Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Head of the Church, used the Scriptures to teach his followers about himself (Luke 4:16–21, 24:27) and the great commandments for eternal life of loving God and neighbor (Mark 10:28–31).

The gospel was written “so that you may come to believe that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God, and that through believing you may have life in his name (John 20:30).

Jesus Christ told his followers “Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them to obey everything that I have commanded you. And remember, I am with you always, to the end of the age” (Matt. 28:19–20).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in its confessions affirms the Bible “to be the rule of faith and life” (The Book of Confessions, Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.002) and “The same Spirit who inspired the prophets and apostles rules our faith and life in Christ through Scripture (Ibid, A Brief Statement of Faith, 10.4).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirms the importance of the study and interpretation of the Bible,

The one sufficient revelation of God is Jesus Christ, the Word of God incarnate, to whom the Holy Spirit bears unique and authoritative witness through the Holy Scriptures, which are received and obeyed as the word of God written. The Scriptures are not a witness among others, but the witness without parallel. The church has received the books of the Old and New Testaments as prophetic and apostolic testimony in which it hears the word of God and by which its faith and obedience are nourished and regulated...The Bible is to be interpreted in the light of its witness to God’s work of reconciliation in Christ. The Scriptures, given under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, are nevertheless the words of men, conditioned by the language, thought forms, and literary fashions of the places and times at which they were written. They reflect views of life, history, and the cosmos which were then current. The church, therefore, has an obligation to approach the Scriptures with literary and historical understanding. As God has spoken his word in diverse cultural situations, the church is confident that he will continue to speak through the Scriptures in a changing world and in every form of human culture” (Ibid, The Confession of 1967, 9.27, 9.29)

The “church affirms “Ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda,” that is, “The church reformed, always reforming,” according to the Word of God and the call of the Spirit (Book of Order, G-2.0200),

The church encourages the use of Scripture in personal worship because “Scripture is the record of God’s self-revelation through which the Holy Spirit speaks to bear witness to Jesus Christ and to give authoritative direction for the life of faith. Personal worship centers upon Scripture as one reads and listens for God’s Spirit to speak. One may read Scripture for the guidance, support, comfort, encouragement, and challenge which the Word of God presents. One may study the Scriptures to understand them in their literary forms and in their historical and cultural contexts in order to hear the Word of God more clearly and to obey more faithfully (W-5.3001–.3002).

The excellent commentaries published by Westminster/John Knox Press (Interpretation, Westminster Bible Companion, Daily Study Bible by William Barclay, N.T. Wright and others) are rarely displayed at popular, large bookstores like Borders or Barnes & Noble or even “Christian” bookstores.

In April 2004 it was reported nearly two-thirds of online Americans use the Internet for faith-related reasons. The 64 percent of Internet users who perform spiritual and religious activities online represent nearly 82 million Americans according to a new national survey by the Pew Internet & American Life Project (see May 19th Presbyterian News Service report at <http://www.pcusa.org/pcnews/2004/04236.htm> and the “Faith Online” report at http://www.pewinternet.org/pdfs/PIP\_Faith\_Online\_2004.pdf).

The Presbyterian Panel reported that half the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and a majority of elders access the Internet daily or more often (Background Report 2003–2005 Presbyterian Panel, p. 16, but there is not a free, online commentary to the whole Bible).

The Internet is an increasing useful tool for the church to help people learn about the Bible, Jesus Christ, and the Christian life and because of its worldwide appeal can be assist the church in following the Great Commission (Matt. 28:16–20).

Our Presbyterian tradition has always placed a strong emphasis on the importance of the Bible for daily living. The development of such an online resource would enrich the countless lives of Presbyterians and potentially millions of others.

The editorial committee for an on-line Bible commentary could do their work online without having to meet in person. These gifted volunteers would represent the diversity in the church and encourage the commentary to also have differing views. Controversial biblical passages could present differing interpretations to witness that good people of faith can differ.

There need not be any cost to the church for the development of this online Bible commentary, but many rewards:

1. The minor expense for the Web site for the online Bible commentary could be donated Presbyterian Publishing House (that would benefit from the promotion and sales of its books) or other supporters of the project.
2. Volunteers are ready scan the out of print Layman’s Bible Commentaries for posting online. Volunteers with computer expertise would enjoy using their gifts for the work of the church as well.
3. Local PC(USA) churches could link to their congregation’s Web sites to the online Bible commentary knowing it offers quality resource for their church members. These members would have a chance to see resources (online and in print) that can nurture their faith and life.
4. People surfing the Internet and using the online Bible commentary might want to check out the local congregation mentioned on the Web site.
5. The free online commentary makes a resource available to those who might not be able to afford such resources otherwise. The poor in this country and overseas would be helped.

6. The online Bible commentary would be accessible worldwide and thus help in the church's global mission effort to share the gospel.

7. The project can be a unifying one for Presbyterians. This shared service project can be supported by conservatives, liberals, and everyone else who understands the need to increase biblical literacy and Christian discipleship today.

[The assembly disapproved Item 08-17 and noted the comment from the GAC. See p. 18.]

Commissioners' Resolution. Regarding the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Call for Presbyterians to Lead a Simpler Life.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do the following:

1. Create an environment within the PC(USA) presbyteries and churches, and for Presbyterian followers of Christ, to lead a simpler life in the United States of America.

2. Direct the Moderator to issue a letter to fellow Presbyterians explaining the rationale for the simpler life.

3. Research and distribute a reading list on the subject of a simple life through appropriate PC(USA) channels: for example, a study group format during the Lenten period to be widely distributed within our denomination.

4. Set an objective to stop and then reduce the gap within the affluent and the poor in the U.S.A. and most especially in the underdeveloped nations in the southern hemisphere.

Rationale

“Do not store up for yourselves treasures on earth ...” (Matt. 6:19).

“No one can serve two masters; for a slave will either hate the one and love the other, or be devoted to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve both God and wealth” (Matt. 6:24).

“But strive first for the kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things will be given to you as well” (Matt. 6:33).

... “Teacher,” he said, “what must I do to inherit eternal life?” He said to him, ... [Love] your neighbor as yourself” (Luke 10:25).

“For the whole law is summed up in a single commandment, ‘You shall love your neighbor as yourself.’ If, however, you bite and devour one another, take care that you are not consumed by one another” (Gal. 5:14–15).

In these Scriptures, Jesus and Paul make clear the command and the benefit to lead a simpler life. By treating our fellow human beings equally, we will follow the call of this 216th General Assembly (2004) (that all may have life in fullness, John 10:10b).

By leading the simpler life, we will have a fuller life guided by the Spirit.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 08-17

Comment on Item 08-17—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council (GAC) welcomes the attention that this commissioners' resolution brings to the encouragement of simpler lifestyles. We believe that several components of the requested action are already in place. The GAC suggests that the most effective approach to accomplishing the commissioners' intent would be a communication from the assembly that calls Presbyterians to use existing programs as resources in a journey toward simpler, more faithful lifestyles.

Encouragement of simpler, less consumption-oriented, living finds expression in various programs of the General Assembly Council. The Spiritual Formation office commends simplicity as a spiritual practice; the Stewardship Education office interprets simpler living as a matter of Christian stewardship; and the Presbyterian Hunger Program encourages simpler lifestyles as a way to assure that all people share in God's abundance. All see a commitment to simpler lives as an expression of Christian discipleship.

The Presbyterian Hunger Program supports and promotes the work of the ecumenical organization Alternatives for Simple Living and distributes its "Whose Birthday Is It Anyway?" resource each year as an encouragement to a simpler observance of Christmas. Alternatives' resources deal with many dimensions of simpler lifestyles, from wedding plans to energy conservation.

For the past three years, several programs of the General Assembly Council have jointly sponsored the Enough for Everyone program, which promotes a related approach to congregational lifestyles. Through the Presbyterian Coffee Project, Sweat-Free T-Shirts, Electric Stewardship, and Investing in Hope, congregations are invited to engage in activities that represent a more just participation in the global economy.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) direct the Office of the General Assembly and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to initiate the following ecumenical conversations and studies in preparation for the centennial of the 1908 Social Creed of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.:

1. That the Office of the General Assembly initiate consideration of a celebration of that prophetic and influential "social creed" within the National Council of Churches of Christ and other appropriate bodies, honoring the role the Presbyterian and other Protestant denominations played in advocating an end to child labor, the six-day week, occupational safety, a living wage, and other concerns that a "Christ-like God" was believed to want for all Americans.

2. That the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy initiate a survey of key Christian principles to guide 21st century Presbyterians and others in addressing major and likely future concerns, such as the lack of health insurance for 44 million Americans, the outsourcing of jobs to countries without human rights or environmental safeguards, and the impact of growing economic inequality on our democracy, using cost-effective measures such as the Presbyterian Panel, literature surveys, and the use of volunteer experts, and informed by past General Assembly statements.

3. That these bodies and other appropriate agencies of our denomination develop recommendations for the 217th General Assembly (2006) concerning the possible goals, basic commitments, and effectiveness of an updated social creed for the 21st century.

[4. This work should be coordinated with the Office of Theology and Worship.]

Rationale

We take for granted today many of the gains won by concerned Christians in previous generations, people who helped make our country a land of opportunity and a beacon of hope to the world. The goal of the 1908 creed was clear: "...to lift the crushing burdens of the poor, and to reduce the hardships and uphold the dignity of labor, this Council sends the greeting of human brotherhood and the pledge of sympathy and of help in a cause which belongs to all who follow Christ." The creed briefly developed fourteen positive points: "For the suppression of the 'sweating system'"; "For a release from employment one day in seven"; "For a living wage as a minimum"; "For suitable provision for the old age..."; and ends, "For the abatement of poverty."

Certainly the 1908 creed was idealistic, but it was also very concrete. It gained force because it prompted prayer and discussion, not only in the churches, but in government and industry. The church used its voice on matters of principle and was respected for it. The topics of industrialization, urbanization, and mass immigration were not simple. The churches—with strong Presbyterian leadership—helped raised the standards so that families could live decently in a country dedicated to more than unlimited greed or consumption. The churches themselves were helped indirectly, as churches for the educated middle class depend on there being an educated middle class, even in a high-tech economy.

The model of a clear statement of Christian principles still seems valuable, especially in this climate of globalization, secularization, and the host of special interests using the influence of wealth on politics. Jesus' call, in Matthew 5 and Luke 4, remains our standard and bottom line. Jesus was also not afraid to take the lead. This is a way for the church to stand up for Christ's values, and to focus on those basics in a nonpartisan way.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-18

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-18—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Item 08-18 calls on the General Assembly to direct the Office of the General Assembly and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to initiate ecumenical conversations and studies in preparation for the centennial of the 1908 Social Creed of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

The ACSWP advises approval of Item 08-18.

Rationale

The 1908 Social Creed is a statement of social principles created by a number of Protestant denominations in cooperative effort led by Presbyterians. Over subsequent decades the churches, acting on the fourteen principles, promoted improved wages, regulation of sweatshops, Sabbath rest from work, abatement of poverty, and the beginning of provision for old-age pensions.

There is a rich history in connection with the social principles including the improved education of church members and gains in church membership. This history is relevant to the current struggles of economic globalization and current ministries of Presbyterian churches in relation to immigration issues, living wages, community organizing, social security, health care, job outsourcing, and family life.

Furthermore, the 211th General Assembly (1999) approved the policy statement, Building Community Among Strangers, which called for bilateral and multilateral consultations with other Christian denominations and local ecumenical efforts (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 404).

[The assembly disapproved Item 08-19. See p. 18.]

That the 216th General Assembly (2004), recognizing that one of the great ends of the church (G-1.0200) is the preservation of the truth, do the following:

1. Affirm the historical Christian faith and declare that the novel, The Da Vinci Code by Dan Brown, contains many distortions that can lead people to question their faith and be weakened in their belief.
2. Call upon churches to use novels like this one as instruments of education and re-education into Christian essentials.

Rationale

The Da Vinci Code by Dan Brown continues to be the number one selling novel in America, having sold more than six million copies. Although it is plainly a novel, it opens with this statement (in part): “FACT: all descriptions of artwork, architecture, documents, and secret rituals in this novel are accurate” (page 1). Many Christians and non-Christians are being misled about the nature of Jesus Christ, the history of the church, and the basis of our historical faith by this book.

For instance, on page 233 the character Teabing declares, “Jesus’ establishment as ‘the son of God’ was officially proposed and voted on by the Council of Nicaea ... until that moment in history, Jesus was viewed by his followers as a mortal prophet ... a great and powerful man, but a man nonetheless. A mortal” (italics as in the novel). The Gospels and Paul’s epistles affirmed the divinity of Jesus long before the Council of Nicaea in 325 A.D. (See Col. 1:15–20; John 1:1, 14; Matt. 16:16.) Many early church leaders such as Ignatius (105 A.D.), Clement (150 A.D.), and Justin Martyr (160 A.D.) also affirm the divinity of Jesus.

This is just one example of the numerous distortions and outright heretical views expressed in the novel. Far from being harmless, one family could not reaffirm their faith because of being caught up in the distortions of the book. Others have been distressed, puzzled, and alarmed by the statements of this book.

To preserve the truth, we must stand up against falsehood and point out error. This book is doing harm to the Body of Christ and the church should say so and warn people about the distortions presented here.

Item 08-Info

A. Committee on Theological Education

1. Assigned Responsibilities

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) has responsibility for developing and maintaining a comprehensive plan for theological education from the perspective of the whole church. The committee seeks to identify, develop, and propose strategies for a systemic approach to theological education within the denomination.

The committee serves as an advocate for theological education, seeking to support the seminaries and to strengthen them for their mission to the whole church. The Committee on Theological Education can be seen as a two-way communication link between the denomination and its graduate theological institutions. Voting members of the committee include thirteen people elected to represent the church at large and a representative from each of the ten seminaries related directly to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Corresponding members of COTE, who serve with voice but no vote, include: representatives from Auburn Theological Seminary and from the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico (both institutions related to the General Assembly through covenant agreements negotiated every five years), a representative of the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation, and representatives of two non-Presbyterian seminaries.

2. Accomplishments

a. Interschool and Seminary/Church Cooperation

In cooperation with the Interschool and Mission Cooperation Subcommittee of COTE, the PC(USA) seminaries continue to seek creative ways to work more closely together and in collaboration with other entities of the denomination. Currently the seminaries are cooperating on an interschool project that is designed to raise awareness of the ministry as a vocation among college and university students. Through COTE, the seminaries contributed moneys to help launch the Presbyterian Pastoral Leadership Search Effort (PLSE) in 2003. The seminaries are also involved in a variety of projects in cooperation with various offices representing all three divisions of the General Assembly Council, the Office of General Assembly, and the Board of Pensions.

A task group with representation from the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Ordination, Churchwide Personnel Services, and COTE made progress in coordination of data related to candidates/inquirers and addressed other issues of mutual concern. Recommendations made by the task group are being implemented by the various entities and by a ministry staff team that was established in 2003. Continuing collaboration of the three entities is expected.

The Office of the General Assembly, San Francisco Theological Seminary, and COTE continue to sponsor a class for seminarians entitled "Presbyterianism: Principles and Practices" during General Assembly each year. Each January, COTE also sponsors, in cooperation with Louisville Theological Seminary and the General Assembly Council, a January-term course for seminarians entitled "Leaders for a Connectional Church: Congregations and the General Assembly." Letters sent by the office of theological education have encouraged presbytery committees on preparation for ministry to urge candidates under their care to take advantage of these opportunities to learn firsthand about the program and polity of our denomination.

Some of the groups of individuals representing the various schools that have come together for mutual planning and information sharing during this academic year include the institutions' presidents, deans of student affairs, financial aid officers, continuing education staff and faculty, development officers, placement officers, communication directors, admission officers, field education directors, ethics and social witness faculty, urban ministry professors, and academic deans. There was also a consultation on theological education and racism sponsored by the PC(USA) office of racial ethnic ministries.

b. Funding for Seminaries Related to the PC(USA)

Implementation and interpretation of the Theological Education Fund (1% Plan), which is the sole source of denomination-wide support for the ten PC(USA) seminaries and the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico, continues to be an important task for COTE and the office of theological education. In 2002, approximately 23 percent of PC(USA) congregations made voluntary contributions to the Theological Education Fund (TEF). As a result, $2,503,435 in TEF moneys were distributed to eligible schools in 2003 according to a formula developed and monitored by the COTE Institutional Review Subcommittee on which only members-at-large sit.

"For Generations to Come: Seminaries and Churches Together" continues to be the theme for interpretation of the seminaries on behalf of the Theological Education Fund. The Theological Education Funding Network is made up of more than 160 enthusiastic representatives from presbyteries and synods. Participation at network training conferences continues to grow. Three TEF area facilitators and sixteen regional representatives continue to work on a contract basis to make possible improved regional coordination for the TEF Funding Network. Pastors, clerks of sessions, and designated contact persons in PC(USA) congregations received interpretive materials urging support of the Theological Education Fund.

In cooperation with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, active promotion of the Theological Schools Endowment Fund has continued. The Theological Schools Endowment Fund provides opportunity for individuals to contribute moneys for benefit of our Presbyterian seminaries. It differs from the Theological Education Fund (1% Plan) that provides a way for congregations to contribute moneys to be divided among all Presbyterian seminaries on an equitable basis.

c. Charter Changes in Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Theological Institutions

One of the governance functions assigned to COTE by the Report of the Special Committee on Theological Institutions approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986) is the reporting of charter changes by the individual schools to the General Assembly. Only one seminary reported changes in the charters or other constitutional documents during 2003. The Committee on Theological Education will have the full text of the new charters available for the assembly committee to which this report will be referred.

In October of 2003, the Board of Trustees of San Francisco Theological Seminary voted to change the name of the Advancement Committee to Seminary and Church Relations Committee and the bylaws were amended to reflect that change. The reason for the change was because the title for the vice president for Advancement had been changed to vice president of Seminary and Church Relations because the seminary felt it better reflected the work of the office.

d. Reports from Individual Institutions

The Committee on Theological Education brings to the assembly a narrative report from each of the ten seminaries related to the PC(USA), Auburn Theological Seminary, the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico, and the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation.

(1) Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary

Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary's 2003–2004 academic year—the first full year under the leadership of President Theodore J. Wardlaw—saw significant events in the life of the institution. Dr. Michael Jenkins was inaugurated as professor of pastoral theology and elected academic dean. Austin Seminary's College of Pastoral Leaders (funded by a grant from Lilly Foundation, Inc.), under the direction of Principal Janet Maykus and Director of Professional Development Nancy Chester McCranie, accepted its first class of cohort groups. The seminary welcomed two faculty members: Assistant Professor of Pastoral Care Allan Hugh Cole Jr. and Zbinden Professor of Pastoral Ministry Louis H. Zbinden Jr.; two additional faculty searches were conducted. The year also saw the acquisition of a notable journal, Horizons in Biblical Theology.

(2) Columbia Theological Seminary

Columbia began its 176th year with the largest incoming class in twenty years. The seminary has launched a dual-degree program through which students may earn the M. Div. degree from Columbia and the M.S. in Urban Policy Studies from Georgia State University, combining studies in theology and public policy. Thanks to a Lilly grant, we have a collaborative, peer group, action-learning project designed to help pastors sustain excellence in ministry. Recent appointments to the faculty and administration include Stephen A. Hayner, Peachtree Associate Professor of Evangelism and Church Growth; Maggi Henderson, dean of students and vice president of student services; Harvey Newman, director of the Faith and the City program to develop public leadership; William P. Brown, professor of Old Testament; and David L. Bartlett, professor of New Testament.

(3) University of Dubuque Theological Seminary

The University of Dubuque Theological Seminary is committed to preparing women and men for faithful and effective pastoral and lay ministry. In pursuit of this mission the seminary has formed UDTSLearning.net, an online education program for commissioned lay pastors (CLPs). Almost 400 students representing more than sixty presbyteries across the nation have taken courses through this program. At least ten new students enter the program each month. Currently all eight courses required by the Book of Order for CLPs are offered online. In addition, UDTSlarning.net is expanding its offering of upper-level courses for continuing education of those serving as CLPs. For information visit UDTSlarning.net.

(4) Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary

Dr. Milton J Coalter served as acting president from December 2002–July 2003. Dr. John W. Kuykendall became interim president in August 2003. In April 2003, the presidential search committee commissioned a study on “How is Louisville Seminary Perceived?” With approximately 1,400 responses, this study provided one basis for a position description for the new president. The current timetable provides for the calling of a new president by the summer of 2004. We welcomed Kerry Rice as the interim director of admissions, Lisa Cromer as the director of alumni/ae relations, James Hyde as the interim director of the Marriage and Family Therapy Program, and Garnett Foster graciously agreed to serve as interim director of Field Education. During 2002–2003, our faculty published eleven books.

(5) McCormick Theological Seminary

McCormick Theological Seminary began this academic year with a new curriculum within a semester system. Previously McCormick had been on the quarter system. The shift to semesters is part of a curricular change in which the seminary seeks to highlight its most salient features: Reformed, ecumenical, urban, and cross-cultural. McCormick continues to settle into its new building set next to the Lutheran School of Theology at Chicago, with whom we enjoy an increasingly closer collaboration. During the fall semester, President Cynthia Campbell was on a sabbatical leave to work on a project on how McCormick can best engage with the myriad of interfaith issues confronting theological education today. She returned in January 2004.

(6) Pittsburgh Theological Seminary

Pittsburgh Theological Seminary welcomed its largest incoming class in more than two decades, with 25 percent of the class less than twenty-five years of age. The Summer Youth Institute continues to encourage high school youth to consider ministry as a vocation. Past participants have enrolled in several PC(USA) seminaries. The new residence hall has met with enthusiasm on campus with student floors filled to capacity and continuing education participants enjoying the guest rooms. The seminary and Shadyside Presbyterian Church have formed an innovative pastor/professor partnership, where the Reverend Dr. M. Craig Barnes, Meneilly Professor of Leadership and Ministry at the seminary, has also become pastor at the Shadyside Presbyterian Church. The seminary will soon complete an intensive planning process that will guide future capital enhancements and program emphasis.

(7) Princeton Theological Seminary

Princeton Theological Seminary welcomed Gordon S. Mikoski to its faculty as instructor in Christian Education. The first Joe R. Engle Preaching Institute, designed to nurture and strengthen the craft of those who preach in a variety of contexts, was held in June, with forty-one Engle Fellows from the seminary’s M.Div. classes of 1996 and 1997 participating. The new parking facility was dedicated in May. Also in May, President Thomas W. Gillespie announced his retirement in June of 2004, and the board of trustees appointed a search committee to name his successor.

(8) San Francisco Theological Seminary

San Francisco Theological Seminary (SFTS), in the second year under the leadership of Philip W. Butin, began work to strengthen ties between the seminary and local churches. These relationships are providing an important focus for a new strategic planning process. Using the mission statement as its foundation, the strategic plan emphasizes “wholeness,” which has led to a new positioning statement for SFTS: “Whole leaders for the whole Church.” Jana L. Childers, was installed as dean and vice president for Academic Affairs in early September. The M.Div. and MATS enrollment continues to be strong. On the SFTS Southern California campus, numerous new students are drawn to the nonresidential, congregationally based, multiethnic, and multilingual program.

(9) Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary

Johnson C. Smith reached another milestone with fifty-four seminarians enrolled for the 2003–2004 academic year. The student population is more diverse than ever with eleven Brazilians, seven Caucasians, five Africans, and the majority comprised of African Americans. Also, representation is increasing among female and younger aged seminarians. Most students are involved in the practice of ministry while pursuing degrees. For example, three students are living in the East Lake Community working with the Faith in the City Project, mentoring community youth. The number one challenge facing the seminary is fundraising. The blessing of a larger student enrollment has come at a time when our budget is impacted by increases in student fees and the downturn in the economy.

(10) Union Theological Seminary and Presbyterian School of Christian Education

Enrollment at Union-PSCE in 2003–2004 climbed to 397 students, the highest combined total for Union and PSCE in several decades. The strength of the seminary's extension program in Charlotte, N.C., is one reason for the growth, but enrollment increased on the Richmond campus also. In Charlotte, sixty students are working toward a master of divinity or master of arts in Christian education degree. New faculty members have been added at both campuses to begin in Fall 2004. Advanced video conferencing technology has strengthened communication between the two campuses; it will soon play a greater role in teaching and instruction.

(11) Auburn Theological Seminary

Auburn Theological Seminary, which was founded in 1818 to provide hardy Presbyterian ministers for the frontier, launched a major new program this year in that same frontier spirit. The New York Sabbatical Institute, organized jointly with New York Theological Seminary and Union Seminary in New York and supported by a grant of $824,630 from Lilly Endowment, Inc., involves sixty pastors meeting over a two-year period. The participants were selected because they show high promise and because they fall into categories deemed to be "at risk": young pastors, women, solo pastors, urban ministers, and those who lead churches in transition. They will work with faculty facilitators, experienced "Legacy Pastors," and professional coaches to become better grounded for ministry that both lasts a lifetime and is responsive to changing contexts.

(12) Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico

The Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico academic year represents once again an occasion to serve God and his Kingdom through theological education. During this year, we have had the visit of important worldwide recognized theologians, such as, Dr. Juan J. Tamayo, from Spain, and Joseph Comblin from Brazil. In August of 2003, we initiated the doctor of ministry program. We are organizing the anniversary celebration number eighty-five of the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico.

(13) Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation

The Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Omaha, which closed at the request of the General Assembly in 1943, continues as the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation (OPSF) in 2004. The purpose is similar to that of the former teaching seminary, though OPSF has no resident faculty, student body, or campus. The Foundation today provides scholarships for seminary students, sponsors continuing education programs for ordained ministers, and conducts an annual Pastor's School at Hastings College. In 2002, the foundation contributed the following amounts to help underwrite leadership development programs for the PC(USA): continuing education programs sponsored by PC(USA) entities and the Foundation, $121,691; aid to students attending PC(USA) seminaries, $91,750; grants to seminaries and other church entities, $2,000; for a total of $215,441.

B. *Office of Theology and Worship: A Report to the Church

How can the church fulfill its calling to worship God, think responsibly about its faith, and be obedient to God in all areas of life? As a ministry to the whole church, conducted within the Congregational Ministries Division of the General Assembly Council, the Office of Theology and Worship provides services and resources that help congregations strive for integrity in theology, worship, and mission.

Pastors are among the church's most precious and critical resources. The well-being of pastors directly affects the welfare of the entire church. It is vitally important that pastors maintain personal reservoirs to supply the energy, intelligence, imagination, and love that their vocation requires. The Office of Theology and Worship commits significant resources to help pastors and other church leaders claim the church's calling to think, pray, and live the gospel in contemporary North American culture.

The Office of Theology and Worship's service to pastors has been supported generously by the Lilly Endowment, Inc. More than $4.2 million in grants enables Theology and Worship to provide significant pastoral leadership programs that would not have been possible within the General Assembly Council budget. The "Pastor Theologian Program" and "Excellence From the Start," coupled with the "Company of Pastors" have afforded hundreds of pastors with the opportunity to know and strengthen the heart of their vocation.

Two new grants from the Lilly Endowment, Inc. provide the Office of Theology and Worship with enhanced possibilities for service. "Re-Forming Ministry" and the "Company of New Pastors" are significant initiatives that promise to have long-term effect on the shape of ministry in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

1. The Shape of Ministry

Good ministry develops from the complex interaction of ecclesial discernment, appropriate practices, spiritual wholeness, professional priorities, and personal integrity. Underlying all of these, however, is the capacity to explore the foundations of Christian faith so that the congregation can be nurtured in mature belief, confident trust, and faithful living. Apart from a deeply theological vocation, pastoral practices can become matters of ministerial technique or institutional marketing. The theological vocation of pastors is not a narrow concern for academic abstraction, for it encompasses a range of spiritual, intellectual, and communal practices that generate the development of congregational life shaped by the gospel.

Contemporary pastors are beset by a bewildering range of congregational and denominational expectations. Demands on pastors' time and energy include regular visitation and successful stewardship programs, membership growth and an efficient committee structure, presbytery service and good sermons, community outreach and an attractive program for children and youth. The list is endless.

The difficulty goes deeper, however. Beneath every demand on time and energy lies the reality that the vocational core of ministry is no longer discernible. Because the church does not have a cohesive understanding of ministry that can be shared by pastors in congregational settings, pastors are presented with an unstable bundle of disparate images, each depicting the essence of ministry: preacher . . . teacher . . . community builder . . . programmer . . . marketer . . . therapist . . . change agent . . . caregiver . . . manager . . . entrepreneur . . . the list goes on! These images are more than another collection of tasks, however. They are comprehensive models of ministry that offer competing options without a compelling rationale for choice.

Excellence in pastoral ministry is grounded in the central theological vocation of all ministry—serious, sustained attention to the core of Christian faith. The theological vocation of pastors should not be confused with academic vocation. Rather, the church's ministry is constituted by the calling to know, understand, and set forth the gospel through Word and Sacrament. Good ministry involves many personal qualities and organizational activities for which there are generally accepted criteria. Unless these qualities and activities are shaped by the gospel, however, they are not characteristics of good ministry.

Serious, sustained attention to the core of Christian faith is the sine qua non of good ministry. Ministry's indispensable focus on the core of Christian faith is sustained by discrete marks of pastoral excellence.

- Discernment: Ministers are called to disciplined apprehension of the gospel, the culture, and the church. Such apprehension depends upon continuous probing of Scripture and tradition, ongoing analysis of contemporary culture, and persistent analysis of the wider church and the actual congregation.
- Practices: Ministers engage in a broad range of Christian practices and a narrower range of specifically pastoral practices. These practices are diverse, ranging through reading, care for the body, hospitality, visiting the sick, and more. Christian practices become specifically pastoral practices as they are focused by the calling to discernment. Christian practices embody the gospel. Thus, discernment shapes and is shaped by intentional Christian ministerial practices.
- Spiritual Wholeness: Pastoral ministry is “a hard way to make a living.” Good ministers are aware of their need to receive grace, love, and communion as well as give it. Spiritual disciplines—grounded in Scripture and prayer—are essential elements that nourish pastors’ faith, engender pastors’ hope, and prompt pastors’ love.
- Priorities: It is a managerial truism that successful workers are able to prioritize. The priorities of good ministry, however, are shaped less by organizational imperatives than by the wisdom of pastoral discernment and the nurture of pastoral practices. They are neither reactive to organizational pressures nor driven by institutional imperatives. Rather, they are ordered by regular theological discernment and recurring Christian-pastoral practices.
- Personal Integrity: Serious, sustained attention to the foundations of Christian faith makes possible a quality of ecclesial discernment that is grounded in Christian and pastoral practices, nourished by spiritual disciplines, and shaped by appropriate priorities. All of this helps to constitute an “order of life” that is marked by fidelity to the One who calls and to the ones who are called.

Two new Lilly-funded leadership initiatives are designed to address the problem of ministry’s diffusion, and to focus on possibilities for “good ministry.”

2. Company of New Pastors

Company of New Pastors is a vocational formation program designed to foster excellence in new pastors by deepening and sustaining the cultivation of their theological vocation. It invites and integrates candidates and newly ordained pastors into Theology and Worship’s churchwide “Company of Pastors.” Focusing on the critical period of vocational formation beginning in seminary and continuing into the first years of ministry, Company of New Pastors promotes faithfulness, fruitfulness, and fulfillment in ministry by establishing and nurturing a sustained habitus of theological exploration and spiritual formation. This habitus richly funds the energy and wisdom necessary for sound, creative engagement with pastoral ministry’s multifarious challenges, expectations, and opportunities.

Company of New Pastors engages participants in specific disciplines that shape and nurture good ministry. Selected seminary faculty leaders from each of the PC(USA) seminaries recruit from each seminary class a cohort of six to twelve student participants. Participants adopt a covenant of daily prayer and study, and commit themselves to participate regularly in vocational formation peer groups, in which they encourage and admonish one another in their deepening engagement with their common calling. In order to be eligible for inclusion, students must be inquirers or candidates in the PC(USA) ordination process.

Faculty leaders convene their company monthly to engage in common prayer and theological study of their ordination vows. Upon graduation, participants are configured into regional groups, which are convened and led by veteran pastors, who themselves embody vocational excellence in ministry that is grounded in a sound pastoral habitus. These pastor-groups meet for four-day sessions at least once a year.

Both seminarian and pastor gatherings are patterned after the well-honed model of Theology and Worship’s “Pastor-Theologian Program” consultations, in which pastors meet for sustained study of common texts, within the framework of shared engagement in the daily offices of morning, noon, and evening prayer. Meetings are usually accompanied by extended table fellowship. Thus, these gatherings intentionally embody the ancient Christian wisdom that growth in ministry is fruitfully nurtured within the nexus of a community gathered around teaching, fellowship, breaking bread, and prayer (Acts 2:42).

Between gatherings, participants' daily disciplines follow the covenant of the Company of Pastors, which includes Scripture reading following the ecumenical daily lectionary, prayer, and immersion in the confessional heritage of the Reformed tradition. Members of the company also commit to read assigned books together, and to gather with peers for mutual admonition and encouragement in their common calling.

The Company of New Pastors extends and deepens "Excellence From the Start," Theology and Worship's pilot program focusing on transition into ministry. Excellence From the Start has provided significant benefits to approximately eighty graduates from the classes of 2001 and 2002 at five seminaries. Company of New Pastors will eventually serve students and graduates from all PC(USA) seminaries, plus Fuller Theological Seminary. Company of New Pastors receives its major funding from the Lilly Endowment through 2006, with funding gradually shifting to various church agencies, to the end that Company of New Pastors becomes woven into the ongoing fabric of the church's life and culture.

The Company of New Pastors affords candidates for ministry and new pastors a concrete path to nurture this core vocational vitality. Regular prayer and theological study keep heart and mind vitally engaged with the faith; doing this in company with peers assures that pastors will encourage one another to disciplined maintenance and expansion of these practices.

3. Re-Forming Ministry

Re-Forming Ministry grows out of the Office of Theology and Worship's experience in shaping programs designed to encourage and sustain pastoral excellence. We have learned that although initiatives designed exclusively, or even primarily, for pastors are important and valuable, they do not address the pastoral-ecclesial system that is central to sustaining or inhibiting pastoral excellence. Re-Forming Ministry addresses the pastoral-ecclesial system—a complex culture characterized by the interaction of three historic loci of ministry: pastors and their congregations, theological faculty and their schools, and church officials and their judicatories.

The pastoral-ecclesial system has the capacity to sustain or to inhibit foundational pastoral practices, and thus the capacity to encourage or discourage faithful, vital congregational life. Pastors, theological faculty, and church officials share a responsibility for the teaching ministry of the church. Yet the three ministerial offices have become disconnected; they do not exercise a shared teaching office in and for the church, and their restricted exercises of the teaching office suffer from a lack of full ecclesial engagement.

Pastors are at the center of congregations. Congregations are the basic and fundamental form of religious institutions. Religious institutions are significant forces for nurturing societal wholeness. These three integrated convictions point to the reality that pastoral excellence cannot be sustained apart from a cohesive approach to the pastoral-ecclesial system. We are convinced that such an approach must seek to recover the broad theological vocation of pastors within a sustaining ecclesial culture of pastor/congregation, theological professor/seminary, and church official/judicatory. A cohesive, theological approach to the pastoral-ecclesial system will encourage and sustain pastoral excellence, congregational excellence, educational excellence, and church institutional excellence.

