presbyteries' process.
- Responses from the Presbyteries were collected by the Synod Boundary Consultation Team (SBCT) in mid-March 2015.
- The Synod Boundary Consultation Team (SBCT) reviewed the Presbyteries' responses and reported the result to the Synod Executive Administrative Commission for further coordination and actions.
- The Synod Executive Administrative Commission directed the Synod Boundary Consultation Team (SBCT) to assist Florida Presbytery and Cherokee Presbytery, if they ever go to a possible reconfiguration of their Presbyteries.

Conversations with Neighboring Synods:

The leadership (Synod moderators, Task Force team leaders, or designated members) of the Synod of South Atlantic, Synod of Living Waters, and Synod of Mid-Atlantic met during the 15 Synods' Leadership Meeting (Dallas, TX, Nov 30-Dec 1, 2015) to discuss the possibility of reducing the number of Synods in our region. The conclusion was that no Synod among the three neighboring Synods desires to merge with one another, or to draw a new configuration of Synod boundaries to reduce the number of Synods in our region. This discussion was based upon each Synod's collaborative process with their Presbyteries.

Report to the 222nd General Assembly:

At the Synod's 29th Stated Meeting (September 18-19, 2015), the following statements were approved to be sent to the 222nd General Assembly (2016):

- Presbyteries in the Synod of South Atlantic responded that with all things in consideration, there is no need to change the Synod boundary, especially to reduce the number of Synods in our region. However, there is some thinking about a possible reconfiguration of Presbytery boundaries with neighboring Synod's Presbyteries, which will result in a portion of the Synod boundaries changing, without necessarily reducing the number of Synods.
- Presbyteries in the Synod of South Atlantic responded that we are functioning well in terms of mission, partnership, historical and cultural context, and emerging sense of purpose and call. Any change from the current Synod boundary would not improve the purpose of our existence in the region.
- The Synod of South Atlantic is already large enough to be one of the proposed 10-12 Synods (2014 year-end statistics shows that the Synod has a membership of 206,108, and has 895 congregations). Therefore, merging with other Synods that will make the

Synod of South Atlantic Report

Synod even bigger, or reducing the current size of the Synod without reducing the number of Synods, would not make sense in terms of meeting the goals of the 221st General Assembly's directive action (Item 05-04).

Future of Synods Conversation

Background

In June of 2014 the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved this action:

Direct that a new configuration of synod boundaries be established [based on an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call] through a collaborative process between the synods and presbyteries resulting in no more than 10-12 synods. The synods shall report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

Before this action was taken, in January of 2014, the Synod Executive called together leaders from the eight (later seven) presbyteries in the Synod to consider possibilities for the future of the presbyteries and the synod, given diminishing members, staff, and finances in the midst of losing many congregations to other Reformed bodies. (The Synod by the end of 2015 will have lost about 25% of its churches and members; Los Ranchos Presbytery's losses are closer to half of its members.) This group met twice but took no official action. There was a consensus that something must be done at the presbytery level in light of the changing conditions. Since then, some presbyteries have informally agreed to work together on various ministries, are sharing staff members, and are working across boundaries on a variety of mission endeavors. There is minimal talk of merging, but there is much excitement about working together.

Following the General Assembly action in June of 2014, the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii was focused on the gargantuan task of dissolving Hanmi Presbytery and moving its twenty member churches and 65 pastor members into the geographic presbytery where they were located. This work has consumed much of our time and attention and the person-power of more than 40 people serving on the teams that assisted in this undertaking.

Process

Eventually, the Synod put together a team representing our seven presbyteries to look into the possibilities of merger with another synod. In January 2015, the team flew to San Jose for an overnight meeting with a group from the Synod of the Pacific, at its invitation. This conversation was amicable and educational, as we learned how each synod operates, what we have in common and how we differ. There appear to be a number of areas in which we could do ministry together. We agreed to be open to future conversations together.

In June of 2015, the same group of people from Southern California and Hawaii met in Orange County with a group from the Synod of the Southwest, at our invitation. Again, the team found much in common, some not so much, and an agreement to continue the conversation if warranted. In neither of the above meetings was there particular enthusiasm (nor animosity) about merging. Both of these meetings and their results were shared with the Synod Assembly.

People

The team representing the Synod of Southern California and Hawaii in this task consisted of: Maurice Caskey (RE, San Diego, Synod Vice-Moderator), Leon Fanniel (TE, Pacific, long history with Synod), Bill Hughes (RE, Santa Barbara, Synod Treasurer), Kristin Leucht (TE, San Fernando, Synod Moderator), Doska Ross (RE, Synod Stated Clerk), Jim Shepard (RE, Riverside, Trustee), Jo Smith (RE, Los Ranchos, Synod Trustees Moderator), Wendy Tajima (TE, San Gabriel, Executive Presbyter and Synod Trustee).

Expense

As of October 31, 2015, the Synod has spent nearly $5000 on the first two consultations. The final gathering of all the synods on November 30-December 1 will probably add another $2000 or so to these figures, totaling approximately $7000 spent on the consultations. Additional costs may be forthcoming if people attend General Assembly in Portland to testify before the committee.

Conclusions

This process has been interesting and educational. We, your Synod representatives, were open to whatever we might discover or uncover. Our conclusions are: (i) there is no practical way to merge entire synods given the geographic distances involved; and (ii) there is neither energy nor desire to move forward with a merger of any kind at this point. We have learned, thanks to the process described in the first paragraph, that changes envisioned by the directive from the General Assembly are best accomplished if they arise organically from the various groups and are not imposed upon them from above. At some point in the future this synod might realign itself with another synod, or more than one, because it actually makes sense to do so, not because we are being forced to do so. It is our belief at this time that the synod boundaries in the Western reaches of the United States should remain as they are.

RESPONSE TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY REGARDING REALIGNMENT OF SYNOD BOUNDARIES

Executive Summary

November 24, 2015

The Synod of the Southwest (the “Synod”) has taken very seriously the mandate of the 221st General Assembly (2014) which directed that “a new configuration of synod boundaries be established [based on an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call] through a collaborative process between the synods and presbyteries resulting in no more than 10-12 synods...[and that the synods] report to the 222nd General Assembly (2016)” the results of that collaborative process. The Synod of the Southwest has engaged in that collaborative process and, as a result, recommends that its boundaries not be reconfigured.

This process has been done prayerfully and with great thought and consideration. In fact the Synod began this process in 2011, as the Synod considered its work, ministry and relevance in serving our Presbyteries and their congregations. This was accomplished through the creation of the Review/Visioning for the Future Task Force (the “RVFTF”) that was established in June, 2011. Its final report was unanimously adopted by the Synod’s commissioners at the Synod Assembly in October 2013. Thus, by the time the 221st General Assembly had issued its decision in response to Mid Council Commission II’s report (General Assembly Item 05-04), the Synod was well on its way to being prepared to engage in discussions with its neighboring synods regarding the realignment of synod boundaries.

Following the 221st General Assembly, the Synod of the Southwest transmitted to each of its presbyteries a suggested process for gathering information from its commissioners and others in those presbyteries regarding the realignment of the synods. The Presbyteries responded to this request in the following manner:

Presbytery de Cristo — Decided that the Synod remain a single, stand alone, synod consisting of its current, four presbyteries.

Presbytery of Grand Canyon — Decided that the Synod remain intact, as a viable, single entity synod.

Presbytery of Santa Fe — Responded to the question by submitting an overture to the 222nd General Assembly, asking for rescission of the 221st General Assembly’s action.

Presbytery of Sierra Blanca — D not consider the question of the re-alignment of synods, believing it was not of sufficient import for it to undertake the discussion.

Synod of Southwest Report

Responding to MCCII's request that the Synods engage in conversations in consultation with their presbyteries, and the vision of MCCII's report as "[a] church with mid councils that engage in conversations about collaborating, partnering, and networking, as they define their purpose and the best way to live out a new identity," the Synod engaged in conversations with the following synods in the western part of the country with which the Synod has contiguous boundaries:

- Synod of Southern California & Hawaii
- Synod of the Pacific
- Synod of the Rocky Mountains

In addition, the Synod through its elected leaders engaged in conversation with the Synod of Alaska-Northwest, though we have no common borders, because we recognized that like the Synod we each have large Native American Presbyterian populations within our borders.

No conversation was held with the Synod of the Sun, with the understanding that to become a part of that synod, which is already large geographically and numerically, would not serve the component parts of the Synod and the Synod itself well as it seeks to serve God and God's people in this part of God's world.

The Synod at its March, 2015 meeting also engaged its commissioners and others present to discuss the ramifications, benefits and detriments to realigning its borders such that the Synod would cease to exist as currently configured. The overwhelming response was really a question: "Why are we doing this and how would that enhance the mission and ministry of the congregations and presbyteries of the Synod?" The answer to the question seemed to be that there was no good reason to do this based on the Synod's emergent and emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call.

A similar conclusion was reached in each of the conversations with the other Synods noted above. Nonetheless, the result of those conversations serves to remind us that we are all part of one body and that, regardless of borders established to create the synods as they currently exist, there is much that we can learn from one another and mission and ministry that we could do together. We learned to appreciate and understand the principle raised by MCCII that we, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must be "a church with mid councils engage[d] in conversations about collaborating, partnering, and networking, as they define their purpose and the best way to live out a new identity."

In those conversations with the leaders of the other synods we recognized that there was much we could, and do, do in collaboration with one another and with other synods with whom we do not share common borders and as partners, but given our cultural and structural differences, reconfiguring synod boundaries will not enhance, clarify or promote our mission and ministry. Therefore, the Synod, after careful consideration of the directive of the 221st General Assembly, recommends to the 222nd General Assembly that the boundaries of the Synod of the Southwest not be reconfigured.

Report to the Coordinating Team

At its meeting in October, 2014, the Synod of the Sun approved this:

PROPOSED SYNOD CONSULTATION PROCESS

1. Synod level discussion will begin at the synod stated meeting in October by having one hour presentation and discussion. - DONE
2. An MCC II member will be invited to give us a 30 minute presentation on the GA mandate directive (especially language used on the mandate) for clarification and to describe the rationales MCC II had. - DONE
3. Synod Coordinating Team leads next 30 minute discussion with the Synod to explain how we plan to proceed. The MCC II member will not be involved in this discussion but simply observes. - DONE
4. The Synod will elect a Synod Boundary Consultation Task Force to facilitate the process Synod of the Sun Boundary Consultation Task Force is to be comprised of five (5) people (representing each state, with one at-large) for easy mobility and logistics with balance for M/F, RE/TE, and at least 2 racial-ethnic members. Resourced by one EP/GP and one or both Co-leaders. - DONE
5. Soon after the Synod stated meeting, Valerie will send a letter to the EP of each presbytery to explain the process and will ask them to provide responses to the designated member of the Boundary Consultation Task Force - DONE
6. The letter will ask: (a) Guided by the mission, history, and culture of your presbytery and the synod, what changes (if any) to our synod boundaries would you recommend? Why or why not? (b) What other recommendations regarding presbytery and/or synod structures, boundaries, or relationships arise from the context and perspective of your own presbytery? Is there any other request for the synod to consider regarding presbytery and/or synod boundaries? Each presbytery may conduct its own discussion in any form it chooses. Resource persons will be available: (a) an MCC2 member avail by phone for clarification of GA mandate and requirement, (b) Synod Boundary Consultation Task Force member available for further clarification of the synod process, and (c) either or both Synod co-leaders are available in person (if requested) to be a resource person or to facilitate the presbytery discussion. Presbytery must report its responses/recommendations to the Synod through the designated Boundary Consultation Task Force member by the deadline. - DONE
7. Boundary Consultation Task Force will consolidate the result from the presbyteries and report to the Synod Coordinating Team in March 2015.
8. Boundary Consultation Task Force will coordinate with neighboring synods, if any of presbyteries request contain such desire AND are so instructed by the Synod Coordinating Team.
9. Boundary Consultation Task Force reports the all results to the Fall 2015 Synod stated meeting along with any consensus report from other synods (Oct 2015)
10. Synod Coordinating Team further coordinates or adjusts the result according to the 2015 Synod assembly instruction.
11. Synod Coordinating Team submits joint or solo synod report to 222nd General Assembly by deadline.

Synod of the Sun Report

With this consultation process in place, the number of task force members was increased to six to allow for another person from west Texas. The task Force members, along with the presbyteries of assignment, are: RE Christianne Chase (Cimarron, Indian Nations), TE Dari Rowan (Arkansas, Eastern Oklahoma), RE Judia Foreman (Tres Rios, Palo Duro), TE Jim Freeman (Pines, South Louisiana), RE Ruth Roman-Meza (Grace), TE Lemuel Garcia-Arroyo (New Covenant, Mission). TE Joe Hill, general presbyter of the Presbytery of the Pines was named at EP/GP resource person.

Synod co-leader Dan Saperstein prepared some guidelines for conducting the presbytery consultation and co-leader Valerie Young distributed letters of introduction to all of the presbyteries.

We have come to the end of this process now. I've attached copies of all the written reports received from the presbyteries. In the chart below, I've compiled answers that I received from both written and verbal responses.

There is no consensus resulting from the consultations. I will attempt to summarize a bit here but will attach all the responses to your information.

Question 1

Guided by the mission, history, and culture of your presbytery and the synod, what changes (if any) to our synod boundaries would you recommend? Why or why not?

Arkansas:	perhaps add all/part of Synod of Mid America and/or Synod of the Southwest
Cimmaron:	no change
Eastern Oklahoma:	no change
Grace:	no change
Indian Nations:	no change
Mission:	no change
New Covenant:	perhaps add all/part of Synod of Mid America and/or Synod of the Southwest
Palo Duro:	perhaps add all/part of Synod of Mid America and/or Synod of the Southwest (Sierra Blanca) and shift Arkansas, Pines and South Louisiana to current Synod of Living Waters
Pines:	no change
Tres Rios:	add presbyteries in New Mexico and Arizona and possibly shift Arkansas, Pines and South Louisiana to current Synod of Living Waters
South Louisiana:	no change

(b) What other recommendations regarding presbytery and/or synod structures, boundaries, or relationships arise from the context and perspective of your own presbytery? Is there any other request for the synod to consider regarding presbytery and/or synod boundaries?

Arkansas:	no presbytery boundary change
Cimmaron:	no presbytery boundary change

Synod of the Sun Report

Eastern Oklahoma: no presbytery boundary change
Grace: no presbytery boundary change
Indian Nations: no presbytery boundary change
Mission: no presbytery boundary change
New Covenant: no presbytery boundary change
Palo Duro: no presbytery boundary change
Pines: no presbytery boundary change
Tres Rios: no presbytery boundary change
South Louisiana: no presbytery boundary change

However, one consistent theme is almost all reports was the desire and hope to be more culturally sensitive/identified and that that cultural sensitivity/identification might certainly extend across physical boundaries. For example, both New Covenant and Palo Duro mentioned extending synod boundaries to include a variety of Native American populated presbyteries, Pueblo Presbytery or presbyteries that share a common border with Mexico.

It is important to read all the reports and get a sense of their depth and variety.

Respectfully submitted,

Joe Hill

REPORT TO THE SYNOD OF THE TRINITY – FALL 2015
MID-COUNCIL TASK GROUP ON GENERAL ASSEMBLY DECISION 05-04
(ON A NEW CONFIGURATION OF SYNOD BOUNDARIES)

Preface:

The Synod of the Trinity (the “Synod”) has prayerfully and thoughtfully undergone a process to discern how to respond to the 221st General Assembly (2014) decision 05-04, which directed that: “a new configuration of synod boundaries be established [based on an emerging sense of purpose, partnership, context, and call] through a collaborative process between the synods and presbyteries resulting in no more than 10-12 synods.”

We have been working for the last two years to create an environment of cooperation within the Synod and among our 16 member presbyteries. We have cooperatively defined what we believe the Synod should be and do, and as a result, we have defined aspirational goals (which we call our “Ends”) for working not just within the bounds of our Synod, but also as the Church at large.

As a result of this work, and in light of the General Assembly’s action, the Synod of the Trinity established a Task Group comprised of ten leaders from around the Synod. This Task Group was asked to:

- 1) Listen deeply to our Synod Commissioners and the leaders of our member presbyteries to understand how they use Synod resources; how they cooperate with one another in ministry and mission; how they are affected by existing presbytery and synod boundaries; and what benefits and drawbacks would be experienced by redrawing presbytery and/or synod boundaries. We also asked them to share whatever additional thoughts about this subject they felt were important to their experience.
- 2) Synthesize the responses to develop a recommendation to the Synod and to the Transitional Synod Executive as she works with other synod executives around the PCUSA to determine how best to respond to GA decision 05-04.

Process and timeline:

The Task Group was convened in December 2014, and met together in January 2015 to determine how to undertake the work. At that meeting, it was decided that the group would focus on the purpose, partnership, context and call aspects of the mandate, and focus on listening to see if there were opportunities that might lead to mergers within existing presbyteries, of presbyteries across existing synod boundaries, or among synods themselves.

The Task Group agreed that each member would work with two or three presbyteries, meeting with the respective presbytery executive and their executive councils in whatever configuration made sense for the presbytery. During the ensuing months, the Task Group members met with the presbytery leaders [in 14 of the 16 presbyteries] to gather feedback.

There was additional discussion with Synod Commissioners at the March and June 2015 Synod Assembly meetings and with the Synod Executive Advisory Team in May 2015. Further meetings were held with commissioners and with the Synod's Executive Forum (comprised of the Synod's executive presbyters), and with Warren Cooper, a member of our Synod who was a member of both the 1st and 2nd Mid-Council Task Groups of the General Assembly.

Additionally, during this time period the Synod of the Trinity's leaders held conversations with our neighbor, the Synod of the Covenant, to discuss areas for mutual ministry, including intercultural ministry and human trafficking. The Synod Executive also met with the Executives of the Synod of the Northeast and the Synod of the MidAtlantic. We look forward to future conversation and partnership with them to understand what we have in common in mission and ministry to determine how best to work collaboratively in the interests of the Church.

Feedback:

While it is not the intention to reiterate all the feedback the Task Group and executive leadership team have received, several themes emerged:

1. All of the Synod's member presbyteries use Synod resources to some extent. The presbyteries appreciate the synod's grant-making abilities, although they are used to different extents in different places, and are perhaps are not as widely known as we would like. Presbyteries also appreciate the support and general helpfulness of the Synod staff.
2. The most frequently mentioned inter-presbytery ministries related to camp and conference ministry and mission partnerships. There was also a general sense that continuing education is a shared ministry that can benefit from increased Synod resources; and an appreciation for the Synod's ability to gather people together for shared COM/CPM training, the Executive Presbyter Forum, and for things such as PJC and stated clerk training. Several mentioned that they miss "Synod School," our former annual summer education event for presbyteries and congregations in the synod.
3. The presbyteries do not generally see geographic boundaries as limitations to their ministry. When it makes sense, churches within and across presbyteries join with other churches, and presbyteries join together for learning, mission and fellowship. Some members described difficulty in sharing certain types of resources across borders, though this seemed limited. An example is the use of supply preachers who have been approved in one presbytery and not another. The conversations gave presbyteries an opportunity to express hopes for the future as well as criticisms of the Synod. The distance between presbyteries and travel time to meetings was consistently noted as a challenge.
4. The Task Group did not discover great enthusiasm among presbyteries to redraw synod (or presbytery) lines, although presbyteries indicated that the Synod should continue to help facilitate cooperation among the presbyteries, both inside and outside current Synod boundaries.

Many of our conversations were deeply valuable and introspective; that said, as in all organizations, tensions exist among various levels of church hierarchy, whether between congregations and their presbytery or between presbyteries and their synod, and not every meeting engendered the kind of response we had hoped. Some individuals and presbyteries value the contributions and role of the Synod more than others, while some are simply unaware of many of the ways that synods contribute to the ministries and mission of the PCUSA, in our Synod or elsewhere.

Conclusion:

Briefly put, our conversations with our member presbyteries and neighboring synods did not indicate the need for a plan for changing the boundaries of this Synod, and so we do not recommend developing such a plan. These conversations did, however, lead us more deeply into affirmation of our Synod Ends. In our consultations, we found that our work of “support[ing] and challeng[ing] member Presbyteries to be vital, innovative and faithful in their collaborative and distinctive callings” (the Synod’s defined “Primary End”) is succeeding in ways that – lacking compelling missional reasons to do so – could be undermined by efforts to reconfigure our Synod boundaries. We welcome the opportunity to expand partnerships and especially to make any current boundaries – whether between presbyteries or synods – more porous and easier to navigate for the purposes of more effective mission and ministry.

We lift up three highlights of this process:

1. The affirmation of the importance of relationships to the members of our presbyteries – both within and beyond their own boundaries. These relationships are multiform and continue to evolve, but we believe they are not yet firm enough to merit or withstand any boundary-shifting process.
2. The Synod of the Trinity – whether in its current configuration or in partnership with others – has valuable roles to play for its member presbyteries, particularly in facilitating new relationships of ministry and mission regardless of geographical or other boundaries. Financial and professional support is even more critical in light of diminishing resources within our presbyteries.
3. Our Task Group believes strongly that continuing to spend significant resources of time and money seeking mergers or reconfigurations of councils in the PCUSA for any reasons other than to specifically enhance our ministry and mission is not in the best interest of the Church. Additionally, any church-wide reorganization should include all levels of church councils, as suggested in the report from the Mid-Council I Commission. (Recommendation 7. We call on the 220th General Assembly to establish a task force to review the nature and function of the General Assembly Mission Council and the Office of the General Assembly specifically with respect to their relationship with and support of mid councils as they serve the vitality and mission of congregations in our changing context.)

Item 06-01

[The assembly answered Item 06-01 by the action taken on Item 06-10. See p. 50.]

On Amending G-2.0509 by Deleting Recently Added Language Dealing with Renunciation of Jurisdiction—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant respectfully overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-2.0509 of the Form of Government be amended by deleting the last paragraph at the end of that section as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through.]

~~“Whenever a former teaching elder has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a disciplinary proceeding as the accused, that former teaching elder shall not be permitted to perform any work, paid or volunteer, in any congregation or entity under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)”~~

Rationale

The paragraph that is proposed to be deleted was added by the action of the 221st General Assembly (2014) and subsequent vote of the presbyteries. This overture seeks to reverse that action. The paragraph proposed for deletion conflicts with our principles of ecclesiastical discipline in two important ways. First, it imposes what amounts to permanent and radical censure upon a person without benefit of a trial or finding of guilt or innocence. The fact that a person has removed himself or herself from the reach of ecclesiastical discipline by renunciation does not imply guilt. Second, even the most serious of the existing levels of censure, removal from membership (D-12.0105b), contemplates the possibility that the offender may at some point and after sufficient repentance be restored to membership (D-12.0200). By contrast, the language proposed for deletion permits no such restoration, making it significantly more draconian than any existing standard. In short, the present language permits the church to obtain by fiat what it cannot establish through appropriate disciplinary means. Even if an accused or alleged offender seeks refuge through renunciation from the church’s discipline, such behavior ought not encourage the church to circumvent its own commitment to due process and censure appropriate to the offense.

The paragraph to be deleted creates an unreasonable compliance burden for every congregation or entity under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). One effect of the paragraph is that no individual within the scope of the paragraph is eligible to perform any work, paid or volunteer, for any PC(USA) congregation or entity. Thus every PC(USA) congregation and entity has an obligation to know whether any applicant, whether for a paid or volunteer position, is within the scope of this paragraph. A congregation or entity may attempt to fulfill this obligation by, for example, requiring every applicant to affirm that he or she is not within the group targeted by the paragraph, by requiring background checks, or by performing a check of the PC(USA) on-line Minister Directory database. However, even all these checks taken together cannot guarantee that an applicant is not in the targeted category, so a congregation may fail in its duty despite its best efforts. Furthermore, every applicant for work, whether paid or volunteer, will be subjected to these screens in order to identify a tiny number of individuals who, despite being without guilt under our rules of discipline, have been singled out for extraordinary sanction.

Finally, the paragraph to be deleted violates the rights of a session to employ such administrative staff on behalf of the congregation as it deems necessary to the mission and work of the congregation (G-3.0201c). Regardless of the gravity of an offense alleged against a person who has renounced the jurisdiction of the church, the session’s right to determine the proper staff for its needs exceeds the larger church’s desire to complete through administrative means what it could not through judicial means.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEMS 06-01, 06-07, AND 06-10

Advice on Items 06-01, 06-07, and 06-10—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

All of these items refer to the last paragraph of G-2.0509, which was approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014) and the requisite number of presbyteries:

Whenever a former teaching elder has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a disciplinary proceeding as the accused, that former teaching elder shall not be permitted to perform any work, paid or volunteer, in any congregation or entity under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

- Item 06-01 proposes deleting G-2.0509.
- Item 06-07 proposes amending G-2.0509.

06 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRY

- Item 06-10 proposes amending G-2.0509, and adding a new section, “d”, to D-10.0401.
- Items 06-07 and 06-10 also include a section (“Section 2” below) that does not have constitutional implications.

Renunciation of jurisdiction is an extremely serious action, carrying with it a sense of fracture of relationship and injury to the body of Christ. If an individual desires to resume participation and service in a PC(USA) congregation, the session should inquire into any previous relationship with and involvement in the PC(USA).

The ACC advises that the General Assembly act upon these items as follows:

- Approve Item 06-01
- Disapprove Item 06-10
- Disapprove Item 06-07

If it is the will of the assembly to retain the last paragraph of G-2.0509, then the ACC advises to amend it using the language proposed by Item 06-07.

Rationale Regarding Item 06-01

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises approval of Item 06-01. The Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry of the 221st General Assembly (2014) considered the overture that added this paragraph to the Book of Order, and voted to disapprove the overture that ultimately was approved by the General Assembly. The committee vote was 48-7-2; the assembly approved the overture by a vote of 309-207.

While a majority of the presbyteries approved the original amendment adding this language to the Book of Order, the ACC recommends that this language be removed. We find the original advice to the committee from the ACC still to be compelling. (See <http://pc-biz.org/Explorer.aspx?id=4573>.)

The current language at G-2.0509 is in conflict with the church’s mandate to openness and grace—“Persons who are not members of, or who may have ceased active participation in, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are welcome and may participate in the life and worship of this church and receive its pastoral care and instruction” (G-1.0404). The current wording of G-2.0509 creates a permanent bar to active participation and service in the church, excluding the possibility of future grace, repentance by the accused, reconciliation, and restoration. This openness does not minimize the authority of a council having responsibility and authority for particular paid or volunteer service to assess the suitability of the individual.

If the council having jurisdiction over that paid or volunteer work learns of the prior renunciation, that council has the responsibility to inquire into the circumstances to assess the suitability of the particular service for the individual. Alleged misconduct is a serious issue and should be addressed by councils in their administrative manuals. Councils should explicitly ask, in writing, about any involvement as a defendant in disciplinary cases or renunciation of jurisdiction from the PC(USA). Section F-3.0209 provides that “Councils possess whatever administrative authority is necessary to give effect to duties and powers assigned by the Constitution of the church.” Any council that employs individuals in paid or volunteer service already has the authority and responsibility to screen such individuals in order to protect those served by the church. Most employing councils have adopted employment policies and should consider adding to their administrative manuals the requirement of appropriate background checks.

Rationale Regarding Item 06-10

Recommendation 1

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises disapproval of Item 06-10. The item seeks to provide a means for a former teaching elder who has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a disciplinary proceeding to be restored to participation in the church. This requires an individual to plead guilty to all allegations or charges at the time of renunciation. This conflicts with other provisions of the Book of Order, including the right of the accused to a fair trial (D-11.0101) in closed proceedings (D-11.0306), under the presumption of innocence (D-11.0401). This may lead to the resumption of judicial proceedings against the individual.

Item 06-10 also establishes a significant change in defining the time limits for disciplinary proceedings. Currently, the Book of Order states that “[n]o charges shall be filed later than five years from the time of the commission of the alleged offense, nor later than one year from the date the investigating committee was formed, whichever occurs first, except as noted below” (D-10.0401). That exception states that in “instances of sexual abuse of another person, the five-year time limit shall not apply” (D-10.0401b). This item would remove the time limit for beginning disciplinary proceedings for all alleged offenses.

Recommendation 2:

This section does not present any constitutional issues requiring the advice of the ACC.

Rationale Regarding Item 06-07Recommendation 1

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises disapproval of this item. Please see advice for Item 06-01.

If it is the will of the committee to amend G-2.0509 rather than delete it as proposed by Item 06-01, this item presents language that is clear and concise. The ACC advises that if this overture is approved, a former teaching elder who has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a judicial proceeding as the accused may be subject to judicial process, under the time limits specified in D-10.0401.

Recommendation 2

This section does not present any constitutional issues requiring the advice of the ACC.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 06-01.

The ACWC does not support Item 06-01. Although we understand the reasoning of the ACC and the Presbytery of New Covenant and respect their theological position, we also believe that we would be particularly leaving vulnerable individuals open to potential harm if we approved this measure. As the church, we are also called to protect and nurture those in our care, we are to be God’s openness and grace to the most vulnerable as well, and approving this measure would put this call of the church in jeopardy. One example would be in the case of a former teaching elder who has renounced jurisdiction and who has been accused of child sexual abuse, and at the session and presbytery’s discretion, this person is deemed “rehabilitated” and goes on to serve in a volunteer capacity at another church or church event and ends up offending again. This measure opens this possibility and other similar situations to happen. The ACWC believes we would be extending this measure of grace to those who have renounced jurisdiction at the expense of the most vulnerable if we approve this measure.

On Amending G-2.0607c. to Add Training in Evangelism—From the Presbytery of Tampa Bay.

The Presbytery of Tampa Bay respectfully overtures the 222st General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0607c (Final Assessment and Negotiation for Service) be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“c. a transcript from a theological institution accredited by the Association of Theological Schools acceptable to the presbytery, showing a course of study including Hebrew and Greek, exegesis of the Old and New Testaments using Hebrew and Greek, practical training in evangelism (agile speaking and teaching concise truth about Jesus Christ as confessed in the Nicene Creed), satisfactory grades in all areas of study, and graduation or proximity to graduation; and”

Rationale

Evangelism is a central element of our calling to follow our Lord. Jesus himself gives the whole life-style command particularly in Matthew 28:18–20 in telling his disciples “as you are going, be making disciples” (also: Luke 24:47; John 20:21; Acts 1:8). Similarly, Scripture directs us to be able with skill, purpose, and hope, to engage culture and its competing claims for Lordship (1 Peter 3:15; Jude 3; Phil. 1:7; 2 Cor. 10:5). This discipline is therefore essential for the spiritual formation of all who grow in Christ and an indispensable discipline for teaching elders responsible for equipping the saints.

The testimony of the saints indicates the importance of evangelism. The structure of the Apostles’ Creed may be based on Jesus’ command to make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. The Heidelberg Catechism (Q71, 4.071) and The Second Helvetic Confession (Inward Illumination Does Not Eliminate External Preaching, 5.006) record the importance of evangelism as well as The Westminster Confession (6.055–.058) and The Confession of 1967 (9.37). More recently, the new Book of Order underscores the centrality of outreach to all cultures and their people (in that sense evangelism) in worship and witness (W-3.5500; W-7.2000; W-7.6000).

The PC(USA)'s bold new vision, 1001 new worshipping communities, requires strategic empowerment from all PC(USA)-related organizations. This vision can become reality if we are intentional about evangelism throughout all denominational organizations. Equipping new leaders in the art and science of evangelism will help existing churches to flourish eventually giving birth to 1001 new worshipping communities.

In these stressful times, the church hears the Lord's call to be His chosen witness regardless of circumstance (Is 43.10). The General Assembly turns to PC(USA)-related seminaries for practical assistance and strategic leadership. We seek new leaders with increased agility to adapt, improvise, and thrive in our shifting cultural context: (1) diminishing confidence in religious institutions; (2) declining Judeo-Christian orientation; (3) expanding religious diversity.

The church requires trained seminary graduates to meet multidimensional challenges in positive ways, especially in equipping believers with disciple-making skills of evangelism. Emerging teaching elders will experience resistance to teaching evangelism. They must respond with compassion and resolve born of sound preparation to lead believers to more demanding dimensions of discipleship in order to witness to those who are lost, hurting, or seeking. Merely showing love does not bring people to Christ when "love" is perceived by what many people "feel" rather than a commitment to act—or refuse to act—in ways that are often challenging, self-effacing, and deeply sacrificial. The agape love of which Jesus speaks flows from the cross and is not largely articulated so the church loses "evangelism moments" continuously.

The necessity of emerging leaders to know, teach, and model personal evangelism is paramount regardless of the new economic realities, new methods of theological education, or challenging demographic trends. This fundamental discipline required to equip the saints must at a minimum take its place alongside mandated or popular theologically blended course work such as Greek or Hebrew exegesis, higher criticism, pastoral counseling, social justice, and liberation theologies. If the seminaries who honor Jesus do not equip our new leaders to know, teach, and demonstrate evangelism, who will do this? Where will it get done? By what means then would a new teaching elder equip oneself for leading and teaching evangelism at the local congregational level? Will we franchise this responsibility to para-church ministries? Or will we take responsibility?

Indoctrinating all new teaching elders in evangelism fulfills biblical mandates and has the potential to set the church on a different course. The entire church will become more effective in her witness if all seminary graduates are taught that evangelism is an essential part of their profession, that seminary is more than concepts of theology influenced by academic trends but an actual training process to articulate our faith persistently, politely, and effectively through academics, practical training, and by living the Message.

A life in Christ has core disciplines and skills. Let us ensure every new teaching elder has demonstrated competency in the core discipline of evangelism. Let us keep the main thing, the main thing. Let us be relentless in advancing our core belief, "Jesus died on the cross to pay the penalty for our sins and rose from the grave to purchase a place for us in Heaven."

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-02

Advice on Item 06-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 06-02.

The Historic Principles of Church Order (F-1.0301) states, "The Church is to be a community of witness, pointing beyond itself through word and work to the good news of God's transforming grace in Christ Jesus its Lord." The church today has been seeking new ways to fulfill this calling, including the 1001 New Worshipping Communities program.

The proposed amendment would add the words "practical training in evangelism" as a prerequisite for a presbytery to certify a candidate ready for examination for ordination, pending a call. The 1984 General Assembly considered and rejected this same concept. It stated: "it is inappropriate for the General Assembly to seek to achieve the great ends of the church through placing the requirement of seminary courses in the Constitution" (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 43, 74, 600, Item 24).

This overture raises the following concerns:

1. The purpose of G-2.0607 (Final Assessment) is not to exhaustively list all requirements for final assessment but to guide the presbytery to make its final determination for the candidate's readiness for the ordered ministry.
2. The Constitution provides the presbytery with the responsibility to oversee the process of nurturing and training throughout the phase of inquiry and candidacy. If the presbytery chooses to do so, it may add training in evangelism to its candidacy requirements, much as many presbyteries require clinical pastoral education.
3. The language being proposed is non-specific without any objective criteria with measurable goals. The words "practical," "agile," and "concise" are constitutionally vague and may invite a variety of interpretations.

Item 06-03

Item 06-03 has been moved to 09 Assembly Committee on Immigration and Environmental Issues and has been re-assigned the following item number: Item 09-11. (See p. 556 of the electronic version.)

Item 06-04

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-04 with comment. See pp. 49, 50.]

On Amending G-3.0203 to Allow for Virtual Attendance in Session Meetings When Appropriate Technology Is Available—From the Presbytery of Lake Erie.

The Presbytery of Lake Erie respectfully overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-3.0203 be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“The session shall hold stated meetings at least quarterly. The moderator^h shall call a special meeting when he or she deems necessary or when requested in writing by any two members of the session. The business to be transacted at special meetings shall be limited to items specifically listed in the call for the meeting. There shall be reasonable notice given of all special meetings. The session shall also meet when directed by presbytery. Sessions shall provide by rule for a quorum for meetings; such quorum shall include the moderator and either a specific number of ruling elders or a specific percentage of those ruling elders in current service on the session. A session may vote to allow virtual attendance and participation, including voting rights, in meetings when appropriate technology is available.”

Rationale

Technology exists to allow full participation virtually in all meetings.

Virtual session accommodations provide the homebound, those traveling for work, pleasure, or family responsibilities, and those with family situations requiring their presence at home a vehicle for full participation.

Virtual meetings allow those unable to be physically present at session meetings the opportunity to fulfill their call to discern and measure the congregation's fidelity to the Word of God, and to strengthen and nurture its faith and life.

The quality of session is greatly improved by membership from the diversity of its congregation.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-04

Advice on Item 06-04—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 06-04.

This action is not necessary to achieve the desired results. The Form of Government establishes that “Meetings shall be conducted in accordance with the most recent edition of Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised, except when it is in contradiction to this Constitution” (G-3.0105) The Constitution does not prohibit it and Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised, 11th Edition, allows for virtual (electronic) meetings.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that certain conditions should be met by those councils implementing electronic meetings.

- The council's bylaws or manual of operations must specifically allow the use of electronic meetings, and should establish additional rules for the conduct of such meetings (Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised, 11th Edition, pp. 98–99).
- The basic deliberative quality of the meeting is maintained by providing, “at a minimum, conditions of opportunity for simultaneous aural communication among all participating members equivalent to those of meetings held in one room or area” (Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised, 11th Edition, p. 97).

- A virtual (electronic) meeting must meet the legal requirements of the state in which such a meeting occurs.

Item 06-05

[The assembly approved Item 06-05 with amendment. See pp. 49, 50.]

On Amending the Second Paragraph of G-3.0109 Regarding Parity in Committees of Councils Above the Session—From the Presbytery of St. Andrew

The Presbytery of Saint Andrew overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall the second paragraph of G-3.0109 of the Book of Order be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown as ~~strikeout~~]:

“A committee shall study and recommend action or carry out decisions already made by a council. It shall make a full report to the council that created it, and its recommendations shall require action by that body. Committees of councils higher than the session shall consist of both teaching elders and members of congregations, [~~with at least one half being members of congregations~~] in numbers as nearly equal as possible.”

Rationale

The requirement for parity in our system of government is historic and is grounded in our theological understanding of the nature of the Christian Church. But while parity is essential in decision making, requiring it of all committees (which by definition do not make decisions, but only study matters assigned to them, make recommendations, and carry out decisions made by councils or their commissions), is an unnecessary-restriction placed on councils. In particular, it is a burdensome requirement in the matter of committees of counsel, which, as defined in D-6.0302, may be composed of no more than three persons.

Indeed, the current constitutional language is even more restrictive for committees than it is for commissions, where, if they are composed of an uneven number of members, they may in fact have a slight majority of teaching elders.

While the Presbytery of St. Andrew would prefer that the entire sentence be deemed unnecessary and deleted, it respectfully requests the deletion of at least the final clause (“with at least one half being members of congregations”).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-05

Advice on Item 06-05—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly to disapprove Item 06-05.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution agrees that the requirement for parity in our system of government is historic and is grounded in our theological understanding of the nature of the Church and so we encourage participation of all members in every aspect of our life together. “The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the Church’s membership. . . . The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall guarantee full participation and representation in its worship, governance, and emerging life to all persons or groups within its membership. No member shall be denied participation or representation for any reason other than those stated in this Constitution” (F-1.0403). Responsibilities of governance are shared jointly by presbyters (ruling elders and teaching elders), and the ministry of the Church is shared by all members (F-3.0202, F-3.0208, G-1.0304). While a committee may not always be empowered to make final decisions on behalf of a council, the committee members do decide how to study matters assigned to them, decide which recommendations will be presented to the council for final resolution, and decide how best to carry out decisions made by councils or their commissions. Because all committees must resolve questions or issues as part of their work, we believe it is important that we maintain the historic parity of teaching elders and members of congregations on all committees.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution points out, for example, that a committee of counsel (D-6.0302) does make decisions throughout the procedure for which it has been appointed. It must determine what statements or actions are in the best interest of the complainant or respondent it represents without a requirement that those decisions be approved by the council which appointed it.

If, however, the 222nd General Assembly (2016) believes that the intent of Item 06-05 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the assembly retain the current language and add a new sentence to the existing second paragraph of G-3.0109:

“A committee shall study and recommend action or carry out decisions already made by a council. It shall make a full report to the council that created it, and its recommendations shall require action by that body. Committees of councils higher than the session shall consist of both teaching elders and members of congregations, with at least one half being members of congregations. A council may determine that its mission strategy requires that the provisions for parity be waived. Such a waiver may be established by a three-fourths vote of the members of the council present and voting.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution points out that any change to G-3.0109, if approved, would not affect G-3.0307, which requires that certain committees/entities be composed of equal numbers of teaching elders and ruling elders.

Item 06-06

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-06. See pp. 49, 51.]

On Adding Section G-2.1104, Administrative Personnel Association (APA)—From the Presbytery of Central Nebraska.

The Presbytery of Central Nebraska overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall a new section be added to G-2.11, Certified Church Service, to read as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“G-2.1104 Administrative Personnel Association (APA)

“a. Skills and Training

“Certified Administrative Personnel Assistants are persons certified and called to service in the ministry of church administration in congregations and councils. They shall have skills and training in church polity, church history, reformed theology, spiritual growth and discipline, office administration, Directory for Worship, Book of Confessions, and General Assembly Entities.

“b. Councils Responsibility

“The presbytery shall affirm the skill and dedication of these certified persons by providing for recognition at presbytery at the time of their certification and by inviting these employees to presbytery meetings, granting them the privilege of the floor with voice only at all presbytery meetings, and in the case of Certified APA members who are ruling elders, the privilege of voice and vote at all its meetings.

“Names of those who have earned certification through APA shall be transmitted to the Presbyterian Mission Agency, which will forward them to the Office of the General Assembly and to the stated clerk of the presbyteries in which those persons labor.”

Rationale

A request from twelve women attending a business administration course at the Presbyterian School of Christian Education in Richmond, Virginia, laid the groundwork for a professional organization to be created. In 1976, the Administrative Personnel Association (APA) was founded by Joyce Bauer and in almost forty years APA has expanded to nine regions, which includes all fifty states with a membership of 367 representing churches of all sizes, including those denominations with whom we are in full communion, presbyteries, synods, and the different agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The APA defines its active members as all persons engaged in administrative work in any local church or church-related institution, governing body or agency of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), or those denominations with which we have communion.

The APA is ruled by the body but lead by the Executive Board and Council. The Executive Board is made up of elected officials to include the president, president-elect, immediate past-president, certification chair, membership chair, secretary, and treasurer. The Council is composed of the following: The National Executive Board, all regional presidents, bylaws chair, nominating chair, finance chair, council on accreditation chair, membership chair, and national conference planning chair.

The mission of APA is to offer the opportunity for professional development and personal growth for those called by God to serve as support staff of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and those denominations with whom we are in full communion. The mission is accomplished by providing continuing education events for certification and occasions for fellowship, worship, and spiritual nurture and prayer at both national and regional meetings as well as APA-sponsored training events.

06 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRY

We offer three levels of certification with the opportunity to receive recognition for every fifty hours of continuing education beyond level 3. Our members may also receive an additional certificate in Concentrated Studies in Polity, Communications, Administration and Facilities Management, Theology, Church History, and Finance after completing another twenty-five hours in each of these areas of studies. Approved instructors are required to teach the requested amount of time for the class. Approval is given by our certification chair. The Certification Committee reviews the classes to ensure the classes being taught are current with what is happening in the church and office administration. Elective hours include conflict management, designing for communication, technology classes, financial matters, and other classes that provide professional growth and understanding of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Below explains the breakdown for each level.

LEVEL I

Core Courses

Church History (Part 1)	2.5 hours
Church History (Part 2)	2.5 hours
Polity 1 (Part 1)	2.5 hours
Polity 1 (Part 2)	2.5 hours
Office Administration	2.5 hours
*Spiritual Growth and Discipline	2.5 hours
Theology—Christian Perspectives of the Church (Part 1)	2.5 hours
Theology (Part 2)	2.5 hours
Total Core Hours	20 hours
Total Elective Hours	20 hours
Total Hours Required	40 hours

LEVEL II

Core Courses

Directory for Worship	2.5 hours
Legal Matters	2.5 hours
PC(USA) History Since Reunion (Part 1)	2.5 hours
PC(USA) History Since Reunion (Part 2)	2.5 hours
Polity II	2.5 hours
Office Administration	2.5 hours
*Spiritual Growth and Discipline	2.5 hours
Total Core Hours	17.5 hours
Total Elective Hours	27.5 hours
Total Hours Required	45 hours

LEVEL III

Core Courses

Book of Confessions	2.5 hours
GA Entities	2.5 hours
Polity III	2.5 hours
Office Administration	2.5 hours
*Spiritual Growth and Discipline	2.5 hours
Total Core Hours	12.5 hours
Total Elective Hours	37.5 hours
Total Hours Required	50 hours

Prior to the changes made to the Form of Government, APA had been recognized previously by General Assembly, and under the former section G-14.0740 we had been affiliated with the Office of Vocation and had a PC(USA) staff liaison. We had also been listed in the Directory and Book II. However, after the new Form of Government was approved we were lost in translation and have struggled since to be specifically identified by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for our service and dedication to the larger church. Therefore, it is time after almost forty years of service and dedication, that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) specifically recognizes the Administrative Personnel Association (APA) and its certified members in the Book of Order.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-06

Advice on Item 06-06—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 06-06.

06 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRY

While the ACC recognizes with deep appreciation the work of dedicated administrative personnel who faithfully serve the Church of Jesus Christ in and through our congregations, we feel that this proposed overture is problematic on several matters.

1. There are certified members of the Administrative Personnel Association (APA) who are not members of a Presbyterian congregation. Such individuals should not be granted voice at meetings of presbyteries as a right of their certification status.
2. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is governed by presbyters (F-3.0202) who are elected by the people (F-3.0106). This overture mandates participation in presbytery meetings of individuals not in ordered ministry.
3. If a member of APA who is a ruling elder is thereby automatically granted voice and vote in presbytery meetings, this might supersede an individual council's rules for how they have discerned granting this status, and it could affect the parity balance of teaching and ruling elders in a presbytery.
4. This overture does not provide for any constitutional provision for establishing and/or monitoring the certification process.
5. The desire to properly and appropriately recognize the value of ministry exercised by administrative professionals in the church can, and should, be given without the necessity of providing for constitutional designation.
6. Recognition of individuals in any specific form of certified church service (G-2.1101) may be provided for in a council's manual of administrative operations.

Should the General Assembly choose to approve this overture, we would suggest amending it by deleting the word "these" in paragraph b, and adding the words "who are Presbyterian" after the word "employees," so that part of the sentence would read: "...and by inviting employees who are Presbyterian to presbytery meetings, granting them the privilege of the floor with voice only at all presbytery meetings..." Specific certifying organizations should not be listed in the Constitution, as names change periodically.

"b. Councils Responsibility

"The presbytery shall affirm the skill and dedication of these certified persons by providing for recognition at presbytery at the time of their certification and by inviting ~~these~~ employees [who are Presbyterian] to presbytery meetings, granting them the privilege of the floor with voice only at all presbytery meetings, and in the case of Certified APA members who are ruling elders, the privilege of voice and vote at all its meetings.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 06-06.

The ACWC is committed to recognizing, supporting, and advocating for women across the denomination, and while Item 06-06 does not speak specifically to women as persons who are in the roles of church administrators, historically these positions have indeed been held by women. The Book of Order, G-2.11, Certified Church Service, recognizes, supports, and advocates for Certified educators, and whereas the Administrative Personnel Association (APA) was recognized and supported in previous Books of Orders, the ACWC believes it is a misstep for members of the Administrative Personnel Association (APA) to not be recognized, supported, and upheld in the current (and future) Book of Order. Thus, the ACWC encourages the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to approve Item 06-06 for its inclusion into the Book of Order.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-06

Comment on Item 06-06—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly respectfully advises the assembly to answer Item 06-06 (on adding section G-2.1104, Administrative Personnel Association (APA) to those included in "Certified Church Service") with its response to Item 06-15 (amendment of G-2.1101).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created "to carry out the assembly's oversight of the Stated Clerk ..." (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk and the Office of the General Assembly. Section G-2.1101 currently contains a process for inclusion of a certifying body. Item 06-15 contains the committee's recommendations regarding those certifying bodies, consistent with G-2.1101.

Item 06-07

[The assembly answered Item 06-07 by the action taken on Item 06-10. See pp. 49, 51.]

On Amending G-2.0509 to Clarify the Relationship to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) of a Person Who Has Renounced the Jurisdiction of the Church—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta respectfully overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to do the following:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall the last paragraph of G-2.0509 be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“Whenever a former teaching elder has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a disciplinary proceeding as the accused, and as long as the former teaching elder remains outside of the membership and jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), that former teaching elder shall not be permitted to perform any work, paid or volunteer, in any congregation or entity under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)”

2. Direct General Assembly agencies to include in their personnel, sexual misconduct, and child protection policies a question about renunciation of jurisdiction; and to encourage other councils to do the same.

Rationale

For reasons of order and safety, all persons engaged in work under the auspices of the church should be accountable to the church. Renunciation of jurisdiction is an explicit declaration by an individual that he or she refuses to be subject to the discipline of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and is therefore deliberately unaccountable.

Renunciation of jurisdiction is a serious matter, and any teaching elder who chooses that course must be aware of the consequences. As the 218th General Assembly (2008) declared:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends to the 218th General Assembly (2008) that renunciation of membership in a congregation or of church office is a serious action that carries significant implications. In the case of both officers and members, there are other, less disruptive ways by which a person may relinquish standing in the church ... Renunciation of jurisdiction, on the other hand, carries with it a sense of fracture of relationship and injury to the body of Christ. ... In the case of an officer, renunciation carries with it the requirement of the immediate termination of the exercise of office as well as removal from the membership roll (G-6.0701). ... (Minutes, 2008, Part I, p. 274, Item 04-21)

However, the church is dependent upon grace, and always holds out hope for repentance and reconciliation.

The same Item 04-21 from the 218th General Assembly (2008) explains:

A person who has renounced membership and/or church office in a PC(USA) congregation may, at some subsequent point, seek admission to membership in another PC(USA) congregation by reaffirmation of faith. Membership may not be denied “for any ... reason not related to profession of faith” (G-10.0102b). It is the session’s responsibility to receive such persons, and to determine if their reaffirmation of faith is consistent with the requirements for a profession of faith in W-4.2003a–c. In such determinations, sessions may wish to pay particular attention to whether the applicant declares “intent to participate actively and responsibly in the worship and mission of the church” (W-4.2003c, emphasis added), and whether the person will fulfill the obligations of church membership as defined in G-5.0102, especially G-5.0102f—“demonstrating a new quality of life within and through the church”—and G-5.0102h—“living responsibly in the personal, family, vocational, political, cultural, and social relationships of life.” In its examination, the session may also inquire about the faith journey of the person requesting membership, and the nature of relationships between that person and prior congregations from which he or she has renounced membership. The session may wish to emphasize that the act of professing faith is itself a form of renunciation: the person requesting membership “renounces evil” and affirms reliance on God’s grace. (Ibid., pp. 274–75)

A person who has renounced jurisdiction while in the midst of a disciplinary proceeding as the accused should be aware that

Section D-3.0106 is clear that “jurisdiction in judicial process ends when a church officer or a member renounces jurisdiction of the church.” There is no provision in either the Form of Government or the Rules of Discipline that ... makes provision for the resumption of proceedings against a member or officer who renounces jurisdiction to avoid prosecution and then is admitted to membership in another PC(USA) congregation. However, a person who is accused of sexual abuse as defined in D-10.0401c and who renounces jurisdiction to avoid prosecution on those charges, becomes liable to those charges again when he or she comes under the jurisdiction of another governing body of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (D-10.0102a) by being received into congregational membership. To the extent that it is aware of prior renunciations of jurisdiction, a governing body has both the right and the obligation to inquire into the circumstances of any such renunciation in its examination of an officer. (Ibid., p. 275)

If a former teaching elder who has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a disciplinary proceeding as the accused wishes to work under the auspices of the PC(USA), he or she has the option of demonstrating willingness to be accountable, by submitting again to the jurisdiction of the church.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 06-07.

The ACWC supports Item 06-07 on amending G-2.0509 to clarify the relationship to the PC(USA) of a person who has renounced the jurisdiction of the church. As the last paragraph of the rationale states, “If a former teaching elder who has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a disciplinary proceeding as the accused wishes to work under the auspices of the PC(USA), he or she has the option of demonstrating willingness to be accountable, by submitting again to the jurisdiction of the church.” It is through these already established disciplinary procedures that the possibility of restoration and reconciliation is opened.

On Amending the Book of Order to Clarify Titles to Ordered Ministry—From the Presbytery of Great Rivers.

The Presbytery of Great Rivers respectfully overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

1. Amend F-3.0202 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“This church shall be governed by presbyters, that is, ruling elders and teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament). Ruling elders are so named not because they ‘lord it over’ the congregation (Matt. 20:25), but because they are chosen by the congregation to discern and ~~measure~~ guide in its fidelity to the Word of God, and to strengthen and nurture its faith and life. ~~Teaching elders~~ Ministers of the Word and Sacrament shall be committed in all their work to teaching the faith in word and in deed and equipping the people of God for their ministry and witness.”

2. Amend the third paragraph of G-2.0102 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Ordination to the ministry of ~~teaching elder, ruling elder, or~~ deacon, ruling elder, or minister of Word and Sacrament (also called teaching elder) is unique to that order of ministry.”

3. Amend G-2.0301 follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“As there were in Old Testament times elders for the government of the people, so the New Testament church provided persons with particular gifts to share in discernment of God’s Spirit and governance of God’s people. Accordingly, congregations should elect persons of wisdom and maturity of faith, having demonstrated skills in leadership and being compassionate in spirit. Ruling elders are so named not because they ‘lord it over’ the congregation (Matt. 20:25), but because they are chosen by the congregation to discern and measure its fidelity to the Word of God, and to strengthen and nurture its faith and life. Ruling elders, together with ~~teaching elders~~ ministers of the Word and Sacrament, exercise leadership, government, spiritual discernment, and discipline and have responsibilities for the life of a congregation as well as the whole church, including ecumenical relationships. When elected by the congregation, they shall serve faithfully as members of the session. When elected as commissioners to higher councils, ruling elders participate and vote with the same authority as ~~teaching elders~~ ministers of the Word and Sacrament, and they are eligible for any office.”

4. Amend G-2.05 and G-2.0501 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“G-2.05 ~~Teaching Elders~~ Ministers of the Word and Sacrament: The Ministry of the Word and Sacrament Teaching and Pastoral Care

“G-2.0501 ~~Teaching Elder~~ Minister of the Word and Sacrament Defined

~~“Teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament) Ministers of the Word and Sacrament (also called teaching elders and pastors) shall in all things be committed to teaching the faith in word and deed and equipping the saints for the work of ministry (Eph. 4:12). They may serve in a variety of ministries as authorized by the presbytery. When they serve as preachers and teachers of the Word, they shall preach and teach the faith of the church, so that the people are shaped by the pattern of the gospel and strengthened for witness and service. When they serve at font and table, they shall interpret and ‘show forth’ the mysteries of grace and lift in word and action, lifting the people’s vision toward the hope of God’s new creation. When they serve as pastors, they shall support the people in the disciplines of the faith amid the struggles of daily life. When they serve as presbyters, they shall participate in the responsibilities of governance, seeking always to discern the mind of Christ and to build up Christ’s body through devotion, debate, and decision.”~~

5. Amend G-2.0701 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

~~“Ordination to the ordered ministry of teaching elder minister of Word and Sacrament is an act of the whole church carried out by the presbytery, setting apart a person to ordered ministry. Such a person shall have fulfilled the ordination requirements of the presbytery of care and received the call of God to service to a congregation or other work in the mission of the church that is acceptable to the candidate and to the presbytery of call.”~~

6. Amend G-3.0307 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

~~“G-3.0307 Pastor, Counselor, and Advisor to Teaching Elders Its Pastors and Congregations~~

~~“Presbyteries shall be open at all times to communication regarding the life and ministry of their congregations.~~

~~“Each presbytery shall develop and maintain mechanisms and processes to serve as pastor and counselor to teaching elders its pastors, both ministers of Word and Sacrament and ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service (also called commissioned lay pastors (also known as commissioned ruling elders)), as well as the and certified Christian educators of the presbytery; to facilitate the relations between the presbytery and its congregations, teaching elders, ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service, pastors and certified Christian educators; and to settle difficulties on behalf of the presbytery where possible and expedient.” [The last two paragraphs of the section remain unchanged.]~~

7. That within the Directory for Worship and the Rules of Discipline, the terms “ruling elder commissioned to particular pastoral service” or “ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service” and “teaching elder” shall be replaced with its former terms, “commissioned lay pastor (also known as commissioned ruling elders)” or “minister” or “minister of Word and Sacrament”, respectively.

8. Amend W-4.4001a as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

~~“a. In ordination the church sets apart with prayer and the laying on of hands those who have been called through election by the church to serve as deacons, ruling elders, and teaching elders. (W-2.1005) In installation the church sets apart with prayer those previously ordained as deacons, ruling elders, and teaching elders ministers of Word and Sacrament (also called teaching elders), and called anew to service in that ministry.”~~

Rationale

In 2012, the PC(USA) adopted a new Form of Government. Among its many changes designed to help clarify our polity were changes in the titles of ordered ministry: “Elder” was changed to “ruling elder,” “minister of Word and Sacrament” was changed to “teaching elder,” and “commissioned lay pastor” was changed to “commissioned ruling elder.” Yet this change has been met by some with resistance, others with confusion, and by many through simply ignoring the changes.

In 2012, the Presbytery of Santa Fe, with the concurrence of the Presbytery of Newton, sought to change this language back in its entirety. In response to this overture, the ACC (Advisory Committee on the Constitution) highlighted the historical connection for new terminology as well as a desire that the new term might minimize clericalism:

The Form of Government as adopted by the church in 2011 understands that “the basic form of ministry is the ministry of the whole people of God, from whose midst some are called to ordered ministries, to fulfill particular functions” (G-2.01). In establishing this principle, the Form of Government seeks to counteract the tendency abroad in the church toward clericalism. Clericalism is the habit of the religious communities to rely mainly or even exclusively on a limited number of leaders—often professional leaders—to carry out the work of ministry. There are at least two ways in which clericalism poses a danger for Reformed communities.

06 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRY

First, clericalism suggests an unwarranted limitation on the call to ministry. Using the term “minister” to apply particularly to those ordained as teaching elders suggests that “ministry” is the work of the “minister of the Word and Sacrament” rather than the work of the whole people of God and of every baptized person individually.

Second, clericalism undermines the basic parity between ruling and teaching elders in the governance of the church. The Form of Government uses the terms “Teaching Elder” and “Ruling Elder” to suggest that, while the particular orders of ministry of the two are different, they are united in the shared responsibility as elders to govern and guide the ministry of God’s people. It is the unique gift of the Reformed community that there is a basic parity in the governance of the church between ruling and teaching elders.

The terms “teaching elder” and “ruling elder” point to vital functions that lie at the heart of these orders of ministry. The Form of Government lifts up teaching as the primary function through which the ministry of the Word and Sacrament is exercised. Section G-2.0501 states: “Teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament) shall in all things be committed to teaching the faith and equipping the saints for the work of ministry (Eph 4:12). . . .”¹

And later:

The Form of Government lifts up this teaching function because it is central to the ministry of the Word and Sacrament. In so doing, it follows the tradition established early in the history of the Kirk of Scotland. In Chapter 4 of the Second Book of Discipline (1621), the Kirk of Scotland describes as a central function of the minister the “teaching of the word of God . . . publicly and privately, always traueiling [travailing] to edifie, and discharge his [sic] conscience, as God’s word prescribes him.” That same section notes the minister’s responsibility for the administration of the Sacraments, “for both are appointed by God, as meanes to teach us, one by the ear and the other by the eyes, and other senses, that by both knowledge may be transferred to the minde.” By virtue of the educational requirements of those ordained to this ministry, the teaching elder is nearly always the best prepared, and in many communities uniquely prepared, to serve as the teacher of the faith.²

The ACC shares some important rationale that speaks to challenges within the contemporary church, while at the same time points us to our proud Scottish heritage.

The rationale offered by the Presbytery of Santa Fe (2012) in their motion to change these terms was to address the underlying confusion and possible limitations created when these terms were changed, including the following:

... Vocational ministry encompasses many functions. There is, of course, a “teaching” aspect, but even there the current terminology of “spiritual formation” may better convey the reality of what is intended for “teachers” of the gospel. A primary focus on the “teaching” role can too easily direct us toward old tendencies of focusing on the intellect at the expense of the heart and habits of life. It also raises the question of how the designation “teaching elder” encompasses the pastoral aspect of the vocational minister’s function.