As ministers claim and deepen their vocation to "think the faith," they are better able to discern the shape of distinctly Christian pastoral and congregational life in the midst of disparate cultural and ecclesial claims. Pastoral discernment that encourages congregational discernment is necessary for the church's renewal in the gospel. By underscoring the pastoral-ecclesial system, we recognize that pastoral ministry is either enhanced or inhibited by its relationship to other significant loci of ministry.

The initiative is called "Re-Forming Ministry: Recovering the Shared Teaching Office of the Church" in order to indicate our understanding of ministry's common, comprehensive theological task that is done in, with, and on behalf of the church. Too often, theology is understood as an academic task that is confined to theological schools with disastrous results for both the church and the academy. The theological task—serious, sustained attention to the core of Christian faith and life—is the vocation of the whole church. Within the whole church, however, three ministerial offices are called to exercise a shared teaching office. Re-Forming Ministry entails distinct yet related means of drawing together selected pastors, professors, and church officials in order to accomplish crucial goals:

- Forge new models of collegial relationships among the three ministerial loci in the pastoral-ecclesial system. Relationships are not currently characterized by mutual responsibility and accountability. Pastors defer to professors' theological wisdom and resent church officials' regulatory procedures. Professors overlook the theological significance of pastoral proclamation and disparage the ecclesial substance of church officials' ministries. Church officials imagine that professors' theological work is irrelevant and that pastors' primary obligation is ordered congregational success. Re-Forming Ministry will forge new patterns of relationship in which pastors, professors, and church officials build trust and engage each other as peers in common service to the whole church.

- Engage pastors, professors, and church officials in the shared practice of serious, sustained attention to the faith. Re-Forming Ministry will engage participants in new patterns of serious, sustained, common theological work. The church's theological work will be altered as each locus of ministry contributes its particular theological wisdom in a shared exploration of core matters of Christian faith and life. Pastors, theological faculty, and church officials approach matters from different ecclesial locations, but their perspectives are compatible, for they contribute to a fully ecclesial appropriation of a fully corporate gospel.

- Focus common theological work on a pressing theological concern before the church. Shared theological work cannot be sustained if it is episodic intellectual reflection on diffuse questions of Christian faith and life. Pastors, professors, and church officials will engage in focused inquiry on a pressing, unresolved theological question that is of immediate concern to each individually, and to all commonly. The theological work of Re-Forming Ministry will be worth the concerted, persistent attention of participants.

- Embark on a multiyear inquiry into the identity and life of the church. The most pressing issue before the church is . . . the church! Uncertainty about the church's character and mission leads to confusing purposes and strategies, and to doubts about most forms of church life. What is the ecclesial identity of the church in a culture that disparages institutions while prizing personal fulfillment? What is the meaning of church membership in a consumer culture? Which gifts and qualities are needed in church leadership? How should the church proclaim the gospel? These and other deeply ecclesiological questions will engage the full, shared theological attention of pastors, professors, and church officials.

- Engage in shared ecclesiological inquiry publicly. Pastors, professors, and church officials will not do shared work for themselves alone, but for the whole church. Pastors, professors, and church officials will exercise the Reformed teaching office by conducting their shared inquiry in public, using a variety of media to inform and engage wider circles of colleagues in ministry. The Re-Forming Ministry initiative will teach by the way participants work as well as by the content of their work.

- Widen the circle of discourse. The public work of small groups is necessary to demonstrate the possibilities of recovering a shared teaching office in the church. Confining ecclesiological inquiry to restricted groups is not adequate to the re-formation of ministry, however. The extensive publications program of the Office of Theology and Worship, a dedicated Web site, church magazines, journals, and books are among the traditional instruments that will help to foster a wider circle of discourse in the church.

- Engage the Pastoral-Ecclesial System. Traditional means of informing a wider audience are important and necessary, but they are not sufficient to create a "critical mass" that can effect enduring change in the pastoral-ecclesial system. Widening circles of pastors, theological faculty, and church officials will be drawn into engagement with both the process and the substance of work.

In the end, renewing the pastoral-ecclesial culture by recovering the shared teaching office of pastors, professors, and church officials is not only for the sake of the church's ministers. Sustaining pastoral excellence is for the sake of sustaining congregations and their members in faithful gratitude for the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit.

But each of us was given grace according to the measure of Christ's gift. . . . The gifts he gave were that some would be apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers, to equip the saints for the work of ministry, for building up the body of Christ. (Eph. 4:7,11–12)

C. Theological Task Force on Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Church Preliminary Report to the 216th General Assembly (2004)

The Theological Task Force on Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Church, was created by the 213th General Assembly (2001) “to lead the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in spiritual discernment of our Christian identity in and for the 21st century . . .” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 29). Meeting in Dallas, Texas, on February 18–20, 2004, the task force adopted the following preliminary report to the 216th General Assembly (2004) in anticipation of its final report to the 217th General Assembly (2006).

1. Introduction

The theological task force has now been at work for almost three years. During this time, we have been engaged in a wide range of activities.

a. Meetings

The full task force has met eight times, for periods of two to four days. In addition, committees have met to plan meeting agendas and presentations. The task force has been guided by a detailed covenant that outlines the responsibilities of members to one another and to the work at hand. (A copy of the covenant is appended to this report.)

At these meetings, the task force has studied a number of theological topics to help it engage in a process of discerning the church's Christian identity, as directed by the assembly, and to provide a sound basis for subsequent consideration of controversial issues. To begin our work, Milton J Coalter and Barbara Everitt Bryant helped us consider our social and religious context. Subsequent topics have included Christology, led by Mark Achtemeier; principles of biblical interpretation, led by Frances Taylor Gench; biblical and theological perspectives on human sexuality, led by Jack Haberer; Reformed understandings of the church, led by Mark Achtemeier and Barbara Wheeler; and the theology of ordination, led by Gary Demarest, Sarah Grace Sanderson-Doughty, and John B. (Mike) Loudon.

We have also studied Presbyterian history and Reformed traditions of church order, with specific attention to Presbyterian confessionalism, the development of the Constitution and principles of Presbyterian polity, and the current North American social and religious context. Milton J Coalter shared with the task force findings from the Presbyterian Presence series of studies of the denomination's recent history. He and fellow historian, John Wilkinson, led studies of other historical periods. Lonnie Oliver, Martha Sadongei, and José Luis Torres-Milán led a session on the diversity of racial and ethnic decision-making traditions in the church.

Bible study has been part of each meeting, as has experimentation with a variety of processes for building community, discerning God's will, and taking action. The task force has worshiped regularly, beginning and ending each day with a service of prayer, Scripture reading, reflection and hymn singing, and, with the assembly's permission, we, together with members of the press and all others present, have celebrated the Lord's Supper at every meeting.

Task force meetings have been conducted in accordance with the General Assembly Open Meeting Policy and have been extensively reported in the church press. The 215th General Assembly (2003) voted to allow the task force “to go into closed session solely for the purpose of exchanging views on sensitive theological issues...by two-thirds vote of the members of the task force present in a duly called and constituted meeting” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 23). The task force is mindful of this provision but has not yet used it.

b. Consultations

The task force has sought the views of the church about the issues assigned to it. We have participated in numerous events (focus groups, workshops, and consultations) in conjunction with meetings of the General Assembly and various Presbyterian organizations across the church. In addition, task force members either alone or together with the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council, have visited at least forty synods and presbyteries. Several phone interviews were also conducted with Presbyterians who expressed an interest in sharing effective experiences of building relationships across lines of division. Many individual Presbyterians have written to the task force. Much of this correspondence has been acknowledged and circulated to the whole task force. In addition, Barbara Everitt Bryant, a professional statistician, has analyzed Presbyterian opinion data gathered for other purposes and has reported to the task force what they indicate about the range and diversity of Presbyterians’ convictions about critical issues.

c. Resources

The task force is charged with producing “a process and instrument” to promote the peace, unity, and purity of the church. To this end, and to share its own experiences and learning with the wider church, the task force has produced a preliminary series of resources for use by congregations, governing bodies, and other groups in the church. Prominent among these is a video series that currently includes one, three-part video. The first segment features Vicky Curtiss describing and demonstrating the use of tools to build a community of trust within the framework of worship, Bible study, and prayer. Frances Taylor Gench discusses biblical authority and interpretation in the second segment of the series, and, in the third, she leads viewers through a Bible study of Matthew 5. In a second video, scheduled for release at the 216th General Assembly (2004), Mark Achtemeier will focus on Christology, one of the themes assigned for the task force’s consideration. The videos are available in English, Korean, and Spanish. In addition to the video series, outlines and texts of various presentations to the task force are available on the task force’s web page [<http://www.pcusa.org/peaceunitypurity/index.htm>]. Task force members (listed at the end of report) are also available for consultation.

In the course of these activities, the task force has grown into a strong Christian fellowship. As we now move toward more sustained investigation of divisive issues, the diversity of perspectives deliberately built into the make-up of the task force is apparent. At the same time, however, we have discovered in our work together the same compelling sense of being in Christ with other Presbyterians that we have heard reported over and over in our consultations. We cannot predict whether this sense—that we are all Christians who stand on the same biblical and Reformed theological foundations—will survive the discussions of difficult issues yet to come. But our prayerful study to date has convinced us that, if, despite our differences, we continue to recognize each other as sisters and brothers who are seeking together a Reformed way of being Christian, then our final report must incorporate and provide ways to act upon three, long-standing Presbyterian affirmations.

2. Preliminary Affirmations About the Peace, Unity, and Purity of the Church

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) today longs for the spiritual blessings named in the task force’s title. In the midst of strife and conflict, the church longs for peace; afflicted by quarrelling and division, it longs for unity; weighed down by sin and confusion over the nature of the Gospel, it longs for purity in word and deed.

Through study, prayer, and reflection, a conviction has grown among members of the task force that these longings for peace, unity, and purity, far from being reasons for frustration or despair, can actually be seen as Spirit-filled testimony to God’s promise of redemption. “We . . . who have the first fruits of the Spirit,” Paul tells us, “groan inwardly while we wait for adoption, the redemption of our bodies” (Rom 8:23–24). These longings, painful though they may sometimes be, are also accompanied by profound good news. They give evidence that the peace, unity, and purity we desire so fervently are already at work within us. They have already been given to us in Jesus Christ, and the task before the church is to live into the fullness of that gift.

The themes of peace, unity, and purity are addressed at many points in Scripture. Our study of these themes began, but will by no means end, with the Epistle to the Ephesians. In one of our sessions, the task force spent many hours drawing out the implications of these words: “For by grace you have been saved through faith, and this is not your own doing; it is the gift of God—not the result of works, so that no one may boast” (Eph. 2:8–9). This verse underscores that the destiny God has set before the church is a gift from God. The goals of peace, unity, and purity stand as tasks to be realized out in front of us only because in Christ’s life, death, and resurrection they are gifts that already belong to us.

Since we began focusing on this verse, a growing conviction has permeated our deliberations, namely, that our job—and the church’s—is to appropriate what has already been done for us by Jesus Christ. The only way forward, as the reformers long ago insisted, is the way that leads through grace.

Although it is premature at this stage of the task force’s work to present a comprehensive vision about how the peace, unity, and purity of the church might take form in our day, the task force does feel led to make three preliminary affirmations that we believe must guide our work over the next two years—affirmations rooted in our convictions about the church’s perennial need for grace. These three affirmations are a prologue to the hard work ahead of us. We members of the task force make these affirmations together, and we urge the whole church to make them with us.

a. Jesus Christ Himself Is the Church’s Peace

Scripture assures us, and we believe, that Jesus Christ is our peace (Eph. 2:14). Indeed, Ephesians can summarize what God has done in Jesus Christ as the “gospel of peace” (Eph. 6:15). This is so, because those “who once were far off have been brought near by the blood of Christ” (Eph. 2:13). Ephesians is speaking of Gentiles who have been brought into the covenant of grace, a covenant given first to the Jews. In his very flesh, Ephesians declares, Jesus Christ has “made both groups [Jews and Gentiles] into one and has broken down the dividing wall, that is, the hostility between us,” (Eph. 2:14) in order to “reconcile both groups to God in one body through the cross” (Eph. 2:16). Thus, for those who are in Christ, divisions and enmities are not the last word. To be sure, divisions and enmities are real, as the ongoing and often tortured history of the church attests; yet far more real is the bond of faith forged by Christ’s atoning action on behalf of all people.

The church’s peace flows from the work of Jesus Christ. The peace made real in Jesus Christ offers us more than a temporary halt to conflict; it is an enduring peace based on reconciliation achieved for us at great cost. Accordingly, the church must draw the strength it needs for peacemaking from beyond itself, from the one who invites us to a common witness and worship.

In short, the church has already been given the resources it needs for peacemaking. It has only to look to the Spirit of Christ, who empowers us to live out this new reality. Because faithful, just, and peaceful life together is the work of Jesus Christ, who kept company with sinners, this life draws strength from a common discipline that builds up the body through confession of sin, forgiveness, reconciliation, and self-giving service.

b. Jesus Christ Himself Is the Church’s Unity

Scripture further assures us, and we believe, that in Christ “the whole structure is joined together and grows into a holy temple in the Lord..., built together spiritually into a dwelling place for God” (Eph. 2:21–22). As God draws persons by the Holy Spirit into communion with Christ, God also unites them in baptismal and table fellowship with one another. The new life that is ours in Christ is corporate in nature, meaning that there is no unity with Christ that is not also a unity with other believers.

This is not, of course, a simple or easy process. There is rich diversity in the Body of Christ and there are deep disagreements among its members. The unity we seek cannot be reduced to either uniformity or unanimity. In particular, unity cannot be attained if the voices of some members of the body are ignored. It is especially important, when the mind of the church is significantly divided and its decisions are unlikely to be unanimous, that all voices be heard and respected. Moreover, in Reformed tradition, the achievement of unity is complicated by a long-standing tension between the call to exercise mutual accountability and the affirmation that “God alone is Lord of the conscience” [Book of Order, G-1.0301(1)(a)].

Notwithstanding this tension, it has become clear to the task force in its own life together that unity with one another is not an optional feature of life in Christ. It is a necessity: union with Christ means union with all the other members of Christ’s body, including those with whom one would not ordinarily choose to associate. This New Testament understanding of the unity of the church undercuts attempts to pick and choose those to whom we are bound in Christ. “For no one can lay any foundation other than the one that has been laid; that foundation is Jesus Christ” (1 Cor. 3:11).

The implication of the biblical teaching is clear: Christians cannot even entertain the notion of severing their ties with sisters and brothers in Christ without also placing themselves in severe jeopardy of being severed from Christ himself. “Those who say ‘I love God,’ and hate their brothers or sisters, are liars; for those who do not love a brother or sister whom they have seen, cannot love God whom they have not seen” (1 Jn. 4:20). Hence, we have no unity other than that which is given in Christ, the church’s one foundation, who “gives to his Church its faith and life, its unity and mission ...” (Book of Order, G-1.0100c).

c. Jesus Christ Himself Is the Church’s Purity

Scripture tells us, and we believe, that God “has blessed us in Christ ... to be holy and blameless before him in love” (Eph. 1:3–4). Christ “gave himself up for us” (Eph. 5:2, 25) so that the “breadth and length and height and depth” (Eph. 3:18) of his righteousness might become ours through grace. This is a blessing we celebrate as great, good news—Christ’s grace is sufficient to make each one of us pure—sound in our beliefs, upright in our conduct, just in our dealings. Thus, in our doctrine, devotion, and deeds, we are all being made pure, until that day when together we, the church, are presented to Christ “in splendor, without a spot or wrinkle ... holy and without blemish” (Eph. 5:27).

This purity is not anything we bring to God on our own, for it comes to us through Christ by the power of the Spirit “at work within us” (Eph. 3:20). The Spirit’s power makes itself real for us in baptism “with the washing of water by the word” (Eph. 5:26) and renews us continually until we attain “the full stature of Christ” (Eph. 4:13).

It is often difficult to see how this goal of Christian purity can be squared with the equally important call to unity and peace. Yet in Christ all three are tied together, with no one elevated above the other two. Any effort to achieve peace and unity at the expense of purity cannot succeed, nor can we live “a life worthy of the calling to which [we] have been called” unless, “bearing with one another in love,” we make “every effort to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace” (Eph. 4:2–3).

Therefore, the quest for purity is first and foremost a call to self-examination, repentance, and mutual accountability in love. While those who fail to seek purity in any of its forms—truth, goodness, and justice—imperil the faithfulness of the church, purity must not become a pretext for division. Those who break the body of Christ on the grounds that some members do not meet a particular conception of righteousness risk putting fallible human judgment in place of Christ. Living into our baptism, we must always regard disputes over devotion, doctrine, or deeds as gracious invitations to further work together, relying on Christ’s promise of the Spirit who will guide us “into all truth” (Jn. 16:13) and enable us to “find out what is pleasing to the Lord” (Eph. 5:10).

Christian striving here and now for truth, justice, and holiness matters—it matters greatly. The task force, which has a heavy assignment, feels keenly the pressure to teach truly, act justly, and maintain respectful and loving relationships within and beyond the church. We hope that our work will meet high standards of purity and faithfulness, yet we know it cannot unless we acknowledge a basic truth: the best the church can do is to live into what Jesus Christ has already perfectly accomplished for us.

3. Next Steps

During the next year, we plan to continue extensive discussions of the issues the General Assembly put before us. Our working assumption is that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), shares “one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of [us] all” (Eph. 4:5–6). We are aware that some wonder whether the unity of this confession has been jeopardized; whether, because of the theological differences in the denomination, the church is now divided; whether the unity of confession that exists in principle no longer exists in practice. We take this issue seriously and will continue to study it carefully. If we do find that the integrity of the church’s confession is intact, then we hope to commend to the church ways of living together and moving into the future that are rooted in the peace, unity, and purity of Christ and that are more constructive and faithful than our current climate of hostile division.

We have heard many expressions of concern about the final results of our work. In response, we have committed ourselves to hold any “process” or “instrument” that we discover or devise to the following criteria:

a. Faithfulness

Some have warned against what they see as a lukewarm “compromise.” The task force is not seeking any solution that compromises the gospel of Jesus Christ, but rather faithful, truthful, and just responses to the complex demands the gospel makes upon us.

b. Theological Grounding

Some have warned that resolutions of earlier conflicts in the church’s history, based chiefly on polity or legal precedents, have often proved unstable. We have spent a large portion of our time in theological study of these past conflicts and intend that our report will not simply pose political solutions but a way of living together that has clear theological and scriptural integrity. The three affirmations grow out of our convictions that no differences among Reformed Christians can be settled without a firm theological basis.

c. Clarity About the Relationship of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Larger Church of Jesus Christ

One of the basic issues before the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is whether it is a church that is called to reflect the full integrity of Christ’s body in a distinctive way or, is, rather, merely a denominational subdivision of the church whose peace, purity, and unity are immaterial and whose reason for being is more pragmatic than essential. Any report or process that we set before the church must address this question: does the well-being and witness of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) really matter?

d. Continuity with Presbyterian Tradition

Although polity alone cannot confer the peace, unity, and purity that the church is seeking, we do believe that the principles and practices of governance that Presbyterians have been developing for centuries, limited though they may be, will continue to serve us as we move into the future. Any proposals that we set before the church must be the outgrowth of Presbyterian ways of ordering church life and giving it direction.

A final word: The task force is both heartened and humbled by the many expressions of hope that we have heard for our work. Grateful as we are for the church’s trust, however, we are also keenly aware that no measures the task force proposes will serve unless the whole church fervently wants to find different and better ways to express its identity as Christ’s body in and for the world in the twenty-first century. We commend the videos and other resources the task force has provided. We strongly urge that, during the next two years, congregations and governing bodies use such resources to create occasions on which persons from all parts of the church, including those who deeply disagree with each other, can meet to discern God’s will for the church. In these and other gatherings, Presbyterians must search their hearts during the critical next two years. Are the church’s members prepared to work, pray, and sacrifice for a more faithful way of life together? If so, we are confident that God will show the way. Indeed, God has shown us the way, and the truth, and the life. God has given us Jesus Christ.

We trust the press to perform its part of this responsibility by reporting on our work in accordance with the published ethical standards of the Associated Church Press and the Evangelical Press Association.

We will each commit our best, with the help of the Holy Spirit, to the task entrusted to us.

Item 09-01

On Amending G-9.0503 Regarding Voice and Vote for Immigrant Fellowships—From the Presbytery of Des Moines.

[The assembly approved Item 09-01 with amendment. See p. 40.]

The Presbytery of Des Moines overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendments to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-9.0503a(2) be amended by adding a new paragraph “(a)” to read as follows:

“a. For immigrant fellowships the presbytery may, if it determines that its strategy for mission with that constituency requires it, grant designated leader(s) of a fellowship voice and vote in the meetings of presbytery on an annual basis.”

[Note: The amendments in Items 09-01 and 09-02 were approved by the assembly with the alphanumeric designations of “(a)” and “(b)” respectively. For purposes of continuity, these designations were switched when the amendments were sent to the presbyteries for their vote. Thus, Item 09-01 became “(b)” and Item 09-02 became “(a)”. ]

Rationale

The Presbytery of Des Moines and the Presbytery of Missouri River Valley, in partnership with the Synod of Lakes and Prairies and the General Assembly, have jointly shared in a ministry to Sudanese immigrants for five years.

The Presbytery of Des Moines and the Presbytery of Missouri River Valley both support the General Assembly’s strategy for racial ethnic evangelism.

The Sudanese members of the new immigrant fellowships that have been formed have a long history of being Presbyterian.

The Sudanese fellowships and the presbyteries both desire fuller inclusion of the fellowships in the life of their respective presbyteries, but have been impeded by the current requirement for forming congregations and ordaining elders.

Section G-11.0404f grants special circumstances for recognizing the ordination of and enrolling a new immigrant ministry.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 09-01

Advice on Item 09-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 216th General Assembly (2004) to disapprove Item 09-01.

Rationale

The Presbytery of Des Moines seeks to amend G-9.0503a(2) to allow a presbytery to grant voice and vote to non-ordained representatives of immigrant fellowships.

Foundational to our understanding of church governance is the principle that a presbytery is composed of the ministers of Word and Sacrament living within the geographical bounds and elders representing the congregations within those bounds. The wording of this proposed overture is in conflict with this historic practice. Individuals have voice and vote in governance, not organizations. Those individuals must be ordained either as ministers of Word and Sacrament or as elders. There currently exists a means by which a presbytery may receive into membership a minister serving an immigrant fellowship. As a member of the presbytery, that person would have both voice and vote. Gifted members may be prepared for leadership in a developing congregation and as such the presbytery may grant voice to them by its own action.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-01

This overture seeks to permit presbyteries to adopt standing rules or bylaws that permit the presbytery to grant a new immigrant fellowship representation (voice and vote) prior to being chartered as a PC(USA) church. The overture notes that a presbytery may already grant such privileges to the minister leading such fellowships (Book of Order, G-11.0404f). The overture seeks to mirror the parity between elders and ministers required by the Book of Order for chartered congregations (Book of Order, G-11.0101).

If the goal is to train new immigrant elders in how to be faithful presbyters in PC(USA) presbyteries, the overture would give presbyteries the option of granting such fellowships the “hands-on training” the overture suggests is necessary.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

Item 09-01 calls for amending the Book of Order regarding voice and vote for Immigrant Fellowships, from the Presbytery of Des Moines.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 09-01 be approved.

Rationale

Immigrant fellowships do not attain the Book of Order status that permits them to elect elders and to have voice at presbytery. This results in many new members being denied entrance into the “Leadership Channels” of the PC(USA). The Book of Order only addresses immigrant ministers.

Approval of Item 09-01 will help prepare the PC(USA) as it enters the 21st century with the demographic changes that are occurring in the United States.

Item 09-02

On Amending G-9.0503 Regarding Recognizing Leaders of Immigrant Fellowships as Elders—From the Presbytery of Des Moines.

The Presbytery of Des Moines overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall G-9.0503a(2) be amended by adding a new paragraph“(b)” to read as follows:

“(b) For immigrant fellowships with roots in the Reformed tradition, if the presbytery determines (1) that its strategy for mission with that constituency requires it and (2) that the chosen lay leadership of the immigrant fellowship is equivalent to elders and session, then the presbytery or its administrative commission may recognize that status as equivalent and proceed to [~~ordain~~] [recognize] those leaders as elders. In making this determination the presbytery shall be guided by written criteria developed by the presbytery. These criteria shall be based upon the description of the nature of ordained office found in G-6.0100 and G-6.0300.

[Note: The amendments in Items 09-01 and 09-02 were approved by the assembly with the alphanumeric designations of “(a)” and “(b)” respectively. For purposes of continuity, these designations were switched when the amendments were sent to the presbyteries for their vote. Thus, Item 09-01 became “(b)” and Item 09-02 became “(a)”.

Rationale

The Presbytery of Des Moines and the Presbytery of Missouri River Valley, in partnership with the Synod of Lakes and Prairies and the General Assembly, have jointly shared in a ministry to Sudanese immigrants for five years.

The Presbytery of Des Moines and the Presbytery of Missouri River Valley both support the General Assembly’s strategy for racial ethnic evangelism.

The Sudanese members of the new immigrant fellowships that have been formed have a long history of being Presbyterian.

The Sudanese fellowships and the presbyteries both desire fuller inclusion of the fellowships in the life of their respective presbyteries, but have been impeded by the current requirement for forming congregations and ordaining elders.

Section G-11.0404f grants special circumstances for recognizing the ordination of and enrolling new immigrant ministers.

The 170th General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (1958, 445) declared that ruling elders from Reformed churches, received as members of Presbyterian congregations, did not need to be reordained.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 09-02

Advice on Item 09-02—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly to disapprove Item 09-02.

Rationale

Elders are chosen through the voice of the congregation and ordained by an act of a session. The foundational bases of this Constitution do not provide for the election and ordination of elders apart from the work and witness of a particular congregation. By seeking to amend G-9.0503a(2), the proponents see the overture as related to the situation of a presbytery leading a group of persons through the process of organizing a new congregation using an administrative commission. However, it is clear that in these cases the presbytery is exercising “any or all powers and responsibilities of a session.” It is not a function of the presbytery apart from this unique situation to elect or ordain elders. As the Constitution provides specific provisions for the training and approval of those who are to serve as elders (G-14.0205), those provisions would govern any persons chosen and ordained in immigrant fellowships. It is the opinion of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution that existing provisions guiding a presbytery to oversee the development of a new congregation of any kind are sufficient to achieve the intent of this overture.

The overture as presented proposes a significant departure from historic understandings of office in the church. Should the 216th General Assembly (2004) wish to amend the Constitution to achieve its intent, it should consider placing the material with more foundational material of its kind in either Chapter IV or Chapter XI.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-02

Comment on Item 09-02—From the Office of the General Assembly.

This overture seeks to permit presbyteries to recognize and empower natural and traditional lay leaders in new immigrant fellowships. Many immigrants come to the United States carrying reformed traditions. They have experience with “governing bodies” and are accustomed to being led by persons who carry out many of the functions that PC(USA) elders do in the United States. Yet they often come from traditions that do not have sessions. This overture seeks to give presbyteries the flexibility to utilize these natural gifts and talents by recognizing these experiences.

This is not a new idea to our polity. As the overture notes, since at least the 1950s, the Constitution has allowed elders from other reformed churches to serve as elders in the Presbyterian church without being re-ordained. Several times in this denomination’s life, proposals have been made to permit presbyteries to ordain elders in limited circumstances:

The seminal discussion of this idea came to the 204th General Assembly (1992) in the report of the Task Force on Theology and Practice of Ordination to Office (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 1021, 1065) where the task force recommended that the church explore the “formation of covenantal partnerships between sessions and presbyteries” in the preparation and ordination of elders.

The 212th General Assembly (2000) was presented with an overture (Overture 00-36) to permit “exceptional ordinations” by presbyteries when “service to the church would be enhanced by such ordination.” That overture was aimed at commissioned lay pastors. This overture seeks a similar flexibility in favor of presbyteries.

Surely the context has changed since the 170th General Assembly recognized this concept in 1958. Three of the last four General Assemblies have encouraged presbyteries to reach out to new immigrant populations (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 543; Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 62; Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 536) and the 216th General Assembly (2004) has four other such items before it. This overture seeks to provide indigenous leadership for those new fellowships. Currently there is no provision for the election of elders until the presbytery is ready to permit the election of a fellowship’s first session. The current text does not explicitly permit such an immigrant to be elected to the administrative commission. The overture seeks to permit presbyteries to train up these new immigrant leaders in the “ways of a PC(USA) session” before actually chartering the fellowship as a PC(USA) church. This is a transitory time, but often a critical one in a fellowship’s development.

Should the commissioners of the 216th General Assembly (2004) wish to address the concerns of this overture, the Office of the General Assembly suggests the approval of the overture with a minor change in its text—substituting the word “recognize” for “ordain,” so that the section would then read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with an underline.]

“(b) For immigrant fellowships with roots in the Reformed tradition, if the presbytery determines (1) that its strategy for mission with that constituency requires it and (2) that the chosen lay leadership of the immigrant fellowship is equivalent to elders and session, then the presbytery or its administrative commission may recognize that status as equivalent and proceed to ~~ordain~~ recognize those leaders as elders. In making this determination the presbytery shall be guided by written criteria developed by the presbytery. These criteria shall be based upon the description of the nature of ordained office found in G-6.0100 and G-6.0300.”

This suggested modification of “recognize” in place of “ordain” preserves our historic understanding of local governing bodies (which the PC(USA) calls “sessions”), while permitting presbyteries to recognize the previous status held and functions carried out by these new immigrant persons in their previous church leadership positions.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

Item 09-02 calls for amending the Book of Order regarding recognizing leaders of immigrant fellowships as elders, from the Presbytery of Des Moines.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 09-02 be approved.

Rationale

By recognizing members of immigrant fellowships as elders, changes in the Book of Order must be addressed. Presently, the Book of Order addresses immigrant pastors only and not responsibilities of elders and deacons.

Approval of this item will recognize and enable leaders of immigrant fellowships to share their skills and talents in governing, in ministry, in program(s), and in service to the PC(USA), and in their local congregations.

By recognizing members of immigrant fellowships as elders, they will have the needed opportunity to enhance their congregations by their witness to the uniqueness of the PC(USA) efforts for full participation of its members by diversity and inclusiveness throughout all areas of the church.

Item 09-03

On Uniting Churches in Philip, South Dakota, to Form a Union Church, the United Church of Philip—From the Presbytery of South Dakota.

The Presbytery of South Dakota overtures the General Assembly of the PC(USA) to approve the action taken by the Presbytery of South Dakota and the Dakota United Methodist Conference to unite the First United Presbyterian Church and the First United Methodist Church of Philip, South Dakota, to form a union church, the United Church of Philip. The United Church of Philip will be responsible and accountable to both denominations.

Rationale

The Presbytery of South Dakota and the Dakota United Methodist Conference seek to manifest more visibly the unity of the church of Jesus Christ and strengthen the witness to our Lord and Savior in the community of Philip by this action (G-15.0101).

The Presbytery of South Dakota approved this action at its October 24, 2003, meeting.

The bishop of the Dakota United Methodist Conference's approval was received on September 2, 2003.

Item 09-04

On Transferring the Korean Presbyterian Church of Staten Island from the Presbytery of New York City to the Eastern Korean Presbytery—From the Presbytery of New York City.

The Presbytery of New York City respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to approve the transfer of the Korean Presbyterian Church of Staten Island from the Presbytery of New York City to the Eastern Korean Presbytery.

Rationale

The congregation of the Korean Presbyterian Church of Staten Island, in a meeting held on January 21, 2001, voted to request to be transferred from the Presbytery of New York City to the Eastern Korean Presbytery for the betterment of the church. The Presbytery of New York City was notified of this action by letter to its stated clerk dated January 23, 2001. The Presbytery of New York City, through this overture, requests actions by the Synod of the Northeast and the General Assembly to implement the presbytery's desire.

Concurrences to Item 09-04 from the Eastern Korean Presbytery and the Synod of the Northeast.

Item 09-05

On Approving the Transfer of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Fairfield, Ohio, from the Presbytery of Miami to the Presbytery of Cincinnati—From the Synod of the Covenant.

The Synod of the Covenant respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve the transfer of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Fairfield, Ohio, from the Presbytery of Miami to the Presbytery of Cincinnati, effective August 1, 2004; and to approve the transfer of the City of Fairfield, Ohio (Butler County), from the bounds of the Presbytery of Miami to the bounds of the Presbytery of Cincinnati.

Rationale

Financial Implications: Per capita apportionment for 2004 would be prorated between the two presbyteries (seven months in Miami and five months in Cincinnati). The congregation's loan with the Presbytery of Miami will be paid in full before the completion of the transfer.

In 1989, the Presbytery of Miami and the Presbytery of Cincinnati entered into a partnership to establish a new church development in Fairfield, Ohio—a community on the border between the two presbyteries. Both presbyteries provided human and financial support in the establishment of the congregation, calling of the organizing pastor, and building of the facilities. During this time, it was mutually agreed that for the first ten years as a congregation, Trinity would be a part of the Presbytery of Miami. After the first ten years, the congregation then would have the choice to remain in the Presbytery of Miami or transfer to the Presbytery of Cincinnati. Trinity Presbyterian Church was organized as a new congregation in January 1991. On August 24, 2003, at a properly called meeting, the congregation voted to initiate the transfer to the Presbytery of Cincinnati.

At separate stated meetings held on September 9, 2003, the Presbytery of Miami and the Presbytery of Cincinnati each voted to approve the request of the congregation of Trinity Presbyterian Church that the church be transferred from the Presbytery of Miami to the Presbytery of Cincinnati.

Item 09-06

The General Assembly Council, upon recommendation of the Congregational Ministries Division, recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) approve the following:

[The assembly approved Item 09-06, Recommendation 1. See p. 41.]

1. That the General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, through its Office of Evangelism, continue to publish and make available Alpha: From a Reformed Perspective as a guide for Presbyterian congregations who use or who are considering using Alpha as an evangelistic tool.

[The assembly approved Item 09-06, Recommendation 2. See p. 41.]

2. That the General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, through its Office of Evangelism, and Congregational Ministries Divisions, through its Office of Theology and Worship, make available through electronic means “The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit with Special Reference to ‘The Baptism of the Holy Spirit’” (Minutes, PCUS, 1971, 104–17) for congregations as they work through issues surrounding the Holy Spirit, spiritual gifts, and healing in the Alpha program.

Rationale

This recommendation is in response to the following referral: 2003 Referral: Item 09-07. Overture 03-32. On Directing the General Assembly Council, Congregational Ministries Division, to Explore the Appropriateness of Recommending the Alpha Program—From the Presbytery of Alaska (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 25, 549–50).

The Alpha program is being used successfully by a number of Presbyterian congregations as an effective, congregational evangelistic tool. A number of other congregations have found Alpha unhelpful or have chosen not to use it after evaluating it.

Alpha is a congregationally based program to introduce nonchurched persons to the Christian faith through a serious exploration of the basics of the Christian faith. Weekly programs consist of a dinner, a talk, and a discussion. Alpha began at Holy Trinity Church (Anglican) in Brompton, England, and is being used in more than 25,905 churches and 137 countries around the world (see www.alphacourse.org). It is widely used in the United States in Roman Catholic, Lutheran, and Episcopal churches, and among various evangelical congregations.