Another, presumably unintended, consequence of the change to “teaching elder” from “minister of the Word and Sacrament” is that the emphasis on “teaching” may too easily focus on “the Word” at the expense of “Sacrament.” Presbyterians assert a balance of “Word” and “Sacrament” but in practice we have often emphasized the “Word” to the neglect of “Sacrament.” The former designation of “minister of the Word and Sacrament” constantly reminds us of the intended balance, and hopefully of the importance of experiencing the “sacred mysteries” of the faith in conjunction with our study and reasoning.

The role of a vocational minister is to minister the Word and the Sacraments to and with the people of God. The minister does this not, primarily, as a social worker, or psychologist, or administrator, or (even) teacher. The minister’s primary function is to bring the Word and the Sacraments to the community of faith “truly” and “rightly” so that they may be used by the Holy Spirit to do God’s work within and among us. Thus, the title “minister of Word and Sacrament” conveys—not only to those who bear the office, but to members of the community of faith, and even to those with no church affiliation—a clearer descriptive summary of what the role and function is.³

These are also legitimate concerns raised by the changes in terminology. Additionally, from an ecumenical perspective, the nomenclature of the office of “teaching elder” versus “ruling elder” are somewhat confusing as many denominations ordain their clergy to a ministerial office, such as minister, pastor, priest, whereas the title “teaching elder” often needs qualifiers or explanations.

After observing the changes to these terms for a few years, it has been noted that there is still much confusion. As a result, the local church and many churches and pastors have simply ignored the change to the nomenclature: pastors are still pastors, elders are still elders, and mid councils and General Assembly seem to be the only bodies who tend to use the terms ruling elder and teaching elder with any regularity or appreciation for the historical and pragmatic rationale.

Furthermore, in speaking to younger clergy regarding this change, some have reported feeling disempowered in the formation of their sense of pastoral authority and professional development by no longer being ordained to the office of “minister of Word and Sacrament.” Some feel this title has been particularly disempowering to female clergy.

Lastly, the title, “commissioned ruling elder,” greatly minimizes the broad and important pastoral role and responsibility that is played by our commissioned ruling elders whereas the title “commissioned lay pastor” was a far more apropos title.

In summary, this overture seeks to honor the historical and pragmatic rationale given by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution in 2012, address the primary concerns raised by the Presbytery of Santa Fe, provide greater clarity to the local church, offer more empowerment to our younger clergy, and better reflect the important pastoral ministry of our commissioned ruling elders.

Concurrence to Item 06-08 from the Presbytery of Santa Fe (with Additional Rationale)

The Presbytery of Santa Fe affirms the rationale offered by the Presbytery of Great Rivers.

We further note that upon examination of the Book of Confessions, there are no indexed references to “teaching elders,” but numerous references to “ministers” throughout. Historically the designation of “minister” (and/or “pastor”) has been primary among the Reformed. The terms used in the Reformation era and into the 17th century were consistently “minister” or “pastor,” along with “elder” and “deacon.” In addition to the documents found in the PC(USA) Book of Confessions, this is true in the following foundational documents of Reformed polity: Draft Ecclesiastical Ordinances (John Calvin, et al, Geneva, 1541); First Book of Discipline (John Knox, et al, Scotland, 1560); Second Book of Discipline (Andrew Melville, et al, Scotland, 1578); and, The Form of Presbyterian Church Government (Westminster Assembly, Great Britain, 1645).

There are some instances of the term “teaching elder” being used as a secondary descriptive designation in the 17th century. In some cases (such as George Gillespie and Alexander Henderson, Scottish commissioners to the Westminster Assembly) it was used for the additional ecclesiastical order of “Doctors” rather than for Ministers. Emphasis on the distinction of “teaching” and “ruling” elders only seems to have come to prominence in the United States during the 19th century via Presbyterian “politists” such as Samuel Miller (1769–1850) and Charles Hodge (1797–1878) of Princeton Seminary, and prominent southern professors such as James H. Thornwell (1812–1862), R.L. Dabney (1820–1898), etc.

We also suggest that, given continued dissatisfaction and concern within the church about both the “teaching elder” and “commissioned ruling elder” designations, having the presbyteries vote on this will settle the matter.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-08

Advice on Item 06-08—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 06-08.

This overture seeks to amend the Book of Order in numerous locations to “clarify titles to ordered ministry.” Among the eight points in the overture, there are two classes of amendments:

1. To change some occurrences of the title “teaching elder” to “minister of the Word and Sacrament.”
2. That “within the Directory for Worship and the Rules of Discipline the terms ... “ruling elder commissioned to particular pastoral service” or “ruling elder commissioned to pastoral service” ... shall be replaced with its former term “Commissioned Lay Pastor.”

These will be addressed serially.

1. When “teaching elder” was presented as the default term for this ordered ministry in the Form of Government proposal presented to the 219th General Assembly (2010), the ACC offered the following advice:

The proposal has adopted terminology concerning church offices that is markedly different than that with which most Presbyterians are familiar. Instead of “church offices,” the proposal speaks of “ordered ministries”; rather than “minister of the Word and Sacrament,” the proposal utilizes the term “teaching elder.” These changes call for special consideration by both the assembly and the church generally.

... these changes have the purpose of reclaiming the Reformation doctrine of the priesthood of all believers, that is, the shared nature of the mission and ministry of the Church. ... by replacing “minister of the Word and Sacrament” with the term “teaching elder,” the unique and historic Presbyterian principle of parity in governance between the clergy and ruling elders is underscored. (Indeed, even the word “clergy,” with its connotations of special status and privilege, is out of place in historic Presbyterian polity, which asserts that the biblical word “elder” (presbyteros) embraces both those exercising the role of governance and pastor to the flock.) The term “teaching elder” has been used as the preferred term for those exercising the pastoral function in the Church in various historic streams of our current denomination, most recently in the Book of Church Order of the former Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) prior to its reunion with the UPCUSA in 1983.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes that changes in nomenclature in the proposal constitute a healthy appropriation of the historic principles of Presbyterian polity. Apart from the inherent challenge of relearning some fundamental terms of our polity, the changes do not present obstacles to the orderly functioning of our church government. They may, however, highlight distinctives of polity that are unique to the Presbyterian and Reformed tradition, which have been our contribution to ecumenical dialogue regarding the mutual recognition of ministries. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes that the proposal presents a faithful representation of our historic polity to our ecumenical partners. (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 537–38)

The ACC reminds the assembly the particular title for the ordered ministry is different from the functions a person performs locally. A teaching elder may perform the functions of pastor, counselor, chaplain, or minister. In the current Form of Government, teaching elders are twice also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament (G-2.0501; G-4.0301), making the terms interchangeable.

Additionally, the overture is concerned that the term “teaching elder” causes a focus on teaching the Word to the detriment of teaching the Sacraments. Section G-2.0501 has a broader focus for the primary activity of teaching: “Teaching elders (also called ministers of the Word and Sacrament) shall in all things be committed to teaching the faith and equipping the saints for the work of ministry” [emphasis added].

2. Ruling elders commissioned to limited pastoral service must have been previously ordained to the ordered ministry. Referring to them as a “commissioned lay pastor,” as the overture asks, delegitimizes the parity of ordered ministry shared by ruling elders and teaching elders.

If the General Assembly decides to make the changes proposed by the overture in regards to the term “teaching elder,” the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the following:

- The proposed change from “teaching elder” to “minister of the Word and Sacrament” is clear and consistent. The General Assembly should review all uses of the term in the Book of Order for consistency.

- Recommendation 6 of the overture proposes amending G-3.0307 to strike out “teaching elders” and insert “its pastors, both ministers of Word and Sacrament . . .” This section currently gives the responsibility to the presbytery to be pastor and counselor to all of its teaching elders, including those who serve in non-congregational ministries, are members-at-large, or honorably retired. The amendment would limit this responsibility only to teaching elders serving as pastors of congregations.

- In several instances, the overture seeks to amend language to section titles and the indexing references in the margins of the Book of Order. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution reminds the General Assembly that these texts are not part of the Constitution, and do not require change by the amendment process. If the General Assembly decides to change the text of the Constitution, the headings and margin references can be edited as the new Book of Order is prepared.

Item 06-09

[The assembly referred Item 06-09 to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. See pp. 50, 51.]

On Amending G-2.0301, “Ruling Elder Defined,” to Allow for Individually Commissioned Ruling Elders—From the Synod of the Northeast.

The Synod of the Northeast overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.0301 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“As there were in Old Testament times elders for the government of the people, so the New Testament church provided persons with particular gifts to share in discernment of God’s Spirit and governance of God’s people. Accordingly, congregations should elect persons of wisdom and maturity of faith, having demonstrated skills in leadership and being compassionate in spirit. Ruling elders are so named not because they ‘lord it over’ the congregation (Matt. 20:25), but because they are chosen by the congregation to discern and measure its fidelity to the Word of God, and to strengthen and nurture its faith and life. Ruling elders, together with teaching elders, exercise leadership, government, spiritual discernment, and discipline and have responsibilities for the life of a congregation as well as the whole church, including ecumenical relationships. When elected by the congregation, they ~~shall serve faithfully~~ may be individually commissioned or may serve as members of the session. When elected as commissioners to higher councils, ruling elders participate and vote with the same authority as teaching elders, and they are eligible for any office.”

Rationale

Section G-2.0104 indicates that those fulfilling leadership responsibilities in the church—including ruling elders—“should be persons of strong faith, dedicated discipleship, and love of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord. Their manner of life should be a demonstration of the Christian gospel in the church and in the world.”

Section G-2.0301 describes ruling elders as “persons of wisdom and maturity of faith, having demonstrated skills in leadership and being compassionate in spirit.”

The ordination question specific to ruling elders in W-4.4003i(1) includes, as responsibilities of that ordered ministry, 222nd General Assembly (2016)

“watching over the people ... [sharing] in government and discipline, serving in councils of the church.” It concludes by asking, “in your ministry will you try to show the love and justice of Jesus Christ?”

Clearly, the responsibilities of ruling elders extend beyond merely serving a term on the session.

This is also seen in the church’s historic understanding of ordination as continuing for life, beyond a ruling elder’s term of service on the session. “Once an elder, always an elder” is a phrase frequently heard in Presbyterian congregations.

This indicates that ruling elders enhance the church’s mission and ministry through the leadership and witness they provide outside the session meeting room, both as spiritual exemplars and by “serving in councils of the church” beyond the congregation.

Precedent: Individually Commissioned Deacons (G-2.0202)

In light of the many and varied ways deacons serve Christ and the people of God, G-2.0202 recognizes that some congregations may elect individuals to the order of deacon who do not serve on a board of deacons. The Constitution does not presently offer a similar option for ruling elders.

Practical Applications

Situations sometimes arise in which congregations may find it useful to elect individuals as ruling elders without having them immediately begin a term on the session. For example, if the local custom is that only ruling elders fulfill functions such as making certain kinds of visits to members, assisting in serving the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper or exercising other forms of spiritual leadership, then it could be useful to elect, ordain, and individually commission ruling elders for this sort of service.

Situations also arise in which councils above the level of the session would find it valuable, for purposes of balancing representation or utilizing unusual talents, to ask a congregation to elect a particular individual as ruling elder. For example, a presbytery or synod may find such an option helpful in fulfilling the mandate for unity in diversity (F-1.0403) or as they assemble a team with varied talents to serve on a committee or commission. While such purposes may often be accomplished through the ordinary means of a congregation electing such a person to first occupy a seat at the session table, sometimes a seat may not be readily available, or the person may not be immediately available to attend session meetings but could exercise ruling-elder responsibilities in other ways.

Situations also arise in which it may be advantageous for mission workers to be ordained as ruling elders prior to deployment, but whose deployment plans make immediate service on their home church’s session problematic.

As the church continues to explore new forms of mission through efforts such as 1,001 New Worshiping Communities and in new immigrant communities, situations sometimes arise in which it would be useful to have promising leaders designated for leadership in fellowships that are not congregations in the usual sense. If such individuals could be received as members of a neighboring congregation, then elected by that congregation as ruling elders to exercise their ministry in the nontraditional community, the community’s work and witness, as well as the work and witness of the presbytery, would be enhanced.

Congregations have, in the past, pursued a clumsy workaround in order to permit a promising leader to be ordained as a ruling elder without serving for very long on the session. This involves asking a ruling elder nearing the end of his or her session term to resign, allowing for the new leader to be elected to a short, unexpired term. If the Constitution allowed for ruling elders to be individually commissioned, this complex maneuver would no longer be necessary.

The effect of this proposed amendment is permissive. It does not impose the model of individually commissioned ruling elders on any council, but rather provides flexibility to allow them to order their ministries in new and varied ways in service to our Lord Jesus Christ.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-09

Advice on Item 06-09—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 06-09.

The overture seeks to amend G-2.0301 to provide for the election of elders to individual commissions without requiring service on the session. The essential functions of ruling elders identified in G-2.0301 (“exercise leadership, government, spiritual discernment, and discipline”) are yoked to the practice of governance in the context of councils. The Constitution assumes such experience as a prerequisite to exercise governance in higher councils. Removing this requirement would deemphasize the essential governance function of ruling elders and incorporate other forms of service.

Within the life of a particular church, beyond service on the session, the only functions that require ordination as a ruling elder are: the authority to administer sacraments when trained and authorized by the presbytery (G-3.0301b); to exercise limited pastoral service when commissioned by the presbytery (G-2.1003), and to serve as commissioners to councils when elected (G-2.0301) [emphasis added]. Sessions already have the authority to commission members to exercise pastoral care, lead worship, and perform a variety of mission functions, none of which require ordination as a ruling elder.

The rationale cites G-2.0202 as precedent for individual commissioning of ruling elders. However, the individual commissioning of deacons is not comparable to that of ruling elders. Each ordered ministry has its unique functions and requirements. Service as a deacon is explicitly “under the authority and supervision of the session” (G-2.0202). The essential function of deacons is compassionate service, not governance. Individual commission may be necessary and helpful in congregations that do not have a board of deacons. Every particular church must have a session (G-3.0101).

Election to service beyond the session introduces other concerns. The ordered ministries of the church differ from other forms of service in function only, not status. Election to individual commissions invites congregations to elect ruling elders without function or accountability. It is also unclear how term limits would apply to ruling elders elected to individual commission. Depending on the particular service in a commission, it is conceivable that the purpose of mandatory rotation of service could be thwarted. Ordaining ruling elders to service beyond the congregation would constitute a substantive change to long-established Presbyterian polity that persons who serve in ordered ministries are elected by the body to be served. The Historic Principles of Church Order, approved by the Synod of New York and Philadelphia in 1788, states:

That though the character, qualifications and authority of Church officers are laid down in the Holy Scriptures as well as the proper method of their investiture and institution, yet the election of the persons to the exercise of this authority, in any particular society, is in that society (F-3.0106).

Finally, the use of the term “individual commission” creates confusion with a presbytery’s authority to commission ruling elders to particular, limited, pastoral service (G-2.10). Commissions to pastoral functions such as regular preaching of the Word, administration of the sacraments, moderation of sessions, and performance of weddings are governed by the presbytery, not the session.

Item 06-10

[The assembly approved Item 06-10 with amendment. See pp. 49, 50, 51.]

On Amending G-2.0509 and D-10.0401 to Clarify the Relationship to the PC(USA) of a Person Who Has Renounced Jurisdiction of the Church—From the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area.

The Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area respectfully overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to do the following:

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

a. Shall the fourth paragraph of G-2.0509 be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“Whenever a former teaching elder has renounced jurisdiction in the midst of a disciplinary proceeding as the accused, that former teaching elder shall not be permitted to perform any work, paid or volunteer, in any congregation or entity under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) unless and until the person re-joins the church, comes forward [~~in self-accusation either directly or by reference to the stated clerk of the presbytery having jurisdiction over the member, pleads guilty to all charges based on all accusations that had been made by the time that the former teaching elder had renounced jurisdiction, has censure imposed without trial and with no participation from victims required, and completes appropriate rehabilitation~~] [and resubmits to the disciplinary process].”

b. Shall D-10.0401 be amended by adding new section “d.” to read as follows:

“d. For instances where a former teaching elder comes forward in self-accusation to undergo a disciplinary process to regain permission to perform work under the jurisdiction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (G-2.0509), no time limit from the time of the commission of the alleged offense to the filing of charges shall apply. Charges based on all accusations that had been made by the time that the former teaching elder had renounced jurisdiction may be brought regardless of the date on which any such offense is alleged to have occurred.”

2. Direct General Assembly agencies to include in their personnel, sexual misconduct, and child protection policies a question about renunciation of jurisdiction; and to encourage other councils to do the same.

Rationale

When members of many helping and service professions are accused of misconduct (e.g., physicians, nurses, dentists, physical therapists, psychologists, social workers, attorneys, counselors, actuaries, accountants), state licensure boards and disciplinary committees of national credentialing organizations require investigations to be done promptly, and that the results of the investigations be made public. While those who are accused may choose not to participate, they have no power to stop investigations against themselves. These professions learned long ago that such disciplinary procedures are necessary to maintain their professions' integrity and keep the public's trust.

In the PC(USA), teaching elders are professionals.¹ In contrast to other professions, our polity states that any member of our church may renounce jurisdiction at any time, since membership in the church has always been purely voluntary. The "Rules of Discipline" state that, if any member (including a teaching elder) is accused of an offense in a disciplinary case, and also renounces jurisdiction of this church before the investigating committee files charges, then the accused unilaterally forces the entire disciplinary process to be shut down, and makes it unconstitutional for the nature of the accusation(s) to be disclosed (D-3.0106), thereby making it impossible for the judicial process to achieve the purposes of church discipline for all individuals involved (c.f., D-1.0101).

In 2014–2015, G-2.0509 of the Book of Order was amended to create a permanent ban on teaching elders who renounce jurisdiction while being accused in a disciplinary process from working in or for the church in either a paid or volunteer capacity.² While this amendment was written in response to the renunciation of a teaching elder accused of sexual abuse,³ the ban applies to all teaching elders who renounce while being accused "[w]ithout regard for the nature, seriousness, or truth of the alleged delinquency, irregularity, or offense."⁴

As Christians, we live in hope of reconciliation for all. This overture proposes a process by which a former teaching elder, after many years (perhaps decades) of therapy, may publicly face accusations that he or she had evaded before, as a step towards possible reinstatement to be able to work in the church (at least in some capacity). This procedure requires such a person to

- rejoin the church,
- come forward in self-accusation to a presbytery⁵ (which is far more likely to have the resources and expertise to conduct thorough investigations and oversee appropriately comprehensive plans for rehabilitation),
- plead guilty to all charges based on all accusations that had been made at the time of renunciation (so that no one who renounced while being accused could gain any advantage by waiting for victims or key witnesses to move away, move on, or die before coming forward to request a trial),
- have censure imposed without trial and with no participation from victims required (so that the church would not require victims of offenses to come forward to have to re-describe painful events and be re-victimized at a time chosen by the accused⁶),
- and complete appropriate rehabilitation (which would be light for accusations of small offenses and more comprehensive for accusations of severe offenses).

Whenever a former teaching elder wants to come forward and self-report all accusations made by the time he or she renounced (which would assure the public that he or she is no longer evading any previous accusations), this procedure would suspend the five-year statute of limitations for offenses that are not sexual abuse⁷ (e.g., embezzlement), which is consistent with a legal principle established in American federal and state laws starting in 1790.⁸ In this way, a former teaching elder could become genuinely reconciled with the church by coming forward to say something like, "I have a gambling addiction. Ten years ago, I was a pastor who stole $15,000 from my congregation. I renounced jurisdiction after I was accused. But I've been seeing a counselor for nine years, attending Gamblers' Anonymous for eight years, and I haven't placed a bet in six years. I've paid back my former congregation in full. I'd like to be able to apply for a job in youth ministry—I was good at it!" A presbytery may have such a person examined by a forensic psychologist and conclude that the person may be ready to work with youth again.

This overture also recommends that all councils add questions to forms asking about renunciation of jurisdiction. While not everyone is truthful in filling out forms or answering questions,⁹ adding these questions would remind councils that no background check for working in the church is complete until it determines if an applicant used to be a teaching elder, and had renounced jurisdiction while being accused in a disciplinary case.¹⁰

As long as our polity requires that membership in the church be strictly voluntary at all times, then both performing complete background checks on potential workers in the church, and also following the above procedures, are necessary for congregations and all councils of the PC(USA) to avoid future civil and criminal legal action from allowing a former teaching elder who had renounced jurisdiction to harm others. Here in the Twin Cities Area, we have seen what happens when a church entity fails to protect people under its care: The Archdiocese of St Paul and Minneapolis has been served with public nuisance claims and civil petitions, been charged with criminal child endangerment, and filed for bankruptcy.¹¹

When teaching elders who are accused no longer have any advantage in renouncing jurisdiction, we hope that they will all act like ethical professionals for themselves (especially if they are innocent), their profession, and to maintain the public trust. May teaching elders who are accused choose to go through the disciplinary process when they are called, as members of many other professions are required.

Discussion of the “Straw Poll”

The informal “straw poll” of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures on this proposed overture was 4-Yes, 1-No. The member of the committee who voted No indicated a preference for permitting the former teaching elder an opportunity to plead guilty or not guilty whenever the former teaching elder wishes to pursue reinstatement to work.

Frequently Asked Questions and Answers

Isn't requiring someone to plead guilty a bit harsh? Why not just hold a trial as soon as the accused feels ready to confront accusations?

Whenever there is an accusation, the church is obligated to try to fulfill as many purposes of our disciplinary process as possible (c.f., D-1.0101), such as:

- To preserve the purity of the church by nourishing the individual within the life of the believing community,
- To achieve justice and compassion for all participants involved,
- To correct or restrain wrongdoing in order to bring members to repentance and restoration,
- To uphold the dignity of those who have been harmed by disciplinary offenses,
- To restore the unity of the church by removing the causes of discord and division,
- To secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings.

When someone accused renounces jurisdiction during the investigation, the disciplinary process must shut down, and it is not possible for the judicial process to achieve most of these purposes. For example,

- Victims who bravely came forward to tell their stories are stranded without justice.
- An offender who renounced is no longer a member of the believing community and is not brought to repentance.
- Those who are officially aware of the nature of the accusation against the accused are constitutionally prohibited from disclosing it even if they are specifically asked about the accused in all future background checks, so causes for mistrust and discord remain.
- No speedy or just judicial proceeding is possible.

There is also the practical matter that an offender may use renunciation to gain unfair advantage, by waiting until victims or key witnesses move away, move on, or die before coming forward to request a trial, and then argue to be granted benefit of the doubt when victims or key witnesses are unable/unwilling to respond at the time of the offender's choosing.

From a victim's perspective, it is often hard enough for a victim to summon the courage to come forward and describe painful events. Our disciplinary process is designed so that the judicial process proceeds when a victim files an accusation at a time of the victim's choosing, which increases the likelihood that the victim will be able to withstand what is often a grueling process. Allowing an offender to insist that a trial begin at a time of the offender's choosing, when the victim may feel weaker, risks having the complainant feel re-victimized more strongly, or not be strong enough to testify at all.

To maintain the integrity of a profession, and to keep the public trust, judicial processes regarding professional misconduct need to proceed with all deliberate speed, as many professions require. As long as the church allows its members who are accused to renounce jurisdiction and shut down disciplinary processes at any time (unlike many other professions), other kinds of procedures will be necessary for the church to keep the public trust.

What if the accused just wanted a brief delay before a trial began?

While there are time limits in the “Rules of Discipline” for reporting accusations not related to sexual abuse and to file charges (D-10.0401), there are no deadlines for negotiating an alternative form of resolution (in lieu of a trial) or conducting a trial, so permanent judicial commissions (PJs) already have ample flexibility in scheduling (e.g., to make allowances for family or medical emergencies). Needing a brief delay before beginning a trial would seem more likely than not to be granted by a PJ, so the accused would likely need a different or stronger reason to renounce jurisdiction.

Why not just amend the Book of Order to require no renunciation of jurisdiction until after the disciplinary process is completed?

Amending the Book of Order to disallow renunciation as soon as a member is accused would probably require even more widespread and drastic changes to our polity than the procedure described in this overture. Church membership would no longer be fully voluntary.

Also, some former teaching elders have already renounced jurisdiction after having been accused of serious offenses. Choosing to amend the Book of Order to “close a back gate” in the future would still leave open the question about what to do if any former teaching elders who have already renounced jurisdiction wish to be reinstated to work. The church will still need to decide on a process that is flexible enough to allow those with accusations of minor offenses to be reinstated quickly, but also to prevent predators from working in the church again.

I like the process, but it seems to be a detailed procedure instead of articulating fundamental principles. Isn't this sequence of procedures contrary to the trend in our polity to decentralize? Why can't this procedure simply be added to manuals of operations to be implemented by committees on ministry instead of being hard-wired into the Book of Order?

It is true that, especially in recent years, a powerful trend in Presbyterian polity has been to have sessions and presbyteries make decisions about inessential matters in accordance to what is best in their particular contexts.

However, in addition to the trend above regarding inessential matters, there has been a concurrent slow trend for the church to recognize that sometimes there are predators in the church, and that it is essential for the church to prevent predators from doing further harm to those who are vulnerable. This other trend is reflected in amendments to the Book of Order that have slowly closed cracks and loopholes that had allowed predators to evade accountability over the last several decades:

- When a teaching elder wishes to be released from ministry as a teaching elder (and thereby leave membership in a presbytery to join a congregation), G-2.0507 prevents the teaching elder from leaving the jurisdiction of the presbytery as long as he or she is accused in a disciplinary case.
- When a teaching elder is accused, transferring to another presbytery is prohibited while an inquiry or charges are pending (D-10.0105).
- When a teaching elder transferred to another presbytery just before an accusation was filed in the teaching elder's former presbytery, our polity did not seem to allow a disciplinary process to proceed. Sometime over the last two decades, the Book of Order was amended to make clear that, if an accuser under the jurisdiction of one presbytery files an accusation against a teaching elder who is a member of a different presbytery, the two “involved councils shall proceed cooperatively with judicial process” (D-10.0104).
- It appears that the last procedure that a predator can use to evade accountability for misconduct is to leave the church altogether by renouncing jurisdiction (D-3.0106). The permanent ban now in G-2.0509 is only a first step towards discerning how to set up a process that keeps the public trust in professional ministry while protecting the church from predators.

Lastly, while there is a trend for the Book of Order to contain fundamental principles instead of uniform procedures, the “Rules of Discipline” still needs to contain many specific safeguarding procedures, since the narratives of people's lives and careers are at stake. To ensure that no one can gain any advantage by renouncing jurisdiction instead of going through the disciplinary process, articulating a procedure in the Book of Order in some detail seems unavoidable.

Endnotes

1. Teaching elders are required to be trained and examined over many years before they are credentialed by presbyteries, after which they have special authorities and responsibilities that other members of the church do not (c.f., G-2.05, G-2.06, G-4.0301, W-1.4005).
2. James 3:1; see also Book of Confessions, 5.167.
3. This amendment was proposed by two presbyteries that had formed a joint administrative commission (AC) to make pastoral inquiry about the actions of a former teaching elder who had renounced jurisdiction while being accused in 2012 [c.f., G-3.0109b(6)]. The AC concluded that the former teaching elder had molested at least five youth with ages ranging from 8 to 17 years old between 1984 to 1995. See the minutes of the stated meeting of the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta on August 17, 2013, pages A-34 to A-67, searchable on-line at: < http://s3.amazonaws.com/dfc_attachments/public/documents/3181744/August_17_2013_Minutes.pdf >.

5. If the former teaching elder joins a congregation, the session would request a reference in order to transfer responsibility of the disciplinary case from the session to its presbytery (D-4.0000). If the presbytery where the self-accused is seeking to be restored to work is not the same as the presbytery in which the self-accused initially renounced jurisdiction, “[t]he involved [presbyteries] shall proceed cooperatively with judicial process” (D-10.0104).

6. A member of the Board of Directors of the Minnesota Coalition Against Sexual Assault (MNCASA) advised that, while victims should not be required to participate since they may feel re-victimized [ed. note: at a time of the offender’s choosing], victims should be given a space to be heard if they wish, since it may be very important to them.

7. Book of Order, D-10.0401.

8. “No statute of limitations shall extend to any person fleeing from justice” (18 U.S.C. §3290). See p. 10 of Doyle, Charles, Statutes of Limitations in Federal Criminal Cases: An Overview, Congressional Research Service, October 1, 2012. (The Reformed tradition has long held that God works through civil/secular government processes as well as those of the church. See Book of Confessions, 5.252–5.253; 8.22.)

9. See the Summary Report of the AC referenced in Footnote 3 above.

10. To complete such a background check today, one can access a database of present and former teaching elders through a PC(USA) website (which has been set up to administer pensions) to determine if an individual ever used to be a teaching elder. Then one can contact the presbytery of which the former teaching elder had most recently been a member to find out if the teaching elder had renounced jurisdiction while being accused in a disciplinary case. Unless the investigating committee filed charges before the accused renounced, the nature of the accusation is never to be disclosed (c.f., D-3.0106).

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 06-10.

The ACWC does not support Item 06-10. We are in agreement with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s advice that this resolution would require an individual to plead guilty to all allegations or charges, which denies the individual the right to a fair trial (D-11.0101) in closed proceedings (D-11.0306), under the presumption of innocence (D-11.0401). This recommendation would enable the individual and councils to forgo important disciplinary procedures that are already indicated in the Book of Order. It is through the already established disciplinary processes that reconciliation is possible.

Item 06-11

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-11. See pp. 49, 51.]

On Amending G-3.0104 to Clarify the Role of Ecclesiastical Officers—From the Presbytery Of Detroit.

The Presbytery of Detroit overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-3.0104 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“G-3.0104 Ecclesiastical Officers

“(a) Moderator

“The pastor of a congregation shall be the moderator of the session of that congregation. In congregations where there are co-pastors, they shall both be considered moderators and have provisions for designating who presides at a particular meeting. If it is impractical for the pastor to moderate, he or she shall invite another teaching elder who is a member of the presbytery or a person authorized by the presbytery to serve as moderator. If there is no installed pastor, or if the installed pastor is unable to invite another moderator, the presbytery shall make provision for a moderator.

“The moderator possesses the authority necessary for preserving order and for conducting efficiently the business of the body. He or she shall convene and adjourn the body in accordance with its own action.

Each council higher than the session shall elect a moderator for such terms as the council determines. At the time of their election, moderators must be continuing members of, or commissioners to, the council over which they are elected to preside. They shall preside at meetings of the council during their term of office; councils shall provide by rule who shall preside in the absence of the moderator.

“(b) Clerk and Stated Clerk

“Each council shall elect a clerk who shall record the transactions of the council, keep its rolls of membership and attendance, maintain any required registers, preserve its records, and furnish extracts from them when required by another council of the church. Such extracts, verified by the clerk, shall be evidence in any council of the church. The clerk of the session shall be a ruling elder elected by the session for such term as it may determine.

“The clerk of a presbytery, a synod, and the General Assembly shall be called stated clerk, shall be elected by the council for a definite term as it may determine, and must be a ruling elder or teaching elder. A stated clerk is the council’s chief ecclesiastical administrator and relates to other governing bodies and Christian communions, interprets council actions, represents the council, staffs the council’s permanent judicial commission, and is the council’s executive secretary and parliamentarian.

“A stated clerk may be removed from office prior to completion of his or her term of service through the use of the process outlined in G-3.0110.

“Councils may elect such other officers as the council requires.”

Rationale

The ecclesiastical governance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is deeply rooted in John Calvin’s Ecclesiastical Ordinances. John Calvin, as well as his successor, Theodore Beza, were committed to the plurality of church ministers, and never intended for church governance to be the right nor responsibility of a single person, be it a bishop or a pastor. Hence the Geneva Consistory and Company of Pastors informed the reformation of the Church of Scotland under John Knox and Andrew Melville, from whence our denomination descends, along with our polity.¹

These amendments underscore the historic and current chief ecclesiastical offices of each council of the church. With these amendments the elected offices of the church are further defined as ecclesial, which aids in our ecumenical dialogues, and gives further explanation of their particular functions.²

The amendment to the role of moderators in the ordination and installation of ordered ministers connects the Form of Government to the Directory for Worship, and underscores the historic role of all moderators in this sacred role in local congregations as well as in presbyteries.

The amendment to the role of stated clerks more clearly marks the historic tradition and function of a stated clerk within the Presbyterian tradition, and brings the Form of Government in line with the practice and the guidance already given by the Office of the General Assembly.

Endnotes

1. For further reading on the historic role of moderators and clerks, see Scott M. Manetsch, Calvin’s Company of Pastors: Pastoral Care and the Emerging Reformed Church 1536–1609. New York: Oxford University Press, 2013.
2. Under Calvin and Bucer, the role of moderator was to be the presiding presbyter elected by peers, responsible to oversee the meetings of the assembled presbyters of a given council, and served as the chief spokesperson. The moderator was also given precedence at ceremonial functions, like ordinations and installations (Ibid, 62). This was one part of the former role of a bishop in episcopal traditions. The role and function of principal or stated clerks is administrative, again picking up the other part of the traditional role of bishops in the episcopal traditions, having oversight and stewardship of the daily business of a given council as well as judicial process.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-11

Advice on Item 06-11—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 06-11.

The overture proposes an amendment to G-3.0104 to insert language concerning the roles and functions of stated clerks. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the overture would grant powers to the stated clerk that constitutionally reside within the council, and are best left to individual councils to delegate according to the needs of their particular context. In addition, by assigning different roles and functions to stated clerks only (and not clerks of session) the essential unity of the office across gradations of councils would be lost. The particular proposals will be addressed serially.

The descriptors used in the overture pose particular challenges. The title “chief ecclesiastical administrator” is not supported by the Constitution or by the historical polity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It also creates immediate conflict in councils where this role has been assigned to other executive or administrative staff or has been retained by the council itself. The language, “relates to other governing bodies and Christian communions, interprets, council actions, represents the council...” suggests broad authority that is not supported by the Constitution. The inherent powers of the stated clerk are limited to the specific functions enumerated in the Constitution.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) (Item 05-14) clarified the distinction between the core constitutional functions inherent in the office of stated clerk and the administrative functions which may be assigned to stated clerks, executives, other administrative staff, or may be retained by the council (G-3.0110). The powers of oversight, interpretation, and relationship to other councils or denominations reside in the body as a whole, of which the officers are servants: “Ecclesiastical jurisdiction is a shared power, to be exercised jointly by presbyters gathered in councils” (F-3.0208).

The stated clerk performs important functions assigned in the Rules of Discipline. However, the phrase “staffs the council’s permanent judicial commission” could suggest roles and functions not enumerated in the Constitution, and does not properly reflect the role of the stated clerk as a facilitator for judicial process beyond the permanent judicial commission.

Particular advice is warranted regarding the title “parliamentarian.” The Book of Order nowhere requires the appointment of a parliamentarian or that it be a role assigned to the stated clerk. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises this is a role that should be addressed in the standing rules of the council and not mandated by the Constitution.

The overture would impose a staffing model irrespective of the particular needs and context of a council. Historically and presently, the role of council officers in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been limited by design. This does not preclude a council from assigning additional duties and delegating responsibility to a clerk should it so choose, according to its particular mission context.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-11

Comment on Item 06-11—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 06-11, on amending G-3.0104 to clarify the role of ecclesiastical officers.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk, as well as the Standing Rules under which the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly operates.

This item would mandate that stated clerks in presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly be assigned duties that they may or may not currently have. COGA is of the view that building such responsibilities into the Form of Government is unwise. First, it constrains all councils in the structure of their administration, at a time in the denomination in which the Form of Government seeks to allow councils freedom in designing structure and administration. Many current presbytery or synod stated clerks may have no interest in taking on the responsibilities added by this amendment. Those councils that wish to add such responsibilities to the duties of their stated clerks are currently free to do so. At the General Assembly level, the proposal is unclear in precisely what it means that the Stated Clerk “interprets council actions,” “represents the council,” and “is the council’s executive secretary and parliamentarian.” The committee is concerned that at a time in which the denomination is engaged in actively discerning its identity, such an amendment may add either confusion to the process or remove flexibility in the consideration of the most effective expressions of that identity.

Item 06-12

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-12. See pp. 49, 52.]

On Amending Book of Order, G-6.02, Concerning the Role of the ACC and PJC When Constitutional Questions Are Considered by the General Assembly—From the Presbytery of Grand Canyon.

The Presbytery of Grand Canyon overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Amend the first paragraph of G-6.02 as follows: [Text to be added is shown as italic.]

“The General Assembly may provide authoritative interpretation of the Book of Order, which shall be binding on the councils of the church when rendered in the manner described in this section or through a decision of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission in a remedial or disciplinary case. The General Assembly’s Permanent Judicial Commission may issue a stay of enforcement if it finds the enactment of an authoritative interpretation (AI) to have been issued outside of the prescribed procedures found in the General Assembly's Standing Rules and deemed detrimental to the denomination as a whole."

Rationale

It seems obvious that some changes need to be made in the General Assembly's Standing Rules so that they more clearly and explicitly define the governing procedures and express the scriptural basis upon which our denomination was ordained.

Understanding that recommendations of the Advisory Committee of the Constitution (ACC), which become authoritative interpretations (AI) when passed by the General Assembly, commissioners not only carry with them the authority of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) but also become effective immediately. Nevertheless, they should not be enacted in haste. The importance of such action and its effect upon the numerous individual church bodies requires much thought and prayerful deliberation in order to prevent the abuse of power by a few.

The commissioners to General Assembly must have the ability to clearly understand the implications resulting from their support of an authoritative interpretation (AI), the rationale of the issues placed before them, and the process by which an AI is both rendered and implemented. The existing procedure has a tendency to be self-serving and does not provide for transparency. The ability of the permanent judiciary committee to issue a stay of enforcement of an enacted AI is essential to protecting the integrity and the credibility of the Presbyterian denomination.

The current rules for amending the Book of Order by a simple majority vote of one General Assembly and a simple majority of the presbyteries has fostered the instability of the church's Constitution. The result of this condition has led to both the loss of support for the work we are commissioned to achieve and a decline in the denomination's membership.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-12

Advice on Item 06-12—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) that Item 06-12 amendment to the Book of Order be disapproved.

This overture would expand the powers of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission to permit that body to stay enforcement of an action of the assembly itself. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to disapprove Item 06-12.

This overture proposes that G-6.02 be amended to grant authority to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) to issue a stay of enforcement of an action by the General Assembly. The GAPJC has specific authority to act in response to the facts of a particular case. The GAPJC does not have general power to review or invalidate the actions of the General Assembly. The GAPJC found in First Presbyterian Church, Palmdale v. The 221st General Assembly (222-02) that "this Commission [GAPJC] has no jurisdiction over the GA or the Committee."

This amendment posits a fundamental change in the power of the GAPJC. In effect, it makes the GAPJC the final arbiter of all actions, including those of the assembly. It is inherently inappropriate for a council to assign, outside its constitution, the power to overrule the will of the council to one of its commissions. (The power of the GAPJC to issue authoritative interpretations in specific cases is granted by the Constitution, not the assembly.) The 219th Assembly (2010) considered the inverse proposal that GAPJC decisions be reviewed by the assembly, and rejected that amendment (Item 05-24).

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-12

Comment on Item 06-12—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly advises the assembly to disapprove Item 06-12.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) consists of fifteen elected members and was created "to carry out the assembly's oversight of the Stated Clerk ..." (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It also regularly reviews the Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

The COGA believes that approval of this item is not practical, wise, or consistent with our polity. The proposed amendment would give the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Committee (GAPJC) the power to stay an action of the General Assembly, but nothing more. The GAPJC has found that the Rules of Discipline give it no power to review an action of the General Assembly. See, e.g., Session of First Presbyterian Church Palmdale v. The 221st General Assembly, Remedial Case 2014-06; Session, New Lebanon Church v. General Assembly, Remedial Case 210-8, Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 137; Metherell

v. The 204th General Assembly, Remedial Case 205-3, Minutes, 1993, Part I, p. 177. Thus, the proposal would grant the GAPJC the power to stay an action of a General Assembly, but not the power to move forward to determine whether the action was legitimate. Further, the GAPJC is a commission of the General Assembly. It would be a major departure from Presbyterian polity to allow a commission to review and overturn a decision of the council that created it.

On Amending Section G-2.1001 to Clarify the Discretion Given Presbyteries to Utilize Commissioned Ruling Elders—From the Presbytery de Cristo.

The Presbytery de Cristo respectfully overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.1001 be amended as follows: [Text to be inserted is shown as italic.]

“When the presbytery, in consultation with the session or other responsible committee within the presbytery, determines that its strategy for mission requires it, the presbytery may authorize a ruling elder to be commissioned to limited pastoral service as assigned by the presbytery. A ruling elder so designated may be commissioned to serve in a validated ministry of the presbytery. Presbytery, in its commission, may authorize the ruling elder to moderate the session of the congregation to which he or she is commissioned, to administer the Sacraments, and to officiate at marriages where permitted by state law. The commission may be to more than one specified congregation for occasional specified service, when such requests for occasional service originate from the session or its clerk or the pastor. This commission shall also specify the term of service, which shall not exceed three years but shall be renewable. The presbytery shall review the commission at least annually.”

Rationale

A number of presbyteries (such as the Presbytery de Cristo) have churches not served by a teaching elder (TE) nor, on a regular basis, by an assigned commissioned ruling elder (CRE). In addition, there may be some number of single pastor (sometimes part-time) churches, and geographical distances involved which mean that TE’s are not always available or agreeable to administering the Sacraments or moderating session or congregational meetings when congregations or their sessions so require.

To deal with this, several presbyteries (including de Cristo) have adopted the commissioning of CRE’s to a list of specific congregations where, upon request from the clerk of session or the session or, in other cases, the TE, these CRE’s can administer the Sacraments or moderate meetings at any of these named congregations.

While these presbyteries believe this is wholly within the bounds of the existing section G-2.1001 of the Book of Order, there has been a disciplinary complaint filed seeking to reject this practice as not in accord with the Book of Order.

While this complaint may well ultimately fail in the judicial system of the church, it appears sensible and helpful to the presbyteries using CRE’s in this manner and to others considering such usage, to remove any ambiguity in G-2.1001 and provide for such service to congregations.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-13

Advice on Item 06-13—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly to disapprove Item 06-13.

The amendment seeks to permit the use of commissioned ruling elders in more than one congregation to perform occasional specified tasks. From the overture’s rationale, these tasks are celebrating the Sacraments and moderating session and congregational meetings, when securing a teaching elder to perform them is difficult. While the overture is focused on the Sacraments and moderating, the proposed amendment will make it possible for a commissioned ruling elder to perform any function included in the commission, upon invitation by a session, its clerk, or pastor.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that this amendment is not necessary. One of the provisions of G-2.1001 empowers the presbytery to determine, if its strategy for mission requires it, how to structure commissions within the presbytery. There is nothing in G-2.10 that limits a presbytery from doing what this overture would provide, and G-2.0504b permits a presbytery to create temporary pastoral relationships for congregations that do not have an installed pastor, including a temporary relationship of occasional pulpit supply.

Section G-3.0301b gives a presbytery the responsibility and power of “authorizing and training specific ruling elders to administer or preside at the Lord’s Supper when it deems it necessary to meet the needs for the administration of the Sacrament.” Commissioned ruling elders are already trained and often authorized to celebrate the Lord’s Supper, as spelled out in their commissions. This service can also be provided by any ruling elder that the presbytery has trained and authorized.

Three sections of the Form of Government address the issue of the moderator of a congregation or session: G-1.0504, G-3.0104, and G-3.0201. All indicate that if the moderator is unable to serve, the presbytery shall make provision for a moderator. Section G-3.0201 states that “presbyteries shall provide by rule for moderators when the session is without a moderator for reasons of vacancy or inconvenience.” A presbytery may define such a rule to permit commissioned ruling elders to serve as moderator, when invited by the pastor or moderator. The presbytery can train and authorize other ruling elders to serve as moderator, when needed, such as former moderators of presbytery or members of the committee on ministry, or its equivalent.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) disapprove Item 06-13.

The ACREC concurs with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) and urges the assembly to follow the ACC advice.

On Creating a Rules of Discipline Task Force Charged with Revising the Rules of Discipline—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the PC(USA) to create a Rules of Discipline Task Force, to be charged with revising the entire Rules of Discipline to make the Rules of Discipline more accessible to the church, to preserve and enhance the accountability of councils and individuals to the church, to expand the role of mediation and alternate dispute resolution, and to provide flexibility in crafting censures and remedies, particularly in light of recent learnings in ethical and social development and experiments by the secular legal system with alternative sentencing. The task force, which shall be appointed by the 222nd General Assembly (2016) Moderator, shall release its proposed revised draft by September 2017, and shall gather comments and present a final report to the 224th General Assembly (2020).

Rationale

The Rules of Discipline express a profound vision:

The power that Jesus Christ has vested in his Church, a power manifested in the exercise of church discipline, is one for building up the body of Christ, not for destroying it, for redeeming, not for punishing. It should be exercised as a dispensation of mercy and not of wrath so that the great ends of the Church may be achieved, that all children of God may be presented faultless in the day of Christ. (Book of Order, D-1.0102).

Unfortunately, the vision does not match the reality.

The Rules of Discipline are confusing to those who are unfamiliar with them: one cannot read the Rules of Discipline and understand how the process works. Moreover, much of the binding authority interpreting the Rules of Discipline is found only in decisions of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission or authoritative interpretations by the General Assembly. That authority is accessible only to persons who know about and can access the Annotated Book of Order and/or the Stated Clerks’ Handbook.

The Rules of Discipline are poorly organized. The chapters pertaining to remedial actions describe what a complaint is (D-6.0201) and who may file it (D-6.0202), only after explaining in detail how to request a stay (D-6.0100). The necessary subject of a remedial action, a delinquency or an irregularity by a council, is defined four chapters earlier (D-2.0202). Jurisdictional requirements, also known as preliminary questions, while implied in D-2.0202 (definition of irregularity and delinquency) and D-6.0202 (who may file), are actually found in D-6.0305—Examination of Papers. Confusion about who may file has been particularly acute in cases involving synod administrative commissions assuming original jurisdiction over presbyteries, including presbytery administrative commissions, for example Hwang v. Synod of Southern California and Hawaii, Remedial Case 220-05 (2011); Kim, et al. v. Administrative Commission of the Synod of Lincoln Trails, Remedial Case 221-07 (2013).

The chapters pertaining to disciplinary actions are equally confusing. An “offense” is defined only as “any act or omission by a member or a person in an ordered ministry of the church that is contrary to the Scriptures or the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (D-2.0203b). However, there is also a significant definition of “sexual abuse,” found in D-10.0401. Section D-10.0401 provides the statute of limitations for offenses, but does so only in the context of explaining when charges may be filed. Inexplicably, while there is no statute of limitations for sexual abuse, the usual five-year statute of limitations applies to all other forms of abuse, including serious, perhaps even fatal, physical abuse.

Above all, it is time to evaluate the wisdom of the Rules of Discipline. The advantage of our current process is that it acts as an intervention—confronting the accused with the consequences of his or her own behavior—while also giving the victim a voice. The requirement of a public rebuke provides for transparency: rebukes put the basic facts on the table, and guarantee both that misconduct will not be swept under the rug and that those involved in the disciplinary process—the stated clerk, the permanent judicial commission, the investigating committee—cannot act as a secret police.

However, the current language required in rebukes is quite harsh (see, e.g., D-12.0102), and out of proportion for many offenses. For lesser wrongs, the harshness of the mandatory rebuke promotes alienation rather than healing and restoration. Because there is no censure that does not include a rebuke, and no flexibility to temper the language of a rebuke to fit the severity of the offense, one ends by rebuking a jaywalker with the same words one uses to rebuke an ax murderer. The only alternative to public shaming is sweeping the problem under the rug. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can do better than this. We have much to learn, particularly from the secular legal system’s experiments with alternative sentencing for juveniles and misdemeanors.

Over the past decade, the Form of Government has been substantially revised, and a revised Directory for Worship will be presented to the 222nd General Assembly (2016) for consideration and adoption. It is time for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to turn its attention to the Rules of Discipline, so it may fulfill the promise of its Preamble.

The purpose of discipline is to honor God by making clear the significance of membership in the body of Christ; to preserve the purity of the church by nourishing the individual within the life of the believing community; to achieve justice and compassion for all participants involved; to correct or restrain wrongdoing in order to bring members to repentance and restoration; to uphold the dignity of those who have been harmed by disciplinary offenses; to restore the unity of the church by removing the causes of discord and division; and to secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings (D-1.0101).

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-14

Comment on Item 06-14—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly respectfully urges the assembly to disapprove Item 06-14, on creating a Rules of Discipline Task Force charged with revising the Rules of Discipline.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members and was created “to carry out the assembly’s oversight of the Stated Clerk ...” (Organization for Mission, IV.C.2.). It regularly reviews the work of the Stated Clerk. In that capacity, it has had opportunity to review the effectiveness of the Rules of Discipline. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly also oversees the per capita budget of the General Assembly, which would fund the task force proposed.

In light of the few specific concerns raised by the overture, which could be addressed by future overtures making relatively minor revisions to the existing Rules of Discipline, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly is concerned that the expense of creating a task force is not justified by the concerns raised. Each of the concerns raised in this overture could be addressed by a straightforward amendment to the Rules of Discipline, if indeed the concern has merit. In addition to the cost of creating a task force, a major revision of the Rules of Discipline, made simply for the sake of revision, would remove useful precedential interpretations of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission and create confusion in cases currently in process. The Committee of the Office of the General Assembly does not see evidence that any of these costs are warranted.

Item 06-15

Recommendation to Amend G-2.1101, Forms of Certified Church Service, in the Book of Order and also Approve National Certifying Bodies—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) do the following:

[The assembly approved Item 06-15, Recommendation 1. See pp. 49, 52.]

1. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following Book of Order amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Shall G-2.1101 be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

~~“Persons may be certified and called to service within congregations, councils, and church-related entities, serving in staff positions. These individuals endeavor to reflect their faith through their work and to strengthen the church through their dedication. They should be encouraged by their session and presbytery to meet, or be prepared to meet, the certification requirements in a handbook provided by of a national certifying body approved by the General Assembly. Names of those who have earned certification through a national certifying body shall be transmitted to the appropriate body of the General Assembly, which will forward them to the stated clerk of the presbyteries in which those persons labor.”~~

Rationale for Recommendation 1.

Current language in the Book of Order calling for a “handbook” seems antiquated and limiting. Most organizations maintain certification requirements on-line or in other electronic formats. This change would provide clarification and reflect current practice.

[The assembly approved Item 06-15, Recommendation 2. See pp. 49, 52.]

2. Approve the applications of the Administrative Personnel Association, the Educator Certification Committee, and the Presbyterian Association of Musicians as national certifying bodies.

Rationale for Recommendation 2.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s Book of Order calls for the General Assembly to approve national certifying bodies in order for those individuals achieving certification to be recognized in the church. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly approved, at its October 2015 meeting, the application process for organizations wishing to be recognized as national certifying bodies.

Approved national certifying bodies are approved for the period of time starting at the close of the General Assembly where the approving action was taken to the close of the next General Assembly. These organizations must apply every two years (for consideration at the biennial General Assemblies) to maintain their status as an approved national certifying body.

Applications were due to the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) by January 15, 2016. OGA received three applications: the Administrative Personnel Association, the Educator Certification Committee, and the Presbyterian Association of Musicians. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) is asked to review the applications and transmit appropriate applications to the General Assembly for action.

COGA, in reviewing the applications, gave thanks to the Administrative Professionals Association, Educator Certification Committee, and the Presbyterian Association of Musicians. As the applications were reviewed, COGA discussed two areas for comment. First is uncertain financial standing on which these professional associations stand. Two of the three certifying bodies recommended by COGA operated on a deficit budget in the last fiscal year. COGA encourages all certifying bodies to determine a strategic path to return to financial solvency in the near future. Second, COGA encourages these certifying bodies to explore ways to increase membership and certification within their memberships. COGA affirms the necessity for these certifying bodies in our church and further encourages these groups to continue their work while exploring ways to be creative in growing their work to reach all eligible church professionals.

G-2.11 CERTIFIED CHURCH SERVICE

G-2.1101 Forms of Certified Church Service

Persons may be certified and called to service within congregations, councils, and church-related entities, serving in staff positions. These individuals endeavor to reflect their faith through their work and to strengthen the church through their dedication. They should be encouraged by their session and presbytery to meet, or be prepared to meet, the certification requirements in a handbook provided by a national certifying body approved by the General Assembly. Names of those who have earned certification through a national certifying body shall be transmitted to the appropriate body of the General Assembly, which will forward them to the stated clerk of the presbyteries in which those persons labor.

G-2.1102 Presbytery and Certified Church Service

The presbytery shall encourage sessions to make continuing education funds and time available to those seeking certification, and shall affirm the skill and dedication of these certified persons by providing a service of recognition at the time of certification. The presbytery may grant the privilege of voice at all its meetings to persons in certified church service.

G-2.1103 Christian Educators

a. Skills and Training

Certified Christian educators are persons certified and called to service in the ministry of education in congregations or councils. They shall have skills and training in biblical interpretation, Reformed theology, worship and sacraments, human development, faith development, religious educational theory and practice, and the polity, programs, and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

b. Presbytery Responsibility

The presbytery shall establish minimum requirements for compensation and benefits for Certified Christian Educators and Certified Associate Christian Educators and shall provide access to the area of presbytery that oversees ministry (G-3.0307). During their term of service in an educational ministry under the jurisdiction of the presbytery, Certified Christian Educators are entitled to the privilege of the floor with voice only at all presbytery meetings, and in the case of Certified Christian Educators who are ruling elders, the privilege of voice and vote at all its meetings.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-15

Advice on Item 06-15—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 06-15.

Current language in the Book of Order calling for a “handbook” seems antiquated and limiting. Most organizations maintain certification requirements online or in other electronic formats. This change would provide clarification and reflect current practice.

Item 06-16

[The assembly referred Item 06-16 to the Office of the General Assembly with comment. See pp. 49, 52.]

[Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) refers Item 06-16 to the Office of the General Assembly to develop and recommend language that addresses the problems raised by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) and report to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).]

A Resolution to Extend Time Limits on Abuse Reporting in Instances of Gross Negligence—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote:

Amend D-10.0401 by adding a new section “d.” to read as follows:

“d. For instances of gross negligence enabling the sexual abuse of another person, charges may be filed within ten years of the date the person making the accusation attains the age of eighteen, or within five years of the date the person making the accusation discovers or reasonably should have discovered that gross negligence enabled the sexual abuse to occur, whichever later occurs.”

Rationale

This recommendation adds to the list of those additional persons who are to be held accountable for the abuse of children, expands the definition of behavior that may fall under the disciplinary process, and removes the time limitation.

Extensions for filing civil actions for child sexual abuse are most often based upon the discovery rule—by the time the victim discovers the sexual abuse or the relationship of the conduct to the injuries, the ordinary time limitation may have expired. This “delayed discovery” may be due to emotional and psychological trauma and is often accompanied by repression of the memory of abuse. [For victims that are minors, they] frequently do not discover the relationship of their psychological injuries to the abuse until well into adulthood—usually during the course of psychological counseling or therapy. They may not even discover the fact of such abuse until they undergo such therapy. (State Civil Statutes of Limitations in Child Sexual Abuse Cases.” National Conference of State Legislatures. National Conference of State Legislatures, July 2012. 20 October 2015. <http://www.ncsl.org/research/human-services/state-civil-statutes-of-limitations-in-child-sexua.aspx>)

Additionally, it has been well documented that children are “groomed” by their abusers not to talk about being sexually abused. The process of grooming that perpetrators engage in conditions the young person to believe that “telling” would cause some great irreparable damage, either to themselves, their families, or even the abuser. Often times, “keeping that secret becomes the only thing the child can do to feel some safety, some semblance of control.” And, it can take decades for the victim to begin a journey toward healing and becoming a survivor (“Why Don’t Children Report Abuse Earlier?” Stop Abuse Campaign: Working Together to Stop Abuse. Stop Abuse Campaign, n.d. Web. 20 Oct. 2015. <https://stopabusecampaign.com/protect-children/child-abuse-prevention-courses/why-dont-children-report-aabuse-earlier/>).

Once victims of sexual abuse in the church have come to a safe, emotional, psychological, or even spiritual space to report abuse, often well into adulthood, they are often met with time limitations that prohibit finding true systemic accountability. The current language of the Book of Order allows for a disciplinary process to hold perpetrators accountable, but decision makers and church leaders who acted with gross negligence (who knew or reasonably should have known of the danger or risk posed by perpetrators with histories of boundary violations involving sexual misconduct) are unable to be held accountable.

It is the church’s responsibility to provide a safe and sacred space for children and youth to discover their God-given potential, “and we must take seriously how our faith informs this responsibility. Our theology of the child is reflected in how we care for and nurture children and youth who are under the care of the church. This theology must reflect the love, care, and high regard for the humanity and dignity of the child reflected in the Gospels” (“14-C. Child Protection Policy.” Pcusa.org. Office of the General Assembly: Presbyterian Church (U.S.A), 2014. Web. 27 Oct. 2015, p. 11, [http://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/oga/pdf/2014-proposed-boa-electronic-version\[1\].pdf](http://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/oga/pdf/2014-proposed-boa-electronic-version[1].pdf)). And, it must take seriously the power and role of decision makers and church leaders who are entrusted with the responsibility of providing safe and sacred space.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-16

Advice on Item 06-16—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 222nd General Assembly (2016) that Item 06-16 from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns raises issues that the assembly should consider.

The overture seeks to extend the time limitation for filing charges in cases of alleged “gross negligence enabling the sexual abuse of another person” from the default time limit of five years to “within ten years of the date the person making the accusation attains the age of eighteen, or within five years of the date the person making the accusation discovers or reasonably should have discovered that gross negligence enabled the sexual abuse to occur, whichever later occurs.”

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution concurs with the intent of the recommendation and finds the intent consistent with the purposes of discipline. The recommendation, however, raises the following issues:

1. The recommendation proposes introducing legal terminology into the Rules of Discipline that is not constitutionally defined. “Gross negligence” and “enabling” are defined in particular jurisdictions of secular law, but are not defined in the Constitution. As with the term “sexual abuse” in D-10.0401c, a specific definition is warranted to justify the waiver or extension of time limits for filing charges.

2. A specific definition is also necessary to help identify the scope of persons to be held responsible for “gross negligence enabling the sexual abuse of another person.”

3. The lack of definition noted in 1. and 2. above may intimidate persons so that they discount efforts at rehabilitation and restoration to good standing following a conviction lest they risk exposure to charges in the future.

4. The determination of the applicable time limit as stated in the overture—“within five years of the date the person making the accusation discovers or reasonably should have discovered”—presents issues of fundamental fairness. An accused person could only assert a time bar against the charges through a trial of fact at a preliminary hearing without having seen the evidence on which the determination is based, or submit to a full trial in order to establish a claim against the timeliness of the filing of the charges. This particular concern could be addressed by removing time limits for filing charges alleging the proposed offense, as is the case with charges alleging sexual abuse.

Because of the issues of ambiguity and fundamental fairness outlined above, the ACC advises the assembly that, should it agree with the intent of the recommendation, it refer the recommendation to the Office of the General Assembly to develop and recommend language that addresses the problems raised above and report back to the 223rd General Assembly (2018).

Item 06-17

[The assembly approved Item 06-17 with amendment. See pp. 13, 52.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. Seeking Support for Settlements of Disputes Regarding Church Property.

The 222nd General Assembly (2016)

1. takes notice that this conflict (settlement of disputes regarding church property) exists and acknowledges that presbyteries are working to adapt to a difficult and changing legal landscape;

2. prays for our presbyteries and our congregations as they face legal challenges[§] [.]

3. [Recommendation 3. was declined because it implied constitutional interpretation.]

~~[4. invites this General Assembly to encourage conversation about the long term implications of court rulings that property is a legal issue and not an ecclesiastical issue.]~~

Rationale

This commissioners’ resolution originates from situations that are developing in the State of Texas and in other areas, as well. Due to recent court decisions, circumstances now exist where presbyteries are functionally unable to enforce G-4.0203 (Church Property Held in Trust, known as the Trust Clause). This commissioners’ resolution seeks to inform the General Assembly of the current situation, to petition the body for prayers for the affected presbyteries, and to ask for forbearance as presbyteries seek to work through a developing conflict between state law and the requirements of the Book of Order.

Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), each congregation has the right and responsibility to own, possess, and control church property.

The only ecclesiastical limitations to the property rights of a congregation are found in the Book of Order: G-4.0203 (Church Property Held in Trust), G-4.0204 (Property Used Contrary to the Constitution), and G-4.0205 (Property of a Dissolved or Extinct Congregation).

Congregations have challenged these and similar ecclesiastical property rules in state courts and, in some states, courts are ruling consistently in favor of the local congregations and against the larger ecclesiastical judicatories.

The “presbytery is responsible for the government of the church throughout its district, and for assisting and supporting the witness of congregations to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that all congregations become communities of faith, hope, love, and witness” (G-3.0301, see also G-3.0303b, d(3), e).

This commissioners’ resolution seeks relief for presbyteries where there is now a conflict between the Book of Order and the state law. The conflict exists clearly when ecclesiastical law requires the presbytery to defend the property interests of the PC(USA) and civil law, either through judicial rulings or legislative action, has rendered the Trust Clause (G-4.0203, Church Property Held in Trust) to be of no force or effect.

For example, in some states it may be permissible for a congregation to ask to clarify its property rights. This request might take the form of a congregation, acting properly through its trustees, asking the presbytery to execute a Quitclaim Deed in favor of the congregation. Regardless of the requirements of state law, the Book of Order arguably prohibits the presbytery from granting the congregation’s request and requires the presbytery to defend the property interests of the PC(USA).

In similar circumstances, some congregations have filed lawsuits against the presbytery, the synod, and the PC(USA). This litigation has been costly and counterproductive. Some presbyteries have suffered significant financial losses related to the litigation. In these lawsuits, congregations routinely request and courts routinely issue restraining orders against the higher governing bodies. These restraining orders limit a presbytery’s ability to fulfill its ordinary ecclesiastical responsibilities.

BACKGROUND: The Book of Order and Church Property

The Book of Order reflects wisdom received from our predecessor denominations, including the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA) and the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS). An example of this is the shared value reflected in the principle that church property is held in trust for the larger denomination. In the circumstances of congregational dissolutions and church closures, this principle has allowed for the church property to be used to carry the work of the church to successive generations. However, recent state court rulings and other legislative actions have created circumstances where the requirements of the Book of Order are in conflict with the requirements of state law. This situation is unproductive and unsustainable for affected presbyteries.

In principle and in practice each congregation is simultaneously an expression of the Body of Christ and an institution of the state in which it is located. This is to say that each congregation, as a part of the Body of Christ, bears witness to Jesus Christ in the fullness of our biblical and theological traditions; and, that each congregation, as an institution of the world, is also subject to the ordering and responsibilities required by civil authorities. When addressing issues of church property ownership and possession, the language of the Book of Order reflects the richness of our heritage, the complex nature of the church, and our commitment to the ongoing work of the church.

The Book of Order recognizes civil law and requires compliance with it. For example, our Form of Government establishes, “Where permitted by civil law, each congregation shall cause a corporation to be formed and maintained” (G-4.0101). Furthermore, the Form of Government grants certain civil responsibilities to the congregation:

The corporation so formed, or the individual trustees, shall have the following powers: to receive, hold, encumber, manage, and transfer property, real or personal, for the congregation, provided that in buying, selling, and mortgaging real property, the trustees shall act only after the approval of the congregation, granted in a duly constituted meeting; to accept and execute deeds of title to such property; to hold and defend title to such property; to manage any permanent special funds for the furtherance of the purposes of the congregation, all subject to the authority of the session and under the provisions of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The powers and duties of the trustees shall not infringe upon the powers and duties of the session or the board of deacons. (Book of Order, G-4.0101)

The Book of Order also recognizes the connectional nature of the church and its continuation throughout the ages. Such is the wisdom that grants certain property rights to higher governing authorities—that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is to continue beyond the lifespan of any particular congregation. As there was in the constitutions of the PCUS and the UPCUSA, the current Book of Order includes a provision that the property is held in trust for the denomination. “All property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ... is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (Book of Order, G-4.0203)

The language of the Book of Order recognizes that each congregation has authority and responsibility for the property owned by the congregation. However, the language of G-4.0203, G-4.0204, and G-4.0205 creates a property interest in favor of the PC(USA). A presbytery is required to take action in any of three possible situations: (1) when property “ceases to be used by that congregation as a congregation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in accordance with this Constitution” (Book of Order, G-4.0204), (2) when “a congregation is formally dissolved by the presbytery” (G-4.0205), and (3) when a congregation “has become extinct by reason of the dispersal of its members, the abandonment of its work, or other cause” (Book of Order, G-4.0205).

BACKGROUND: Conflicting Requirements of State Law

This commissioners' resolution has its origins in the State of Texas. The circumstances described in this rationale are rooted in a decision of the Texas Supreme Court. These same issues are likely to apply to other states and to other presbyteries as well.

In 2013, the Texas Supreme Court issued a widely publicized ruling regarding a property dispute between a congregation and The Episcopal Church of the United States (Masterson v. Diocese of Northwest Texas, 2013). At issue was a property dispute between a congregation and the denomination; and, like the PC(USA)'s Book of Order, the constitution of The Episcopal Church includes a property trust clause.

Among the issues addressed by the Texas Supreme Court was the legal methodology to be applied when considering issues related to the ownership and possession of church property. The court decided in favor of using a standard known as "neutral principals of law." The court concluded:

Under the neutral principles methodology, courts decide non-ecclesiastical issues such as property ownership based on the same neutral principles of law applicable to other entities, Jones v. Wolf, 443 U.S. 595, 603–04 (1979), while deferring to religious entities' decisions on ecclesiastical and church polity questions. See Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevic, 426 U.S. 696, 708 (1976). (<file:///C:/Users/tstephen/Documents/RGAs/2016/Commissioners%20Resolutions/Robert-Masterson-et-al.-v.-Diocese-of-Northwest-Texas-et-al..pdf>, p. 2) and

Properly exercising jurisdiction requires courts to apply neutral principles of law to non-ecclesiastical issues involving religious entities in the same manner as they apply those principles to other entities and issues. Thus, courts are to apply neutral principles of law to issues such as land titles, trusts, and corporate formation, governance, and dissolution, even when religious entities are involved. (Ibid., p. 19)

The methodology of "neutral principles of law" does not simply or immediately wipe-away the property interests of the PC(USA). This methodology introduces a new and complex set of issues to be considered. The specifics are likely to vary from state-to-state, but, some of the matters to be considered are foreign to the language used in the Book of Order.

In Masterson, the Texas Supreme Court listed some of these considerations.

Under the neutral principles methodology, ownership of disputed property is determined by applying generally applicable law and legal principles. That application will usually include considering evidence such as deeds to the properties, terms of the local church charter (including articles of incorporation and by laws, if any), and relevant provisions of governing documents of the general church. (Ibid., pp. 14–15)

As it currently reads, the Book of Order does not allow for a presbytery to consider the information required by the neutral principles of law and then to act in a manner that is inconsistent with G-4.0203.

ACSWP ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-17

Advice & Counsel on Item 06-17—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 06-17 be disapproved.

This resolution appears to recommend that presbyteries accept and accommodate the use of "neutral principles" in some state laws governing church property, an approach that leaves out consideration of internal church principles and laws such as those that bind our congregations together. To say that we all hold our properties in trust to the single body to which we all belong is an important part of the identity of any connectional or hierarchical church. It should be part of the free practice of our religious beliefs to be able to define our own approaches to matters of property. It has generally been the practice of the PC(USA) (and some ecumenical partners) to contest the claims of congregations that decide to change their identity or affiliation and take with them property dedicated to our church and its predecessors.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) sees the trust clause to embody the solidarity of the church and the conviction that the church cannot be "owned." The Heidelberg Catechism states, "That I am not my own, but belong—body and soul, in life and in death—to my faithful Savior, Jesus Christ" (Book of Confessions, 4.001). The trust clause puts this in both communal and concrete terms, so that we "are not [our] own . . ." In practical terms, it separates us from congregational polities, and throughout our history there have been various ways funds have circulated and been used to support each other. It is part of our social witness as a community to maintain that shared trust that points to the larger whole.

In a context where our church's beliefs are challenged and efforts made to weaken our connectionalism, ACSWP would encourage conversation on how to strengthen our bonds of mutual accountability and our ability to resist legal and other efforts to weaken our church. It is not clear that this measure would add much to the discussions that regularly occur in many of our congregations and presbyteries.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 06-17

Comment on Item 06-17—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly offers the following comment on Item 06-17.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly consists of fifteen elected members. Its responsibilities include supporting and reviewing the work of the Office of the General Assembly.

Item 06-17 must be considered in light of existing authoritative interpretation of the responsibilities of presbyteries in addressing their responsibilities under G-4.0203 and G-4.0207. In Tom v. Pby of San Francisco, the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) authoritatively interpreted the Trust Clause found in the Book of Order at G-4.0203. The GAPJC held that while a presbytery has broad discretionary authority under the Book of Order to determine property rights [within the context of determining the mission of Jesus Christ in the world (G-4.0201) and in its district (G-3.0303a) to dismiss a particular congregation within its geographic region (G- 3.0301[a]), the presbytery must fulfill its fiduciary duty under the Trust Clause (G-4.0203) to consider the interest of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a beneficiary of the property. The GAPJC stated that this process must include exercising due diligence regarding the value of the property of the congregation seeking dismissal, which would include doing a financial analysis of the value of the property. The presbytery must be informed of this financial analysis before it votes on a dismissal.

Since Item 06-17 was not brought within the 120-day deadline for seeking a constitutional interpretation, the committee does not believe that this assembly may take any action with respect to Item 06-17 that could be interpreted as in any manner altering the authoritative interpretation contained in the GAPJC's decision in Tom.

Further, Item 06-17 makes certain representations as to the content of various state legal decisions. The committee urges caution in accepting, without legal advice, the characterization of the impact of these legal decisions.

Item 06-Self-Study

[The Assembly Committee on Church Polity and Ordered Ministry approved Item 06-Self-Study. See pp. 49, 52.]

Report of the Self-Study Committee of the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates to the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

General Scope of the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCC)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) administers ordination examinations as a uniform (standard) process for assessing candidates' readiness to begin service as teaching elders performing the functions of the ministry of Word and Sacrament. These examinations are "prepared and administered by a body created by the presbyteries" (Book of Order, G-2.0607d), the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCC).

Purpose and Principles of the Standard Ordination Exams

The denominational ordination exams within the Presbyterian church arose in the late 1950s and early 1960s in response to a perception that the historic pattern of each presbytery having sole responsibility for examining candidates for ordination was creating a growing disparity between the qualifications and preparedness of persons entering ministry across the church. There was a general perception that standards in some presbyteries were too lax, especially with respect to well-connected men from the dominant culture, even as presbyteries routinely examined women and racial ethnic candidates more stringently.

The exams began, then, from a concern for equitable treatment of those seeking ordination to the ministry of Word and Sacrament. The principles formed to achieve this purpose have provided the basis for the exams up to the present day. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor bodies have expressed the following principles on which the exams are based.¹

- The exams are evaluated through a process of blind review by future peers in ministry (ruling and teaching elders) from outside one's own presbytery of care.

The model of written examinations identified only by code number and evaluated by readers selected by presbyteries across the church works to minimize biases in reviewing the exams that might arise from preconceptions formed by evaluators about the candidate (either positive or negative) based on past contacts or stereotypes regarding geographical differences, gender, race, or human networks and connections, including those formed in seminaries. That evaluations are done by peers in ministry brings to the fore that the exams are focused on the practice of ministry.

- The exams are an assessment of the ability to integrate seminary education with one's gifts for and past experience in ministry through demonstration of "pastoral imagination."

The ordination exams are carefully constructed to perform a unique role within the preparation for ministry process. They are not tests of academic achievement; the seminaries properly assess that through grades in course work and fulfillment of degree requirements. They are not tests of the acceptability of the candidate's theological views or understanding of the church; the presbyteries properly make those assessments in relationship to particular fields of ministry. The exams do emphasize responses that are consistent with the Reformed tradition. They are assessments of a candidate's ability to integrate academic training and experience gained through the supervised practice of ministry when responding to situations typical of those encountered in fulfilling the responsibilities of a teaching elder engaged in the ministry of Word and Sacrament. This integrative ability has been described as "pastoral imagination" by one study of clergy professional preparation and formation.²

- The standard of assessment is readiness to begin ministry as a teaching elder.

In forming their assessment of responses to exam questions, readers are instructed to use two basic considerations. (1) Whether the response addressed all the elements required by the questions. The abilities to listen carefully to information that has been presented and to respond completely to what is required in a given situation are key pastoral skills. (2) Whether the response demonstrates sufficient understanding of the issues presented and ability to convert that understanding into practical application in ministry as would be expected of someone beginning in the ministry of Word and Sacrament. The issue is not whether an answer shows the depth one would hope to see from someone with decades of ministry experience, but rather of someone starting out.

- The evaluations are done in a context and spirit of Christian community.

The exam scenarios arise from the lived experience of the church and are evaluated with concern for the future of those who will serve it and those who will be ministered to by them. The evaluation process, then, is always to be an expression of loving Christian concern for all those within the community of the church.

The Areas of Examination

There are currently five standard ordination examinations approved by the General Assembly: Bible Content, Bible Exegesis, Theological Competence, Worship and Sacraments, and Church Polity. "Evidence of readiness to begin ordered ministry as a teaching elder" in these areas of competence is required of all those who will serve the functions of ministry of Word and Sacrament as teaching elders (Book of Order, G-2.0607, G-2.0610; see also G-2.0505a).

The Bible Content Examination is a "multiple choice" and "matching" exam ordinarily taken during the first year or at the beginning of the second year of seminary to determine basic knowledge of the Bible. The other four exams present pastoral challenges offering candidates the opportunity to demonstrate how they integrate faith and theological education in ministry utilizing "energy, intelligence, imagination, and love" (see Book of Order, W-4.4003h).

Strategies for Accomplishing Its Mandate

Membership and Meetings of the PCC³

The Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCC) will be composed of no fewer than twelve members and no more than twenty-four members who are ruling or teaching elders in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

- No more than half and no less than one-third of the members will be elected by the General Assembly to four-year terms on a staggered schedule. These members will be eligible to be reelected for an additional term. Candidates for these positions are nominated through the General Assembly Nominating Committee with consideration being given to areas of needed expertise, to gender and racial ethnic representation, to an approximate balance of ruling and teaching elders, and to various subcultures within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with regard to the overall composition of the PCC.
- Remaining members of the PCC will be elected from among and by examination readers designated by the presbyteries. To facilitate representation from across the church, the PCC will group presbyteries into regions. The reader representatives will be nominated from and voted on by readers from their respective regional groupings of presbyteries following procedures determined by the PCC. These members will be elected and serve on a staggered schedule in four-year terms, and will be eligible to be reelected for an additional term.

The PCC meets at least once annually to develop and review the forthcoming examinations and to transact such other business as may be necessary. The members of the PCC are divided into task groups of approximately equal size. Each task group is responsible for the development of questions and resources to assist readers for one or more of the standard ordination examinations. Members are assigned to a task group by the executive committee based upon personal interest and expertise of each member as well as upon the comparative needs of each task group.

Development of Examinations

The PCC utilizes “consultants” brought in to assist the Bible Task Group of the PCC (which also develops the Exegesis exam) by developing new questions for the Bible Content Exam (BCE). These consultants are ruling or teaching elders in the PC(USA) who hold graduate training in biblical studies beyond the M.Div. (usually the Ph.D., but sometimes other professional degrees such as the Th.M. or D.Min.), and usually serving on seminary faculties. The consultants also propose which former questions to include in each BCE administration. Beginning in September 2015, the PCC withdrew from use any questions that had previously been publicly released along with exam results—a practice that was discontinued in 2010 with the move to online administration of the BCE. The PCC was concerned about mounting evidence that inquirers and candidates were overly reliant in their preparation for the BCE on studying those publicly available questions rather than the Bible itself. After the initial draft of a BCE is developed, it is commented upon by the Bible Task Group prior to final copyediting and translation into Korean and Spanish.

The development of senior examinations in the areas of Bible Exegesis, Church Polity, Theological Competence, and Worship and Sacraments takes place over a three-year process. In considering possible question topics, four factors are kept consciously before the task group:

1. Appropriateness for Beginning in Ministry. Highly complex scenarios or ministry settings unlikely to be encountered early in ministry generally do not make appropriate questions for the exams. Questions certainly may have a range of difficulties, but any ministry settings that would be exceedingly rare in beginning service as a teaching elder are avoided.
2. Fit with the Exam Subject and Section. The descriptions of the exams and their particular sections have been approved by the General Assembly and the PCC, respectively, and are communicated in the exam handbook and instructions. Topics for exam questions are carefully reviewed to assure that they fit within those guidelines.
3. Variety of Subject Matter. Task groups are encouraged to keep a list of topics that have been addressed in questions over the last several years so as to avoid treating the same, limited range of issues in the exams repeatedly.
4. Cross-Cultural Accessibility. Given their situational character and case study quality, all exam questions are necessarily going to arise from and reflect a particular life setting. Consequently, it is impossible to create questions that are truly “culturally neutral.” Because there is a broad range of cultural differences among candidates taking the exams in terms of racial, ethnic, economic, regional, and other aspects of background, care must be taken to assure that the questions are “cross-culturally accessible.” That is to say, any culturally specific details essential to the question need to be explained rather than assumed, and culturally specific details that would either create confusion or distraction must be avoided. Working across cultural differences is a reality of ministry for everyone in our current social context, but the focus of these exams is on proficiency in applying theological training to ministry contexts and not mastery of the particularities of either the “dominant” or specific “sub-” cultures of contemporary American society.

Once topics for each section of a particular exam have been agreed upon, task groups may assign particular members to create drafts of the questions, which are then reviewed by all members of the task group. In the second year of question development, each task group presents its draft questions to PCC members from other subject area task groups. This process presents a critical opportunity to those developing exam questions to observe reactions to the proposed questions by PCC members who do not have background information on question development. The question developers also have the opportunity to take notes on the reactions and observations to be used in the next phase of question development and refinement. The goal of this process is to improve both the clarity and the accessibility of the questions for those who will be taking the exams.

Task groups take the feedback provided by colleagues in the other areas and continue to refine and clarify the questions for each exam. At the annual meeting in the third year of development every question is presented to the full membership of the PCC that must then approve the final language of each question. After copyediting, these approved questions are also translated into Korean and Spanish.

Administration of the Examinations

Since its last General Assembly review in 2008, the PCC has led the examination administration process through its most significant changes since the exams were begun in the late 1960s. Key to these changes has been the moving of all registration, administration, and evaluation processes related to the exams to online procedures. These changes have resulted in savings well in excess of $300,000 per year to General Assembly per capita budgets and needed exam registration fees. These cost savings have been accomplished through reduced costs in required staff support and elimination of the need to gather exam readers at regional sites to complete exam evaluations. While achieving these cost savings, the PCC has doubled the opportunities to take the examinations each year and has reduced the time needed to receive results from more than two months to less than two weeks.

The Bible Content Examination is now administered twice a year using an Internet-based testing system under proctors' supervision. Because its "multiple choice" and "matching" question formats can be machine scored, examinees immediately receive their test results upon completion of the exam, and reports summarizing overall score and performance within each section of the canon are immediately forwarded by email to the presbytery committees overseeing their preparation and to the seminaries where they are studying.

The case study-based, essay examinations in the areas of Bible Exegesis, Church Polity, Theological Competence, and Worship and Sacraments are now offered once each quarter. Candidates also take these examinations online, but adopting a format used for the Exegesis exam for decades these tests allow consultation of resources and are not completed under a proctor's supervision. All of these exam submissions are electronically reviewed for plagiarism (both copying other exam responses and uncredited use of published materials). Reader evaluation of the exams begins four days after Exegesis exam submission, and examinees receive exam results and readers' comments no more than seven days after the reading period begins. As with Bible Content Examination results, these reports are also available at the same time to their presbytery committees and seminaries.

Evaluation Process and Support of Exam Readers

Readers elected by the presbyteries (G-3.0302b) evaluate all essay examinations. To support them in this work, the PCC provides a variety of training resources through an online system widely used by schools, universities, and corporate trainers. The online system permits material to be provided through text and video presentations, as well as creates messaging and forums where readers can interact with members of the PCC.

There are three areas of focus in this training. Since the training itself and all aspects of the evaluation process are conducted online, the first phase of training deals with simply navigating and using the online training site and the exams evaluation site. Second, readers are provided with general training about the standard ordination examinations, the standards for their evaluation, and their place in the overall preparation for ministry process. Finally, once readers have been assigned to specific exam subject areas for a particular reading period, they are provided with resources specific to the questions for which they will be evaluating candidate responses. Those resources walk through the required elements of a complete response to each question along with background information the readers may need to evaluate the quality of the specific content of each candidate's response. To accommodate the preferences of different readers, much of this training material is presented in overlapping video and text presentations, including real-time interaction between PCC members and readers through webinars.

During reading periods members of the PCC are available to respond to questions from the readers about either training materials or individual candidate responses. Two members of the appropriate task group review every reader's exam evaluation and comments to be sure that it properly applies the evaluation standards and clearly supports the evaluation assigned by the reader. When there is disagreement between two readers' evaluations (one assigns a final evaluation of Satisfactory and the other assigns an Unsatisfactory), a third reader evaluates the exam and the concurring evaluation is the final evaluation. These interactions between readers and PCC members occur through the messaging system of the training site, standard email exchanges, and phone conversations.

Reporting Results and Support of Presbytery Committees

All examination records are integrated with the online system maintained by the Office of the General Assembly for reporting about inquirers and candidates who are under care in the preparation for ministry process with the presbyteries. This system provides presbyteries with anytime access to transcripts of each inquirer and candidate's complete exam history. For the examinations with an essay structure, the system stores the questions, candidate responses, and readers' evaluations for all exams taken using the online administration platform.

Through staff support in Mid Council Ministries of the Office of the General Assembly, the PCC produces three separate handbooks to present policies and procedures for all aspects of the standard ordination examinations. The primary handbook is geared toward inquirers, candidates, and their presbyteries and covers every phase of the exams from registration through review of exam evaluations. Separate handbooks are prepared for exam readers and members of the PCC that cover their particular roles and responsibilities, as well as present in print format much of the general information from the training website for easy offline review and reference. All three handbooks are augmented by video demonstrations of the testing systems and tutorials that can be accessed from the Office of the General Assembly website or the online training system.

Indications of Effectiveness in Accomplishing the PCC's Mandate

The examinations of the PCC have a distinct purpose: to provide one form of "[e]vidence of readiness to begin ordered ministry as a teaching elder" (Book of Order, G-2.0607). Seminaries are especially concerned with evaluating academic competence. Presbyteries evaluate the adequacy of a candidate's theological views and his or her personal gifts for ministry. Ordination exams focus on a third area of concern (shared by the seminaries and the presbyteries): a person's ability to integrate what he or she has learned through graduate theological education and supervised practice of ministry with pastoral situations. The ordination examinations offer candidates a significant opportunity to move from thinking of themselves as students in an academic context, to thinking of themselves as pastors and leaders in the church and for the world.

Pass rates on individual examinations in the areas of Exegesis, Polity, Theology, and Worship and Sacraments have ranged between 55 percent and 88 percent in recent years. Satisfactory rates of completion by content area are provided in Appendix A. Statistical evidence indicates that the proportion of examinees receiving “Satisfactory” evaluations of their work decreases substantially with each subsequent attempt of an examination area. As a group, individuals taking exams for the first time have a higher “Satisfactory” rate than those taking the exam a second time. In the same way, those taking an exam for the second time generally have higher “Satisfactory” rates than those taking an exam in that area for the third time. The pattern continues with each increment of repeats. Since candidates do not repeat areas in which they have received a “Satisfactory” evaluation, these data would indicate that those who do not have the competencies evaluated by the exams generally do not end up passing, even with multiple attempts. Accommodations are made for those who have demonstrated need for alternate means of examination to ensure that the standard examination format does not present a barrier to “certification of readiness” for those who have the required competencies.

The PCC reviews at each annual meeting the results of surveys from readers and test takers administered following each exam cycle. As part of the self-study process, the PCC also carefully reviewed data from surveys administered to readers of ordination examinations, moderators of presbytery committees/commissions on preparation for ministry (CPMs) and test takers in 2014 and 2015. Comparative analysis was conducted between the surveys from the last self-study and current self-study where data was available. The surveys provide rich material for ongoing self-evaluation by the PCC.

CPM moderators were surveyed in 2015 in order to obtain their input on the standard ordination exams. Ninety-six percent (96 percent) of CPM moderators who responded to the survey agreed that successful performance on the examinations reflects readiness to begin ordered ministry as a teaching elder. Based on overall responses to the survey questions, it is clear that CPM moderators seem to affirm the examinations and the current examination process.

The exam takers are particularly favorable in regard to the ability of the exams to demonstrate readiness for ministry. In recent surveys, responses demonstrated their positive response to this question: 85 percent for Biblical Exegesis, 91 percent for Church Polity, 92 percent for Theological Competence and 94 percent for Worship and Sacraments. To this end, the exam takers shared comments such as the following, indicating the practical nature of exam questions:

- “[The exam] allowed me to combine theological knowledge and conviction with real-life ministry situations.”
- “I thought the questions were very thoughtfully composed—there was a chance to show you knew the Book of Order, but also a chance to show some pastoral sensitivity in the way you would respond to the person in the situational questions. . . .”
- “It was good that the questions applied directly to ministry work.”
- “Allowed me to apply direct knowledge with real-world, common situations.”

In summary, exam takers provided very positive feedback in regard to the current exam format and process.

Exam readers were asked to rate the extent to which each exam, as presently structured, assesses candidates’ integration of academic learning and pastoral skills. The percentage of readers responding that the exams provide such assessment to a “very great” or a “great extent” were as follows: 51 percent for Biblical Exegesis, 51 percent for Church Polity, 54 percent for Theological Competence and 56 percent for Worship & Sacraments. (Just over a quarter of all readers expressed “No Opinion” on this question). Readers were also asked to what extent they think that a “Satisfactory” evaluation on the exams reflects candidates’ readiness for pastoral ministry and for other forms of ministry. About 40 percent felt a satisfactory response reflected readiness for pastoral ministry. In 2015, 21 percent felt the exams reflect readiness for other forms of ministry.

Overall, written comments on the surveys reflect positive attitudes toward the examinations. The PCC will continue to evaluate the effectiveness of the exams to demonstrate readiness for ministry and keep working to improve in this area wherever possible through feedback from all stakeholders.

Collaboration with Others in Fulfilling the PCC’s Mandate

The process of administering ordination exams has evolved since its inception in order to reflect and serve the needs of the church. As part of this process of ongoing change and refinement, the PCC has been working closely with the entities that are involved with those seeking ordination.

Through online publications and communications from support staff, the PCC is involved regularly with the committees that oversee preparation of candidates for ministry. These communications include the Handbook on Standard Ordination Examinations, provision of information about recruiting readers from within presbyteries, and communications about the changes in exam administration procedures that have taken place in recent years.

The PCC also has interactions with the General Assembly Committee on Theological Education (COTE) through PCC support staff and direct communications between the PCC members and COTE staff. In addition, the PCC support staff person regularly visits PC(USA) seminaries to conduct training seminars and informational meetings to facilitate a better understanding of the ordination exams by students as well as faculty.

In response to the 221st General Assembly (2014) direction for the PCC to consult with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), representatives from that group met with the PCC at its annual meeting in 2015. These interactions produced fruitful dialogue and ideas for future directions. This partnership is discussed more fully in the next section.

Responses to General Assembly Directives

Following the last PCC self-study, the 218th General Assembly (2008) Review Committee recommended that the PCC continue and strengthen effective communication with the larger church, specifically, committees responsible for those preparing for ministry (CPMs). This review committee also encouraged the PCC to engage in “continual reassessment” with regard to the changing demographics of the denomination. In response, communication has been significantly improved through partnerships with ACREC and COTE and personal and electronic contact by PCC staff with CPMs, exam readers and presbyteries regarding updates on ordinations exams and scores. As noted elsewhere in this report, regular feedback is sought through periodic surveys of CPM moderators, readers, and exam takers.

As a result of its own self-study results, the PCC formed a task force to explore the feasibility of a pilot program in which candidates, including racial ethnic candidates, would take ordination exams only after completion of their seminary work and a significant internship in a supervised pastoral context. The intent was for the task force to bring a report to the PCC in 2011 regarding this pilot program. The pilot centered on a requirement for candidates to participate in a one-year field experience/internship prior to taking the ordination exams. Following a thorough study of the issue, including feedback from seminary students, it was determined that the pilot program was not feasible because students did not want to add another year (for a total of four years) to their seminary education for financial and vocational reasons. Therefore, the pilot program was never implemented.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) included a report by the Special Committee to Review the Preparation for Ministry Process and Standard Ordination Exams (Minutes, 2014, Part I, pp. 14, 73, 376ff.). This report included three recommendations requiring action by the PCC (Recommendations 4, 5 and 6, Ibid. 377–78). The first of these recommendations (Recommendation 4) directed the PCC to “consult with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic concerns (ACREC) for comment on the cross-cultural accessibility of standard ordination exam questions” (Ibid., 377).

In response, ACREC was given the senior ordinations exams from Fall 2009 to Fall 2014 for their review and feedback. While ACREC identified no cultural bias, they did make recommendations that are the subject of ongoing consideration and evaluation by the PCC. These recommendations include ongoing assessment of Spanish and Korean translation of the exam questions to reduce ambiguities in the translated exams; a recognition by the PCC when writing exams that candidates are serving in the global church, where a perspective broader than service to a local congregation is warranted, including a variety of forms of validated ministry; continued encouragement of presbyteries to invite exam readers who are diverse in terms of their racial ethnic backgrounds and global church perspectives, and to consider providing training opportunities for exam readers regarding cultural sensitivities.

In addition, two representatives from ACREC attended the PCC Annual Meeting in March 2015 and participated in the review and development of exam questions for 2015–2016.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) also directed the PCC “to include more culturally diverse resources and references in its instructions to and preparation of readers of the examinations, so that the Reformed theological insights of racial ethnic and non-European persons are included” (Recommendation 5, Ibid. p. 377).

In response, the PCC reviewed ordination exams and resource papers from 2014 and 2015. It was determined that there are opportunities for improvement in regard to this directive. For example, the resource papers for the theology exam tended to identify western theologians with very few theologians from other perspectives. The PCC is committed to strengthening resource papers by including a spectrum of Reformed theologians that represents a greater variety of cultural and global contexts. In addition, the Polity and Worship and Sacrament resource papers are being developed with a goal of including culturally diverse resources and references. Readers’ resources for the Exegesis Exam currently include a bibliography inclusive of scholars from a wide range of cultural and global perspectives. The resource papers for the Exegesis exam also recognize cultural diversity by including guidance to readers that exam responses may include concerns with those on the margins of society; concerns with gender and with how the text might be heard if read from the perspective of persons of color and minorities underrepresented in the theological disciplines (e.g. African American, Asian American, Latino/a, etc.). Such culturally diverse references in the resource paper help eliminate cultural barriers.

At the PCC Annual Meeting in 2015, this directive from the General Assembly was discussed with a resulting commitment to increasing the use of Reformed theological insights of racial ethnic and non-European persons in its exam materials.

The 221st General Assembly (2014) also directed the PCC “to broaden the format of standard ordination examinations beyond time-limited essays, and include additional protocols that may integrate oral presentations into the standard examination process” (Recommendation 6, Ibid., p. 378).

In response to this directive, the time limits were extended for the examinations in Church Polity, Theological Competence, and Worship and Sacraments. In July 2015 each exam moved from a three-hour time limit to a nine-hour time limit per exam; the additional time to complete each exam is given even though the number of exam questions and length of expected responses were not expanded. Recent surveys indicate that 93 percent of exam takers have reacted positively to this change. The PCC will be following results from this new time limit to assess the impact, if any, on performance on these exams.

In addition, the inclusion of oral presentations in standard exam procedures has been addressed and is designed for cases where there are circumstances known in advance that make it clear that the test taker may need to comment or elaborate upon written responses. The oral presentations do not replace written responses to the standard exam questions, which must still be completed and evaluated following the usual process for the standard exams. Rather, the oral presentation provides an opportunity for the candidate to clarify and expand upon answers provided in the written exams. Likewise, the oral presentations are not designed to be after-the-fact responses to “Unsatisfactory” evaluations. They are special accommodations granted in advance of the exam to persons for whom the overall experience in the preparation process leads the CPM to conclude that the particular candidate will need an opportunity to clarify and elaborate on written submissions.

By authorizing this special accommodation, both the candidate and the CPM are committing to a set of requirements that have been specified in the Handbook on Standard Ordination Examinations released on May 1, 2015 (see Appendix B).

Strengths and Weaknesses of the PCC

PCC members receive evaluations from exam takers and readers every time an exam is administered. Since moving to four exam cycles per year in 2014, the committee members receive quarterly evaluations and feedback materials. This information, along with the experience of writing exams and reviewing readers’ comments in each exam cycle, provides PCC members with regular data to use in assessing strengths and weaknesses. Input concerning the strengths and weaknesses of the PCC was solicited from the Executive Committee of the PCC and from all members of the committee at its annual meeting in March 2015. Additional input was received from the PCC in the fall of 2015. This input as well as the self-study task group’s evaluation of materials reviewed for this study provided the basis for this self-understanding.

Strengths

PCC members understand the committee to be fulfilling its mandate. They believe the denomination is being effectively served by the exams and the PCC. PCC members regularly review the exam-takers’ surveys and have noted that these responses consistently give high ratings of the exam’s ability to assess readiness for ministry. The findings reported earlier in this report, that about 90 percent of exam takers felt the exams allowed them to demonstrate their readiness for ministry, attests to this self-understanding. In addition, PCC members noted that the exams may be seen as one component of the spiritual call to teaching elders to give the best of what they have for the sake of Christ. As the work of teaching elders requires spiritual and academic preparation as well as pastoral imagination, the ordination exams reflect this work. Since seminaries do not ordain teaching elders, the national process and standards for this component, embodied in the work of the PCC, fulfills an important role in the denomination.

Members see the changes initiated by the committee to move to online exam administration and reading weeks as strengths of the PCC. This system is more cost-efficient and also allows the exam results to be released within roughly a week after the last exam is administered. Surveys of moderators of committees that oversee candidates, exam takers, and exam readers all show strong support for the majority of changes that have been instituted by the PCC. The PCC continually assesses readers’ perceptions of their work. Participants were asked to rate the degree to which a number of factors posed challenges to them in the reading process. Preparing helpful comments posed the greatest challenge to the readers, while the majority of readers reported that the other factors presented small or no challenge to them. It is of note that nearly three-quarters of readers did not experience any challenges from the quality of training provided by the PCC, indicating that the online materials and the online process of providing feedback to readers meets readers’ expectations.

Another strength has been the organized and timely response to the report to the 221st General Assembly (2014) by the Special Committee to Review the Preparation for Ministry Process and Standard Ordination Exams. These include closer collaboration with ACREC, increasing the time permitted for three exam areas from three to nine hours, and the institution of an option for an oral exam component as a follow-up to the written exams.

PCC members noted a number of strengths in the process of writing and revising exam questions. This work takes place in task group and plenary sessions at the annual meeting and is also done by PCC members throughout the year, either individually or in working groups of two or three. Strengths of this process include the benefits of working face-to-face at the annual meeting, with potential questions and resource materials identified prior to the meeting. Efficient group dynamics and good teamwork were identified as strengths of the PCC, as was the process by which all exams are reviewed and approved by the four different task groups (Bible, Polity, Theology, and Worship and Sacraments). This process enables all PCC members' familiarity and ownership of all examinations.

The PCC sees its primary support staff person, the Reverend Dr. Timothy Cargal, as a tremendous strength and asset to the PCC and to the denomination. Dr. Cargal's experience as a professor and in pastoral ministry within a congregation, his expertise in test construction, and his passion for moving us into the future through the use of technology have been invaluable in assisting the PCC to fulfill its mandate. The committee has been incredibly fortunate to have one person who possesses all of these gifts and talents, and it recognizes how essential it is to have these skills in staff support for the PCC.

Weaknesses

As noted elsewhere in this report, the move to the online reading process without face-to-face meetings during reading week has presented both opportunities and challenges in the ordination exam process. PCC members are aware that many readers preferred the regional gatherings during reading week; concerns about the lack of face-to-face interactions appear on the readers' surveys that are reviewed by PCC members. In addition, it has become clear that the election of regional conveners has been affected in a significant way by the absence of the gatherings. Participation in the elections through the online system is very limited, and it is more difficult for readers to know much about the individuals standing for election beyond a brief biographical sketch placed online during reading week.

PCC members have expressed considerable concern about the perceived inconsistency of readers' preparation for and work during reading week. There was a sense in 2014 and 2015 that the readers provided by the presbyteries were not always able or chose not to learn how to use the online resources and evaluation system efficiently. A potential weakness of the online system is the inability of the PCC to ensure that all readers are exposed to training materials, since they access these materials from the online training site without the benefit of the previous system of a half-day plenary orientation and training session. In order to address this issue, in July 2015 the PCC instituted a system of requiring all readers to log into the online training site prior to the beginning of the exam reading period before they are assigned exams to read. However, nearly all (96 percent) of the readers surveyed in 2015 said they prepared for reading exams by reading the resource papers prepared by PCC members, and almost as many (93 percent) said they viewed the training videos on the PCC online training site.

PCC members affirm the importance of the ordination exam process to the life of the PC(USA). However, we note that more work could be done to help people across the denomination understand why the exams are needed and how the PCC is fulfilling its mandate. While the ruling and teaching elders who read exams are in a good position to communicate about the exams to their presbyteries, less than a third of readers surveyed in Summer 2015 said they were at all likely to make a report to their presbytery as a whole. More positively, the majority of these readers said they were at least somewhat likely to make a report or provide feedback after reading exams to the committee overseeing preparation for ministry.

PCC members observed that the committee is enriched by diversity, but that it would benefit from more theological, geographical, racial, and ethnic diversity.

Recommendations for Future Improvement

The PCC offers the following recommendations:

1. Because the election of regional conveners is an important component of the PCC, members will work to strengthen communications with all readers about the election process. Future efforts will ensure that all readers enrolled by their presbytery receive multiple communications in the weeks before reading begins to inform them about the upcoming election. The PCC will place greater emphasis on the work of the nominating committee in each region, which encourages readers to stand for election. These communications will remind readers to visit their regional page on the online training site, to review the qualifications and responsibilities of a PCC member, review the materials submitted by readers standing for election, and to vote for a candidate for election to PCC membership.

2. PCC members will develop a system in which they will have increased, direct interactions with presbyteries in order to share information about (1) recruiting and preparing teaching and ruling elders for reading exams, and (2) the nature and purpose of the examinations, including changes that are made in the examination and evaluations process. Current and former PCC members can participate in these efforts. In addition to fostering continued effective communications with the larger church about the mandate of the PCC and the steps being taken to fulfill it, the committee aims to facilitate the elections of readers who are well-informed about the reading process and who will be equipped and committed to engaging in the preparations needed to read exams.

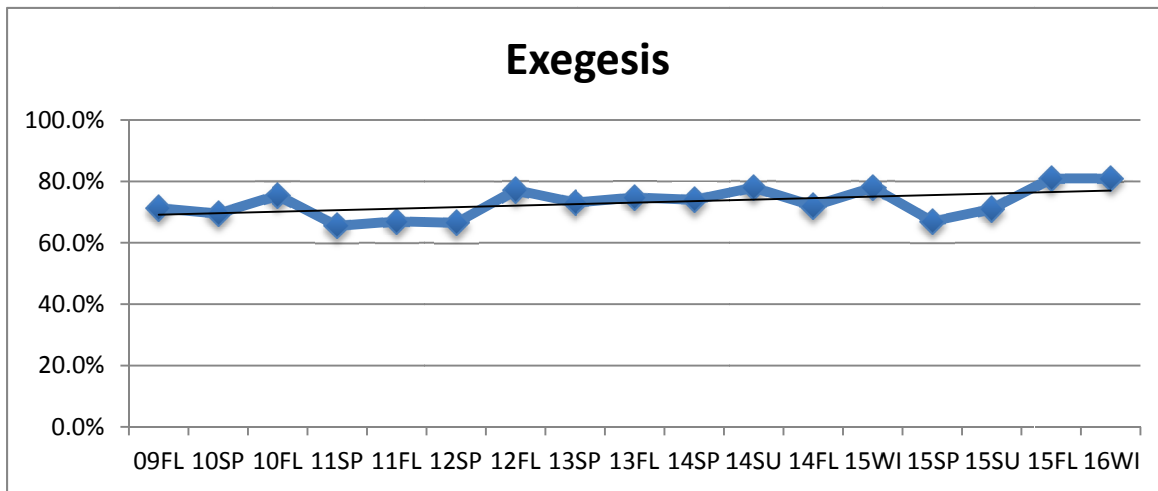

3. The PCC will continue to take steps to carry out its commitment to sensitivity to cultural diversity and racial ethnic concerns and to increasing cross-cultural accessibility through continued consultation with members of ACREC and through PCC members' efforts to create exam questions and reader resource materials that reflect identified racial ethnic concerns.

Appendix B

Procedures for Including an Oral Component in Ordination Exams

1. The CPM appoints a panel of at least three oral examiners who are either ruling or teaching elders, preferably with experience as readers of the standard examinations.
2. The candidate takes the standard examination(s), with any other special accommodations approved by the CPM, and those exams then undergo the usual evaluation process.
3. On the morning the exam results are released, the oral examiners meet to review together both the candidate's responses and the readers' evaluations, and to formulate their own questions based upon both the responses and the evaluations.
4. Following their review, the oral examiners meet with the candidate for the oral review phase (either the same morning or during the afternoon of the day the results are released, depending upon the number of exam areas for which the special accommodation was granted). This oral examination phase must be conducted regardless of whether the readers had found the exam "Satisfactory" or "Unsatisfactory."
5. Up to one (1) hour is permitted for oral review of each exam. Either responding directly to the readers' comments or to questions from the oral examiners, the candidate elaborates or comments on the responses provided. During this oral phase, a candidate is permitted to explain the reasons for particular citations from the Book of Order, the Book of Confessions, or other resources provided as part of required responses, but the test taker is not permitted to substitute alternative citations for them. A candidate may, however, suggest further citations that would serve to clarify or support lines of argument already provided in the written responses. A candidate may also elaborate on points in the written response that he or she believes were either overlooked or misunderstood by the reader(s). The candidate will also be required to respond to any questions from the oral examiners even if those questions are unrelated to issues or concerns raised in the reader evaluations.
6. At the conclusion of the hour, the oral examiners meet separately from the candidate to deliberate and then vote on whether to "sustain" the readers' evaluation. This action is, again, required regardless of whether the readers had found the exam "Satisfactory" or "Unsatisfactory." Thus, it would be within the oral examiners prerogative to recommend that an "Unsatisfactory" evaluation be set aside in favor of a "Satisfactory" one, or that a "Satisfactory" evaluation be set aside in favor of an "Unsatisfactory" one. A majority vote of the three oral examiners determines their recommendation.

7. The oral examiners will then notify the candidate, the CPM, and the PCC (through the manager for preparation for ministry in the Office of the General Assembly) of their recommendation.

a. If they sustain the readers' initial evaluation, then that result is finalized.

b. If their recommendation is that the readers' evaluation should not be sustained, they must file with the PCC a written explanation of their rationale providing specific references to either the candidate's written or oral responses in support of their recommendation. This report must be filed within forty-eight hours of the close of the oral examination phase or phases (if there is more than one examination area). The chair of the PCC task group for the examination area (or the chair's designated task group member) will review the candidate's written responses, the readers' evaluations, and the report from the oral examiners. The PCC member reviewing all these materials will determine whether or not to concur in the oral examiners' recommendation or to sustain the original evaluation of the readers. The decision by the PCC task group chair or designated member will determine the final result of each examination.

8. A task group chair's decision (or that of the task group member designated to review the materials) is subject to appeal only to the PCC Executive Committee, and must otherwise comply with all other requirements for the appeal of examination results.

This provision for a "special accommodation" to include "oral presentations" is available only for the standard examinations in the areas of Bible Exegesis, Church Polity, Theological Competence, and Worship and Sacraments. Because of the types of questions used on the Bible Content Examination, it is not available to inquirers or candidates taking that test.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-Self-Study

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-SS—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 06-SS.

As mandated by the 221st General Assembly (2014), representatives of ACREC were invited to participate in the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates' (PCCEC's) annual meeting in March, 2015. Prior to the meeting with the PCCEC, ACREC received past exams and were given the opportunity to review and identify any form of cultural bias. The ACREC offered cultural proficiency training to members of the PCCEC and participated in the mid-year exam development of the task groups.

The ACREC welcomed the striven efforts and commitment taken by the PCCEC to better equip and prepare the future leaders of our church, particularly in the area of addressing cultural proficiency in exam development and providing culturally diverse resources and references for exam readers. The ACREC would like to encourage greater diversity representation of the PCCEC members, as well as the exam readers as nominated and sent forth by the presbyteries. The ACREC stands committed in partnership and consultation with the PCCEC in the areas of cross-cultural accessibility and future exam development.

Item 06-Info

A. Mid Councils Statements of Compliance with the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission Decisions

Section IV.B.2.d. of the Organization for Mission requires that when a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission contains an order directed to another council, the Stated Clerk report to the General Assembly a statement of the council's compliance. Below is a report of the statements of compliance received by the Stated Clerk from the councils for cases decided by the Permanent Judicial Commission during the year 2014–2016.

1. GAPJC Remedial Case 221-08, Presbytery of New York City, Appellant (Respondent), vs.

Ruling Elder Mildred McGee, Teaching Elder Flora Wilson Bridges, Ruling Elder Douglas Howard, Teaching Elder Lonnie Bryant, Ruling Elder Daniel Amiot Priso, Teaching Elder Phillip Newell, Ruling Elder Emmanuel Gouad Njayick, Teaching Elder George Todd, Ruling Elder Estella Taylor, and Ruling Elder Norita Chisolm, Appellees (Complainants)

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast Permanent Judicial Commission is hereby sustained in its entirety and that the Gracious Dismissal Policy of The Presbytery of New York City be set aside and shall have no force or effect.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this Decision to the Synod of the Northeast at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Northeast enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of New York City report this Decision to the Presbytery of New York City at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of New York City enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The decision was reported at the Synod of the Northeast stated meeting on October 24, 2014, and the Presbytery of New York City stated meeting on May 20, 2014.

2. GAPJC Disciplinary Case 2-01, Vern Richard Buck, Jr., Appellant (Complainant), v. Session of the Morrow Presbyterian Church, Appellee (Respondent).

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the South Atlantic Permanent Judicial Commission is upheld and this case is dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of the Session of Morrow Presbyterian Church report this Decision and Order to the Session at its first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the South Atlantic report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The decision was reported at the Synod of the South Atlantic stated meeting on September 17, 2015, and the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta stated meeting on November 11, 2014. The Session of Morrow Presbyterian Church has not complied with this order.

3. GAPJC Remedial Case 222-02, Session, First Presbyterian Church of Palmdale, California (DBA Horizon Community Church), Complainant, v. The 221st General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Civil Union and Marriage Issues Committee of the 221st General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Respondent.

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission on this Decision on Challenge to the Preliminary Order for Dismissal:

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that this case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of Session of the First Presbyterian Church of Palmdale, California, report this Decision to the Session at the first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The session of the First Presbyterian Church of Palmdale has not complied with this order.

4. GAPJC Remedial Case 222-03, Cherokee Presbytery; The Session, First Presbyterian Church, Port Huron, Michigan; The Session, First Presbyterian Church, Ellsworth, Wisconsin; The Session, Calvary Presbyterian Church, Ann Arbor, Michigan; and The Session, St. Timothy Presbyterian Church, Livonia, Michigan, Complainants, v. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Respondent.

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission on the Decision on Challenge to Preliminary Order for Dismissal:

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that this case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Cherokee report this Decision to the Presbytery of Cherokee at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Cherokee enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerks of Session of the First Presbyterian Church of Port Huron, Michigan; First Presbyterian Church of Ellsworth, Wisconsin; Calvary Presbyterian Church of Ann Arbor, Michigan; and St. Timothy Presbyterian Church of Livonia, Michigan, report this Decision to their respective Sessions at the first meeting after receipt, that the Sessions enter the full Decision upon their minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The decision was reported at the Cherokee Presbytery stated meeting on May 19, 2015. The Sessions of First Presbyterian Church of Port Huron, First Presbyterian Church of Ellsworth, Calvary Presbyterian Church, and St. Timothy Presbyterian Church did not comply with this order.

5. GAPJC Remedial Case 222-04, Teaching Elder Robert Smith and Ruling Elder Edward Kappus, Appellants, Complainants, v. The Presbytery of the Peaks, Appellee/Respondent.

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:

06 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRY

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic Permanent Judicial Commission is affirmed and the case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic report this Decision to the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of the Peaks report this Decision to the Presbytery of the Peaks at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of the Peaks enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The decision was reported at the Synod of the Mid Atlantic stated meeting on September 14, 2015, and the Presbytery of the Peaks stated meeting on July 25, 2015.

6. GAPJC Remedial Case 2205, the Reverend James MacKellar, Complainant, v. The Synod of the Northeast, Respondent.

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that those portions of the Synod bylaws allowing presbyteries to elect Synod Commissioners who are not ruling elders or teaching elders, and allowing such commissioners to serve on Synod commissions are declared null and void.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first stated meeting following the date of this Order, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from the Synod's minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Synod of the Northeast Assembly meets biennially and this decision will be entered at its meeting in October 2016.

7. The Presbytery of Muskingum Valley, Appellant/Respondent, v. Robert A. Hauser, Appellee, Complainant.

The following orders were entered by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission:

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the stay is lifted. This Decision only dismisses matters related to the modification of the disciplinary censure through this remedial case. This Decision does not address any other issues reserved by the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant in its Decision dated March 16, 2015.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Covenant report this Decision to the Synod of the Covenant at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Covenant enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley report this Decision to the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

The decision was reported at the Synod of the Covenant stated meeting on November 6, 2015, and at the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley stated meeting on December 4, 2015.

Arrival Statement

This filing before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly (GAPJC or this Commission) is an appeal of a Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast (SPJC) rendered on September 11, 2013. The Notice of Appeal was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on September 23, 2013.

Parties

Appellant/Respondent is The Presbytery of New York City (PNYC). Appellees/Complainants are Ruling Elder Mildred McGee, Teaching Elder Flora Wilson Bridges, Ruling Elder Douglas Howard, Teaching Elder Lonnie Bryant, Ruling Elder Daniel Amiot Priso, Teaching Elder Phillip Newell, Ruling Elder Emmanuel Gouad Njayick, Teaching Elder George Todd, Ruling Elder Estella Taylor, and Ruling Elder Norita Chisolm.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Appellants have standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellant/Respondent was represented by John Griem and Reade Ryan. Appellees/Complainants were represented by Tee Gee Wilson and Lisa Borge.

History

On February 13, 2013, the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast received a Remedial Complaint from Ruling Elder Mildred McGee, et alia, alleging that the action of the PNYC in adopting and implementing its Gracious Dismissal Policy (GDP) was irregular in regard to constitutional requirements of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)).

The development of the GDP by the PNYC began early in 2012, informed by Resolution 04-28, GA Minutes (2008, Part I, pp. 284–285) of the 218th General Assembly (2008) (GA) urging presbyteries to formulate a gracious and pastoral response to churches requesting dismissal from the PC(USA). This GA resolution, although not an authoritative interpretation, was used as the basis for the development of the GDP. Just after that Assembly, in October 2008, the PNYC through its Committee on Mission and Finance, which also served as the Board of Trustees (BoT), obtained a realtor’s opinion of value of the properties held by all its congregations. Almost four years later, in July 2012, the BoT created a draft GDP that was distributed to the PNYC for its meeting on July 28, 2012. There was no discussion of the draft at that meeting. A later draft was given a first reading and discussion at the December 6, 2012, meeting of the PNYC. After two open hearings on December 13 and 20, 2012, the present GDP was approved by the PNYC on January 29, 2013, by a vote of 56 in favor and 49 against.

The SPJC summarized the GDP in the following way:

[T]he PNYC GDP allows sessions to request initiation of the dismissal process following a 2/3 vote. Upon receipt of the notice, the stated clerk then calls one or more meetings between the Special Resolutions Committee of the presbytery and the session (or its representatives), as well as the BOT (or its representatives) during the 120-day period following receipt of the notice. If the filing notice is not withdrawn at the end of the period, a congregational meeting is called (50% quorum) and dismissal is approved if confirmed by a 3/4 congregational vote. Financial arrangements include payment of any arrears in per capita, five years of per capita payments on a declining scale, and compensation for church property of 10% of the assessed value that exceeds $1,000,000, with a cap on the compensation of $2,000,000.

In addition, the policy allows for a downward adjustment or waiver in the case of hardship.

With the remedial complaint, Complainant also requested a Stay of Enforcement. The Executive Committee (EC) of the SPJC answered the Preliminary Questions in the affirmative and the Stay of Enforcement was subsequently granted by the SPJC.

Respondent requested an extension of the deadline for filing its response and the SPJC granted this extension. Respondent submitted a motion to the SPJC on April 29, 2013, to refer the case to the GAPJC, to which Complainants responded on May 14, 2013. The SPJC denied the motion on May 23, 2013. Respondent filed a second motion on July 2, 2013, asking the SPJC to reconsider its decision to deny the earlier motion to refer the case to the GAPJC, to which Complainants again responded on July 16, 2013. The SPJC EC denied this motion on July 27, 2013.

Complainant filed for relief on February 13, 2013, and this remedial case was decided by the SPJC on September 11, 2013. In its decision, the SPJC sustained five of the seven specifications of error by Complainant and ordered that the GDP of the PNYC shall be set aside and shall have no force or effect.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the Presbytery GDP conferred a unilateral right on a congregation to depart from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in violation of G-4.0207 and Sundquist v. Heartland Presbytery, GA PJC 219-03.

This specification of error is not sustained.

While it may be understandable for a presbytery to develop a policy dealing with congregations considering dismissal with the intention of avoiding costly litigation, the GDP at the center of this case breaches the bounds of the Constitution of the PC(USA). The PNYC GDP exhibits substantial constitutional flaws in at least three ways concerning this specification of error. First, the GDP establishes a dismissal process that, as the SPJC notes, is “self-executing,” whereby fulfillment of a series of steps and conditions automatically enacts dismissal upon their completion. A final vote by the PNYC is purposefully denied in the GDP in order to avoid divisive and argumentative response to a dismissal request, as admitted by the PNYC in the record and during arguments. Even though the process contains provisions for consultation with the PNYC and congregational input, it is in fact a predetermined and formulaic mechanism that replaces a final specific review and vote by the PNYC. The Constitution at G-3.0301a reserves as a direct act of the presbytery the authority to dismiss a church, a polity provision explicitly reasserted by G-4.0207.

As the SPJC noted, the PNYC does not need an independent policy in order to accomplish a just and effective dismissal:

The Respondent has asserted that an order by this Commission to set aside this GDP would leave the presbytery in limbo and render it unable to reach any agreements on dismissal agreements, leaving only the option of costly litigation. This is a seriously overreaching assessment. We are sensitive to the difficult situation in which the PNYC finds itself and appreciate its sincere desire to deal with that as well as it can....[A dismissal agreement] can be achieved, either through Administrative Commissions appointed in each case that presents itself and is empowered to do so, or, indeed, by a Special Resolutions Committee, preparing the proposal for presbytery action. Considering that the presbytery mustered a majority vote, however slim, for the GDP under consideration in this case, and with the case-by-case requirement satisfied in these cases, it ought to be possible for the PNYC to reach agreement on approval for such dismissal arrangements.

The second constitutional error in the GDP is its provision that the vote by a congregation effectuates the dismissal process. This vote terminates the process and has the authority to effect dismissal without any constitutional authority so to act. The final certification by the PNYC is merely perfunctory. Further, such a congregational vote is not authorized within the permitted functions of a congregation in G-1.0503 and is specifically prohibited in Sundquist et al. vs. Heartland Presbytery: “Withdrawal from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is not a matter that can be considered at a congregational meeting” and the consultations of presbytery with members of the congregation “are not meetings at which business of the congregation may be conducted.” Sundquist 219-03, 2008. [GA Minutes, (2010, Part I, pp. 362–367).] It should also be noted that the General Assembly in 1991 declared: “Nowhere is written that the congregation is permitted to make the decision that the presbytery commits itself in advance to confirm.” GA Minutes (1991, Req. 91-24, Part I, p. 411). In spite of this stream of clear constitutional interpretation, the GDP portrays a self-implementing dismissal rooted in a congregational decision in violation of the exclusive right and responsibility of a presbytery to dismiss a congregation.

The third constitutional error of the GDP is that a predetermined, formulaic mechanism runs counter to constitutional provisions for mutual dialogue and particular discernment. This Commission has previously rejected such approaches in matters related to ordination and membership Larson 221-04, 2012. The presbytery’s right and responsibility for specific review and the necessity of individualized consideration on sensitive matters in the life of the church remain a core concept of PC(USA) polity.

Specification of Error No. 2: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the GDP does not give effect to the Trust Clause (G-4.0203) as required by Tom v. Presbytery of San Francisco, GA PJC 221-03 and G-4.0204.

This specification of error is not sustained.

The Book of Order provides in G-4.0203 that “[a]ll property held by or for a congregation, a presbytery, a synod, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), ...is held in trust nevertheless for the use and benefit of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).” The Trust Clause was interpreted by this Commission in Tom, et al., v. Presbytery of San Francisco, as it related to that presbytery’s gracious dismissal policy, in the context of a number of factors including both spiritual and pecuniary aspects of the fiduciary responsibility. In Tom, this Commission said:

When a congregation seeks dismissal under G-11.0103i (now G-3.0301a), it is the responsibility of the Presbytery to fulfill its fiduciary duty under the Trust Clause. This fiduciary duty requires that the Presbytery exercise due diligence regarding the value of the property of the congregation seeking dismissal. Due diligence, of necessity, includes not only an evaluation of the spiritual needs of the congregation and its circumstances but also financial analysis of the value of the property at stake. Payment for per capita for missions obligations are not satisfactory substitutes for the separate evaluation of the value of the property held in trust. Tom, et al., v. The Presbytery of San Francisco, Remedial Case 221-03, 2012.

This Commission is again called upon in this case to clarify the parameters of the Trust Clause. The Trust Clause creates an express trust in favor of the PC(USA) as a whole and not for the presbytery, the congregation, or any other body. Therefore, the presbytery, acting in the role of trustee, must exercise due diligence such that its determination is both reasonable and evident in the record. While presbytery is entitled to deference in making the fiduciary decisions under the Trust Clause, such deference is limited by the fiduciary obligations owed to the whole church.

Under the facts of this case, the PNYC argues that the requirement of due diligence under the Trust Clause has been met by adopting a formula for determining the value of the property at the time of enacting the GDP by the PNYC. However, the fiduciary nature of the Trust Clause requires an individual determination of the facts and circumstances related to dismissal of any church rather than a set formula, which may not be appropriate to the particular circumstances of a congregation. As stated by the SPJC, there must be an “individual assessment and valuation of the church’s unique situation, finances, history, spiritual needs and financial needs” when considering dismissal.

In addition, the exercise of the fiduciary duty must be carried out during the course of discernment of a particular church’s request for dismissal. A formulaic predetermination fails to account for the individualized requirement demanded by proper application of the fiduciary duty incumbent upon a presbytery. The SPJC correctly determined that the PNYC, acting as a fiduciary, may not abdicate this role (G-4.0207 and G-3.0303b). The record shows that the PNYC sought to avoid conflict and litigation. However, concern about conflict and litigation cannot justify abandonment of constitutional mandates.

Thus, the presbytery, in exercising its authority to perform due diligence under the fiduciary duties required by the Trust Clause, is required to make an appropriately timed, individual, unique determination of the circumstances applicable to any church requesting dismissal. In accountability to the PC(USA) as the beneficiary under the Trust Clause, such determination must be reasonable and based on documented facts. The GDP enacted by the PNYC fails to meet these requirements and, therefore, is unconstitutional.