Alpha’s strength lies in forming a nonthreatening atmosphere where community is formed, asking questions is encouraged, and the Christian faith is presented in a winsome and compelling manner.

1. Experience in the Church

Some research has been done on the use of Alpha in Presbyterian congregations. Several years ago Research Services conducted a study of Alpha’s use in certain congregations, and the Office of Theology and Worship did more limited anecdotal research in 2003. The overall response to congregations that use Alpha is that it is a helpful evangelistic tool that is consistent with the Reformed tradition.

Congregations report that Alpha has been helpful both in introducing non-Christians to Christian faith and helping members and leaders to grow in their understanding and experience of Christian faith. Alpha appears to be easy for congregations to setup and use. Moreover, the fact that it is not produced by the Presbyterian church is seen by some as an advantage: the Christian faith is presented without seeming to be “branded” Presbyterian.

Congregations that use Alpha believe that it fills a unique niche: No other program, Presbyterian or otherwise, provides a congregationally based evangelistic outreach that does not depend solely on pastoral leadership and presents a solidly theological presentation of the Christian faith.

2. Concerns

The primary concern of the General Assembly in this referral is the degree to which Alpha reflects the Reformed tradition. The Office of Theology and Worship has examined Alpha materials, print and multimedia. In our judgment the materials do not conflict in any major way with the broad stream of the Reformed tradition. The materials focus clearly on the person of Jesus Christ and the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. While the sacraments are not central to the course, the presentation of baptism was adequate.

In reports from congregations that use Alpha and from the Office of Theology and Worship, the most significant area of concern is the teaching on the Holy Spirit: How to be filled with the Holy Spirit, the gifts of the Holy Spirit, and healing. Alpha’s approach to the Holy Spirit does not fit what most think of as the Presbyterian ethos. Every Presbyterian congregation that returned a survey indicated that they modify in some way Alpha’s teaching on “How to Be Filled with the Holy Spirit.” Alpha requires that churches do not modify the course, but because churches are encouraged to develop their own speakers instead of relying solely on video presentations, many Presbyterian churches use their own speaker (often the pastor) for the Holy Spirit section.

In the late 1970s the Presbyterian church faced the charismatic renewal that was going through a number of mainline denominations. The church’s response in that day remains wise counsel. Thus we recommend to any church that uses Alpha to consult “The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit with Special Reference to ‘The Baptism of the Holy Spirit’” (Minutes, PCUS, 1971, Part I, pp. 104–17). It is available at www.pcusa.org/theologyandworship.

The General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, through its Office of Evangelism, has co-published Alpha: From A Reformed Perspective. It covers a number of issues related to using Alpha in Presbyterian congregations.

On Encouraging National, Presbytery, and Synod Leaders to Foster Evangelism—From the Presbytery of the Trinity.

The Presbytery of Trinity overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to resolve to encourage our national and synod leaders to foster evangelism by doing the following:

- 1. Have the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly write each session:

  - a. including prayer for their growth;
  - b. asking for them to set voluntary goals and objectives using church growth or church health methods, for example encouraging at least 3 percent growth per year for the next five years beginning in 2005;
  - c. asking for them to endorse their goals and return them to the presbytery stated clerk and the General Assembly Stated Clerk’s office.*
- 2. Encourage the stated clerk’s office of each presbytery and synod to write a letter of encouragement to each session in their jurisdiction to seek God’s leading and to make plans as lead by God and the session.
- 3. Encouraging all ministers and elders to pray for God to raise up faithful members for each congregation in our denomination.
- 4. Set aside a morning worship service at the 219th General Assembly (2010) to report on God’s faithfulness and to celebrate Christ’s daily mercies to our denomination.

Rationale

In the year 2002, our beloved denomination lost 41,812 members, reflecting a 1.68 percent decrease in membership in that year.

Over the years of 1991 through 2001, our denomination has lost 321,040 members reflecting a 9 percent loss in membership in that decade.

Jesus’ command to “go and make disciples” reflects a continuing imperative to “go” (Matt. 28:19).

God is faithful (1 Thess. 5:24) and will never leave us (Matt. 28:20).

The local congregation, its leaders and members remain the place for training, goal setting, and leadership of the local mission (Book of Order, G-11.0103(a)).

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 09-07

Comment on Item 09-07—From the Office of the General Assembly

The Office of the General Assembly welcomes the encouragement from the Presbytery of the Trinity to focus on evangelism in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). “The proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of humankind” is the first of the “great ends of the church” found in Book of Order, G-1.0200. In the third chapter of Part II of the church’s Constitution (G-3.0300c) “the Church is called to be Christ’s faithful evangelist.”

The Office of the General Assembly has been leading “Common Faith, Common Mission” conferences across the denomination. These conferences have focused on the rich resource we find in the first four chapters of the Book of Order.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) finds itself in a new reality in the 21st century. The new reality includes a largely secular society, a multicultural world, vast generational changes, and a breadth of diversity unmatched in earlier times. In this new reality, the historic assumptions of being an established church in a Christian culture are no longer valid.

While the culture and the world undergo continual and, at times, chaotic change, the good news of the gospel of Jesus Christ remains unchanged and eternally relevant. The church is called to bear witness to Christ, the living Head of the church, through its mission and ministry. It is Christ who gives the church “all that is necessary for its mission to the world” (G-1.0100b).

How the church carries out its mission is an evolving and changing response to the new reality of the 21st century. For the church’s mission to be most faithful and effective, it must focus anew on that which supports mission at its foundation, namely, that Jesus Christ is Head of the Church and the living Word of God; that the Great Ends of the Church are our common calling; that we uphold a generous orthodoxy growing out of Scripture and the confessions that affirm the great themes of the Reformed faith; and that we hold to an ecclesiology built on covenant community and a commitment to Christian unity.

To this end, the Office of the General Assembly is beginning a discernment process to enable the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to renew its identity as a missional church so that we can best meet the needs of the new reality of the 21st century. This process in its entirety will be

- grounded in a shared faith that is rooted in scripture and the Confessions;
- shaped by a shared covenant as expressed in the first four chapters of the Book of Order; and
- supported by a constitution that best enables the ministries of multiple forms of faith communities as they respond to the diverse missionary challenges of the 21st century.

As the body of Christ in this new reality, let us in gratitude be about renewing our common faith and common mission that transforms the church and bears witness to the life-giving gospel of Jesus Christ around the world.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 09-07 requests the 216th General Assembly (2004) to encourage national, synod, and presbytery leaders to foster evangelism in local congregations through supportive and encouraging prayers, worship, communications, planning, etc., from the Presbytery of the Trinity.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 09-07 be approved.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns concurs with and commends the spirit of Item 09-07. Consistently, in principle if not in practice, it has been normative in all governing bodies to give high priority commitments to doing evangelism. Essential to an evangelistic church development and redevelopment is the growth and renewal of persons and congregations. Item 09-07 calls for just such emphases.

However, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 09-07 will be significantly strengthened if specific attention is given to the churchwide commitments [approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998)] to a 10 percent by 2010 and 20 percent by 2020 growth of racial ethnic/immigrant churches and congregational membership. Given both PC(USA) stated commitments and dramatic changes in national demographics, the lack of such specific attention will be a failure and not a mere oversight by the whole church. Simply stated, the PC(USA) family must practice what it preaches in doing evangelism and all other mission and ministries of a whole diverse and inclusive church.

On Undertaking the Publication of a Mission Magazine That Would Use the Powerful Voice of American Youth—From the Presbytery of Huntingdon.

The Presbytery of Huntingdon respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to increase the witnessing power of the denomination by undertaking the publication of a mission magazine that would use the powerful voice of American youth. This quarterly would do the following:

1. Be divided into a Publication Division and a Business Division.
2. Be managed by a staff of five, paid adults (an advisor and assistant advisor for each division as well as an office secretary) who could be selected from current employees of the PC(USA) publications division.
3. Be run by a national youth editorial board comprised of an editor, assistant editor, and regional editors from both divisions.
4. Be funded by a one-time special offering and continued subscription and ad sales.
5. Be totally comprised of articles written by youth.
6. Highlight current, ongoing missions and missionary testimonies.
7. Draw attention to mission opportunities for youth.

8. Provide spiritually enriching material (e.g. Bible study ideas, daily devotions, inspirational poems, narrations, testimonies, visual art, media highlights, etc.), to youth growing in their walk with Christ and, also, youth who are still looking for the path on which to walk.
9. Increase mission on the local, national, and international levels by using revenue to send youth on mission trips to places where safe partnerships have already been established.

Rationale

With the passing of the new mission plan, our denomination has reaffirmed its call to mission. Unfortunately, the mission resources of youth do not seem to be realized. This magazine would reach out to churched and unchurched youth alike using the voices of the ones youth tend to listen to the most: their peers. Millions of youth want to fill the emptiness they feel inside of them, and millions more are enthusiastic for Christ, praying for ways they can serve the Lord. Looking to the future of our church and world, it is time to encourage youth to explore and expand their mission potential.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-08

Comment on Item 09-08—From the General Assembly Council.

We advise that the overture be disapproved with comment. The concept is good and we would advise the committee to propose an alternative response to this important need. A proposal that is more reasonably within the existing resources could be a semi-annual, Web-based electronic magazine lodged in the existing Witness Season Web site (www.pcusa.org/witness). This new Web site could contain links to the PC(USA) Youth and Young Adult Ministry sites, the Young Adult Mission Volunteer and Internship sites, Mission Connection, Young Adult Peacemaking, and other appropriately related sites. Many of the elements addressed in the overture already exist, but not in a consolidated, easily accessible location. The Youth Mission e-zine could potentially serve as a portal to a variety of mission-related opportunities for youth and young adults. A Web e-zine would significantly cut down the cost of such an endeavor as compared to a published magazine, and optimize the coordination of existing information and resources available. Such a Web site could include a means for youth and leaders who work with youth to contribute ideas and stories of mission involvement. Letters from young adult mission volunteers (already posted on the Web) could be highlighted. Articles from young people in partner churches around the world could add an authentically global aspect to the site. A semi-annual e-zine could conceivably be included in the current staff structure of Mission Education and Promotion with additional funding provided to recoup staff hours and cover the cost of Web design and related communication expenses. It could be envisioned for the responsibility to be lodged in Mission Education and Promotion with close cooperation with the offices of Youth and Young Adult Ministry, Mission Volunteers, and the Office of Communication (particularly staff of Presbyterians Today).

1. Good Concept

The overture speaks to an exciting possibility and important need regarding leadership development and mission involvement. The author of the overture is to be commended for a passion for youth and young adult ministry as well as recognition of the role of mission engagement in the spiritual formation of young people. Research has shown that mission involvement in local and global contexts significantly increase the likelihood of a young person's commitment to the church as an adult. (From Search Institute as listed in Beyond Leaf Raking: Learning to Serve—Serving to Learn, Peter Benson and Eugene C. Roehlkepartian, Abingdon Press: Nashville, 1993.)

2. Cost Prohibitive in Current Economic Climate

There are some challenges, however, in the proposal as it is set forth in the overture. The costs for publishing a quarterly magazine in the manner suggested are great. Five staff with salaries, benefits, and related office and program expenses would be estimated at $362,500 annually (based on 2004 budget for five General Assembly staff salaries, benefits, and office expenses). The production cost of a quarterly magazine would be estimated at $96,510 annually, plus postage and distribution (based on production cost (not including staff writers, editors and overhead) for Ideas! magazine, a quarterly CMP publication). There would be additional costs related to the solicitation of advertisements in the magazine. It is not unrealistic to estimate an annual cost of $500,000 for this venture.

3. Feedback Does Not Support a Special Offering

The overture calls for a one-time, special offering to underwrite the start-up of the publication and utilize continued subscription fees and ad sales. It would be highly unlikely to have a singular project to be given the status of receiving a one-time, churchwide special offering. Every campaign and project would soon be in line for a similar one-time, special offering. In addition, the promotional and communication costs for establishing a new offering are great—in terms of dollars and staff time. The Presbyterian Panel recently conducted research in the form of a written survey and six focus groups regarding the possibility of adding a new special offering. There was a strong response that congregations are not interested in adding any more special offerings at this time. Regarding the continued revenues of subscriptions and ads, we would need to look to the funding patterns of other Presbyterian magazines to see if the revenues do, in fact, exceed the expenditures. We are not aware of any Presbyterian magazine that pays for itself through subscriptions and ad sales.

At the same time, the need should not be ignored.

Item 09-09

[The assembly approved Item 09-09 with amendment. See pp. 41–42.]

On Taking Decisive Action to Recover from the Decline in Membership and Development of Ministry and Mission—From the Presbytery of Mackinac.

The Presbytery of Mackinac overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to approve

1. That the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) take decisive action to initiate decisions that will lead to [the PC(USA)'s recovery from its decline in membership] [growth] and development of ministry and mission.

2. That the General Assembly, synods, presbyteries, and congregations reaffirm [as its first priority, the fulfillment of] the goal of [recovery of membership and development of ministry and mission of this church] [making disciples for the ministry and mission of Christ's church].

3. That the whole church embrace, fund, and implement the goals of the mission initiative JOINING HEARTS AND HANDS—A Campaign to Renew the Church for Mission as the initial initiative to [recover] [growth in] membership and develop ministry and mission of this church.

4. That the PC (USA) mobilize itself with continued and fervent prayer for the Holy Spirit to be poured out on our church for increase.

Rationale

The following statistical data was supplied by the PC(USA) Website, the JOINING HEARTS AND HANDS—A Campaign to Renew the Church for Mission booklet, and Jack Marcum of PC (USA) Research Services:

- From 1965 (the year decline began) to 2002 the PC(USA) declined in membership from 4,254,597 to 2,451,969.
- The average loss was 48,720 members per year.

- Thirty percent of congregations grew by 1 percent or more from 1997–2002 representing 735,591 of the total membership.
- If the growing churches maintained the 2002 level of their membership and the total decline continued, the PC(USA) would be 735,591 in the year 2037.
- If the current overall statistic prevailed, the PC(USA) would cease to exist in the year 2053.
- The average (mean) age of a PC(USA) member is currently 55.
- Sixteen percent of the ordained pastoral leadership pool is under forty years of age.
- Three thousand nine hundred ninety-five of the approximately 11,500 congregations have no pastor.
- Seven thousand twenty-four congregations (63.3 percent reporting in 2002) had an average worship attendance of 100 or less (the actual number is most likely higher because smaller congregations are disproportionately less likely to report attendance).
- Between 1950 and 1960, the PC(USA) started 1,345 congregations. Between 1990 and 2000, the denomination started 292 congregations.
- Four million twenty-four thousand dollars (unrestricted dollars) has been trimmed from the 2003 General Assembly budget and $1,854,000 for 2004.

The great commission commands the church of Jesus Christ to make disciples everywhere in the world.

Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them to obey everything that I have commanded you. And remember, I am with you always, to the end of the age. (Matt. 28:19–20)

Jesus Christ further promises to be with us and to not abandon us. In the 21st century we cannot afford to abandon this key truth that is embodied in the Reformed heritage (Book of Order, W-2.3001).

Recovery of membership and development of ministry and mission is a central conviction of a Presbyterian understanding of faith and discipleship as witnessed to in The Book of Confessions, 9.07, 6.058, 4.123.

Recovery of membership and development of ministry and mission is a central conviction of the vision and principles for church life as stressed in the Book of Order, G-1.0100b; W-7.2001e, f; G-10.0102a; G-13.0103a, b, d.

As members of the early church shared their faith the church grew because the Lord added to their number.

So the churches were strengthened in the faith, and they increased in numbers daily (Acts 16:5; also Acts 2:47b).

There are places where growth and renewal are taking place in the PC(USA), but in the present arena of decision making and use of Presbyterian polity, these places of celebration are often overlooked or at best minimized, given only passing recognition.

A bold direction for renewal has already been given in the The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967:

The church thus orders its life as an institution with a constitution, government, officers, finances, and administrative rules. These are instruments of mission, not ends in themselves. Different orders have served the gospel, and none can claim exclusive validity. A presbyterian polity recognizes the responsibility of all members for ministry and maintains the organic relation of all congregations in the church. It seeks to protect the church from exploitation by ecclesiastical or secular power and ambition. Every church order must be open to such reformation as may be required to make it a more effective instrument of the mission of reconciliation. (The Book of Confessions, 9.40, p. 258)

Pleasant, UT 84647.

Rationale

It has been customary for the General Assembly annually to recognize and approve a list of institutions related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through history, tradition, and covenants with governing bodies, and various relationships of program and financial support.

Item 09-11

On Supporting the Association of Presbyterian Schools (APS)—From the Presbytery of Mississippi.

The Presbytery of Mississippi respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Commend the Association of Presbyterian Schools (APS) for its efforts to coordinate the work of all the secondary schools related to the Presbyterian church.
2. Celebrate the work of the member institutions of the APS as they seek “to strengthen the lives of children” by providing quality, Christian education to today’s youth.
3. Encourage its member synods and presbyteries to enter into covenants of mutual understanding and support with the member institutions of APS within their bounds.
4. Encourage each of its member presbyteries to honor the Decade of the Child by
  - a. supporting financially at least one of the current members of APS, even if no APS school currently resides within its bounds;
  - b. exploring the needs for new Presbyterian secondary schools within its bounds;
  - c. partnering with APS to establish new Presbyterian secondary schools in areas of need;
  - d. helping the recruitment efforts of APS schools by promoting and publicizing their ministries to all of its member congregations.

Rationale

The 213th General Assembly (2001) extended “its emphasis on children by declaring this first decade of the 21st century, July 2001–July 2011, as the ‘Decade of the Child’ and calls upon all its agencies, churches, and members to continue the ministry efforts begun on behalf of children during this past year and diligently explore during the ‘Decade’ new ways to strengthen the lives of children and the families in which they live, thus ensuring the future of the church and our world through this new millennium” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 458).

In addition, the 215th General Assembly (2003) approved “Reclaiming the Vision: A Mission Strategy to Strengthen the Partnership Between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Its Related Schools, Colleges, and Universities” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 24, 521). This included calls for the governing bodies and educational institutions of the church to clarify and strengthen their partnership, focusing on the Reformed heritage of learning and service to promote the mission of the church.

This overture seeks, at least in part, to fulfill these desires of the church. The member institutions of the Associate of Presbyterian Schools (APS) deserve the full support of the church as they faithfully engage in their ministries to children, developing today those who will lead the church tomorrow.

But while the General Assembly has repeatedly called for Presbyterians to engage in ministries to children, the sad fact is that the APS schools receive very little funding from governing bodies above the session level. At the same time, most of the APS schools serve boarding students, which means that their student bodies are not drawn from the area of service of one congregation, or even from one presbytery. The service of these schools is truly national, and so there is a great need for their support to be equally as broad.

There are many reasons why Presbyterians should support and expand their network of secondary schools across the country:

1. Presbyterians have historically engaged in education at all levels. When the Presbyterian missionaries first began out across the United States, they started schools almost everywhere they started churches. The Presbyterian church has always been a teaching church, and it is imperative for the PC(USA) to reclaim this part of its heritage below the college level.

2. Numerous studies have shown that many people respond to evangelism at young ages. The Presbyterian Frontier Fellowship recently reported that “nearly 85% of Christians decide to follow Jesus between the ages of 4 and 14.” Quite simply, Presbyterian schools can combine evangelism with high-quality education at an age when evangelism is most effective, while public schools are not allowed to present the claims of Christ to their students at all.

3. Presbyterians have long lamented the slow but steady decline in our membership across the country. We have also noticed that many of our youth leave the church during their college years. The APS schools have an opportunity to ensure that our young people are properly trained in the faith, which should fortify them in their challenging college years.

4. The colleges and universities that make up the Association of Presbyterian Colleges and Universities (APCU) provide challenging courses of study for all their students. They thus need students who are properly prepared, and Presbyterian secondary schools have long been known for their pursuit of academic excellence.

5. Many APS schools are located in areas where Presbyterians are not a majority, or even a significant minority of the population. These schools thus form an effective beachhead for the church in “frontier” areas.

6. All APS schools are intentionally diverse. Several are among the church’s racial ethnic schools. All seek to provide quality, Christ-centered educational opportunities for youth, regardless of their color or creed.

7. Secondary schools are much less expensive to establish and operate than are colleges. It would thus be relatively easy for the PC(USA) to expand its educational role, raising its profile while providing a greatly needed service.

8. The current members of APS provide a broad spectrum of models for presbyteries wanting to establish new secondary schools within their bounds. APS includes:

- a. college preparatory schools;
- b. schools featuring student work programs;
- c. schools featuring outdoor activities and environmental awareness;
- d. schools that provide an intentionally cross-cultural experience;
- e. schools that target students having learning or behavioral problems;
- f. schools providing a home-like environment for their students;
- g. a school using military discipline to impart structure to its students.

Finally, it should be noted that supporting the current members of APS and expanding their number should not be considered an attack on the public schools of the United States. Rather, the APS complements the public schools by offering specialized educational opportunities for children with special wants and needs.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-11 instructs the 216th General Assembly (2004) to support the Association of Presbyterian Schools.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of the overture with the following comment:

There are seven Presbyterian-related secondary schools that have been informally related to the church through the General Assembly Council's Office for Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges and to the Association of Presbyterian Colleges and Universities (APCU). The APCU, by virtue of its purpose, can give only very limited attention to Presbyterian secondary schools.

There is a working group of representatives from the seven schools that meet to deal with matters of mutual interest. They have formed the Association of Presbyterian Schools and now seek recognition by the General Assembly in a covenant relationship.

The Seven Schools—Secondary, College Prep, Church-Related:

Blair Academy – New Jersey – Coed – 1848
 Chamberlain-Hunt Academy – Mississippi – Coed – 1879
 French Camp Academy – Mississippi – Coed – 1885
 Menaul Academy – New Mexico – Coed – 1881
 Presbyterian Pan American School – Texas – Coed – 1956
 Rabun Gap School – Georgia – Coed – 1903
 Wasatch Academy – Utah – Coed – 1875

Rationale

This overture is consistent with Presbyterian policy of support for education and the General Assembly statement of 2003, "A Mission Strategy to Strengthen the Partnership Between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Its Related Schools, Colleges, and Universities" (Minutes, Part I, 2003, pp. 521–23).

Item 09-12

[The assembly referred Item 09-12 to the General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, with comment. See pp. 42–43.]

On Recognizing Bloomfield College as a Racial Ethnic College Related to the PC(USA)—From the Presbytery of Newark.

The Presbytery of Newark overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to direct the General Assembly Council, through the National Ministries Division, to do the following:

1. Recognize Bloomfield College, Bloomfield, New Jersey, as a racial ethnic college related to the PC(USA) by covenant with the Synod of the Northeast.
2. Admit Bloomfield College to the list of schools and colleges supported through the Christmas Joy Offering.

Rationale

For more than 130 years, Bloomfield College has embraced a student body that is mainly composed of racial and ethnic minorities. Today the college's students are drawn from the urban centers of northern New Jersey, as well as from the surrounding states, and from nearly fifty countries. Seventy percent of the college's students are women; almost 50 percent are African American or African Caribbean; 35 percent are Caucasian; 13 percent are Hispanic; and 4 percent Asian. More than 95 percent of the full-time students receive financial aid; and 20 percent are from families earning annual incomes under $12,000. Bloomfield College was ranked sixth in Campus Diversity among Northern Comprehensive Colleges according to U.S. News & World Report's 2004 higher education rankings.

Bloomfield College is the only Presbyterian-related college in the Synod of the Northeast. Founded as a seminary to prepare German immigrants for ministry in the Presbyterian church, Bloomfield College has continually renewed itself to meet the changing needs of the community. The college is now a comprehensive liberal arts institution serving more than 2,000 students. The mission of Bloomfield College is to prepare students to attain academic, personal and professional excellence in a multicultural and global society.

Bloomfield students acquire a personal education that is both broad-based and practical. Since many of the students must be both fully employed and care for their families while pursuing degrees, the college offers flexible schedules that include weekend and evening sessions. Also, community service has been central to a Bloomfield College education since its founding. The required Sophomore Core Program teaches social responsibility through community service projects. Students give generously of their time and talents, volunteering at women's shelters, teaching at local elementary schools, and counseling peers and junior high students. The students enrich the lives of others while gaining practical experience and self-confidence.

Bloomfield College has furthered its commitment to the Presbyterian Church (USA) through the renewal of its covenant with the Synod of the Northeast and through the hiring of a full-time college chaplain who is an ordained Presbyterian minister of Word and Sacrament. The Westminster Foundation Advisory Board was established in 1998 to support the work of the chaplain and to strengthen the college's Presbyterian heritage.

The northeastern region of the United States continues to be a center of the country's growing diversity, yet there is currently no Presbyterian-related racial ethnic college from the region included in the church's Christmas Joy Offering. Participation in the Christmas Joy Offering will help Bloomfield College to continue to provide a higher educational opportunity to students who have been historically excluded from its promise. At the same time, inclusion in the offering will help ensure an ongoing Presbyterian presence in the lives of these gifted and often neglected children of God.

The potential economic benefit of a college degree is greater now than at any other time in our history. It is critical that the young men and women of New Jersey's urban areas are allowed to share in this opportunity. At Bloomfield College, many of these students experience an environment that allows them to obtain their degree and to face their futures in the spirit of optimism and self-reliance.

This overture is offered as an expression of the hope that the relationship between college and church shall continue and be strengthened in ways which enhance the unique mission and role of both the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and Bloomfield College.

Concurrences to Item 09-12 from the Presbyteries of Monmouth, New Brunswick, and Newton, and from the Synod of the Northeast.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-12

Comment on Item 09-12—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council (GAC) suggests that Item 09-12 be referred to the National Ministries Division of the General Assembly Council. The GAC advises that the report of the Special Offerings Review Task Force refers to the National Ministries Division the request of Bloomfield College to be classified as a racial ethnic college, and thus considered as a possible recipient of Christmas Joy Offering funds. Bloomfield College made a presentation to the Special Offerings Review Task Force (SORTF), requesting that SORTF designate the school as a racial ethnic college and thus make Bloomfield eligible for Christmas Joy offering funds. The SORTF believed that the designation of Bloomfield, or any other school, as a racial ethnic college was properly the decision of the National Ministries Division. However, the SORTF recommended that National Ministries consider how Christmas Joy Offering receipts might be used to identify, educate, and train racial ethnic students for future leadership in ways beyond the support of those educational institutions historically identified as racial ethnic.

On Improved Education for African American and Other Students Placed At-Risk for an Excellent Education—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to do the following:

[The assembly approved Item 09-13, Recommendation 1., with comment. See p. 43.]

1. That the General Assembly approve a ten-year emphasis on the education of students placed at risk for excellence in education for any reason with a plan of action for tutoring and mentoring a minimum of 10,000 students per year.

[The assembly referred Item 09-13, Recommendations 2.–10., to the General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, with additional recommendations added. See p. 43.]

2. That a study packet calling attention to problems faced by children and youth in their attempts to acquire an education (and including suggested strategies for action, including working with parents) be developed and distributed to every congregation.

3. That every congregation be called upon to accept responsibility for improving educational opportunities for students in their geographic areas by developing, supporting, or participating in a tutoring/mentoring program.

4. That every effort be made to ensure the excellence in education for culturally and linguistically diverse children that will eliminate their disproportionate representation in special education, disciplinary problems, suspensions, expulsions, and incarcerations.

5. That the primary focus be on young children (birth to fourth grade) to ensure that they have the basic foundation needed to become creative and responsible persons in the common life.

6. That the emphasis be on improving higher education as well as birth–12 education in order to provide the number of quality educators needed in schools and school systems today.

7. That Presbyterians answer the call to involvement in the support of public education as evidenced by church documents. (See Appendix B.)

8. That the General Assembly request names and addresses of educators at all levels from each congregation in order to provide the means for constructive two-way communications designed to provide national assistance to congregations and to allow for the sharing of ideas, strategies, and successes.

9. That the General Assembly request an annual report from each congregation detailing efforts made and successes achieved, as well as problems encountered.

10. That a national conference on Presbyterians involved in education be planned for two, three, or five years into the decade in order to evaluate the progress of the ten-year emphasis, to demonstrate to other churches what can be done in the missional area, and to inform the nation of the continuation of the historic effort of Presbyterians to be involved in the education of all children, especially those who are culturally and linguistically diverse.

[11. That Presbyterians be called upon to confront the stubborn continuance of racial prejudice, particularly the persistence of societal attitudes that discourage academic achievement among economically disadvantaged and children of color students and others at risk.]

[12. That because of the present educational difficulties that face many economically disadvantaged children of color and youth, the General Assembly Council, National Ministries Division, is charged with considering the advisability and feasibility of founding new primary and secondary schools open to all students that addresses the urgent educational needs of economically disadvantaged children of color and other students placed at risk due to the continuing effects of racial prejudice.]

Rationale

The Presbyterian church has, since the days of slavery, been known to be passionately interested in improving education for the descendants of slaves and other groups and has established and supported schools for this purpose.

In today's world, many children are reported to be at-risk for a quality education.

Culturally and linguistically diverse (CLD) children are the most at-risk because of their being most frequently referred out of the general education classroom for special education placement even when they have no inborn disability, but need good teaching and/or good discipline.

Recent research has led to the conclusion that these unjustified early referrals to and placement in special education frequently lead to later suspensions, dropouts, expulsions, and incarcerations, thus making early referral a prime reason that African American males are considered an endangered educational species.

Many administrators, teachers, and other educators are Presbyterians and individually and collectively have it in their power to significantly improve education for all children and to reduce at-risk factors in the lives of the children in their care. (Documentation exists of students who encountered stumbling blocks, but who, because of a person or persons who cared, became successful [Ben Carson, Albert Einstein, and others].)

The Presbyterian church has consistently stated its resolve to contribute to improved education for all students of any group and has issued a "call to involvement in the support of public education."

The next ten years in the church calendar have been designated "The Decade of the Child."

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-13

Comment on Item 09-13—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council, on the advice of the National Ministries Division, suggests that Item 09-13 be referred to the National Ministries Division, so that a feasible plan can be developed to address the central concerns of this overture, with a report being made to the 217th General Assembly (2006). Such a plan would take into account work being done denominationally and cooperatively with ecumenical partners, as well as resources that are currently available.

- The National Council of Churches Committee on Public Education and Literacy, on which we are represented, recently entered into a partnership with the National Education Association (NEA). They are currently working on education and advocacy materials to address some of the concerns raised by this overture

- The United Church of Christ has an office of Public Education and Witness, dedicated to the justice concerns related to public education. Some of the resources, which they have produced, may be adapted or used to meet some of the recommendations of this overture.

- The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) working group's report on "Resolution on Allegations of Child Sexual Abuse Against Educators" (Item 10-12) contains a recommendation relative to public education that may also need to be considered in light of this overture. The recommendation asks, "ACSWP to conduct a study of the future of contemporary public education in the context of the long history of Presbyterian support of public education. The study of systemic issues confronting public education should focus on the individual's role in supporting public education, and the appropriate citizenship for a multicultural and interfaith society and report to the General Assembly in 2008." (This recommendation, Item 10-12, is going to the 216th General Assembly (2004) for consideration and action.)

- The current and projected budget lines (already set for the next two years) cannot absorb the cost of most of the recommendations associated with this overture, such as resource packet development, printing and mailing to every congregation, database development, annual reports and follow-up, and a national conference. (See Financial Implications for these recommendations below.)

- Congregations are currently being urged by recent General Assemblies to support several ten-year emphases, such as the Decade of the Child, the Decade to Overcome Violence, and the Decade to Build a Culture of Peace and Nonviolence for All God's Children. Clearly, there is a limit to the number of such emphases that can be sustained on an all-congregation basis.

Financial Implications

"1. That the General Assembly approve a ten-year emphasis on the education of students placed at risk for excellence in education for any reason with a plan of action for tutoring and mentoring a minimum of 10,000 students per year."

- Cost: Indeterminate staff time to create a plan, establishing a data base or other means to monitor and evaluate such a mentoring program.

- Cost: $ 73,000 (Exclusive of staff-time costs)
  - Development of a packet, $30,000 (based on approximate costs of development of Turning Mourning Into Dancing packet)
  - Printing of 11,100 packet, $28,000
  - Mailing of packet to 11,000 + congregations = $14,000 (from MSS, this is the cost of mailing a thirty-two page booklet)

- Cost: Variable, depending upon the way this is communicated to all congregations.

“5. That the primary focus be on young children (birth to fourth grade) to ensure that they have the basic foundation needed to become ‘creative and responsible persons in the common life.’ (citation)

“6. That the emphasis be on improving higher education as well as birth-12 education in order to provide the number of quality educators needed in schools and school systems today.

- Cost: Substantial, but indeterminate cost, especially in staff-time to develop a data base and ongoing communication strategy with 11,000 contact points.

“9. That the General Assembly request an annual report from each congregation detailing efforts made and successes achieved, as well as problems encountered.”

- Cost: Indeterminate, depending on how this is communicated and whether or not there is the cost of preparing a standard report form and sending it out annually to all congregations, and the potential costs of follow-up.

“10. That a National Conference on Presbyterians Involved in Education be planned for two, three, or five years into the decade in order to evaluate the progress of the ten-year emphasis, to demonstrate to other churches what can be done in the missional area, and to inform the nation of the continuation of the historic effort of Presbyterians to be involved in the education of all children, especially those who are culturally and linguistically diverse.”

Cost: [Estimates for participant costs, based on 300 persons for 3 days] $ 280,500

Unit costs: Travel $420, Per diem $45, Room & Board $125

This does not include the costs of printing, promotion, securing presenters, their transportation, honorarium, housing & meals, general hotel expenses, pre-planning meeting costs, travel subsidies for attendees [realizing most will be educators on limited budgets] and staff time, Estimated at $ 50,000.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 09-13 calls for improved education for African American and other students placed at risk for an excellent education, from the Presbytery of National Capital.

The ACREC concurs with the General Assembly Council (GAC) comment and affirms the intent and purposes of the item to address the needs of African American and other educationally disenfranchised children.

Item 09-14

On Recognizing Ms. Dianne Davis and Constructores Para Cristo for Their Christian Ministry in Mexico—From the Presbytery of New Harmony.

[The assembly disapproved Item 09-14 with comment. See p. 43.]

The Presbytery of New Harmony overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to recognize Ms. Dianne Davis, and Constructores Para Cristo (CPC) for the remarkable improvement CPC has made in the lives of more than four hundred Mexican families, and for the way in which CPC has provided a mission outreach opportunity for innumerable church congregations and life changing experiences for those who have participated in this Christian ministry with our brothers and sisters in Mexico.

Rationale

The Presbytery of New Harmony joins with many other Presbyterians in the desire to recognize a valuable mission effort that has been building houses for impoverished Mexican families in Piedras Negras, Mexico, since 1987.

This effort was started by Dianne Davis, a member of the South Highland Presbyterian Church in Birmingham, Alabama.

Ms. Davis was guided by the Lord.

Thousands of people have been allowed to know the joy of the Lord's labor.

Congregations from all over the United States, including eight congregations from New Harmony, have been involved in this mission endeavor.

This mission effort has been officially known and incorporated as Constructores Para Cristo, and has resulted in 408 new houses being build through 2003.