Specification of Error No. 3: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the GDP did not provide specific guidance regarding discernment of theological differences as a basis for dismissal, in violation of F-1.0302a and F-1.0301.

This specification of error is not sustained.

The PNYC adopted the GDP “to provide for reconciliation and resolution within the Presbytery of New York City” and to permit their congregations to be dismissed to join another Reformed denomination for theological reasons. The policy did not seek reconciliation and resolution as the initial step in the process (G-4.0207). The policy accepts notice from a congregation of perceived theological differences as sufficient for dismissal without concern for mutual discernment and dialogue (Sundquist). It is the nature and weight of theological difference that is critical in a justification for dismissal. The mere presence of theological differences does not preclude coexistence within the PC(USA). As stated in F-3.0105 “there are truths and forms with respect to which men of good characters and principles may differ. And in all these we think it the duty of private Christians and societies to exercise mutual forbearance toward each other.” The GDP contains no procedures to encourage early discussion with the PNYC about a congregation’s perceived differences. As indicated in F-3.0204 “Presbyters are not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ.” Without dialogue there cannot be a mutual understanding of the will of the people. Without joint discernment councils can misunderstand the will of Christ. The SPJC rightly concluded it was important that the PNYC “ensure that dismissal is the only viable remedy for the relevant theological differences.”

Specification of Error No. 4: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the GDP did not provide an opportunity for the minority of a church in schism to retain the property of a congregation, in violation of G-4.0207.

This specification of error is not sustained.

The PNYC GDP ignores the constitutional requirement under G-4.0207 to “determine if one of the factions is entitled to the property because it is identified by the presbytery as the true church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” The GDP process is initiated when the PNYC receives a written notice from the session. At that point, the PNYC automatically surrenders its constitutional obligation to determine whether a loyal faction exists and is entitled to the property. Under the GDP provisions, there is no attempt to identify the true church within the PC(USA). A fully implemented GDP effectively guarantees the property for those seeking dismissal.

It is clear what a presbytery must do when confronted with a property issue. Under G-4.0207, a presbytery is obligated to serve the interests and guard the rights of the “true church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” regardless of who is in the majority of any session or congregational vote. The presbytery shall determine if one of the factions is entitled to the property because it is the “true church within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” majority notwithstanding. Any negotiation and decision about the disposition of the property must consider this interest of the true church. The GDP failed to comply with G-4.0207.

Specification of Error No. 5: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation by holding that the GDP allowed a dismissed congregation to retain its records, in violation of G-3.0107.

This specification of error is not sustained.

According to G-3.0107, when a congregation is dismissed to another denomination its session ceases to exist as a council of the PC(USA). The successor to a former church council is the presbytery and upon dismissal of the congregation the minutes and registers of the session become the property and responsibility of the presbytery. The presbytery may make provision for the departing congregation to retain copies of the records for historical purposes.

Decision

For the reasons set forth above, this Commission finds that the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast did not err and affirms its decision.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast Permanent Judicial Commission is hereby sustained in its entirety and that the Gracious Dismissal Policy of The Presbytery of New York City be set aside and shall have no force or effect.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this Decision to the Synod of the Northeast at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Northeast enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of New York City report this Decision to the Presbytery of New York City at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of New York City enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioner Mary Charlotte McCall did not participate in the hearing or deliberations.

Session of the Morrow Presbyterian Church,) Appellee (Respondent).)

Arrival and Jurisdictional Statement

This remedial case comes to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on appeal from a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the South Atlantic (SPJC) which dismissed Appellant’s complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted (D-6.0305d). This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction over this appeal, that Appellant has standing to appeal, that the appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the appeal states one or more grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellant, Vern Richard Buck Jr., did not appear. Appellee, the Session of Morrow Presbyterian Church, was represented by Robert N. Lukat.

History

This case arises from Appellant’s allegation of irregular and deficient responses by Appellee to alleged misconduct by Appellant’s former spouse.

Beginning in May 2012, Appellant filed with Appellee multiple statements of alleged offenses by his former spouse and other individuals. Appellee formed an investigating committee. Appellant’s former spouse notified Appellee of her decision to “pull/rescind [her] membership” by letter dated June 28, 2012. Appellee acted on her request. The investigation ended. The parties in their briefs agree that she is no longer a member. The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta unsuccessfully urged the parties to mediate.

In March 2013, Appellant sent a letter to all members of Morrow Presbyterian Church setting forth various allegations against Appellee. By letter dated April 28, 2013, Appellee informed Appellant his membership and ordination would “be revoked” if he persisted in work which disrupted the peace and harmony of the Church. Appellant then filed this remedial action with the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta (PPJC) alleging multiple irregularities by Appellee. Appellant contemporaneously sought a stay of any action to revoke his membership and ordination as a ruling elder, which stay was granted.

On July 9, 2013, the moderator and clerk of the PPJC dismissed Appellant’s remedial complaint, finding Appellant failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Appellant challenged the dismissal to the full PPJC. On September 29, 2013, the PPJC upheld the ruling of the moderator and clerk and dismissed the complaint.

On October 2, 2013, Appellant appealed the PPJC decision to the SPJC. On March 10, 2014, the SPJC affirmed the decision of the PPJC. Appellant filed a Notice of Appeal with the GAPJC dated April 16, 2014.

Specifications of Error

There are six (6) specifications of error raised by the appeal, most with sub parts. The SPJC correctly exercised proper authority in rewriting Appellant’s specifications of error pursuant to D-8.0404d. However, this Commission has elected to repeat below the specifications of error in substantially the same language drafted by Appellant.

1. The SPJC erred with irregularities in its proceedings (D-8.0105a) by:
 - a. Failing to recognize the minimum standards necessary for the Appellant to state a claim upon which relief may be granted;
 - b. Failing to address each of the allegations of irregularities or deficiencies stated in the complaint and appeal;
 - c. Failing to abide with the duty to conciliate and mediate (D-1.0103);
 - d. Failing to allow the Appellant needed time to organize papers after the Stated Clerk of the Synod of South Atlantic dumped the Appellant’s materials;

e. Failing to properly report about Appellant's oral argument regarding witnesses; and

f. Failing to properly support its finding that the Appellant was denied the final argument at the September 29, 2013 Presbytery PJC hearing.

This specification is not sustained. See Decision below.

2. The SPJC erred by refusing a party reasonable opportunity to be heard or to obtain or present evidence D-8.0105b by:

a. Failing to recognize the importance and relevance for Appellant to have a reasonable opportunity to present witness testimony;

b. Failing to properly report about Appellant's oral argument regarding witnesses; and

c. Failing to provide Appellant an opportunity to be heard within the guidelines and safeguards of a trial procedure permitting all facts and testimony to be heard and decided upon.

This specification is not sustained. See Decision below.

3. The SPJC erred by receiving improper, or declining to receive proper evidence or testimony, hastening to a decision before the evidence or testimony is fully received (D-8.0105c and d) and by failing to allow Appellant an opportunity to present witness testimony.

This specification is not sustained. See Decision below.

4. The SPJC erred in the manifestation of prejudice in the conduct of the case D-8.0105e by:

a. The failure of each member of the SPJC to carefully review and consider the record of appeal, briefs submitted by the parties, arguments and evidence;

b. Failing to apply the minimal standard of a stated claim to Appellant; and

c. Failing to properly characterize the motivation and intent of Appellant's actions.

This specification is not sustained. See Decision below.

5. The SPJC erred through injustice in the decision D-8.0105f by:

a. Failing to acknowledge the plain meanings of support, nurture, justice and dignity afforded offended members, and the purpose and process of church discipline;

b. Failing to acknowledge the inherent practical effect of denying an opportunity to resolve the fundamental issues contained within the original complaint and appeal;

c. Failing to provide specific or substantive justification determining how being denied rebuttal testimony was harmless;

d. Failing to comprehend how the session has adamantly resisted explaining to Appellant why neither discreet pastoral care, informal, nor formal charges were not pursued by the session in over three (3) years; and

e. Failing to address the PPJC's error that the conduct and behaviors of non-members may not be ministered and witnessed to under pastoral care.

This specification is not sustained. See Decision below.

6. The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation D-8.1050g by:

a. Erroneous interpretation and application of the duty to conciliate and mediate D-1.0103;

b. Failing to acknowledge and remedy the complaint's and appeal's plain irregularities and effects;

c. Failing to acknowledge that session restatements of the Constitution are inherently damaging and unlawful;

d. Erroneous interpretation and application of denying Appellant support, nurture, justice and dignity per the Book of Order;

e. Erroneous interpretation and application because a false statement may be harmless in this specific case that the dishonest statement does not need to be addressed; and

f. Erroneous interpretation and application of the meaning “renunciation of jurisdiction.”

This specification is not sustained. See Decision below.

Decision

After consideration of the record of the case, this Commission finds that Appellant does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In arriving at this conclusion, this Commission must assume the truth of all facts alleged in the complaint and then determine whether those assumed facts warrant any relief. See, McKittrick vs. The Session of West End Presbyterian Church of Albany, New York, Minutes, 2003, pp. 272-274.

Within our polity, certain responsibilities, and the power to implement those responsibilities, are assigned to councils. A council has the authority to act or not act in matters within its discretion. A delinquency may arise when a council fails to act when it is required to act under the Constitution. However, a council does not commit a delinquency when it refrains from exercising its power in discretionary matters, nor does a council commit a delinquency when it exercises its best judgment in a manner other than a member might wish. See, Montreat vs. General Assembly Council, Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 346. The Session of Morrow Presbyterian Church was not delinquent in failing to act in accordance with Appellant’s directives. Appellant’s interpretation of the scope of the Rules of Discipline and the meaning of pastoral care do not create an obligation on the part of the Session to act as requested nor do they constitute a delinquency or irregularity if the Session fails so to act.

Appellant acknowledges that his former spouse is no longer a member of Morrow Presbyterian Church. Although there is some question in the record about how to characterize her departure, the resignation from membership was accepted by the Session. A former member of a congregation is no longer subject to either the jurisdiction of the Session or the Rules of Discipline, regardless of how the withdrawal from membership is characterized.

Further, although Appellant appealed from the April 28, 2013, letter from Appellee informing Appellant that his membership and ordination would “be revoked” if he persisted in work which disrupted the peace and harmony of the church, Appellant has, in fact, not been removed as a ruling elder or as a member of the Morrow Presbyterian Church. Because no such action has been taken, Appellant has failed to state a claim for which relief can be granted. Appellant’s other claims do not arise out of the delinquency of which Appellant complained: the April 28, 2013, letter.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the South Atlantic Permanent Judicial Commission is upheld and this case is dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of the Session of Morrow Presbyterian Church report this Decision and Order to the Session at its first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the South Atlantic report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioners Barbara Bundick and Maurice Caskey were not present and did not participate in the hearing or deliberations.

)	Remedial Case 222-02
The 221st General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Civil Union and Marriage Issues Committee of the 221st General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Respondent.)

Arrival Statement

This remedial case comes before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) as a matter of original jurisdiction from a Challenge filed by Complainant, Session, First Presbyterian Church of Palmdale, California (Complainant or Palmdale), to the Preliminary Order for Dismissal issued by the Moderator and Clerk of the GAPJC on July 21, 2014.

Jurisdictional Statement

Under the provisions of D-6.0306, this Commission finds that Complainant’s Challenge to the Preliminary Order for Dismissal was properly and timely filed and that this Commission has jurisdiction to hear this Challenge.

Appearances

Complainant, Session of First Presbyterian Church of Palmdale, appeared through its counsel, Jorg R. Largent. Respondents, the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Committee on Civil Union and Marriage Issues of the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), appeared through their counsel, James A. Wilson.

History

This case arises from the Complainant’s allegation of irregularity in the approval of the Committee on Civil Union and Marriage Issues (Committee) Item 10-03, Authoritative Interpretation of the Book of Order, Section W-4.9000 (AI) of the 221st General Assembly (June 14–21, 2014) (GA). The GA created the Committee, as an assembly committee, for the purpose of reviewing and rendering advice about civil union and marriage matters coming before that Assembly.

On July 17, 2014, the Complainant filed a Complaint and Request for Stay of Enforcement with the Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. The Complaint alleged irregularities by the Committee and the GA in the GA’s acceptance during plenary session of the Committee’s recommendation and approval of the AI to affirm pastoral discretion in the performance of marriage ceremonies.

The GAPJC Moderator and Clerk reviewed the Complaint and Request for Stay of Enforcement and issued a Preliminary Order for Dismissal on July 21, 2014. The Order concluded that the GAPJC does not have jurisdiction over the GA; that the Complainant does not have standing to file the Complaint; that the Complaint does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted; and that as an assembly committee of the GA, the Committee had no power other than to make recommendations to the GA and that, therefore, neither the Committee nor its members are a party to this Complaint.

On July 21, 2014, the GAPJC Commissioners were informed of the Complainant’s Request for Remedial Action and Stay of Enforcement, the Preliminary Order of Dismissal and the requirements for a Stay pursuant to D-6.0103. The Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly did not receive the required signatures to stay the AI; therefore, the Complainant’s Request for Stay of Enforcement was not granted.

The Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly received the Complainant’s Challenge to the Preliminary Order for Dismissal on August 18, 2014. Under the provisions of D-6.0305, the GAPJC Moderator and Clerk reviewed the Challenge and determined that it was properly and timely filed. An Order Accepting Challenge was issued on August 20, 2014, and a hearing was scheduled on the Challenge for February 13, 2015.

Basis for Complainant’s Challenge

Complainant challenged the Preliminary Order of Dismissal of the Moderator and Clerk of the GAPJC asserting that the GAPJC did have jurisdiction to hear the Complaint, that the Complainant did have standing to bring the Complaint, and that the Complaint did state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

Decision

This Commission finds that it lacks jurisdiction over the GA and the Committee and, therefore, affirms the Preliminary Order for Dismissal.

Book of Order D-6.0202b(2) states that a complaint may be filed by a session against the Presbyterian Mission Agency or an entity of the General Assembly. There is no provision in the Book of Order permitting a complaint to be filed against the General Assembly itself. The Committee was an assembly committee and not an entity of the GA. The Committee did not have the power to act other than to make recommendations to the GA (See, G-3.0109). Upon adjournment of the GA, the Committee ceased to exist. Therefore, this Commission has no jurisdiction over the GA or the Committee.

D-6.0306(c) states, “If the permanent judicial commission determines that any point listed in D-6.0305 has been answered in the negative, the permanent judicial commission shall dismiss the case.” Since this Commission finds that it has no jurisdiction, it does not need to decide whether the Complainant had standing to bring this Complaint or whether the Complaint stated a claim upon which relief could be granted.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that this case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of Session of the First Presbyterian Church of Palmdale, California, report this Decision to the Session at the first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioners Mary McClure and Flor Velez-Diaz did not participate in the hearing or deliberations.

Remedial Case 222-03

Arrival Statement

This is a remedial case filed with the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) as a case of original jurisdiction by Cherokee Presbytery; The Session, First Presbyterian Church, Port Huron, Michigan; The Session, First Presbyterian Church, Ellsworth, Wisconsin; The Session, Calvary Presbyterian Church, Ann Arbor, Michigan; and The Session, St. Timothy Presbyterian Church, Livonia, Michigan, Complainants v. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Respondent.

Jurisdictional Statement

Under the provisions of D-6.0306, this Commission finds that Complainants' Challenge to the Preliminary Order for Dismissal was properly and timely filed and that this Commission has jurisdiction to hear this Challenge.

Appearances

Complainants were represented by Mark Schneider and Complainants' Coordinator, Edward Koster, both of whom appeared by telephone conference call such that they could hear and be heard by all present. Respondent was represented by James A. Wilson and Paul K. Hooker.

History

Prior to the meeting of the 221st General Assembly (2014) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the GA), the Presbytery of Heartland transmitted to the GA an overture seeking an Authoritative Interpretation (AI) of the Book of Order, W-4.9000. This overture was subsequently identified by the GA as Item 10-03. The GA referred Item 10-03 to the Assembly Committee for Civil Union and Marriage Issues (the Committee). Pursuant to G-6.02, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (the ACC) provided timely written advice to the Stated Clerk of the GA on Item 10-03 as follows:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the 221st General Assembly (2014) disapprove Item 10-03.

This overture proposes an authoritative interpretation which would allow the exercise of pastoral discretion and freedom of conscience in conducting a marriage service for any couple as permitted by the "laws of the place where the couple seeks to be married." It suggests an interpretation contrary to the clear statement of W-4.9000.

Section W-4.9001 and related citations (W-4.9002a, W-4.9004, W-4.9006) limit marriage to couples who are "a woman and a man." Because these statements are clear and unambiguous, they can not [sic] be interpreted in a manner that is inconsistent with their plain and ordinary meaning.

The Book of Order is not based upon state and civil law, but the church's understanding of Scripture and Reformed theology. As noted in Southard v Presbytery of Boston (GAPJC 2012, 220-02), "While the PCUSA is free to amend its definition of marriage, a change in state law does not amend the Book of Order."

Freedom of conscience is a foundational principle of the PC(USA) (G-2.0105) but must be exercised within certain bounds. The exercise of freedom of conscience in and of itself is not necessarily a violation of polity or an obstruction of constitutional governance. Such freedom of conscience, however, is not freedom of action. All persons in ordered ministry have a duty to fulfill constitutionally mandated responsibilities.

If it is the will of the assembly to change the definition of marriage, such a change is better accomplished by amendment of W-4.9000 rather than by authoritative interpretation.

Following discussion on the plenary floor, Item 10-03, as amended, was moved for approval. A commissioner asked that the motion be considered out of order in view of G-3.0105, and lengthy debate followed. Several questions were referred to the ACC. According to the Complainants, the ACC's responses were at best confusing and at worst directly contradicted its written advice. The ACC's advice, in general, was that Item 10-03 was in order and when asked, said, "It is our opinion that it is within the rights of this Council to consider taking this action." The plenary went on to approve the following AI of W-4.9000:

Worship is a central element of the pastoral care of the people of God (W-6.3001, W-6.3010) in which a teaching elder's discernment of the leading of the Holy Spirit is indispensable. The necessity of ensuring the exercise of freedom of conscience in the interpretation of Scripture (G-2.0105) in the planning and leadership of worship has deep roots in our Reformed tradition and theology. Because a service of marriage is one form of such worship, when a couple requests the involvement of the church in solemnizing their marriage as permitted by the laws of the civil jurisdiction in which the marriage is to take place, teaching elders* have the pastoral responsibility to assess the capabilities, intentions, and readiness of the couple to be married (W-4.9002), and the freedom of conscience in the interpretation of Scripture (G-2.0105) to participate in any such marriage they believe the Holy Spirit calls them to perform.

Exercising such discretion and freedom of conscience under the prayerful guidance of Scripture, teaching elders may conduct a marriage service for any such couple in the place where the community gathers for worship, so long as it is approved by the session; or in such other place as may be suitable for a service of Christian worship. In no case shall any teaching elder's conscience be bound to conduct any marriage service for any couple except by his or her understanding of the Word, and the leading of the Holy Spirit. The authoritative interpretation of this section by the 203rd General Assembly (1991) (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 395, paragraphs 21.124-128), and the subsequent authoritative interpretations of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission relying upon it, are withdrawn and replaced with this authoritative interpretation.

*As in other places in the Directory for Worship, the use of "teaching elders" in this paragraph should be understood to include ruling elders commissioned to pastoral service (Minutes, 2014, p. 30).

On September 8, 2014, the Complainants filed a remedial Complaint objecting to the ACC's actions, advice and comments to the plenary of the GA during the discussion of Item

10-03. The Complaint seeks to have the GAPJC set aside or otherwise declare irregular an act or acts of the ACC. The Complainants allege that certain statements or advice of the ACC to the GA plenary were conflicting or erroneous.

On October 27, 2014, the Respondent filed a Motion to Dismiss and Answer to Complaint, requesting that all claims and requests for relief against it or any other person or entity be dismissed.

By Preliminary Order for Dismissal dated October 29, 2014, the Moderator and the Clerk of the GAPJC found that the GAPJC had jurisdiction, the Complainants had standing, and the Complaint was timely filed. However, the Moderator and Clerk went on to find that the Complaint did not state a claim upon which relief could be granted, and the matter was dismissed.

The Complainants filed a Challenge to the Preliminary Order on November 21, 2014. By Order dated December 2, 2014, the Challenge was accepted and is now before this Commission.

Decision

This Commission finds that the Complaint does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to D-6.0305d.

Under the Book of Order, the GAPJC does not act as the final arbiter of the Constitution in Presbyterian polity. This Commission's role is restricted and it has no jurisdiction to directly declare an action of the GA unconstitutional. Direct challenges to actions of the GA do not fall within the GAPJC's jurisdiction in response to a complaint filed pursuant to D-6.0202b(2).

Pursuant to G-6.02, authoritative interpretations of the Book of Order may be provided by the GA or through a decision of the GAPJC in a remedial or disciplinary case. This is not a remedial or disciplinary case challenging an action performed under the authority of an AI. Given the posture of this case, a constitutional issue is not before this Commission.

By filing against the ACC, the Complainants seek to do indirectly what cannot be done directly in an action against the GA. During oral argument before this Commission, counsel for the Complainants conceded that bringing an action against the ACC was the only way Complainants could find to challenge the AI.

Prior to the GA, the ACC advised in writing that Item 10-03 was "contrary to the clear statement of W-4.9000." The Complaint alleges that the oral advice from the ACC members during plenary conflicted with and/or was outside the scope of the ACC's written advice. In addition, the Complainants allege the oral advice was also contrary to the Constitution and thus out of order under Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised. Implicit in the Complainants' argument is the assumption that different advice from the ACC would have led to a different result in the GA's vote on Item 10-03. This Commission does not know and must not speculate on how the GA would have responded had the ACC advised the GA differently. After the GA considered the advice of the ACC, that advice was superseded by the GA's action.

Assuming the facts in the Complaint to be true, given the case before this Commission, there is no relief that can be granted. Even if the ACC's advice during plenary was flawed or confusing, once the GA voted on Item 10-03, the Constitution does not allow the ACC's advice or the GA's action to be reviewed by the GAPJC.

This Commission upholds the decision in the Preliminary Order for Dismissal that the Complaint does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that this case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Cherokee report this Decision to the Presbytery of Cherokee at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Cherokee enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerks of Session of the First Presbyterian Church of Port Huron, Michigan; First Presbyterian Church of Ellsworth, Wisconsin; Calvary Presbyterian Church of Ann Arbor, Michigan; and St. Timothy Presbyterian Church of Livonia, Michigan, report this Decision to their respective Sessions at the first meeting after receipt, that the Sessions enter the full Decision upon their minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

e. Remedial Appeal 222-04

Teaching Elder Robert Smith and Ruling Elder Edward Kappus,) Appellants/Complainants,)	DECISION AND ORDER
v.)	Remedial Case 222-04
The Presbytery of the Peaks)
Appellee/Respondent.)

Arrival Statement

This remedial case comes before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on appeal filed by Robert Smith and Edward Kappus (Appellants), from an October 30, 2014, Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic (SPJC). The Notice of Appeal was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on December 2, 2014.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Appellants have standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellants were present and were represented by Parker T. Williamson. The Presbytery of the Peaks (Appellee or Presbytery) was represented by Archibald Wallace, III.

History

Beginning in 2011, the Presbytery received letters and calls from members of First Presbyterian Church in Roanoke, Virginia (Church). In an April 12, 2012, meeting with the Session, the Presbytery’s Committee on Ministry (COM) learned that the Session was involved in a discernment process regarding dismissal from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). On December 13, 2012, COM appointed an Administrative Review Committee (ARC) to work with the Session. After concluding progress had not been made with the Session, the Presbytery voted at its May 9, 2013, stated meeting to change the status of ARC to an Administrative Commission (AC). In July 2013, the AC imposed five moratoria, including that no members would be added to, transferred out, or removed from the rolls.

No complaint was filed at that time to lift the moratoria under the Rules of Discipline. However, on or about October 22, 2013, the Presbytery received a Request for Remedial Action for consideration at its October 24, 2013, stated meeting. The Presbytery was asked to “remedy the irregularities committed in its name” by its AC through: (1) dismissing the AC; (2) declaring null and void the five moratoria; (3) repudiating various listed actions of the AC; (4) recommitting the Presbytery to both the spirit and the letter of its Gracious Dismissal Policy; and (5) electing a response team that would strictly adhere to the Gracious Dismissal Policy.

At the Presbytery’s October 24, 2013, meeting the Moderator announced that this Request for Remedial Action would need to be resolved by the SPJC. The Moderator nominated and Presbytery elected a committee of counsel according to D-6.0302.

The Presbytery, during its May 8, 2014, meeting, acting upon an order from the SPJC, addressed the Request for Remedial Action and then voted on each of the five requests. The Presbytery voted in favor of recommitting itself to the spirit and letter of the Gracious Dismissal Policy. The other four requests were not approved including the request to declare null and void the five moratoria imposed by the AC.

Following the Presbytery meeting, Appellants filed two nearly identical complaints with the SPJC. The first complaint was filed on May 21, 2014, alleging a delinquency occurred at the Presbytery’s May 8, 2014, stated meeting when the Presbytery failed to rescind the moratoria imposed by the AC. On July 3, 2014, Appellants filed a second complaint alleging an irregularity occurred at the May 8, 2014, Presbytery meeting when the Presbytery refused to rescind the five moratoria imposed on its behalf by the AC.

At the Hearing on October 30, 2014, receiving no objection from the parties, the SPJC ruled that the two virtually identical complaints be consolidated into one Complaint of an irregularity. It also ruled that the consolidated Complaint did not state a claim upon which relief could be granted. The case was dismissed.

06 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRY

A Notice of Appeal from the Decision of the SPJC was received by the GAPJC on December 2, 2014. By Preliminary Order for a Hearing dated January 21, 2015, the Appeal to the GAPJC was accepted.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: (Appellants' Specification of Error No. A) The SPJC erred in finding that the complaints fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under D-6.0305d based on its assertion that the complaints "are now well past the timeliness requirements of D-6.0202a."

This specification of error is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 2: (Appellants' Specification of Error No. B) The SPJC erred in determining that it need not review the constitutionality of the AC's actions because it found that the Appellee committed no procedural errors.

This specification of error is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 3: (Appellants' Specification of Error No. C) The SPJC erred in dismissing the complaints because it declined to substitute its judgment for that of the Appellee.

This specification of error is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 4: (Appellants' Specification of Error No. D) The SPJC erred in finding that the complaints fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under D-6.0305d based on its opinion that a party is forever barred from challenging the constitutionality of an action beyond 90 days of its first occurrence.

This specification of error is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 5: (Appellants' Specification of Error No. E) The SPJC erred by overreaching the limits of inquiry under D-6.0305 because it addressed the merits of Appellants' claims in dismissing the complaints.

This specification of error is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 6: (Appellants' Specification of Error No. F) The SPJC erred in dismissing the complaints because it committed a procedural error in consolidating the complaints and thereby unjustly dismissing one of them without due process.

This specification of error is not sustained.

Decision

The act that forms the basis for the complaint was the imposition of a moratorium against the acceptance of new members, which occurred in July 2013. However, the sole issue before this Commission is the May 8, 2014, Presbytery decision to leave in place the moratorium on receiving new members or removing members from the roll. The Synod ruled that the Presbytery's decision was an exercise in discretionary judgment. This Commission does not reach that argument.

This Commission affirms the SPJC decision that there were no procedural errors at the May 8, 2014, meeting. Furthermore, the SPJC did not err in consolidating two nearly identical complaints for the sake of judicial economy, especially since Appellants did not object to the consolidation at the time.

Appellants argue that the Presbytery's failure to rescind the moratorium on May 8, 2014, provides an independent basis for reviewing the constitutionality of the AC's imposition of the moratorium on behalf of the Presbytery in July 2013. Because this was an action taken by an AC, it can only be classified as an irregularity under D-2.0202a. A complaint based upon an irregularity must be filed within ninety days of an occurrence under D-6.0202a. The Appellants did not file their complaint until well after the deadline for the July 2013 action.

Appellants further argue that the moratorium constitutes a continuing violation akin to a continuing tort, as borrowed from civil law. This Commission declines to adopt this theory for two reasons. First, the continuing violation theory is not contained within the Book of Order. Second, even if this Commission were inclined to adopt this theory, it would not do so in this case, as the enactment of the moratorium on membership is a discrete and completed act which could have been the subject of an immediate complaint. To do otherwise would be to nullify the 90-day deadline of D-6.0202a.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic Permanent Judicial Commission is affirmed and the case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic report this Decision to the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of the Peaks report this Decision to the Presbytery of the Peaks at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of the Peaks enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Dissent

Commissioners Robin L. Roberts, Helen R. Heffington, Kevin L. Nollette, and Maurice R. Caskey

A Request for Remedial Action filed by Edward Bennett, a member of Session of the Church, and Robert Smith sought action by the Presbytery to rescind the actions of the AC which, among other things, prohibited the Session from making any change in the membership of the church, whether by confession of faith or transfer. Presbytery declined to docket or to act on the request. That refusal to act was appealed to SPJC.

On April 29, 2014, SPJC ordered the Presbytery to docket and consider the request, as it would a motion to rescind under G-3.0109b(6), not as a complaint for irregularity. Based on the SPJC’s ruling, the Presbytery then docketed and took up the matter at its May 8, 2014, meeting and declined by a majority vote to rescind the moratorium. The Appellant then filed its Complaint of delinquency to SPJC which dismissed the Complaint. SPJC’s ruling has been timely appealed to this Commission.

The question before this Commission is whether the Complaint stated a claim upon which relief can be granted.

The majority of the Commission declines to reach the question of whether the Commission’s judgment can be substituted for that of Presbytery. “A permanent judicial commission may not substitute its judgment for that of a lower governing body unless the decision being reviewed is contrary to an express provision of the Book of Order, arbitrary, unreasonable or clearly erroneous.” Kuipers v. Elkton PC 217-11 (2005) (emphasis added). In our opinion, the Presbytery was faced with a Constitutional issue. Membership is a fundamental matter, not a budgetary or administrative issue, in which a presbytery or synod should not meddle.

Even though the AC placed its moratorium on membership during a gracious dismissal process, a time in which membership and numbers can be manipulated, the record contains no evidence of manipulation of membership by the Session. The AC overreached in attempting to deal with the membership issues. The acceptance of membership is a non-delegable, essential and fundamental function of the Session lodged exclusively to that council in the Book of Order. A higher council, such as presbytery acting through an administrative commission, cannot proscribe or curtail a session’s duties concerning membership, as the AC did to the Church at Roanoke, without assuming original jurisdiction. The AC (having been given the authority by Presbytery) did not assume original jurisdiction, but usurped the Session’s right to determine membership. The failure by Presbytery, and/or the SPJC on the subsequent appeal, to rescind this moratorium prohibiting acceptance or dismissal of members by confession of faith or transfer was delinquent and violates the Book of Order. Thus, it falls within the exception articulated in Kuipers, supra.

On the basis of these findings, and there being other facts that should be more fully developed, in our opinion this matter should be remanded for trial before the SPJC.

f. Remedial Appeal 222-05

The Reverend James MacKellar,)

)	DECISION AND ORDER
v.)	Remedial Case 222-05
The Synod of the Northeast,) Respondent)

Arrival Statement

This remedial case of original jurisdiction came before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (this Commission or GAPJC) and was filed by the Reverend James MacKellar (Complainant), regarding action taken by the Respondent, the Synod of the Northeast (the Synod) at a meeting on October 25, 2014. The trial was held at the spring meeting of the GAPJC held in Indianapolis, Indiana on May 1, 2015.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission has jurisdiction, Complainant has standing to file the Complaint, the Complaint was timely filed, and the Complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Appearances

Complainant represented himself and appeared by telephone conference call such that he could hear and be heard by all present. The Respondent was represented by Carlos Wilton, Warren McNeill, and Jenne Radak, the Committee of Counsel for the Synod of the Northeast.

History

The complaint was filed on January 12, 2015 and the Answer was filed on February 20, 2015. This Commission has original jurisdiction (D-6.0202), and the case was accepted on February 27, 2015, for trial

A pre-trial conference was held pursuant to D-6.0310. By agreement of the parties on April 22, 2015, the facts were stipulated as follows:

For the past several years, the Synod of the Northeast has been engaged in a process of self-study and missional reorganization, resulting in a plan called "A New Way Forward." The Synod Assembly adopted this plan in October, 2013 and formally implemented it through By-laws and Standing Rules that the Synod Assembly adopted in October, 2014. The members of two different Synod Assemblies concurred, adopting not only A New Way Forward, but also the By-laws and Standing Rules, by a substantial margin.

Those By-Laws and Standing Rules contain provisions that allow presbyteries, seeking to comply with Book of Order mandates for unity in diversity and openness, to elect church members who are neither ruling elders nor teaching elders as commissioners to the Synod Assembly. They also permit the Synod's Leadership Team to name, from among a group of individuals nominated by the presbyteries, church members who are neither ruling elders nor teaching elders as members of the Synod's Mission and Ministries Commission (a commission that is responsible for the operations of the Synod between biennial Synod Assembly meetings).

In accordance with G-3.0401, the Synod's presbyteries are currently voting on those portions of the By-laws and Standing Rules related to participation and representation. The voting results to date are 10 presbyteries in favor and none opposed, with a total of 12 presbyteries required (out of 22) to form the necessary majority.

The appellant, a former Stated Clerk of the Synod, was a commissioner to the Synod Assembly who spoke against this measure and who voted in the minority.

In addition to these stipulations, at the trial held on May 1, 2015, one witness appeared on behalf of the Respondent.

Alleged Irregularities

1. The Synod of the Northeast erred in constitutional interpretation by adopting Bylaws and Standing Rules that allow presbyteries, seeking to comply with the mandates for unity in diversity and openness, to elect church members who are neither teaching elders nor ruling elders as commissioners to the Synod Assembly.

This specification of error is sustained.

2. The Synod of the Northeast erred in constitutional interpretation by adopting Bylaws and Standing Rules that permit the Synod's Leadership Team to name, from among a group of individuals nominated by the presbyteries, church members who are neither ruling elders nor teaching elders as members of the Synod's Mission and Ministries Commission (an administrative commission responsible for operations of the Synod between biennial Synod meetings).

This specification of error is sustained.

Decision

This Commission commends the Synod's goal to hear the full diverse voice of the church as affirmed in F-1.0403; "The unity of believers in Christ is reflected in the rich diversity of the church's membership. In Christ, by the power of the Spirit, God unites persons through baptism regardless of race, ethnicity, age, sex, disability, geography, or theological conviction." In so doing, the Synod also honors the witness of Scripture "For God shows no partiality." (Romans 2:11).

Nonetheless, the Synod erred in the approach it adopted because by definition a synod is "composed of commissioners elected by the presbyteries. ... The commissioners from each presbytery shall be divided equally between ruling elders and teaching elders” (G-3.0104). This definition conforms to F-3.0202, which provides: “This church shall be governed by presbyters, that is, ruling elders and teaching elders.” Contrary to the Synod’s arguments, the adoption of the New Form of Government reaffirmed rather than diminished these principles. It is not intrinsically discriminatory to require presbytery, synod and General Assembly commissioners to have prior experience in the government of local congregations, the “basic form of the church” (G-1.0101). To the extent the Synod’s Bylaws and Standing Rules fail to give proper weight to the requirements of F-3.0202 and G-3.0401 by giving vote to members who are neither ruling elders nor teaching elders, they are unconstitutional.

The issue of broader representation in decision-making is significant to the wider church. For instance, this Commission notes that the 221st General Assembly (2014) encouraged the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to continue the discussion of how to include young adults in all levels of the life and ministry of the PC(USA), including encouraging sessions to affirm the call of young adults to the office of ruling elder (Minutes, 2014, Part I, 12, 170, Item 303). We strongly encourage the wider church to continue this discussion.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that those portions of the Synod bylaws allowing presbyteries to elect Synod Commissioners who are not ruling elders or teaching elders, and allowing such commissioners to serve on Synod commissions are declared null and void.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first stated meeting following the date of this Order, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from the Synod’s minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Absences And Non-Appearances

Commissioners Patrick Notley, A. Bates Butler, III, and Ruth Goldthwaite did not participate in the hearing or deliberations.

Concurrence

While we concur with the opinion, we have reservations with the larger issue of how the Book of Order is interpreted. In the history of this denomination, there are instances in which GA, either through its Assembly or the GAPJC, has favored broad interpretations of certain Book of Order provisions that could arguably be construed to be quite specific in their language. It is disheartening to see inconsistency in the application of interpretive lens, depending on the issue being addressed. Whether or not a person agrees with any particular lens (or the product of those decisions), there is something to be said for consistency in the establishment of precedent.

The eyes of PC(USA) members are upon the actions of their leadership, more so now than ever before. Predominantly, the actions of the GA have come under the scope of the members due to the authoritative implication inherent in such actions. In times where councils are increasingly seeking guidance on how to face present and upcoming challenges, it is important to provide this guidance in an insightful and consistent manner. While the prayerful and faithful qualities that characterize GAPJC decisions cannot be denied, there are still some elements that get lost in translation. It may be that more global exposure is necessary; perhaps a look around at our neighbors might shed some light on the situations our churches and councils face in their endeavor to procure the peace, unity and purity of the body of Christ. And if those neighbors reflect a homogeneous society, look further away...as far as necessary.

Although never intended, it is an inescapable fact that GA actions can have hurtful results; especially when the actions under review were prayerfully and carefully implemented in an intentional effort to follow Christ. When one party rejoices, another party despairs. What cannot be overlooked, under any circumstance, is that all are part of the Church, all deserve to contribute in building up the Church, and the efforts of brothers and sisters in Christ to bridge gaps, overcome barriers, and build bridges in the interest of unity should not only be commended, but supported.

THE PRESBYTERY OF MUSKINGUM VALLEY,)	DECISION AND ORDER
Appellant/Respondent,)	Remedial Case 222-06
v.)
ROBERT A. HAUSER,) Appellee/Complainant.)

Arrival Statement

This remedial case comes before the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (this Commission or GAPJC) on appeal from a Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant (SPJC) regarding action taken by the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley (the Presbytery or Appellant) with respect to Robert A. Hauser (Complainant or Appellee).

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission has jurisdiction, Appellant has standing to file this Appeal, the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and the Appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellant was present through a member of the Committee of Counsel, Christopher Stewart, and was represented by James A. Wilson. Appellee and his counsel, Edward H. Koster, appeared by telephone conference call such that both could hear and be heard by all present.

History

This case arises from Appellant’s allegation of errors by the SPJC in its decision on a remedial complaint against the Presbytery for denying Appellee’s request to be restored from a censure of temporary exclusion from ordered ministry.

Appellee was granted honorably retired status on January 27, 2008. He was placed on the inactive roll of teaching elders by the Presbytery on April 28, 2010, after censure was imposed by the Permanent Judicial Commission of Muskingum Valley Presbytery (PPJC) pursuant to D-12.0104d (the PPJC Decision). The censure imposed was “temporary exclusion from the office of Minister of Word and Sacrament for a period of not less than four years, with credit for one year.” This effectively was a period of exclusion of no fewer than three (3) years. Neither party appealed this censure. Appellee remains a member of the Presbytery excluded from office.

Appellee requested on April 17, 2013, that the Presbytery consider restoring him to ordered ministry. The Presbytery voted at a special meeting on April 1, 2014, to deny Appellee’s request for restoration.

Appellee filed a remedial case against the Presbytery, with the SPJC, on April 23, 2014. The SPJC conducted a trial on March 16, 2015, on the issue of whether the Presbytery had the right to exclude the Appellee from the office of teaching elder for a period greater than four years under the terms of a censure that mandated a temporary exclusion for a period not less than four years. The SPJC noted that other issues would be examined in a trial on a future date, if necessary.

On March 16, 2015, the SPJC ruled that a temporary exclusion from the exercise of ordered ministry shall be for “a definite period of time” or for a defined period of supervised rehabilitation; that the Presbytery acted unconstitutionally in establishing a period “not less than 4 years” without an established period of rehabilitation; that the Presbytery violated its constitutional mandate in refusing Appellee’s request for restoration; that the Presbytery retains judicial jurisdiction; and that remedial action is appropriate (the SPJC Decision). It then remanded the matter to the Presbytery and directed that Appellee shall have the right to appeal for restoration.

The Presbytery appealed the SPJC Decision on March 23, 2015. The appeal included a challenge to the preliminary questions of the Complaint, as amended, before the SPJC. The Presbytery also filed a separate motion for stay pending appeal. This Commission issued a Preliminary Order for Hearing on March 25, 2015, and granted a Stay on March 27, 2015.

Specifications of Error

Specification of Error No. 1: The Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant erred in the proceedings and in constitutional interpretation in finding that Appellee had standing to assert the claims contained in the Complaint and Amended Complaint in this matter.

This specification of error is not sustained.

Given his status as a member excluded from office, Appellee could speak on the floor of Presbytery, but only on matters relating to himself [see GA (1994, 197, 21.092, Req. 94-13)]. As a teaching elder member of the Presbytery, Appellee had standing to file a complaint. Enrollment at a particular meeting is not a requirement for a teaching elder.

Specification of Error No. 2: The Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant erred in the proceedings and in constitutional interpretation in finding Appellee had stated a claim upon which relief could be granted insofar as his Complaint and Amended Complaint sought to modify the censure imposed upon him in a disciplinary case, which he had not appealed.

This specification of error is sustained.

Appellee argues that the PPJC Decision for an indefinite temporary exclusion was erroneous. While the PPJC Decision was not compliant with the language of D-12.0104, Appellee waived his right to have the order judicially modified by failing to file a timely appeal. The time limit for such appeals serves the compelling purpose of finality in disciplinary matters.

A remedial case may not be used to address an error committed in a disciplinary case. Presbytery of East Tennessee v. Cook (211-5, 1999); Evans v. Presbytery of Lake Michigan (207-4, 1995). “[T]he appellate process is the means by which a judicial commission’s alleged errors in constitutional interpretation are corrected.” Presbytery of San Joaquin v. Permanent Judicial Commission, Synod of the Pacific, and Synod of the Pacific (215-3, 2002). Pursuant to prior GAPJC decisions, this Commission will not revisit the PPJC disciplinary decision through this remedial appeal. Therefore, this specific claim is not one upon which relief can be granted.

Specification of Error No. 3: The Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant erred in the proceedings and in constitutional interpretation in determining that it had the authority in this remedial action to modify the terms of censure imposed upon Appellee in a disciplinary case and not appealed by him in that disciplinary case.

This specification of error is sustained.

See the rationale for Specification of Error No. 2.

Specification of Error No. 4: The Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant erred in the proceedings and in constitutional interpretation in finding that the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley acted unconstitutionally in following the express language of a censure imposed upon Appellee in a disciplinary case that was not appealed by him in that disciplinary case.

This specification of error is sustained.

See the rationale for Specification of Error No. 2.

Specification of Error No. 5: The Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant erred in the proceedings and in constitutional interpretation in finding that the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley “retains judicial jurisdiction” in a disciplinary case in which a final judgment and censure have been entered and from which no timely appeal has been taken.

This specification of error is sustained in part and not sustained in part.

A presbytery has no authority to amend a censure. Insofar as the judicial process requires ongoing enforcement of a censure, that authority rests with the presbytery.

Specification of Error No. 6: The Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant erred in the proceedings and in constitutional interpretation, assuming it has the jurisdiction to hear a challenge to Appellee’s censure, in not returning the case to the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley for a new determination of the appropriate censure to be imposed upon Appellee.

This specification of error is sustained.

Decision

The Book of Order grants authority to the council that imposed the censure to determine restoration to ordered ministry (D-12.0104h). The PPJC Decision does not set a definite period of time for temporary exclusion, however the PPJC clearly intended its order to be a temporary exclusion, not a permanent removal. Permanent judicial commissions must follow Chapter XII of the Rules of Discipline, which governs censure and restoration in disciplinary cases. In fact, D-12.0104 provides language to be used when a temporary exclusion is pronounced.

When a permanent judicial commission issues a decision in a disciplinary case that does not comply with the Book of Order, the remedy for the accused is direct appeal.

06 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON CHURCH POLITY AND ORDERED MINISTRY

Nothing in this Decision should be read to prohibit the Presbytery from using any appropriate considerations in exercising its functions concerning its membership. The Presbytery must, in all respects, accord procedural safeguards and due process in considering restoration. The particular facts in this case require this Commission to clarify that this Decision does not create a new category of temporary exclusion.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant is affirmed in part and reversed in part, and the stay is lifted. This Decision only dismisses matters related to the modification of the disciplinary censure through this remedial case. This Decision does not address any other issues reserved by the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Covenant in its Decision dated March 16, 2015.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Covenant report this Decision to the Synod of the Covenant at the first meeting after receipt, that the Synod of the Covenant enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley report this Decision to the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley at the first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery of Muskingum Valley enter the full Decision upon its minutes and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

Commissioners A. Bates Butler, III, and Terry Epling did not participate in the hearing or deliberations.

Concurring Opinion of Robin L. Roberts, Mary McClure, Maurice Caskey, and Barbara Bundick

There is no clear procedural path to address the un-appealed PPJC Decision. The Book of Order does not contemplate a collateral attack on a closed judicial decision. Were a procedural path available, we would find that the order was unconstitutional, as it was neither for a definite time nor for a period defined for completion of supervised rehabilitation (D-12.0104). The PPJC Decision clearly could have been appealed by Hauser. His failure to do so, especially given his stated reason of attempting to take advantage of a non-appeal, has placed the GAPJC in the uncomfortable position of not reversing a plainly unconstitutional order.

The Session of the First Presbyterian Church at Red) Appellee.)

Arrival Statement

This remedial case comes before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) on appeal filed by Sylvia Kuzmak (Appellant), from a May 19, 2015, Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the Synod of the Northeast (SPJC). The Notice of Appeal was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on July 15, 2015.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that it has jurisdiction, that Appellant has standing to file the Appeal, that the Appeal was properly and timely filed, and that the Appeal states one or more grounds for appeal under D-8.0105.

Appearances

Appellant was present and was not represented by counsel. The Committee of Counsel for Session of the First Presbyterian Church at Red Bank, New Jersey (Appellee or Session), was represented by Kimberly Tsimbinos.

History

Appellant filed a complaint with Monmouth Presbytery (Presbytery) on November 18, 2013, alleging that the Session, at its August 20, 2013, meeting and in a letter to Appellant dated August 21, 2013, “did fail to take adequate corrective action to problems identified by [Appellant] after the June 9 [2013] congregational meeting.” The officers of the Presbytery Permanent Judicial Commission (PPJC) dismissed the Complaint on March 4, 2014, finding that the PPJC did not have jurisdiction over two of the delinquencies, Appellant had standing to file the Complaint, the Complaint was timely filed only as to some of the delinquencies, and the Complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. Appellant appealed this decision to the full body on March 20, 2014. After a hearing on the preliminary questions, the PPJC dismissed the Complaint on April 27, 2014, finding that the Complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

Appellant appealed the decision of the PPJC to the SPJC on June 27, 2014. The SPJC Moderator and Clerk answered all of the preliminary questions for appeal in the affirmative. After a hearing, the SPJC issued its Decision and Order on May 19, 2015, upholding the Decision of the PPJC that the Complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted.

Specifications of Error

There are five (5) specifications of error raised by Appellant in the Notice of Appeal to the GAPJC dated July 11, 2015, most with sub parts. This Commission has elected to repeat below the specifications of error in substantially the same language used in the Notice of Appeal.

Specification of Error No. 1: The SPJC erred in constitutional interpretation of the fourth criterion to accept a remedial case (D-6.0305), namely “the complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted.”

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 2: Injustice in the process or decision, due to the SPJC failing to give the Appellant an opportunity to know and to respond to their grounds for dismissal of the case.

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 3: Hastening to a decision before evidence or testimony is fully received.

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 4: Irregularity in the proceedings concerning establishing and sharing the record.

This specification is not sustained.

Specification of Error No. 5: Injustice in the process or decision, due to the SPJC’s misunderstanding and misrepresentation of the complaint and the record of the case.

This specification is not sustained.

Decision

This Commission determines that Appellant failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In arriving at this conclusion, this Commission must assume the truth of all facts alleged in the complaint and then determine whether those assumed facts warrant any relief. (See, McKittrick vs. The Session of West End Presbyterian Church of Albany, New York, Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 272–74).

As this Commission previously ruled:

Within our polity, certain responsibilities, and the power to implement those responsibilities, are assigned to councils. A council has the authority to act or not act in matters within its discretion. A delinquency may arise when a council fails to act when it is required to act under the Constitution. However, a council does not commit a delinquency when it refrains from exercising its power in discretionary matters, nor does a council commit a delinquency when it exercises its best judgment in a manner other than a member might wish. (Buck vs. The Session of Morrow Presbyterian Church, 222-01)

The disciplinary process is not suitable to resolve all issues (See, D-1.0103). Important operational matters often are most efficiently managed by the process of administrative review by contacting the appropriate presbytery officials (See, G-3.0108). Appellant conceded that Appellee responded to the issues she raised, but claimed they were not cured. Appellant does not cite any constitutional articles that the responses violated. Session’s responses to Appellant’s issues were within its constitutional discretion.

Appellant has failed to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. The case is dismissed and the other specifications of error are not sustained.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that the Decision of the Synod of the Northeast Permanent Judicial Commission is upheld and this case is dismissed for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of the Session of First Presbyterian Church at Red Bank, New Jersey, report this Decision and Order to the Session at its first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Monmouth report this Decision and Order to the Presbytery at its first meeting after receipt, that the Presbytery enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Stated Clerk of the Synod of the Northeast report this Decision and Order to the Synod at its first meeting after receipt, that the Synod enter the full Decision and Order upon its minutes, and that an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision and Order be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

The Synod of the Covenant commissioner position was vacant for this proceeding.

Arrival Statement

This is a remedial case of original jurisdiction filed with the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC or this Commission) by the Session of Rutgers Presbyterian Church, New York, NY (Complainant), against the Presbyterian Foundation, the Board of National Missions, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency (Respondents). The matter before this Commission is a Challenge to a November 13, 2015, Preliminary Order of the Executive Committee of the GAPJC (GAPJC EC) for Dismissal of the Complaint filed by the Complainant.

The GAPJC EC issued a Preliminary Order dismissing this Complaint on the grounds that the GAPJC does not have jurisdiction to hear the Complaint, the Complainant does not have standing to file the Complaint, and the Complaint does not state a claim upon which relief can be granted. With three of the four preliminary questions found in the negative, the GAPJC EC declined to reach the issue of timeliness.

Complainant's Notice of Challenge under D-6.0306 was received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly on December 10, 2015.

Jurisdictional Statement

This Commission finds that Complainant's Challenge to the Preliminary Order for Dismissal was properly and timely filed under the provisions of D-6.0306.

Appearances

Complainant was represented by John M. Griem, Jr.; the Presbyterian Foundation and the Board of National Missions were represented by Richard H.C. Clay; and the Presbyterian Mission Agency was represented by James A. Wilson.

History

The Jarvie Trust Agreement (Trust) was established in 1934 between The Jarvie Commonweal Fund (Jarvie Fund), a not-for-profit corporation formed to provide relief to older Protestants residing within fifty miles of New York City, and the Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (BNM). The Jarvie Commonweal Service (Jarvie Service) was an operation supported solely by the Jarvie Fund. The BNM entered into an agreement with the Presbyterian Foundation (Foundation) to provide asset management of the Jarvie Fund. In accordance with the Trust, the BNM assumed oversight of the Jarvie Commonweal Service Committee (Jarvie Committee) and the BNM retained fiduciary responsibility. In 2009, the BNM and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) entered into a letter agreement in which their respective roles were defined, including the roles for staffing and administrative services for the Jarvie Service.

In November 2013, the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA), for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), informed the BNM that it would not renew the letter agreement to provide staffing and administrative services for the Jarvie Service, as this program was no longer aligned with the mission and work of the PMA. The PMA granted the BNM additional transition time to make new arrangements for staffing.

On May 14, 2015, BNM and PMA officials met with the Jarvie Service Executive Director and Assistant Director, informed them of the transition plans to a new third-party provider for the Jarvie Service and that their employer, the PMA, would no longer provide Jarvie Service staff. In a letter dated May 27, 2015, the Jarvie Committee notified the Jarvie Service beneficiaries of the transition and that it would take place over the next month and be fully completed by July 1, 2015.

The Complaint dated September 14, 2015, alleged various irregularities on the part of the Respondents, including eliminating the Director and staff of the Jarvie Service, outsourcing the servicing of its beneficiaries, and not providing the administration of its grant-making program and other functions. Complainant particularly points to the language of paragraph 2 of the Trust as a basis for its allegations:

The Board of National Missions is, to the extent of the income of the Trust Endowment, to assume all obligations, both of money and service, under present commitments of the Jarvie Commonweal Fund to its beneficiaries and, to this end, it (the Board) is to organize a Committee to be known as the James N. Jarvie Commonweal Service, and shall charge said committee with the duty of administering the commitments above assumed and of adding thereto-and continuing as outlined-herein, in fact and in spirit, the Jarvie concept of Old-Age Relief and Service.

Complainant specifically alleges the actions of the Respondents were in violation of the Respondents' fiduciary duties as providers to and servicers of the Trust, in that the Respondents' actions usurped the authority granted to the full Jarvie Committee under the Trust. The Respondents disagree.

Complainant states it has standing, in part, because its congregation is located near the center of the outreach area of the Jarvie Service, and it believes parishioners of the Rutgers Church are among the past, present or future beneficiaries of the Jarvie Service, either directly or indirectly, as individual recipients of its grant-making program or as volunteers in support of the Jarvie Service, its grant recipients and the Jarvie Committee.

On November 13, 2015, the GAPJC EC issued a Preliminary Order for Dismissal of the Complaint stating the GAPJC did not have jurisdiction, the Complainant did not have standing, and the Complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted. Because three of the four preliminary questions were answered in the negative, the GAPJC EC did not reach the issue of timeliness.

Complainant filed a Challenge, which was received on December 10, 2015. On December 18, 2015, the GAPJC EC issued an Order accepting the Complainant's Challenge to the Preliminary Order for Dismissal.

Decision

Trust agreements, including an alleged breach of fiduciary duty under such agreements, are typically interpreted under state law. Whether Respondents breached their fiduciary duties in this case rests on an interpretation of the Trust under New York law. Therefore, the Complaint does not state a claim upon which this Commission can grant relief. Consequently, it is unnecessary to reach the other preliminary questions (See, D-6.0306c). While a case could conceivably arise where an ecclesiastical determination of a trust provision falls within this Commission's purview, this is not such a case.

Order

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that this case is dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Clerk of Session of Rutgers Presbyterian Church of New York, NY, report this Decision to the Session at the first meeting after receipt, that the Session enter the full Decision upon its minutes and an excerpt from those minutes showing entry of the Decision be sent to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

Absences and Non-Appearances

The Synod of the Covenant commissioner position was vacant for this proceeding.

Certificate

We certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the Decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Remedial Case 222-08, The Session of Rutgers Presbyterian Church, New York, NY, (Complainants) v. The Presbyterian Foundation, The Board of National Missions, and The Presbyterian Mission Agency (Respondents) made and announced at Louisville, KY, this 9th day of April, 2016.

Dated this 9th day of April, 2016.

C. Advisory Committee on Litigation Agency Summary

I. Narrative

Assigned Responsibilities

The Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL) is composed of six Presbyterian attorneys. Each year the General Assembly elects one member to a six-year term. Each member is eligible for reelection to an additional term, but in no case may a member serve for a period exceeding twelve consecutive years of service. The General Assembly Nominating Committee nominates persons for the ACL who fit the criteria for eligibility. The Advisory Committee on Litigation was established by the 200th General Assembly (1988) to advise the Stated Clerk on matters relating to litigation.

The consultations typically take place via telephone conference calls after committee members have been provided copies of all pertinent pleadings, orders, and information. The committee ordinarily meets face-to-face at least once each year. It is normally consulted whenever the Stated Clerk is asked to participate in litigation involving matters of civil and religious liberty, church and state relations, and other matters related to the mission and interests of the church.

The Advisory Committee on Litigation reviews each of the cases, amicus briefs, and General Assembly policy and constitution based on seventeen criteria and advises the Stated Clerk whether or not to file an amicus brief in the particular case.

II. Disposition of Cases Reported in (2012–2014)

Episcopal Church CasesVirginia Supreme Court

On December 21, 2009, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with a variety of denominational religious partners to the Virginia Supreme Court challenging an old Virginia statute on U.S. Constitution 1st Amendment issues. The 1867 Virginia statute that was challenged delineates a process by which a congregation may determine which branch of a denomination to which it will belong or how an independent congregation will organize itself to own and hold property.

The amici argued that the Virginia state statute violated the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution in that it displaced a church's own rules of self-governance in determining property ownership and voting rights, it required civil courts to conduct an extensive inquiry into fundamentally religious questions, and it was neither "generally applicable," "neutral," nor was it the least restrictive means to serve a compelling state interest.

On June 10, 2010, the Virginia Supreme Court issued a decision that found that the state statute did not apply to the facts in the case and thus the court did not need to rule on the constitutionality of the state statute. The Virginia Supreme Court remanded the case to determine whether declaratory judgment in favor of the Diocese was final. On January 10, 2010, the Circuit Court of Fairfax County found for the Episcopal Church and Diocese in their Declaratory Judgment actions and, among other relief, ordered that all real property conveyed by forty-one deeds, as well as all personal property acquired by nine congregations up to the filing date of the Declaratory Judgment be promptly conveyed to the Diocese. The congregations have appealed the order and the execution of the order during appeal.

On January 22, 2013, Gradye Parsons, the Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), joined the Presbytery of Eastern Virginia and Abingdon Presbytery, the Episcopal Diocese of Southern and Southwestern Virginia, the United Methodist Church, and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America urging the Virginia Supreme Court to hold the state statute unconstitutional but otherwise uphold their decision of June 10, 2010.

On April 18, 2013, the Virginia Supreme Court issued a decision that used neutral principals of law analysis to impose a constructive denominational trust on the property of the congregations withdrawing from the Episcopal Church.

On October 9, 2013, the congregations filed a petition for a writ of certiorari with the U.S. Supreme Court. On March 10, 2014, the petition for certiorari was denied.

Town of Greece v. Susan Galloway and Linda Stephens

On September 23, 2013, Gradye Parsons, Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), entered into an amicus brief with the Baptist Joint Commission on Religious Liberty arguing that the practice of opening town meetings with a faith-specific, communal prayer violates the Establishment Clause because it infringes the freedom of conscience guaranteed to each person. Although people of faith often pray collectively—for example, in churches, synagogues, and mosques—they make a voluntary decision to do so, exercising their constitutional right to form a congregation of persons who have the same approach to worshiping God. In contrast, attendees at a town meeting have not agreed to join a government formed congregation. They come to participate in local government, not communal prayer.

The U.S. Supreme Court issued a 5-4 decision on May 5, 2014, in which it held that the town's practice of opening its town board meetings with a prayer offered by members of the clergy does not violate the Establishment Clause. The Court found that the practice is consistent with the tradition long followed by Congress and state legislatures, the town does not discriminate against minority faiths in determining who may offer a prayer, and the prayer does not coerce participation with non-adherents.

Holt v. Hobbs

On May 29, 2014, Gradye Parsons, Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), entered into an amicus brief with a variety of faith entities as amici stating that religious liberty is a basic and therefore essential principle of human freedom codified in the right to free exercise of religion clause in the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and by Congress in the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act (RLUIPA). The RLUIPA does this by ensuring that the core principle of religious freedom—i.e., that the government should not impose burdens that interfere with the religiously informed conscience of its citizens—is protected for even the least politically powerful. In this case, the religious liberty of an observant Muslim prisoner, who seeks merely to grow a one-half inch beard in accordance with his religious beliefs, is not overridden by security and safety concerns.

On January 20, 2015, the U.S. Supreme Court issued its decision holding that The Arkansas Department of Correction's grooming policy violated the RLUIPA insofar as it prevented the petitioner from growing a ½-inch beard in accordance with his religious beliefs.

III. Cases Joined (2014–2016)

Episcopal Church, et al v. Episcopal Diocese of Fort Worth, et al; Episcopal Diocese of Northwest Texas, et al v. Robert Masterson, et al

Petition for Certiorari to the U.S. Supreme Court

On July 21, 2014, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with a variety of denominational religious partners on behalf of petitioners petition for a writ of certiorari on the question of “Whether the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment requires courts resolving a property dispute within a hierarchical church to give legal effect to a pre-existing trust provision in the church’s canons.” The U.S. Supreme Court declined to accept the petition for a writ of certiorari on November 3, 2014.