A medical center, a preschool facility, and a veterinary clinic, have been built and dedicated.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-14

Comment on Item 09-14—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council advises that it is inappropriate for the General Assembly to recognize programs it has neither validated nor evaluated. The General Assembly has an important role in setting standards and directions in mission. Recognitions for service made by the General Assembly should be rooted in criteria that are the result of deliberations and in policies of the denomination. Nominees for recognitions should be reviewed in an approved process and in light of published criteria.

It is, however, appropriate for the General Assembly to recognize the legitimacy of the needs being addressed and to encourage the discipleship and witness of Presbyterians in ministering to that need. Thousands of Presbyterians are following the leading of the Lord in mission and their efforts are bearing great fruit. It is commendable that presbyteries are celebrating this fact.

Item 09-15

On Directing the National Ministries Division (NMD) to Develop a Plan for Resourcing and Funding Evangelism with Racial Ethnic Persons and Persons of Limited Economic Resources—From the Presbytery of Miami.

[The assembly approved Item 09-15 with amendment and with comment. See p. 42.]

The Presbytery of Miami (Synod of the Covenant) overtures the 216th General Assembly to direct the National Ministries Division to develop a comprehensive plan for [resourcing] [accessing resources] and [for] funding evangelism with racial ethnic persons and persons of limited economic resources, including but not limited to coordination between Racial Ethnic Ministries and Evangelism and Church Development for funding and resources.

Rationale

As a denomination, we have set a goal to increase our racial ethnic membership by 10 percent by the year 2010. Yet, we do not have a comprehensive plan for developing the resources and the funding for reaching this goal. We realize that funds are limited, and want our church to make the most effective use of funding.

Dependence on traditional and other models that are largely Euro-American for new church development and evangelism has too often limited racial ethnic persons and those who are not typically middle class from achieving full participation in the worship, work, and the life of our denomination. The largest and fastest growing minority population in the United States is the Hispanic population. They constitute approximately 13 percent of the population, while being only 1.2 percent of the active membership of the PC(USA) church. Many racial ethnic Christians are looking for a place to worship but have little or no experience in the Presbyterian church.

Currently, there is a systemic approach in the National Ministries Division where funds are distributed through Evangelism and Church Development or Racial Ethnic Ministries, without sufficient communication and coordination of the funds. Presbyteries working particularly with immigrants express frustration in trying to maneuver through the system. Some presbyteries and congregations report that funds for such models as Bible fellowships, cell groups, and other creative ways of carrying out evangelism with non-white, non-middle class persons are often not available. Prior to any new church development, these models are the initial steps that are most often needed to begin and are much less expensive than our more traditional ways of carrying out evangelism.

We need coordination not only for resourcing and funding, but also for expediting our response to our neighbors. Too often, many of us who are doing outreach with groups not traditionally Presbyterian, observe that by the time we are able to obtain needed resources, other denominations have already begun and become entrenched in the community.

The development of a comprehensive plan for resources and funding for evangelism and outreach is urgent and essential in order to more effectively reach out to those that reflect the diversity of our nation, offering the gospel message, affirmed by our tradition, that the love of Jesus Christ is for people of all races, cultures, and economic backgrounds.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-15

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-15—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic concerns (ACREC).

Item 09-15 requests the 216th General Assembly (2004) to direct the National Ministries Division (NMD) to develop a comprehensive plan for resourcing and funding evangelism with racial ethnic persons and persons of limited economic resources, from the Presbytery of Miami.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 09-15 be approved.

Rationale

Item 09-15 proposes means to enhance and expand work in progress that would help the PC(USA) honor and fulfill its 1998 commitments to an increase of racial ethnic/immigrant churches and congregational membership of 10 percent by 2010 and 20 percent by 2020.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-15

GAC Comment on Item 09-15—From the General Assembly Council.

The Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy and the Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts and Hands were created in response to the kind of concerns articulated in Item 09-15 and the General Assembly Council's ability to respond to these concerns rests with the success of the Mission Initiative Campaign.

Background: This overture is similar in content to a series of overtures received by the assembly since 1996 when the 208th General Assembly (1996) approved specific racial ethnic membership goals for 2005 and 2010. Shortly after these goals were approved, the General Assembly Council submitted and got approval from the 210th General Assembly (1998) for a Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy. While the 210th General Assembly (1998) enthusiastically approved the strategy, it also added a recommendation calling for a plan to help fund the need for additional dollars created by this new emphasis. The 214th General Assembly (2002) (Columbus) overwhelmingly approved the creation of the Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts and Hands as a plan for generating additional funds for church development with an emphasis on racial ethnic church development (and mission service). The Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy and the Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts and Hands are direct responses to the kind of concerns expressed in Item 09-15.

Annual Statistical Report and Racial Ethnic Evangelism—From the Office of the General Assembly

HEAR WHAT THE SPIRIT SAYS TO THE CHURCHES (REV. 2:29)
REFLECTIONS ON THE 2003 PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) STATISTICS

One of the responsibilities of the Stated Clerk is to gather and report the statistics of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). While the numbers are readily available to all, the figures themselves do not tell the whole story. Underneath these statistics are real live Presbyterians, who make up our churches and who are faithful disciples of Jesus Christ. The fact that there are fewer active members in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) than a year ago should call us to prayer and repentance.

We live in a time of deep, spiritual hunger, which can only be truly met by the gospel of Jesus Christ. I am convinced that God intends for the Presbyterian church to be a growing church, and I believe strongly that we are being called as a church to a fresh commitment to be "Christ's faithful evangelist" (Book of Order, G-3.0300). To aid us in responding to that commitment, I would like to make six suggestions that grow out of the 2003 statistics, which will hopefully help Presbyterian churches become growing churches.

First, a word about the figures themselves. At the end of 2003, there are 2,405,311 active, confirmed members in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a net loss of 46,658 from 2002. The total membership of the PC(USA) is 3,241,267. This includes 343,378 baptized, but not confirmed, members (mostly children) and 492,620 inactive members. The 2004 edition of the Yearbook of American Churches indicates that we are the ninth largest church body in the United States.

These members are found in 11,064 congregations, which are related to 173 presbyteries and sixteen synods. There are 21,248 ministers (including 346 who were ordained in 2003), 101,324 elders, and 68,132 deacons. Total contributions and income for these churches totaled $2,923,384,580, an increase of 2.5 percent over 2002. Two thirds of this revenue was spent on the local program of our churches; 15 percent on capital expenditures for churches, 12 percent on mission, 1.5 percent on presbytery, synod, and General Assembly per capita.

These figures hold deeper implications for the faithful ministry of Presbyterian congregations. The deepest and most profound implication is that we as a church are being called by God to prayer for repentance and renewal. We know that coming to faith is only possible through the power of the Holy Spirit. We, as Presbyterians, will only become a growing church if we begin on our knees, praying for forgiveness for our timidity in evangelism and seeking God's renewal, so that we and our churches lose our image as "God's frozen chosen" and become joyful evangelists, actively sharing the Good News and inviting others into the fellowship of our churches.

Empowered by prayer and the Holy Spirit, there are six specific calls to action that I believe arise from these statistics:

1. We need to realize that our most important evangelistic outreach begins at home.

In 2003, as in other recent years, we have gained more new members through profession of faith and transfer of certificate of membership than we lost by those who transferred from the PC(USA) to other churches or who died. Our gain in these categories was 114,910 and our losses were 67,557—a net gain of 47,353. Our problem is that we had "other losses" of 112,624—mainly through people who were moved to the inactive list and, usually a few years later, out the "back door to nowhere." Statistically, we are not losing people to other churches. Our problem is that we are losing our people to the secular world—to no active church affiliation. All of us—pastors, elders, and deacons—need to give special attention to nurturing our members, supporting them in meaningful ministry, and reaching out to them when they begin to fall away from active membership.

2. We need to follow the wisdom of the Book of Order concerning inactive members.

Three thousand of the "other losses" in 2003 came from just three congregations. These were large churches who "cleaned the rolls" after years of neglect of the Book of Order's guidance in G-10.0302 for sessions to regularly review the rolls and to move members to the inactive roll only after they have "made diligent effort to discover the cause of members' nonparticipation and to restore the member to activity in the church's work and worship." Not giving regular attention to the active involvement of members and seeking to restore their active participation at an early stage means it is often too late to re-engage active members when several years have passed. This failure to give regular attention and pastoral visitation to those who have been active but are now slipping away is a major cause of our membership losses, not just in those three churches. Every session needs to actively review its rolls at least annually and make a plan for pastoral visitation for those moving toward inactivity in the church's life.

3. We are called to make disciples—by baptizing.

Jesus was quite clear in the Great Commission that we as followers of Christ are called to make disciples of all nations by baptizing them (Matt. 28:19). Presbyterians are not doing a very good job of bringing new disciples into the church through baptism. In 2003, we recorded a total of 10,174 adult baptisms in our churches. While this is a gain of 518 over 2002, it still represents less than one adult baptism per church. We had a higher number of child baptisms (35,237) than adult, but on the average, still about three per church. These figures are in marked contrast to those of Presbyterians twenty and forty years ago—and from Presbyterian churches in many other nations. In 1984, the total number of baptisms for adults was 16,535; for children, 50,507. For 1964, those figures were 34,545 and 90,909. It has often been said that Presbyterians are better at nurturing the faithful than at inviting those who have never believed into a life-giving relationship with Jesus Christ, and these figures seem to bear that out. We need to develop the gift of sharing the gospel with those who have never heard the Good News and welcoming them into our churches through baptism.

4. We need to learn from our growing churches—and imitate them!

While we are losing members as a denomination, we do have many growing churches (32 percent [3,623] posted gains in 2003), and all of our congregations need to learn from them. We are aided in this task by two excellent new publications by Deborah Bruce and Cynthia Woolever, Beyond the Ordinary: 10 Strengths in U.S. Congregations and Fastest Growing Presbyterian Congregations. In the latter publication, they sought data from 400 of our fastest growing congregations (42 percent average growth over the last five years) and compared them with a sample of all of our congregations. Some of the strengths of these growing churches are:

- Vital programs for children and youth.
  - Widespread use of prayer groups and other small group ministries.
  - New forms and times for worship with an emphasis on spontaneity, inspiration, and joy.
  - Strong connections electronically.
  - A cultural norm of inviting friends to worship and sharing faith stories.
  - Excitement about the future of the church.
5. If we are going to be a growing church, we must be a multicultural church.

By the middle of this century, the majority of people in the U.S. will be non-Caucasian. Many of the new immigrants who are coming to our country are from parts of the world where the Reformed tradition is strong. If the PC(USA) is to be a growing church, it must be a truly multicultural church! A few years ago, we set goals to increase our racial ethnic membership to 10 percent of our total by 2005 and to 20 percent by 2010. We need to take dramatic action NOW to meet these goals, and the report on the consultation on the racial ethnic/immigrant evangelism and church growth strategy outlines ways to achieve them. While our racial ethnic membership increased slightly in 2003, the statistics show that the percentage of Presbyterians who are racial ethnic is still below the 10 percent figure. Some exciting new efforts are underway to help us to reach this goal—a growing number of new immigrant fellowships, increasing numbers of multicultural congregations, and fresh strategies for racial ethnic church growth—but a far greater commitment is required if we are to be transformed into a Christian community that looks like the multicultural world in which we are living in the U.S. today.

6. The PC(USA) grows when we start new churches, and we need to start more new churches.

Historically, the PC(USA) has shown overall growth in the years when it was most active in new church development. While we can rejoice that there is new energy and resources for building new churches and chartering new immigrant fellowships, we are still dissolving more churches each year (forty-seven in 2003) than we are beginning new ones (thirty-one in 2003). We need a commitment in every presbytery to begin more new churches than we dissolve old ones and a commitment in the entire denomination to generously support the mission initiative to help the whole church to respond to the unique opportunity in our time to develop new churches, especially among racial ethnic and new immigrant groups.

No “magic bullet” is available to move from being a church that is losing members to being a growing church. It is only through the power of the Holy Spirit that people come to saving faith in Jesus Christ and churches grow. However, I do believe that these six steps, if taken seriously by Presbyterians, will position us for the Holy Spirit to work in fresh and creative ways in our life, so that we might become the church that God intends us to be—a church that is growing in grace, growing in numbers, and growing in faithful discipleship to our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

I. Introduction

In February 2003, the Racial Ethnic Ministries (REM) program area of the National Ministries Division sponsored a consultation to review and evaluate the implementation of Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy (RE/IECGS) (www.pcusa.org/racialethnic/GrowthStrategy.pdf) and to update the changes in both church and society, as reflected in the strategy, since its approval by the 210th General Assembly (1998). The Congregational Enhancement offices, the New Immigrant Ministries office of REM, the Evangelism and Cultural Diversity office of the Evangelism and Church Development program area (ECD), and the racial ethnic caucuses provided the leadership for the consultation. Two to three leaders from each racial ethnic constituency group within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) who are actively engaged directly or indirectly in the implementation of the strategy were invited to serve as members of a “think tank” with the leaders of this first consultation.

The consultation began with an overview of the current environment in the PC(USA) as it related to the strengths and weaknesses of the strategy and current decisions related to racial ethnic issues. Each constituency reported on the implementation of the RE/IECGS in racial ethnic and new immigrant congregations and fellowships, middle governing bodies, and General Assembly agencies. Since the approval of the RE/IECGS, the General Assembly has taken two major actions impacting the implementation of the strategy:

- The creation of a task force on Commissioners’ Resolution 00-8; and
- The adoption of the Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts & Hands, to raise funds to support and renew the church development with an emphasis on racial ethnic/immigrant church growth.

Reports were presented on both of these projects.

The vision and impetus for the Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Church Growth Report came from the racial ethnic community of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It grew out of the Shape and Form Restructure in 1994. The 208th General Assembly (1996) acknowledged the compelling need for an intentional church-wide strategy for racial ethnic church growth stating the following: “... The current reality that racial ethnic membership in this denomination is only 4.7 percent when racial ethnics are more than 20 percent of the population of the United States is a testimony of the lack of emphasis the denomination has placed on racial ethnic evangelism ...” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 378, paragraph 33.143).”

At that same General Assembly, the denomination affirmed the goal of increasing the racial ethnic membership of the PC(USA) to 10 percent by 2005 and 20 percent by 2010. The Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Strategy, approved at the 210th General Assembly (1998), outlined the components of a church-wide strategy for racial ethnic membership growth. The strategy was designed so that all of the denomination’s entities (congregations, racial ethnic caucuses, presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly agencies), would work in partnership to address the challenge of increasing the racial ethnic membership.

The General Assembly’s 2001 statistics indicate that the racial ethnic membership of the PC(USA) is approximately 7.1 percent. The Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy Report has made a remarkable impact on the denomination. More specifically, the strategy has achieved the following:

- The General Assembly Council (GAC) provided the impetus for the development of A Vision for Church Growth in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that was approved at the 211th General Assembly (1999).

- The Mission Development Resources Committee (MDRC) of the Evangelism and Church Development (ECD) program area has increased the financial support for racial ethnic projects from 39 percent in 1993 to 61 percent in 2002 of the total amount given for mission grants.
- The Office of New Immigrant Ministries and the Office of Racial and Cultural Diversity was established in the Evangelism and Church Development program area (ECD) to reach new immigrant populations and to help congregations become more multicultural in mission and ministry.
- The Offices of Middle Eastern Ministries and New Immigrant Ministries have been relocated to the Racial Ethnic Ministries program area to better coordinate the implementation of the strategy.
- The racial ethnic caucuses and a number of middle governing bodies are increasing their ministries for racial ethnic/immigrant church growth.
- The Racial Ethnic Clergy Recruitment Task Force was created. Over a two-year period, they have created resources to raise awareness of the needs and are working with theological institutions and others on racial ethnic recruitment and preparation for ministry issues.
- The Synod Partnership Mission Consultation has focused its efforts in developing partnerships with racial ethnic ministries. In addition, synod schools across the country are incorporating a segment of racial ethnic ministries within their leadership development annual events.
- The General Assembly Council's "Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts and Hands," a $40 million fund development campaign was developed to meet the increasing need of additional resources for church growth (with an emphasis on racial ethnic church growth) and international mission.

In general, the Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy stimulated the General Assembly's current emphasis on church growth. There are signs that racial ethnic/immigrant church growth is becoming a legitimate and significant church-wide emphasis.

The foundational theological significance of the Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Church Growth Strategy to the entire denomination is a call to deepen its discipleship to Jesus Christ by living out the universal love of God in an increasing multicultural world. The strategy embodies God's call to transformation towards righteousness and justice within every part of the PC(USA).

II. Biblical & Theological Foundation Revisited

The theological and biblical foundation of the Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Church Growth Strategy begins with the statement "The Church of Jesus Christ is built on the universal love of God and its power to transform people of every race, culture, and class into a community living together as the Household of God." It grounds the mandate for racial ethnic, new immigrant, and multicultural church growth in the Great Commandment to love God, neighbor, and self (Matt. 22:36–40) and the Great Commission (Matt. 28:16–20, Mark 16:14–18) to go out and make disciples. This theological and biblical foundation concludes that the Church of Jesus Christ can neither ignore nor avoid responding to the growing diversity in our world today. The challenge to all Christians is to learn to share the good news of God's love in a culture that features a rich variety of languages, music, styles, and modes of worship, ministries, and witness.

The 2003 Consultation on the Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy lifted up three dimensions of Christian discipleship that must be strengthened and lived out in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in order to be effective witnesses of Jesus Christ in a racially and culturally diverse world. They are spiritual transformation, the pursuit of justice and righteousness (the right use of power), and evangelism as joyfully sharing God's love, which demonstrates that we are a new creation in Jesus Christ.

Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Church Growth is first and foremost a call to Christians to engage in an ongoing process of spiritual transformation to be new people in Jesus Christ. Everyone is called to be in an ongoing process of transformation that reflects Jesus is Lord of our lives (Phil. 2:11 and Roman 12:2). It is both an inward and outward process of growing in a passionate relationship with Jesus Christ. Being a new creation comes before reconciliation. We cannot preach a gospel of reconciliation with each other or reach out to unchurched people if we are not in a transformational relationship with Jesus Christ.

Justice is regarded as the outward expression of faith lived out. It is active not passive. It represents the state of doing. The Greek word for righteousness and justice is the same (dikiaosoni). Both words point to an active process of inward and outward transformation in the likeness of Jesus of Nazareth. The church is called to confront injustices and misuses of power (Micah 6:8) that marginalize people of color in predominately Anglo (Euro-American) church. Racial ethnic leaders are called to practice righteousness and justice with each other across racial and cultural lines as they seek to overcome the bondages of internalized racism, sexism, classism, and cultural ethnocentrism. They have the special call to empower the poor, comfort the brokenhearted, bind up the wounds of the outcasts, transform the violent in racial ethnic communities, and embrace them in our congregational families with love.

Evangelism is the call to joyfully share the gospel in the context of cultural diversity. In order for evangelism in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to be an effective model of power, sharing between dominant groups and racial ethnic people should be developed and implemented. Evangelism must be done in partnership and mutuality.

III. Theological Education & Racism

Seminaries are places where future pastors, Christian educators, and other church leaders are trained for ministry. They are also places for research and development as the church seeks to prepare leaders to respond to God's call to ministry in a complex and changing, multicultural and multiracial society. The General Assembly recognizes that the task of dismantling racism must be a partnership effort that involves all levels of the church. As centers of education and research, seminaries are an essential part of the church's effort to realize a vision of the Beloved Community.

The 211th General Assembly (1999) approved a comprehensive policy document titled Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community, which set forth a church-wide strategy for antiracism initiatives involving all levels of the church. The document was developed in light of the shifting demographics, which are changing the racial and cultural face of both church and society. This has implications for how the church does mission as well as how it trains leaders for mission and ministry. As centers of education and research, seminaries are an essential part of the church's effort to realize a vision of the beloved community in a complex, multicultural, and multiracial society.

In the face of growing racial and cultural diversity among seminary students, faculty will need to engage in a process that will enable them to

- discern the needs of students from diverse racial and cultural backgrounds and appropriate methodologies for the pedagogical tasks;
- address systemic racism, sexism, classism, and other forms of oppression; and
- select relevant curriculum materials reflecting a multiracial and multicultural world.

IV. Threefold Strategy

A. Racial Ethnic Congregations—A Definition of the Work

Racial ethnic congregations are envisioned to continue as the primary source of racial ethnic membership growth. Currently the PC(USA) has six General Assembly Congregational Enhancement offices, which serve racial ethnic constituency groups. These offices serve the African American, Asian American, Hispanic American, Korean American, Middle Eastern American, and Native American congregations in the denomination. The Congregational Enhancement offices resource racial ethnic congregations, racial ethnic caucuses, synods, and presbyteries in the areas of new church development, congregational transformation, evangelism, church growth, and leader training.

B. New Immigrant Ministries—A Definition of the Work

One of the greatest areas of potential identified by the RE/ICGS is immigrant group church development. The denomination had no mechanism for dealing with this area before this strategy. Now it is one of our most promising areas of potential.

In 1999, the General Assembly organized the Office of Immigrant Group Ministries in the United States to respond to those new immigrant groups that were not directly served by the Congregational Enhancement offices. Among its goals are to facilitate the entrance of new immigrant groups into the life of the denomination as partners in mission and to identify, train, and accredit the ministerial leadership of those constituencies.

C. Multicultural Congregations—A Definition of the Work

The strategy recognized the church's ambivalence in supporting racial ethnic church development. While encouraging inclusiveness, the strategy identified the need to explore multicultural approach to church development. Across the country, especially in urban communities, people are beginning to worship together as never before. To address this need, the Office of Evangelism and Racial and Cultural Diversity was created to serve multicultural congregations and advocates for racial and culturally diverse leadership. A multicultural church is a congregation that actively and intentionally recognizes and celebrates the gifts of the diverse membership in worship through language, music, and spiritual practices, as well as evangelism and equally shared leadership.

V. Church-wide Involvement

Strategic Program Activity for Church-Wide Involvement

Here Are the Needs!

In order to meet the Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Growth Strategic goals, there must be concerted, creative, and sustained efforts to recruit racial ethnic clergy leadership. We need more racial ethnic clergy to

- lead Bible study fellowships,
  - serve as new church development pastors,
  - engage in congregational transformation, and
  - serve governing bodies.
- ❑ Currently there are 466 African American churches. More than 40 percent of these congregations are without installed pastors. This number includes unchartered new church developments.
  - ❑ There are currently 112 Native American congregations, chapels, and fellowships. There are only forty ordained pastors and only about one-third of those are currently serving as pastors.
  - ❑ The need for Asian American pastors is significant as congregations are rapidly growing. At least 130 Asian American congregations or fellowships are affiliated with the PC(USA). They include Cambodian, Chinese, Filipino, Indonesian, Japanese, Laotian, Taiwanese, Thai, and Vietnamese.
  - ❑ There are currently 380 Korean American congregations or fellowships. Although most have pastoral leadership, the critical challenge is to recruit and sustain second-generation Korean pastors.
  - ❑ As Hispanics constitute the largest minority group in the U.S., there is a need for well-trained leaders for ministry to this rapidly growing population. There are approximately 300 Hispanic American congregations and fellowships for which 70 percent have installed pastors or commissioned lay pastors. Approximately 10 percent of the 70 percent come from lay pastors.

- ❑ Emerging needs for new ministry include providing pastoral leadership for immigrant groups such as persons from Latin America, the Caribbean, Africa, and Asia. A major focus is being placed on the large number of Middle Eastern immigrants who seek the Gospel of Jesus Christ through the Presbyterian church. They include Armenian, Assyrian, Egyptian, Iranian, Iraqi, Jordanian, Lebanese, Pakistani, Palestinian, Sudanese, and Syrian.

The number of racial ethnic persons ordained each year is not enough to replenish the ranks of racial ethnic clergy who will retire and or leave the pastorate. The need for new racial ethnic pastors is critical in order to establish new congregations, revitalize congregations facing changing demographics, and meet the need for leadership in congregations that are increasingly multi-ethnic in character.

The whole church, as it sees itself under a mandate to be “inclusive,” must join with racial ethnic churches in meeting this challenge. There is then hope of strengthening the church to change the world.

A. Congregations

1. Encourage predominantly Anglo congregations to call racial ethnic/immigrant pastors.
2. Encourage congregations to be more intentional in utilizing the gifts of racial ethnic/immigrant people within the decision-making processes.
3. Encourage congregations to call racial ethnic women pastors.
4. Encourage congregational leaders to a deeper discipleship of Jesus Christ that engages them in sharing the gospel in ways that transform the church, their communities, and the larger society.
5. Provide ongoing training for congregational leaders in spirituality, evangelism, and community ministries.
6. Help members recognize and develop their spiritual gifts.
7. Preach on the call to ministry, share your own story, challenge people to serve God through a church vocation.
8. Participate in youth events and encourage active discipleship among the young.
9. Identify and mentor young people who have gifts for ministry.
10. Pray for persons gifted for ministry that they may hear God’s call.
11. Establish a priority on the identification of racial ethnic youth with a potential for ministry.
12. Promote participation in youth work camps and mission trips to further acquaint young people with ministry opportunities.
13. Celebrate Christian Vocation Sunday (see PC(USA) Presbyterian Planning Calendar).

B. Racial Ethnic Caucuses

1. Encourage dialogue between existing national caucuses and other racial ethnic/immigrants new entities.
2. Encourage caucuses to take the responsibility to identify and encourage people in leadership to speak out and advocate in denominational events and middle governing bodies’ programs on behalf of racial ethnic/immigrants and multicultural issues.

3. Challenge racial ethnic leaders to a deeper discipleship of ministry and mission for the transformation of the church in the world.
4. Encourage caucuses to take the lead in the transformation processes, working in close partnership with staff and their constituencies in helping them to see the bigger picture.
5. Encourage caucuses to develop a self-assessment of their effectiveness in the implementation of the RE/IECGS.

C. Presbyteries

1. Encourage presbyteries to design and adopt appropriate new church development and church transformation policies for the immigrant community.
2. Encourage presbyteries to recruit, employ, and retain racial ethnic staff for presbytery executives and associate positions.
3. Encourage presbyteries to develop and adopt a plan for self-forming worshiping groups that are seeking affiliation with the PC(USA) and facilitate their growth into chartered churches.
4. Encourage the committees on preparation for ministry (CPM) to work more effectively with racial ethnic candidates in the preparation for ordination exams.
5. Recognize and use the ordination process to receive immigrant ministers from churches in correspondence with the General Assembly as prescribed by the Book of Order (G-11.0404).
6. Implement the strategies and recommendations as outlined in Commissioners' Resolution 00-8, approved at the 215th General Assembly (2003).
7. Provide guidelines that facilitate the fair and just sharing of church properties between existing congregations and racial ethnic/immigrant fellowship groups.
8. Encourage property committees to give first priority of vacated church facilities to racial ethnic/immigrant ministries.
9. Encourage presbytery staff and committees to become sensitized and knowledgeable about the growing diversity, so they can take the lead in implementing the RE/IECGS.
10. Provide financial support for training racial ethnic/immigrant leaders within their cultural context.
11. Recognize and celebrate racial ethnic persons as they are taken under care of the presbytery and when they are ordained.

D. Synods

1. Recognize synod efforts to support racial ethnic/immigrant ministries and encourage them to continue exploring ways to enhance these ministries.
2. Ensure the participation of racial ethnic caucuses and include them in decision-making processes of the synods mission and ministries initiatives
3. Encourage synods to provide funding to support projects that increase racial ethnic/immigrant and multi-cultural membership.
4. Establish a regional priority on racial ethnic leadership recruitment.

5. Provide opportunities for gathering and events for potential racial ethnic church leaders.

E. General Assembly

1. Broaden the concept to find ways of increasing the percentage of racial ethnic candidates who are seeking ordination.
2. Encourage the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to request from presbyteries more racial ethnic readers for ordination exams.
3. Recommend that the Mission Program Grants office and its advisory committee develop more flexible guidelines in working with racial ethnic/immigrant fellowships and congregations.
4. Encourage appropriate entities of the General Assembly to develop multilingual and cultural specific resources and educational materials for racial ethnic/immigrant ministry and mission.
5. Print the RE/IECGS consultation report as an appendix to the Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Church Growth Strategy, with growth charts that indicate the church/membership growth from 2000–2005.
6. Send the RE/IECGS consultation report to the National Ministries Division Committee (NMDC), which will make a report to the 216th General Assembly (2004).

The challenge of the implementation the Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Church Growth Strategy must never be considered as a program of Racial Ethnic Ministries program area, or as coming from the racial ethnic church, rather from the whole church that sees itself under a mandate to be an inclusive church.

Item 10-01

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) do the following:

1. Direct Racial Ethnic Ministries to establish an Antiracism Institute to provide training for Antiracism facilitators, continuing education opportunities for pastors and others engaged in racial justice ministries, to begin in 2005.

2. Foster the development of a theology for racial justice through the establishment of a theologian in residence as part of the Antiracism Institute.

3. Encourage Racial Ethnic Ministries, in partnership with ACREC, Peacemaking, the Washington Office, and other program areas, as appropriate, to host a Convocation on the Status of Church and Race.

4. Direct Racial Ethnic Ministries to provide information and promote the use of antiracism training resources by middle governing bodies and local congregations. Encourage antiracism dialogue by middle governing bodies and local congregations and other activities to address issues of systemic racism and foster an antiracist identity at all levels of the church.

5. Encourage middle governing bodies and local congregations to visit the Websites of Racial Ethnic Ministries program Area, Office of Racial Justice, and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns [www.pcusa.org/racialjustice; www.pcusa.org/acrec].

6. Commend the seminaries for the work they have done through the Consultation on Theological Education and Race

a. to equip faculty to be more responsive to the needs of racial ethnic students;

b. to better equip all seminarians to minister in multicultural settings;

c. to encourage them to continue their work to assess systemic barriers to dismantling racism;

d. to provide course offerings that support antiracism ministry; and,

e. working in partnership with Racial Ethnic Ministries and the antiracism institute, to provide continuing education experiences for pastors and lay leaders.

7. Encourage the colleges and universities, working in partnership with the Association of Presbyterian Colleges and Universities (APCU), Racial Ethnic Ministries, and other appropriate entities or related agencies, to create a forum for dialogue to share their experiences in promoting diversity in faculty and student bodies, responding to the needs of racial ethnic students, and addressing issues of systemic racism that impact their institutions.

8. Direct Racial Ethnic Ministries to assist the National Presbyterian Black Caucus to develop a Strategy for Church Growth for African American congregations.

Rationale

This recommendation is a final response to the following referral: 2001 Referral: 25.231. Response to Recommendation Requesting the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) to Prepare an Analysis of the Church's Effort to Combat Racism and Live Out Its Antiracism Commitments (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 55, 286).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a long history of support for inclusion and justice for all persons. However, the church's concerns for combating racism has been a difficult struggle that requires discernment, prayer, vision, and worship based on commitment and action. The 211th General Assembly (1999) approved a policy document to shepherd the church's ministry of racial justice throughout its governing bodies. This document, Facing Racism: a Vision of the Beloved Community, highlighted the evolution of the church's historic public policy of active involvement in the American Civil Rights Movement and provided an analysis of racism in American society. The document also outlined strategies for a churchwide program of antiracism efforts that empowered the church to a sense of urgency and essential involvement in the struggle for racial justice.

To reinforce the church's commitment in its struggle for racial justice, a policy statement on "Building Community Among Strangers" was approved. It was presented for guidance and edification to the whole church and the society to which it ministers, and determined procedures and programs for ministries and staff of the General Assembly. In addition, this policy statement was recommended as a plan for study and action by all governing bodies of the church. The policy statement presented a theological understanding for challenges presented by the new reality of building community among strangers. Facing the challenges that diversity and pluralism offered our nation and our church, it acknowledged that we are all indeed strangers who have something to contribute to each other and that we are challenged to affirm each other even when we do not understand each other.

The PC(USA) has taken steps to begin implementation of the sevenfold strategy outlined in the Facing Racism paper. However, progress on implementation has not moved forward with the sense of urgency called for, nor has it permeated as broadly or as deeply throughout the denomination as envisioned. Critical areas remain to be addressed to promote an antiracism identity throughout the denomination and to provide training, networking, and theological dialogue to sustain the church's ministry for racial justice and adoption of a proactive antiracist identity.

The strategy to dismantle racism is based on the understanding that open, constructive dialogue is a necessary starting point and it identifies seven points of engagement: the General Assembly, synods, presbyteries, congregations, educational institutions, related agencies, and ecumenical partners.

To this end, a training manual has been developed and facilitators trained to provide antiracism training. The network of antiracism facilitators includes a team of national trainers, a team of trainers for the Presbyterian Center, and fifty-two members of Presbyterian Women have been trained. Antiracism training was provided for all commissioners to the 213th General Assembly (2001). All staff at the Presbyterian Center receive eight hours of training in their first year of employment, as mandated by the General Assembly Council.

Training events have been provided in several presbyteries, facilitated by national staff and national antiracism facilitators. A number of presbyteries have formed antiracism teams that are engaged in developing local strategies and providing training for congregations within their presbyteries. Presbyterian Women (PW) have been implementing training at various levels of their organization, including many of their presbytery-level gatherings and some PW antiracism facilitators are working ecumenically to address issues in their local communities.

A Consultation on Theological Education and Racism was held in April 2003, with participation from every seminary. It addressed curriculum and pedagogical issues, with the goal of equipping faculty to be more responsive to the needs of a diverse student body and to better equip all students to minister in a multicultural environment. A steering committee was formed, which is planning a second consultation in the 2004-2005 academic year. With the endorsement of the Committee on Theological Education, this consultation will focus on ways to address systemic issues racism. In preparation for this consultation, the Steering Committee is conducting a survey of the seminaries.

Funding has been allocated in the 2004 budget for the Office of Racial Justice and Advocacy for the development of curriculum resources for children and youth.

Presbyterian Women and the Peacemaking program have made antiracism a major emphasis of their national conferences, prepared study materials and other resources to promote antiracism work among their constituencies. Training for antiracism and cultural proficiency have also been incorporated in the Multicultural Conference for 2004, hosted by the Office of Evangelism and Racial/Cultural Diversity. This event is co-hosted with the Synod of the Sun and Grace Presbytery. Affiliated organizations, including Voices of Sophia and That All May Freely Serve, are engaging in dialogue, with specific attention to the creation and perpetuation of white privilege as a critical facet of systemic racism.

However, the church is still a long way from the Facing Racism vision of fostering constructive dialogue in all congregations, presbyteries, and synods, all facets and agencies of the church. The PC(USA) is a church struggling to promote inclusiveness, tolerance, and understanding among its racially, culturally, and socioeconomically diverse congregations. It is a church constantly striving to sow and cultivate seeds of justice in a caring and understanding fashion to its middle governing bodies and local congregations.

Historical Perspective

Racism is deeply embedded in the life and history of this nation. All people of color have suffered the consequences of racism. There is also a long history of resistance to oppression by people of color. It was Black resistance in the 60s that pushed the issue of racism on the agenda of mainline churches.

Consequently, in May 1963, Edler Garnet Hawkins persuaded the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America to create a Commission on Religion and Race with unusual power to act in behalf of the denomination. The assembly appropriated $500,000 for the newly created commission. The commission was renamed the Council on Church and Race, it was the genesis of the racial justice programs now existing in the PC(USA).