EEOC v. Abercrombie & FitchU.S. Supreme Court

On December 10, 2014, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with a variety of faith based religious partners on behalf of petitioner, EEOC, agreeing that religious freedom in the workplace as specifically allowed under the religious accommodation provision of Title VII is as important to most believers as freedom from restrictions on religious practice imposed by the government. The case revolved around the denial of employment to a Muslim woman because she wore a headscarf during the interview and Abercrombie and Fitch had a policy against the wearing of head gear. There was no discussion of any needed accommodation during the interview, so the Court of Appeals stated that the respondent did not have actual knowledge of a need for accommodation. On June 1, 2015, the U.S. Supreme Court found in behalf of petitioner, finding that the Title VII religious accommodation provision requires that an employer may not make an applicant's religious practice, confirmed or otherwise, a factor in employment decisions. There is no element of knowledge required on behalf of the employer to make a claim under the Title VII religious accommodation act.

State of Texas, et al v. United States of America, et. al.Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals

On April 6, 2015, Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons entered into an amicus brief with a variety of denominational religious partners in State of Texas, et al v. United States of America, et. al. The amicus brief, following General Assembly social policy, called for the lifting of an injunction that put four to five million United States immigrants at risk of deportation. The injunction was on an Executive Action (referred to in the brief as Immigration Guidance) that, among other things, offered a legal reprieve to the undocumented parents of U.S. citizens and permanent residents who have lived in the country for at least five years. It also expanded the 2012 Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program that allowed immigrants under thirty years old who arrived as children to apply for a deportation deferral. Neither of these programs gives undocumented persons legal status, but they do offer three years without the risk of deportation and the ability to work with authorization. Families would get to stay together and enjoy improved economic stability. On May 26, 2015, the Fifth Circuit denied the federal government's motion for a stay of the District Court's order of injunction. The federal government appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, which has agreed to hear the case.

D. Advisory Committee on the Constitution Agency Summary.1. Assigned Responsibilities

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution ("ACC") is composed of nine voting members as established by the Book of Order, G-3.0501c and G-6.02. The nine voting members, teaching and ruling elders, are required by the current Manual of the General Assembly to be stated clerks or former stated clerks of synods or presbyteries, former members of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly, polity professors, or other qualified persons with knowledge of and experience with the Constitution and polity of the church. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly is a member ex-officio without vote.

With regard to questions requiring an interpretation of the Book of Order, the ACC's responsibilities are set out in G-6.02 as follows:

All questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order arising from councils of the church shall be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such questions of interpretation to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, except those pertaining to matters pending before a judicial commission. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall communicate its report and recommendations to the next session of the General Assembly, no less than sixty days prior to the General Assembly.

With regard to proposed amendments to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the ACC's mandated responsibilities are set out in G-6.04b, as follows:

b. The Stated Clerk shall refer all such proposals to amend the Book of Order to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (G-6.02), which shall examine the proposed amendment for clarity and consistency of language and for compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). At least sixty days prior to the meeting of the General Assembly, the advisory committee shall report its findings to the General Assembly along with its recommendations, which may include an amended version of any proposed constitutional changes as well as advice to accept or decline the proposals referred to the committee. The General Assembly shall not consider any amendment until it has considered the report and any recommendations from the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

2. Process and Procedures, Responsibilities and Relationships

The ACC does not interpret the Constitution. The role of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, as its title suggests and as its constitutional mandate clearly establishes, is to advise the General Assembly. The ACC's advice has no authority until and unless it is approved by the General Assembly. With respect to proposed amendments to the Constitution, the ACC focuses on clarity of proposed language and consistency of the proposed amendment with the Constitution. The ACC occasionally finds that the intent of the proposal is already inherent in other provisions of the Constitution or that it could be achieved by slight changes in language, by placing the amendment in a different section, or by different language entirely. On occasion, the ACC has suggested such changes in order to avoid inconsistencies within the Book of Order, and also to make as few changes as possible in existing paragraphs and in section numbering. At least sixty days prior to each General Assembly, the ACC is required to report its findings to the assembly, which findings may include advice for amended versions of any proposed changes as well as advice to accept or decline the proposals referred to the ACC.

With respect to requests for interpretation, as well as advice on overtures, the ACC seeks to provide advice that is based on constitutional issues, not on the substance of the issues at hand. In many circumstances, the question has been answered by earlier interpretations and does not require action by the General Assembly. In these cases, the inquirer is notified of the standing interpretation. In order to make clear the questions raised, the ACC has modified its past practice of reprinting the entire request received (which in some instances contained material not germane to the question itself), and has focused the presentation of the request on the question presented, together with the ACC's findings and advice. If the question was not clear from the request received, the ACC has sought clarification from the individual transmitting the request.

All overtures and reports containing proposed amendments and all requests for interpretation of the Book of Order by the General Assembly must be communicated in writing to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the next session of the General Assembly (Book of Order, G- 6.02, G-6.04a). This 120-day time period allows the ACC time to consider and research carefully each proposed amendment and request. Those requests that the ACC brings to the General Assembly are those that it believes meet this constitutional criterion.

The ACC completed its preparatory work for the 222nd General Assembly (2016) during four meetings: Dallas, Texas, December 5–7, 2014, a GoToMeeting on March 20, 2015, an October 7–9, 2015, meeting in Portland, Oregon. At a five-day meeting in Louisville, Kentucky, March 11–15, 2016, the ACC concluded its work of preparing responses to constitutional issues to be considered by the 222nd General Assembly (2016).

After it has received and considered the advice of the ACC, the General Assembly is free to take whatever action it deems wise on proposed amendments, requests for interpretations, and referrals.

The primary focus of the ACC is to fulfill its constitutional function to provide advice to the General Assembly concerning overtures that seek to amend the Constitution, and concerning requests for interpretation of the Constitution.

3. Editorial Corrections

The Organization for Mission provides, at Section IV.B.2.c., that the Stated Clerk shall prepare editorial changes in the Book of Order, which should be reviewed by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, provided the changes do not alter the substance of the text approved by the presbyteries. The following editorial changes have been made by the Stated Clerk and approved by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution:

a. Editorial Change to G-3.0106

“Each council above the session shall prepare and adopt a budget for its operating expenses, including administrative personnel, and may fund it with a per capita apportionment among the particular congregations within its bounds.”

Rationale: The request for this editorial correction to G-3.0106 is to make it consistent with the wording of G-3.0113 which reads, “Each council shall prepare and adopt a budget to support the church’s mission within its area.”

4. ACC Membership and OGA Staff Support

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution reluctantly received the resignation of Ruling Elder Fred Denson, Class of 2018 (Synod of the Northeast). Once the position was declared vacant by Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons, Moderator Heath Rada appointed Daniel Saperstein, Class of 2018 (Synod of the Covenant) to serve the remainder of this term.

On behalf of the 222nd General Assembly (2016), the Advisory Committee on the Constitution expresses its thanks and appreciation to Ruling Elders Theresa Howell and Julie MacLemore Wells and Teaching Elder Steve Plank for their dedicated service to the church and through their work on the ACC. Each has brought profound gifts and deep dedication to the work of the ACC.

The ACC is grateful for the staff assistance of the Reverend Joyce Lieberman, director, Constitutional Interpretation; Ruling Elder Laurie Griffith, manager, Judicial Process and Social Witness; and Diane Minter, Mid Council Ministries senior administrative assistant.

Finally, the ACC is deeply grateful for the wisdom and counsel of Stated Clerk Gradye Parsons, who serves as an ex officio member of the ACC. We are grateful for the opportunity to serve with him.

3. Narrative
 - a. APA members are eligible to become certified in different levels of Church Administration. Please see Document A the bound booklet – for more information. The certification program is available to all employees of a church, presbytery, synod, Board of Pensions and Offices of the General assembly in all administrative and financial positions. It supports these employees in their daily work, and provides information for Personnel Committees to better evaluate their employee's performance through continuing education. Employees are up to date on church polity and changes. Classes are pertinent to the Presbyterian Church theology, polity, PMA, History Society, administrative skills, financial and accounting procedures, computer skills and social media, etc.
 - b. The benefits to the life and mission of PCUSA are similar to above. The certification program keeps them current on church policies and changes and, thus keeps their members/churches in their positions current. Point of contact for church members can answer questions or know where to find answers. This is especially true for those of other denominations (ecumenical) to be more knowledgeable in their position. Prepares for possible PCUSA service since you are aware of what is occurring in the denomination.

- c. APA began in 1976 during a business administrators meeting in Richmond Virginia as the attendees realized a need for a professional organization for church secretaries/administrators. There was a need and desire for an association for lay employees in the offices of the governing agencies of the PC (USA) denomination. Thus, the Administrative Personnel Association (PCUSA) was founded by Joyce Bauer as the Presbyterian Secretarial Association of the Southern Church (PCUS). Within two years, the UPCUSA church staff joined the organization.

In subsequent years, APA proposed to the General Assembly that Certified Lay Employees be recognized by presbytery and be invited to presbytery meetings and given privilege of the floor (without vote) which was a part of the Book of Order section G-14.0740. APA had been associated with the Office of Vocation. Certified APA members were listed in the Directory and Book II of the General Assembly minutes until that service was discontinued.

The Association continues to grow and has members across the country in nine regions (Florida, Greater Midwest, Heartland, Mid-Atlantic, Mid-South, Northeast, Pacific, Rocky Mountain and Southwest.) Annual regional and national conferences are held.

APA's mission is to offer the opportunities for professional development and personal growth for those called by God to serve as support staff of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). We accomplish this by providing continuing education events for certification and occasions for fellowship, worship, spiritual nurture and prayer at national and regional conferences as well as at seminary sponsored training events.

The purpose of the organization is to improve the quality of professionalism in those offices that are usually the first point of contact with congregations, governing bodies, boards and agencies of the denomination. To affirm the ministry of the lay church professional and recognize the importance of efficient office procedures and competent personnel who strive to provide a deeper commitment and understanding of the issues, polity, history and theology of the Presbyterian Church.

- d. We propose transmitting the names of those certified to the Office of the General Assembly, because that is the body that is requesting recognition of those certified.

National Certifying Body

222nd General Assembly (2016)

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

Persons may be certified and called to service within congregations, councils, and church-related entities, serving in staff positions. These individuals endeavor to reflect their faith through their work and to strengthen the church through their dedication. They should be encouraged by their session and presbytery to meet, or be prepared to meet, the certification requirements in a handbook provided by a national certifying body approved by the General Assembly. Names of those who have earned certification through a national certifying body shall be transmitted to the appropriate body of the General Assembly, which will forward them to the stated clerk of the presbyteries in which those persons labor.

G-2.1101

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s Book of Order calls for the General Assembly to approve national certifying bodies in order for those individuals achieving certification to be recognized in the church. The Office of the General Assembly has developed this application process for organizations wishing to be recognized as national certifying bodies.

Approved National Certifying Bodies are approved for the period of time starting at the close of the General Assembly where the approving action was taken to the close of the next General Assembly. These organizations must apply every two years (for consideration at the biennial General Assemblies) to maintain their status as an Approved National Certifying Body.

Applications are due to the Office of the General Assembly by January 15, 2016. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly will review the applications and transmit appropriate applications to the General Assembly for action.

3. Narrative:

- a. What certification(s) does your organization oversee? What church workers benefit most from your certification program(s)?

Christian educators are persons called by God to a ministry of education who demonstrate their faith in and love for Jesus Christ, are dedicated to the life of faith and are serious in purpose, honest in character and joyful in service. It is expected that Christian educators be persons with skills and training in biblical interpretation, Reformed theology, human development, religious education theory and practice, and the polity, programs and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The educator certification process provides this training.

- b. How does your organization's certification process support the life and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)? If your organization is ecumenical, how does the certification specifically prepare those seeking certification for service in the PC(USA)?

The Reformed Tradition has always raised up the importance of educated leaders going back to the era of John Calvin and other reformers. Continuing that emphasis, the educator certification process offers an opportunity for those serving in educational ministries to engage in coursework, peer support, vocational discernment, and an examination of the integration of learnings and skills culminating in a confirmation of demonstrated knowledge. The Educator Certification Committee establishes educator certification standards, designates Educator Certification Advisors in consultation with presbyteries, evaluates certification examinations, and grants certification.

- c. Brief History of Organization and Certification Process

Throughout the late 1800's and through the early and mid-1900's, the PCUS had an informal educator certification process as a way of recognizing the vocation of those serving in educational roles in the church. During the mid-1900's the UPUSA also had a process of recognizing educators through the Commissioned Church Workers (which also included musicians, board members, etc.). At the time of reunion in 1983, the certification process continued and directed studies were added. Throughout the years since, the process has been divided into levels based on an educator's educational background, with differing requirements at each level. While previously focused only on professional church educators, the process was adjusted within the past three years to also include faithful volunteers serving in these roles but not receiving remuneration for their service. General guidelines are included within the Book of Order with the specifics of the process being included in the Educator Certification Committee's Handbook which is revised annually. 2016 will mark the third General Assembly which has elected members of the Educator Certification Committee to serve in their role through the General Assembly Nominating Committee process.

- d. To what “appropriate General Assembly body” do you propose transmitting “names of those who have earned certification,” so that the body may “forward them to the stated clerk of the presbyteries in which those persons labor?” (G-2.1101) Why do you propose the body that you do?

Because the Educator Certification Committee falls under the budgeting and program of the Office of Mid Council Ministries of the Office of the General Assembly, the names of certified educators should be reported through the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. This has been the practice of the office for several years and is the most direct reporting body as staff to the committee reports to this body.

4. Required Attachments:

- a. Certification Standards/Manual

The Educator Certification handbook 2015 is attached. The 2016 version will have minimal revisions for clarification and will be available at <http://oga.pcusa.org/section/mid-council-ministries/christianeducators/educator-certification-handbook/> in late January 2016.

- b. Report on those within the PC(USA) certified in 2014 and 2015* (the last two full calendar years prior to the next General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)). Please list each person by name and presbytery, certification achieved, as well as the aggregated numbers for each of the following categories:

ATTACHMENT A

APPLICATION TO BE RECOGNIZED NATIONAL CERTIFYING BODY PRESBYTERIAN ASSOCIATION OF MUSICIANS

3. Narrative:

- a. What certification(s) does your organization oversee? What church workers benefit most from your certification program(s)?

Certified Church Musician (CCM)

Certified Associate Church Musician (CACM)

Certified Colleague in Church Music (CCCM)

Church workers engaged as church musicians serving congregations will benefit most from this program.

- b. How does your organization's certification process support the life and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)? If your organization is ecumenical, how does the certification specifically prepare those seeking certification for service in the PC(USA)?

The certification process offered by the Presbyterian Association of Musicians allows persons engaged in the practice of church music the opportunity to receive recognition for the continuing refinement and enriching of skills, abilities, and knowledge. By continuing to learn, professional church musicians bring depth, thought, and fresh ideas to the church's liturgical activities, as well as to the training of musicians and liturgical leaders of all ages within congregations. Persons certified through this process are recognized as leaders in their local communities, and provide a valuable resource to the church at all levels.

Because many congregations will not allow persons employed by them to be members of their particular congregation, we find that we have members whose long-term employment and liturgical orientation is with the PC(USA), however, they remain members of other worshiping traditions. Since church musician membership in presbyteries is not possible under our polity, our certification process allows for church musicians who are not members of the PC(USA) to participate and be certified. Our certification materials and guidelines make clear to those who are not members of the PC(USA) that presbyteries are not able to grant voice to certified people in any field who are not also members of the PC(USA).

c. Brief History of Organization and Certification Process

The idea of an association of Presbyterian church musicians was conceived in The Presbyterian Conference on Church Music, a gathering sponsored from 1956-1969 by the Board of Christian Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) at the Montreat Conference Center. In 1969, an announcement that the Board of Christian Education was being disbanded and the conference on church music would no longer be presented caused leaders of previous Montreat church music conferences to join forces to assure continuation of these events. An ad hoc group of leaders, chaired by Jerry Black and including James Rawlings Sydnor, Richard Peek, Herbert Archer, William Whitehead, Mabel Boyter, David McCormick, and Adele Diekmann McKee met during the 1969 conference to begin strategizing the future of a not-yet-named organization. From its beginnings, the organization envisioned itself as serving and welcoming both southern and northern Presbyterians who had not yet reunited to form the current Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The new organization held its first meeting July 26, 1970 in Anderson Auditorium at Montreat. At that meeting, the organization named itself Presbyterian Association of Musicians (PAM) and elected Adele Diekmann McKee its first president.

Since 1970, PAM has presented weeklong conferences on worship and music led by nationally and internationally recognized preachers, conductors, organists, and clinicians at the Montreat Conference Center. In 1979, in response to more demand than the Montreat facilities could accommodate, a second week of the Montreat conference was initiated. In addition, PAM presented weeklong conferences in the Montreat model at Westminster College in New Wilmington, PA from 1988-2006, and in Albuquerque, San Francisco, and other locations in the western United States from 1978 - 2008. In 2009, PAM partnered with Presbyterian Mo-Ranch Assembly in Hunt, TX to present annual worship and music conferences at that location. Since 2005, PAM has also held biennial four-day Professionals Gatherings in cities where PC(USA) seminaries are also located, including Louisville, KY; Austin, TX; Princeton, NJ; and Charlotte, NC.

In addition to sponsoring these conferences on worship and music, PAM offers an online job referral service; provides seed money grants to support worship and music events organized by its members; funds conference scholarships for approximately 20-30 individuals with financial need; and sponsors a PAM chapter in Pittsburgh, PA.

In cooperation with the PC(USA) Office of Theology & Worship, PAM co-publishes the print and online journal Call to Worship. PAM also publishes a quarterly online newsletter and resource guides for church musicians on topics including: guidelines for employment of church musicians, guidelines for professional conduct in adversity, resource guides for weddings and funerals, and an ever-evolving guide to print and online resources on various subjects important to church musicians.

PAM collaborates with Morningstar Music Publishers in the publication of a PAM anthem series and recently launched both a choral anthem composition competition and an internship program for aspiring church musicians. Since 1979, PAM has also provided a process for its members to earn certification as Certified Church Musician (CCM), Certified Associate Church Musician (CACM), or Certified Colleague in Church Music (CCCM).

PAM was an active participant in the development of both the 1990 and 2013 Presbyterian hymnals, as well as the widely influential liturgical study, Invitation to Christ, published by the PC(USA) in 2006. Currently, PAM is partnering with Presbyterian Publishing Corporation and the PC(USA) Office of Theology and Worship in a revision of the 1993 Book of Common Worship, scheduled for publication in 2018.

PAM first began offering certification opportunities for its members in the mid-1970s with the first persons completing the process and being recognized in 1979. Since that time more than 80 individuals have earned certification. 25 persons certified through this process are currently active in service to PC(USA) congregations and 4 individuals are currently pursuing initial certification. In 2014 several changes were made to the certification process. These changes included the addition of a video requirement for all applicants, and the requirement that an application be filed prior to beginning the certification process. Prior to that point, individuals began the process unbeknownst to us, and were on their own to gather materials and prepare certification essays prior to submitting the application. The application requirement now allows us to better track those in the process, as well as to offer mentors and other assistance.

d. To what “appropriate General Assembly body” do you propose transmitting “names of those who have earned certification,” so that the body may “forward them to the stated clerk of the presbyteries in which those persons labor?” (G-2.1101) Why do you propose the body that you do?

We propose that notice of PAM certification completions be transmitted to the Director of Theology, Formation, and Evangelism in the Presbyterian Mission Agency for forwarding to the stated clerk of the presbyteries in which these persons labor. Since PAM is in formal Missional Relationship with PMA through this office and works closely with it in numerous projects and activities, this seems the most logical conduit.

Item 07-01

[The assembly approved Item 07-01. See pp. 13, 23.]

Delegation to the General Council of the World Communion of Reformed Churches—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations nominates the following persons to be elected as PC(USA) delegates to the General Council of the World Communion of Reformed Churches: Stated Clerk of the General Assembly (by virtue of office); Associate Stated Clerk and Director of Ecumenical Relations (by virtue of office); Christian Ho Choi; Bruce Gillette; Gun Ho Lee; Emily McGinley; Michelle Sanchez; Anne Weirich; and Whitney Wilkinson.

Rationale

The World Communion of Reformed Churches will hold its General Council June 27–July 7, 2017, in Leipzig, Germany. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been allotted nine delegates.

Item 07-02

[The assembly approved Item 07-02. See pp. 13, 23.]

Churches to Invite to Send Ecumenical Advisory Delegates to the 223rd General Assembly (2018)—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) invite the following ecumenical advisory delegates to the 223rd General Assembly (2018):

International: Assembly of Evangelical Presbyterian Church in Iraq, Evangelical Church in the Republic of Niger, China Christian Council, Iglesia Reformada Presbyteriana de Guinea Ecuatorial, National Evangelical Church of Guatemala (IENPG), Presbyterian Church of Colombia (IPC), Presbyterian Church in the Republic of Korea (PROK), Union of the Armenian Evangelical Churches in the Near East, United Protestant Church of France, Waldensian Evangelical Church of Rio de la Plata (IEVRP).

United States and/or Canada: Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, Church of God in Christ, Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Moravian Church in North America, United Church of Christ

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations nominates to each General Assembly churches to be invited to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the subsequent assembly (Standing Rule B.2.g.). Ten overseas churches and five churches from within the United States are recommended. Of the overseas churches, we recommend at least one church from each area staffed by Worldwide Mission. Of the churches within the United States, we recommend at least two churches from Full Communion and or Covenant Relationships, and at least one church in our conciliar relationships.

Item 07-03

[The assembly approved Item 07-03. See p. 23.]

Recommendation to Approve the Confession of Belhar.

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) approves and enacts the Confession of Belhar, to be included in the Book of Confessions, starting with the 2016 printing.

Rationale

In accordance with G-6.03e, this final action is brought before the 222nd General Assembly (2016) as the next ensuing General Assembly. The voting by presbyteries regarding inclusion of the Confession of Belhar in the Book of Confessions was 144 affirmative, 25 negative, and 2 no action.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises approval with a comment worded as follows:

“The Confession of Belhar comes with a four paragraph ‘Accompanying Letter,’ reflecting considerations at its initial adoption in South Africa in 1986. Because racial justice concerns are very much before the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) today, and are the subject of a number of proposed educational and listening processes before the 222nd General Assembly (2016), such conversations and studies might develop their own versions of an accompanying letter, written to help apply the confession to the United States in 2016 and 2017. Persons involved in developing antiracism conversations and other programs could be designated to review any proposed versions submitted by congregational and presbytery study groups and select several as part of an educational resource for the church.”

In order to strengthen the application of the Confession of Belhar to the current context of the United States and to stimulate conversations among Reformed Christians in this country, this Advice & Counsel memorandum advises that PC(USA) presbyteries and congregations consider what a short (1,130 word) U.S. “accompanying letter” would look like. This could be done in cooperation with the training, education, and listening programs described in Items 11-12, 11-22, and 11-24. Our church might also partner with other Reformed partner churches; the Christian Reformed Church has long used Belhar as part of its cultural competence training. Developing a letter to introduce the Confession of Belhar would stimulate interest in the confession and help the church confess its faith in our context, contributing to the church’s witness against racism.

Much good work has been prepared interpreting Belhar, and much current debate is occurring on race and the church, including in the pages of the online Christian social justice journal, Unbound (www.justiceUnbound.org, March-May 2016 issue.). Thus Belhar remains very timely and deserves broad understanding and application across the church by many means, perhaps including this proposal.

Item 07-04

[The assembly approved Item 07-04 with amendment. See p. 23.]

Commissioners’ Resolution: “Prayer for the Persecuted Church.”

The 222nd General Assembly (2016) affirms the importance of prayer for the persecuted church by:

- 1. Encouraging all Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations and councils to make prayer for the persecuted church around the world a regular part of their common life;
- 2. Engaging in a time of corporate prayer for the persecuted church around the world during its plenary meeting[s], ~~[lasting no less than five minutes,]~~ during the report of the committee that considers this resolution, to ~~be led by~~ [include] ecumenical advisory delegates, missionary advisory delegates, mission co-workers, and ecumenical guests who are participants in this General Assembly.

Rationale

The New Testament portrays the early church as a community of prayer. Sometimes believers engaged in concerted prayer for fellow church members who were imprisoned by hostile rulers (Acts 12:6–16). Several passages call for prayer specifically on behalf of those who are suffering imprisonment or torture because of their faith in Christ. For instance, “Pray in the Spirit at all times in every prayer and supplication. To that end keep alert and always persevere in supplication for all the saints. Pray also for me, so that when I speak, a message may be given to me to make known with boldness the mystery of the gospel, for which I am an ambassador in chains. Pray that I may declare it boldly, as I must speak” (Eph. 6:18–20, NRSV) and “Remember those who are in prison, as though you were in prison with them; those who are being tortured, as though you yourselves were being tortured” (Heb. 13:3, NRSV).

The Christian church in many parts of the world is living through a season of intense pressure. Worship services have been disrupted when church facilities have been vandalized and burned. Church leaders are especially vulnerable to imprisonment, torture, and even death. Reports of persecution are not limited to one nation or region, but are coming from a variety of settings.

When God’s people come together to pray in agreement on matters of great importance, those who are prayed for are encouraged because they are reminded that they are not alone. Further, when we pray for the persecuted church, we are calling upon the redemptive power of God to work for the well-being of those who suffer.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 07-04

Comment on Item 07-04—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency (PMA).

World Mission shares a great concern for situations in which religious freedom is constrained. Many of our global partners face such realities and urge us to pray and to advocate for observance of human rights. But they have cautioned us that the phrase “persecuted church” may have unintended negative consequences, particularly in the context of their efforts to establish good interfaith and governmental relationships.

A more neutral wording may be “to pray for the church facing adversity”

Item 07-05

[The assembly approved Item 07-05. See pp. 13, 24.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. Recognition of the 500th Anniversary of the Protestant Reformation.

In recognition of the 500th anniversary of the traditional starting date of the Protestant Reformation on October 31, 2017, the 222nd General Assembly (2016) invites all Presbyterians, congregations and worshipping communities, presbyteries and synods, colleges and seminaries, and agencies within the General Assembly to do the following:

- 1. Use 2017 as a time to study the historical significance of the Reformation and the people that contributed to this movement.
- 2. Find occasions to emulate the zeal that early reformers brought to their study of Scripture, their practice of personal and corporate worship, their re-invention of the structures of church governance, and the expansion of the mission of the church.
- 3. Recognize those places where Reformed churches fell short in their task of reform and perpetuated or created error and abuse.
- 4. Invite the Presbyterian Mission Agency to suggest existing resources to aid in study that accurately reflects both the contributions and errors of the early reformers.
- 5. Encourage scheduled events in theology, worship, spirituality, polity, and mission to consider—where feasible—adding a component to their programming that reflects on the changes and insights of the Reformation.
- 6. Recommend that local congregations seek opportunities for ecumenical study and worship with other Protestant congregations, especially those in the Reformed, Lutheran, Anglican, and Anabaptist traditions; and that we seek ways to celebrate our common heritage with Roman Catholic and Orthodox congregations.

Rationale

October 31, 2017, marks the 500th anniversary of the traditional start of the Protestant Reformation. While the Reformation took many forms and grew over centuries, Martin Luther’s creation of 95 Theses on the Sale of Indulgences in the fall of 1517 is recognized as a key event in the reform of the church.

In the Reformed branch of the Protestant Reformation, there were thorough-going changes in the life of the church. In addition to the theological reforms inspired by Martin Luther and extended in the work of John Calvin and other reformers, major changes occurred in the practice of worship and the understanding and celebration of the sacraments, the spiritual practice of individual Christians—including a new emphasis on personal study of the Scriptures—the organization and governance of church structures, and the way the church interpreted its duty to reflect the kingdom of God in the world and to live out its mission to all of humankind.

The changes in theology, worship, spirituality, polity, and mission that emerged from the Reformation can continue to nourish the life of the church. Enacted in a time of social upheaval and in response to a dramatically changing role for the church, the Reformation can serve as a model and inspiration to members, congregations, and ministries seeking the courage to bring dramatic change to the church.

In the Foundations of Presbyterian Polity section of the Book of Order (F-2.02), we find this reminder about our Reformation heritage “The church affirms Ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda secundum verbum Dei, that is, ‘The church reformed always to be reformed according to the Word of God’ in the power of the Spirit.” May this celebration of the 500th anniversary of the Protestant Reformation be an occasion when Presbyterians, congregations and worshipping communities, presbyteries and synods, colleges and seminaries, and agencies within the General Assembly eagerly pursue reformation for our era.

[The assembly approved Item 07-06 with comment. See pp. 23, 24.]

[Comment: The 222nd General Assembly (2016) affirms and celebrates the work of the GACEIR and encourages their continued gracious hospitality, faithful imagination, and patient perseverance, as they reach out to welcome, to listen to and learn from, and to partner with the world's ecumenical, interfaith and emerging partners. This commitment is particularly important and timely in a world fraught with ignorance and fear, discrimination and violence; and is to be supported, strengthened, and cherished. As the committee moves forward, we would like to see them emphasize the following Moving Forward items (in the GACEIR self-study report):

- #5, collaborating ecumenically and interreligiously in addressing the crucial issues listed in the item, adding a commitment to standing in solidarity with individuals and groups targeted by a context of xenophobia that fosters disrespect and foments violence;

- #10, including the development of educational tools and materials that will assist members of our congregations to formulate faithful Christian responses to people of other faiths that reflect both integrity and respect. We request that the Confession of Belhar be considered for use in these materials.]

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations 2016 Self-Study.

Introduction

As an old ecumenical consensus document on mission and evangelism states, “The mission of the Church ensues from the nature of the Church as the body of Christ, sharing in the ministry of Christ as Mediator between God and his creation.”¹ And, as a new ecumenical consensus document on mission and evangelism puts it, “Mission begins in the heart of the Triune God and the love which binds together the Holy Trinity overflows to all humanity and creation.”²

The self-understanding of the Church, in essence, is based on the nature and mission of the Church as a go-between doubly related to the gospel of Jesus Christ (Mark 1:1) and to the world that God so loved and still loves (John 3:16). The Church does not exist for itself, but for God's all-loving mission in the world. Anything less than a real encounter of the gospel with the world belies the nature and mission of the Church.

For this encounter to happen, the Church has to do mission and evangelism “in Christ's way”: with humility and respect in love.³ And yet churches, self-centered and divided, have often betrayed the highest calling of humility and respect in mission and evangelism and, therefore, are in dire need of repentance by “[seeking] the unity for which Jesus prayed on the eve before he offered his life for the salvation of the world (cf. John 17:21)” among Christians and “[expressing] respectful love” to people of other faiths and ideologies.⁴

According to its self-understanding expressed in the Book of Order (Part II of its Constitution), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is, among others, a church that “seeks to include all people and is never content to enjoy the benefits of Christian community for itself alone.”⁵ Both committed to its Head, Jesus Christ,⁶ and open to the guidance of the Holy Spirit,⁷ the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) attempts to be an inclusive community of faith in Christ that seeks “at all levels” to have positive relations with other Christian entities,⁸ non-Christian entities,⁹ and secular organizations and agencies¹⁰ through conversation, cooperation, and common action. Accordingly, the purpose of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (GACEIR) is “to give a high profile to the vision of the ecumenical and interreligious involvement and work as central to the gospel and key to the life of the church.”¹¹

The ecumenical and interreligious visions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are laid out in its two General Assembly policy statements: “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and “The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” approved by the 221st General Assembly (2014). The current name of the committee (General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations) was approved upon the recommendation of the 2010 Self-Study of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) to highlight both the ecumenical and interreligious vision of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It is the task of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), with the guidance of the GACEIR, to live out visibly this vision “at all levels.”

The Changing Ecumenical and Interreligious Landscapes

As ecumenical bodies were conceived and developed in the last century, there was great hope of unity that “they all be one.” Presbyterians were leaders of this ecumenical world—committed to seeking God's kingdom among us. The denomination's leadership included both active representatives and financial support. Different ecumenical agencies grew and developed, such as the World Council of Churches (WCC), National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. (NCC), Church World Service (CWS), World Communion of Reformed Churches (WCRC) and their related agencies. All have undergone significant transitions in recent decades. Part of this is due to a reduction in funding as supporting denominations have had to revisit their own funding sources. This loss of funding has led to reduction in staff and in myriad restructurings through recent years. One result of this change is the capacity of what can be accomplished together. Ecumenism is not dead, but it is in transition.

Leadership in the various ecumenical bodies has shifted from the north to the global south, providing a richer and more inclusive voice. This global pattern of shifting influence matches that of local communities, as communities become more diverse in terms of national origin, race, religion, and ethnicity. Dialogue “at all levels” now has the potential to transcend boundaries of nation states and religious difference. These changes bring new forms of influence and renew conversations that challenge the status quo.

On a local level, new worshipping communities are developing, composed of new immigrants who bring traditional notions of worship, leadership, and ecclesiology. This introduction to other ways of being church is transforming congregations and mid councils.

Changing relationships across many denominations have shifted from the larger ecumenical agency motif to an increase in bilateral and multilateral dialogues and relationships. These smaller gatherings allow for deeper understandings and richer conversations at local and regional levels as to how we live together as one body. There is divergence from making big statements on a global scale to being in serious relationships on a smaller scale.

“Full Communion” guides us toward finding new pathways of ecumenical relationships. The Book of Order describes Full Communion in this way:

G-5.0202 Full Communion

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is in full communion with those churches so recognized by the General Assembly. Full communion shall include the mutual recognition of baptism and the orderly exchange of ministers, as defined by ecumenical agreement. Councils of this church are encouraged to engage in opportunities to minister together in mutual affirmation and admonition with churches with which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is in full communion.

With denominations focused on their own survival, it is challenging and all the more necessary to find ways to be in Full Communion. One question for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through GACEIR is, “As communions confer with one another, how will resources and membership sizes influence the conversations?” Historically the church has turned to the Lund Principle,¹² which offers the guidance and challenge that churches should do together all that is possible in good conscience. This has been and continues to be a guiding principle. Discerning a way forward is a defining motif.

A more recent change is not only an increase in dialogues, but also “who” is now at the ecumenical dialogue table.¹³ This enlarged table offers space and place for Communion who once were neither interested in the dialogue nor invited to be participants. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been at the forefront of these engagements.

The Shifting Ground of Interreligious Relationships

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has previously established itself as being a willing partner in interreligious conversation and dialogue. Statements from General Assembly’s in 1987 (“A Study on Islam”) and 1992 (“Guidelines for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Participation in Interfaith Bodies”) affirm that willingness and an understanding of the importance of these relationships.

Though Presbyterians recognize the importance of such relationships, it is not often an easy path to tread. For example, at recent General Assemblies the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s Middle East peace initiatives generated strong conflicting opinions within the denomination and from other Christians, Jews, and Muslims around the world.

Conflict does not minimize the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to be in relationship with people of different faiths—a commitment that comes from our Reformed heritage and our biblical understandings. The Interreligious Stance notes that “the Israelites found themselves dwelling with Canaanite, Moabite, Babylonian, and Persian peoples among others and influenced by their religious understandings.”¹⁴ God’s grace moved among the peoples throughout history, and even at the beginning God created all people in God’s image. Paul, in his missionary message, expressed commitment to both Christian conscience and Christian hospitality.

Self-Study Process

The GACEIR Self-Study Committee began its work in February 2015 and worked primarily via conference call and Skype.

In preparation for writing the report, the committee:

- Reviewed GACEIR minutes over the past five years;

- Reviewed additional pertinent documents, including
 - Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),
 - 2010 GACEIR Self-Study,
 - The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),
 - The Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),
 - GACEIR Mandate,
 - Self-Study Manual;
- Convened conversations with assigned staff;
- With the help of Research Services, developed online survey instruments that were sent to two constituencies: (1) members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (including members of congregations, and staff in congregations, presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly agencies as identified by the self-review committee), and (2) ecumenical and interreligious partners as identified by the self-review committee.

The committee would like to thank its self-study staff resource, the Reverend Melissa Davis, coordinator, Ecumenical Networking and Resources, for her competence, efficiency, and grace.

Survey Results

The GACEIR Self-Study Committee, with the assistance of Research Services, conducted a web-based survey in summer 2015 of GACEIR's two primary constituencies: members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and ecumenical and interfaith partners of the denomination.

Specific results of the survey can be found in the Executive Summary included as an appendix to this report.

Highlights of the study:

1. An overwhelming majority of Presbyterian respondents stated that they are aware of the central mandate of the denomination to be in ecumenical relations with other Christians and concur with the statement that "the church should have an ecumenical policy that helps guide it when working and ministering with other denominations."
2. According to Research Services' Executive Summary, most Presbyterian respondents are aware of both the Ecumenical Stance and the Interreligious Stance, and yet less than a third are even moderately familiar with GACEIR.
3. Among ecumenical and interfaith partner respondents, most are familiar with both the Ecumenical and Interreligious Stances. Approximately half of the respondents believe that the PC(USA) carries out the values lifted up in the stances moderately well.

Overall, the survey suggests that awareness of and commitment to the denomination's ecumenical and interreligious relations are high, as is familiarity with the Ecumenical and Interreligious Stances. However, there is less consensus related to GACEIR's effectiveness in achieving its work in nine distinct areas (as laid out in its mandate and mentioned in the survey). It appears that this may be in some part to a significant lack of awareness by the respondents of GACEIR and its mandate.

That GACEIR is known through its work first (as with the visibility of the stances) is an achievement to be recognized. Also important is that both constituencies (within and outside the denomination) are aware of GACEIR as it guides the denomination to live out its ecumenical and interreligious mandates. And yet, at this time, GACEIR is mostly known at the General Assembly agency level, not locally, regionally or across denominational and religious lines.

The comments of both Presbyterian and ecumenical/interreligious partners suggest that there is much meaningful ecumenical and interreligious work taking place at the local and regional levels, and by synods, presbyteries, congregations and individuals. Local congregations are engaged in mutual bible studies, worship, global mission projects, and social justice programming around issues of race, poverty, hunger and housing. Individual respondents are members of local and state councils of churches; clergy cohort groups; federated congregations and pulpit exchanges; disaster chaplaincy; interfaith conversation groups; and larger institutions such as the Desmond Tutu Center for Peace; the Pacifica Institute; the CHARIS Ecumenical Institute; Metropolitan Churches United Sacred Conversations About Race; and the Mosaic of Peace Conference.

A number of respondents indicated the development of new relationships with Jewish and Muslim partners in response to powerful current events and ecclesiastical decisions. Catalyzing events include recent actions by the General Assembly related to divestment, the increase in hate crimes against the Muslim community, the intractability of racism (and the perpetuation of white privilege), and the horrifying damage done to black communities in Ferguson, Charleston, Chicago and elsewhere.

GACEIR ACCOMPLISHMENTS

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations operates in four key areas: (1) ecumenical involvement nationally and globally; (2) interreligious involvement; (3) advice and counsel to the General Assembly; and (4) engagement with mid councils.

Accomplishments in the area of ecumenical involvement during the reporting period include:

1. The continuation of and involvement with various conciliar ministries, e.g. Christian Church Together; National Council of Churches; World Communion of Reformed Churches,¹⁵ the Caribbean and North American Area Council (CANAAC),¹⁶ and World Council of Churches. These conciliar fellowships are supported with the appointment of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) representatives/delegates to committees and dialogues, as well as ongoing financial support.¹⁷
2. Representation at and participation in the 2010 International Ecumenical Peace Convocation in Kingston, Jamaica. The convocation was the culmination of work during the World Council of Churches' Decade to Overcome Violence (2001 to 2010).
3. Representation at and participation in the 2013 World Council of Churches 10th General Assembly in Busan, Korea.¹⁸
4. The General Assembly's approval of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s four-year membership in Christian Churches Together (CCT) in 2010. At that time it was agreed that membership would be reviewed in four years. At the 221st General Assembly (2014), a review of CCT was presented. The report found that the PC(USA) would continue to hold membership in the fellowship with the goal of working to increase participation and leadership of women and African Americans.
5. Continuation of and new participation in ecumenical dialogues and partnerships,¹⁹ e.g. the Catholic-Reformed Dialogue, Seventh-Day Adventist,²⁰ African Methodist Episcopal, and Episcopal-Presbyterian Dialogue.²¹
6. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and its antecedents, has participated in the multilateral dialogue Churches Unit-ing in Christ since 1960. The participants in this covenant relationship are committed to working for the elimination of racism as a barrier to unity. GACEIR appoints a delegation to attend plenary sessions and take leadership roles in addressing racism within the church and in the broader society.
7. During the reporting period, GACEIR oversaw the process that resulted in the entering of covenant relationships with both the Korean Presbyterian Church in America and the Moravian Church (Northern and Southern Provinces). These covenant relationships are grounded in mutuality and facilitate the orderly exchange of ministers.

Accomplishments in Interreligious Relationships during the reporting period:

In 2013, an Interreligious Consultation was held at Stony Point Center in New York. Out of this consultation, a report was written and presented to the 221st General Assembly (2014). The General Assembly voted to accept the report as the Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The stance was referred to churches and mid councils for study and reflection.

After completion of the Interreligious Stance and its approval by the General Assembly, GACEIR sought to explore ways the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) might live into its interreligious commitments more fully at the congregational and mid council levels, and through theological education. With the help of a new national staff person who will coordinate inter-religious resources, ongoing intention of the committee is to provide congregations and presbyteries with helpful assistance and guidance as they respond to interfaith neighbors in multiple contexts, including interfaith marriages and families, local community concerns, and global peacemaking and justice. Similarly, the committee will continue to connect with theological educators and seminaries to discern together how seminary students can be better prepared for ministry in a religiously diverse world.

A Presbyterian-Muslim Dialogue occurred between 2007 and 2011. The dialogue was envisioned to bring African American Muslims and Presbyterians of various ethnic backgrounds together, in order to: (1) build and begin to heal relationships between the two groups, and (2) enable Presbyterian and African American Muslim leaders to work together to address needs and issues of common concern. A core group of individuals comprised the dialogue but the series of conversations took place at various locations across the United States to enable Presbyterians and Muslims in those particular communities to join. A final report, The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Muslim Community of Warith Deen Mohammed: Five Years of Friendship and Conversation was released in 2014 and commended the dialogue group on nurturing relationships and understanding, as well as recommended that encounters continue so that the conversations may bear fruit and begin much needed healing.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations also provides guidance to the General Assembly in the form of comments on matters of business before the General Assembly. GACEIR is responsible for recommending churches for participation as ecumenical delegates, as well as selecting three religious traditions for invitation as interfaith representatives to the General Assembly. The General Assembly approves and makes the invitations.

Finally, GACEIR operates as a resource to mid councils. To that end, during this reporting period, GACEIR accomplished:

1. The expansion of the Ecumenical Liaisons network to incorporate the interreligious work happening locally and nationally. The Ecumenical and Interreligious Liaisons are presbytery-based volunteers with ecumenical and interfaith engagement in their local community and who communicate with other Presbyterians to share resources, successes, and struggles. GACEIR depends on liaisons to provide feedback of ecumenical and interfaith partnerships and how the larger church can better support the ecumenical and interreligious formation of clergy and lay leaders.

2. The Ecumenical and Interreligious Service Recognitions. The recognitions are a public affirmation of the importance of local engagement in ecumenical and interfaith partnerships. They were reinstated at the 221st General Assembly (2014). GACEIR accepts nominations for individuals, congregations, and presbyteries, and make awards where the nominee grows the ecumenical and/or interreligious vision of the church, bridges gaps in the ecumenical and interreligious movements, or revitalizes ecumenical and/or interreligious formation. The recognitions are awarded in conjunction with an event at the General Assembly attended by our ecumenical and interreligious partners and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
3. The resource, “God’s Unity, Our Journey,” was approved by the 219th General Assembly (2010). The resource is designed to introduce the Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and assist congregations in deepening their commitment to ecumenism. It is available for download on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) website.

GACEIR Structure and Communication

Currently, GACEIR is diverse and inclusive with respect to gender, age, race, geography, ordination status, theological perspective, ecclesiastical council, congregational, institutional, and ecumenical representation.

GACEIR is unique in that it reports directly to the General Assembly and is staffed by representatives from both the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency. The work of GACEIR is not directly programmatic, but speaks to ministries of the church encouraging engagement on all levels. The Stated Clerk (or his/her designees) and the Executive Director of the Presbyterian Mission Agency (or his/her designees) sit on the committee as ex-officio members.

On the organizational principle of “form follows function,” GACEIR’s committee, relational, and staffing structures may require renewed clarity in light of its future strategy. Its organizational design and membership should reflect its priorities and intended outcomes. Strategic relationships are critical toward making its intended impact, relational influence being indispensable to effectiveness.

As results of GACEIR’s recent survey suggest, there is a significant lack of familiarity with GACEIR’s identity and role. Its visibility is essential, because so much of mission and governance is initiated and sustained through relationships. Collaboration is highly valued in an interconnected institution such as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), so utilizing appropriate communication and media technology will likely advance GACEIR’s visibility, relationships, and future outcomes.

Ecumenical and Interreligious Formation

Even though the ecumenical movement has been in existence since the beginning of the last century, it is clear that the universal church has yet to, in the words of Jesus, “all be one” (John 17: 21). The work of GACEIR includes the importance of ongoing formation in ecumenism not instead of being Reformed and Presbyterian but alongside the recognition that we are called to be “one body” (Ephesians 4, Romans 12, 1 Corinthians 12), so that to be Presbyterian is to be ecumenical.

The purpose of the work of ministry of formation has three dimensions:²²

1. Keep a unity of vision that includes the ecclesiastical, programmatic, ecumenical, and denominational (organizational) parts of our ministries and commitments.
2. Articulate the Reformed and Presbyterian identity in the midst of our ecumenical commitments.
3. Promote a vision of the unity of all humankind in the search for the unity of the church.

One of the major challenges for the GACEIR is to articulate to the denomination (“all agencies of the General Assembly and governing bodies”) that engagement in ecumenical and interreligious work is not only for one office with such a title. Instead, it is part of every ministry and mission, program and process. This focus is with both General Assembly agencies and programs as well as with congregations and mid councils. The Ecumenical Stance (2008) offers both the theological basis for such action and guidance for all Presbyterians through all aspects of ministry.

The Interreligious Stance (2014) grew out of the self-study of 2010 whereby recognition of a changing world, deeper awareness of different religions through international and local events, easier travel across the globe, all precipitated the need for a more developed stance. Increasingly, congregations are sharing physical space with people of different religions. Communities have formed interfaith councils and other gatherings to learn and grow with and from each other. With the growth of real-life interreligious encounters and relationships, GACEIR must focus on connections between existing Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) resources, networks, and tools being created and formed by GACEIR and staff, and questions that arise from local and regional situations. The question is not, “if the landscape changes, what will we do?” but “How can we be a vital and connected part of the landscape as it changes in front of us?”

According to GACEIR’s Operations Manual, its Interreligious subcommittee has some of the same responsibilities as its Ministry and Formation subcommittee. The purpose and functions are listed as following:

1. Clarify, promote, and sustain interreligious engagement as an integral part of Christian discipleship and central to the life of the church.
2. Provide ongoing review and guidance, in consultation with the agencies and mid councils of the church, to the involvement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in interreligious relationships and work.
3. Support the articulation of Reformed and Presbyterian identity in the midst of our interreligious engagements.
4. Promote a vision of the unity of all humankind in the search for Christian unity.
5. Provide guidance to the General Assembly, the Office of the General Assembly, and the Presbyterian Mission Agency, for our churches “at all levels will be open to and will seek opportunities for respectful dialogue and mutual relationships with entities and persons from other religious traditions” (Book of Order, G-5.0102).

A challenge for GACEIR is to develop a plan that will guide the church through the agencies of the General Assembly, the mid councils, and congregations to understand, as with our ecumenical relationships, that our interreligious relationships matter. Any interreligious relationships, documents, conversations that happen fall under the umbrella of GACEIR and the Interreligious Stance. The Interreligious Stance is not a “once done” on-the-shelf document, but a living document.

Key Questions

As we, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations, consider our priorities for the next six years, we face some time-relevant and crucial questions for the discernment of our future work.

1. In this season of denominational transformation, how do we understand the process of change in the ecumenical and interreligious engagements of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A)?
2. How do the ecumenical and interreligious priorities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) engage, in particular, individuals who identify as spiritual but not religious? Where are the possible intersections?
3. How can the divide between academic and practical approaches to ecumenical and interreligious relations be bridged?
4. How can GACEIR be instrumental in the ecumenical and interreligious/interfaith formation among individuals, families, congregations, mid councils, and General Assembly entities?
5. How, in the current structure of GACEIR meetings, will all this work be accomplished?

Moving Forward

With the approval of the Ecumenical Stance in 2008 and the Interreligious Stance in 2014, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has affirmed the work of GACEIR and the denomination’s commitment to living out the principles of its ecumenical and interreligious mandates.

To the end that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) attempts to be an inclusive community of faith in Christ that seeks “at all levels” to have positive relations with other Christian entities, non-Christian entities, and secular organizations and agencies through conversation, cooperation, and common action, we, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations, affirm the following suggestions to guide the work of GACEIR moving forward.

1. Continue GACEIR’s commitment to engage all six agencies of the General Assembly regarding ecumenical and interreligious opportunities and challenges within their respective roles and responsibilities.
2. Collaborate with other General Assembly entities, as appropriate, for the production and promotion of educational resources to activate churchwide ecumenical and interreligious life, including, specifically, the Presbyterian Mission Agency.
3. Encourage all agencies of the General Assembly to increase collaboration wherever appropriate as the General Assembly plans for decreasing budgets and downsizing structures.
4. Develop a strategy for the ecumenical and interreligious formation of staff at all levels of the church, so that they may be empowered to work ecumenically toward the unity of Christ’s church and interreligiously toward the common good of all humanity.

07 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON ECUMENICAL AND INTERFAITH RELATIONS

5. Collaborate with councils at all levels of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to work ecumenically and interreligiously in addressing such crucial issues as violent conflict between states, climate change, transnational terrorism, global economic system, global persecution of Christian minorities and LGBTQ persons, and extremist interreligious violence.
6. Collaborate with councils and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) agencies at all levels to work ecumenically and interreligiously to address racial injustice, including strengthening and prioritizing antiracism training at every level of the church.
7. Encourage mid councils to enter into consultancies with neighboring ecumenical councils regarding shared administrative tasks.
8. Collaborate with the Office of Ordered Ministries and Certification to work together to increase the utilization of relationships with our Full Communion partner churches to connect pastors and churches in processes of filling pastoral vacancies.
9. Explore new strategies for communication and consultation with General Assembly agencies, theological seminaries, mid councils, and congregations, for the purpose of increasing ecumenical and interreligious awareness, expanding ecumenical and interreligious relationships, and advancing future outcomes for the unity of Christ's church and the common good of humanity.
10. Consider practical steps that can be taken through communications and social media opportunities toward strengthening ecumenical and interreligious awareness and relationships, including collaboration with other General Assembly entities toward the production and promotion of educational resources to activate churchwide ecumenical and interreligious life.
11. Affirm and celebrate the Office of the General Assembly's commitment to ecumenical and interreligious relationships through the roles and responsibilities of the Stated Clerk position.
12. Affirm the priority of continuing a full-time interreligious staff position as a crucial resource to the work of GACEIR and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
13. Declare that ecumenical and interreligious engagement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a priority for the position of the next Executive Director of the Presbytery Mission Agency and seek to hold a consultative role in the search and selection process.
14. Explore ways in which our ecumenical and interreligious priorities engage with those who identify themselves as spiritual but not religious, collaborating with interested presbyteries to connect with such groups in local communities.
15. Commit to further reflection on the nuanced definitions of "interfaith" and "interreligious" for the purpose of clarity in communications.
16. Enlarge the diversity of interfaith communities represented at the General Assembly beyond Abrahamic faiths, which have typically been our denominational focus.
17. Develop and recommend to the next meeting of the General Assembly (2018) a theological rationale for interreligious/interfaith relationships of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

20. The 219th General Assembly (2010), together with the General Conference of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, commissioned a formal dialogue between the two communions. The purpose was to promote understanding, remove stereotypes, explore possible areas for cooperation, and discover what the churches might learn from one another. The members of the dialogue group unanimously affirm each other as true Christians and that their respective churches were part of the one church of Jesus Christ. Both churches made recommendations for continued local and national relationship building, including extending invitations to attend national gatherings as observers, urging seminaries to invite representatives from the other denomination to lecture on campus, and urging local pastors of each denomination to make special efforts to gather regularly with one another for prayer, mutual learning, and table fellowship.

General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations Agency Summary

Purpose

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (GACEIR) is composed of twenty-four members who are either elected or appointed. Sixteen elected are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). These elected members are active in local ecumenical and/or interfaith efforts and possess an understanding of Presbyterian and Reformed theology, as well as how this perspective impacts denominational responsibilities toward ecumenical and interfaith partners. Four members are appointed by our ecumenical partners at the invitation of the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA), two each are appointed by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian Mission Agency, the remaining members are the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the Executive Director of Presbyterian Mission Agency, or their designees. All members have voice and vote in matters before the committee.

The GACEIR work is rooted in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, the Book of Order, and General Assembly action, including the Interreligious and Ecumenical Stances of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Together, these documents and policies charge the committee with serving as a point of connection for Presbyterian ecumenical and interfaith efforts, as well as with other ecumenical and interreligious bodies. The GACEIR undertakes many tasks to keep Presbyterians abreast of ecumenical and interreligious involvement and encourage the use of resources developed by our church and our partners. In addition, GACEIR advises the General Assembly to help ensure that policy reflects the hopes and aspirations outlined in the Interreligious and Ecumenical Stances.

In addition to working within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), GACEIR monitors dialogues with other churches and ecumenical bodies in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has membership, such as World Council of Churches and the World Communion of Reform Churches. These dialogues serve various purposes, including but not limited to, reconciliation, determining official relationships with churches that allow for the orderly exchange of ministers, finding common points of ministry, and articulating a unified position on matters of importance in the church and around the world.

The GACEIR is responsible for nominating and inviting interfaith guests and ecumenical representatives and advisory delegates to the General Assembly. At each General Assembly three representatives from non-Christian religious bodies and approximately seventeen representatives from our partner churches attend and participate. This participation serves two purposes: it provides insight and new perspectives on specific business that the assembly may be considering, and it facilitates understanding of Presbyterian polity and governance among the larger community. While guests, advisory delegates, and representatives do not vote at the General Assembly, their feedback and commentary on issues before the assembly is invaluable in helping commissioners consider the full impact of some policy decisions. Often these leaders bring greetings to the assembly or, when appropriate, participate in worship through the offering of prayer or liturgical assistance.

Interreligious Activities

During 2014–2015, following the approval of the Interreligious Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interreligious Relations (GACEIR) sought to explore ways PC(USA) might live into its interreligious commitments. Building on the foundation of the Interreligious Stance, the GACEIR will continue to coordinate resources for use by Presbyterians as they respond to neighbors in multiple contexts, including interfaith marriages and families, local community concerns, and global peacemaking and justice.

During the past two year cycle, the GACEIR chose to suspend its bylaws and committee structure in order to experiment with approaches toward implementing the Interreligious Stance, exploring in particular how theological institutions, mid councils, and congregations might deepen engagement with the Interreligious Stance. This temporary structure has reinvigorated the work of GACEIR and will end in summer 2016 for discernment and strategic planning.

Ecumenical Activities

Councils

Part of GACEIR's mandate is the support of and participation in national and international ecumenical councils and dialogues, including the National Council of Churches of Christ (U.S.A.), the World Council of Churches, World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and Christian Churches Together. Representatives from the PC(USA) have attended councils and events, engaged in dialogues, served as resource persons, and monitored the ministries of various ecumenical bodies.

The National Council of Churches (NCC) underwent a leadership and structure change during this reporting season. Organizationally, there were many staff reductions and the national office moved to Washington, D.C. PC(USA) members are a part of the convening tables and provide feedback and guidance on policy and programs.

The headquarters of the World Communion of Reformed Churches moved from Geneva, Switzerland, to Hanover, Germany, in 2014. The move was announced ahead of the newly elected general secretary's visit to the PC(USA) in October 2014, where the general secretary visited with staff members to gather information and nurture relationships.

Historically the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its antecedents have had a leadership or founding role in ecumenical councils and agencies. In order to ensure that participation in these bodies continues to be shaped by a Reformed understanding of Scripture and the church, the 212th General Assembly (2000) was asked to design a process "for review of councils and other ecumenical alliances to which the PC(USA) belongs." The GACEIR undertakes review of ecumenical councils on a rolling basis.

Dialogues

In addition to engagement with these and other ecumenical bodies, the PC(USA) also participated in the following multi-lateral dialogues: Churches Uniting in Christ and Catholic/Reformed (Christian Reformed Church in North America, Reformed Church in America, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and United Church of Christ). The bilateral dialogue with the Episcopal Church and the PC(USA) has continued, building on a report approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008). Even in the midst of changes in leadership and dialogue participants, both churches remain committed to further discussing theological and missional issues.

Full Communion Relationships

The PC(USA) finalized the Full Communion Covenant Agreements with the Moravian Church of North America (Northern and Southern Provinces) and the Korean Presbyterian Church in America. These agreements formalize several years of dialogue and facilitate the orderly exchange of ministers. GACEIR will monitor the agreements and continue to communicate with our Full Communion partners about implementation.

In general, the changing ecumenical landscape, which is described in more detail in various reports, has led to fairly dramatic reorientations for our ecumenical endeavors over the last four years. While much remains in flux (such as the restructuring of the NCC), more change is anticipated and there is a need to continue to reimagine and re-envision how to live out ecumenical commitments in the midst of the transformation of denominations and councils. The means and modes of engagement in ecumenism institutionally in the last century may be changing, but the call and commitment to the unity of Christ's church remains strong and unwavering.

On Boycott of All HP Inc. and Hewlett Packard Enterprise Products—From the Synod of the Covenant.

The Synod of the Covenant overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Call for the boycott of all products manufactured and sold by HP Inc. and Hewlett Packard Enterprise until the companies cease to profit from all non-peaceful pursuits and violations of human rights in Israel/Palestine.
2. Direct the Stated Clerk to
 - a. communicate this action to all other PC(USA) councils and entities and strongly encourage these groups and organizations to endorse this boycott, calling upon all Presbyterians to be led by their conscience in the face of human rights violations, ongoing oppression, violence, and injustice; and
 - b. inform our ecumenical partners of this action, both nationally and globally, encouraging them to do the same.

Rationale

Summary

A significant portion of Hewlett Packard (HP)'s business activities includes non-peaceful pursuits and human rights abuses, particularly in Israel/Palestine.¹ Indeed, Hewlett Packard is deeply integrated into Israel's military, serving as the exclusive provider of its computer hardware and the manager of "all Information Technology (IT) including its operational communications, logistics and planning," according to research conducted by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI).²

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a long history of boycotting products made by companies engaged in violence and human rights abuses. As in previous cases, boycotting Hewlett Packard would be an opportunity to exercise Christian non-violent pressure to induce the company to move its practices away from violence and human rights abuses. An HP boycott would also be an answer to the call from our Palestinian Christian partners, who have urged Christians worldwide to boycott products that are used to perpetuate the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory and other human rights abuses.

Hewlett Packard's Involvement with the Israeli Military in "Operation Protective Edge"

Hewlett Packard was a key component of Israel's war in Gaza during the summer of 2014, otherwise known as "Operation Protective Edge." Launched as a means to protect Israeli civilians from attacks by Hamas, this military operation resulted in the deaths of 2,205 Palestinians, of whom 1,483 were civilians and 521 were children, according to the United Nations.³ Palestinian rocket fire and attacks on invading Israeli soldiers killed 5 Israeli civilians, 1 foreign national civilian, 1 security coordinator, and 66 Israeli soldiers.⁴ At least 13 Palestinians were killed by "friendly" Palestinian fire, according to a report by Amnesty International.⁵

Hewlett Packard directly contributed to the Palestinian death toll, providing, among other things, the "command and control system" utilized by the Israeli Defense Forces, as it coordinated attacks by the Israeli Navy and Army. As The Jerusalem Post reported during the war,

The navy's missile boats and fast patrol boats have played a key role in assisting IDF [Israeli Defense Forces] ground forces that entered Gaza, providing them with close support. The vessels share a command and control system with battalion and company commanders on the ground. This enables them to fire sea-to-surface guided missiles at enemy targets that threaten ground forces, share real-time intelligence and integrate fully into operations underway in the [Gaza] Strip.⁶

¹ Hewlett Packard has recently split itself into two corporations: HP Inc., which focuses on computer hardware, and Hewlett Packard Enterprise, which deals with business services and software. Both entities of Hewlett Packard are involved in widespread violence and human rights abuses and thus both should be boycotted. The two companies are referred to as the singular HP or Hewlett Packard by this overture.

Hewlett Packard's Involvement in the Israeli Blockade on Gaza

An Egyptian-brokered ceasefire has not stopped Israeli Naval attacks on Palestinians, particularly Palestinian fishermen. As the MRTI report reveals, Hewlett Packard is an essential component in “the ongoing naval blockade of the Gaza Strip.”⁷ Indeed, Hewlett Packard’s management of the Israeli Navy’s communications, logistics, and planning is central to the ongoing enforcement of the Israeli- and Egyptian-imposed blockade of the Gaza Strip, which has been in place since 2007.

The blockade has strangled the Gazan economy, preventing Palestinians from working or traveling outside Gaza, blocking nearly all Palestinian goods from export, and limiting imports to the bare necessities for Palestinians in Gaza to survive.⁸ As the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reported in July 2015, “1.8 million Palestinians in Gaza are ‘locked in,’ denied free access to the remainder of the occupied Palestinian territory and the outside world.”⁹ Hewlett Packard’s cooperation with the Israeli Defense Forces plays an essential role in enforcing these restrictions. The Israeli Navy, for instance, utilizes Hewlett Packard technology and services to block all international access, including humanitarian aid ships, from Gaza’s coast.¹⁰

Israel’s HP-equipped Navy also restricts Palestinian fishermen to six nautical miles from the Gaza coast. When the Israeli Navy deems fishermen too close to this limit, they often fire upon the boats. Mohamed Baker, a Palestinian fisherman injured in such an attack in May 2015, explained:

At around 6:30 a.m. on Monday, 25 May 2015, we headed to the northwestern area of the fishermen’s port located west of Gaza City, by a fishing boat (Hasakah). We stopped the boat about three nautical miles from the shore. We started fishing. After about half an hour, we were surprised by two Israeli naval boats approaching us and shooting heavily at us. We quickly left the area for the shore. After approximately half an hour, we returned to fish. We stopped the boat about 300 meters away from the illuminated buoys positioned to the north. The buoys form a line demarcating a no-go zone for Palestinian fishermen. We resumed fishing and stayed for almost one hour, during which the current drifted a little nearer to the illuminated buoys. Suddenly, at around 9:00 a.m., I saw two Israeli gunboats approaching us again very quickly. I then turned on the boat’s engine and quickly steered towards the south. The two Israeli boats continued to pursue us and fire at us. When they were about two meters away from us, I heard an Israeli soldier insulting us using a loudspeaker. I heard the sound of shooting and I felt pain in my right elbow. I also heard both Emad El Deen and Ziyad [his fishing companions] screaming. Then the two Israeli boats left the area, heading to the north. We reached the fishing port and were taken to Al Shifa’ Hospital in Gaza City by an ambulance.”¹¹

These near daily attacks on Palestinian fishermen have resulted in at least three deaths since September 2014, numerous injuries, dozens of destroyed fishing vessels, a decimated Palestinian fishing industry, and a diminished Gazan food supply.¹² Hewlett Packard is an essential component of the military technology that enables the Israeli Navy to carry out these attacks.

Impact of the Hewlett Packard-Equipped Blockade on the Gaza Economy

The ongoing results of the war and blockade are alarming. The World Bank reports that these conditions, along with poor governance by Hamas, have created one of the worst economic disasters on the planet.¹³ The unemployment rate in Gaza is 43 percent, the highest in the world. As Steen Lau Jorgensen, World Bank Country Director for West Bank and Gaza, said, “The ongoing blockade and the 2014 war have taken a toll on Gaza’s economy and people’s livelihoods. Gaza’s exports virtually disappeared and the manufacturing sector has shrunk by as much as 60 percent. The economy cannot survive without being connected to the outside world.”¹⁴

Impact of the Hewlett Packard-Equipped Blockade on Public Health in Gaza

The HP-embedded blockade has had a debilitating impact on the health of Gazans. The World Health Organization stated, “the blockade and the recent conflict pushed an increasing number of people [in Gaza] into poverty making them dependent on in kind distribution of food by [World Food Program] and [United Nations Relief Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East].”¹⁵ Moreover, the blockade and its “restrictions to movements of persons and goods is continuing to restrict the access to health care.”¹⁶

Exacerbating these conditions, approximately 108,000 Gazans are still homeless, as the Israeli military last summer—utilizing HP technology—destroyed approximately 18,000 Palestinian homes in Gaza.¹⁷

In sum, Hewlett Packard is directly involved in widespread human rights abuses and military violence in the Gaza Strip.

Hewlett Packard’s Involvement with the Occupation of the Palestinian West Bank

Hewlett Packard (HP) also contributes to and profits from the Israeli military’s occupation of the Palestinian West Bank. As the sole provider of computer hardware for the Israeli military, Hewlett Packard manufactures the biometric scanning equipment used at Israeli checkpoints in the occupied West Bank. The scanning equipment is used exclusively on Palestinians, as Israelis and foreigners are able to easily pass through the checkpoints or circumvent them altogether.

The HP-equipped checkpoints, in conjunction with Israeli-only roads and Jewish-only settlements, fragment the occupied Palestinian territory into separate enclaves. Traveling between these secluded territories within the West Bank (much less, traveling between the West Bank, Gaza, Jerusalem, or Israel) can take hours for Palestinians and, in any case, is completely controlled by the Israeli military.

Indeed, the Israeli human rights group, B’Tselem, reports that the checkpoints “constitute the most severe restriction on movement of Palestinians.”¹⁸ The checkpoints thus make the holy sites in Jerusalem—as well as family members, jobs, and other social and economic opportunities—entirely inaccessible for the vast majority of Palestinians in the occupied West Bank.

HP also produces the Tadiran Communications ruggedized personal digital assistants, which are issued to every Israeli soldier. “The equipment is used to enforce the occupation,” according to the MRTI report.¹⁹ In addition to patrolling the HP-equipped checkpoints, Israeli soldiers use these HP digital assistants to help protect and expand the illegal Israeli settlements in the West Bank and to conduct regular invasions of Palestinian property across the occupied territory.

Boycotts as Prophetic Christian Practice

Left alone, Hewlett Packard would continue to profit from the perpetuation of these human rights abuses and acts of militarized violence. After ten years of fruitless shareholder engagement, the 221st General Assembly (2014) voted to divest its shares of Hewlett Packard, which was profiting from the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territory. This prophetic action has served as a witness to the human rights abuses that contravene our Christian values.

By boycotting HP, we can exercise additional nonviolent, moral pressure to help make human rights abuses and military aggression no longer profitable. Boycotting HP would also serve as a prophetic witness to the aspirations of Palestinians and Israelis to live in freedom, peace, and equality.

Mission-minded boycotts have a long history in the body of Christ in general and in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in particular. A report received and commended for study by the 191st General Assembly, for instance, articulated the essentially Christian nature of boycotts: “The church considers boycott activity in light of God’s requirement of justice and because of the existence of alleged injustice.”²⁰ Accordingly, Presbyterians have participated in boycotts of goods produced by child labor (1937), gambling establishments (1952), businesses that discriminate against African Americans (1956, 1960, 1964, and 1966), American companies invested in South African apartheid (1967), grapes from enterprises that exploited farmworkers, Nestle products when the company deceptively pushed its infant formula on new mothers in developing countries, Taco Bell restaurants (2002) for exploiting farmworkers, and products made in illegal Israeli settlements (2012), among other examples.²¹

Kairos Palestine: The Palestinian Christian Call for Boycott

Our Palestinian Christian partners have given us clear and unequivocal guidelines as to what we can do to be in partnership with them as they seek to nonviolently resist the Israeli occupation, blockade, warfare, and other human rights abuses. The Kairos Palestine document, which the 219th General Assembly (2014) commends for prayerful study, states

[W]e call for a response to what the civil and religious institutions have proposed, as mentioned earlier: the beginning of a system of economic sanctions and boycott to be applied against Israel. We repeat once again that this is not revenge but rather a serious action in order to reach a just and definitive peace that will put an end to Israeli occupation of Palestinian and other Arab territories and will guarantee security and peace for all.²²

As a targeted boycott of Hewlett Packard, this overture can serve as a partial response to this call, and thus, an essential component of our mission in partnership with Palestinian Christians.

Boycotting HP as Mission in Partnership

While many of us in the West may have our own ideas as to how to best liberate Palestinians from the occupation and other human rights abuses, the Presbyterian church has been engaged for more than fifty years in mission work that relies upon the “recognition and respect” of our mission partners rather than the presumptions of Western missionaries. In order to do “God’s work for the sake of the world God loves,” Presbyterian “mission in partnership” listens to, and works with, our partners rather than speaking to, and working for, them.²³ Therefore, as a matter of appropriate Christian fellowship and mission in partnership, we must respect the Palestinian Christian call for the use of boycotts as a nonviolent tool rooted in faith, hope, and love.

Boycotting HP as Response to Confession of Belhar

Moreover, the Confession of Belhar, which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will soon add to the Book of Confessions, states, “that the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged; that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others.”²⁴

It is therefore imperative that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) calls for a boycott of all Hewlett Packard products.

The Time to Boycott HP Is Now

The time for Presbyterians to stand up against a U.S. company that is seriously violating the rights and lives of Palestinians in Gaza and the occupied West Bank is upon us. As seen on its own website, HP takes pride in making statements about its global citizenry and corporate ethics in our nation and in the world. As a Church of Jesus Christ, seeking to be a moral agent in, and prophetic voice to, a fallen creation, it is our great responsibility to call upon HP to make good on its own moral and ethical claims. HP has been a great American company since 1938 and we can be proud of its innovation throughout the decades. Hardly any of us are able to do business, personal or otherwise, without exposure to and usage of HP products, which makes this particular boycott so challenging. We acknowledge that this is a hard decision to make because large numbers of us like their products and even have them in our homes, including the author of this overture. In that way, HP has been like a corporate friend to American businesses and households for a long time. It is now time, however, to tell our corporate friend that it is violating human rights in terrible ways and that we can no longer purchase its products until such time that it ceases to profit from these violations that are causing and continuing the hardship, suffering and pain, and even death of innocent Palestinians.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises disapproving Item 08-01.

The rationale for this overture is essentially the same as for the 2014 decision to divest from these firms (previously under the one name, Hewlett-Packard), namely, because they supply specialized equipment and technical support for the Israeli military’s occupation of the West Bank and blockade of Gaza. The ACSWP supports the divestment decision and agrees with a key rationale for that: not to profit from non-peaceful pursuits and violation of human rights in Israel-Palestine. This is an integrity argument about the nature of the church as an investor. The divestment decisions also included concerns for effectiveness, or impact on the companies collaborating in the colonizing settlements, and solidarity with those most affected, Palestinian Christians and Muslims deprived of freedom, land, and water.

The question at stake in this overture, however, is whether the PC(USA) should call for a boycott of all products from a firm that is put on the divestment list. [The products in question, of course, are those that do not violate human rights or contribute to non-peaceful pursuits, since we do boycott (not buy) the offending product lines described in the overture.] For instance, the 2014–15 divestment list of forty-five firms includes Boeing and Saab, as well as Caterpillar and Motorola Solutions (http://www.presbyterianmission.org/site_media/media/uploads/mrti/pdfs/2014-2015_ga_divestment_list-long_form_final.pdf). Decisions to boycott involve similar moral considerations of integrity, effectiveness, and solidarity, but Presbyterian policy distinguishes between these two important strategies of nonviolent economic witness based on several factors, including the nature of our participation and influence.

Do commissioners believe the PC(USA) should boycott all HP products as well as divest from their securities? (Individual members may boycott or not; this concerns the corporate social witness of the church.) The overture does not cite evidence that buying the peaceful products from HP cross-subsidizes the products for the Israeli military.

One might even ask whether purchasing more peaceful or non-harmful products from the firms would make it easier for them to get out of the offensive product lines.

The PC(USA) has advocated boycotts of products from firms with unfair labor and marketing practices and from firms taking advantage of populations without rights, such as Palestinians under occupation. The ACSWP explicitly endorses the latter boycott of settlement products in its latest report on Israel-Palestine (see Item 08-05; for a listing: <http://www.tikkun.org/nextgen/israeli-products-from-the-west-bank>.) Item 08-01 does not claim, however, that HP's non-offensive products, which would be boycotted, were produced in an illegal location or with unfair labor practices.

Clearly, in any purchase, there is some reinforcement of a company's name as its overall brand, and both divestment and boycott impact a company's reputation. In this case, the rationale for divestment focuses on Hewlett-Packard's participation in the oppression of Palestinians and sends a continuing message to management: you have crossed a line, literally and morally. We can understand and appreciate the position of those Christians for whom solidarity means a consistent opposition to all activities of the companies involved.

The item does not, however, make a case for boycotting the products of all firms that are on our divestment list, nor for treating these two HP companies differently from others on the divestment list. Thus, ACSWP does not see a compelling case for this boycott at this time.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 08-01.

The rationale for this overture is well-written and amply demonstrates the ways in which Hewlett Packard Enterprises profits from the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories—an occupation that has been deemed illegal under international law.

The act of boycott has been demonstrated to be a successful nonviolent means to bring about change. This overture is consistent with the church's past records of successful boycotts. This boycott will provide our church and its members an opportunity to act in a constructive way to end the occupation of Palestinian territories—an action that has been called for by our church repeatedly.

That Hewlett Packard equipment is used to perpetuate human rights abuses against Palestinians and its use in military aggression is amply and clearly demonstrated by the rationale of this overture. It is time that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) adds its voice and actions to counteract these abuses.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-01

Comment on Item 08-01—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

This overture calls for a boycott of HP Inc. and HP Enterprises due to violations of human rights in Israel/Palestine.

The General Assembly has historically supported boycotts as a nonviolent economic strategy to counter unjust practices and/or promote social change. These efforts have included boycotting table grapes and fast-food companies on behalf of farm workers, Nestle for selling infant formula in the developing world, and J.P. Stevens sheets and towels to support textile workers.

Most recently, the 220th General Assembly (2012) endorsed the consumer boycott of all Israeli products coming from the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

Item 08-02

[The assembly approved Item 08-02 with amendment. See pp. 59, 61.]

On Advocating for the Safety and Well-being of Children of Palestine and Israel—From the Synod of the Covenant.

The Synod of the Covenant overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Affirm the support of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child as expressed by the 202nd General Assembly (1990), and for the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as expressed by the 211st General Assembly (2014).

2. Calls, once again, upon the United States Senate to ratify the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child and directs the Stated Clerk to communicate this call to all members of the United States Senate, the president, and the vice president.

3. Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency, through the Office of Public Witness, to advocate and witness for the human rights of the children of Palestine and Israel until there is an amendment in the practices of the state of Israel so that they are in compliance with international humanitarian laws, specifically the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. In particular, mobilize Presbyterians everywhere to communicate with their senators, congresspersons, and the president of the United States their concern for the safety and well-being of the children of Palestine who suffer widespread and systematic patterns of ill treatment and torture within the Israeli military detention system, including but not limited to

- the use of physical violence (beatings, blindfolding, position abuse are examples) and psychological pressure (solitary confinement, threats of sexual assault and rape, verbal abuse, strip searching, threats, denial of food, water, and access to a toilet) to compel children and youth to give testimony, to confess guilt, or to provide otherwise incriminating statements against their family, friends, and communities;
- denial of due process guarantees, including denial of the right to prompt access to legal counsel and other appropriate assistance, particularly the presence of a parent or family member during interrogation;
- psychosocial effects and obstacles to reintegration when released from the Israeli military prisons, loss of educational opportunities while in detentions, and lack of access to education following their release from custodial detention;
- the discriminatory legal framework in force in the Occupied Palestinian Territory involving separate laws governing children based on religion or ethnicity (no Israeli child comes into contact with the military court system); and
- violent, late-night raids and arrests by heavily armed soldiers who invade their homes while they and their family members are asleep.

4. Call on the government of Israel to change its military detention system to - stop night arrests;

- stop blindfolds and restraints;
- stop separation from parents and legal counsel;
- stop physical abuse and verbal threats; and
- stop isolation and coerced confessions.

[5. Call on the Palestinian Authority, Hamas, and the government of Israel to denounce and cease the incitement of violence against children or at the hands of children.]

Rationale

According to Addameer (Arabic for conscience), the Prisoner Support and Human Rights Association (www.addameer.org), “approximately 700 Palestinian children under the age of 18 from the occupied West Bank are prosecuted every year through the Israeli military courts after being arrested, interrogated, and detained by the Israeli army. The most common charge levied against children is throwing stones, a crime that is punishable under military law by up to 20 years in prison. Since the year 2000, more than 8,000 Palestinian children have been detained.”¹

In practice, there are no special interrogation procedures for children detained by the Israeli military, nor are there provisions for an attorney or even a family member to be present when a child is questioned. The majority of children report being subjected to ill treatment and having forced confessions extracted from them during interrogations.²

United Nations International Children’s Emergency Fund (UNICEF), Defense for Children International—Palestine (DCI-Palestine), the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Palestinian territories, and the U. S. Department of State Reports on Human Rights Practices have “repeatedly condemned Israel” for its widespread and systematic ill treatment of Palestinian children under Israel’s military detention system.³ “During 2013, 76.5 percent of Palestinian children detained by the Israeli military in the occupied West Bank endured some form of physical violence during arrest, transfer, or interrogation, a slight increase from 2012.”⁴ The tabulation below indicates some but not all common violations collected by DCI-Palestine during 2013.

Below are common violations raised in the affidavits collected by DCI-Palestine during 2013:

The Israeli military uses a procedure called “administrative detention” to imprison Palestinians, both children and adults, indefinitely on secret information without charging them or allowing them to stand trial.

Israeli children living in the occupied Palestinian territories live under Israeli civil laws and are treated very differently than Palestinian children. Excerpts from a Christian Science Monitor article⁵ demonstrate the disparity between the treatment of Israeli and Palestinian children in the Israeli justice system. The article tells the story of two, fifteen-year old boys who lived “just a few minutes away from one another in the West Bank.”

Both were accused of throwing stones at vehicles, one day after the other. But there was a crucial difference that helped to shape each boy’s fate: One was Israeli, and the other Palestinian. The tale of the two teens provides a stark example of the vast disparities of Israel’s justice system in the West Bank. The results can ripple for years.

“Jail destroyed his life,” said the Palestinian boy’s father.

Critics accuse Israel of dismissing Israeli crimes as youthful indiscretions, while treating Palestinian youths like hardened criminals. Both boys engaged in stone throwing in separate incidents where there was some property damage but no injuries.

On Feb. 20, 2012, the Israeli boy joined a group of youths pelting a bus with rocks at the entrance to Bat Ayin, according to police reports. The settlement, located in the southern West Bank between Jerusalem and the biblical city of Hebron, is known for its hardline population.

Police said they targeted the bus because the driver was Arab. The rocks damaged the bus but did not harm the driver.

The boy, whose name cannot be published under local law because he is a minor, was brought to the Hebron region police station at 9 p.m., with his father by his side. In his interrogation, the boy invoked his right to remain silent. He spent a night in the station and four days under house arrest. Then he was freed without charge.

The following day, according to police reports, the Palestinian boy lobbed rocks at Israeli cars zipping past his hometown of Beit Umar, a farming town of 14,000 people perched near an Israeli military tower.

The rocks shattered the front windshield of a white Mazda and damaged three other vehicles on a busy highway. There were no injuries.

Two weeks later, at 3:30 a.m., Israeli soldiers kicked down the door to the Palestinian boy's bedroom, carried him to a jeep, blindfolded him and tied his hands behind his back with plastic handcuffs. He was slapped by soldiers, kept awake all night and placed in a military jail cell with 10 other Palestinian youths, he said.

It would be more than nine months before he could go free.

An Israeli psychological exam conducted in prison found the boy showed signs of anxiety and depression. He told the prison's clinical psychologist and social worker that he looked at a photo of his family to help him sleep, and had nightmares about soldiers killing his relatives. The exam also found he was short-breathed and had a cough, which he said was from soldiers hitting him in the chest during his arrest.

Another story is that of a Palestinian-American from Tampa, Florida, who was visiting his relatives in Jerusalem. Earlier in the week his cousin, "16-year-old Muhammad Abu Khudair, was kidnapped from the occupied East Jerusalem neighborhood of Shuafat and burned alive by Israelis who have yet to be convicted for the slaying more than a year later".⁶ The story relates the brutal beating of the Tampa teen and the U.S. rebuke of Israel for the light sentence received by the officer responsible for the beating, which was forty-five days of community service.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 08-02.

International human rights organizations along with the U.S. Department of State have long been aware of and have repeatedly condemned Israel for its widespread and systematic ill treatment of Palestinian children under its military detention system.

Item 04-12 (<https://pc-biz.org/#/search/5099>) passed at the 221st General Assembly (2014) reaffirmed the commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the human rights of all children, particularly the children of Palestine and Israel. This overture requests that the church continue its advocacy strongly both as an organization and through its community of members on behalf of the children of both Palestine and Israel within the United States Congress and the Executive Branch.

It is only through knowledge and a strong expression of public disapproval that we can convince the Israeli military system to cease these abuses against and ill treatment of Palestinian children.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC).

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 08-02.

The ACWC fully supports the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child as expressed by the 202nd General Assembly (1990). We also support the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child as expressed by the 211th General Assembly (1999). We urge that the General Assembly advocate that Israel come into compliance with international humanitarian laws and that Israel especially support the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

The armed conflict between Israel and Palestine has caused staggering numbers of serious injuries and fatalities among children. The children are the innocent victims sometimes killed by mistake, but often intentionally targeted by soldiers in this continuing conflict; and there are no modified interrogation procedures for children in this brutal, ongoing war.

It is appropriate for the PC(USA) to support the correction of these human rights violations that devastate families and severely diminish hope for the survival of future communities.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-02

Comment on Item 08-02—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Mission Agency is engaged in addressing the issues related to the safety and wellbeing of children in Palestine and Israel in response to the 221st General Assembly (2014) action, “On Reaffirming the Rights of Children and Attention to Violence Against Children in Israel and Palestine”: <https://www.pc-biz.org/#/search/5099>.

The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations has posted resources related to the human rights of Palestinian and Israeli children on www.presbyterianmission.org/un. Speakers from Defense for Children International—Palestine have led workshops at Compassion, Peace and Justice Training Days in 2015 and 2016.

The Office of Public Witness helped coordinate a Congressional Briefing on the treatment of Palestinian children in Israeli military detention. The Office of Public Witness has also done an action alert inviting Presbyterians to contact their legislators about Palestinian children in Israeli military detention.

The Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations advocates within the UN system for the human rights and safety and wellbeing of the children of Palestine and Israel.

Item 08-02 affirms and supports the work on advocating for the safety and wellbeing of the children of Palestine and Israel currently being done by the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

On Upholding Peoples and Partners in the Middle East and in the United States—From the Presbytery of New York City.

The Presbytery of New York City overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) to do the following:

- 1. Recognize the importance of the continued presence of Christians and churches in the Middle East.
- 2. Affirm and encourage the Christian presence in the area through strengthened ties between the PC(USA) and the historic and reformed churches of the region.
- 3. Call for expanded partnership relationships between PC(USA) congregations and those of our partner churches in the Middle East.
- 4. Direct the Stated Clerk and other appropriate staff to foster consultation and joint action with partner churches of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops to address ways of increasing the respect and protection of Christians and other minorities in the Middle East.
- 5. Direct the Stated Clerk and all appropriate staff to consult with our Christian partners in the Middle East to determine how religiously based radical thought and action in the region can best be thwarted. This should include seeking insights from our partners about appropriate and inappropriate policies and actions in the region of the United States and other governments.
- 6. Call upon the United States government, the United Nations, and other international organizations to support and fund activities of peace-building; institutions nurturing civil society; and promoting strategies for broadly inclusive economic development—all essential for long-term stability in the Middle East.
- 7. Call on agencies of the General Assembly, mid councils, church sessions, and pastors of the PC(USA) to seek ways for Muslims, Christians, Jews, and persons beyond the Abrahamic family to work collaboratively in resisting bigotry and extremist thought and actions in communities across the United States—and especially those groups and individuals cloaking themselves in religious language and ideology.

Rationale

The Christian church has been part of the Middle East fabric since Pentecost.

Christians, however, have been leaving the Middle East in growing numbers for decades. Some observers fear that soon there will be few Christians left in the area of Jesus' historical presence among us. The witness of the gospel calls Christians to be engaged in the countries and cultures where they live. Creating incentives that encourage them to leave should be avoided. Likewise, even well-intentioned suggestions that Christians, for their own protection, be taken to safe zones within the region are unacceptable.

Two factors are preeminent in the diminished Christian presence in the Middle East: religious radicalism and economic pressures.

Religious Radicalism

The departure of Christians from the Middle East is a deep concern not only for the church but for the region as a whole. The "Report of the Middle East Study Committee" to the 219th General Assembly (2010) (comprised of former assembly Moderators) noted: "This dwindling presence of Christians in the Middle East is a deep concern due to the role that Christians have played in being a mediating, reconciling presence. Without that presence, we fear a more religiously polarized Middle East, more prone to extremism" (Minutes, 2010. Part I, p. 1044).

While the Christian presence must be maintained in the Middle East, other religious minorities are also threatened by extremist groups that seek to dominate the area. Thus, side-by-side with Muslims and others, Middle East Christians desire to build civil societies that value human rights, respect international law, and model the vision that people of different historical, cultural, ethnic, and religious traditions can live together peacefully.

The United States has not been spared the trauma of radical extremism—sometimes in the guise of religion, often as naked racism, and increasingly as bigotry against Arabs and Muslims. A 2014 survey showed that only 36 percent of Americans viewed Arab Americans favorably and just 27 percent viewed Muslim Americans favorably, while more than half of Americans held a negative view of Islam. Indeed, a Pew Research Center study reported that Americans regard Muslims more negatively than atheists (Reported in Huffington Post, July 29, 2014, and April 10, 2015).

Since Muslims constitute less than one percent of the U.S. population, it seems likely that such views are fostered less by personal contact than by bias and misinformation. The way media and ordinary people use language has an effect on how people—and especially minorities—are perceived. Wrong and biased information about Syrians, Arabs, Muslims, refugees, migrants, people of color, and other vulnerable groups shapes public attitudes. This is especially true when it comes from politicians and lawmakers. In the United States, whether persons are characterized as illegal versus undocumented; as an "anchor baby" versus a citizen; or as a migrant versus refugee affects how they are perceived and even their legal rights.

But there is also power in the Christian language of the faith community—brother, sister, child of God, and neighbor—that nurtures a different relationship to people near at hand and far away whom we are beginning to know and understand and appreciate.

Economic Development

War has brought economic desperation to the people of Syria and Iraq, including Christians. Relief efforts of governments through the United Nations are supplemented by those of religious organizations like Presbyterian Disaster Assistance. However, long-term economic development strategies will be required to restore functioning societies in these countries.

The dramatically changing petroleum economy creates new opportunities to access and reorient western economic and political relationships with the Middle East. That could bode well or ill for ordinary people in the region. The biblical tradition of calling for economic equity should have a place in the debate that almost surely lies ahead in the face of clashing economic interests and crumbling political structures in the region. The 1978 General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States declared, "... every society has the obligation to provide for all people the opportunity for meaningful work, adequate food, clothing, shelter, and health care ... [and] a share in formulating and responsibly implementing economic policies" (Minutes, PCUS, 1978, p.204). Two years later, the General Assembly spoke specifically about its perspective on economic development: "On the basis of the concerns which Christians bring to political and economic life ... we support the call for both a reordering of the international economic system and a major change in national development strategies ..." (Minutes, PCUS, 1980, pp. 196–97.) Those are still sound principles for the church's participation in both international and domestic arenas—for crafting just policies of trade, aid, and investment linking countries globally and for seeking a fair sharing of economic benefits within each country.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises approval of this item.

Peacemaking and promotion of economic restoration and development are long-time objectives of the PC(USA). The rationale of the item notes “War has brought economic desperation to the people of Syria and Iraq, including Christians.” To this, we might add that the war in question has resulted in no small degree from the ill-advised invasion of Iraq by the United States. Thus our nation and our government have an obligation to help repair the damage and aid the victims. These matters were considered by the General Assembly in 2012 in this resolution, For Human Rights and Civic Freedom: Movements for Democratic Change in the Arab World: <https://www.pcusa.org/resource/human-rights-and-civic-freedom-movements-democrati/>.

We see a similar concern in the Stated Clerk’s recent statement on the designation of ISIS or ISIL as perpetrating genocide on Christians and other groups: <https://www.pcusa.org/news/2016/5/2/stated-clerk-issues-statement-acts-genocide-global/>. That statement addresses some of the ways that groups may be protected and tolerance restored in countries at war, sometimes in “proxy wars” involving larger nations seeking spheres of influence, and not only in the Middle East. In the implementation of this resolution, the word, “extremism,” may be preferred to “radicalism,” which has a broader and non-pejorative meaning. Religious nationalism and racial ethnic tribalism may threaten immigrants as well as long-settled religious minority communities, in which case defending equal rights and religious freedom for all is the radical and just thing to do.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 08-03.

The Middle East is the cradle of Christianity, and it would be a tragedy indeed if the Christian presence in the Middle East would dwindle to the point of vanishing. Arab Christians have been living for centuries with their Muslim countrymen and can show the West the way to reconciliation and acceptance of Muslims in their midst.

Christians are leaving their homes and countries in the Middle East due to occupation by harsh regimes and by violence due to occupation or war. This overture attempts to consider some of the causes leading to the stress of the Christian community in the Middle East and its efforts should be strongly approved and acted upon.

STATED CLERK COMMENT ON ITEM 08-03

Comment on Item 08-03—From Gradye Parsons, Stated Clerk.

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly signed the Atlanta statement with many other ecumenical leaders. On Calling for the RE/MAX Corporation to Cease Selling Property in West Bank Settlements—From the Presbytery of the Redwoods.

The Presbytery of the Redwoods overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

- 1. Acknowledge that RE/MAX, LLC, is an American company headquartered in Denver, Colorado, that has real estate franchises involved in the sale and rental of Jewish-only housing in Israeli settlement colonies in the occupied West Bank of Palestine.
- 2. Acknowledge that RE/MAX, LLC, is profiting from franchises that support the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories.
- 3. Acknowledge that RE/MAX is participating in housing discrimination because non-Jews are restricted from purchasing housing in Israeli settlements in the occupied West Bank.

4. ~~Call for RE/MAX to [cut its ties with franchises involved in the sale or rental of settlement properties in the occupied West Bank] [do everything within its legal and moral power to stop facilitating the sale and rental of property in Israeli settlement colonies in East Jerusalem and the West Bank].~~

5. ~~[Urge members of the RE/MAX network in the United States to not refer clients to agents and brokers who are involved in the sale or rental of settlement properties in the occupied West Bank.] [Commend RE/MAX, LLC, for responding favorably to discussions of this matter with representatives of the PC(USA) and committing to take action to ensure that RE/MAX, LLC, will no longer receive any income from the sale of Jewish settlement properties in the West Bank.]~~

6. ~~[Urge Presbyterians to take actions such as contacting local RE/MAX franchises or corporate headquarters or participating in petition campaigns to pressure RE/MAX to cut its ties with franchises involved in the sale or rental of settlement properties in the occupied West Bank.] [Encourage Presbyterians to continue to be in dialogue with RE/MAX, LLC, to explore ways that it can stop facilitating the sale and rental of settlement properties in the occupied West Bank.]~~

7. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to all other PC(USA) councils and entities and to communicate this action to the RE/MAX corporation.

Rationale

RE/MAX supports and profits from Israel's military occupation of Palestinian territories

RE/MAX, LLC, is based in Denver, Colorado. It has grown into a global real estate network of franchisee-owned-and-operated offices with more than 100,000 sales associates. RE/MAX Holdings Inc. is publicly traded on the New York Stock Exchange as RMAX. RE/MAX has been active in the Israeli market since 1995. It sells and rents houses and apartments in colonies reserved exclusively for Jews in the occupied West Bank and East Jerusalem.

RE/MAX has offices in the illegal West Bank colonies of Ma'ale Adumim and Oranit, as well as occupied East Jerusalem (in French Hill, Ramot, and Pisgat Ze'ev colonies.) The real estate agency is facilitating the distribution of illegally seized property in occupied Palestinian territory and assisting the Israeli government in its strategy of building settlements. RE/MAX takes advantage of the many financial incentives provided by Israel to increase the population of settlement colonies. These incentives include income tax reductions for Israeli citizens working in or investing in the illegal settlement colonies. In this way RE/MAX is supporting the Israeli occupation of Palestine and the human rights injustices suffered by Palestinians. In addition, RE/MAX is participating in housing discrimination because Israeli Christians, Muslims, and other non-Jews are restricted from purchasing settlement housing.

RE/MAX has been contacted by religious organizations and nonprofit organizations in the United States and been asked to cease its activities in the Occupied Palestinian Territories. RE/MAX has refused to do so.

PC(USA) General Assembly has declared Israeli settlements are illegal and a roadblock to peace

The 219th General Assembly (2010) overwhelmingly approved the information, commentary, and policy statements in Chapters 1 and 2 of "Breaking Down the Walls," a report of the Middle East Study Committee (Minutes, 2010, Part I, pp. 1021ff). The church expressed the following statements and concerns about Israeli settlement colonies and the "Israeli-only" bypass roads that connect the settlements:

- "The Israeli occupation leads to the denial of ... human rights [for Palestinians] and the violation of international laws" (Minutes, 2010, Part I, p. 1046).
- "One of the hopes of the Oslo Interim agreements was that settlement growth would cease; however, the opposite has occurred, resulting in a current population of ... 285,000 [in the West Bank] and 198,700 in East Jerusalem" (Ibid., p. 1045).
- "The growth of the number of settlements and settlers is perceived by many as an attempt by Israel to prevent the establishment of an economically viable Palestinian State" (Ibid., p.1045).
- "Another concern of the occupation is the [numerous] 'Israeli-only bypass roads' that carve up the Palestinian homeland and connect one settlement to another. This has a devastating effect on the ability of [normal] Palestinians ... to live out a normal life—to visit family, farm family property; to seek medical treatment, to secure employment; and to travel freely in one's own country" (Ibid., 1045).

The 219th General Assembly (2010) reaffirmed many of the historical positions of the PC(USA) regarding Israel and Palestine, including:

- A call for "the end of the Israeli occupation of Palestinian territories"; (Ibid., 1022)

- An immediate freeze on both the establishment and expansion of Israeli settlements in the West Bank; (Ibid., 1022)
- An immediate end to Israeli expropriation of Palestinian land and buildings in East Jerusalem. (Ibid., 1022)
- “The withholding of U.S. government aid to the state of Israel as long as Israel persists in creating new settlements on Palestinian land. (Ibid., 1022)

The 220th General Assembly (2012) called “for the boycott of all Israeli products coming from the occupied Palestinian Territories” (Minutes, 2012, Part I, p. 1366).

The 221st General Assembly (2014) took action to divest from three American companies that profit from the Israeli occupation of Palestine (Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 261).

The international community views settlement colonies as illegal and a major roadblock to peace

The United Nations has repeatedly upheld that Israel’s construction of settlements constitutes a violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention. Israeli neighborhoods in East Jerusalem that have been annexed by Israel, are also considered settlements by the international community, which does not recognize Israel’s annexation of this territory. The International Court of Justice issued an advisory opinion in 2004 declaring these settlements to be illegal. In 2012, UN Secretary General Ban Ki-Moon, in response to moves by Israel to legalize Israeli outposts, reiterated that all settlement activity was illegal. Similar criticism was advanced by the European Union and the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Russia, Arab countries, and of course Palestinians themselves.

U.S. presidents have declared Israeli settlement colonies are illegal and a major roadblock to peace

President Barack Obama: “The United States does not accept the legitimacy of continued Israeli settlements. This construction violates previous agreements and undermines efforts to achieve peace. It is time for these settlements to stop” (Remarks by the President at Cairo University, 6-04-09).

President George W. Bush: “Consistent with the Mitchell plan, Israeli settlement activity in occupied territories must stop, and the occupation must end through withdrawal to secure and recognized boundaries, consistent with United Nations Resolutions 242 and 338” (New York Times, April 4, 2002).

President Bill Clinton: “The Israeli people also must understand that ... the settlement enterprise and building bypass roads in the heart of what they already know will one day be part of a Palestinian state is inconsistent with the Oslo commitment that both sides negotiate a compromise” (CNN.com, Transcript of Clinton’s remarks to the Israel Policy Forum gala, January 8, 2001).

President George H. W. Bush: “Secretary Baker was speaking for this administration, and I strongly support what he said ... It would make a big contribution to peace if these settlements would stop. That’s what the secretary was trying to say ... and I’m one hundred percent for him” (<http://www.nytimes.com/1991/05/24/world/bush-backs-baker-view-of-mideast-peace-barriers.html>). President Bush was referring to the following statement by Secretary of State James Baker:

Every time I have gone to Israel in connection with the peace process on each of my trips I have been met with the announcement of new settlement activity. This does violate United States policy. It is the first thing that Arabs—Arab governments—the first thing that Palestinians in the territories—whose situation is really quite desperate—the first thing they raise when we talk to them. I don’t think there is any greater obstacle to peace than settlement activity that continues not only unabated but at an advanced pace (<http://www.nytimes.com/1991/05/23/world/baker-cites-israel-for-settlements.html>).

President Ronald Reagan: The Reagan Plan states that “the United States will not support the use of any additional land for the purpose of settlements during the transition period (5 years after Palestinian election for a self-governing authority). Indeed, the immediate adoption of a settlements freeze by Israel, more than any other action, could create the confidence needed for wider participation in these talks. Further settlement activity is in no way necessary for the security of Israel and only diminishes the confidence of the Arabs that a final outcome can be freely and fairly negotiated” (http://www.cmep.org/content/us-statements-israeli-settlements_short).

President Jimmy Carter: “Our position on the settlements is very clear. We do not think they [settlements] are legal” (http://www.cmep.org/content/us-statements-israeli-settlements_short).

Background on illegal Israeli settlement colonies in Palestine

There are 125 government-sanctioned Israeli settlements in the occupied West Bank of Palestine. In addition, there were approximately 100 “settlement outposts” located throughout the West Bank. There is a massive infrastructure of “Israeli-only” roads that connect the settlements and allow unrestricted settler movement but limited or no access for Palestinians. These roads and the walls and fences that border them, combined with Israeli land use restrictions, confines Palestinians to within sixty-four isolated enclaves. Palestinians must go through Israeli checkpoints to get from one enclave to another.

Reference map

The construction of Israeli settlements colonies in the occupied West Bank and the Israeli only roads connecting settlements confine Palestinians to live within isolated and ever shrinking enclaves. To visualize the impact of the settlements and roads that connect them please refer to the reference map below.

- The triangles are major Israeli settlement colonies.
- The “Israeli-Only” roads connecting the linking settlement colonies allow unrestricted movement for settlers but allow limited or no access to Palestinians.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the assembly approve Item 08-04.

Item 08-04 calls for RE/MAX, LLC, an American company headquartered in Denver, Colorado, to cut its ties with real estate franchises that sell and rent Jewish-only housing in Israeli settlement colonies in the occupied West Bank of Palestine. This is in violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention, Article 49, which prohibits an occupying power from transferring its citizens to the occupied territories. It also violates RE/MAX’s International’s code of ethics, which states that its affiliates “shall undertake to eliminate any practice by real estate professionals in their community which could be damaging to the public”, which would include the Palestinian public (<http://www.telesurtv.net/english/opinion/REMAX-Cashes-in-on-Israelis-Illegal-Settlements-20141114-0052.html>).

The item urges members of the RE/MAX network in the United States to not refer clients to agents and brokers who are involved in the sale or rental of settlement properties in the occupied West Bank. The ACSWP recognizes that Presbyterians may be among the realty franchises within the RE/MAX network, yet notes the twofold nature of the concern. RE/MAX, LLC profits from franchises that support the Israeli colonization of Palestinian territories—illegal under international law and opposed by PC(USA), and participates in housing discrimination, because non-Jews are restricted from purchasing housing in Israeli settlements in the occupied West Bank.

The PC(USA) affiliated investment funds—the Pension Fund and Presbyterian Foundation—do not currently hold stock in RE/MAX, so MRTI is not in a position to advocate with them as a shareholder.

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 08-04.

The information, commentary, and policy statements in Chapters 1 and 2 of “Breaking Down the Walls” (https://www.pcusa.org/site_media/media/uploads/oga/pdf/breaking_down_the_walls_ga219.pdf), a report of the Middle East Study Committee to the PC(USA) General Assembly, overwhelmingly demonstrate that the General Assembly has declared Israeli settlements are illegal and a roadblock to peace. Moreover, the United States Department of State and past and present Presidents have declared that the settlements are illegal and an impediment to a peaceful resolution of the conflict. Furthermore, these colonies (settlements) are illegal under international law.

RE/MAX has offices in the illegal West Bank colonies and sells and rents houses and apartments in these colonies that are reserved exclusively for Jewish citizens of Israel in the occupied West Bank and East Jerusalem. RE/MAX activities in these illegal colonies are morally reprehensible and constitute the flouting of international law.

PMA COMMENT ON ITEM 08-04

Comment on Item 08-04—From the Presbyterian Mission Agency.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has historically supported nonviolent economic strategies to counter unjust practices and/or promote social change.

These efforts have included calls for sanctions by the U.S. government, the use of our accumulated resources through divestment and investment and boycotts, including boycotts of table grapes and fast-food companies on behalf of farm workers, Nestle for selling infant formula in the developing world, J.P. Stevens sheets and towels to support textile workers, and the consumer boycott of all Israeli products coming from the Occupied Palestinian Territories.

Item 08-05

Item 08-05 not referred for lack of concurrence.

Item 08-06

[The assembly approved Item 08-06 with comment. See pp. 60, 61–62.]

[Comment: As disciples of Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, of the people of Abraham and the lineage of David, we stand with the people of Israel, affirming their right to exist as a sovereign nation, and we stand with the Palestinian people, affirming their right to exist as a sovereign nation. The 222nd General Assembly (2016) affirms Footnote 8, which emphasizes a preference for a two-state solution. The assembly also affirms our desire to stay in conversation with our partners in Israel who work for peace. Finally, the assembly expresses its opposition to any efforts to deny or undermine the rights of the Palestinian people or the Jewish people to self-determination.]

Israel-Palestine: For Human Values in the Absence of a Just Peace—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 222nd General Assembly (2016)

1. Approve the following summary assessment statement:

The following summary assessment, requested recommendations, and supporting study and policy review together constitute a report with actions appropriate to a situation of moral urgency entitled, Israel-Palestine: For Human Values in the Absence of a Just Peace. The sections are:

While the Door Closes: A Summary Assessment

Acting on Christian and Universal Values: Recommendations

The Two State Approach from a Values Perspective: A Brief Study

While the Door Closes: A Summary Assessment

This report focuses on the actual situation of Palestinians and Israelis in the land they share and on the values that need support from all people seeking a just peace. Faithful to the General Assembly's assignment, the report resists simple formulas. It understands the responsibility of a single church based in the U.S. to contribute to a larger ecumenical and interfaith conversation about basic moral expectations and to take informed actions of integrity, witness, and solidarity.

The Presbyterian Church [PC(USA)] has had a deep concern for Israel-Palestine for many reasons, including its place in Christian self-understanding and the prominent role the United States has taken there. Since 1949, the church has taken public positions on the situation, supporting Israel as a safe homeland for Jews but also calling for just treatment for Palestinians, including Palestinian refugees. In 1974, the General Assembly called for "The right and power of Palestinian people to self-determination by political expression, based upon full civil liberties for all. ... If the Palestinians choose to organize a permanent political structure, then provisions should be made to determine its jurisdiction, assure its security, and support its development."¹

In 1982, the assembly first called for "the establishment of a national sovereign state in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip as an expression of self-determination of the Palestinian people."² Subsequent Presbyterian statements have affirmed United Nations Resolution 242, of November 1967, calling for Israel's withdrawal from the territories it had just begun to occupy, and have lifted up the Palestine National Council's 1988 decision to recognize Israel within the boundaries that had held from 1949 to the 1967 war. That implicit ceding of 78 percent of British Mandate Palestine to Israel supported the possibility of a two-state solution and, with the largely nonviolent first Intifada, opened the path to the Oslo accords.³

The most recent comprehensive statement by the church on Israel-Palestine within its Middle Eastern context, Breaking Down the Walls (2010), provides the starting point of principles and policy for this study. That 2010 report examines the "contest of traumas" caused by past suffering on both Jewish Israelis and Palestinians, with fears of anti-Semitism and fears of a continuing Nakhsba (or catastrophe of dispossession) hindering empathy for the "other."⁴ It carefully contrasts the First Testament's views on land with aspects of the covenant understood by Reformed Christians, and with Muslim and Christian Palestinian "samud," or steadfastness on the land. Breaking Down the Walls recognized "daunting and mounting obstacles to the viability of a "two-state solution," and called for the "immediate resumption of negotiations" to that end.

Over the years, then, the Presbyterian church has supported the international consensus favoring a two-state solution with a shared Jerusalem. Yet as situations change, the church must evaluate its positions accordingly. And in the view of many analysts, the door to a viable Palestinian state is closing rapidly, if it is still open at all.⁵ For example, Thomas Friedman, a long-standing proponent of "two states for two peoples," has suggested that calling for a two-state solution, without acknowledging the reality on the ground, is an exercise in denial.⁶

Israel's policy trajectory of continued settlements and brutal occupation is deeply troubling. Not only does it make a two-state solution increasingly difficult, if not impossible, to achieve, but the emerging, de facto single state's systematic violation of Palestinian rights and democratic values is eroding Israel's moral legitimacy. This has presented a growing crisis for a church that has historically supported Israel as a homeland for Jews, and we note growing divisions in the U.S. Jewish community as well.

This resolution takes the position that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should advance those efforts that best accord with its values, which have relevance in any political arrangement, including but not limited to that of two sovereign states—Israel and Palestine. Although statements by Israeli, Palestinian, and U.S. leaders confirm that no progress toward such a solution is expected in the near term,⁷ PC(USA) has supported an equitable two-state solution out of fairness and the belief that it would be far better for both peoples and three faiths to share the land. To keep open the option of a two-state solution, this report in its language and recommendations makes a clear distinction between the State of Israel within internationally recognized borders and the settlements and other illegal actions in the occupied Palestinian territories (oPt).⁸

For years, abstract discussion of two- vs. one-state solutions or federations has served to distract attention from ongoing violations of human rights and increases in mutual hostility. De facto annexation, land confiscation, and government subsidized settlement growth have increased since Oslo. About half the Israeli cabinet publically oppose any Palestinian state; the Yesha Council of settlements states clearly their goal: “Creating a situation where it becomes clear to the international community that another state west of the Jordan River is not viable.”⁹

In this situation, the church should foster relationships with partners who share its values, be they Jewish, Christian, Muslim, or secular, without being misled by mirages of peace agreements ungrounded in realism about power. This report does not demonize any people or belief system, but rather illustrates the results of giving one group greatly disproportionate power over another. Nor do we, as a U.S. church involved in the Middle East since the 1830s, claim to be innocent of religious nationalism and complicity with militarism and colonialism. Yet, as Reinhold Niebuhr said, “The sad duty of politics is to establish justice in a sinful world.” We are part of that world, we share that goal of justice, and—despite our observation of increasing tragedy—we believe engagement is also a hopeful duty.¹⁰

Grounded in the Reformed faith, our salient values include:

1. The dignity of all persons, despite our universal capacity to do harm;
2. Self-determination of peoples through democratic means;
3. The building up of community and pursuit of reconciliation;
4. Equality under the law and reduction in the separation that fosters inequality;
5. Recognition of our complicity and the need for confession and repentance; and
6. Solidarity with those who suffer.

These values influenced and are linked with the modern understanding of human rights, as in The Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UN 1948): “[R]ecognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice, and peace in the world.” While sharing the first four of these values with countless persons of good will, the prophetic tradition and teaching of Jesus (as in the Sermon on the Mount; Matthew 5) lead us to confront our enabling of injustice and move to the side of those who suffer. Our presbyteries have approved the Belhar Confession of faith from South Africa, which affirms the unity of justice and reconciliation, “that true reconciliation which follows on conversion and change of attitudes and structures.” In confronting our own legacies of racial and ethnic separation, we believe:

- that God, in a world full of injustice and enmity, is in a special way the God of the destitute, the poor and the wronged... [and]
- that the church must therefore stand by people in any form of suffering and need, which implies, among other things, that the church must witness against and strive against any form of injustice, so that justice may roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream;¹¹

Presbyterian values and human rights provide a lens through which the study team examined the situation in Israel-Palestine. Realism requires us to call the current entity, “Israel-Palestine,” as one state is effectively subsuming the other. This report proceeds by defining values and then using the categories of the Oslo accords to examine capacities and functions of statehood. Further, this report notes the grave danger that Israeli government policies privileging a narrow form of Zionism may well change a resource-based struggle to an overtly religious one, eliminating the already-declining Christian minority, obliterating historical Muslim and Christian sites with enhanced Jewish sites, and increasing extremist antagonism in the Jewish and Muslim communities. The report’s findings are summarized here.

The Oslo Challenges

In the twenty-three years since the signing of the Oslo Accords, efforts to establish two states have achieved some limited successes, such as establishment of the Palestinian Authority and some security cooperation with Israel. Nonetheless, in accord with the request for an update of facts on the ground, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s study team found that the situation has stagnated or worsened on the core challenges identified in the Oslo Accords: (1) Jerusalem, (2) refugees, (3) settlements, (4) security arrangements, (5) borders, (6) relations and cooperation with neighboring countries, and (7) other issues of common interest. This report does not treat Item (6) except by implication. Among the “other issues of common interest,” the report considers water, economic development in Palestine, and Gaza.

1. East Jerusalem, which the Oslo Accords identified as the capital of a future Palestinian state, has been cut off from the rest of the West Bank by Israel’s erection of a fortified wall and security checkpoints, keeping out most Palestinians. The Israeli government has annexed all Jerusalem and expanded the city’s boundaries to include settlements, while depriving Palestinian residents of citizenship and public services, despite their full payment of taxes to Israel. This claim that Jerusalem is all part of Israel and its united capitol, in violation of international law, made Palestinian residents of East Jerusalem stateless, with tenuous and frequently cancelled permission to continue living in their homes. Systematic land reconfiguration and large, strategic settlements in support of “an exclusionary Jewish Jerusalem” are “marginalizing the other national and religious equities in the city,” increasing interreligious tension and contributing to the loss of Christian presence.¹²

2. Refugees’ right of return to their former homes in what is now Israel or agreed-upon compensation, guaranteed on an individual basis under international law, remains unaddressed. In contrast, Jews from around the world are granted immediate Israeli citizenship based on the diaspora of the first and second centuries. Further, other countries pick up much of the tab for the care of the refugees, including host countries in the Middle East, in which Palestinians suffer from discrimination and poverty. Israel’s demographic fear of allowing significant numbers of refugees back would argue for a two-state solution with negotiated compensation. Yet on both sides the political capacity to make the compromises necessary to reach agreement appears seriously diminished since Oslo, with the refugee situation reinforcing Israel’s isolation in the region (often termed, “a dangerous neighborhood”).

3. Israeli settlements in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, illegal under international law, have continued to expand in number, territory, and population—now including more than 650,000 settlers. Their location and the roads connecting them (for exclusive Israeli use) hem in Palestinian cities and towns and block time-honored transport connections with each other and with Jerusalem and the wider world. Israel did evacuate 9,000 settlers from Gaza, but in all other areas the government provides subsidies, services, and access to resources to encourage a de facto colonization project. Jewish settlers in the occupied Palestinian territory receive treatment as Israeli citizens under a civil justice system, while Palestinians are under military occupation orders without full citizenship rights and legal protections.¹³

4. Security for Israelis and Palestinians is an existential concern. Wars, terrorist attacks, and hostility from those wishing to throw off the occupation have led Israel to spend a large share of national income on security. Today, however, although neighboring states may be unfriendly (due to refugees or border areas Israel continues to hold from past wars), Israel faces no significant military challenges from any of them. While there have been occasional internal spikes of violence (such as knife attacks in late 2015) and indiscriminate rocket attacks, most Israelis lead relatively secure lives. These attacks, as well as the fear of attack via tunnels into Israeli village areas (most tunnels are from Gaza to Egypt), continue to grip and shape internal Israeli politics and subvert the two-state process. Current policies, including militarized crackdowns, have not produced the total security that the government desires; indeed, some observers contend that they contribute to cycles of violence. Some Israeli soldiers, sent to protect settler colonies, suffer from something akin to post traumatic stress syndrome—moral harm—for having participated in the violent suppression of Palestinians.¹⁴ Finally, not all internal threats to Israeli security emanate from Palestinians. Israeli right-wing and religious extremists, who normally target Palestinians, have occasionally struck at government authorities and murdered Prime Minister Rabin in 1995, severely setting back two-state negotiations.

5. Meanwhile, Palestinians’ security has unambiguously worsened since Oslo. In the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and Gaza, Israeli military and settlers killed 2,334 Palestinians between January 2014 and August 2015, compared with 90 Israelis dying from Palestinian attacks. The Israeli government routinely destroys Palestinian homes, wells, businesses and farms in East Jerusalem and most of the West Bank if they are built or repaired without Israeli permits, which are rarely granted. Palestinian property is expropriated for Israeli parks, heritage sites, security zones, and the enclosure wall. The Israeli military arrests adolescent Palestinians in the night, coerces confessions by threats of indefinite imprisonment, and holds them without trial or access to a lawyer, a translator, or even a parent. Palestinians are often held in Israel where families cannot visit, which violates international law. Palestinians who allegedly pose a threat are often shot on sight. Despite some security cooperation with the Palestinian Authority, the Israeli military frequently conducts incursions into Palestinian areas and conducts constant drone surveillance of Gaza and other Palestinian areas. These actions provoke backlash and subvert any prospects for a two-state solution.

6. The borders have become less clear. The government of Israel has not made an official declaration of its borders. Israeli construction of a fortified wall primarily on West Bank territory follows a path in defiance of a decision by the International Court of Justice. Area C, 60 percent of the West Bank, designated in the Oslo accords either to be part of a future Palestinian state or to be territory that the Palestinians could exchange with Israel in a final settlement, is now shown on maps from the Israeli Ministry of Tourism as indistinguishable from the internationally recognized territory of Israel. The parcels of the West Bank under Palestinian control are fragmented from each other and cut off from Jerusalem, Jordan, and the rest of the world with whom they need to trade and communicate.

7. Israeli authorities tightly limit the access of Palestinians to water, while assuring that their own citizens and the settlers have full access 24-7. Per capita use of water in 2014 was 183 liters per day in Israel, compared to 73 for Palestinians in the West Bank and a minimum of 100 recommended by the World Health Organization. Palestinians must have permission to drill or deepen wells, which is rarely granted. Many Palestinian towns get water only a few times a week, while nearby Israeli settlements enjoy swimming pools and watered lawns and gardens. Some of the incursions of the wall into West Bank territory seize control of aquifers there. Israeli wells along Gaza's border substantially deplete the safely drinkable water available there.

8. Economic development for Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza suffers from Israeli restrictions that hinder exports of their products, imports of raw material, construction of economic infrastructure, transportation within the West Bank and with other economies, access to internet and other communications, and access to financial services. In Jerusalem and elsewhere, Palestinians cannot enforce contracts and property rights vis a vis settlers. A World Bank study showed that removing such obvious restrictions would allow the West Bank GDP to expand by at least a third. Problems with governance and rule of law by Palestinian authorities also hinder development; reducing externally imposed constraints would increase the incentive and capacity of Palestinians to address their own problems. A Rand Corporation study argued that a two-state solution would benefit Israel as well as Palestine, partly by lessening security expenditures (although U.S. aid covers a substantial share of this for Israel).¹⁵

9. Problems in Gaza have always been the most severe, due to the economic and fiscal blockade and the periodic attacks by Israel. The most recent air and land attack in summer 2014 made the misery far worse. More than 2,100 were killed in Gaza, including at least 521 children and 962 other civilians. Israeli losses were 71, reflecting their overwhelming military dominance. Around 500,000 households in Gaza became homeless and displaced, unemployment and food insecurity are high, and few households have piped water due to deliberate bombing and shelling of infrastructure. Hamas has arguably offered long-term truces to Israel in the past, but it also promotes an antagonistic ideology, which mirrors the extremist Israeli settler parties. The population of Gaza, 45 percent under fifteen years of age, is being punished collectively, ostensibly for this ideology; such actions violate the international law prohibiting collective punishment. Among others, David Cameron, Prime Minister of Great Britain, has described Gaza as “an open-air prison or even concentration camp.”¹⁶

The study report accompanying this resolution describes these trends further, noting the growth of Israeli power and resources and the weakening of Palestinian economic capacity, institutions, and culture, and even family life. It builds on our 2010 statement, Breaking Down the Walls, and similarly draws upon resources from across civil society and religious traditions. The Palestinian Christian Kairos document (December 2009) was a key source for ecumenical guidance, with its call for nonviolent resistance based in faith, hope, and love. We are indebted to the many Jews, Muslims, and Christians who are similarly committed to nonviolence as they seek peace with justice in that land all three faiths consider holy.

While lack of progress on the Oslo agenda does not condemn diplomacy or peace talks, advocating for the “two-state solution” or any other particular political arrangement has often distracted people from ongoing events and suffering. Affirming the “two-state” solution ideally means maintaining Israel as a demographically and democratically Jewish state alongside, one hopes, a democratic and peaceful Palestine. Less attractive political possibilities abound, including two extremes in the one-state category: either a Jewish-dominated state that further oppresses the Palestinians, or a potential Arab/Muslim majority state that could conceivably subject Jewish Israelis to expulsion or subjugation. Rather than sort through the increasingly complex contingencies needed to reach any political solution, which has been attempted repeatedly by negotiators, this report focuses on how to support human rights and democratic values for Israelis and Palestinians in the present interim and as a contribution to a better long-term solution.

Israeli and Palestinian leaders and organizations need to take responsibility for protecting human rights and eventually reaching a just peace. Although both sides take outside funds, often from the United States, sometimes with strings attached, the Israelis and Palestinians are in no sense equal negotiating partners. We reject any false equivalence between the capacity of a prosperous nuclear-armed state and that of a poor, divided, and occupied set of cantons. The Israeli government has conquered the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem and labels any resistance as “terrorism,” even though international law gives an occupied people the right to armed struggle to resist the occupier.¹⁷ The path of the wall, the pattern of checkpoints, and the matrix of military control divide and demoralize Palestinians, trapping them in unsustainable situations.

At the same time, decisions of the Palestinian Authority that discourage new leadership and its passivity in the face of Oslo violations weaken its capacity to negotiate on behalf others in prison, in exile, and under blockade. Leaders of Hamas face other challenges, some of their own making and some due to repeated Israeli military efforts to remove them since their victory in the free and fair elections of 2006, since which some have been imprisoned and others killed by rockets or drones. It is hard to think long term when massive inequality in wealth and weaponry would make any political leader's work seem impossible, shrinking civil society under an occupation that looks more and more like annexation and slow-motion expulsion. Yet Israel is not solely to blame for limitations of Palestinian leadership and the presentation internationally of their claims—including those of the refugees. Despite the daily heroism and nonviolence of countless Palestinians, their political organizations have not maintained the unity needed for strength.¹⁸

We can no longer consider the U.S. government an impartial arbiter, as its diplomatic, financial, military, and intelligence assistance to the Israeli government vastly overshadows its assistance to the Palestinian Authority.¹⁹ The complicity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC[USA]) and other U.S. Christians in enabling the continued Israeli occupation derives from the overwhelming support from the United States to Israel, regardless of its policies. For example, in 2015 the prime minister of Israel openly opposed an international nuclear weapons agreement with Iran on the floor of the U.S. Congress, without being challenged on Israel's own refusal to sign the international nuclear nonproliferation agreement.²⁰ U.S. military and financial aid continued to Israel during its one-sided campaign against Hamas in Gaza, and Israel has repeatedly announced additional settlement construction in ways that undercut the peace process. PC(USA), with its own funds and member purchasing, has tried to curtail its support for the occupation and settlement, while making it clear that it is not divesting from or boycotting the internationally recognized Israel, within the "Green Line." This accords with our economic support for nonviolent social change in other cases where politics met an impasse.