In fact, during the 1970s and 1980s affirmative action and equal opportunity became central themes of mainline churches in the search for racial justice. The 193rd General Assembly (1989) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America said:

In many ways the church's failures have been due to a lack of understanding, or perhaps naiveté, as to the nature and depth of racism. Whereas it was once assumed that racial justice was merely a function of overcoming individual attitudes and bigotry, it is now clear that racism also exists in complex and subtle institutional ways. Despite the well-intentioned and nonracist attitudes of individuals, our religious and societal institutions, structures, and systems can and do perpetuate racial injustice. (Minutes, UP-CUSA, 1981, Part I, p. 201)

As a result, in 1991, the 203rd General Assembly (1991) passed a resolution confessing to the ongoing struggle of Presbyterians against racism in and outside the church.

We acknowledge and confess that

The Presbyterian Church has failed to respond faithfully to the gospel and the racial justice challenges it set forth for itself, as expressed in both its confessional statements and its past pronouncements. . . . This failure is found at all levels of the church, including those groups and instrumentalities charged with racial justice responsibilities. . . .

The reasons put forth for failure and the lack of action by the church are very familiar ones that have been articulated frequently over the years. . . . [T]he major obstacle to racial justice in society, as well as in the church, is in the nature of racism itself. Racism has developed primarily as a means to protect and legitimize the privilege of one race over the others. . . . (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 695).

In 1993, the 205th General Assembly (1993) approved the creation of the two advocacy committees with direct access to the General Assembly and General Assembly Council, one of which is the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC). The 207th General Assembly (1995) elected the first class of ACREC members who met for the first time in the fall of 1995. The mission of this committee is to advocate for full access for all racial ethnic/immigrant groups to all programs, ministries, middle governing bodies, and congregations in the PC(USA) by monitoring implementation of policy and corresponding actions, decisions, and issues of concern to people of color in the church and in their communities. The ACREC reviews all actions coming before the General Assembly for any impact on people of color and provides advice and counsel to the commissioners.

The ACREC was successful in getting the 213th General Assembly (2001) approval for two other task forces: a Task Force to Study the Issue of Reparations, and a Task Force to Examine the Electoral System in the United States of America. Both of these task forces are expected to report to the 216th General Assembly (2004). The ACREC Task Force to Examine General Assembly Entities: Creating a Climate for Change, will also be presented to the 216th General Assembly (2004). The ACREC wrote several advice and counsel memoranda for the 215th General Assembly (2003). They were #03-14, (11-05), the Crisis of Migrant Worker Deaths in the Borderlands and the need for a new border policy; #03-24 (11-06), on an end to the U.S. embargo against Cuba; and #03-28 (07-05) Action for Wellness and Healing for the Saint Lawrence Island Yupik people. The ACREC has conducted a one-hour briefing for commissioners at each assembly beginning with the 208th General Assembly (1996).

Task Force on Election Report & Recommendations

The General Assembly Council, on behalf of the Task Force on Elections, and in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic concerns (ACREC), recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) approve the following recommendations:

1. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to develop a resolution on the disenfranchisement of people of color in the U.S. electoral process for report to the 218th General Assembly (2008). The resolution should address at least two dimensions:

a. Improvements in legislation, potentially to be embodied in a model law for state legislatures or a federal law making voting registration and recounts in federal elections uniform in all the states; such laws should deal with

- (1) who is qualified to be a voter;
- (2) how registration occurs (e.g. "Motor Voter" and others ways to make registration less burdensome while preventing fraud);
- (3) procedures for purging of voting rolls while protecting the rights of those eligible to vote;
- (4) voter education, including complete information about methods of voting;
- (5) notification about places of voting, and accurate sample ballots;
- (6) methods of dealing with voters whose names are not on the voter registration list;
- (7) methods of voting (e.g. technology that will reduce error and fraud);
- (8) recount procedures (e.g. types of legitimate challenge, time within which the recount must be performed).

b. Things Presbyterians can do (in synods, presbyteries, congregations, and as individual citizens) include

- (1) review state registration laws to identify inequities;
- (2) monitor the processes by which these laws are administered, especially in registration, purging of voter lists, and provision of translators;
- (3) engage in voter registration and voter education;
- (4) organize rides to the polls;
- (5) act as poll watchers;

(6) assist at polling places to ensure that persons with disabilities (including vision-impaired) or with language and literacy problems are enabled to vote.

2. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) to participate in the work of Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy(ACSWP) as it develops a resolution.

3. Direct the Presbyterian Washington Office to continue its work on voting rights issues.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk of the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to send a letter to all members of the United States Congress asking them to work to ensure that a fair election process shall exist; and that Congress be urged to renew the pre-clearance requirement Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

5. Direct the Stated Clerk of the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to send a letter to the Federal Election Commission asking this office to ensure that a fair election process shall exist.

6. Dismiss the Task Force on Elections with thanks.

Rationale

These recommendations and report are a final response to the following referral: 2001 Referral: 26.004. Response to Recommendation Directing GAC to Create a Task Force to Study the Disenfranchisement of People of Color in the United States' Electoral System; to Consider Whether the Church Should Make a Policy Statement; Report Findings to the 215th General Assembly (2003)—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 60, 333).

The 213th General Assembly (2001) of the Presbyterian Church “direct[ed] the General Assembly Council to create a task force to study (in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns) the disenfranchisement of people of color in the United States electoral system, to consider whether or not the church should make a policy statement on this matter; and report its findings and recommendations to the 215th General Assembly (2003)” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 333).

Disenfranchised voters are individuals who are entitled to vote, want to vote, or attempt to vote, but who are deprived of either voting or having their votes counted. The problem was most evident in the state of Florida because of the closeness of the vote and the intensity of controversy, with two appeals to the Supreme Court. Even in the case of Florida, however, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights said, “widespread voter disenfranchisement—not the dead-heat contest—was the extraordinary feature in the Florida election.” Florida was not the only state in which irregularities were alleged. In this report, examples from Florida are used because they have been the most thoroughly investigated (Executive Summary Report of the US Commission of Civil Rights: Voting Irregularities in Florida During the 2000 Presidential Election).

The Presbyterian church has a long history of support for inclusion and justice for all persons. Voting is the foundation of the democratic process of this nation. As participation in the electoral process is at the foundation of our nation, enfranchisement of all qualified persons is crucial to ensure fair and impartial representation. Historically and recently, people of color have been disenfranchised through a variety of means, including defective voting apparatuses, vote suppression, and other discriminatory practices such as exclusion of previously incarcerated, non-felon persons, and of those who have completed serving their sentences and probationary periods, realities that disproportionately affect people of color because of the demonstrated racial bias of the United States’ “criminal justice system” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 333, paragraph 26.004).

A. Theological Statement

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor denominations have long been active in pursuit of justice and equality as pertains to political rights, including the right of all to vote. The church can be proud of that journey and its influence on national policy. But insofar as discrimination continues, the church cannot be content or silent. To redeem the voting process, to concern ourselves with voting rights, bears witness to the redemptive work of Christ.

The New Testament reminds us that God was in Christ reconciling the world to Godself, that the “wall of separation” (Eph. 2:14, NIV) that divides and estranges human beings from each other and from God has been totally broken down. God was in Christ reconciling the world, not just certain races of the world.

In terms of separating ourselves from one another, the 177th General Assembly (1965) described racism in this way:

Racism is basically the denial of the humanity of all other races but one’s own, the deliberate or unconscious assumption that a human being’s worth is conditioned by his [or her] racial derivation. It is the assumption that one’s own race is inherently morally superior to other races. It is the tendency to define reality in terms of one’s limited experience in a racially segregated culture.

Race becomes therefore the definitive measure of another’s right to vote, to work, to go to school, to buy a house, to marry, to worship, and ultimately to exist alongside one’s own race or one’s own self. Racism defines another person’s or another group’s “right to be.” ...

The illness of racism in both its most blatant and its most subtle manifestations frustrates the practical efforts to achieve freedom, justice, and equality in housing, education, employment, voting, public accommodations and community relations. ... (Minutes, UP-CUSA, 1965, Part I, pp. 406–7).

The Word of God to ancient Israel emphasizes the inclusion of all residents of the land: “Thus says the Lord: Act with justice and righteousness, . . . do no wrong or violence to the alien” (Jer. 22:3, NRSV). “[God] is not partiality and takes no bribes. [God] executes justice for the orphan and the widow, and . . . loves the strangers. . . . You shall also love the stranger, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt” (Deut. 10:17–19, NRSV).

Justice to the alien and sojourner is one of the most frequent mandates to the children of Israel. The First Testament reflects a strong bias on behalf of the poor, the oppressed, and the disenfranchised. “ ‘Because the poor are despoiled, because the needy groan, I will now rise up,’ says the Lord. ‘I will place in the safety for which they long’ ” (Ps. 12:5, NRSV).

The holy one of Israel says, “Because you reject this word, and put your trust in oppression and deceit, and rely on them; therefore this iniquity shall become for you like a break in a high wall, bulging out, and about to collapse, whose crash comes suddenly, in an instant” (Isa. 30:12, NRSV).

“Thus says the Lord God: Enough, O princes of Israel! Put away violence and oppression, and do what is just and right. Cease your evictions of my people, says the Lord God” (Ezek. 45:9, NRSV).

The dispossessed today are those marginalized by irregularities in the voting process. When Jesus told the parable of the Good Samaritan coming to the aid of the wounded man, he conveyed a fundamental value we all accept. If, however, the circumstance repeated itself time and again, it would behoove the Samaritan to go to Jerusalem and organize a highway patrol to protect all who are vulnerable. Today, people of color are being wounded and abused by the political system and voting rights deficiencies in particular. Let us, as good Samaritans, play the role God has called us to play.

The vast majority of nonwhite Americans are denied equal freedom, equal opportunity, and equal justice as citizens. It is time for the church to go to “the heart of the matter,” to address itself to the sinful blindness of the human spirit that, added to the structural rigidities of social, economic, and political arrangements, perpetuates hatred and recrimination, segregation and discrimination, estrangement and distrust, between white and nonwhites.

Undergirding and supporting the patterns of church and society that relegate nonwhite minorities to second-rate status is the heresy and sickness of racism. ...

It leads the white majority, out of a false sense of moral superiority, to assume that it has the prerogative to determine the priority and time schedule of granting degrees of freedom, justice, and equal treatment in all aspects of our American life. It perpetuates long-established patterns of segregation and discrimination in church and society. (Minutes, 1965, Part I, pp. 406, 407).

The biblical mandate for justice is echoed in The Confession of 1967:

God has created the peoples of the earth to be one universal family. In ... reconciling love, [God] overcomes the barriers between [sisters and] brothers and breaks down every form of discrimination based on racial or ethnic difference, real or imaginary. The church is called to bring [human beings] to receive and uphold one another as persons in all relationships of life: in employment ... and the exercise of political rights. Therefore the church labors for the abolition of all racial discrimination and ministers to those injured by it. Congregations, individuals, or groups of Christians who exclude, dominate, or patronize [others], however subtly, resist the Spirit of God and bring contempt on the faith which they profess. (The Book of Confessions, 9.44)

The uniting General Assemblies of 1983, in a comprehensive document entitled The Reformed View of Faith and Politics and of Church and State: A Position Paper, concluded “Reformed Christians are called out of love for God to be politically active. ... [That] liberty and equality are expressions of love to be striven for in societies...” (Reformed Faith and Politics, Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 775).

The Brief Statement of Faith, adopted in 1991, carries the banner for justice into the present day. It affirms that the Spirit gives us courage...

to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom and peace (The Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, 10.4, lines 69–71).

In spite of the Reformed tradition of political action, in spite of the mandates of Scripture and the confessions, in spite of laws mandating desegregation and defending human rights, in spite of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and further fine-tuning of the law, injustice still exist, as illustrated by allegations of voting irregularities in Florida, Illinois, Georgia, and other parts of the country in recent years.

B. Historical Perspective

One area in the pursuit of racial justice in which the Presbyterian General Assemblies have a long history of support is that of civil rights. The Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) 87th General Assembly (1947) began its history of supporting civil rights by condemning all organizations and individuals whose aim was to hinder any minorities “...in the exercise of their civil rights or ... deny such rights [on the basis of] race, creed, class or color. ...” (Minutes, PCUS, 1947, Part I, p. 164).

In the Northern church, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (PCUSA) 168th General Assembly (1956) called upon Christians to work to eliminate “the poll tax and other restrictions which prevent many American citizens from exercising their legal rights at the polls and which affront the dignity of persons. ...” The General Assembly went on record against devious means such as poll taxes and severe literacy tests used to deny voting rights to certain minority citizens, noting that the price of this corporate dishonesty is political demagoguery in its worst form (Minutes, PCUSA, 1956, Part I, p. 235; see also Minutes, PCUS, 1957, Part I, p. 194).

The 171st General Assembly (1959) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA) defended the right of groups to meet and organize to achieve “legitimate social goals” and the work of such groups was commended in 1960 and 1961. The 171st General Assembly (1959) went on to call for measures to guarantee voting rights to all citizens of voting age and to establish the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights as a permanent agency of the U.S. Government (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1959, Part I, p. 380). The 172nd General Assembly (1960) urged state legislatures and the United States Congress to continue to work for legislation that would effectively secure and protect the rights of all citizens to vote, regardless of race (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1960, Part I, p. 356).

The 174th General Assembly (1962) of the UPCUSA urged federal leadership to eliminate racial restriction of voting rights by any of the states (Minutes, 1962, UPCUSA, p. 349). In 1981 and 1982, the UPCUSA also supported extension of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and opposed the attempt to deny civil rights to new immigrants to the United States (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1981, p. 309; Minutes, UPCUSA, 1982, Part I, p. 425). The 194th General Assembly (1982) of UPCUSA affirmed all efforts to include actively all citizens in the election process, including the use of bilingual ballots as mandated by the Voting Rights Acts, and declares its opposition to actions by government that have the effect of discouraging such exercise of citizen’s rights (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1982, Part I, p. 425).

The right to vote, and to have one's vote accurately and fairly counted, is as fundamental a right as we have in this country. It is now abundantly clear that this precious right was repeatedly violated not only in Florida, but at other polling places across the country, because of flaws in the voting system that disproportionately affected people of color.

C. Current Issues

Our nation must now rededicate itself to assuring the right to vote. The Voting Rights Act of 1965, won by the Civil Rights Movement only after years of struggle, is not a history lesson. It is living history and we are living it now. (The full text of the Voting Rights Act is found in the Appendix of this report.)

As a result of voting irregularities in some states, the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) filed three separate lawsuits in the States of Georgia, Florida, and Illinois on behalf of African American voters who were prevented from having their votes counted by systematic irregularities in the voting process. The U. S. Supreme Court's decision in Bush v. Gore made it clear that every vote must be given equal weight under the Constitution. The ACLU and other civil rights organizations are now taking the Supreme Court at its word. Kweisi Mfume, president/CEO of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and former U.S. Congressman, said the lawsuit is part of an effort to "restore justice to the thousands of Black and other voters who were denied the right to have their vote counted on November 7, 2000."

According to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, disenfranchisement of Florida's voters fell most harshly on the shoulders of black voters. The magnitude of the impact can be seen from any of several perspectives:

- Statewide, based upon county-level statistical estimates, black voters were nearly 10 times more likely than non-black voters to have their ballots rejected.
- Estimates indicate that approximately 14.4 percent of Florida's black voters cast ballots that were rejected.
- Statistical analysis shows that the disparity in ballot spoilage rates—i.e., ballots cast but not counted—between black and non-black voters is not the result of education or literary difference.
- Approximately 11 percent of Florida voters were African Americans; however, African Americans cast about 54 percent of the 180,000 spoiled ballots in Florida during the November 2000 election based on estimates derived from county-level data. (Executive Summary of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights: Voting Irregularities in Florida During the 2000 Presidential Election)

Poor counties, particularly those with large minority populations, were more likely to possess voting systems with higher spoilage rates than the more affluent counties with significant white populations.

The Voting Rights Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C. 1973c) protects every American against racial discrimination in voting. This law also protects the voting rights of many people who have limited English skills. It stands for the principle that everyone's vote is equal, and that neither race nor language should shut out anyone from the political process.

The Voting Rights Act (VRA) will not expire and is a permanent federal law. Moreover, the equal right to vote is protected by the Fifteenth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, which has been part of our law since the end of the American Civil War. And in case after case, our courts have held that the right to vote is fundamental. Voting rights will not expire.

Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, however, needs to be renewed to remain in effect. When Congress amended and strengthened the Voting Rights Act in 1982, it extended for twenty-five more years—until 2007—the preclearance requirement of Section 5, the authority to use federal examiners and observers, and some of the statute's language minority requirements. In order to extend Section 5 past 2007, action will be needed by Congress.

Section 5 requires state and local governments in certain parts of the country to get federal approval (known as "preclearance") before implementing any changes they want to make in their voting procedures: anything from moving a polling place to changing district lines in the county. Under Section 5, a covered state, county, or local government entity must demonstrate to federal authorities that the voting change in question (1) does not have a racially discriminatory purpose; and (2) will not make minority voters worse off than they were prior to the change (i.e. the change will not be “retrogressive”).

While voting rights usually are associated with Black Americans, three states out of the list of sixteen cited in the Voting Rights Act of 1965 as including “covered jurisdictions” have large American Indian populations: Alaska, Arizona, and South Dakota. The problem of disenfranchisement continues. In 2003, the South Dakota legislature passed an act adding new burdens to the process of registration, which will have a disparate impact on Native Americans. In the eyes of many observers the act is a violation of Section 5 of the VRA. Despite pleas to veto the legislation, the governor signed it into law.

Other states, such as California, Florida, New York, and Texas, have high populations of Asians and Hispanics. This illustrates the universal applicability of the Voting Rights Act. Given the diversity of our population, violations could occur in any of the fifty states.

Many persons who are intimidated, harassed, or given misleading information will “vote with their feet,” that is to say, rather than filing a complaint, or insisting on their rights, they simply leave. In the next election they are less likely to participate in voting. The effects of slavery, the sequestering of Native Americans, discrimination against Asians, legal segregation and disenfranchisement, and continuing economic vulnerability have disadvantaged many voters.

In its amendment to Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act, Congress reaffirmed that discrimination could be established using a “results test.” There is no requirement to prove discriminatory intent. The results test, also known as the “totality of the circumstances” test, only requires the plaintiff to prove that a challenged elections process results in a denial or an abridgement of the right to vote. (U.S. Commission on Civil Rights Report: Voting Irregularities in Florida During the 2000 Presidential Election).

The Voting Rights Act protects racial ethnic people from more than denying them the right to vote. Section 2 of the act makes it illegal for state and local governments to “dilute” the votes of racial ethnic groups. One of many forms of minority vote dilution is the drawing of district lines that divide minority communities and keep them from putting enough votes together to elect representatives of their choice to public office. Federal lawsuits can be filed to redress this imbalance by ordering states and localities to adopt redistricting plans that gives minority voters the same opportunity as other voters to elect representatives of their choice.

It is legally permissible for jurisdictions to take race into account when drawing majority and minority election districts if they are based on traditional, nonracial districting considerations, such as geographic blocs and keeping communities of interest together. The Supreme Court has held, however, that the Constitution requires a strong justification if racial considerations predominate over traditional districting principles. One justification may be the need to remedy a violation of Section 2 of the Voting Rights Act.

The Voting Rights Act makes it illegal to discriminate in voting against people who speak minority languages. Section 5 of the act covers jurisdictions where irregularities have occurred with people of Hispanic, Native American, and Alaska Native heritage. The act requires bilingual election procedures even in “English only” states where voters speak Spanish, Chinese, Filipino, Japanese, Vietnamese, and more than a dozen Native American and Alaskan Native languages. With increasing immigration by many others whose languages are not covered under the existing law, Congress must be encouraged to provide adequate inclusion for this new wave of immigrants.

The Justice Department also enforces other voting rights laws:

- The National Voter Registration Act of 1993 (often referred to as the “Motor Voter” law) is among the most significant pieces of voting rights legislation. The NVRA facilitates voter registration for federal elections by allowing voters to register by mail, when they obtain driver’s licenses, or when they obtain services from various government agencies, and it permits voter purges only under very controlled conditions.
- The Uniformed and Overseas Citizens Absentee Voting Act of 1986 requires states to make sure that members of our armed forces who are stationed away from home, and citizens who are living overseas, can register and vote absentee in federal elections.

- The Voting Accessibility for the Elderly and Handicapped Act of 1984 requires polling places across the United States to be physically accessible to people with disabilities.

These three acts of legislation establish voting rights for all citizens. Individually they are extremely important, collectively they reflect the United States government commitment to live out our nation's promise set out in the Declaration of Independence in 1776: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness." These words now ring hollow if today we do not attempt to apply them for all citizens of this country. A famous American Indian, Chief Joseph, stated in a speech in 1879, "I have heard talk and talk, but nothing is done. Good words do not last long unless they amount to something."

More than half of the voting jurisdictions nationwide experienced voting problems during the 2000 Presidential Election as well as in the 2002 General Election. Following are a few of the voting irregularities that occurred: purging of voter lists, malfunction of voting machines, lack of trained poll workers, lack of accessible polling places, uncertain procedures for handling overseas ballots, and inadequate handling of mismatched ballots. These measures have become the literacy tests of the new millennium. Just as in former times literacy tests and the poll tax were used to deny the right to vote, so today the purging of voters lists and irregularities in voting procedures have the same effect. It is imperative to ensure that in our democracy this unfair disenfranchisement never happens again. This suggests that a uniform national policy be put into effect in order to ensure full voting rights for all U.S. citizens.

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights found that Florida's problems during the 2000 presidential election were serious and not isolated. In many cases, they were foreseeable and should have been prevented. The failure to do so resulted in an extraordinarily high and inexcusable level of disenfranchisement, with a disproportionate impact on African American voters. The causes included the following:

- a general failure of leadership from those with responsibility for ensuring that elections are properly planned and executed;
- inadequate resources for voter education, training of poll workers, and Election Day trouble-shooting and problem solving;
- inferior voting equipment and/or ballot design;
- failure to anticipate and account for the expected high volumes of voters, including inexperienced voters;
- a poorly designed and even more poorly executed purge system; and
- a resource allocation system that often left poorer counties, which often were counties with the highest percentage of black voters, adversely affected. (U.S. Commission on Civil Rights: Voting Irregularities in Florida During the 2000 Presidential Election)

1. Missed Leadership

The commission's report identified several problems of leadership. Florida's governor insisted that he had no specific role in election operations and pointed to the secretary of state as the responsible official. After the election, however, the governor exercised leadership and responsibility in electoral matters in the commendable action of appointing a task force to make recommendations to fix the problems that occurred. The secretary of state, who is the state's chief elections officer, denied any responsibility for the problems in the election, claiming only a "ministerial" role, her clear statutory obligations notwithstanding. Rather, she asserted that county elections officials are responsible for conduct of the election, describing her role in the policies and decisions affecting the actual voting operations as limited. On the local level, supervisors of elections in the counties that experienced the worst problems failed to prepare adequately and demand necessary resources. Furthermore, state officials ignored the pleas of some supervisors of elections for guidance and help.

This overall lack of leadership in protecting voting rights was largely responsible for the broad array of problems in Florida during the 2000 election. Leadership by key officials in protecting the right to vote is imperative.

2. Voter Education, Voter Registration, Poll Workers Training, and Election Day Problems

State and local election officials must ensure that they have sufficient resources to engage in effective voter education.

Many of the obstacles that caused voter disenfranchisement in the November 2000 election were the result of inadequate voter education and insufficient poll worker training. Moreover, counties were grossly unprepared for the larger voter turnout and scrambled, often unsuccessfully, to meet the needs of voters on Election Day.

As a result of these infractions, some potential voters were never able to cast ballots: For example:

- Some voters were barred from voting despite arriving at their polling places before closing time because poll workers did not understand the rule that, if voters arrive before 7 p.m., they must be allowed to vote.
- Adequate notice was not always given to voters when polling places were moved.
- The failure to process “Motor Voter” information in a timely manner, and in some cases to transmit information at all, contributed to disenfranchising voters.
- Aside from the lack of consistency and uniformity in election operations, many election officials failed to use affidavits under appropriate circumstances and instituted few procedures to confirm voter lists.
- Poll workers were unable to reach central offices to certify voters. (U.S. Commission on Civil Rights: Voting Irregularities in Florida During the 2000 Presidential Election)

3. National Voter Registration Act: The “Motor Voter” Law

In 1993, Congress enacted the National Voter Registration Act in an effort to increase participation in federal election. To implement the act, Florida enacted the Florida Voters Registration Act to “provide the opportunity to register to vote or update a voter registration record to each individual who comes to an office of the Department of Highway Safety and Motor Vehicles” (DHSMV) to apply for or renew a driver’s license, apply for a new identification card, or change an address on an existing driver’s license or identification card.

The DHSMV does not register voters; rather, it provides a method for persons to apply to the county supervisors of elections to register while conducting license or identification card transaction. This is commonly referred to as the “Motor Voter” process.

Despite this effort to increase citizen participation through Motor Voter registration, problems exist in the implementation of the registration process. Curtis Gans, director of the Committee for Study of the American Electorate, testified, “in this election, thousands of people, not only in Florida, but in other places, who registered at motor voter places, motor vehicle license bureaus, and in social services agencies were not on the rolls when they came to vote.” Other problems in Florida include these:

- DHSMV examiners did not inform voters that changing their address on their driver’s license does not automatically register them to vote in the new county of residence. In addition, DHSMV does not retain copies of voter registration applications, which are subsequently transmitted to supervisors of elections.
- Once DHSMV has transmitted voter registration applications to supervisors of elections offices, there is no verification system to ensure that the supervisors of elections received this information.
- Once a driver changes his or her driver’s license address, the DHSMV is not required to forward voter registration applications to supervisors of elections offices for the new resident county of the driver. (U.S. Commission on Civil Rights: Voting Irregularities in Florida During the 2000 Presidential Election)

4. Accessibility

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights concluded that Florida failed to provide adequate access to individuals with disabilities and to people who have limited English proficiency. Specific concerns pertaining to those with physical disabilities include these:

- Persons who rely on wheelchairs were forced to negotiate steps in unreachable polling booths or undergo humiliation by relying on others to lift them into the polling places.
- Some voters with visual impairments found that the precincts did not have proper equipment to assist them in reading their ballots and, therefore, they had to rely on others—often strangers—to cast their ballots, denying them their right to a secret ballot.
- Other precincts were not equipped, or otherwise failed altogether, to accommodate potential voters with disabilities. Voters were turned away and therefore disenfranchised. (U.S. Commission on Civil Rights: Voting Irregularities in Florida During the 2000 Presidential Election)

Individuals who were not proficient in English faced comparable barriers, despite federal requirements that language assistance be provided for voters not proficient in English. In some parts of Florida, Spanish-speaking voters did not receive bilingual assistance or bilingual ballots. Some of these counties are required to provide language assistance under the Voter Rights Act. The failure to provide language assistance resulted in widespread voter disenfranchisement of an estimated several thousand Spanish-speaking voters in Florida.

5. Purging Former Felons from the Voting Rolls

Individuals not legally entitled to vote should not be allowed to vote. Appropriate efforts to eliminate fraudulent voting strengthen the rights of legitimate voters. However, poorly designed efforts to eliminate fraud, as well as sloppy and irresponsible implementation of those efforts, disenfranchise legitimate voters and can be a violation of the Voting Rights Act. Florida's overzealous efforts to purge voters from the rolls resulted in the removal of a disproportionate number of African American voters already registered in Florida from the November 2000 election.

The system of purging in Florida proceeded on the premise of guilty until proven innocent. In 1998, the Florida legislature enacted a statute that required the Division of Elections to contract with a private entity to purge its voter file of deceased persons, duplicate registrants, individual declared mentally incompetent, and convicted felons without civil rights restoration. This process became known as list maintenance. The company contracted to purge the voters list, Database Technologies, questioned the procedure because it was likely to result in "false positives," but the responsible state officials instructed them to follow the original instructions. Once off the list, the burden is placed on the eligible voter to justify remaining on the voter rolls. The ubiquitous errors and dearth of effective controls in the state's list maintenance system resulted in the exclusion of voters lawfully entitled and properly registered to vote.

African American voters were placed on purge list more often and more erroneously than Hispanic or white voters. For instance, in the state's largest county, Miami-Dade, more than 65 percent of the names on the purge list were African American, who represented only 20.4 percent of the population. Hispanics were 57.4 percent of the population, but only 16.6 percent of the purge list; whites were 77.6 percent of the population but 17.6 percent of those purged.

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights questioned Florida's onerous and infrequently rendered clemency process. Florida is one of only fourteen states in which convicted felons are permanently disenfranchised, or disqualified from voting in elections, until they apply for and are granted restoration of their civil rights by the Clemency Board, made up of the governor and members of the cabinet. The other thirteen states that do not automatically restore the civil rights of ex-felons are: Alabama, Arizona (2nd conviction), Delaware (automatic restoration after five years), Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland (2nd conviction), Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, Tennessee, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin (American Civil Liberties Union, Press Release, 2001). In thirty-six states, citizenship rights are restored by law for former felons who have paid their debt to society.

6. Urgency of the Situation

Kweisi Mfume, president/CEO of NAACP, speaking at an Inauguration Protest Rally Saturday January 20, 2001, in Tallahassee, Florida, flatly disagreed that the U.S. Justice Department was enforcing the various voting rights laws. Several complaints were filed with the U.S. Justice Department before November 20, 2000, election; "The US Justice Department just turned the other way," Mfume stated. He also said, "The contrast harkens our attention to the need for a nationwide uniform system of casting ballots and counting ballots that is the same no matter what state you are in, no matter what you look like, no matter what the election is." His remarks should be a reminder that all of us in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and in the United States need to work together to overcome this type of "racial profiling" in elections.

According to Ralph G. Neas, president of the People for the American Way Foundation, there is a urgent need for election reform. He said, "The people's vote is the people's voice, but in Florida thousands of African American and Haitian American voices were silenced on November 7. We're involved in this court action to make sure that Florida officials who failed the voters on Election Day know that they must correct the problems that caused these injustices and make it their top priority to assure that they are never repeated."

Whether or not we agree with the majority decision of the Supreme Court regarding the presidential election, the Court declared in no uncertain terms, on the basis of the Equal Protection clause of the U.S. Constitution, that every vote should count equally. That amendment was originally adopted to protect recently freed slaves and it remains in effect today, yet thousands of African Americans and Haitian Americans were denied the vote in Florida and other states on November 7, 2000. It is imperative that all members of the PC(USA) be effective advocates and monitors in their communities to ensure fair voting procedures and practices.

Appendix

Voting Rights Act of 1965

AN ACT To enforce the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and for other purposes. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress [p*338] assembled, That this Act shall be known as the "Voting Rights Act of 1965."

SEC. 2. No voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure shall be imposed or applied by any State or political subdivision to deny or abridge the right of any citizen of the United States to vote on account of race or color.

- (a) Whenever the Attorney General institutes a proceeding under any statute to enforce the guarantees of the fifteenth amendment in any State or political subdivision the court shall authorize the appointment of Federal examiners by the United States Civil Service Commission in accordance with section 6 to serve for such period of time and for such political subdivisions as the court shall determine is appropriate to enforce the guarantees of the fifteenth amendment (1) as part of any interlocutory order if the court determines that the appointment of such examiners is necessary to enforce such guarantees or (2) as part of any final judgment if the court finds that violations of the fifteenth amendment justifying equitable relief have occurred in such State or subdivision: Provided, That the court need not authorize the appointment of examiners if any incidents of denial or abridgement of the right to vote on account of race or color (1) have been few in number and have been promptly and effectively corrected by State or local action, (2) the continuing effect of such incidents has been eliminated, and (3) there is no reasonable probability of their recurrence in the future.
- (b) If in a proceeding instituted by the Attorney General under any statute to enforce the guarantees of the fifteenth amendment in any State or political subdivision the court finds that a test or device has been used for the purpose or with the effect of denying or abridging the right of any citizen of the United States to vote on account of race or color, it shall suspend the use of [p*339] tests and devices in such State or political subdivisions as the court shall determine is appropriate and for such period as it deems necessary.
- (c) If in any proceeding instituted by the Attorney General under any statute to enforce the guarantees of the fifteenth amendment in any State or political subdivision the court finds that violations of the fifteenth amendment justifying equitable relief have occurred within the territory of such State or political subdivision, the court, in addition to such relief as it may grant, shall retain jurisdiction for such period as it may deem appropriate and during such period no voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting different from that in force or effect at the time the proceeding was commenced shall be enforced unless and until the court finds that such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure does not have the purpose and will not have the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color: Provided, That such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure may be enforced if the qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure has been submitted by the chief legal officer or other appropriate official of such State or subdivision to the Attorney General and the Attorney General has not interposed an objection within sixty days after such submission, except that neither the court's finding nor the Attorney General's failure to object shall bar a subsequent action to enjoin enforcement of such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure.

- (a) To assure that the right of citizens of the United States to vote is not denied or abridged on account of race or color, no citizen shall be denied the right to vote in any Federal, State, or local election because of his failure to comply with any test or device in any State with respect to which the determinations have been [p*340] made under subsection (b) or in any political subdivision with respect to which such determinations have been made as a separate unit, unless the United States District Court for the District of Columbia in an action for a declaratory judgment brought by such State or subdivision against the United States has determined that no such test or device has been used during the five years preceding the filing of the action for the purpose or with the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color: Provided, That no such declaratory judgment shall issue with respect to any plaintiff for a period of five years after the entry of a final judgment of any court of the United States, other than the denial of a declaratory judgment under this section, whether entered prior to or after the enactment of this Act, determining that denials or abridgments of the right to vote on account of race or color through the use of such tests or devices have occurred anywhere in the territory of such plaintiff.

An action pursuant to this subsection shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of title 28 of the United States Code and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court. The court shall retain jurisdiction of any action pursuant to this subsection for five years after judgment and shall reopen the action upon motion of the Attorney General alleging that a test or device has been used for the purpose or with the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color.

If the Attorney General determines that he has no reason to believe that any such test or device has been used during the five years preceding the filing of the action for the purpose or with the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color, he shall consent to the entry of such judgment

(b) The provisions of subsection (a) shall apply in any State or in any political subdivision of a state which (1) the Attorney General determines maintained on November 1, 1964, any test or device, and with respect to which (2) the Director of the Census determines that less than 50 percentum of the persons of voting age residing therein were registered on November 1, 1964, or that less than 50 percentum of such persons voted in the presidential election of November 1964.

A determination or certification of the Attorney General or of the Director of the Census under this section or under section 6 or section 13 shall not be reviewable in any court and shall be effective upon publication in the Federal Register.

(c) The phrase "test or device" shall mean any requirement that a person as a prerequisite for voting or registration for voting (1) demonstrate the ability to read, write, understand, or interpret any matter, (2) demonstrate any educational achievement or his knowledge of any particular subject, (3) possess good moral character, or (4) prove his qualifications by the voucher of registered voters or members of any other class.

(d) For purposes of this section no State or political subdivision shall be determined to have engaged in the use of tests or devices for the purpose or with the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color if (1) incidents of such use have been few in number and have been promptly and effectively corrected by State or local action, (2) the continuing effect of such incidents has been eliminated, and (3) there is no reasonable probability of their recurrence in the future.