In the past, our commitment to human rights and human dignity, to self-determination and equal justice, led PC(USA) to stand with those who saw a two-state solution as having the most hope for a society to realize values. Repeating the mantra of "Two-State Solution" has kept U.S. funding flowing to Israel but has failed to end the violence or lead to mutually accepted solutions. During its visit, the team learned that many of our Israeli and Palestinian partners and friends who previously embraced the two-state vision embodied in the Oslo Accords now have increasing doubts that it will come about in a manner consistent with these shared values. Solutions thinking is needed, but at this juncture, our calling as a church and as Christians is to point to the longer term and larger frame. Families and communities throughout the region are fractured by cultures of militarism, extremism, and xenophobia. Fear and despair pervade. The process coming out of Oslo, designed to be peaceful and temporary, has continued far beyond its envisioned conclusion and now is hardening into something that provokes interminable violence.

Without repudiating a long-term goal of two free states living in peace and prosperity, or losing hope that the United States can use its influence and considerable funds in a proportionate and helpful way, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) hopes to act with both integrity and effectiveness, seeking enforcement of international law and solidarity with civil society organizations to protect the individual and collective human rights of Palestinians. As stated by the General Assembly in 2010, "we do affirm the legitimacy of Israel as a state, but consider the continuing occupation of Palestine ... to be illegitimate, illegal under international law, and an enduring threat to peace in the region. Furthermore, we recognize that any support for that occupation weakens the moral standing of our nation internationally and our security."²¹

Acting on Christian and Universal Values: Recommendations

2. Approve the following recommendations:

As a denomination with partners in both Israel and the occupied Palestinian territories, the PC(USA) has taken and should continue to take actions and positions in service to human dignity, self-determination, reconciliation across borders, equality before the law, and solidarity with those who suffer. Recognizing that the United States remains Israel's staunchest ally despite the continuing occupation and annexation of Palestine and failures of peace processes, this report also supports the calls of prior assemblies to make the billions of dollars in U.S. military aid to Israel conditional on its advancing its democratic practices to include basic human and citizenship rights for the Palestinian Christians and Muslims under its effective control, and on equalizing the rights of Arabs or Palestinians considered citizens of Israel. The current course of further restriction and dispossession will continue to weaken Israel's claims to share democratic values and will strain relationships in many communities, including between some Presbyterians and Jews, causing regrettable discomfort. Yet out of a much greater concern not to be silent in the face of the risk of increased violence, this General Assembly cannot normalize acceptance of the practices described in this report.

We commend adherents of all three Abrahamic faiths for their participation in frank and fair conversations in efforts to help prevent misunderstanding and mistrust among our communities in the U.S. and in Israel-Palestine. PC(USA) appreciates the efforts of the U.S. State Department and other diplomats of all nations who help raise the moral climate to reduce the frequency and severity of human rights violations and who present their governments with accurate information about the costs of further delaying a just peace. Similarly, the assembly commends reporters and members of human rights and development groups whose work requires bravery and honesty in facing Israeli and other armed personnel and the possibility of jail or deportation.

Presbyterians and the Presbyterian Mission Agency have sought to work with other peacemaking organizations to counteract the culture of resentment and militarization that drives violent interactions between Israelis and Palestinians. The PC(USA) has called on all parties to cease activities that worsen the prospects for a just peace, especially Israeli occupation and settlement construction in the West Bank and East Jerusalem and the construction of the separation wall on territory east of the internationally recognized borders of Israel. Our Office of Public Witness (OPW) in Washington, D.C., and the Presbyterian Ministry to the UN (PMUN) have urged Palestinian leaders to increase their coordination and cooperation, to encourage creative and nonviolent initiatives to end human rights violations against Palestinian opponents, and to find ways to maintain dignity and resist the violence of knives, guns, and rockets. The limited success of years of “words-only” efforts is part of what has led the church to move toward nonviolent economic pressure on the settlement enterprise and to work with civic organizations in the occupied Palestinian territories (OPT).

Presbyterians support ecumenical and interfaith educational programs that bring Israeli and Palestinian children into contact with each other, such as Hand-in-Hand and Face-to-Face/Faith-to-Faith. Congregations need to educate themselves about all sides of the history of the conflict and about the structures of the occupation that prevent free movement within the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and into and out of Gaza. During mission trips they should witness and experience the restrictions on movement faced by Palestinians.

The PC(USA) supports international accompaniment programs of the ecumenical churches to observe and be protective witnesses to prevent violence against Palestinians in the occupied territories. The Ecumenical Accompaniment Program of the World Council of Churches, Christian Peacemaker Teams, and Interfaith Peacebuilders all provide significant protection against settler and military violence against Palestinians. The PC(USA) has urged the police and courts of Israel and Palestine to provide equal protection under the law for all persons and their property in the West Bank and in Israel proper, without discrimination by ethnicity, nationality, or religious affiliation.

The PC(USA) has given strong support for a democratic Israel with secure and internationally agreed upon boundaries, living at peace with its neighbors and providing equal rights to all its citizens under one system of justice. Because Palestinians under occupation or exiled from their homes do not have such rights, however, the PC(USA) has taken several actions regarding corporate engagement in Israel-Palestine. The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved a statement urging that “... financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal.”²² The 218th General Assembly (2008) also called upon corporations doing business in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem and the West Bank “... to confine their business activity solely to peaceful pursuits, and refrain from allowing their products or services to support or facilitate violent acts by Israelis or Palestinians against innocent civilians, construction and maintenance of settlements or Israeli-only roads in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory, and construction of the Separation Barrier as it extends beyond the 1967 ‘Green Line’ into Palestinian territories.”²³ The 220th General Assembly (2012) recommended that members and congregations avoid buying goods manufactured in the illegal Israeli settlements and pursue “occupation-free” investment within Israel-Palestine. The Presbyterian Foundation and Board of Pensions, as recommended by 221st General Assembly (2014), refrain from investing in and profiting from three U.S. firms that supply critical equipment for the illegal occupation of the West Bank and the destruction of Palestinian houses and agriculture.

The Middle East Liaison Office and other mission offices gather and share information on what is happening to Palestinians and Israelis of all faiths and participate in joint discussions among Christian, Jewish, and Muslim congregations and communities on human values and human rights. A study guide for this report will be available to read and discuss within our congregations and communities.

a. For the dignity of all persons, that:

(1) Appropriate agencies of the General Assembly and all Presbyterians urge the Israeli government, as a matter of policy and practice, to stop the collective punishment and isolation of broad sections of the Palestinian population—the blockade of Gaza, the demolition of Palestinian homes and the administrative detention, the torture²⁴ and forced feeding of Palestinian detainees—and to restore the ID documents and citizenship status that have been stripped from Palestinians in East Jerusalem and elsewhere.

(2) Appropriate Presbyterian agencies work with international ecumenical and interfaith bodies whenever possible to strengthen this witness and ensure that the voices of diverse Israeli and Palestinian groups are heard, even in times of disagreement, while encouraging others to understand the faith bases of our positions.

b. For self-determination of peoples through democratic means, that:

(1) Members, ministers, and agencies would be encouraged to provide vigorous support if the government of Israel and representatives of the Palestinians come to an equitable agreement on a new political arrangement—possibly with two-sovereign states as envisioned at Oslo—advocating for it with the U.S. government, at the UN, and in other public forums.

(2) Members, councils, and appropriate agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) urge the U.S. Administration and Congress to support greater involvement and possible mediation by the United Nations agencies and Security Council, and not exercise our state's Security Council veto over Palestinian efforts for full membership in the United Nations or standing in international courts and treaties, nor oppose investigations and possible censure or penalties for human rights or war violations committed by either Palestinian or Israeli entities.

c. For building community through social, economic, and political enterprises that increase capacity and support for reconciliation, that:

(1) The State of Israel, the Palestinian Authority, and other bodies publicize Israeli and Palestinian actions that contribute to peaceful coexistence and mutual respect, opening opportunities for equal education with unbiased curricula, sports participation, permits to travel, participate in shared work trips, etc.

(2) The United Nations Security Council to establish a peacekeeping mission for Israel-Palestine with a mandate to protect civilians and their human rights.

(3) United Nations human-rights monitors be permitted to observe and report on violations of human rights by Israel and Palestine.

(4) Israel, the Palestinian Authority, and Hamas permit the Red Cross and Red Crescent to visit prisons in Israel-Palestine and to be permitted by these authorities to bring documented complaints to appropriate international judicial or UN bodies in case of violations.

d. For equality under the law and reduction in the separation that fosters inequality, that:

(1) Even if Israel does not fulfill its obligation to end the practice of child detention (which goes against Israel's ratification of the 1989 Convention on the Rights of the Child), the General Assembly endorses the recommendations of the Military Court Watch organization at least to halt the human rights abuses of children by the military occupation in the West Bank: no night raids to arrest minors; every child to be told his or her legal rights in a language each understands; every child granted access to an attorney before interrogation; every child's parents present during interrogation; and every interrogation A/V recorded and made publically available.

(2) The assembly urges Congress to hold hearings into the use of U.S. made and subsidized military and police equipment by the government of Israel in carrying out policies that abuse human rights, violate Geneva Accords, or oppose American principles of religious liberty and nondiscrimination.

(3) In keeping with the initial intention of the United Nations that Jerusalem be an international city to honor and provide access to the holy places of three faiths, the General Assembly emphasizes the importance of having vital communities of all three faiths present. In practice, this means (a) calling on the Israeli government to be transparent and accountable in dealing with Muslim and Christian sacred sites, affording them the same protections as Jewish sites, allowing freedom of worship and all necessary permits for properly designated religious personnel, and allowing internationally authorized archeologists to review claims that affect traditional Muslim and Christian areas of living and worship (as World Heritage sites are reviewed); and (b) inviting Christian, Jewish, and Muslim dialogue groups, congregations, and communities, here and in Israel-Palestine, to discuss questions of religious liberty vis-a-vis those practices that highlight Jewish objects and customs in Jerusalem and other locations to the actual and potential detriment of other religious communities.

e. For acknowledgment and confession of our complicity in the injustices in Israel-Palestine, that:

(1) The Presbyterian Foundation and Board of Pensions refrain from investments that support violence against Israelis or Palestinians, including finance and support for the economic activity and expansion of settlements outside of Israel's internationally recognized borders, in accord with previous General Assembly actions.

(2) Appropriate agencies of the assembly support measures by the Internal Revenue Service (or related units of the United States government) to investigate and possibly revoke the 501(c)(3) status for organizations, and tax deductions for individuals, that promote and finance the development or operation of Israeli settlements, which are illegal under international law and obstacles to peace.

(3) The General Assembly affirms the traditional freedom of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and other religious, civic, and private organizations in the United States to determine their own practices of investment or divestment, boycott or selective purchasing, in advocacy for peace and human rights, and therefore opposes efforts in state legislatures and elsewhere to limit or punish these exercises of freedom and nonviolent solidarity.

f. In solidarity with those who suffer, the General Assembly:

(1) Encourages Presbyterians to read and reflect on documents like *Kairos-Palestine*²⁵ that come from our Palestinian brothers and sisters and to support programs like Christ at the Checkpoint.²⁶

(2) Directs the Presbyterian Mission Agency to advocate with the U.S. government for Israeli and Palestinian authorities to reduce trade barriers for U.S. imports into and exports from Palestinian firms in the West Bank and Gaza. Agricultural and manufactured goods made in Palestine by Palestinians should be able to reach American markets with the same ease as goods made in Israel.

(3) Supports U.S. government enforcement of laws requiring correct labeling of the place of production for imports to the U.S. of goods from Israeli settlements and of laws sustaining the prohibition on Israeli participation in the U.S. Visa Waiver Program until Israeli ceases to discriminate against U.S. passport holders of Palestinian origin. Provisions of trade acts that do not distinguish between Israel and the territories it occupies disregard human rights and international law.

Rationale

The Two-State Approach from a Values Perspective: A Brief Study

PRECIS

The repeated failure of the peace process in Israel-Palestine is also a failure of national and international politics to address the human rights of a people kept stateless by military occupation and exile. This report reviews the status of the “two-state” solution, but it does not engage in further political solutions-thinking, given the limited support for a Palestinian state by the United States and the international community in the face of Israeli government resistance. As a church based in the United States, we continue to believe that both Israel and the Middle East would be safer if Palestine were a free and viable state and not an arena for deep ethnic and religious hostility, a hostility that infects the profile of the United States and of Christianity in the region. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in this report assesses the situation through a lens of Reformed Christian moral values and commitment to integrity, witness, and solidarity with the Christian community in Palestine and worldwide.

This report is addressed to the ecumenical Christian community, Jewish and Muslim communities, and all persons of good will who refuse to accept the verdict of power politics that the cause of peace is lost. As that cause can no longer be kept waiting for an ideal political solution, two-state or otherwise, the church and nongovernmental organizations must prepare to advocate for full Palestinian rights within the zone of Israeli sovereignty, whether temporary or permanent. Our goal is to witness for justice, peace, and equal rights for all persons living in Israel-Palestine. Our prayer is that violence and suffering do not increase in the absence of more democratic alternatives.

A. A Framework of Christian Values and Human Rights

1. Our Values

We recognize that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is first of all a church, not merely a nongovernmental organization (NGO) comprised of religious people. As a Christian church, its primary allegiance is to Jesus Christ, who is its head and upon whose grace it always relies. Further, we recognize the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stands in the Reformed tradition. As such, its vision is shaped by a particular set of theological claims: the sovereignty of God over all things; the centrality of Jesus Christ in understanding this sovereign God; the authority of Scripture as it bears witness to Jesus Christ; the ubiquity of sin to distort vision, damage relationships, and harm all parts of God’s good world; the power of grace to overcome sin and make all things new; the wisdom within the long witness of the church’s confessions. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) expresses this vision through values that shape its actions in all contexts, including the context of this report.

Values form the theological heart of our report. The church advocates for upholding the downtrodden and oppressed, while working to enhance the dignity and well-being of all people. These values form a universal message based in the belief that a sovereign God, made perfectly manifest in Jesus Christ as he is witnessed in Scriptures, cares for all people at all times. Many Christian values are relevant in a context as complex and contested as Israel-Palestine, but certain of our values deserve priority here:

- The Dignity of All Persons. The God who has created all human beings, male and female, in the divine image (Gen 1:27) and commanded us to love them (Mk. 12:28–31) is the same God who invites us into his great mission of reconciliation (Matt 28:18–20). We begin to participate in that mission as we recognize that all persons carry the peculiar, unquantifiable, and indelible dignity that comes in human existence before God. All categories that divide persons must dissolve in the face of recognition of this dignity—no matter how functional or useless they are to us; no matter how benign or malignant they become for us; no matter how taught or innate they are. Regardless of our tendencies to choose sides, submit to tribal loyalties, or resist complexities in dealing with seemingly entrenched and intransigent conflicts, our first obligation is to honor the dignity of all persons with whom we are engaged, especially where that dignity is threatened, demeaned, or denied. The Christian mission of reconciliation will take us to difficult places; it will not allow us, however, to simplify those contexts, our neighbors, or ourselves, lest in doing so we lose sight of their dignity or surrender our own.

- The Self-Determination of Peoples. One way we affirm the dignity of all persons is to promote their rights to shape their own lives. Because there is “one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all and through all and in all” (Eph 4:5–6), nothing and no one other than God can claim the ultimate allegiance of any person. Because God has made all people only “a little lower than God, and crowned them with glory and honor” (Ps. 8:5), all people have a capacity to live into their respective relationships with God unmediated by any other powers. Social, political, economic, and religious structures that help order societies and structure relationships are properly bound by these truths. Thus, self-determination is both a right that ultimately trumps whatever immediate and useful social good may come from denying that right and also a goal that should shape every social project in which the church participates. It is, in part, for this reason that God covenants with human beings (Gen 9:8–17; Gen 17:4–8) toward the ordering of their lives and welfare. As covenant people, we act most faithfully and stand on our surest footing when we promote every people’s right to self-determination, because it is through this right that they take up their own responsibilities within God’s covenanting work.

- The Building Up of Community and Pursuit of Reconciliation. The right to self-determination within the context of a covenant with God is properly ordered when it is directed towards the creation and growth of a community that can include all people. Because “... in Christ God was reconciling the world to himself, not counting their trespasses against them, and entrusting the message of reconciliation to us ... we are ambassadors for Christ” (2 Cor. 5:19–20). Obedient to a God whose reconciling power encompasses the world and empowered by a God whose obedience was most perfectly manifested in Jesus Christ, we can take up the roles of ambassadors and the work of reconciliation and community-building with the boldness of those who know that nothing “will be able to separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord” (Rom. 8:39). This boldness allows us to confront all pursuits of individual vainglory, selfish desires, and exclusionary power in love and with the goal of transforming, rather than taking sides in, adjudicating over, or fleeing from conflict.

- The Rule of Law and Recognition of Equality Before Law. Human communities are both constrained and enabled by laws. As many reformers remind us, one function of law is to restrain immoral and corrupting behavior: we need laws to maintain order. Proper rule of law also allows persons and communities to better pursue ways of holiness, as John Calvin reminded us; we benefit from laws because they improve possibilities for social engagement and, therein, reconciliation. God can work through law at local, regional, national, and international levels. “Great peace have those who love your law; nothing can make them stumble” (Ps. 119:165)—and good human laws resound with the echoes of divine law. Good human laws treat those who come before them with equality. Indeed, our fundamental conception of justice recognizes that standards should apply impartially towards all, at local, national, and international levels.

- The Recognition of Complicity and the Need for Confession. We need the law—and even more, we need grace through and before the law—because our own actions have never been immune from sin: “all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God,” Paul reminds us (Rom. 3:23). Rather than treating all people with dignity, we have sometimes used them for our own purposes. Rather than promoting their right to self-determination, our church and government have sometimes assumed the right to act on their behalf and without their consent. As a result, rather than building up communities of reconciliation, we have shaped communities of exclusion. Rather than making impartial judgments, we have favored those closest to us, those loudest around us, and those whose perspectives best mesh with our own. When acting this way, we have exacerbated problems rather than resolved them. A fundamental step in participating in God’s mission of reconciliation is to confess our complicity in systems and patterns of behavior that oppress and injure. Having recognized our past complicity, we must then act to amend it and to support those who have been oppressed and injured.

- Solidarity with Those Who Suffer. Following the commandments and example of its Lord, the church is called to attend to, care for, and stand in solidarity with those who suffer. God’s great self-revelations—at Sinai, to the prophets, in the incarnation—begin with “I have observed the misery of my people. ... Indeed, I know their sufferings, and I have come down to deliver them ...” (Ex. 3:7–8). And God has enabled and commanded the church to participate in that divine work as a central part of its ministry of reconciliation. So the church is called to both stand with and offer its resources to those who suffer. It stands with those who suffer in order to understand the conditions in which they find themselves, to recognize its own location in those conditions, and to see God at work there, transforming the world. It offers its resources to those who suffer as a demonstration of its commitment to the mission to which it has been charged and as a sign of its belief in the abundance of a God who is the giver of all good gifts, who desires human flourishing, who defeats even death, and who is bringing about the reconciliation of all things to himself (Col. 1:20).

These values apply particularly in the context of Israel-Palestine. Arising from within the wisdom of the Reformed tradition and manifesting themselves within the polity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), these values also align with the language of human rights as elaborated below and in the United Nations’ Universal Declaration of Human Rights. As Reformed theologian Nicholas Wolterstorff and others have shown, the concept of human rights arose partly out of Christian scriptures and developed through two thousand years of Christian thought; it now forms the basis for Christian understanding of justice.²⁷ Box 1 explains that so-called Christian Zionism is not an appropriate response to denials of human rights for Jews and does not reflect Presbyterian or true Christian values.

Box 1: Christian Zionism Does Not Reflect Presbyterian Values

Churches in the United States, including the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), relate to modern Israel-Palestine in a wide variety of complex ways, shaped by many historical, theological, moral, ecclesial, interreligious, economic, and political forces. Although these relationships do not all align with each other, most of them are broadly faithful expressions of the church's witness in the world. But not all.

A serious example of Christian complicity in the exacerbation of suffering in Israel-Palestine is the promotion of contemporary Christian Zionism—the idea that Christians should support the return of Jews to Israel in order to fulfill prophecy and initiate Jesus' return. During the Six-Days War of 1967, fundamentalist church leaders in the United States who had previously either neglected Jewish Zionist concerns and ideas or had been antipathetic towards Jews and Judaism, read Israel's victory as a sign of the coming of end times, even as they saw the Cold War as a war between forces of good and evil. Finding touch points with their own millennialist interpretations of history within right-shifting Israeli and U.S. political movements, these leaders promoted an apocalyptic vision of a foul world in which conspiring global forces both within the U.S. and internationally plotted against Israel and Bible-believers. In such a world, concerns about justice, equity, diplomacy, and reconciliation between peoples (especially between Christians and Muslims) were downplayed. Instead, they promoted their dualistic vision of the world, shaped by narratives of persecution and adversarial, polarizing political engagements and linked to American neo-conservatism.

Adopting a literalist approach to scripture and based on the notion that biblical references pertain to contemporary and impending events, authors like Hal Lindsey and Tim LaHaye and ministers like Jerry Falwell, Pat Robertson, and John Hagee called on Christians to support Israel univocally, to encourage Jews from around the world to “return” to Israel, and to fund Israel's expansion to the Jordan River and beyond. Some even to pray for the rebuilding of the temple in Jerusalem and the re-institution of sacrifices there, so that the Antichrist could come to desecrate it and therein help bring about Jesus' return. Christian Zionists have poured hundreds of millions of dollars into support for such projects—including support of Israeli settlements in the Occupied Territories—ironically with the goal of helping to bring about the battle of Armageddon in which most Jewish people would be killed except for a remnant that Christ saves at his return.

While there are many faithful ways to support Israel and the Palestinians, the heretical belief that Jews must return to and control Greater Israel in order to inaugurate Jesus' return is not such a way. Based on flagrantly bad biblical exegesis and dangerously corrupt theology, Christian Zionism denies the complexity of a land in which the three Abrahamic faiths intersect, ignores the plight of hundreds of thousands of persons of all three faiths, and ultimately treats Jews as instruments that God would use and then, for the most part, discard. Along the way, it gives witness to a heartless and capricious God, rather than the Christian God of love and justice who “did not send His Son into the world to condemn the world, but in order that the world might be saved through him” (John 3:17).

American Christians who are concerned about the Holy Land must speak out against this heresy no matter where we find it, especially if found in our own theologies. When Christians insist that Jews must control Greater Israel in order to inaugurate Jesus return, we must remind them that the gospel proclaims a God whose graceful actions precede and shape our response rather than a God who is constrained to respond to human actions (Romans 3–4). When Christians treat Jews (or anyone else) as a means towards achieving our own goals, we must remind them that Christians are called to love our neighbors as ourselves, not as instruments for our benefit (Mark 12:31). And when Christians claim that salvation depends on the control of a particular place by a particular people, we must remind them that Israel-Palestine, like all lands, do not belong to any single group of people, for “[t]he earth is the Lord's and all that is in it” (Ps 24:1).²⁸

To apply the values described above, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can promote human rights in the Middle East and work with other organizations that promote them. Furthermore, merely restating our values and affirming the importance of human rights is not enough in situations so filled with suffering. We suggest, therefore, that the church operationalize the values it holds by working in partnership with organizations that share our values and applying them in the situations that deny the human dignity of people involved with the conflict. Doing so is part of our life of faith, and engaging in this way is an appropriate response to the needs faced, especially by the most vulnerable in the conflict.

Acting on the basis of our Christian values and in alignment with the concerns of human rights, we will work for justice and hope that such work can shape viable political processes and solutions. Previous preoccupation with particular political arrangements, we see now, has delayed the betterment of peoples' lives—Israeli as well as Palestinian—as the daily routines of the occupation degraded their human worth and dignity.

The church has spoken clearly on various issues that support the operationalization of values to the Israel-Palestinian conflict, such as in Peacemaking: The Believers' Calling (1980). It should continue to promote human rights in the Middle East and to work with those organizations that promote them, no matter whether those organizations are Israeli or Palestinian, Jewish or Christian or Muslim, centered in the Holy Lands or beyond.

2. Human Rights

The Universal Declaration of Human Rights [UDHR], adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in 1948, asserts that “recognition of the inherent dignity and of the equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice, and peace in the world.” The U. N. General Assembly calls upon “every individual and every organ of society” to promote respect for the rights enumerated in the Universal Declaration's thirty articles.²⁹

Living its values, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has answered this call by faithfully proclaiming the inherent dignity of all people and affirming that equal human rights are essential to achieve just and lasting peace. The 221st General Assembly (2014) called for the establishment and protection of equal rights for all people in Israel-Palestine. The assembly action enumerates key areas where rights have been routinely denied to Palestinians, including the right to equal protection under the law, the right to freedom of movement and worship, the right to protection of property, and the right to unhindered opportunity for economic development. The rights of children are lifted up for special care.³⁰

All Israelis and Palestinians are entitled to full and equal human rights. The UDHR makes clear that “Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms” which it sets forth, “without distinction of any kind,” and expressly states that “no distinction shall be made on the basis of the political, jurisdictional or international status of the country or territory to which a person belongs, whether it be independent, trust, non-self-governing or under any other limitation of sovereignty.” The declaration makes no exceptions or exemptions for reasons of national security, regional stability, or geopolitical advantage.

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights, adopted by the United Nations in 1966 and submitted to member states for ratification, transformed the provisions of the UDHR into binding international law.³¹ Both treaties set forth in their first articles a collective right to self-determination, by virtue of which a people have the right to “freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development.”³² The emphasis on the right to self-determination in 1966 reflected the colonial past of newly independent member states, and their lived experience that human dignity and fundamental freedoms cannot flourish unless a people have the right to choose the sovereignty under which they shall live.³³

Many other aspects of international law have a central role in the analysis and recommendations of this report. Annex A summarizes some salient points.

B. Facts on the Ground

All persons need to become better educated about the complexities of history, land, economics, and politics of the situation in Palestine, because disagreements about the facts on the ground and ignorance of those facts are used to promote political ends that cause or exacerbate suffering. This section offers a primer on these topics, with references for further study. The complexities neither relieve us from the responsibilities of engaging in Israel-Palestine nor justify delaying the pursuit of our responsibilities. Part 1 of this section provides basic information about how the parts the Israeli-Palestinian territory differ in their legal and practical status. Part 2 describes what has happened since the Oslo Accords in 1993, particularly concerning the “permanent status issues” identified at Oslo.

1. The Categories of Territories

The region commonly known as Israel-Palestine comprises several subterritories over which the State of Israel, the Palestine Authority, and Hamas have claims (often competing) and within which the State of Israel controls most of the functions of a state:

State of Israel: The pre-1967 territory of the State of Israel has borders recognized internationally and by the Palestinian Authority. Israel itself, however, has not stated its official borders, and on maps issued by the government (Ministry of Tourism) the implied borders have expanded over the years, now including almost all of the West Bank, in Area C, discussed below.

Jerusalem: West Jerusalem was internationally recognized before 1967 as being under Israel’s control but accessible by all religious groups. East Jerusalem, east of the Green Line established after the 1948 War, was under Jordanian control before 1967 and accessible by all religious groups. After the 1967 War, the Israeli government claimed all Jerusalem as part of the State of Israel and as its capitol, but they did not give its non-Jewish residents citizenship or national voting rights. Israel has established de facto control of all of Jerusalem, extending its border eastward into the West Bank area.³⁴ Palestinians, who see East Jerusalem as the capitol of their future state, have not recognized this. According to international law, East Jerusalem is part of the West Bank, but this report often discusses it separately because it has been separated from the West Bank de facto and receives different treatment under the Israeli occupation. Approximately 300,000 Israelis currently live in settlements in East Jerusalem.³⁵

West Bank: The West Bank, which is comprised of territory west of the Jordan River and encompassed by the Green Line as established in 1949, was conquered by Israel in the 1967 War. Part of the West Bank has been annexed by Israel as its own land; the Interim Agreements at 1993 Oslo conference divided the West Bank into three areas, A, B, and C. This division was originally intended to last only five years or less, until a Palestinian Authority could take control of the whole West Bank.³⁶ In fact, the division has become more entrenched.

Areas A and B consist of a number of noncontiguous pieces of land scattered throughout the West Bank and containing major Palestinian cities such as Ramallah, Jericho, and Hebron, as well as numerous villages. The “Interim Agreements” from Oslo granted control of civil and security functions in Area A to the Palestinian Authority. In Area B, the Palestinian Authority was to control civil functions and to share the security functions with the government of Israel. Area A consists of approximately 18 percent of the total land within the West Bank (excluding East Jerusalem), and Area B consists of another 22 percent, much of it rural. There are no Israeli settlements in Areas A or B. Israeli citizens are forbidden from travelling in Area A, and it is very difficult for Palestinians to travel from one section of Area A to another. Despite the nominal functions of the Palestinian Authority in Areas A and B, the Israeli government decides and often changes its decision about how much authority the Palestinians actually have. The Israeli Army comes into Areas A and B when it decides to arrest people or destroy wells and other infrastructure.

Area C is about 60 percent of the West Bank and is totally controlled by Israel. The Oslo Accord intended for Area C to be gradually transferred to Palestinian control. It is a contiguous area and now includes some roads and infrastructure accessible only to Jewish Israeli citizens. Today, more than 350,000 Jewish settlers live in about 250 settlements and outposts in Area C, and these communities continue to grow. Maps from the Israeli Ministry of Tourism show no distinction or line between Area C and the internationally recognized of Israel.³⁷

Gaza: The Gaza Strip, situated along the coast of the Mediterranean Sea just north of Egypt, is roughly five miles wide and twenty-five miles long and it is separated from the West Bank by the territory of Israel. It was occupied by Israel in 1967, following which more than a dozen Jewish settlements were established. In 2005 the Israeli government unilaterally closed these settlements and evacuated its troops. Israel has continued to make frequent military incursions into Gaza for various reasons.³⁸ Israel also controls Gaza's airspace, electromagnetic sphere, population registry, movement to the West Bank as well as all movement of persons and import/exports for three of Gaza's borders (Egypt controls the other), which in many ways continues the occupation. When the Hamas party took over in Gaza after winning the Palestinian elections—with majorities in both Gaza and the West Bank—Israel tightened its border controls and cut off most of Gaza's fiscal revenue. Since 2007 Israel has also implemented a siege against Gaza, causing lack of food security among much of the population, high unemployment rates, limited possibilities for earning a living in agriculture, fishing, and industry, and harm to the entire fabric of life.

The sequence of historical maps in Figure 1 shows how the Palestinians have lost territory, as the area under Israeli government control has expanded since 1946.

To summarize the current pattern of political authority, we can identify the key functions of a state and then ask which entities do those functions now.

Key functions of a state include:

- Maintaining public order by exercising a monopoly on the legitimate use of force—e.g., military and police.³⁹
- Controlling the borders and trade across them.
- Controlling the rights to use land, water, and minerals.⁴⁰
- Regulating the establishment, legitimacy, and function of organizations, including religious, business, and political parties.⁴¹
- Developing and enforcing monetary and banking policy (e.g., defining legal tender, controlling the supply of money (and credit), setting rules for foreign exchange transactions, controlling the issue of bank charters and regulating the chartered banks).

Israeli Land and Israeli occupied land indicates areas under control of the State of Israel; some Palestinians own land there. The focus is on land; Egypt and Jordan have controlled Palestinian land prior to 1967; they sought unsuccessfully to regain that land in 1973, when Israel also confirmed its taking the Golan Heights from Syria. The Palestinian Land shown in the 2011 panel reflects the impact of the settlements, the wall, checkpoints and Israeli roads, plus the absorption of Area C by Israel (as can be confirmed by tourist maps from the Israeli Government Tourist Bureau).

Table 1 shows that, with the partial exception of Gaza, the Israeli government is the de facto state authority in almost all respects throughout the Israeli-Palestine territory. In other words, there is effectively almost a one-state situation now, although no one considers this status quo as a solution. Figure 1 shows how this is reflected on the ground. Box 2 discusses some common misperceptions about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Box 2: Common Misperceptions About the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict

Many misconceptions distort the discussions of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Some examples include:

Palestine before 1948 was a land without a people for a people without a land.

Palestine was a predominantly Arab and Islamic country by the end of the seventh century, and in 1516, it became a province of the Ottoman Empire. Following the steady arrival of Jewish colonists after 1882, by 1946 around 600,000 Jews were living in Palestine, with over 1,300,000 Muslims and Christians.⁴²

“God promised the Land of Israel to the Jewish people.”

The Israel envisioned in the Old Testament and modern Israel are not the same. They are shaped by different political systems, comprised of different people, contain different religious groups, have different histories, and play different roles in their larger geopolitical contexts. As Walter Brueggemann writes, “It is simply not credible to make any direct appeal from the ancient promises of land to the state of Israel. That is so for two reasons. First, much has happened between text and contemporary political practice that resists such innocent simplicity. Second, because the state of Israel, perhaps of necessity, has opted to be a military power engaged in power politics among with the other nation-states of the world, it cannot at the same time appeal to an old faith tradition.”⁴³

“There has to be a Jewish state, where Jews can find refuge.”

Israel’s declaration of independence states that the country ‘will ensure complete equality of social and political rights to all its inhabitants irrespective of religion, race or sex; it will guarantee freedom of religion, conscience, language, education and culture, it will safeguard the Holy places of all religions, and it will be faithful to the principles of the charter of the United Nations.’ Insuring political and social rights for all religions includes the Jews and provides them refuge; it does not require that Jews become a privileged caste.

“Israel is the only democracy in the Middle East.”

Democracies exist along a continuum defined by questions about who is allowed to vote, the freedom and choice that persons have in voting, the range of persons who can hold office, the power of citizens to shape governance, and the basic governmental structures and documents that ensure such matters. Nor does the existence of a democracy guarantee rights for all citizens. Israel, for instance, may be a democracy but it lacks a formal constitution, and Palestinian citizens in Israel are restricted from owning land and from many government benefits. Measures enacted since 2009 undermine the ability of Arab citizens of Israel and their parliamentary representatives to participate in the political life of the country; they criminalize political expression or acts that question the alleged Jewish or Zionist nature of the state. Palestinian residents of Jerusalem, West Bank, Gaza—ruled to varying degrees by Israel—have no voting rights in Israel. Palestinians in the West Bank (except in East Jerusalem) and Gaza vote in competitive multiparty elections, although the U.S., Israel and the PA have kept Hamas, the winner of the only Palestinian-wide election, from taking power except in Gaza. Other Middle East countries—Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey—also have democracies with contested elections that effect on policy outcomes; like Israel, their democracies also have limits.

“All the Arabs want to throw the Jews into the sea.”

The Arab Peace Initiative, first introduced at the Beirut summit in 2002 by Crown Prince Abdullah of Saudi Arabia, proposed ending the Arab-Israeli conflict (i.e., normalizing relationships between Israel and all Arab states in the region) in exchange for a complete Israeli withdrawal from East Jerusalem and the occupied territories and a “just settlement” of the Palestinian refugee crisis based on UN Resolution 194. The initiative has been re-adopted by the Arab League on several occasions. Although a number of Israeli officials responded positively to the initiative, it was described as a “non-starter” and rejected by the Israeli government. The Palestinian Authority supported the plan, and Mahmoud Abbas asked President Barak Obama to adopt it as part of his Middle East policy. The leadership of Hamas was divided, with most factions rejecting the plan.

“All the Israeli Jews want to drive the Palestinians out of the land between the Jordan River and the Sea.”

Although a minority of Jews have expressed this goal or acted to realize it, polls show that most Israeli Jews would like to find a way to live in peace with the Palestinians and have expressed willingness to make compromises to achieve that. Some Israeli individuals and organizations—including some of those met by the study team—actively advocate for the rights and better treatment of Palestinians.

“Islamic extremism is driving Christians out of the Holy Land.”

Palestinian Christians have lived continuously in the Holy Land since the first century AD. Today there are thirteen locally developed Christian denominations in Jerusalem, as well as churches of European and American origin. Many Christians were driven from Palestine as Israel expanded after the wars of 1948 and 1967, and they continue to emigrate in increasing numbers. Today the Christian population of the occupied territories has shrunk to 60,000. Bethlehem, the birthplace of Jesus and home to the Church of the Nativity, is nearly enclosed by the separation wall and a system of barriers—dirt mounds, roadblocks, gates and checkpoints. Most of the Christian-owned land in Bethlehem and the adjacent villages has been confiscated for Israeli settlement expansion. According to Haaretz “most Christians cite Israeli occupation as the prime cause of emigration and the decline of their community.”⁴⁴ Israeli authorities often deny Christian clergy, nuns, and religious workers the permits necessary for residency, work, and access to holy sites in Jerusalem and the West Bank.⁴⁵ Israeli settler groups and extremists have waged an intensifying campaign of “price tag” attacks against churches as well as mosques; these acts of vandalism aim to exact a price for actions perceived to obstruct the settlement enterprise. Palestinian Christians with West Bank IDs do not have freedom of worship; they have difficulty getting permits to worship in Jerusalem at Easter and other holidays.

2. Developments since the Oslo Accords

The Oslo Accords of 1993 advocated a two-state solution to the conflict in the territory of Israel-Palestine. United Nations Security Council Resolution 242 of 1967 and its land-for-peace approach were guiding understandings for the Oslo Accords, which both Israel and the PLO signed. The study team used these understandings as a gauge for assessing what has happened to the feasibility of a two-state solution since Oslo.

The Oslo Accords identified seven key problems—“permanent status issues”—that a peace settlement would need to address: (a) Jerusalem, (b) refugees, (c) settlements, (d) security, (e) borders, (f) relations and cooperation with neighboring countries and (g) other issues of common interest.⁴⁶ This report does not discuss Item 6, relations with neighboring countries. Among the “other issues of common interest,” the report focuses on those of water and economic development in Palestine. Gaza is also an issue of common interest, although the study team was not allowed to visit there and gather first-hand information.

a. Jerusalem

Compared with 1993, Jerusalem is farther than ever from being a shared capital of two states, as envisioned at Oslo. After 1967 Israel unilaterally applied its law in East Jerusalem and annexed it, initially de facto and later officially.⁴⁷ Israel took away the Palestinian citizenship of those living in East Jerusalem and has made it difficult for them to get Israeli citizenship even if they apply for it.⁴⁸ They have residency IDs, but these are conditional on making Jerusalem the center of their life and not leaving the area for too long. Israeli authorities check their homes, even at night sometimes, and use various pretexts to evict the residents and take over or destroy their homes and businesses. Residents need permits to make improvements or substantial repairs to their homes, but these are rarely granted; residents may lose their homes for making unlicensed repairs. Seizing of the property by Jewish settlers is also a problem. Israeli settlers receive preferential treatment and usually subsidies for building in East Jerusalem. Between 1967—the start of the Israeli military occupation of the West Bank—and the end of 2014, 14,481 Palestinians have lost Jerusalem residency.⁴⁹ Between 2004 and 2015, 2,128 people, including 1,150 minors, were left homeless due to home demolitions in Jerusalem by Israeli authorities.⁵⁰

Despite being stripped of their citizenship, the East Jerusalem residents pay full Israeli taxes to a regime that neglects to provide adequate infrastructure and services. Israel revoked the social benefits and health insurance of these families. They cannot vote in Israeli national elections, where decisions about Jerusalem are made. The government of Israel dominates the city ever more tightly through restrictions that deter Palestinians from living in Jerusalem or using it as an economic hub with connections to the rest of the West Bank and Gaza. Israel maintains this control through a range of measures, including checkpoints, a permit system, residency restrictions for Palestinians, and the growth of surrounding settlements. The separation barrier and Israeli military checkpoints deny Palestinians freedom of movement between the West Bank and Jerusalem. Families are often separated when one parent has status for residency with the Israeli authorities and the other does not.

b. Refugees

Palestinian refugees—about 8 million today—are no closer than in 1993 to being able to exercise their rights of return and compensation, as specified in international law.⁵¹ Table 2 summarizes the statistics of a situation, which becomes more complex with each generation. Most refugees, including descendants, date from the time of the 1948 war. More than five million Palestinian refugees are registered with the United Nations Relief and Works Agency (UNRWA). Most of them currently reside in Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, Gaza and the West Bank, including East Jerusalem.⁵² Palestinian refugees from the 1967 War are not registered with UNRWA. Some Palestinians were internally displaced around 1948 within what is now Israel and made Israeli citizens, but Israeli law has not allowed them to return to their homes and lands. Other Palestinians, some of whom were already refugees, have been internally displaced within the occupied Palestinian territory since 1967.⁵³

The parties involved have never reached agreement on any of the proposals for resolving the plight of Palestinian refugees, including compensation, repatriation to homes and lands in what is now Israel, and resettlement to third countries. All these options have been broached, but none has been adopted. Complicating the situation, the two United Nations agencies that support Palestinian refugees are overwhelmed and underfunded.⁵⁴ Any durable peace agreement is likely to remain elusive as long as the historic claims and contemporary realities of Palestinian refugees remain unaddressed.

c. Settlements

Since 1967, Israelis have created numerous settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territories (OPT—the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and Gaza) with 547,000 settlers as of the end of 2013.⁵⁵ Israeli settlements are illegal under international humanitarian law (the Fourth Geneva Convention, Article 49), which prohibits occupying powers from colonizing, exploiting natural resources, or building infrastructure for their own use. There is a good reason for this prohibition, as the settlements endanger the lives of civilian populations, both the occupied and those settling in occupied territory. Many observers, including the study team and some Israeli officials, see the settlements as precluding the creation of a viable Palestinian state in what are now the OPT. The locations of the settlements and their infrastructure—highways, checkpoints, and the separation wall—thwart travel between Palestinian population centers in different parcels of Area A, described above.

For instance, the Tent of Nations farm, owned by a Christian Palestinian family whose deed to the hilltop tract of land goes back more than a century, has been surrounded by five settlements. It has been fighting in the courts for twelve years against the efforts of the Israeli settlers and military to drive them off their land. In 2014, the Israeli military destroyed about 1,500 their fruit trees, in violation of an Israeli court order.⁵⁶

The Palestinian resentment of the settlements' encroachment, appropriation of the local resources, attacks on the native population, and special status in the Israeli legal system has prompted acts of resistance and violence that, in turn, are used to justify many harsh aspects of the security regime imposed by the occupying Israeli military. The Israeli military presence to protect the settlements has, in turn, caused significant human suffering and insecurity for the Palestinians in the OPT.

d. Security

Between January 2014 and August 2015, ninety Israelis were killed by Palestinian actions. In that time, Israeli forces killed 2,334 Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza. While the study team was in Israel-Palestine, 16–25 August of 2015, violence continued:

- Clashes with Israeli forces in the West Bank injured fifty-four Palestinians, including eight children and two women.
- Israeli settlers made five attacks, including one that stoned and injured a six-year old Palestinian girl.

—Four incidents of stone throwing by Palestinians at Israeli-licensed cars in the West Bank injured six Israeli settlers, including a two-year old child.

—Israeli authorities demolished forty-two Palestinian-owned structures in Area C and East Jerusalem for lack of Israeli-issued building permits, leaving fifty-four persons displaced, including thirty-three children.

—In Gaza, two children were injured when they encountered unexploded ordnance from Israeli missiles.⁵⁷

Israeli control and security measures have intensified since 1993, at the expense of Palestinian security. The Israeli government regulates the movement of goods and people both within the Occupied Territories and between them and Israel. The Israeli separation barrier, checkpoints, permit system, detention without trial, military courts, and prisons seriously jeopardize the potential for creating a second viable state alongside Israel. Palestinians live under several legal systems, including: Israeli military law in Area C; Israeli military and Palestinian Authority (PA) law in Area B; and PA law in Area A. Even in area A, nonetheless, Israeli military claims the authority to give orders and makes raids and arrests. Palestinians in Areas B and C and in East Jerusalem face the threat of home demolitions for building without permits, as well as detention without trial by Israeli military forces. Most of this happens near the settlements, which are the epicenter for human rights abuses. Since 1967, the Israeli military has arrested more than 800,000 Palestinians, about 20 percent of the population, with devastating effects on the fabric of family life.⁵⁸ The military courts routinely flout international human rights law, neglecting to explain rights or state charges in a detainee's own language, dispensing with any presumption of innocence, turning a blind eye to torture (such as forced feeding), and violating the prohibition on unlimited detention. These tactics lead to conviction rates around 99 percent, mostly by coerced confessions.⁵⁹ Israeli settlers, living illegally by international law in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, do not face the same impediments to movement as Palestinians. They live under Israeli civil law, not military rule, and thus are not subject to military detentions.

Israelis also suffer from lack of security, due to threats and activities by Palestinian groups and individuals, including dozens of suicide attacks with bombs on buses and in markets in the second intifada and recently attacks with knives. Hamas has launched more than 8,000 rockets from Gaza into Israel since 2005, resulting in dozens of Israelis killed and perhaps thousands injured. Many Israelis living near Gaza have reported symptoms of PTSD.

In sum, neither side is totally secure, although the Palestinians suffer more from the lack of security.

e. Borders

The effective borders between Palestinian and Israeli areas are largely unofficial and incompatible with a two-state solution. Israel built 85 percent of the separation wall on the Palestinian side of the Green Line, the internationally recognized border that defined the extent of Israel and those areas controlled by Jordan (the West Bank and East Jerusalem) and Egypt (Gaza) after the 1948 War.⁶⁰ In the Six-day War of 1967, Israel invaded and occupied the West Bank, Gaza, and the Golan Heights. Subsequently, UN resolution 242 of 1967 stipulated that Israel has to withdraw from the lands it occupied in the 1967 war; Resolution 338 reaffirmed this in 1973. Nonetheless, land seizure, settlement expansion, building the separation wall, restrictions on land use by Palestinians, and the demarcation of land into three areas in the West Bank continues, decimating the territory that Palestinians can use. Land designated by Oslo to comprise a Palestinian state (i.e., all of the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and Gaza) is not available now, due to Israeli building and control. Most observers believe that a viable Palestinian state would need to have mostly contiguous territory and reach to Jordan, with control of that border. Neither the facts-on-the-ground found by the study team nor the statements of top Israeli officials give any reason to believe that this reality of land use will become fairer for Palestinians in the foreseeable future.

The Israeli-controlled separation barrier and the many Israeli military checkpoints within the West Bank inhibit or wholly prevent Palestinians from moving between work and home, visiting friends and family, traveling between the various areas controlled by the Palestinian Authority, and visiting East Jerusalem and the holy sites of the Old City. While Palestinians can move within Gaza, they are almost entirely trapped there. And East Jerusalem residents who are Palestinian face forced eviction by settler seizure of land and property due to insecure residency status.⁶¹

Besides the problem of the border's location, the Israeli authorities' harsh treatment of Palestinians at checkpoints on the border, and within the OPT, worsens living conditions and exacerbates the conflict. Long waiting times and unpredictable closures not only impair the chances for Palestinians to have gainful employment, they also disrupt the Palestinians' access to education, health care, and other social services. An average of 10 percent of pregnant Palestinian women were delayed at checkpoints every year from 2000 to 2007, while travelling to give birth in hospital. These delays resulted in sixty-nine births at the checkpoints, leading to thirty-five infant and five maternal deaths.⁶²

As Americans witness the debates on the immigration issue in the United States, we should remember that the Palestinians are not immigrants. They and their ancestors have lived on that land for centuries and generations, except when Israeli measures forced them to move. Since the 1967 war and change of the borders, however, the Israeli authorities have reduced and sometimes eliminated Palestinians' legal status, even though they did not move across any border, illegally or otherwise.

On the other hand, priority status and financial incentives have gone to Israeli settlers, who are illegal immigrants according to international law.

f. Water

Israel controls almost all water resources, above and below ground, and allocates it to favor its own citizens and to the detriment of Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza. The separation barrier acts as a “water wall,” which Israel moved east of the Green Line to seize important water sources in the West Bank, where Israel now controls 85 percent of aquifers.⁶³ The significant disparity in water access and allocation between Palestinians and Israelis has corresponding impact on public health and economic development. As the responsible power under the Fourth Geneva Conventions of 1949,⁶⁴ the Israeli military is supposed to ensure water access for all people under its control. Almost all Israeli settlers have uninterrupted access to water, which is used for swimming pools and landscaping, as well as for human consumption. Palestinians have 637 communities in the West Bank, and 281 are not served at all with water. Of the 356 served, 60 percent are only mostly served and 40 percent partly served. Palestinian populations, often residing near the settlements, typically get water only a few hours a week at unpredictable times. Palestinians are usually denied permission to drill wells or improve the ones they have (which is necessary as the water table recedes), in order to reserve the groundwater for Israelis. Most Palestinian homes in the West Bank have several tanks on the roof to store water, filling them when water is turned on and hoping it lasts. When the IDF (Israeli Defense Force) raids a village or refugee camp, the first shots are typically at the rooftop water tanks—easy targets—so the Palestinians will worry about how to have water the rest of the week instead of organizing resistance to the invasion. In contrast, the study team could see from the road that homes in most Israeli settlements do not have the rooftop water tanks; they do not need them.

As of March 2014, water consumption in the West Bank and Israel differed dramatically. The World Health Organization recommends at least 100 liters of water per person per day.⁶⁵ In the West Bank, Palestinian average consumption was 73 liters per person per day (domestic, urban, industrial) whereas in Israel consumption was 183 liters per person per day. As of August 2014, nearly 1.2 million Palestinians in Gaza had no running water,⁶⁶ and average daily per capita water consumption there was between 70–90 liters, much of which was essentially recycled sewage because Israeli wells around the periphery of Gaza had lowered the water table so far. Establishing a viable Palestinian state and economy will require dividing water rights equitably, allowing sufficient water for Palestinians’ daily needs and economic development, including agricultural production. Even in the current allocation of territorial authority, fairness requires much more equitable sharing of water resources.

g. Palestine Economic Development

Economic development for Palestinians is a major topic of common interest as part of the Oslo process. Allowing people to develop their economic potential and pursue economic well-being—“the pursuit of happiness” in our American Declaration of Independence—is an important human right. Palestinians under Israeli occupation cannot fully exercise it. Israel is a regional economic power and its citizens, primarily the Jewish ones, enjoy the benefits of a global economy. Palestinians are much poorer, and Israeli policies contribute substantially to making them that way. The economic opportunities and public services that the GOI (government of Israel) provides to people under its control vary widely. The government provides generous public and social services to Jewish Israelis, especially those settling in the occupied Palestinian territories. Within Israel, non-Jewish citizens get some services and opportunities, but fewer than their Jewish compatriots.⁶⁷ Also, incomes and standards of living in the occupied territories are much lower than in Israel.⁶⁸ Palestinians living in the occupied territories get essentially no services from the occupying government, even though international law requires that the occupying power provide such services. The Israeli government also actively blocks the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza from many economic opportunities, as elaborated below. The Palestinian Authority (PA), Hamas in Gaza, and the UN provide some social services to Palestinians with funds from taxes and donors, although the Israeli government periodically cuts off their access to these funds.

Allowing and helping the Palestinian economy to develop in the West Bank and Gaza was part of the Oslo understanding. Employment and economic progress would give Palestinians reasons to hope and work for peaceful coexistence with Israel. The Oslo peace process and the establishment of the PA initially ushered in rapid growth, driven by some return of the Palestinian diaspora and large inflows of public and private capital. Yet those early hopes did not last:

Economic conditions in the West Bank and Gaza ... deteriorated in the early 1990s. Real per capita GDP for the West Bank and Gaza Strip (WBGS) declined 36.1% between 1992 and 1996 owing to the combined effect of falling aggregate incomes and robust population growth. The downturn in economic activity was due to extensive corruption in the newly governing Palestinian Authority, and to Israeli closure policies in response to security incidents in Israel, which disrupted previously established labor and commodity market relationships. The most serious effect was the emergence of chronic unemployment. Average unemployment rates in the 1980s were generally under 5%; by the mid-1990s this level had risen to over 20%. After 1997, Israel’s use of comprehensive closures decreased and new policies were implemented. In October 1999, Israel permitted the opening of a safe passage between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip in accordance with the 1995 Interim Agreement. These changes in the conduct of economic activity fueled a moderate economic recovery in 1998–99.⁶⁹

The outbreak of the second Intifada in 2000 brought increased violence and uncertainty and the intensification by Israel of policies that impeded the movement of people and goods and fragmented the Palestinian territories into small enclaves lacking economic cohesion. In the ensuing recession, GDP contracted by an average of 9 percent per annum in 2000–2002.

Subsequent Palestinian reforms, accompanied by large inflows of donor assistance and some easing of movement restrictions, allowed growth to resume between 2007 and 2011. Extraordinary levels of donor budget support will not likely continue, so sustaining growth will require further Palestinian reforms and the reversal of Israeli occupation policies that hinder growth.

Israeli occupation, control over natural resources, and restrictions on the movement of labor, imports, and exports has severely constrained Palestinians' chances for economic development. In Gaza, the lack of inputs and lack of access to markets have resulted in a virtual shut-down of the private sector, which, in turn, has led to high levels of unemployment, underemployment, and poverty.⁷⁰ Economic opportunity for Palestinians in the West Bank is also seriously constrained by Israeli policies, especially in Area C and East Jerusalem. This feeds the more radical wing of Palestinian politics.

Every morning, hours before dawn, around 30,000 Palestinian laborers make their way from the occupied West Bank, where they live, and enter Israel to try to get to their jobs. These workers, desperate to keep their jobs, arrive at the checkpoints hours early, sleeping on concrete on the Palestinian side of the checkpoint so that they make it through in time. Workers say they work in Israel for a variety of reasons, but most point to a lack of opportunity, high unemployment, and low wages in the occupied West Bank.⁷¹ West Bank Palestinian workers in Israel make an average of around $65 a day, more than double the average daily wage in the West Bank. Given the high demand for work permits, which are only granted to a fraction of applicants, workers have no job security, creating dangerously helpless situations for thousands. With the onslaught of recent violence, things have only gotten worse for the Palestinians trying to make a living for their families.⁷²

Israeli policies that seriously hinder Palestinian economic development include restrictions on freedom of movement, unequal and insufficient access to water, denial of permission for Palestinians to build on or improve their property, toleration of settler violence against Palestinians and their property (destroying houses and orchards⁷³), failure to provide public services for the occupied population, restriction of electronic communications, and subsidies and encouragement for Israeli settlements to exploit resources east of the Green Line in Jerusalem and the West Bank. Such practices violate international law, which prohibit the occupying power from exploiting the resources of the occupied territory and require the occupying power to provide public services and protection to the local population.⁷⁴

World Bank reports show evidence that alleviating today's restrictions on Palestinian activity and production in Area C would add about USD 3.4 billion to Palestinian GDP—or 35 percent of its 2011 GDP. See Annex B. About two-thirds of this would be direct benefits, mostly through opportunities for agricultural expansion and Dead Sea minerals exploitation⁷⁵, plus some from tourism, construction, telecommunications, mining, and quarrying. The other third would be indirect benefits from the multiplier effects of the potential growth in the leading sectors.⁷⁶ Improving the capacity for Palestinian economic growth in Area C would not solve all the Palestinian economic problems. But without the ability to conduct purposeful economic activity in Area C, the economic space of the West Bank will remain crowded and stunted and its inhabitants' daily interactions with the State of Israel will be extraordinarily inconvenient, expensive, and frustrating. Already the constraints make it impossible to sustain even the current standards of living without large donor inflows, which also have become unsustainable.

Similarly, a 2015 report from the International Labor Office concluded:

The continuing occupation fundamentally affects the rights and well-being of Palestinian women and men, including through confiscation of land, forced displacement, a myriad of [sic] unpredictable and opaque access and movement restrictions and exposure to violence by Israeli security forces and settlers. Measures taken by the Israeli authorities in the Occupied Palestinian Territory have created separate and different realities that favour Israeli citizens over Palestinians, a situation that contradicts the principle of equality and non-discrimination.⁷⁷

h. Gaza

Understanding the Israel-Palestine situation requires considering the part in Gaza. The Gaza strip, 25 miles long and between 4 and 8 miles wide—141 square miles—is now home to more than 1.8 million Palestinians. More than two-thirds of its inhabitants are refugees, including descendants from the wars of 1948 and 1967. Most live in eight refugee camps that surround Gaza's cities and towns. Gaza's population has tripled in the past thirty years; most are under age 18.

Although Gaza has been relatively isolated from the Arab world for the last fifty years, it lies in the heart of the Middle East and has a long history. Throughout antiquity Gaza was a prosperous Mediterranean port, strategically located at the intersection of trading routes linking Egypt, Arabia, and the eastern Mediterranean.⁷⁸ Religiously, Gaza is mostly Muslim today and less secular than the West Bank, with its traditional culture influenced by the proximity to Egypt. Approximately 1,200 Palestinian Christians live in Gaza today. Most are Greek Orthodox, while some are Roman Catholic.⁷⁹

Gaza has been under Israeli military control since the Six-day War in 1967. Although the Israeli army withdrew from Gaza in 2005, along with several thousand Israeli settlers, the Israeli government still controls access to Gaza by land and sea and controls its airspace and airwaves. Israel controls the population registry and issuance of identification cards to Palestinians in Gaza.⁸⁰ Israel controls almost all of Gaza's land border, and its navy blockades the side facing the Mediterranean Sea. Egypt controls the short land border on the southwest. The concrete walls and wire fences, which the Israelis built on Gaza's land, puts a third of its limited good farmland out of use. There are only two land crossing points: Most humanitarian supplies enter through the Erez crossing, controlled by Israel. Mostly pedestrians use the Rafah crossing, under Egyptian control.

Gaza's infrastructure has been crippled by repeated air strikes, a chronic shortage of fuel, and restrictions on the import of supplies, equipment, and spare parts. Its electrical crisis dates back to June 2006 when its power plant was targeted by an Israeli missile. Subsequent airstrikes have destroyed fuel storage tanks. Gaza's power plant currently operates at less than half capacity. Although Gaza also purchases electricity from Israel and Egypt, it still experiences rolling blackouts of 12–16 hours per day, and there is insufficient fuel to operate water pumps, wells and sewage treatment facilities. Israel has sunk many wells around the border of Gaza, minimizing the amount of fresh groundwater that can reach the population there. Most Gaza households receive piped water for eight hours or less only once every two to four days. More than 90 percent of Gaza's water supply is unsuitable for drinking.⁸¹

Following Israel's September 2005 withdrawal, the Palestinian Authority assumed administrative authority in the Gaza strip. In Parliamentary elections in January 2006, Hamas won a plurality of the total vote and a majority of seats. Hamas was popular in Gaza because it was perceived as being less corrupt than the Palestinian Authority and because of the health and social services it provided, including funding of schools, orphanages, clinics, and hospitals.⁸² When Hamas assumed power in February 2006, however, Israel, the United States, and the European Union refused to recognize its right to govern, and direct aid to the Palestinian government was cut off. After six months of intermittent fighting, Hamas wrested control of Gaza from Fatah in June 2007. Several internationally brokered attempts to create a unity government, combining Hamas with the Palestinian Authority (Fatah) in the West Bank, have failed. Hamas remains the sole government within Gaza.

Since then Gaza has been subject to a blockade by Israel. To mitigate the effect of the blockade, more than 1,500 tunnels were dug between Gaza and Egypt, making possible a "tunnel economy" that peaked between 2007 and 2013 and averted a total collapse of the Palestinian economy. A wide range of goods restricted by Israel were imported through the tunnels, including fuel, construction materials, agricultural tools, seeds, pesticides, and spare parts, for nonmilitary machinery as well as for weaponry. Most of the tunnels to Egypt were closed by mid 2013.⁸³ During its 2014 incursion, the Israeli military sealed off the remaining tunnels to Egypt, plus a few to Israel, purportedly dug to enable assault teams to attack Israeli border posts.⁸⁴

Claiming unprovoked rocket attacks on Israel by Hamas and other militant groups, Israel has launched three attacks on Gaza between 2008 and 2014 (see Box 3). Today, nearly two years after Israel's last Gaza incursion, 100,000 Palestinians are still homeless, and 80 percent of its population depends on international aid. Much of the rubble from bombed homes and buildings has been cleared, but virtually no rebuilding has occurred. According to the Israeli organization Gisha, which monitors movement restrictions in Gaza, Israel restricts import of civilian goods that it defines as "dual use," which includes basic construction material. Although a mechanism exists for vetting the import of materials for private use, what has been brought in is only a fraction of what is needed.⁸⁵ International donors are reluctant to commit larger sums to reconstruction if peace cannot be maintained between Hamas and Israel.

According to a May 2015 World Bank report, Gaza's unemployment rate is 43 percent, the highest in the world, and more than 60 percent of Gaza's youth are unemployed. In recent months Hamas has tried to suppress assorted Salafi jihadists in Gaza, some of whom are in touch with networks in Syria. These jihadists regard Hamas as infidels, because of its Palestinian nationalism and its willingness to negotiate with Israel over a ceasefire. If living conditions do not improve and hopes continue to fade among Gaza's youth, the lure of ISIS will inevitably grow, posing new and unpredictable dangers, not only for Gazans themselves, but for Israel, the region, and for the west's wider war on the Islamic State.⁸⁶ Hamas and ISIS are bitter enemies for many reasons.

The United Nations Conference on Trade and Development concluded that a Palestinian state cannot be economically viable without the reintegration of Gaza with the West Bank, including East Jerusalem. Gaza should be the seaport for a future Palestinian state, and if the Palestinian National Authority were permitted to develop natural gas in Gaza's offshore oil fields, this would generate revenue for the authority and allow power plants to operate in the West Bank and Gaza.⁸⁷

Twenty years ago Sara Roy, a Jewish scholar and daughter of a holocaust survivor, wrote: "Gaza dispels the myriad myths and illusions consistently invoked to legitimize Jewish control and depicts the bleakness of a future in which that control is allowed to persist."⁸⁸ Today the isolated fragments of Palestine in Area A, their borders in Area B controlled by Israel, and their enclosure by Area C and the settlements reveal this bleak scenario arriving in the 21st century for the West Bank as well as Gaza.

Box 3: Israeli Incursions into Gaza, 2008–14⁸⁹

Since it dismantled the settlements there in 2005, Israel has made three major incursions into Gaza, as well as numerous minor ones.

December 2008–January 2009: Operation Cast Lead

Israeli deaths: 8, including 3 civilians

Palestinian deaths: 1,391, including an estimated 759 civilians, of whom 344 were children and 110 women

November 2012: Operation Pillar of Defense

Israeli deaths: 6, including 4 civilians

Palestinian deaths: 167, including 87 civilians, of whom 30 were children

July–August 2014: Operation Protective Edge

Israeli deaths: 72, including 5 civilians

Palestinian deaths: 2,256, including 1,462 civilians, of whom 538 were children and 253 women.

The number of Palestinian children killed by Operation Protective Edge exceeds the total number of Israelis, civilians and soldiers, killed by Palestinians in the last decade.⁹⁰

UNRWA Commissioner General reported: “On seven separate occasions, UNRWA schools that had been used as emergency shelters and whose exact positions we had provided to the Israeli army were either hit or struck nearby by Israeli shells or other munitions. ... This is all the more serious because UNRWA improved the system of notification to the Israel army about the location of its emergency shelters after similar incidents during the 2008–2009 war.”

The military confrontation between Hamas forces in Gaza and the Israeli military is lopsided. Unguided projectiles from Gaza fired against Israeli towns did some damage and violate the Geneva conventions, as they are effectively targeting noncombatants. For instance, between 7 July and 26 August 2014, Palestinian armed groups in Gaza fired 4,881 rockets and 1,753 mortars towards Israel. On the other hand, Israeli forces have massive material superiority, with the economic resources of a high-income economy and the latest in weaponry, some of which the U.S. supplies. They also have nuclear arms, ready and waiting. In the 2014 conflict, IDF carried out more than 6,000 airstrikes in Gaza, many of which hit residential buildings. Israeli fighting forces received 5,000 tons of munitions and fired 14,500 tank shells and around 35,000 artillery shells. Damage to civilian property and persons in Gaza in 2014 were many times what Israelis suffered.

3. Viability of the Two-State Solution

The Oslo Accords pointed to a two-state arrangement as the way forward, and the Israeli government and the Palestinian Authority signed on to this. At the time, it looked feasible that the Israeli and Palestinian leaders could implement such an agreement. Since then the United States, many other governments, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and many other organizations have endorsed the Two-State Solution, even though there was not full agreement on what this meant. The disagreement has widened since Oslo. Nonetheless, most stakeholders have been reluctant to end their formal agreement on the desirability of something called Two-State Solution.

In the meantime, developments on the ground, discussed above, have made it seem increasingly unlikely that the Israeli government and the Palestinian Authority/Hamas will agree in the foreseeable future on a two-state arrangement and a process to get there. Many of the additional barriers to the two-state solution stem from the expanding matrix of occupation in the West Bank and East Jerusalem: Israeli settlements, Israeli-only highways connecting them to one another and to the internationally recognized territory of Israel, and the separation wall. This matrix of occupation has exacerbated conflicts between Israelis and Palestinians and thus led to expansion of the security apparatus guarding the settlements and to increased harshness in the security procedures.⁹¹ This in turn has further increased resentments and made more difficult the road to agreement on any political configuration, including that of two states. None of the parties considers the unstable, almost-one-state status quo as a solution.

Breaking Down the Walls (2010) noted the declining Christian presence in the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem—the three areas identified as Palestine in the Oslo accords. While stating our commitment to equal rights for Palestinians and Israelis, a position underlined by the 221st General Assembly (2014), we join Christians around the world in opposing policies that are on a path to end a vital Palestinian Christian presence in Israel-Palestine. Israeli policies discriminate against this already small minority, such as the rules stripping non-Jewish Jerusalemites of their residency permits if they marry persons from the West Bank or Gaza. Furthermore, the struggle goes beyond land and population. Israeli government measures to enhance exclusively Jewish religious and historical sites and to obscure or destroy Muslim and Christian sites has exacerbated conflicts and reduced the scope for compromises needed to reach a just peace. Other discriminating policies include hindering the exercise of Islam and Christianity on holy days, limiting the mission of historic Christians and Muslim institutions, using less Arabic in signage, and neglecting public infrastructure and services in non-Jewish areas.⁹²

The Oslo Accords, initially intended to enable Israel and Palestine to maintain the security of their citizens in the face of threats by various state and non-state players, now inhibit the ability of either country to establish a just and secure state. As a result, Israel spends a high percentage of its GDP on its military, walls, checkpoints, and forces that occupy the West Bank and surround Gaza.⁹³ Neither Israelis nor Palestinians feel safe, as extremists on both sides play on people’s fears, with counterproductive outcomes—less security for both Israelis and Palestinians.

The primary parties to the Oslo accord, the Israeli government and the Palestinian Authority, now seem to lack the political mandate in their own communities that could support the compromises necessary for a lasting peace agreement, with two states or otherwise. Recent Israeli governments have depended on coalitions with far-right parties, committed to expansion and control of all land between the Jordan River and the Mediterranean. Despite its importance in both the region and the international community, Israel’s status and reputation in that international community has not improved and has become worse with some of its international partners. The Palestinian Authority (PA) lost the election in 2006, but has stayed in power in the West Bank because it and the Israeli authorities did not allow the elected Hamas party to take power there. In the last decade, the PA's popularity has declined even further due to inefficiency, allegations of corruption, and its perceived weakness in the response to Israeli incursions. And an emaciated Palestinian Authority, even where it can maintain control over Area A, cannot defend Areas B and C, has no ability to inhibit the expansion of settlements in the West Bank, has little influence with Hamas in Gaza, and has no power in East Jerusalem.

Since Oslo, the various peace processes initiated or managed by the United States and by the quartet of the U.S., Russia, UN, and European Union have all failed to make sustained progress or deal with the imbalances of power between Israelis and Palestinians. The ability of right-wing Israeli interest groups and money to exert undue influence on the U.S. government and legislators has contributed to crippling U.S. diplomatic efforts to act as a neutral mediator.

We Presbyterians cannot predict whether or when this dismal situation will transform to a paradigm shift and a breakthrough agreement on a political arrangement leading to a just peace. Box 4 shares a comparison with South Africa, which ends on a note of hope. We should not, however, keep our concerns for Christian values and human rights on hold while we wait and hope for such a breakthrough. We need to witness now for our values in the existing situation.

Box 4: A Perspective on Israel-Palestine Through a South African Lens

Critics of Israeli policy in the occupied and annexed territories and in Gaza often draw comparisons with apartheid in South Africa. A closer look reveals some similarities and also some significant differences.

Many South Africans, including those who took part in the World Council of Churches' Ecumenical Accompaniment Program for Palestine and Israel, see striking parallels between the oppression that they experienced under apartheid and the realities faced by Palestinians today. Some, such as Archbishop Emeritus Desmond Tutu, have even argued that the situation for Palestinians is worse than it was for black South Africans. Others are reluctant to classify the policies of contemporary Israel as apartheid, because they see that term as uniquely bound up with South African history.⁹⁴

The pockets of limited Palestinian control (Area A and Gaza) and even more limited control (Area B) remind one of the patchwork of South Africa's Bantustans in the 1970s and 1980s. South Africa tried to persuade the world (and itself) that hundreds of scattered, non-contiguous parcels of land—territory selected precisely because it was perceived to be of little strategic or economic value—could actually comprise one or more viable states. Israel, the Palestinian Authority, and other participants in the Oslo Accords have similarly tried to sustain the narrative that a two-state solution could evolve out of the configuration of the pockets of increasingly constrained Palestinian autonomy.

Other similarities between present-day Israel-Palestine and South Africa under minority rule include forced removals and demolition of housing, huge inequalities in access to resources, the pervasive presence of security forces, and the palpable tension in daily life that perpetually threatens to boil over into violence. Both Israel and apartheid-era South Africa portrayed themselves as pro-Western bulwarks of democracy, strategically located in resource rich but politically volatile regions.

There are also key differences. While Israelis of Arab ancestry suffer discrimination in many respects—some enforced by law—Israel's legislation and jurisprudence is not as completely reliant upon and shaped by a system of racial classification. There is not, for example, an Israeli equivalent of South Africa's Separate Amenities Act, which, from 1953 to 1990, sanctioned the exclusion of people from public premises and services on the basis of race. The virtual segregation of Israeli buses shows, however, that administrative action can achieve a similar effect, even in the absence of legislation.

Another important difference is that Israel's economy does not depend on Palestinian labor to the same extent that the economy of white areas of apartheid South Africa relied upon the labor of other racial groups, particularly Africans. Labor history is a central strand of South Africa's liberation narrative for good reason: it was the black majority who kept the wheels of mining and industry turning, creating the wealth that the Nationalist government reserved for a small white minority. Black women as underpaid servants raised white children and maintained white households, in addition to their own. Apartheid aimed to control the non-white workforce and ensure its exploitability, not to drive it out or eliminate it altogether. The Israeli economy does not depend so heavily on Palestinian workers, so there is less incentive to seek mutual coexistence.

While the South African government's attempts to justify apartheid policies were increasingly discredited as morally bankrupt by the 1980s, the long and shameful history of Jewish persecution, the horrors of the Shoah, and the persistence of anti-Semitism today have allowed Zionists to continue portray to the project of building a Jewish state as morally valid, without counting the cost to the Palestinian families being displaced.

In the end, the debate about whether or not Israeli policies and practice should be labeled "apartheid" should not distract us from the substantive issues at stake. The overriding moral from the history of South Africa's liberation struggle is the central importance of recognizing the human dignity and letting all parties to the conflict feel that they have meaningful opportunities to shape a common future. Only when one ceases to label those with a different perspective as "other", thereby devaluing or dismissing their views, can one begin a genuine search for accommodation and mutually acceptable options.

Faith communities are often best placed to champion this message—as they did in South Africa—because of the depth and richness of their moral teachings. The international ecumenical movement against apartheid was effective largely because it acted in solidarity with local churches that had deep roots in all of South Africa's communities. In the Middle East, as in South Africa, the Church is called not to align itself behind one particular political "solution," but rather to persist in lifting up God's call for justice and dignity for all humanity. Often this implies that the Church must stand with the marginalized and those with less social, economic and political power, amplifying their voices and helping to level the playing field in the struggle for self-determination.

South Africa's experience carries a message of hope. For decades, the struggle to dismantle apartheid and implement non-racial democracy seemed to make little progress in the face of a heavily-armed and intransigent state. Growing moral outrage prompted few political concessions, either from the apartheid state or from members of the international community who allowed perceived strategic or economic considerations to trump ethical concerns. But once that seemingly impenetrable façade began to crumble, it did so rapidly. In the space of a few months in 1993, public opinion amongst white South Africans underwent a sea change. People who had previously bought into the state's portrayal of every African political leader—and particularly Nelson Mandela—as a dangerous terrorist, suddenly saw Mr. Mandela as a national treasure, a statesperson with integrity, humility, and moral fortitude. Meanwhile, the African National Congress, which enjoyed by far the widest support in black communities, showed little inclination to use its enhanced bargaining position to wring new concessions from the faltering state, but instead adhered closely to its longstanding demands for nonracial democracy, human rights, and equal protection under law. At the very moment when South Africa seemed to be on the verge of descending into renewed violence and even greater bloodshed, a yearning for peace and reconciliation prevailed, clearing the way for a negotiated settlement and a democratic transition that has lasted more than two decades, despite ongoing challenges. The Church is uniquely qualified to identify and nurture the glimmers of hope in a hurting world, even in those situations that appear the most intractable.

C. Putting Values into Action by the Presbyterians and the Church

What can we do, given the impasse for achieving a political settlement in Israel-Palestine? Should PC(USA) wait for other U.S. religious groups to become concerned, and focus on interreligious dialogue? Should the church now shift the emphasis of its attention to promoting its values—the dignity and worth of all persons and the welfare and protection of the most vulnerable—in whatever political situation may evolve? How can we act on our belief that God is moving in the world, bringing about reconciliation—even in contentious and divided places like Israel-Palestine—through the work of Jesus Christ and the power of the Holy Spirit? The church has, throughout its history, exercised greater influence in cultural spheres than in political ones; when we engage in shaping culture, we play to our strengths. How does the Spirit of Jesus lead us to engage the world in faithful, hopeful, and loving ways?

In response, we encourage the church to work with local mission partners and organizations pursuing reconciliation in Israel-Palestine and beyond. Where political structures in the Holy Lands seem intransigently antagonistic and consistently destructive, and where political remedies to the conflict seem beyond the power of any persons or groups to achieve, the PC(USA) can work with such partners to shape cultures and change the facts on the ground. By doing so, it may help change those structures and bring new remedies into existence. Such an ecumenical approach meshes with the hopes and visions of a large share of its members and is less likely to get caught in the political crossfire that currently marks U.S. conversations about Israel-Palestine. Most importantly, such an approach is consistent with the humble and hopeful way that our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, brings salvation to the world.

The church can focus its witness and ministry in Israel-Palestine on five issues: security, water, economic wellbeing, freedom of movement, and children. These five issues are urgent, important to both Israelis and Palestinians, and in accord with statements the denomination has already made regarding the Holy Lands. They are, moreover, areas of strength in the denomination's world mission and issues for which we have or could find suitable mission partners. We can address them in concrete ways, with hopes for amelioration and solution. Wise and shared engagement on these five issues can change the facts on the ground by shaping cultures of engagement that can restructure political visions, processes, and actions towards more harmonious relationships in whatever political configuration the leaders in the region can agree on.

1. Security

Although a mainline American denomination like the PC(USA) cannot offer military security to either Israel or Palestine, it can take a stand against continued militarization of security and the resulting insecurity that militarization breeds. It can manage its resources to encourage a less militarized security system. The PC(USA) has already decided not to invest its funds in U.S. firms that produce weapons, including those perhaps obtained by Palestinians and those sold to Israel for its occupation security operations. We already decided to stop investing in three companies engaged in non-peaceful activities, namely, maintaining and implementing the occupation of Palestinian territories, against which the church has taken an explicit stance. At the same time, the PC(USA) can work with partners in Israel-Palestine in programs that reduce the levels of fear and suspicion that stimulate calls for harsher forms of security and isolation. Many persons and organizations in Israel-Palestine are working to build relationships and trust among Israelis and Palestinians, among them the Parents Circle Families Forum, Rabbis for Human Rights, Combatants for Peace, and Seeds of Peace. Working with such organizations that emphasize a holistic vision of security for all can help change the facts on the ground, and thus eventually change the facts at the checkpoints. Presbyterian efforts can work with partners in East Jerusalem and in other areas not yet completely divided in efforts build bridges, show methods of human security, and lessen the constant recourse to militarization and control.

2. Water

Although Israelis and Palestinians should have equitable access to adequate and affordable water, as noted above, Israel limits access to water for many Palestinians, so that water consumption differs dramatically in Gaza, the West Bank, and Israel, as detailed above. Presbyterians have a long and exemplary history of helping to bring clean water to those in need, through its programs like Living Waters for the World. We can bring the wisdom of this work to bear on water needs in the Holy Lands, joining with other individuals, states, and nonprofit groups who are working to support the equitable development of water resources and the distribution of that water. We encourage congregations to study reports by the World Bank and the United Nations Development Program and to work with organizations like ANERA, EcoPeace/Friends of the Earth Middle East, USAID, and indigenous organizations to provide sustainable and affordable clean water to those who need it most.

3. Economic Wellbeing

Allowing Palestinians to develop their economic potential and increase employment would give reasons to hope and work for peaceful coexistence with Israel. Even in situations where no government has centralized control of all the organizations with violence capacity, developing profitable economic opportunities can give competing organizations substantial incentives to refrain from using violence, in order not to spoil their economic gains.⁹⁵

To help reduce economic disparities in the region, Presbyterians in the United States can participate in many ways. We can become better informed about where the products we use come from and can advocate with the U.S. government to enforce our own trade laws with respect to our economic relations with Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza, including accurately labeling countries of origin. Products made in the West Bank settlements should not carry “Made in Israel” labels, according to our laws, but they often do.⁹⁶ Our Office of Public Witness in Washington, D.C., and Presbyterian Ministry to the UN in New York can encourage the United States to require that products from Israeli companies operating in Area C be labeled as such, in accord with U.S. law and to push the Israeli government and the Palestinian Authority to reduce trade barriers for exports and imports from the West Bank and Gaza. We can purchase agricultural and manufactured goods made in Palestine and produced by Palestinians, which should be able to reach American markets with the same ease as goods made in Israel. We can avoid buying goods manufactured in Israeli settlements as in the PC(USA) resolutions of 2012⁹⁷. And we can, as we stated at the 220th General Assembly (2012), pursue positive investment in Palestine, working with organizations like Green Action and Olives of Peace or more directly through the Presbyterian Foundation, which has financed several projects with West Bank Palestinians.⁹⁸

4. Freedom of Movement

Palestinians and, to a much lesser extent Israeli citizens, face harmful restrictions in their ability to live, worship, work, and be with their family and friends in the Holy Lands. Palestinians are unable to travel freely between the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem or to live in either location as they choose. By contrast, Israeli settlers usually enjoy preferential treatment for building homes and businesses and for constructing, using, and maintaining roads built for their exclusive use. Israeli citizens are warned not to enter many parts of Palestine, particularly Areas A and B, regardless of their connections to persons and programs in those areas.

Congregations can educate themselves about the structures of the occupation that prevent free movement within and between the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and Gaza. When planning trips to the Holy Lands, they should include attention not only to sites in Israel (the Mount of the Beatitudes, Caesarea Maritima, Nazareth, etc.) and in the Old City of Jerusalem, but also to Palestinian cities within the West Bank (Ramallah, Bethlehem, Jericho, Hebron) and to places like the Tent of Nations homestead. They should learn about how the citizens within these areas would travel between the sites that tourists visit so easily. Experience the checkpoints; get out of the tourist bus and go through a checkpoint on foot, like the Palestinians have to do. Attend to signs that restrict movement, roadblocks, and earth mounds. Notice the location of the separation barrier and consider its impact on communities. Compare settler roads with Palestinian ones. Consider volunteering with the Ecumenical Accompaniment Program or Christian Peacemaker Teams.⁹⁹ Also consider how to support organizations like B’Tselem, Gisha, and Machsom Watch that are working to protect and support freedom of movement for all.

5. Children

The ongoing conflict between Israel and Palestine probably does its worst harm to children, Israeli as well as Arab. They live in a militarized world, are taught to distrust those who do not share their views or their nationality and are offered narratives that suggest that their own wellbeing must come at the expense of others. They are drawn into increasingly insular and militaristic communities, where they may become prey to extremist groups whose interests are not in their wellbeing but only in particular radical causes. Some are taught that killing the others is a solution.

Palestinian children as young as twelve face abuse and neglect at the hands of Israeli military courts, which routinely detain them for stone-throwing, associating with those who throw stones, being suspected of having thrown stones, or even without any specified crime allegation. Many suffer physical and psychological abuse while in detention after being taken from their homes at night, and about half of those detained are taken to prisons in Israel rather than the West Bank, in violation of the Geneva Conventions. Under Israeli military law, Palestinian children do not have the right to have a parent present when questioned by police, whereas Israeli children have this right. Israeli children cannot be given a sentence that results in mandatory custody until age fourteen, whereas Palestinian children receive such sentences at age twelve.¹⁰⁰ Educational opportunities are constrained by the lack of resources, the inability to move freely in the West Bank, and the limits of UNRWA to fund adequate education for Palestinian children.

The PC(USA) has a long history of working to alleviate the suffering of children at home and around the world. In the Holy Lands, working to alleviate the suffering of children could take at least three forms. First, the denomination should advocate for an end to the illegal military detention of Palestinian children in Israel and the unequal treatment of Palestinian and Israeli children. Its governing body and Office of Public Witness should lobby elected representatives in this regard and its members should, likewise, contact their individual representatives in this regard. It can partner with programs like Military Court Watch that monitor, report on, pursue more just strategies for dealing with detained children, and advocate for adherence to international law in this regard. The PC(USA) can endorse their recommendations to shield children from abuses:

- no night raids to arrest minors;
- every child to be told their legal rights in a language he/she understands;
- every child granted access to an attorney before interrogation;
- every child’s parents present during interrogation; and
- every interrogation is A/V recorded.

Second, the denomination should support educational programs that bring Israeli and Palestinian children into contact with each other, such as Hand-in-Hand and Face-to-Face/Faith-to-Faith. Although such programs alone may not suffice to overcome the antagonisms, misunderstandings, and moral blindness that pervade the Israeli-Palestinian conflicts, they surely help. Third, as peacemaking is the believer’s calling, the denomination should work with organizations like Children of Peace to dismantle the culture of militarization that drives Palestinian youth to throw stones and attack settlers and that drives young Israelis, especially young settlers, to exacerbate the occupation as members of the Israeli Defense Force (IDF) and sometimes to make deadly attacks on Palestinians.

Reflecting on the plight of the children and Jesus’ admonition to “let the little children come to me” (Mt. 19:14) reminds us to focus our attention and advocacy on the most vulnerable and oppressed. Jesus met with the rich and powerful—tax collectors, Pharisees, centurions—and his message to them was to care for the poor, the sick, and the widows. The PC(USA) can follow His example: while the politicians debate the how to arrange boundaries, we can witness with our purchases and investments to end the actions and policies that are terrorizing the children and families of all faiths in Israel-Palestine. We can keep ourselves informed about what is happening with all those in the region and advocate changing policies to share more equitably the access to resources and opportunities—farmland, water, transport, and international trade. We can allocate our purchases and investments to support fairer economic development, helping the Palestinian economy to close the widening gaps with that of Israel. We can engage in relationships with mission partners and allies in Israel-Palestine.

In whatever actions the PC(USA) undertakes, we need to maintain an attitude of humility and awareness that Palestinians and Israelis are making their decisions under highly stressful situations. Our nation, the U.S.A., by its actions and inactions has contributed to the difficulty of their situation, so we have no claim to moral superiority. Nonetheless, we must recognize the unpleasant facts of the situation and make our own determination of what we can do, resulting in the least harm and the most good. If some discussions result in awkward situations with our friends here and abroad, we may remember that some of the truth-telling in Jesus’s ministry also pushed people out of their comfort zone.

Annex A: Principles of International Law in Israel-Palestine

Continuing Occupation and Obligations of the Occupying Power. Belligerent occupation is governed by the Hague Regulations of 1907, as well as by the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949, and the customary laws of belligerent occupation. UN Security Council Resolution 1322 (2000), paragraph 3: “Calls upon Israel, the occupying Power, to abide scrupulously by its legal obligations and its responsibilities under the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in a Time of War of 12 August 1949...” The Security Council vote was 14 to 0, making it obligatory international law.

The Fourth Geneva Convention applies to the West Bank, to the Gaza Strip, and to the City of Jerusalem. The Palestinian people living in these occupied Palestinian territories are “protected persons” within the meaning of the Fourth Geneva Convention. All of their human rights are protected under international law. Thus, the denial of human rights, the use of collective punishment, closure of areas, annexation of land, establishment of settlements, and the continuing actions by Israel designed to change the legal status, geographical nature, and demographic composition of the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including Jerusalem, violate international law. Israel, as Occupying Power, is obliged under international law to preserve the territorial integrity of all the Occupied Palestinian Territory (OPT) and to guarantee the freedom of movement of persons and goods within the Palestinian territory, including the removal of restrictions on movement into and from East Jerusalem, and the freedom of movement to and from the outside world. See, e.g., UNGA/RES/56/62, 2001.

Resistance by Those Subject to Occupation. Occupied people have, by weight of customary international law, expressed in many UN resolutions, the right to militarily resist their occupation and subjugation as long as this resistance is properly conducted within the confines of international humanitarian law. General Assembly Resolution A/RES/3246 (XXIX) (November 1974).

Settlements. International law clearly prohibits the settlement of Israeli citizens in the OPT. As a result, all state actions in support of the establishment and maintenance of the settlements, including incentives to create them and the establishment of infrastructure to support them, are illegal under international law (Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949).

Jerusalem. Israel's annexation of East Jerusalem contravenes customary international law, as confirmed by Security Council and General Assembly resolutions and recognized by the International Court of Justice. Because of its illegality, the annexation has not been recognized by any foreign state. Under international law, East Jerusalem remains part of the West Bank and is occupied territory. See, for example, UN Security Council Resolution 478, 1980. Accordingly, all settlement-related activities and any legal or administrative decision or practice that directly or indirectly coerces Palestinians to leave East Jerusalem—including evictions, demolitions, forced displacements, and cancellation of residence permits on a discriminatory basis—are illegal under international human rights law. The confiscation or expropriation of private property in the OPT, including East Jerusalem, is in almost all cases illegal.

The Wall. The International Court of Justice, in its 2004 advisory opinion, stated that establishing the Wall, or barrier, inside occupied territory is prohibited under international law, and the UNGA swiftly called for the Wall to be torn down, with reparations made to Palestinians harmed by its construction (UNGA Resolution July 2004). The combination of illegal settlements, checkpoints, and the Wall have had devastating effects on the social, economic, and cultural rights of many thousands of Palestinians. (See the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights, https://treaties.un.org/Pages/ViewDetails.aspx?src=TREATY&mtdsq_no=IV-3&chapter=4&lang=en.)

Palestinians Right to Self-Determination. Numerous General Assembly resolutions have affirmed this right as particularly applicable to the Palestinian people, including Resolutions 2535 (10 Dec. 1969); 2649 (30 Nov 1970); 3236 (22 Nov 1974); 43/177 (15 Dec. 1988); and 48/94 (20 Dec. 1993). Of particular note is Resolution 3236, which reaffirms and specifies the inalienable rights of Palestinian people in Palestine as including: (a) the right to self-determination without external interference; (b) the right to national independence and sovereignty; and, the (c) "inalienable right of the Palestinians to return to their homes and property from which they have been displaced and uprooted." The resolution emphasizes that "full respect for and the realization of these inalienable rights of the Palestinian people are indispensable for the solution of the question of Palestine."

Gaza. Under international law, Gaza is an integral part of the OPT, despite the partial Israeli withdrawal, and thus Israel has the duties and obligations of an occupying power under the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 and international humanitarian law, which it is not fulfilling. Both the UN and the Red Cross have declared that the blockade of Gaza is illegal, and is not warranted by Israel's security concerns.

Home Demolitions. UN Security Council Resolution 1544 (2004) called on Israel to respect its obligations under international humanitarian law and to end the demolition of homes in violation of that law.

Palestinian Prisoners Held in Israel. The Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 states that "Protected persons accused of offences shall be detained in the occupied country, and if convicted they shall serve their sentences therein" (Article 47). When Palestinian detainees and prisoners from the OPT are held in Israel, as is frequently done, it violates international law and deprives them of visits with relatives and loved ones. <http://www.ohchr.org/EN/NewsEvents/Pages/DisplayNews.aspx?NewsID=10721&LangID=e>

Equality Under the Law for Those Living in the OPT. Military courts deal with Palestinians in the OPT who are suspected of crimes, whereas settlers are dealt with under civil law. See http://www.addameer.org/israeli_military_judicial_system/military_courts.

Right of Return, Repatriation, or Compensation. The United Nations General Assembly Resolution 194 (1948), reaffirmed annually since 1949, resolved that Palestinian "refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbours should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property which, under principles of international law or equity, should be made good by the Governments or authorities responsible."

Annex B: Estimated Effects of Removing Restraints on the Palestinian Economy

A World Bank study has analyzed the effects of the Israeli occupation on the Palestinian economy, especially its prospects for development in Area C.

Direct Benefits

The World Bank Report 2014 estimates that the potential additional output from the five sectors evaluated in this report—agriculture, Dead Sea minerals, mining and quarrying, tourism, construction, and telecommunications— would amount to at least USD 2.2 billion per annum in valued-added terms—a sum equivalent to 23 percent of 2011 Palestinian GDP. The bulk of this would come from agriculture and Dead Sea minerals exploitation.

In agriculture, the key issues are access to fertile land, and the availability of water to irrigate it. We have not included in our calculations the 187,000 dunums of land that fall under the control of Israeli settlements. (The Ottoman unit dunum is about one-quarter acre.) To irrigate the 326,400 dunums of other agricultural land notionally available to Palestinians in Area C would require some 189 MCM of water per year. Current Palestinian allocations under the Oslo Accords are 138.5 MCM, or 20 percent of the estimated availability—a share to be revisited at Final Status negotiations. Irrigating this unexploited area as well as accessing additional range and forest land could deliver an additional USD 704 million in value added to the Palestinian economy—equivalent to 7 percent of 2011 GDP.

The Dead Sea abounds in valuable minerals, principally large deposits of potash and bromine. Israel and Jordan together derive some USD 4.2 billion in annual sales of these products, and account for 6 percent of the world's supply of potash and fully 73 percent of global bromine output. Demand for both these products is projected to remain strong, with the Dead Sea a cheap and easily exploited source. There is no reason to suppose that Palestinian investors along with prospective international partners would not be able to reap the benefits of this market, provided they were able to access the resource. Taking as a benchmark the average value added by these industries to the Jordanian and the Israeli economies, the Palestinian economy could derive up to USD 918 million per annum—equal to 9 percent of 2011 GDP, almost equivalent to the size of the entire Palestinian manufacturing sector.

Area C is also rich in stone, with estimated deposits of some 5,000 acres of quarryable land. Palestinian stone mining and quarrying is already Palestinian territories' largest export industry, based on the famous Jerusalem Gold Stone. However, this is a struggling industry, due to Israeli refusal to permit opening new quarries or to renew permits for most existing quarries in Area C. If these restrictions were lifted, the Bank report estimates that the industry could double in size, increasing value added by some USD 241 million—and adding 2 percent to 2011 Palestinian GDP.

The construction industry is in acute need of additional land to expand housing and make it more affordable. Areas A and B are already very densely populated and built up. United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (UNOCHA) analysis suggests that less than 1 percent of the land in Area C is currently available to Palestinians for construction; permit data also show that it is almost impossible for Palestinian to obtain permission to build in Area C. Less than 6 percent of all Palestinian requests made between 2000 and 2007 secured approval—while Israelis routinely get permits. This situation applies not only to housing but also to public economic infrastructure (roads, water reservoirs, waste treatment plants) and industrial plant, and to the access roads and utility lines needed to connect Areas A and B across Area C. These factors have substantially suppressed growth in the construction sector and have led housing prices in the West Bank to increase over the past two decades by about a fourth above what would otherwise be expected. Lifting the tight restrictions on the construction of residential and commercial buildings alone (excluding infrastructure projects) could increase West Bank construction sector value added by some USD 239 million per annum—or 2 percent of 2011 Palestinian GDP.

Area C has major global tourism potential, but for Palestinians this remains largely unexploited, mostly due to restrictions on access and investment, in particular around the Dead Sea. Palestinian Dead Sea tourism development was envisaged in the Interim Agreement, but has not yet emerged. Israeli settlement enterprises, on the other hand, have expanded tourism and other activities in the area. If current restrictions are lifted and investment climate in the West Bank improves, it is reasonable to assume that Palestinian investors would be able to create a Dead Sea hotel industry equivalent to Israel's, producing value added of some USD 126 million per annum—or 1 percent of 2011 Palestinian GDP. Investments to develop other attractive tourism locations in Area C could generate substantial additional revenues.

The development of the Palestinian telecommunications sector is constrained by Area C restrictions that prevent the construction of towers for mobile service and have impeded the laying of landlines and asymmetric digital subscriber line (ADSL) cable. Israeli authorities have granted the two Palestinian mobile operators to only limited 2G frequencies in West Bank Palestinian area, and no access to the 3G spectrum. By contrast, Israeli settlements in the West Bank and East Jerusalem almost all have 3G or 4G.¹⁰¹ Importation of equipment has also been difficult. As a result, Palestinian telecommunications costs are high, and coverage and service quality are poor. The 3G restrictions in particular threaten the industry's viability, particularly since Israeli settlers are allowed to develop their competing infrastructure in Area C. The World Bank report estimates that removing today's restrictions on the internet would improve the viability of this Palestinian industry and would add some USD 48 million in value to the sector—equal to 0.5 percent of Palestinian 2011 GDP.

Indirect Benefits

Alleviating the constraints on the five sectors mentioned above would have sizeable effects on the demand for output in other sectors. Data on inter-sectoral linkages, produced recently by the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, imply an overall multiplier effect of at least 1.5. In other words, allowing Palestinian agriculture or tourism to increase by $1 million would increase demand and output in other sectors by at least an additional $0.5 million. Applying this demand-side multiplier, the potential value added from alleviating today's restrictions on access to, and activity and production in Area C is likely to amount to some USD 3.4 billion—or 35 percent of Palestinian GDP in 2011. Dynamic effects would surely be even more.

Other indirect benefits from the supply-side effects of improved physical and institutional infrastructure are less easily calculated, but would also be substantial. All Palestinian industries depend on the quality of transportation, electricity, water, and telecommunications infrastructure. Transportation infrastructure is particularly problematic as Palestinian use of roads in Area C is highly restricted, and travel times to get around the artificial obstructions is often hours longer than the previous and traditional routes. The Palestinian Authority has not been allowed to develop roads, airports, or railways in or through Area C. Restrictions in Area C have impeded the development of "soft" institutional infrastructure such as banking services, which are hamstrung by the inability to open and service branches, and the inability in practice to use land in Area C as collateral. These impediments create significant uncertainty and reduce the expected returns on potential investments.

Allowing increased potential output for the private sector would dramatically improve the PA's fiscal position, making it less dependent on international donors. Even without improvements in the efficiency of tax collection, at the current rate of tax/GDP of 20 percent, a USD 3.4 billion increase in GDP could bring additional tax revenues of about USD 700 million.

Annex C: Work of the Study Team

The study team appointed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to fulfill the General Assembly's request for researching the report comprised the following volunteers, all members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

The Reverend Mark Douglas PhD, Professor of Christian Ethics, Columbia Seminary;
Mr. Samuel Jones, Executive Director, Heartland Initiative (former mission volunteer);

08 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MIDDLE EAST ISSUES

Leila Richards MD, with experience in crisis medicine service in Gaza, Iraq, and Lebanon;
Steven Webb PhD, economist and economic historian, formerly with World Bank, liaison member to the Advisory Committee;
Douglas Tilton PhD, a political scientist serving with the Presbyterian Mission Agency, contributed insights on nonviolent social change from his long experience in Southern Africa;
The Reverend Beverly Brewster Esq. was a volunteer advisor on human rights issues;
The Reverend Christian Iosso PhD, Coordinator of ACSWP, provided staff services.

The study team met three times, with advance orientation in New York City in January 2015, to observe the new UN Security Council's first session on the Middle East. The team was hosted at the Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations and met with

The Reverend Mark Koenig, Coordinator, Presbyterian Ministry at the United Nations (PMUN);
Mr. Ryan Smith, Presbyterian Representative at the United Nations, also of PMUN;
David Wildman, PhD, United Methodist Church;
The Reverend Douglas Hostetter, Director, Mennonite Central Committee UN Office;
Mr. Jordan Street, UN Representative for the NY Society of Friends;
Mssrs Richard Wright and Yasmin Reitzig of the UN Relief and Works Agency (which serves Palestinian refugees and their descendants from the wars of 1948 and 1967);
Mr. Brad Parker, Associate Director, Defense of Children International—Palestine.

The group was also briefed by several members of the UN Security Council staff: Dr. Darco Mocibob and Mssrs. Stefan Vazzelle; James Sutterlin; Jusef Jai.

The study team met in Cambridge, Mass., in March 2015, with the following scholars:

Sara Roy PhD, Harvard, Center for Middle Eastern Studies;
Michael Hudson PhD, Middle East Initiative/Georgetown University;
Herbert Kelman PhD, Harvard, Social Ethics, consultant to Oslo process;
Ms. Ruth Alan, Senior Program Officer, Mercy Corps (international humanitarian NGO);
Susan Akram PhD, Boston University, expert in human rights law.

The study team visited Israel–Palestine August 17–25, 2015, (not able to visit Gaza).

Consulting with the Reverend Katherine Taber, Presbyterian co-worker:

Mr. Samuel Bahour, Managing Partner, Applied Information Management;
Dr. Khalil Shiha, General Director, PARC, Agricultural Development Association;
Dr. Abdelrahman Alamarah (Tamimi), Director General, Palestinian Hydrology Group;

The passage is quoted in Paul Hopkins, American Presbyterians and the Middle East Conflict, American Presbyterians (Journal of Presbyterian History), 68:3 (Fall, 1990), pp. 159–160. That section continues: “... provision should be made for just compensation or restoration of Palestinian property and land, and the satisfactory settlement of all Palestinian refugees, including return where feasible and desired. The Palestinian people should be full participants in negotiations concerning any of these matters through representatives of their own choosing.”*
2. Minutes, UPCUSA, 1982, Part I, p. 307; also quoted in Hopkins, op. cit.
3. Statements that the Palestinians do not recognize Israel are thus inaccurate, though recent efforts to have Israel recognized as a “Jewish state” appear to add an exclusivism to Israel not present in its founding documents or negotiations prior to the current Netanyahu administration.
4. The Middle East Study Team discussed the contest of traumas with Avram Burg, former Speaker of the Knesset, who has written on this in books such as, The Holocaust Is Over, We Must Rise from Its Ashes (London: Palgrave/Macmillan, 2008). A more recent discussion of the overcoming of trauma by taking “the psychological position of the moral third,” capable of acknowledging the pain of the other and one’s own capacity for evil as well as victimhood, can be found in Jessica Benjamin’s “Acknowledging the Other’s Suffering,” Tikkun magazine, 30:3, Summer 2015, pp. 15–16, 60–62. The role of this third position resembles the place of the Spirit in confession, forgiveness, and freedom from anxiety.

Even as we quote several leaders below, Juan Cole’s analysis of Friedman’s arguments is a caution against personalizing the causes of the situation: “an Israel determined to permanently occupy all the territory between the Jordan River and the Mediterranean Sea ...” <http://www.juancole.com/2016/02/israel-friedman-of-the-ny-times-surrenders-to-one-state-solution-sees-me-apocalypse.html>.

“We’ll continue to engage the Israeli government and the Palestinians and ask them where they’re interested in going and how they see this issue being resolved. But what we can’t do is pretend that there’s a possibility of something that’s not there. And we can’t continue to premise our public diplomacy based on something that everybody knows is not going to happen at least in the next several years. That is something that we have to—for the sake of our own credibility that we have to be honest about.”

Prime Minister Netanyahu has at times committed to a very limited Palestinian entity, but more frequently he has stated “no concessions” “no withdrawals.” For instance, from March 14, 2015: “I think that anyone who is going to establish a Palestinian state today and evacuate lands is giving attack ground to the radical Islam against the state of Israel,” he said. “This is the actual reality that has formed here in recent years. Anyone who ignores this is sticking his head in the sand.” Asked if that meant a Palestinian state would not be established if he were prime minister, Mr. Netanyahu said, “Indeed.” (The New York Times previously translated this as “correct”; the words are very similar in Hebrew.) <http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2015/03/20/world/middleeast/netanyahu-two-state-solution.html> An October reiteration of his opposition: http://www.huffingtonpost.com/entry/israel-benjamin-netanyahu-reject-palestinian-state_us_562e5f1be4b0c66bae58b878.

For President Mahmoud Abbas of the Palestinian Authority, the Oslo agreement is no longer binding as Palestinians have hit a wall when it comes to Israeli negotiation: “As long as Israel refuses to cease settlement activities and to the release of the fourth group of Palestinian prisoners in accordance with our agreements, they leave us no choice but to insist that we will not remain the only ones committed to the implementation of these agreements, while Israel continuously violates them,” Abbas said. “We therefore declare that we cannot continue to be bound by these agreements and that Israel must assume all of its responsibilities as an occupying power.” Hence his efforts at establishing Palestinian statehood and international recognition through the United Nations, despite past vetoes on the Security Council by the United States <http://www.theguardian.com/world/2015/sep/30/mahmoud-abbas-palestinians-no-longer-bound-by-oslo-accord-with-israel>.

8. The study team recognizes a generic preference for a two-state solution but differs over the extent to which such a solution remains a political possibility. As such, this report builds on values analysis to offer a direction forward that is neither oriented around nor a repudiation of a two-state solution. Importantly, it recognizes that the PC(USA) should never conflate the pursuit of peace and justice with the pursuit of any particular political structure, since no political structure short of the Kingdom of God warrants its full affirmation. All political solutions are grounded in history and entail compromises; values analysis shows the consequences of history, the costs of compromises, and gives special attention to who has paid and continues to pay costs. The report’s emphasis on values in the context of contemporary Israel-Palestine is an attempt to name that history, describe those costs, and offer a way forward in spite of the study team’s differences and in alignment with the denomination’s commitment to work for the Kingdom of God.

9. The New York Times’ editorial, “The Fading Two-State Solution,” notes that “Israel is moving quickly to establish facts on the ground that preclude a Palestinian state,” and quotes a U.S. official: “It is starting to look like a de facto annexation” (NYT, p. A16, January 23, 2016). Another major voice supportive of Israel, The New Yorker magazine, has carried a series of pessimistic reports by its editor, David Remnick, including, “The One-State Reality,” <http://www.newyorker.com/magazine/2014/11/17/one-state-reality>. The study team visited with the mayor of a settlement whose information packet included a nine-step plan for total incorporation of Palestine into Israel; the statement quoted (from a news article) is step five: <http://www.thedailybeast.com/articles/2013/03/21/settlers-9-step-plan-to-kill-the-two-state-solution.html>.

12. Seidemann, Daniel “The Myth of a United Jerusalem” The Atlantic, Nov. 2011: <http://www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2011/11/the-myth-of-united-jerusalem/249239/>. Seidemann warns: “Cumulatively, Israeli policies in East Jerusalem today threaten to transform the Israeli-Palestinian conflict from a bitter national conflict that can be resolved by means of territorial compromise, into the potential for a bloody, unsolvable religious war. This threat derives from Israel’s dogged pursuit of the settlers’ vision of an exclusionary Jewish Jerusalem—displacing Palestinians in targeted areas, politicizing archeology, handing over of the most sensitive cultural, historical, and religious sites to extreme settler organizations, and promoting a narrative that East Jerusalem is exclusively or predominantly Jewish, while marginalizing the other national and religious equities in the city. In the process, Israel is alienating even its staunchest allies and thus undermining its own claims in the city. It is also putting itself on a collision course with the forces of moderation in the Muslim and Christian worlds, who sense, with reason, that their equities are being marginalized in Jerusalem. Jerusalem is fast becoming the arena where religious fundamentalists—Jewish, Christian, and Muslim; domestic and international—play out their apocalyptic fantasies.” The Israeli Committee on Home Demolitions substantiates Seidemann’s reportage with its analyses of Jerusalem restrictions on family unification, housing permits, etc., such as a master plan based on the goal of “preserving a firm Jewish majority in the city”: <http://icahd.org/2012/07/24/discrimination-in-the-new-master-plan-of-jerusalem/>. Not all of this process of emphasizing Jewish presence over others is in Jerusalem, and nor is it linked to settlers. The State Department’s annual religious liberty review notes the privileging of Jewish holy sites, for example. The 2009 Report stated: “At the end of 2008, there were 137 designated holy sites, all of which were Jewish” <http://www.state.gov/j/drl/rls/irf/2009/127349.htm>. For a report on the redesign in Jerusalem: http://www.nytimes.com/2009/05/10/world/middleeast/10jerusalem.html?_r=1.

13. In the West Bank [not East Jerusalem] most Palestinians have PA citizenship, although it does them little good in the face of Israeli military actions.

14. Breaking the Silence is the veterans group that describes the methods of ensuring security for settlements by disrupting the security of Palestinians: <http://www.nytimes.com/2015/12/24/world/middleeast/israeli-veterans-criticism-of-west-bank-occupation-incites-furor.html>. “Last year, the group published a report containing testimonies from more than sixty Israeli officers and soldiers who served during the war in Gaza in 2014. It contended that the guiding military principle was one of “minimum risk to our forces, even at the cost of harming innocent civilians.” It added that caused “massive and unprecedented harm to the population and the civilian infrastructure” in Gaza.

17. The Palestinian people have, by weight of customary international law, expressed in many UN resolutions, the right to militarily resist their occupation and subjugation by Israel as long as this resistance is properly conducted within the confines of international humanitarian law. See Annex A.
18. There are analogies between the nonthreatening economic development strategies of the Palestinian Authority and those of Booker T. Washington in the post-Reconstruction U.S. South. In the U.S. case, W.E.B. DuBois and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) began to employ legal and political strategies that brought more rights to African Americans as a whole, though many remained in poverty. Because African Americans in the NAACP had citizenship and could appeal to the federal courts, they had tools not available to Hamas and other Palestinians, who have tried to defend themselves by force. Thus Palestinian political and civil organizations have been put in situation where nonviolence has meant further victimization while fighting back, a la Hamas, has meant even more thorough destruction. For the contrast between Booker T. Washington and W.E.B. DuBois approaches, see Gary Dorrien, The New Abolition: WEB Du Bois and the Black Social Gospel (New Haven: Yale UP, 2015).

20. The invitation to Prime Minister Netanyahu was developed by the Israeli ambassador and the Republican Speaker of the House of Representatives and reflected an unprecedented intrusion into U.S. politics by a foreign head of state, although the lines between Israeli and U.S. citizenship, political, and financial activity are often blurred. Since the Iran agreement, Netanyahu has argued the U.S. should provide more military aid to Israel as it was endangered, although most observers see the reverse as true. As this document is finalized, U.S. Ambassador Daniel Shapiro has criticized the Israeli government: “Too much vigilantism goes unchecked, and at times there seems to be two standards of adherence to the rule of law, one for Israelis, and another for Palestinians. ... Hovering over all these questions is the larger one about Israel’s political strategy vis-a-vis its conflict with the Palestinians.” Scholar Juan Cole, commenting on the sometimes insulting exchanges that followed, noted, “Then yesterday [Jan. 21, 2016] the Netanyahu government made Shapiro’s point for him by announcing that it will steal 350 acres of Palestinian land near Jericho in the Jordan Valley.” See: <http://www.juancole.com/2016/01/netanyahu-demands-more-billions-from-us-after-iran-deal-insults-us-ambassador-steals-more-land.html>. Along with the taking of Palestinian land, Israel demolished six structures built by the European Union as part of their aid to the Palestinian economy: <http://www.reuters.com/article/us-israel-palestinians-idUSKCN0UZ11P>.

38. Some incursions have targeted specific Hamas military assets aimed at people and property in Israel. Most have been to punish Palestinians collectively for military or non-military actions that the Israeli government disapproved. Some have been to demonstrate Israeli authority and ‘mow the lawn’—an Israeli expression for keeping Palestinians in fear and degrading their capacity and will to thrive and resist Israeli occupation, which international law gives them the right to do.

In accordance with this principle, the UN General Assembly has reaffirmed “the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people ... over their natural resources, including land, water and energy resources” (UNGA, 2012: para. 1).

The UN General Assembly set forth the framework for resolving the Palestinian refugee case in UN Resolution 194 (III), which calls for repatriation for those refugees “wishing to return to their homes and live in peace with their neighbors,” or compensation for those choosing not to return. On November 22, 1974, UN Resolution 3236 made the right of return an “inalienable right.”

This is an area where the wall cuts one of the remaining Christian communities and areas apart, and will make it hard for the Christian farmers (and wine-makers) to tend their lands, which will likely be called, “abandoned,” and taken over by settlements on the other side of the wall.

The St. Porphyrius church belongs to the Greek Orthodox community and is still in use today. Ahli Arab Hospital in Gaza City has served Gaza’s Palestinians for more than a century. Waterborne diseases from contaminated water are a particular risk to children under the age of five, causing repeated episodes of diarrheal disease that result in stunted growth and chronic malnutrition. This problem was noted as early as 2002 in a study carried out by Johns Hopkins University and al Quds University for CARE International. In a 2012 study the World Health Organization reported that approximately half of all children under the age of two and 39 percent of pregnant women receiving antenatal care in Gaza suffered from iron-deficiency anemia, adding that chronic malnutrition in children under five “is not improving and may be deteriorating.”

Space prevents a review of the causes of the 2014 war, which was supported by many Israeli newspapers but opposed by Haaretz, which emphasized the repetitive nature of the attacks on Gaza and of the pattern of accusations (inherited from the previous treatment of Yasir Arafat). An example from Gideon Levy may be noted: <http://www.haaretz.com/opinion/premium-1.607306>. Israel responds each time to criticisms that it has massively violated the laws of war, blaming Hamas for provocations and for sacrificing its own people. Whatever options Hamas may think it has, this cycle would seem to reinforce hatred and, as noted by much international press, spread that hatred especially among 1.3 billion Muslims. The U.S. typically calls for “restraint” while resupplying Israel; since these are wars of choice, presumably the U.S. is given some advance notice of when they will begin.

The Palestinian people need to secure their human right to development under international law far more than they need donor aid. ... Donor aid is important for extending a lifeline to the beleaguered people of Gaza, [but] should not be viewed as a substitute for ending the blockade and calling on Israel to fulfill its obligations under international law.” It predicted: “If the current blockade and insufficient levels of donor support persist, even with a reversion to the status quo that prevailed before the latest military operation, Gaza will become economically unviable...” pp.14–15.

- Debates about divestment within the denomination over the past decade have mistakenly treated divestment primarily as an economic rather than political strategy and, therefore, treated positive investment as an alternative to divestment. ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-06—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that the 222nd General Assembly (2016) approve Item 08-06 with comment.

In paragraph two, the overture states “Since 1949, the church has taken public positions on the situation, supporting Israel as a safe homeland for Jews but also calling for just treatment for Palestinians, including Palestinian refugees.” This statement of the PC(USA) and many others similar to it are reminiscent of the British Balfour Declaration of 1917: “His Majesty’s Government view with favour the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavours to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine.”¹ In this declaration, “the Palestinians were never once cited by name, whether as Palestinians, Arabs, Christians, or Muslims and were referred to only as “non-Jewish communities,” possessing solely civil and religious rights; their national and political rights were not mentioned.”²

The Balfour Declaration was issued at a time when Palestine had a large majority (over 92 percent) population of Christians and Muslims. It ushered in to what was to become a 100 year war against the Palestinian people waged by the West—Europe and the United States. At the time of the Balfour Declaration in 1917, Palestine was suffering from famine due to the Ottoman’s confiscation of foodstuffs for their war effort in Palestine against the British in which 65,000 people died.³ Food aid was sent to Palestine from the Western nations. However this aid was mainly to help the small Jewish population.⁴ After the British took Palestine, their colonial “passification” targeted the Arab population and British thuggery was surpassed only by the Zionist Israelis following the departure of the British Police from Palestine in 1948.⁵ “As colonists, the Israelis after 1948 adopted British imperial policies in their dealings with the Arabs—the British were, after all, experts in such things—instituting collective punishments and abusing the local Arabs, often, in the same torture centres established under the [British] Mandate government.”⁶

Israel came into being at the point of the gun and has “international recognition” as the overture states because the Truman Administration recognized Israel almost within minutes of its declaration of statehood. Israel exists and continues to exist due to the continuing U. S. and European backing. With this beginning, how can this overture refer to “legitimacy” (in paragraph 6 of the overture) or “danger of losing moral legitimacy” when referring to the State of Israel?

Moreover, (part 2 under the “Oslo Challenges”) the overtures mentions the Jewish “diaspora of the first and second centuries.” As far as we know, there has been no documented large-scale Jewish exodus from Palestine during the first and second centuries; rather it is believed that with the ascendancy of Christianity and the Byzantine control of Palestine, the majority of Palestine’s population accepted Christianity. This overture, if it is to refer to “diaspora of the first and second centuries” must document this statement with accepted historical references.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s continued statement that it supports the existence of Israel appears to be a tacit approval of the way Israel was born and is a sin against the Palestinian People. The church must confess and repent.

All this being said, the reality is that Israel exists and is a member state of the United Nations. This overture represents a positive step forward in its documentation of Israel’s human rights violations against the Palestinian people. Its orientation towards addressing the appalling human rights abuses in Palestine is positive as well as its stance on the question of whether continued support of a two-state solution is productive considering the realities of the Israeli government’s expansion of settlements within the Palestinian territories it has gained by the violence of war.

This overture, with the deletions recommended here, represents a positive move forward in the position of the church on Palestine/Israel; therefore ACREC advises approval of this overture with the indicated revisions.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 08-06

Comment on Item 08-06—From the Board of Pensions (BOP).

The Board of Pensions respectfully requests that the General Assembly refer Item 08-06, Recommendation 2.e.(1) to the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI).

The Board of Pensions notes that—in the section above the recommendations—the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) quotes the 217th General Assembly (2006) statement that “... financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, [should] be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investments of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal.”

If the church wishes to revisit the 2006 statement to further address corporate behaviors in the Middle East, MRTI is the proper place for those issues to be addressed.

Item 08-07

[The assembly approved Item 08-07 with amendment. See pp. 60, 62.]

On Prayerfully Studying the Palestinian Civil Society Call for Boycott, Divestment, and Sanctions (BDS)—From the Presbytery of New Hope.

The Presbytery of New Hope overtures the 222nd General Assembly (2016) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Prayerfully study the call from Palestinian civil society for boycott, divestment, and sanctions (BDS) against the state of Israel [as well as resources that oppose this BDS movement] (see “additional resources” after the Rationale section of this overture for full text of the call).

2. Engage in ecumenical and interfaith dialogue with the authors and signatories of this document, including our historic church partners in Palestine [and our interfaith partners who oppose the BDS movement], in order to better understand and interpret the call for BDS that was issued in 2005.

3. Serve as a prophetic witness with a voice of humility and wisdom amidst the controversy and confusion around the BDS call.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Mission Agency to facilitate dialogue events regarding BDS, which would include the authors of the 2005 civil society call [and our interfaith partners who oppose the BDS movement] and any interested Presbyterians.

5. Direct the Stated Clerk to distribute, for prayerful study, the text of the Palestinian call [and documentation from interfaith partners who oppose the BDS movement] to all PC(USA) congregations.

Rationale

A broad array of organizations across Palestinian civil society issued a call in July 2005 “for boycott, divestment, and sanctions against Israel until it complies with international law and universal principles of human rights.” Endorsed by organizations within the occupied Palestinian territories, among the Palestinian refugee population, and within Israel, the call emphasizes that boycott, divestment, and sanctions are non-violent punitive measures [that] should be maintained until Israel meets its obligation to recognize the Palestinian people’s inalienable right to self-determination and fully complies with the precepts of international law by:

- Ending its occupation and colonization of all Arab lands and dismantling the Wall;
- Recognizing the fundamental rights of the Arab-Palestinian citizens of Israel to full equality; and
- Respecting, protecting and promoting the rights of Palestinian refugees to return to their homes and properties as stipulated in UN resolution 194.

Over the past decade, this call has become one of the most significant, controversial, and misunderstood human rights movements of our time.

Item 04-04 of the 221st General Assembly (2014), which called for divestment from Hewlett Packard, Caterpillar, and Motorola Solutions, explicitly states, “This action on divestment is not to be construed or represented by any organization of the PC(USA) as divestment from the State of Israel, or an alignment with or endorsement of the global BDS (Boycott, Divest and Sanctions) movement” (Minutes, 2014, Part I, p. 261).

While upholding this position of the church, it is important to recognize that thousands of other institutions and individuals dedicated to a just peace in Israel/Palestine, including many of our ecumenical and interfaith partners, are, in fact, aligning with and endorsing the BDS movement.

In order to better comprehend the multiplicity of peacemaking efforts in the Middle East and many of our partners’ roles in these struggles, it is essential that we understand the content of the call for BDS and the context in which this movement has emerged.

The 219th General Assembly (2010) commended for study the Kairos Palestine document (“A Moment of Truth: A Word of Faith Hope and Love from the Heart of Palestinian Suffering”), which represents the Palestinian Christian endorsement of the BDS call. As the voice of every Christian denomination in Palestine, the Kairos document is a vitally important interpretation of and response to the call for BDS. But the Palestinian Christian community is just one of many Palestinian groups that endorsed BDS. And the Kairos document gives us only a partial picture of this broader movement. As children of God also suffering from the Israeli occupation, inequality within Israel, and exile as refugees, the rest of Palestinian civil society deserves that we at least prayerfully listen to and understand their call—even if we do not endorse it.

To further clarify the intentions and parameters of the BDS movement, there is a need for expansive interfaith and ecumenical dialogue with the authors and signatories of the original 2005 call. Indeed, we cannot fully understand the significance of the BDS call without actively engaging those to whom it is most relevant.

Finally, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has long played an important role as witness to peacemaking efforts in the Middle East. In the spirit of this tradition, the church needs to serve as a prophetic voice of wisdom and humility amidst the cacophony of reactions to the BDS call. Through a prayerful study of the call for BDS and engaged dialogue with its authors, the church has the opportunity to serve as a gentle voice of love, hope, and reconciliation.

Palestinian Civil Society Calls for Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions against Israel Until it Complies with International Law and Universal Principles of Human Rights

9 July 2005

One year after the historic Advisory Opinion of the International Court of Justice (ICJ) which found Israel’s Wall built on occupied Palestinian territory to be illegal; Israel continues its construction of the colonial Wall with total disregard to the Court’s decision. Thirty eight years into Israel’s occupation of the Palestinian West Bank (including East Jerusalem), Gaza Strip and the Syrian Golan Heights, Israel continues to expand Jewish colonies. It has unilaterally annexed occupied East Jerusalem and the Golan Heights and is now de facto annexing large parts of the West Bank by means of the Wall. Israel is also preparing – in the shadow of its planned redeployment from the Gaza Strip – to build and expand colonies in the West Bank. Fifty seven years after the state of Israel was built mainly on land ethnically cleansed of its Palestinian owners, a majority of Palestinians are refugees, most of whom are stateless. Moreover, Israel’s entrenched system of racial discrimination against its own Arab-Palestinian citizens remains intact.

In light of Israel’s persistent violations of international law; and

Given that, since 1948, hundreds of UN resolutions have condemned Israel’s colonial and discriminatory policies as illegal and called for immediate, adequate and effective remedies; and

Given that all forms of international intervention and peace-making have until now failed to convince or force Israel to comply with humanitarian law, to respect fundamental human rights and to end its occupation and oppression of the people of Palestine; and

In view of the fact that people of conscience in the international community have historically shouldered the moral responsibility to fight injustice, as exemplified in the struggle to abolish apartheid in South Africa through diverse forms of boycott, divestment and sanctions; and

Inspired by the struggle of South Africans against apartheid and in the spirit of international solidarity, moral consistency and resistance to injustice and oppression;