(1) Congress hereby declares that to secure the rights under the fourteenth amendment of persons educated in American-flag schools in which the predominant [p*342] classroom language was other than English, it is necessary to prohibit the States from conditioning the right to vote of such persons on ability to read, write, understand, or interpret any matter in the English language.

(2) No person who demonstrates that he has successfully completed the sixth primary grade in a public school in, or a private school accredited by, any State or territory, the District of Columbia, or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico in which the predominant classroom language was other than English, shall be denied the right to vote in any Federal, State, or local election because of his inability to read, write, understand, or interpret any matter in the English language, except that, in States in which State law provides that a different level of education is presumptive of literacy, he shall demonstrate that he has successfully completed an equivalent level of education in a public school in, or a private school accredited by, any State or territory, the District of Columbia, or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico in which the predominant classroom language was other than English.

SEC. 5. Whenever a State or political subdivision with respect to which the prohibitions set forth in section 4(a) are in effect shall enact or seek to administer any voting qualification or prerequisite to voting, or standard, practice, or procedure with respect to voting different from that in force or effect on November 1, 1964, such State or subdivision may institute an action in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia for a declaratory judgment that such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure does not have the purpose and will not have the effect of denying or abridging the right to vote on account of race or color, and unless and until the court enters such judgment no person shall be denied the right to vote for failure to comply with such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, [p*343] or procedure: Provided, That such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure may be enforced without such proceeding if the qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure has been submitted by the chief legal officer or other appropriate official of such State or subdivision to the Attorney General and the Attorney General has not interposed an objection within sixty days after such submission, except that neither the Attorney General's failure to object nor a declaratory judgment entered under this section shall bar a subsequent action to enjoin enforcement of such qualification, prerequisite, standard, practice, or procedure. Any action under this section shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of title 28 of the United States Code and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court.

SEC. 6. Whenever (a) a court has authorized the appointment of examiners pursuant to the provisions of section 3(a), or (b) unless a declaratory judgment has been rendered under section 4(a), the Attorney General certifies with respect to any political subdivision named in, or included within the scope of, determinations made under section 4(b) that (1) he has received complaints in writing from twenty or more residents of such political subdivision alleging that they have been denied the right to vote under color of law on account of race or color, and that he believes such complaints to be meritorious, or (2) that, in his judgment (considering, among other factors, whether the ratio of nonwhite persons to white persons registered to vote within such subdivision appears to him to be reasonably attributable to violations of the fifteenth amendment or whether substantial evidence exists that bona fide efforts are being made within such subdivision to comply with the fifteenth amendment), the appointment of examiners is otherwise necessary to [p*344] enforce the guarantees of the fifteenth amendment, the Civil Service Commission shall appoint as many examiners for such subdivision as it may deem appropriate to prepare and maintain lists of persons eligible to vote in Federal, State, and local elections. Such examiners, hearing officers provided for in section 9(a), and other persons deemed necessary by the Commission to carry out the provisions and purposes of this Act shall be appointed, compensated, and separated without regard to the provisions of any statute administered by the Civil Service Commission, and service under this Act shall not be considered employment for the purposes of any statute administered by the Civil Service Commission, except the provisions of section 9 of the Act of August 2, 1939, as amended (5 U.S.C. 118i), prohibiting partisan political activity: Provided, That the Commission is authorized, after consulting the head of the appropriate department or agency, to designate suitable persons in the official service of the United States, with their consent, to serve in these positions. Examiners and hearing officers shall have the power to administer oaths.

(a) The examiners for each political subdivision shall, at such places as the Civil Service Commission shall by regulation designate, examine applicants concerning their qualifications for voting. An application to an examiner shall be in such form as the Commission may require and shall contain allegations that the applicant is not otherwise registered to vote.

(b) Any person whom the examiner finds, in accordance with instructions received under section 9(b), to have the qualifications prescribed by State law not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States shall promptly be placed on a list of eligible voters. A challenge to such listing may be made in accordance with section 9(a) and shall not be the basis for a prosecution under section 12 of this Act. The examiner [p*345] shall certify and transmit such list, and any supplements as appropriate, at least once a month, to the offices of the appropriate election officials, with copies to the Attorney General and the attorney general of the State, and any such lists and supplements thereto transmitted during the month shall be available for public inspection on the last business day of the month and, in any event, not later than the forty-fifth day prior to any election. The appropriate State or local election official shall place such names on the official voting list. Any person whose name appears on the examiner's list shall be entitled and allowed to vote in the election district of his residence unless and until the appropriate election officials shall have been notified that such person has been removed from such list in accordance with subsection (d): Provided, That no person shall be entitled to vote in any election by virtue of this Act unless his name shall have been certified and transmitted on such a list to the offices of the appropriate election officials at least forty-five days prior to such election.

(c) The examiner shall issue to each person whose name appears on such a list a certificate evidencing his eligibility to vote.

(d) A person whose name appears on such a list shall be removed there from by an examiner if (1) such person has been successfully challenged in accordance with the procedure prescribed in section 9, or (2) he has been determined by an examiner to have lost his eligibility to vote under State law not inconsistent with the Constitution and the laws of the United States.

SEC. 8. Whenever an examiner is serving under this Act in any political subdivision, the Civil Service Commission may assign, at the request of the Attorney General, one or more persons, who may be officers of the United States, (1) to enter and attend at any place for holding an election in such subdivision for the purpose [p*346] of observing whether persons who are entitled to vote are being permitted to vote, and (2) to enter and attend at any place for tabulating the votes cast at any election held in such subdivision for the purpose of observing whether votes cast by persons entitled to vote are being properly tabulated. Such persons so assigned shall report to an examiner appointed for such political subdivision, to the Attorney General, and if the appointment of examiners has been authorized pursuant to section 3(a), to the court.

(a) Any challenge to a listing on an eligibility list prepared by an examiner shall be heard and determined by a hearing officer appointed by and responsible to the Civil Service Commission and under such rules as the Commission shall by regulation prescribe. Such challenge shall be entertained only if filed at such office within the State as the Civil Service Commission shall by regulation designate, and within ten days after the listing of the challenged person is made available for public inspection, and if supported by (1) the affidavits of at least two persons having personal knowledge of the facts constituting grounds for the challenge, and (2) a certification that a copy of the challenge and affidavits have been served by mail or in person upon the person challenged at his place of residence set out in the application. Such challenge shall be determined within fifteen days after it has been filed. A petition for review of the decision of the hearing officer may be filed in the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which the person challenged resides within fifteen days after service of such decision by mail on the person petitioning for review but no decision of a hearing officer shall be reversed unless clearly erroneous. Any person listed shall be entitled and allowed to vote pending final determination by the hearing officer and by the court [p*347]

(b) The times, places, procedures, and form for application and listing pursuant to this Act and removals from the eligibility lists shall be prescribed by regulations promulgated by the Civil Service Commission and the Commission shall, after consultation with the Attorney General, instruct examiners concerning applicable State law not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States with respect to (1) the qualifications required for listing, and (2) loss of eligibility to vote.

(c) Upon the request of the applicant or the challenger or on its own motion the Civil Service Commission shall have the power to require by subpoena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence relating to any matter pending before it under the authority of this section. In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena, any district court of the United States or the United States court of any territory or possession, or the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, within the jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides or is domiciled or transacts business, or has appointed an agent for receipt of service of process, upon application by the Attorney General of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or a hearing officer, there to produce pertinent, relevant, and nonprivileged documentary evidence if so ordered, or there to give testimony touching the matter under investigation, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by said court as a contempt thereof.

(a) The Congress finds that the requirement of the payment of a poll tax as a precondition to voting (i) precludes persons of limited means from voting or imposes unreasonable financial hardship upon such persons [p*348] as a precondition to their exercise of the franchise, (ii) does not bear a reasonable relationship to any legitimate State interest in the conduct of elections, and (iii) in some areas has the purpose or effect of denying persons the right to vote because of race or color. Upon the basis of these findings, Congress declares that the constitutional right of citizens to vote is denied or abridged in some areas by the requirement of the payment of a poll tax as a precondition to voting.

(b) In the exercise of the powers of Congress under section 5 of the fourteenth amendment and section 2 of the fifteenth amendment, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to institute forthwith in the name of the United States such actions, including actions against States or political subdivisions, for declaratory judgment or injunctive relief against the enforcement of any requirement of the payment of a poll tax as a precondition to voting, or substitute therefor enacted after November 1, 1964, as will be necessary to implement the declaration of subsection (a) and the purposes of this section.

(c) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of such actions which shall be heard and determined by a court of three judges in accordance with the provisions of section 2284 of title 28 of the United States Code and any appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court. It shall be the duty of the judges designated to hear the case to assign the case for hearing at the earliest practicable date, to participate in the hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.

(d) During the pendency of such actions, and thereafter if the courts, notwithstanding this action by the Congress, should declare the requirement of the payment of a poll tax to be constitutional, no citizen of the United States who is a resident of a State or political [p*349] subdivision with respect to which determinations have been made under subsection 4(b) and a declaratory judgment has not been entered under subsection 4(a), during the first year he becomes otherwise entitled to vote by reason of registration by State or local officials or listing by an examiner, shall be denied the right to vote for failure to pay a poll tax if he tenders payment of such tax for the current year to an examiner or to the appropriate State or local official at least forty-five days prior to election, whether or not such tender would be timely or adequate under State law. An examiner shall have authority to accept such payment from any person authorized by this Act to make an application for listing, and shall issue a receipt for such payment. The examiner shall transmit promptly any such poll tax payment to the office of the State or local official authorized to receive such payment under State law, together with the name and address of the applicant.

SEC. 11.

(a) No person acting under color of law shall fail or refuse to permit any person to vote who is entitled to vote under any provision of this Act or is otherwise qualified to vote, or willfully fail or refuse to tabulate, count, and report such person's vote.

(b) No person, whether acting under color of law or otherwise, shall intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce any person for voting or attempting to vote, or intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce any person for urging or aiding any person to vote or attempt to vote, or intimidate, threaten, or coerce any person for exercising any powers or duties under section 3(a), 6, 8, 9, 10, or 12(e).

(c) Whoever knowingly or willfully gives false information as to his name, address, or period of residence in the voting district for the purpose of establishing his eligibility to register or vote, or conspires with another [p*350] individual for the purpose of encouraging his false registration to vote or illegal voting, or pays or offers to pay or accepts payment either for registration to vote or for voting shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both: Provided, however, That this provision shall be applicable only to general, special, or primary elections held solely or in part for the purpose of selecting or electing any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, presidential elector, Member of the United States Senate, Member of the United States House of Representatives, or Delegates or Commissioners from the territories or possessions, or Resident Commissioner of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

(d) Whoever, in any matter within the jurisdiction of an examiner or hearing officer knowingly and willfully falsifies or conceals a material fact, or makes any false, fictitious, or fraudulent statements or representations, or makes or uses any false writing or document knowing the same to contain any false, fictitious, or fraudulent statement or entry, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 12.

(a) Whoever shall deprive or attempt to deprive any person of any right secured by section 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, or 10 or shall violate section 11(a) or (b), shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(b) Whoever, within a year following an election in a political subdivision in which an examiner has been appointed (1) destroys, defaces, mutilates, or otherwise alters the marking of a paper ballot which has been cast in such election, or (2) alters any official record of voting in such election tabulated from a voting machine or otherwise, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both [p*351]

(c) Whoever conspires to violate the provisions of subsection (a) or (b) of this section, or interferes with any right secured by section 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 10, or 11(a) or (b) shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(d) Whenever any person has engaged or there are reasonable grounds to believe that any person is about to engage in any act or practice prohibited by section 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 10, 11, or subsection (b) of this section, the Attorney General may institute for the United States, or in the name of the United States, an action for preventive relief, including an application for a temporary or permanent injunction, restraining order, or other order, and including an order directed to the State and State or local election officials to require them (1) to permit persons listed under this Act to vote and (2) to count such votes.

(e) Whenever in any political subdivision in which there are examiners appointed pursuant to this Act any persons allege to such an examiner within forty-eight hours after the closing of the polls that notwithstanding (1) their listing under this Act or registration by an appropriate election official and (2) their eligibility to vote, they have not been permitted to vote in such election, the examiner shall forthwith notify the Attorney General if such allegations in his opinion appear to be well founded. Upon receipt of such notification, the Attorney General may forthwith file with the district court an application for an order providing for the marking, casting, and counting of the ballots of such persons and requiring the inclusion of their votes in the total vote before the results of such election shall be deemed final and any force or effect given thereto. The district court shall hear and determine such matters immediately after the filing of such application. The remedy provided [p*352] in this subsection shall not preclude any remedy available under State or Federal law.

(f) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this section and shall exercise the same without regard to whether a person asserting rights under the provisions of this Act shall have exhausted any administrative or other remedies that may be provided by law. ...

SEC. 14.

(a) All cases of criminal contempt arising under the provisions of this Act shall be governed by section 151 of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 (42 U.S.C.1995).

(b) No court other than the District Court for the District of Columbia or a court of appeals in any proceeding under section 9 shall have jurisdiction to issue any declaratory judgment pursuant to section 4 or section 5 or any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction against the execution or enforcement of any provision of this Act or any action of any Federal officer or employee pursuant hereto.

(1) The terms "vote" or "voting" shall include all action necessary to make a vote effective in any primary, special, or general election, including, but not limited to, registration, listing pursuant to this Act, or other action required by law prerequisite to voting, casting a ballot, and having such ballot counted properly and included in the appropriate totals of votes cast with respect to candidates for public or party office and propositions for which votes are received in an election.

(2) The term "political subdivision" shall mean any county or parish, except that, where registration for voting is not conducted under the supervision of a county or parish, the term shall include any other subdivision of a State which conducts registration for voting.

(d) In any action for a declaratory judgment brought pursuant to section 4 or section 5 of this Act, subpoenas for witnesses who are required to attend the District Court for the District of Columbia may be served in any judicial district of the United States: Provided, That no writ of subpoena shall issue for witnesses without the District of Columbia at a greater distance than one hundred [p*354] miles from the place of holding court without the permission of the District Court for the District of Columbia being first had upon proper application and cause shown.

SEC. 15. Section 2004 of the Revised Statutes (42 U.S.C.1971), as amended by section 131 of the Civil Rights Act of 1957 (71 Stat. 637), and amended by section 601 of the Civil Rights Act of 1960 (74 Stat. 90), and as further amended by section 101 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 241), is further amended as follows:

(a) Delete the word "Federal" wherever it appears in subsections (a) and (c);

(b) Repeal subsection (f) and designate the present subsections (g) and (h) as (f) and (g), respectively.

SEC. 16. The Attorney General and the Secretary of Defense, jointly, shall make a full and complete study to determine whether, under the laws or practices of any State or States, there are preconditions to voting, which might tend to result in discrimination against citizens serving in the Armed Forces of the United States seeking to vote. Such officials shall, jointly, make a report to the Congress not later than June 30, 1966, containing the results of such study, together with a list of any States in which such preconditions exist, and shall include in such report such recommendations for legislation as they deem advisable to prevent discrimination in voting against citizens serving in the Armed Forces of the United States.

SEC. 17. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to deny, impair, or otherwise adversely affect the right to vote of any person registered to vote under the law of any State or political subdivision.

SEC. 18. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act [p*355]

SEC 19. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of the provision to other persons not similarly situated or to other circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Item 10-03

Report of the Task Force to Study Reparations

Affirming that Jesus Christ calls us to repair wrongs done to one another and to work for personal and social reconciliation and renewal, the General Assembly Council, on behalf of the Task Force to Study Reparations, and in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) take the following actions:

1. Encourage Presbyterians to create opportunities to tell and hear stories remembering the past and celebrating examples of repair, restoration, reconciliation, and renewal.
2. Encourage congregations, governing bodies, racial ethnic caucuses, and other PC(USA) entities to create opportunities for discussion in which participants remember the past and celebrate examples of repair, restoration, reconciliation, and renewal on issues of reparations and reconciliation.
3. Encourage the Ministries Divisions of the General Assembly Council and governing bodies to include workshops and worship services on reparations, reconciliation, and renewal in conferences; and report their efforts to the 217th General Assembly (2006).

~~[4. Direct the Stated Clerk to initiate the process described in G-18.0201b by appointing a committee to consider designing a confessional statement repenting of the sin of racism and its various expressions, including slavery and genocide for inclusion in The Book of Confessions and to report to the 217th General Assembly (2006).]~~

[4. a. Commends the Belhar Confession to the church as a resource for reflection, study, and response, as a means of deepening the commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to dealing with racism and a means of strengthening its unity; bearing in mind that the Belhar Confession emerged from the context of racism in South Africa;

[b. Requests the General Assembly Council, Office of Theology and Worship, to prepare materials to facilitate churchwide reflection and study;

[c. Urges each presbytery and all congregations to undertake a study of the Belhar Confession before the 218th General Assembly (2008);

[d. Directs the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council, Office of Theology and Worship, to receive responses, prepare a summary, and report results to the 218th General Assembly (2008), together with possible recommendations for further engagement with the Belhar Confession.]

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 10-03, RECOMMENDATION 4

Comment on Item 10-03, Recommendation 4—From the Office of the General Assembly.

The Office of the General Assembly advises that Recommendation 4 of Item 10-03 be answered as follows:

“1. commends the Belhar Confession to the church for reflection, study, and response, as a means of deepening the commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to dealing with racism and a means of strengthening its unity;

“2. requests the Office of Theology and Worship to prepare materials to facilitate churchwide reflection and study;

“3. urges each presbytery and all congregations to undertake a study of the Belhar Confession before the 218th General Assembly (2008);

“4. directs the Office of the General Assembly and the Office of Theology and Worship to receive responses, prepare a summary, and report results to the 218th General Assembly (2008), together with possible recommendations for further engagement with the Belhar Confession.”

The OGA concurs with the General Assembly Council that, at its core, issues related to racism and reparations are theological concerns related to our confessional heritage. The 209th General Assembly (1997) approved a report on “The Assessment of Proposed Amendments to the Book of Confessions,” which makes clear that the starting point for considering historic confessions should be a serious process of study and reflection in the church. We believe that the confession (and the historical reality) that most clearly gives witness to the reconciling power of the gospel to overcome racism is the Belhar Confession rising out of the experience of Reformed Christians in South Africa and that the PC(USA) would do well to join other Reformed churches around the world in a serious study of this confession.

BELHAR CONFESSION

The Belhar Confession has its roots in the struggle against apartheid in Southern Africa. This “outcry of faith” and “call for faithfulness and repentance” was first drafted in 1982 by the Dutch Reformed Mission Church (DRMC) under the leadership of Allan Boesak. The DRMC took the lead in declaring that apartheid constituted a status confessionis in which the truth of the gospel was at stake.

The Dutch Reformed Mission Church formally adopted the Belhar Confession in 1986. It is now one of the “standards of unity” of the new Uniting Reformed Church of Southern Africa (URCSA). Belhar’s theological confrontation of the sin of racism has made possible reconciliation among Reformed churches in Southern Africa and has aided the process of reconciliation within the nation.

Belhar’s relevance is not confined to Southern Africa. It addresses three key issues of concern to all churches: unity of the church and unity among all people, reconciliation within church and society, and God’s justice. Belhar is currently being studied by a number of Reformed churches, including the Reformed Church in America. As one member of the URCSA has said, “We carry this confession on behalf of all the Reformed churches. We do not think of it as ours alone.”

Confession of Belhar September 1986<sup>1</sup>

1. We believe in the triune God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, who gathers, protects and cares for the church through Word and Spirit. This, God has done since the beginning of the world and will do to the end.
2. We believe in one holy, universal Christian church, the communion of saints called from the entire human family.

We believe

- that Christ’s work of reconciliation is made manifest in the church as the community of believers who have been reconciled with God and with one another;
- that unity is, therefore, both a gift and an obligation for the church of Jesus Christ; that through the working of God’s Spirit it is a binding force, yet simultaneously a reality which must be earnestly pursued and sought: one which the people of God must continually be built up to attain;

- that this unity must become visible so that the world may believe that separation, enmity and hatred between people and groups is sin which Christ has already conquered, and accordingly that anything which threatens this unity may have no place in the church and must be resisted;
- that this unity of the people of God must be manifested and be active in a variety of ways: in that we love one another; that we experience, practice and pursue community with one another; that we are obligated to give ourselves willingly and joyfully to be of benefit and blessing to one another; that we share one faith, have one calling, are of one soul and one mind; have one God and Father, are filled with one Spirit, are baptized with one baptism, eat of one bread and drink of one cup, confess one name, are obedient to one Lord, work for one cause, and share one hope; together come to know the height and the breadth and the depth of the love of Christ; together are built up to the stature of Christ, to the new humanity; together know and bear one another's burdens, thereby fulfilling the law of Christ that we need one another and upbuild one another, admonishing and comforting one another; that we suffer with one another for the sake of righteousness; pray together; together serve God in this world; and together fight against all which may threaten or hinder this unity;
- that this unity can be established only in freedom and not under constraint; that the variety of spiritual gifts, opportunities, backgrounds, convictions, as well as the various languages and cultures, are by virtue of the reconciliation in Christ, opportunities for mutual service and enrichment within the one visible people of God;
- that true faith in Jesus Christ is the only condition for membership of this church;

Therefore, we reject any doctrine

- which absolutizes either natural diversity or the sinful separation of people in such a way that this absolutization hinders or breaks the visible and active unity of the church, or even leads to the establishment of a separate church formation;
- which professes that this spiritual unity is truly being maintained in the bond of peace while believers of the same confession are in effect alienated from one another for the sake of diversity and in despair of reconciliation;
- which denies that a refusal earnestly to pursue this visible unity as a priceless gift is sin;
- which explicitly or implicitly maintains that descent or any other human or social factor should be a consideration in determining membership of the church.

3. We believe

- that God has entrusted the church with the message of reconciliation in and through Jesus Christ; that the church is called to be the salt of the earth and the light of the world, that the church is called blessed because it is a peacemaker, that the church is witness both by word and by deed to the new heaven and the new earth in which righteousness dwells.
- that God's lifegiving Word and Spirit has conquered the powers of sin and death, and therefore also of irreconciliation and hatred, bitterness and enmity, that God's lifegiving Word and Spirit will enable the church to live in a new obedience which can open new possibilities of life for society and the world;
- that the credibility of this message is seriously affected and its beneficial work obstructed when it is proclaimed in a land which professes to be Christian, but in which the enforced separation of people on a racial basis promotes and perpetuates alienation, hatred and enmity;
- that any teaching which attempts to legitimate such forced separation by appeal to the gospel, and is not prepared to venture on the road of obedience and reconciliation, but rather, out of prejudice, fear, selfishness and unbelief, denies in advance the reconciling power of the gospel, must be considered ideology and false doctrine.

Therefore, we reject any doctrine

- which, in such a situation sanctions in the name of the gospel or of the will of God the forced separation of people on the grounds of race and color and thereby in advance obstructs and weakens the ministry and experience of reconciliation in Christ.

4. We believe

- that God has revealed himself as the one who wishes to bring about justice and true peace among people;
- that God, in a world full of injustice and enmity, is in a special way the God of the destitute, the poor and the wronged
- that God calls the church to follow him in this; for God brings justice to the oppressed and gives bread to the hungry;
- that God frees the prisoner and restores sight to the blind;
- that God supports the downtrodden, protects the stranger, helps orphans and widows and blocks the path of the ungodly;
- that for God pure and undefiled religion is to visit the orphans and the widows in their suffering;
- that God wishes to teach the church to do what is good and to seek the right;
- that the church must therefore stand by people in any form of suffering and need, which implies, among other things, that the church must witness against and strive against any form of injustice, so that justice may roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream;
- that the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged; that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others.

Therefore, we reject any ideology

- which would legitimate forms of injustice and any doctrine which is unwilling to resist such an ideology in the name of the gospel.

- 5. We believe that, in obedience to Jesus Christ, its only head, the church is called to confess and to do all these things, even though the authorities and human laws might forbid them and punishment and suffering be the consequence.

Jesus is Lord.

To the one and only God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, be the honor and the glory for ever and ever.

I. Introduction

Then God said, "Let us make humankind in our image, according to our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the wild animals of the earth, and over every creeping thing that creeps upon the earth." So God created humankind in his image, in the image of God he created them; male and female he created them. (Gen. 1:26–27, NRSV)

We declare that all human beings are born free, equal in dignity and rights and have the potential to contribute constructively to the development and well-being of their societies. Any doctrine of racial superiority is scientifically false, morally condemnable, socially unjust and dangerous, and must be rejected along with theories which attempt to determine the existence of separate human races. (Report of the World Conference Against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, Durban, Republic of South Africa, 31 August–8 September 2001, p. 10. The report is online at www.unhchr.ch/html/racism.)

The question of whether or not the United States government should pay reparations to people on whom it has inflicted harm is being raised in America and around the globe. Books and articles from newspapers and magazines have been and are being written. Radio and television talk shows are sponsoring discussions and debates on the topic. Teachers are raising the question of reparations in classrooms at all grade levels throughout the nation. And churches are studying the propriety of developing policy statements that address the question.

The focal point of the current reparations debate in North America is African Americans. Randall Robinson's book, The Debt: What America Owes to Blacks, published in 2000 by Dutton Books, is primarily responsible for the focus of the current debate. Notwithstanding that fact, the practice of, and debate about, reparations has a much broader history in the United States. Indeed, the practice of paying reparations to aggrieved groups of people is long-standing.

Shortly after the Revolutionary War, Americans asked the British government for compensation for the slaves who escaped to England. The United States government paid reparations to some Native Americans for the two billion acres of land taken from them.<sup>1</sup> Under the 1921 Thompson-Urrutia Treaty, the United States paid Colombia reparations for excising the territory of Panama from Columbia for the purpose of building the Panama Canal.<sup>2</sup> The United States government worked to assure that the victims of Nazi persecution received compensation for personal and financial losses incurred during World War II. Japanese Americans who were unjustly incarcerated after the bombing of Pearl Harbor received $1.2 billion in reparations from the United States government in 1988 after more than twenty years of advocacy and work. In each of the examples listed here, the United States either advocated for, or paid reparations to, groups of people who in some way experienced unjust harm.

By virtue of the fact that the United States government has in some cases either advocated for or paid reparations to aggrieved peoples, it has acknowledged that there have been times in the past when it either agreed that an injustice had occurred for which the victims deserved compensation, or that the government itself had unjustly inflicted harm on certain groups of people. It is important to recognize that in each case where reparations were paid by the United States government, no individuals were deemed responsible for the harmful behavior. Rather, citizens of the United States were collectively held responsible whether or not they personally participated in the behavior that caused harm.

From a Christian perspective, reparations is not so much about assigning blame to individuals or groups of people as it is about recognizing that "we the people," citizens of the United States, are sometimes found culpable for the harm done to others because of our government's laws and policies and our social practices. It is for those times that we must, as a nation and as a church, repent of our sins against our sisters and brothers, diligently attempt to repair any breach in relationship that has been caused, and do our best to redress any and all injustices visited upon innocent people.

The concept of reparations provides a framework for responding to such situations. Reparation is a process of remembering, restoring, repairing, and redressing injustices for the purpose of reconciliation and human restitution. For Christians, this is a particularly appropriate ministry. Reparations involve an acknowledgement of beneficial gains at the expense of others or harm done to others and includes confession, repentance, forgiveness, and renewal.

Careful study, prayer combined with a significant amount of time spent listening to various voices within and outside of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), leads to the conviction that sins have been committed against our sisters and brothers of Native American, African American, Asian American, Mexican, Puerto Rican, and Alaskan Native heritage. Presbyterians and other citizens of the United States have too frequently remained silent in the face of atrocities like the enslavement and colonization of African peoples, the destruction of First World or Native peoples, and the confiscation of lands that were already occupied by indigenous inhabitants. For example, in regard to American slavery, our Presbyterian ancestors both used Scripture to justify the enslavement of other human beings and were slaveholders themselves.

The point is not to indict any particular group of people for such atrocities. Rather, as members of the same body, the body of Christ, we must all bear equal responsibility for the sins of our past. The Scriptures call us to bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ (Gal. 6:2, NRSV). We do so first, by remembering what we have done and failed to do; second, by doing everything in our power to restore the human dignity and material loss of our sisters and brothers; third, by repairing the moral and spiritual breach that was formed between the offended and the offenders; and fourth, by sincerely attempting to reconcile all differences that are directly related to our behaviors of the past.

II. Remember

Remember the days of old, consider the years long past; ask your father, and he will inform you; your elders, and they will tell you. (Deut.32:7, NRSV)

The duties required in the Sixth Commandment are: all careful studies and lawful endeavors, to preserve the life of ourselves and others, by resisting all thoughts and purposes, subduing all passions, and avoiding all occasions, temptations, and practices, which tend to the unjust taking away the life of any; by just defense thereof against violence; patient bearing of the hand of God, quietness of mind, cheerfulness of spirit, a sober use of meat, drink, physic, sleep, labor, and recreation; by charitable thoughts, love, compassion, meekness, gentleness, kindness; peaceable, mild, and courteous speeches and behavior, forbearance, readiness to be reconciled, patient bearing and forgiving of injuries, and requiting good for evil; comforting and succoring the distressed, and protecting and defending the innocent. (The Book of Confessions, PC(USA), The Larger Catechism, 7.245)

While it is appropriate to remember and to celebrate our Presbyterian witness in America, it is also appropriate to remember and acknowledge that our witness has not always been honorable. The "New World" was already inhabited when the Puritans from England, Presbyterians among them, arrived on the northeast coast of the North American continent. They, along with other Europeans, participated in the displacement and slaughter of thousands of native peoples. Furthermore, in our efforts to reach native peoples with the gospel of Jesus Christ, we also pursued programs and policies that contributed to the virtual destruction of Native American and Alaskan Native cultures.

One might well argue that we should not stand in judgment of our Presbyterian and Christian fore-parents of other communions. They were zealous for the gospel of God through Jesus Christ and they, in a very real sense, were struggling to survive in an often-hostile environment. There is truth in those statements. But one must wonder how our Presbyterian and other Christian fore-parents could be eager to embrace their own religious freedoms and fail to consider the religious freedoms of indigenous peoples.

Indeed, Portugal began to transport enslaved Africans to Europe as early as 1492.<sup>3</sup> The European slave trade lasted for more than four hundred years. During that time Africa lost nearly forty million people. Approximately twenty million of those women and men were brought to the "New World." Millions more died during capture, at sea, or soon after arrival.<sup>4</sup> Families were torn asunder, cultures were destroyed, whole nations were decimated, women, children, and men were forced to spend their lives as chattel in the homes and fields of good Christians all over Europe and the Americas, yet our Presbyterian fore-parents made no definitive statements about such sordid and inhumane activities until 1818.<sup>5</sup> Even then, Presbyterians made strong condemnatory statements against the sin of slavery, but invoked no sanction against members of its constituency who owned slaves.<sup>6</sup>

There were Presbyterians who worked tirelessly to evangelize and educate both Native and African Americans. There were Presbyterian missionaries who risked their lives to establish Native American congregations and to teach enslaved Africans to read and write even though it was illegal. Notwithstanding such bold and commendable activities, many Presbyterian congregations of the period remained conspicuously silent; by their silence, they made a private peace with entrenched evil.

Native and African Americans were not the only people who were harmed by American policies and practices however. Alaskan Natives endured assaults on their land and insults against their culture. Immigrants from Asia experienced discrimination in employment and other prejudices. When American forces landed in Gúanica in 1898 during the Spanish-American War, most Puerto Ricans greeted them as liberators from Spanish colonialism.

Few imagined that the island would remain a possession of the United States to this day, only achieving the limited self-rule of commonwealth status in 1952. In the process, many Puerto Ricans lost their land and migrated to the continental United States.<sup>7</sup>

In 1942, eight months after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, the United States government asked Mexico for help. More than four hundred thousand Mexican workers came to the United States to work in our nation's service industries as we geared up for the war effort. These Mexican workers were called the helping arms, "braceros" in Spanish. The American and Mexican governments required that ten percent of each worker's pay be withheld and deposited in interest-bearing accounts through the Wells-Fargo Bank. Wells-Fargo was to then transfer those savings to Mexican banks where they would be held until the braceros returned to Mexico to collect it. No one knows what happened to those funds. What is evident to those familiar with the situation is that the braceros never received their money. The United States and Mexican governments are, even now, resisting the efforts of social justice groups to discover what happened and to assure that the braceros or their descendants receive just and due compensation by claiming such legal notions as "lapse of time" and "sovereign immunity," as justifiable causes for their intractability.<sup>8</sup>

We are called by God through Jesus the Christ to remember our entire history. As we remember our sins of the past, we are compelled to confess our sins and to repent for those things we have done, or left undone, that have caused injury to innocent peoples. Remembering is a form of confession, and it is the first step in the process of reparations.

III. Repair and Restore

When someone steals an ox or a sheep, and slaughters it or sells it, the thief shall pay five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep. The thief shall make restitution, but if unable to do so, shall be sold for the theft. (Ex. 22:1, NRSV)

If someone is caught kidnapping another Israelite, enslaving or selling the Israelite, then that kidnapper shall die. So you shall purge the evil from your midst. (Deut. 24:7, NRSV)

Urges States to reinforce protection against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance by ensuring that all persons have access to effective and adequate remedies and enjoy the right to seek from competent national tribunals and other national institutions just and adequate reparation and satisfaction for any damages as a result of such discrimination.<sup>9</sup>

The next steps in the reparation process involve repairing the breach caused by the sinful behaviors of the past and making every effort to restore the dignity and the material losses of those who have been harmed. A noteworthy example of reparation and restoration was taken in Durban, South Africa, during the United Nations World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia, and Related Intolerance in September 2001. Members of the human family from all over the world were present, including a delegation from the PC(USA) and other Presbyterians. The report from that delegation, approved by the 214th General Assembly (2002), recommended that Presbyterians study the Declaration and Programme of Action from this conference (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 55–56, 711–26). This declaration articulated the complexity of the problem of race in the world. A portion of that declaration, in the section entitled, "Source, causes, forms and contemporary manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance" is pertinent to the notions of repairing and restoring breaches in human relationships that were formed as a consequence of the oppression and exploitation of certain groups of people. It reads:

We acknowledge that slavery and the slave trade, including the transatlantic slave trade, were appalling tragedies in the history of humanity not only because of their abhorrent barbarism but also in terms of their magnitude, organized nature and especially their negation of the essence of the victims, and further acknowledge that slavery and the slave trade are a crime against humanity and should always have been so, especially the transatlantic slave trade and are among the major sources and manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and that the Africans and people of African descent, Asians and people of Asian descent and indigenous peoples were victims of these acts and continue to be victims of their consequences; We recognize that colonialism has led to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and that Africans and people of African descent, and people of Asian descent and indigenous peoples were victims of colonialism and continue to be victims of its consequences. We acknowledge the suffering caused by colonialism and affirm that, wherever and whenever it occurred, it must be condemned and its recurrence prevented. We further regret that the effects and persistence of these structures and practices have been among the factors contributing to lasting social and economic inequalities in many parts of the world today.<sup>10</sup>

This part of the United Nation's declaration from the conference in Durban is important because it confesses harms done to oppressed peoples, acknowledges that harms done in the past impact the present, and is inclusive of a broad array of the world's people. Unfortunately, the official representatives of the United States government walked out of the conference on the first day. Nevertheless, it is significant that the world community felt it appropriate to stay, participate, acknowledge and confess its complicity in such "crimes against humanity" as the transatlantic slave trade, and seek opportunities for reparation and restoration. Breaches in human relationships cannot be repaired if there is no acknowledgement and confession of harms done and sins committed. Relationships remain broken. Suspicion and distrust continue to characterize the interaction between the disparate groups of people in the church and the society.

Another important aspect of reparation and restoration is forgiveness. Once there is a sincere acknowledgment and confession of offenses, then injured persons can begin the process of forgiving and broken relationships can begin to mend. It is indeed a process—one that will take time to complete. Attending elements in this process are efforts to rectify the wrongdoing through tangible acts designed to reverse the injustices imposed on innocent people.

We have already provided a partial list of peoples who have sued for and received some measure of compensation for the harms visited upon them. Other peoples seeking reparations today include, the Mapuche, an aboriginal people of Southern Chile who are seeking reparations for lands taken from them by European immigrants as far back as 1540 and the Inuit of Arctic Canada who are also seeking the restoration of ancestral land taken by European immigrants.<sup>11</sup>

Representative John Conyers (D-Mich.) introduced bill House Resolution 40, The Commission to Study Reparations for African Americans Act, in 1989 and in every succeeding Congress since that time. It has never gotten out of committee nor has the United States government ever apologized for its role in the transatlantic slave trade, the enslavement of Africans and Native Americans, or the laws it created to legalize slavery.

The Conyers bill is just one of the more recent efforts to secure reparations for African Americans. In 1867, Representative Thaddeus Stevens argued in favor of a Slave Reparations Bill, House Resolution 29.<sup>12</sup> In 1915 Cornelius J. Jones filed a lawsuit against the United States Department of the Treasury in an attempt to recover sixty-eight million dollars for former slaves.<sup>13</sup> William Patterson and Paul Robeson petitioned the United Nations in 1951 charging the United States government with the crime of genocide against Black Americans.<sup>14</sup> Queen Mother Moore's Reparations Committee filed a claim in California in 1962.<sup>15</sup> In 1997, Representative Tony P. Hall (D-Ohio) submitted a bill in the House of Representatives proposing that Congress apologize for slavery.<sup>16</sup> In 2003, Representatives Clifford Stearns (R-Fla.), Elijah E. Cummings (D-Md.), Jack Quinn (R-N.Y.), and James P. Moran (D-Va.) introduced House Resolution 196 "to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to establish a memorial to slavery, in the District of Columbia."<sup>17</sup>

A simple apology from the United States government for its role in the establishment and maintenance, by law and through economic mandate, of the systematic enslavement of millions of African peoples for 249 years would go a long way toward healing the racial breach between European and African Americans. Opponents of reparations for slavery argue variously that:

- They never held slaves and therefore should not be held accountable for the deeds of their fore-parents.
- Descendants of slaves should quit complaining about the past and pour their energies into improving the present and building the future.
- African Americans are just looking for a handout.
- So much time has past since the abolition of slavery that the subject should be forgotten.
- A nationwide discussion about the propriety of paying reparations to African Americans, in particular, will further polarize the country along racial lines.

These dangerous arguments deny a fundamental spiritual truth—confession is good for the soul and essential for healing and renewing our spirits.

In comments on the September 1952 Luxembourg Agreement in which Germany agreed to pay reparations to Israel, Israel's prime minister at the time, David Ben-Gurion said, "For the first time in the history of relations between people, a precedent has been created by which a great State, as a result of moral pressure alone, takes it upon itself to pay compensation to the victims of the government that preceded it. For the first time in the history of a people that has been persecuted, oppressed, plundered and despoiled for hundreds of years in the countries of Europe, a persecutor and despoiler has been obliged to return part of his spoils and has even undertaken to make collective reparations as partial compensation for material losses."<sup>18</sup> Former Prime Minister Ben-Gurion's statement clearly addresses the second important step in the process of reparations—restoration of the human dignity and material losses of injured parties. And notice, it was not the perpetrators of violence and enslavement of Jewish peoples who paid reparations: it was their successors! This act of reparations reminds us that we inherit both the benefits that accrued to our ancestors as well as the responsibility of properly managing all that comes with them.

In the course of our history, our national leaders have occasionally apologized for the sins of the past. For example,

... in 1998 President Clinton signed into law the Sand Creek Massacre National Historic Study Site Act, which officially acknowledges an 1864 attack by seven hundred U.S. soldiers on a peaceful Cheyenne village located in the territory of Colorado. Hundreds, largely women and children, were killed. The act calls for the establishment of a federally funded Historic Site at Sand Creek.<sup>19</sup>

President Clinton, on behalf of the United States government and its citizens, apologized for a sin that American soldiers committed against the Cheyenne people one hundred thirty-four years ago. Clearly our government felt some sense of responsibility for the past sins of our fathers and mothers. And though no material compensation was made to the descendants of those who were slaughtered at Sand Creek, there was the tacit acknowledgement of the slaughtered Cheyenne people's humanity. Apologies for other historic wrongs with contemporary consequences could foster healing between peoples who have been violated and European Americans.

A disproportionate percentage of Native, African, and Hispanic Americans, in comparison to European Americans, languish in poverty, lack adequate health care, and lag behind the rest of the population in educational attainment. Too many Native American reservations, African American ghettos, and Hispanic American barrios are characterized by high unemployment and underemployment, domestic violence, crime, disease, alcoholism, and drug addiction. None of this is incidental.<sup>20</sup> Due to the violence done to these communities through a lack of equal opportunity in job markets and educational institutions, disparity in wages, and difficulty in securing capital to either begin small business ventures or finance homes, hard working people are compelled to eek out an existence the best way they can.<sup>21</sup>

The United States government forcibly removed Native Americans from their ancestral homelands onto reservations and consequently out of the mainstream of American political, economic, social, and educational opportunity. Alaskan Natives endured efforts to suppress their culture. Similarly African Americans, after a brief period of Reconstruction, were forced to endure almost another hundred years of racial segregation during the Jim Crow semi-slavery period. Many Mexican Americans lost their land as the United States expanded and consumed more than half of what used to be Mexico. Many other Hispanic Americans are new immigrants to this country. As such, they are subject to the same race, class, and ethnic prejudices that virtually all emigrant communities have had to endure. However, their circumstances are exacerbated in part because of their skin color. Although United States citizens, Puerto Ricans are often viewed and treated as foreigners. It is patently unreasonable and unfair to expect those who have only recently (within the past forty years) been the recipients of affirmative action, civil and human rights, to have caught up with the rest of the American population. If we ever hope to face the future together as a united Republic, we must honestly acknowledge, confess, and attempt to repair the harms done in our collective past. Reconciliation cannot occur if there is no acknowledgement of guilt. The breach remains.

IV. Reconciliation

If my people who are called by my name humble themselves, pray, seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin and heal their land. (2 Chr. 7:14, NRSV)

So when you are offering your gift at the altar, if you remember that your brother or sister has something against you, leave your gift there before the altar and go; first be reconciled to your brother or sister, and then come and offer your gift. (Matt. 5: 23–24, NRSV)

We live in the hope that race and class prejudices will be overcome in our lifetimes. Yet we remain unwilling to acknowledge the sins of our fathers and mothers, as well as the fact that we receive residual benefits from the advantages that accrued to them because of their sins. Like our ancestors of the 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th centuries, contemporary churches consistently craft statements, authorize and conduct studies of pressing social, economic, political, and societal problems that address the moral, spiritual, and ethical dilemmas of our nation, our church, and the world that we live in. We even confess our collective sinfulness and receive assurances of pardon in our services of worship, but we consistently fail to live up to our confessions, implement policies that possess the capacity to transform human lives and relationships, and challenge systems and institutions that continue to sin in tangible ways.

Reconciliation implies repair. As followers of Jesus Christ, we, of all people, should be willing to compensate those whom we have harmed. Our verbal and written confessions, while important, are far less than adequate means of repairing the harms done, restoring the losses, and reconciling the relationships that have been broken. Concrete steps are required to produce the quality of healing that we so desperately want and need.

We cannot afford to live, work and worship in denial of our collective and historic sinfulness against other human beings. We must boldly demonstrate the willingness to re-enter relationships with people who have been forced to and are presently living in the margins of American society by forthrightly doing our part to welcome them back to the center of the body politic. As a church we have yet to act forthrightly to redress these wrongs.

A survey conducted by the Presbyterian Panel in 2003 revealed that the majority of respondents are opposed to the PC(USA) General Assembly taking a stand on the questions of reparations; recognize that the task of racial reconciliation is not complete in the United States; and are not as well-informed on the history of reparations in America as they should be. (See Appendix A.) Such results indicate that a churchwide study and dialogue of the issues related to reparations should be undertaken with all deliberate speed because attempts to achieve true reconciliation with those who have been harmed are futile apart from remembering, repairing, restoring, and redressing injustices.

V. Conclusion

The LORD spoke to Moses, saying: When any of you sin and commit a trespass against the LORD by deceiving a neighbor in a matter of a deposit or a pledge, or by robbery, or if you have defrauded a neighbor; or have found something lost and lied about it—if you swear falsely regarding any of the various things that one may do and sin thereby—when you have sinned and realize your guilt, and would restore what you took by robbery or by fraud or by deposit that was committed to you, or the lost thing that you found, or anything else about which you have sworn falsely, you shall repay the principal amount and shall add one-fifth to it. You shall pay it to its owner when you realize your guilt. (Lev. 6:1–5, NRSV)

Q. 1. What is your only comfort, in life and in death?

A. That I belong—body and soul, in life and in death—not to myself but to my faithful Savior, Jesus Christ, who at the cost of his own blood has fully paid for all my sins and has completely freed me from the dominion of the devil; that he protects me so well that without the will of my Father in heaven not a hair can fall from my head; indeed, that everything must fit his purpose for my salvation. Therefore, by his Holy Spirit, he also assures me of eternal life, and makes me wholeheartedly willing and ready from now on to live for him. (The Book of Confessions, PC(USA), The Heidelberg Catechism, 4.001)

Our God is the sovereign Lord of all creation. Every thing and every one was created by God for God's glory. We, along with all of God's creation, are to worship and enjoy God forever. Our worship and enjoyment of God is the tie that binds us together with God, one another, and God's whole creation. However, our sin against God, one another, and God's creation has rendered us spiritually broken and relationally disconnected from God, our neighbors, and the world in which we live.

Sinfulness against God extends beyond our personal relationships with God and one another. Evil resides in systems, structures, institutions, and agencies, and therefore impacts and involves whole communities. To the extent that we, believers in God through Christ Jesus, support, participate in, and invest in such systems, structures, institutions, and agencies, we sin against God as well as those people who are exploited and oppressed by those entities. We sin collectively, as a community of faith. It is therefore also as a community of faith that we must acknowledge and confess our sin, repent, and engage in acts of restoration.

In recognition of our sinfulness and brokenness, God sent God's son Jesus into the world to reconcile human-kind to God's Self and one another. Indeed, the whole creation is waiting for the redemption of the children of God. Jesus, in complete obedience to God, went to the cross where he paid the penalty of our sin. He died and was buried in a borrowed tomb but our merciful God did not leave him there. God raised Jesus from death to life. Now, all who believe in God through Jesus the Christ are freed from bondage to sin and death.

We are reconciled to God through the propitious sacrifice of Christ Jesus on the cross of Calvary and by the grace of God that was, and is, available to us through him. And God has given those who believe in God through Christ Jesus the grace and empowering presence of the Holy Spirit, that we might all again worship and enjoy God forever; and, work to repair the relational bonds that were broken though and because of our sinfulness. This sacrifice is the rationale and model for reparations.

Those who believe in God through Christ Jesus are mystically united in one body, the church. We belong to one another through our baptisms and are reminded, every time we break and eat the bread and drink the cup, that we are called to demonstrate the kind of love from each other that God demonstrated to us through Christ Jesus. We are therefore accountable to God for the way that we treat other members of the body and, indeed, other members of the human family along with God's creation.

Insofar as we are aware of our sinfulness against God and other human beings, we are called by God, through Christ Jesus, to repair the breach through the acknowledgement and confession of sin, repentance, and acts of restoration. Our Lord, Christ Jesus, taught us to do everything in our power to repair broken relationships even when we suspect that our sisters and brothers have something against us (Matt. 5:23–24, NRSV). This requires more than a little humility. Yet by God's grace we possess the capacity to do it by the power of the indwelling Holy Spirit.

We are also called by God, through Christ Jesus, to forgive one another even as we have been forgiven by God. The practice of forgiveness closes the circle of healing and allows for the creation of relationships based on the grace of God, the love of Christ Jesus, and the common humanity of us all. Through forgiveness we release our sisters and brothers from the guilt and shame of their offensive behavior. We set them, and ourselves, free to walk in the newness of life that was so graciously given to us by faith and through the grace of God that was at work in Christ Jesus.

When we remember our past sins, confess, repent, and do all we can to restore those whom we have intentionally or unintentionally harmed, reconciliation is possible. It is then that a renewal in our relationship with God and fellow human beings can begin.

We are called by our confessional standards to be diligent in the renewal of life (The Book of Confessions, PC(USA), The Second Helvetic Confession, 5.101). Zacchaeus' restoration to fellowship with God and community involved both reparations and a determination to sin no more (Luke 19:8, NRSV). Our desire for renewal in God through Christ Jesus requires no less of us. As members of the body of Christ Jesus, we need to be renewed in the power of the Holy Spirit so that we might attain unity and peace with God, address together the hopelessness and despair that exists among our injured sisters and brothers, and heal our wounded souls, accepting the cost of discipleship willingly.

Madrona Presbyterian Church, Mercer Island Presbyterian Church, and the Presbytery of Seattle

The Presbytery of Seattle closed Grace Presbyterian Church, whose membership was African American, in 1953. In the name of integration, members of Grace Presbyterian Church were encouraged to join Madrona Presbyterian Church, whose membership at the time was European American. However, no training or preparation was provided to assist in the process.

As the members of Grace Presbyterian Church began attending the Madrona Church, white members left. When the Grace Presbyterian Church building was sold, the proceeds were not invested in the new venture. Members of Madrona Church began to see that resources promised to Madrona Church were going to a new church development on Mercer Island. The Madrona Church hung on, surviving, at times, the possibility of closure as the membership numbers declined, income dwindled, and the building received only the barest of maintenance.

Recently, the executive presbyter of the Presbytery of Seattle, Boyd Stockdale, after researching records, opened dialogue with Mercer Island Church, the presbytery, and Madrona Presbyterian Church to remedy the decades-old injustice. The result was the beginning of a shared journey of reparation as the Mercer Island Church provided and pledged funds to the Madrona Church.

On World Communion Sunday (October 5, 2003), members of the Madrona and Mercer Island congregations gathered for worship along with representative of the Presbytery of Seattle and members of the Kenyan Community Fellowship of Seattle. Worshipers prayed, sang, and broke bread together. The service involved remembering and repenting. It further involved affirming actions intended to restore the damage to human dignity and the material loss and to repair the moral and spiritual breach caused by past actions and inactions. The service marked a milestone on an ongoing journey of nurturing relationships and working together for healing.

Report and Recommendations on Limited Water Resources and Takings

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), after consultation with the Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL), recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) approve the following:

1. Clarify existing social policy found in Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice, the environmental policy statement adopted by the 202nd General Assembly (1990) (Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 65, 85, 117, 121, 646–90).

a. In general, where water resources are limited, the basic needs of declining species should take priority over out-of-stream and other in-stream users.

b. In general also, the reserved rights of Native Americans to in-stream use of water established by courts and based on treaties that date from the nineteenth century should take priority over out-of-stream and other in-stream users.

c. Giving priority to these two categories of in-stream users does not mean that in conflicts over limited water resources the PC(USA) will always side with these in-stream users. Rather, these are priorities that will presumably hold in most situations of conflict. Each situation will have to be judged on its own merits.

d. The PC(USA) does not at this time take any position on the circumstances under which a holder of water rights should receive compensation from the government where the application of these priorities results in restriction of the holder’s water rights.

2. Declare that it is not appropriate at this time to take a position on the legal resolution of the complex and undeveloped issues raised by governmental restriction of water rights, with regard to the circumstances under which compensation should be paid by the government under the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

3. Rescind, in accordance with the preceding paragraph, Recommendation 2 of Commissioners' Resolution 01-29 on the Klamath Basin Drought approved by the 213th General Assembly (2001). Item 2 reads: "Affirm that the taking of water rights is taking private property and that just compensation is due" (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 503).

4. Direct the Office of the General Assembly to publish the entire "Report and Recommendations on Limited Water Resources and Takings" in the Minutes and place the document as a whole with study guide on the PC(USA)'s Website, distributing it to the presbytery and synod resource centers and the libraries of the theological seminaries, making available a copy for each requesting session or middle governing body; and direct the Stated Clerk to notify the church that it is available on the Website.

5. Commend this report and the background paper in Appendix 1 to governing bodies and congregations, urging that they be used as a basis for study, action, and advocacy on matters of limited water resources and takings.

6. Direct the Office of the General Assembly to consider placing the document, Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice (1990), on the PC(USA)'s Website with the understanding that technological problems or resource limitations may make such placement infeasible.

Rationale

These recommendations and report are in response to the following referral: 2002 Referral: Item 12-05. Overture 02-51. On Developing a Social Witness Policy on "Takings"—From the Presbytery of Baltimore (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 73, 595–96).

Recommendation 1 of Item 12-05 authorized and encouraged the General Assembly Council (GAC), through the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL), to undertake a study in accordance with "Forming Social Policy" of a constitutional law issue concerning the taking of private property. The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution includes the so-called "takings clause" that reads: ". . . nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." The subject of the study would be a particular legal theory put forward by some persons to the effect that any governmental action that restricted private property rights and thereby decreased the value of such rights should be considered a "taking" for which the government would have to pay compensation to the property owner.

Item 12-05 authorized and encouraged presentation of a proposed social witness policy to a future General Assembly "if appropriate." The rationale put forward by the item's sponsoring presbytery noted that a study would not be mandatory, and that church resource issues should be considered in determining whether to undertake such a study.

Item 12-05 was a response to the approval by the 213th General Assembly (2001) of Commissioners' Resolution 01-2. On the Klamath Basin Drought (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 62, 503–4), which itself was a response to the cutting off of water to farmers during a drought in the Klamath River Basin. Commissioners' Resolution 01-29 stated that the General Assembly "affirm[s] that the taking of water rights is taking private property and that just compensation is due" (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 503). Recommendation 2 of Item 12-05, approved by the 214th General Assembly (2002) restricted the application of Commissioners' Resolution 01-29 "to the specific water rights issues of the Klamath Valley Basin."

For several reasons, the ACSWP determined that it would not be wise stewardship of the church's resources to undertake at this time the full study that "Forming Social Policy" would have required for new social policy.

First, the particular legal theory that would be the subject of the study had not been accepted by the courts, nor was there any realistic prospect that it would be accepted. To the contrary, governmental regulation of the use of private property generally has not been held to be a compensable taking unless all or nearly all of the value of the property has been destroyed by the regulation; even then compensation is not always required.

Second, the context in which the General Assembly's interest in this issue arose—the possible obligation of a government to compensate for restrictions on water rights—involved substantial legal complexity and uncertainty. The ACSWP does not believe the PC(USA) is in a position to develop social policy that takes a particular position on what legal rules should govern compensation for restriction of water rights.

Third, ACSWP believed it was possible to provide a useful recommendation to the General Assembly on the social policy issues raised by limited water resources without incurring the expense of a full-blown study. To this end, ACSWP presents a resolution with supporting material on limited water resources and the regulation of water supplies and water rights as a clarification of already established environmental policy.

The ACSWP recognizes that Item 12-05 did not ask for clarification of social policy with regard to limited water resources. Such a recommendation is, however, responsive to the concerns behind Item 12-05 and also is independently appropriate for ACSWP to bring to the General Assembly.

A. Background

1. The Ethic of Ecology and Justice

This resolution is based on the theology, ethics, and social policy stated in the report, Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice, adopted by the 202nd General Assembly (1990). This resolution is an effort to build on that report to keep the environmental policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) current and to address issues that have arisen since the report was adopted.

The theology in the 1990 report is God-centered and speaks of a God who comes to judge the people for tilling without keeping, to deliver the vulnerable earth, and to restore the joy of creation. The theology is neither human-centered nor nature-centered, but deeply concerned about both human beings, other species, and their ecosystems as good creations of God.

Ten years later the theology of the PC(USA) remains God-centered. Presbyterians hold that God created the universe. Presbyterians do not claim to know exactly how this happened, rather however it happened that the God who is revealed in Jesus Christ as love, compassion, and justice was there to behold it and marvel at its goodness.

The rest flows from this. All creatures are good. Humans are created in the image of God with a special dignity that should be respected. This special dignity does not convey moral superiority but represents a call to responsibility, even servanthood, to the rest of creation, which has its own intrinsic value as part of God's created order. Humans are to have dominion, to keep and till the earth as careful stewards, and to enjoy God and the creation forever. This means in today's context to restore, protect, and preserve both human and natural communities. It means connection to the earth, appreciation of God's Spirit in nature, and awe at the wonder of it all. It also means redemption, for humans redemption from sin to respond with love and justice to the neighbor; and for other species freedom from human sin.

To spell out this high calling and to guide it, the 1990 report identified four norms: sustainability, sufficiency, participation, and solidarity. These norms are the foundation of the ethic of ecology and justice that has developed in ecumenical circles over the past twenty-five years. The ethic of ecology and justice is a biblical-, theological-, and tradition-based ethic that addresses human-caused problems that threaten both human and natural communities and considers both human and natural communities to be ethically important. The word ecological raises up other species and their habitats, the word justice points to the distinctly human realm and human relationships to the natural order.

According to the 1990 report:

Sustainability is simply the capacity to continue indefinitely. For eco-justice, sustainability means . . . the capacity of natural systems to go on functioning properly, so that the living creatures that belong to these systems may thrive. As a norm for human behavior, sustainability expresses the meaning of God's call to earth-keeping: Relate to the natural world so that its stability, integrity, and beauty may be maintained.

Sustainability refers, also, to the stability and healthy functioning of social systems or a whole society. Since social systems depend upon natural systems, the former are sustainable only if they permit the health of the latter to continue. . . .

Picking up on our biblical metaphor of tilling and keeping, we may say that sustainability is the capacity of those who till to keep the garden with sufficient care for tilling to continue. But this is not quite adequate for eco-justice. Because the garden is intrinsically good as God's creation, it is to be cherished not only for tilling but for its own sake. Sustainability is the capacity of the natural order and the socioeconomic order to thrive together (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 654, paragraphs 40.657–.659).

With regard to sufficiency, the report has this to say:

Justice . . . insists that all participants be able to obtain a sufficient sustenance. Sufficiency means enough for a reasonable secure and fulfilling life. The imperative of sufficiency as a distinctive norm of justice for our time arises from the salient realities: the poverty which prevails massively in the Third World and plagues significant numbers in rich countries; the severe strains that modernization and industrialization have already put on natural resources and systems; and the certainty that the world's population will swell by additional billions before it stabilizes or drops. In this situation sufficiency for all will be achieved and sustained only if the good things of God's creation are shared according to a keen sense of what is needful (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 656, paragraph 40.675).

On participation, the report says:

In the context of the eco-justice crisis a distinctive meaning of justice that must be stressed is the requirement that economic arrangements provide for inclusive participation. In this context, participation means being included in the social process of obtaining and enjoying the good things of God's creation. Because the Creator's intention is that nature's gifts of sustenance be available to all members of the human family, all have a right and a responsibility to participate, as able, in these arrangements. If any are excluded, something is unacceptably wrong (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 655, paragraph 40.671).

Finally the report speaks to solidarity:

In the face of the widening gap between rich and poor, and the alienation of humankind from nature, God's new doing comes as a call for reconciliation and the achievement of community. The norm of solidarity gives forceful expression to the affirmation of community. Solidarity means strong, vibrant community based on commitment and fidelity. In the context of the eco-justice crisis it embraces ecological, ethical themes of each individual's worth and dignity together with the fundamental interdependence and unity with the Creator's creatures. It affirms that human beings are all members of one human family, sharing common needs and aspirations, making an equal claim for basic sustenance, while belonging also to nature as integral components of one creation (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 656, paragraph 40.680).

Solidarity directs participants in the tasks of keeping and healing to link and stand with three particular sets of companions. First, it leads them to find and cherish immediate companions who share their concern for the liberation of the earth and people. These constitute their community of support and encouragement, enjoyment and persistence. Second, it directs them to stand supportively with those who suffer most from the oppression and poisoning directed against earth and people. And third, solidarity directs concerned people to join forces in broad coalitions to address the various dimensions of the eco-justice crisis (Ibid., pp. 656–57, paragraph 40.682).

2. Fresh Water Resources

Psalm 104 lavishly praises God for the earth's abundant resources. Water is very much in the Psalmist's mind:

You make springs gush forth in the valleys;
 they flow between the hills, giving drink to every wild animal;
 the wild asses quench their thirst.
 By the streams the birds of the air have their habitation;
 they sing among the branches.
 From your lofty abode you water the mountains;
 the earth is satisfied with the fruit of your work. (Ps. 104:10–13, NRSV)

No longer! What was once abundant is now scarce in many locations in the U.S. and even in the hills and valleys of the psalmist's experience. And while the springs still gush forth and the clouds still water the mountains, the human demand for fresh water has drastically reduced the flow between the hills. Fresh water is now in limited supply, and water quality and critical habitat are degraded. Water managers are finding it difficult to allocate the available supply equitably among those who need it and to keep rivers and streams clean enough to allow species that depend on them to thrive.

Their difficulty is exacerbated in the U.S. by the many groups making demands, by the quantity of these demands, and by a history of allocation decisions that all but ignored the needs of aquatic dependent species and marginalized groups. It is further exacerbated by drought and seasonal fluctuations in stream flows and lake levels. It is still further exacerbated by the degradation of ecosystems, the reduction of species diversity, the pollution of water and sediments, the modification of river channels and lands adjacent to lakes and streams, the introduction of nonnative species, and the diversion of water to multiple human uses.

The best way to categorize the many groups making demands on limited water resources is a simple distinction between in-stream and out-of-stream users, recognizing that both are part of a larger ecological system. In the first category are the species that inhabit streams and lakes. Fishers are also in-stream users as are hydroelectric power producers and those who use streams and lakes for recreation. Native Americans are in-stream users for ceremonial and subsistence purposes, but out-of-stream users when they irrigate.

Out-of-stream users include farmers, farm workers, ranchers, residents of towns and cities, miners, loggers, and manufacturers. Among out-of-stream users in semi-arid regions, farmers who irrigate are by far the biggest consumers of water except in large urban areas where municipal and industrial uses sometimes dominate. Out-of-stream users secure their water not only from lakes and streams but also from groundwater. About fifty percent of the U.S. population gets its drinking water from groundwater. Groundwater that feeds lakes and streams is interrelated with surface water. In many areas both are overdrawn and polluted.

Environmentalists as individual users fit into one or more of the above categories, but also play a special role. They claim to represent in-stream species that otherwise would not have a voice in decisions that affect their lives. Government officials who legislate water rules and regulations and manage water allocations form still another group with interests in water supplies.

Problems of water allocation are particularly acute in the semiarid, intermountain western U.S. where years of drought and seasonal fluctuations make it difficult in some years simultaneously to meet the demands of all human users and to preserve fish and other species that depend on aquatic habitats. Conflict is increasingly frequent and sometimes intense, especially between advocates for in-stream users and farmers, whose peak irrigation needs come in the dry summer months when water supplies decrease and fish are particularly vulnerable to low stream flows, high water temperatures, and concentrated pollutants. Complicating the conflict is the uneven enforcement of environmental laws and regulations by water managers and the long delayed recognition of Native American treaty rights. Prejudice against Native Americans, human-centered attitudes toward nature, and resentment of the federal government add partisan fuel to the fire. Outside groups with both related and unrelated political agendas sometimes exploit conflicted situations for their own ends.

The church should be sensitive to these conflicts. Family farmers, agriculture-related businessmen and women, and agricultural workers are the core of many rural congregations. Family farms and businesses, indeed a way of life, are threatened not only by weather and market fluctuations but also by the economic squeeze caused by the shift from family farms to large-scale, often corporate-dominated agriculture. Farmers have a legitimate concern to preserve a way of life that contributes substantially to the world's food supply, the U.S. economy, and American culture.

Farmers' sense of entitlement to water is increased by historical patterns of water allocation. In some cases farmers have paid for the construction of water storage facilities to tap in-stream sources during seasons of high flow. This is generally a sustainable practice that should be encouraged. In other cases, federal, state, and local water managers encouraged farmers to use limited water resources and all but ignored other users. Water managers granted farmers liberal water rights during the twentieth century and in some places entered into compacts with irrigation districts to provide water. For years farmers were first in line for water and grew accustomed to having their water needs met. Some of them came to think of their annual allocation as a right with one primary responsibility, the production of food for other human beings.

In the process of food production, farmers have also put pressure on limited water resources and contributed to habitat degradation and species decline. They are not alone in doing these things. Other human users have contributed significantly, for example, fishers who have overfished and urban users who have demanded water with little concern for conservation. Power producers have erected dams that alter habitat and impede fish runs. The problem of limited water resources and declining watersheds is complex and multifaceted.

The PC(USA) supports sustainable family farms. The policy of the PC(USA) is stated clearly in “We Are What We Eat,” a report approved by the 214th General Assembly (2002) (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 23, 533–59). The church also seeks the equitable distribution of limited water resources. All Presbyterians have a responsibility to minister to hard-pressed farmers and mediate disputes, however difficult those responsibilities are to discharge, when cooperation and sharing give way to animosity, racial division, and conflict.

The PC(USA) also has responsibilities to other groups of water users and to nature. The church has developed a biblically based, environmental policy that seeks justice for both humans and other species. The four norms of sustainability, sufficiency, participation, and solidarity have guided church policy for more than twenty-five years and give considerable weight to the interests of other species. The church in general supports environmental laws and regulations and their enforcement. The church has backed and continues to support the legitimate claims of Native Americans under treaties negotiated with the U.S. government in the nineteenth century. The church recognizes that water allocation decisions, which put irrigators first in line historically, in some cases, neglected the interests and rights of Native Americans.

The U.S. courts have also supported Native American claims. In a 1983 decision (U.S. v. Adair) the 9th Circuit Court held that treaties negotiated in the nineteenth century implied a reserved water right as was necessary to preserve traditional hunting, fishing, and gathering. The court also held that Native American farmers owning land on a former reservation are entitled to water for agricultural needs with the date the suit was brought as their priority date. These claims have and continue to be neglected in water allocation decisions, a neglect that excludes Native Americans from participation. How much water is necessary to provide sufficient water for these purposes is a matter the courts are still deciding in many river basins.

Finally, in assessing its responsibilities to other groups, the PC(USA) needs to consider the contributions of other human groups, both in-stream and out-of-stream users, who have claims on limited water resources and contribute to the pressures on limited water resources. Fishers, for example, are sometimes in conflict over stream flows with farmers who irrigate. Some municipalities covet the water that currently goes to irrigation. The church cannot, of course, settle these conflicts or support the claims of every group that makes demands. Perhaps the best it can do is to set its own priorities in policy statements such as this, offer itself as a vehicle for peaceful conflict resolution, and help those who suffer from the difficult but necessary decisions of water managers and the courts.

Decisions about the equitable distribution of limited water resources are never easy. There are many overlapping governmental jurisdictions and even more private property owners. Mandates governing natural resource agencies conflict. Environmental laws and traditional water allocation practices clash. Some laws have never been tested in the courts. Political pressures are immense. Other species and marginalized groups must now be included.

In general, however, the basic needs of declining species should take priority over out-of-stream and other in-stream users. Where no laws exist to establish this priority, responsible state and federal officials should legislate and enforce laws and regulations that stipulate minimum stream flows, sufficient temperatures, and clean habitat. Governments should create incentives to reward users who improve their practices above what is required by law. In general also, the reserved rights of Native Americans established by the courts and based on treaties that date from the nineteenth century should take priority over out-of-stream users and other in-stream users. Fortunately, meeting the basic needs of declining species will also meet most of the needs of Native Americans.

Giving priority to these two categories of in-stream users does not mean that the PC(USA) will in conflicts over limited water resources always side with these in-stream users. Rather, it sets priorities that will presumably hold in most situations of conflict. Each situation will have to be judged on its own merits. Taking sides should only be a last resort after the parties in conflict have been unable to resolve their own disputes, the church has carefully studied the conflict, and the situation is of sufficient importance to warrant intervention.

In-stream species have priority because extinction is forever, whereas farming and other human uses in specific places are not. Extinction is the “super killing” of an entire species and a show of disrespect for God’s created order wherein other species have intrinsic value. Species extinction is now at unprecedented levels and unless humans self-limit their consumption, the very foundations of agriculture, not to mention the human species itself, erode. (See Overture 01-60. On Preserving Biodiversity and Halting Mass Extinction—From the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley, approved by the 213th General Assembly (2001), Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 56, 473–76.) Finally, degradation and extinction of species take the livelihoods of fishers and Native Americans who are primarily in-stream users.

Giving priority to these two categories of in-stream users also follows from the ethic of ecology and justice with its four norms of sustainability, sufficiency, participation, and solidarity. The PC(USA) has long stood in solidarity with marginalized groups. Native Americans have interests that should be included in decisions that affect their lives. The same goes for other species whose needs for clean and healthy habitats should be respected and included in human decisions. Farming and other human activities are not sustainable when they jeopardize species and degrade ecosystems. Consumption levels in the U.S., including the consumption of water, contribute to habitat degradation and are above what is sufficient or sustainable, widespread poverty notwithstanding. In summary, putting the basic needs of these in-stream users first accords with good stewardship of the environment and justice for humans and other species.

Putting these in-stream users first does not put farmers who irrigate second. Their role in food production is essential, and they need water resources. Rather, all human users are being called to a more equitable distribution of limited water resources and conservation. There will be ample water in most watersheds in years of abundant or average precipitation. The needs of these in-stream users are not unlimited. Conservation and technological improvements will help. Improved water efficiency, switching to less water-intensive crops or varieties, and restraint in granting new water rights will also ameliorate the situation. Improved water quality will help to restore critical habitats.

Nevertheless, giving priority to these in-stream users will hurt some farmers and other human users in certain watersheds in years of drought and in seasons of low stream flow. If nothing else, farmers and other users will face a high degree of uncertainty. Farmers operate on a tight margin, and it is difficult to implement some changes without risking financial loss.

While the church has only meager financial resources, compassion and justice call for responses. Pastors, indeed all Presbyterians, need to attend to the suffering of those who sustain losses. Regional and national bodies of the church should advocate for appropriate forms of assistance. Legislators and water managers need to be responsive to the appeals of farmers. Forms of assistance (such as voluntary land or water rights buy backs, disaster relief, the development of alternative water resources, the provision of new technologies to conserve water and to protect threatened species and aquatic habitat, funds for retraining and relocation, and mediation processes to resolve disputes) are appropriate governmental and community responses. The costs of supporting the common good should not be forced on one group alone. The community, through its institutions, has a responsibility to help shoulder the burden. For their part, urban residents should be aware of their contribution to the problems of limited water resources and environmental degradation through the food they purchase and the water they consume. Public education on water consumption should be a priority.

It is the task of scientists to determine what it takes to sustain in-stream users. The best science available should be the basis for policy decisions about specific streams and lakes. The term “best science” is ambiguous, however, since scientists are not always in agreement on any given topic, and scientific studies are frequently used selectively by the advocates of alternative positions. Scientists cannot solve political and ethical debates. Nevertheless, scientific grounding is essential to wise decision-making. Without it environmental debates degenerate into partisan wrangling.

It is the task of legislators and water managers to use the best scientific analysis available to formulate laws and regulations, to enforce them, and to make decisions about equitable distribution. It is the task of the courts to settle disputes. It is the task of all parties to cooperate in making decisions that avoid recourse to the courts. A cooperative process governed by a spirit of sharing is far better than litigation and force. The church should help model this process by bringing together people of diverse opinions to create a “safe place” dialogue. In so doing the church should encourage local efforts to overcome the fish versus farmers divide that yields little but conflict. The church should also support farmers who have introduced more sustainable practices and seek to bridge the divide by their actions.

3. Water Rights and Takings

The issues of water rights and regulatory takings are exceedingly complex. The church must rely on legal scholars and the courts to sift through the complexities. There are, however, matters of justice to consider. In addition, the 214th General Assembly (2002) directed the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Litigation, to address these issues.

Rights language is one way to speak about justice and equity. The concept of rights came to the fore during the Enlightenment and was given prominence in Europe and the Americas by an emerging commercial class that sought to limit feudal privileges, balance the power of monarchs, and secure political participation for itself. The rising middle class was successful, and, as time passed, other groups claimed rights for themselves and were also included as participants. Today the process of extending rights to marginalized groups continues. Some environmental philosophers and theologians would even extend rights to other species and speak of biotic rights. Clearly human and biotic rights are not the same, however much they may overlap. For example, extending freedom of speech and the right to vote to animals would be absurd. To speak, however, of the right of other species to a healthy and whole habitat and to satisfy their basic needs makes sense.

The spirit of love and justice and the creation of humans in the image of God that give foundation to rights are God-given. The application of rights in specific situations and their extension to different groups are human decisions conditioned by historical circumstances. Rights are intended to protect the legitimate interests of individuals and groups over against the state and other groups. Rights are not absolute. Rights do not give unlimited privilege to the individuals that hold them, however. Rights are limited by the responsibilities of each right holder to respect the same rights in others and to self-limit his or her own claims. They are further limited by the community’s responsibility to promote the common good and to restrain those who seek individual gain at the expense of others and the community as a whole. Finally, different rights occasionally come into conflict and must be adjudicated. In other words, rights limit each other.

Philosophers, theologians, and legal experts have reflected in great depth about the tension between the rights of individuals and provision for the common good. Christians have for a long time both championed the rights of individuals and recognized the community’s right and responsibility to promote the common good. In keeping with the latter, the PC(USA) supports a well-ordered, just, and sustainable community. It participates in community processes and receives benefits. Laws and regulations to protect the environment, to establish land-use planning (zoning), and to preserve important historical and natural places serve both humans and other species.

In the past two decades efforts to enforce environmental laws and regulations have increasingly come into conflict with rights held by individuals. In a few cases enforcement has cost individuals dearly or placed a heavy burden on a few to preserve the common good of a sustainable environment. In the intermountain west of the United States one of the most prominent conflicts today is between farmers with water rights on the one hand and government officials, environmentalists, Native Americans, commercial and sport fishers, and recreational users on the other hand seeking to protect and preserve declining species and ecosystem integrity.

In the process of extending rights to even more groups, water rights were established in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries to prevent conflicts and to reduce the risks of investments in irrigation systems. According to Rick Bastash, an authority on the subject speaking about water rights in Oregon:

A water right is the legal authorization given by the state to a party to use a specific amount of public water in a specific way at a specific location for a specific purpose. It is not a title to the water itself. Only the public owns the water. (Rick Bastash. Waters of Oregon: A Source on Oregon's Water Management. Corvallis: Oregon State University Press, 1998, p. 48.)

Certain rules with local variations govern water rights in the western U.S. They include:

- a. The water granted in a water right must be for beneficial use.
- b. The right attaches to the property and may be sold with it.
- c. "First in time, first in right," that is, earlier rights have priority over rights granted later.
- d. "Use it or lose it," which means the right is forfeited in most states after five years of no use.
- e. Rights are forever.
- f. The water in a right is free.

Court decisions to uphold the treaty rights of Native Americans and legislation, such as the "Endangered Species Act," have in effect extended water rights even further. The treaties reserved to the tribes certain uses of water; and while these reservations were not described as rights, in the present context they are the equivalent of rights. So also with legislation to protect species and their habitats. Having ignored the impact of water diversions on other species, legislators woke up to the threat of extinction. As the decline of species and the degradation of their habitat became increasingly obvious, legislators took steps to protect both, if not extending rights at least recognizing that all species have needs that should be respected. The enforcement of treaties and environmental laws and regulations has occasioned, not caused, conflicts with the water rights of farmers.

It is also important to recognize that legislators enacted water rights laws and regulations in a different historical context. The context has changed dramatically over the past century, yet the laws and regulations have remained rather fixed. Review of existing laws and regulations is overdue. Given the contentious nature of present water allocation decisions, however, the prospect of successful review is not good. Expensive litigation will remain the primary recourse until such time as contention yields to cooperation.

Conflicts over water rights, Native American treaty rights, and environmental legislation have also raised the issue of "takings." The last clause in the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, the so-called "takings clause," reads: "...nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." The intent of this clause is to limit the power of the state to seize property arbitrarily and to protect the interests of property owners. Until the twentieth century, the courts applied the clause only to the physical seizure of property through the government's power of eminent domain.

In 1922, however, the Supreme Court ruled in Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Mahon that in addition some forms of regulation could effectively qualify as a taking of property. This decision opened the door to what has been called regulatory takings but not very wide. The courts have held that a taking has occurred only if the enforcement of a regulation permits little or no economic use. Thus according to the Supreme Court, a taking is a government action that either physically occupies property or removes nearly all its economic value. Short-term loss of income or partial loss of economic value do not usually qualify as a taking under existing court rulings. This narrow definition could change with subsequent rulings, of course, a change strongly endorsed by some property rights advocates.

In the 1990s, property rights advocates and those who wanted to revise or reverse what they considered to be intrusive laws and regulations began lobbying legislatures to open the door wider. They also pressed their case in the courts. These groups sought to understand takings to include compensation to property owners for any possible financial loss from the enforcement of a regulation.

A good example of this comes from the Klamath River basin in southern Oregon when the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation withheld water without advance warning in April 2001 during a severe drought in order to protect three endangered fish species. Farmers who lost significant income and property rights activists claimed regulatory takings. The farmers' claims for compensation were bolstered not only by a loss of income but also by a compact between the Bureau of Reclamation and local irrigation districts to provide water.

Were these claims of takings to be accepted by the courts or a wide open takings provision enacted by legislatures, the cost of preserving critical ecological systems would certainly increase. In an unlikely, worst-case scenario the state might not have sufficient funds to compensate all claims. Added bureaucratic costs would be incurred figuring out the legitimacy of claims. Even more costs might be incurred compensating owners for potential loss of income, for example, future rental income from shopping centers. Government officials would at minimum be reluctant to enforce laws and regulations with such extensive price tags. Such a scenario would effectively eviscerate environmental laws and regulations, not to mention zoning, safety, and historic preservation laws.

These claims involve other problems. While they legitimately express a concern for human freedom, they also reflect in some cases a preoccupation with self- or group-interest. They view land and other species in economic terms and measure their value in terms of money. They assume that economic value should take precedence over other values. They overlook the intrinsic value of the land and other species as creations of God. They ignore hard to quantify use values, such as, life-support, recreational, scientific, aesthetic, historical, symbolic, character-building, and religious values. They also ignore the temporal nature of our land occupancy. Humans are not owners in perpetuity, but merely custodians for a finite lifetime with responsibilities to God, neighbors, and other species. To reduce nature to economic good alone is to enshrine mammon.

Then there are the legal questions involved in these claims. The area of water rights does not provide a good context for considering the extent to which government regulation of the use of property should require compensation to the owner of the property. When, for example, zoning regulations prohibit a landowner from building a strip mall on a parcel of land, the issue is clearly whether the regulation has taken away all or nearly all value of the land. When the government physically appropriates the land to build a road or a post office, the issue is much simpler. The government has physically taken or occupied the land and compensation generally must be paid. If the government, however, restricts an owner of water rights from using water that the owner claims, is that a mere regulation of the water rights? Or is it a physical taking of water to which the water right's owner had an entitlement?

Even if it should be treated as a mere regulation, there is the further question whether the regulation eliminated all or nearly all value of the property. Further still, it would not be clear whether "the property" is the water right as a whole, or the water rights for a given year, or instead the land to which the water rights may be attached. That choice could determine the outcome. Finally, it is not clear that any one approach to the issue of water rights and takings is appropriate given the many situations in which such an issue might arise.

Given these problems and legal questions, it is inappropriate for the PC(USA) to take sides on these claims or to develop social policy that takes a particular position on what legal rules should govern compensation for the restriction of water rights. While the PC(USA) may from time-to-time take sides in future cases of a similar nature based on the priorities established in this resolution, the appropriate place to decide this matter is in the courts. Suffice it to say that the PC(USA) has a stake in laws and regulations that respond to suffering, enhance community life, protect private property, and preserve species and ecosystems.

Not only is it inappropriate to take sides or develop policy, but there are also other and better ways to seek redress in such situations than to claim takings. If the state is concerned about the suffering of farmers in seasons of drought, which it should be, it has the resources to respond. Such claims tie up the courts and perpetuate the adversarial relations that frequently plague water conflicts. They do not get at the real problems of the equitable distribution of limited water resources and the preservation of habitats. They block getting-on with the scientific research that is necessary to understand the complex nature of ecosystems. Only the willingness of those in conflict to sit at the negotiating table in a spirit of compromise will solve these problems. Cooperative processes have worked well in several places and produced equitable outcomes.

In facilitating cooperative processes the church can play a helpful role. Churches are an excellent place for relationship building, information sharing, and compassionate listening. In situations of conflict, Christians should initiate processes where those in conflict can come together in a nonthreatening environment.

Limited Water Resources and Takings

by Robert L. Stivers

1. Introduction

Limited fresh water resources are a worldwide problem. They result not from any reduction in the overall supply of water, but rather from the degradation of watersheds and a dramatic increase in human demand. The increase in demand is a product of an expanding human population, higher per capita consumption in wealthy countries, and the enhanced technical capability to extract water from lakes and streams. Local and regional climate variations and more or less effective management of the water supplies available amplify or modulate these causes from place to place. Problems are particularly acute in arid regions with sizeable human populations and places with significant seasonal fluctuations in rainfall.

In the United States (U.S.) the landmass between the 100th meridian and the Pacific Ocean is generally dry with the exception of mountainous regions and the coast. Seasonal fluctuations with especially dry summers characterize much of the region. In most of the region's river basins humans have withdrawn so much water and so altered the character of watercourses that aquatic dependent species, especially fish, are threatened with extinction. Legislators have responded to this situation with new laws to protect species and their habitats. Water managers have a mixed record of enforcing these new laws and in the process of enforcement have occasionally withheld water allocations to certain users, in particular farmers who irrigate. The withholding of water supplies is a serious problem for farmers and has occasioned intense conflict in several locations.

One such location is the Klamath River basin in southern Oregon and northern California. Irrigators, using water delivery systems built by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, the State of Oregon, and local water districts, annually divert a significant portion of the water from the Klamath River and its tributaries to produce food crops. Irrigators are the single largest out-of-stream users in the watershed.

The basin is normally well watered by winter snows in the Cascade Mountains, but periodic droughts and seasonal fluctuations can severely limit the supply of water. Lake and river levels become dangerously low during the late summer months when the snow pack has melted, streams levels are low, water temperatures are high, and pollutants from agricultural runoff and other sources are most concentrated. The situation is more complex than this, of course. Stream degradation and species decline have multiple causes. Overlapping political jurisdictions, conflicting laws and regulations, differing ways of perceiving the situation, and diverse attitudes toward nature complicate things even more. In spite of these complexities, irrigators are the primary focus of attention, since they divert so much water.

The year 2001 was a drought year in the Klamath basin, not the worst on record but serious nonetheless. In April 2001 the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation announced there would be little or no water available for irrigation. Federal water managers had concluded that three threatened species of fish would be seriously jeopardized if normal diversions were allowed. Since these officials controlled water allocations to about 50 percent of the irrigated land in the region including the most fertile land, the decision promised a huge impact. Some farmers were threatened with at least a year's loss of income and substantial loss of property value due to the uncertainty of future allocations. Farmers rose up in protest. They organized large demonstrations at the point where water is diverted from the river to their fields in the city of Klamath Falls, Oregon. They even took matters into their own hands and illegally opened the gates to release the water.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) entered the picture in June 2001 when two commissioners to the 213th General Assembly introduced a resolution in support of the farmers. The resolution included a deceptively simple statement: "The taking of water rights is the taking of private property." The resolution passed in the waning hours of the assembly without much deliberation.

The statement was deceptive because it seemed to run counter to the church's long-standing policy on the natural environment. It further seemed to put the church on record in support of property right's activists who have been seeking to eliminate environmental laws and regulations in the name of individual freedom. In their view, the enforcement of laws and regulations that occasions the loss of income or property value constitutes a seizure of property without due compensation under the so-called "takings" clause of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution.

Such an interpretation, if accepted, would have widespread implications. It would not only eviscerate environmental laws and regulations but potentially all zoning, safety, and historical preservation laws and regulations. It would run counter to court interpretations that have consistently limited compensation to cases where enforcement of laws and regulations take all or substantially all economic value. It would radically shift the current balance between the protection of individual rights and the pursuit of the common good in the direction of individuals. It is unlikely that the commissioners to the 213th General Assembly (2001) were aware of these and other implications.

Reaction was not long in coming. It took form in an overture to the 214th General Assembly (2002) from the Presbytery of Baltimore calling for a study of the takings issue. The resolution also declared that the action of the 213th General Assembly (2001) applied only to the situation in the Klamath Falls basin and did not establish Presbyterian policy. This resolution passed overwhelmingly and the General Assembly referred the study to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL).

Given the expense of developing a full blown policy statement and the legal complexities of the "takings" issue, ACSWP in consultation with the Advisory Committee on Litigation decided to draft a resolution and report to the 216th General Assembly (2004). The ACSWP considered this route appropriate, reasoning that the problems of limited water resources and the regulation of water supplies and water rights to achieve ecological and social ends constitute a clarification of already establish environmental policy.

The ACSWP further determined that a consultation in Oregon on the basic issues was also appropriate. Such a consultation could tap the expertise that had developed in the Klamath Falls dispute, ensure wide participation of diverse groups, and send a message to a conflicted community with several Presbyterian churches that the larger church is concerned. The consultation was held in Medford, Oregon, on June 13 and 14, 2003, and included a field trip to Klamath Falls. Over forty participants discussed the specific problems in the Klamath River basin as well as the larger issues of limited water resources, water rights, and takings. Participants included members of ACSWP and the ACL; national, state, and local experts; farmers; ranchers; Native Americans; fishers; environmentalists; newspaper reporters; government officials; and members of Cascades Presbytery. Jananne Sharpless of Sacramento, California, and ACSWP chaired the consultation. Jenny Holmes of Portland, Oregon, and Cascades Presbytery, and Tam Moore of Westminster Presbyterian Church in Medford pulled together the participants and made local arrangements. Belinda M. Curry represented the staff of ACSWP. Bob Stivers of Tacoma, Washington, and Olympia Presbytery, drafted a proposal and an invitation for the consultation and agreed to mold the proceedings into a resolution to submit to ACSWP.

2. Presbyterian Environmental Policy

The basis for this resolution on limited water resources and takings is the environmental policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in particular Resolution on Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice adopted by the 202nd General Assembly (1990), Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 65, 85, 117, 121, 646–90. This report begins with a call to restore God's creation and goes on to summarize the crisis of ecology and justice. In Part II the report sets forth the biblical and theological foundations for restoring creation. These reflect a growing body of ecumenical theology calling attention to the resources within Christian traditions that support extending the principle of justice to other species and maintaining the church's long-standing commitment to human justice and the participation of marginalized groups.

Part II also states the basic norms for ecology and justice:

- a. sustainability;
- b. sufficiency;
- c. participation; and
- d. solidarity.

Variations of these four norms have governed ecumenical as well as Presbyterian policy since the mid 1970s and are given further statement below.

Part III reviews existing General Assembly policy. Presbyterian attention to the natural environment dates from the early 1970s and has been given repeated expression in policy statements and resolutions ever since. It is an impressive record of concern equaled by few other traditions. Presbyterians have a right to be proud of this emerging tradition and its dual emphases on the integrity of natural ecosystems and justice in human relationships.

From a review of policy the report moves to address five areas of social policy including one on water quality. The section on water quality is, however, only peripherally related to limited water resources. The report calls for “increased efforts to address the problems of pollution from urban and rural runoff.” This relates insofar as the runoff from irrigated fields and animals grazing near streams further degrades the habitat of in-stream species already stressed by low stream flows, high water temperatures, and other human disturbances.

Several other sections also relate indirectly to this resolution. In a section on renewable resources, the report identifies croplands and fisheries as biological systems strained by “human demands, human numbers, and abusive treatment” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 648, paragraph 40.597).

The report goes on to say that human beings have “demand[ed] too much from natural systems [so that] the abused creation cannot provide the gifts that the Creator intended to be continuously available for the sustenance of all” (Ibid, paragraph 40.599). Specifically related is the following statement on water:

Humans are making excessive demands upon, and doing reckless damage to, the lakes and streams, the ground water, and even the oceans. Poorly planned and inefficient irrigation systems not only waste water and deplete aquifers, but lead to soil degradation from waterlogging and salinization. Industrial discharges, agricultural runoff, and municipal sewage contaminate rivers and lakes. Pesticide residues and landfill leachate seep into ground water (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 649, paragraph 40.602).

On nonhuman creatures the report has this to say:

In the face of a projected doubling of human numbers in four decades or so, the question is not only whether the planet can carry those numbers, but what other creatures it can carry as well. The expansion of the human species threatens the entire realm of animals and plants, the total biotic community interacting with nonliving forces. The essential lesson from the study of ecology is that the individual of whatever species depends on the healthy functioning of its community and that the human community depends upon the vitality and stability of the biotic community. (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 650, paragraph 40.612)

The eco-justice crisis displays the anthropocentric attitude that only human interests really count. As economic development proceeds and cities expand, developers give little attention to the consequences for nonhuman creatures whose habitats are lost or threatened .... (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 650, paragraph 40.615).

With regard to farming, the report cites the 1978 UPCUSA policy statement that advocated the “sharing of costs connected with long-range soil conservation practices,” raised “questions about excess[ive] use of fertilizers and pesticides,” and asked “the government to enact and enforce strict laws protecting surface and underground water, particularly for agricultural use” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 660, paragraph 40.711 ). In addition, there is a lengthy section on sustainable agriculture (Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 662–64, paragraphs 40.723–.729), which it describes as ... a movement, a direction, aiming at an agricultural system that would be

- ecologically sound (suitable to the local environment; protective of the lands regenerative capacity);
- economically viable (allowing farmers a decent livelihood); ...
- humane (supportive of rural communit[ies] and culture[s], quality of life, and the well-being of animals). (Ibid, paragraph 40.724)

It concludes with several recommendations, two of which are relevant.

1. Shift the basic focus of farm policy toward an ecologically, economically viable, and socially sustainable system of food production . . . .
3. Improve the conservation provisions of farm legislation .... (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 663, paragraphs 40.735, 40.737)

In another section on wildlife and wildlands, the report states: “Anyone who would destroy species in the name of development takes, in monstrous arrogance, the prerogatives of God” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 665, paragraph, 40.779). The report recommends:

- Keep[ing] wildlife wild and free.
- Avoid[ing] irreversible change. ...
- Optimiz[ing] natural diversity and natural stability. ...
- Think[ing] of nature as a community more than a commodity. (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 666, paragraph 40.781)

To implement basic policies the report further recommends:

2. Protect[ing] wetlands, showing special concern for critical environments that support internationally migratory wildlife. (Ibid, paragraph 40.783)
5. Provid[ing] interpretation and economic support for those persons whose lives and jobs must be altered in the interest of long-range environmental quality. (Ibid, paragraph 40.786)

The report did not say much directly about limited water resources, water rights, or takings that are the primary subjects of this resolution. These problems were not as prominent a decade ago as they are today. The report does, however, provide the foundation for addressing these problems, and therefore a resolution based on the report and clarifying its policy recommendations is fitting.

3. The Ethic of Ecology and Justice

If human beings are to renegotiate their fit into natural ecosystems before these systems force the issue, a new ethic is needed. Christians have not been silent in this renegotiation. For more than twenty years what is here called the ethic of ecology and justice has been emerging in ecumenical circles. It offers a Christian perspective to guide those who seek changes in the structures of globalization and the basic assumptions that will ground such changes in biblical theology.

a. Justice

The norm of justice used in the title of this ethical perspective is an inclusive concept. Its full meaning is given greater specificity by the four norms of sustainability, sufficiency, participation, and solidarity. Justice is, however, a norm in its own right with a distinct history in Christian ethics and Western philosophy. In Christian traditions justice is rooted in the very being of God. It is an essential part of God's community of love and calls human beings to make fairness the touchstone of social relations and relations to other species and ecosystems. Justice is not the love of Christ (agape). Justice involves a calculation of interests and has a more impersonal quality than love. Nevertheless, justice divorced from love easily deteriorates into a mere calculation of interests and finally into a cynical balancing of interest against interest. Without love inspiring justice, societies lack the push and pull of care and compassion to move them to higher levels of fairness. Love forces recognition of the needs of others. Love judges abuses of justice. Love lends passion to justice. Justice, in short, is love worked out in arenas where the special needs of each individual are impossible to know.

The biblical basis for justice with its special sensitivity for the poor starts with God's liberation of the poor and oppressed Hebrew slaves in Egypt and the establishment of a covenant, one of whose cardinal features is righteousness (Ex. 22:21–24). The biblical basis continues in the prophetic reinterpretation of the covenant (Micah 6:8; Amos 2:6, 8:4–8, 5:11; Isa. 10:1–2; Jer. 22:13–17).

In the Christian Scriptures the emphasis on justice is muted in comparison to the prophets, but the concern for the poor may be even stronger. Jesus himself was a poor man from a poor part of Israel. His mission was among the poor and directed to them (Luke 4:16–20). He blessed the poor and spoke God's judgment on the rich (Luke 6:20–26; Matt.5:1–14).

The early church carried this tradition beyond the time of Jesus. Paul's concern is frequently the weak members of the community. This is his concern as he addresses a question that now seems quaint, eating meat sacrificed to idols (1 Cor. 8). He affirms the new freedom in faith that is one important foundation for political freedom. Freedom is not, however, licensed to ignore or prosecute the weak in the pursuit of one's own consumption.

Paul is even more emphatic on equality, which with freedom is the backbone of the modern concept of justice. His statement on the ideals of freedom and equality are among the strongest in the entire biblical witness (Gal. 3:28). In the Christian community in Jerusalem (Acts 1–5), equality was apparently put into practice and also involved sharing. In this practice early Christians set themselves apart from the prevailing Roman culture.

For the Greeks justice meant "treating equals equally and unequals unequally." This simple statement of the norm of justice hides the complexities of determining exactly who is equal and who is not and the grounds for justifying inequality. It leads in modern interpretations of justice, however, to freedom and equality as measures of justice. It also leads to the concept of equity, which is justice in actual situations where a degree of departure from freedom and equality are permitted in the name of achieving other social goods. So, for example, most societies give mentally and physically impaired individuals extra resources and justify it the name of greater fairness. This is a departure from equal treatment, but not from equitable treatment. The problem, of course, is that self-interested individuals and groups will always ask for departures from freedom and equality and use spurious justifications. This is one reason justice needs love as its foundation and careful scrutiny of claims for justice in practice.

In summary, justice in Christian thought is the social and ecological expression of love and means a special concern for the poor, a rough calculation of freedom and equality, and a passion for establishing equitable human and biotic relationships. The ethical aims of justice in the absence of other consideration should be to relieve the worst conditions of poverty, powerlessness, exploitation, and environmental degradation and provide for an equitable distribution of burdens and costs.

The Bill of Rights in the U.S. Constitution and more generally the various declarations of human rights that have appeared from time to time over the past two hundred years are ways to spell out justice and equity in greater detail and to protect individuals and minority groups against the arbitrary power of the state. Rights are not God-given or inherent in the natural order of things. They are tentative social expressions of justice and a historical testimony to the concern for balancing the well-being of both the community and individuals. They are hard won and express cultural lessons developed over a long period that should be respected.

In other words, rights are not sacrosanct or carved in stone. What has been constructed can be reconstructed as conditions change, albeit usually with some peril. More important, individual rights are limited by responsibilities. The community may with due process and convincing arguments legitimately restrict certain rights in the pursuit of the common good. Rights sometimes conflict and limit each other.

In a situation of limited water resources where available supplies cannot meet the demands of all users, the state also has the responsibility to allocate what it ultimately owns in an equitable fashion to serve community and biotic goods. In some places in some years this may mean withholding the water implied in water rights. The withholding of water should always be a reluctant decision based on calculations of equity, the best scientific knowledge, and applicable laws. It should never be a matter of political expediency, even though there are numerous examples where bias and political pressure have been determining factors.

Communities should never ignore the hardships that result from difficult decisions about the allocation of limited water. Justice as well as Presbyterian policy calls for an equitable distribution of costs and pays special attention to pain and suffering. Communities should support those who lose the most, both human and other species. The exact nature of this support, however, should be determined locally in dialogues between those in positions of responsibility and those affected, or, in the case of other species, those who defend their interests.

Claims of takings in situations where water allocations are withheld and recourse to the courts is necessary to make good on those claims are appropriate only when all or substantially all economic value is lost due to enforcement of laws and regulations. This is as much a pragmatic and legal judgment as it is ethical. The consequences of weakening or eliminating legitimate laws and regulations that promote important community and biotic goods are too severe. Moreover, claims of takings raise economic value out of proportion to other values and the individual out of proportion to the community. Finally, litigation that pits person against person or group against group is no substitute for cooperation. Claims of takings and resort to the courts are poor instruments for helping those in need.

b. Sustainability

Sustainability may be defined as the long-range supply of sufficient resources to meet basic human needs and the preservation of intact natural communities. It expresses a concern for future generations and the planet as a whole, and emphasizes that an acceptable quality of life for present generations must not jeopardize the prospects for future generations.

Sustainability is basically good stewardship and is a pressing concern today because of the human degradation of nature. It embodies an ongoing view of nature and society, a view in which ancestors and posterity are seen as sharing in present decisions. The present generation takes in trust a legacy from the past with the responsibility of passing it on in better or at least no worse condition. A concern for future generations is one aspect of love and justice. Sustainability precludes a short-sighted stress on economic growth that fundamentally harms ecological systems and any form of environmentalism that ignores human needs and costs.

There are several significant biblical and theological foundations for the norm of sustainability. The doctrine of creation affirms that God as Creator sustains God's creation. The creation is also good independently of human beings (Genesis 1). It is not simply there for human use, but possesses an autonomous status in the eyes of God. The goodness of matter is later picked up in Christian understandings of the incarnation and the sacraments.

Psalm 104 is a splendid hymn of praise that celebrates God's efforts at sustainability. Similarly, Psalm 145 rejoices in the knowledge that God gives "them their food in due season" and "[satisfies] the desire of every living thing" (Ps.145:15, 16).

The doctrine of creation also emphasizes the special vocation of humanity to assist God in the task of sustainability. In Genesis the first creation account describes the responsibility of stewardship in terms of “dominion” (Gen. 1:28), and the second creation account refers to this task as “to till it and keep it” (Gen. 2:15). In both cases the stress is on humanity’s stewardship of God’s creation.

The covenant theme is another important biblical and theological foundation for the norm of sustainability. The Noachic covenant (Gen. 9) celebrates an everlasting covenant between God and every living creation of all flesh that is on the earth. The biblical writer repeats this formula several times in subsequent verses, as if to drive the point home. The text demonstrates God’s concern for biodiversity and the preservation of all species (Gen. 9:16).

In Romans 8:18, the whole creation suffers and in 8:22 groans in travail. But suffering, according to Paul, does not lead to despair. “For the creation waits with eager longing for the revealing of the children of God” (Rom. 8:19), and in this hope we are saved (Rom. 8:24). Suffering, as in the suffering of Jesus Christ on the cross, points beyond to the hope that is already partially present. Part of this hope is a return to the good stewardship of Genesis 1 and 2 before the Fall in Genesis 3.

c. Sufficiency

The norm of sufficiency emphasizes that all forms of life are entitled to share in the goods of creation. To share in the goods of creation in a Christian sense, however, does not mean unlimited consumption, hoarding, or an inequitable distribution of the earth’s goods. Rather it is defined in terms of basic needs, sharing, and equity. It repudiates wasteful and harmful consumption and encourages humility, frugality, and generosity.

This norm appears in the Bible in several places. As the people of God wander in the wilderness after the Exodus, God sends enough manna each day to sustain the community. Moses instructs the people to “gather as much of it as each of you need” (Ex. 16:16). The norm of sufficiency is also integral to the set of laws known as the jubilee legislation. These laws fostered stewardship of the land, care for animals and the poor, and a regular redistribution of wealth. In particular the jubilee laws stressed the needs of the poor and wild animals to eat from fields left fallow every seven years (Ex. 23:11). All creatures were entitled to a sufficient amount of food to live.

In Christian Scriptures sufficiency is linked to abundance. Jesus says: “I came that [you] may have life, and have it abundantly” (John 10:10). Jesus rejected the notion, however, that the good life is to be found in the abundance of possessions (Luke 12:15). Instead, the good life is to be found in following Christ. Such a life results not in the hoarding of material wealth but rather in its sharing so that others may have enough.

The norm of sufficiency is also supported by biblical and theological understandings of wealth, consumption, and sharing. Two general and not altogether compatible attitudes dominate biblical writings on wealth and consumption. On the one hand there is a qualified appreciation of wealth, on the other a call to freedom from possessions that sometimes borders on deep suspicion. The Hebrew Scriptures generally take the side of appreciating wealth, praising the rich who are just and placing a high estimate on riches gained through honest work.

Both sides are found in the teachings of Jesus. The announcement of the coming community of God carries with it a call for unparalleled righteousness, freedom from possessions, and complete trust in God. The service of God and the service of riches are incompatible (Matt. 6:24; Mark 8:36, 9:43–48, 10:17–25; Luke 12:15, 8:14, 11:18–23, 19:1–10). Jesus himself had no possessions and prodded his disciples into the renunciation of possessions and what later has been called “holy poverty,” that is, poverty that is freely chosen as a way of life (Matt. 8:20; Mark 1:16, 6:8f.; Luke 9:3, 10:4).

On the other side Jesus took for granted the owning of property and was apparently supported by women of means (Luke 8:2). He urged that possessions be used to help those in need (Luke 6:30, 8:2f., 10:38f.). He was fond of celebrations, talking often about feasts in the community of God.

The biblical witness on consumption follows much the same pattern. The basic issue has been between self-denial and contentment with a moderate level of consumption. The side of self-denial evolved into the monastic movement of later ages. The way of moderation is expressed well in 1 Timothy 6:6–8: “There is great gain in godliness with contentment; for we brought nothing into the world, and cannot take anything out of the world; but if you have food and clothing, with these we shall be content.”

Sufficiency and sustainability are linked, for what the ethic of ecology and justice seeks to sustain is the material and spiritual wherewithal to satisfy the basic needs of all forms of life. They are also linked through the increasing realization that present levels of human consumption, especially in affluent countries, are more than sufficient and in many respects are unsustainable. Only an ethic and practice that stresses sufficiency, frugality, and generosity will ensure a sustainable future.

Finally, the norm of sufficiency offers an excellent example of how human ethics is being extended to nature. The post World War II stress on economic growth has been anthropocentric. Economists and politicians have been preoccupied by human sufficiency. The anthropocentric focus of most Christian traditions reinforced this preoccupation.

With increasing environmental awareness, however, this preoccupation no longer seems appropriate. And while other species are not equipped to practice frugality or simplicity, indeed to be ethical at all in a human sense, the norm of sufficiency does apply to humans in how they relate to other species. To care is to practice restraint. Humans should be frugal and share resources with plants and animals because they count in the eyes of God. All of creation is good and deserves ethical consideration. The focus on sufficiency is part of what it means to practice justice.

d. Participation

The norm of participation likewise stems from the affirmation of all forms of life and the call to justice. This affirmation and this call lead to the respect and inclusion of all forms of life in human decisions that affect their well-being. Voices should be heard, and, if not able to speak, which is the case for other species, then humans will have to represent their interests when those interests are at stake. Participation is concerned with empowerment and seeks to remove the obstacles to participating in decisions that affect lives.

The norm of participation is also grounded in the two creation accounts in Genesis. These accounts emphasize the value of everything in God's creation and the duty of humans to recognize the interest of all by acting as good stewards. Through their emphasis on humanity's creation in the image of God, the writers of Genesis underline the value of human life and the equality of women and men.

The prophets brought sharp condemnation upon kings and people of Israel for violating the covenant by neglecting the interests of the poor and vulnerable. They repudiated actions that disempowered people through the loss of land, corruption, theft, slavery, and militarism. The prophets spoke for those who had no voice and could no longer participate in the decisions that affected their lives (Amos 2:6–7; Isa. 3:2–15; Hos. 10:12–14).

With Jesus comes a new emphasis, the kingdom or community of God (Mark 1:14–15). While the community of God is not to be equated to any community of human beings, it nevertheless is related. It serves as a general model for human communities and is to some degree realizable, although never totally.

The community of God has its source in a different kind of power, God's power of love and justice. This power alone is capable of producing genuine and satisfying human communities and right relations to nature's communities. The community of God cannot be engineered. Technology, material consumption, and economic growth may enhance human power, but offer little help in developing participatory communities. Reliance on these powers alone can in fact make matters worse by creating divisions.

The concern for the poor evident in the Gospels is another support for the norm of participation. Without some semblance of justice there can be little participation in community. Extremes of wealth and poverty and disproportions of power create an envious and angry underclass without a stake in the community. Equality of worth, rough equality of power, and political freedom are prerequisites for genuine communities.

Achieving rough equality and freedom and participatory communities is difficult, the more so in industrialized societies even with their full range of communications. A multitude of decisions each requiring expert technical judgments and having wide-ranging consequences must be made in a timely way. Popular participation in decisions, especially when there is conflict as there is in environmental disputes, can paralyze essential processes. Expedience often results in the exclusion of certain voices and interests. Impersonal, functional ways of relating become easy and further reduce participation. The norm of participation calls for a reversal of this trend. At minimum it means having a voice in critical decisions that affect one's life.

Finally, there is the difficult problem of how to bring other species and ecosystems into human decision-making. In one sense they are already included since there is no way to exclude them. Humans are inextricably part of nature, and many human decisions have environmental consequences that automatically include other species and ecosystems. The problem is the large number of negative consequences that threaten entire species and systems and ultimately the human species, for humans are dependent on other species and functioning ecosystems. The task is to reduce and eliminate where possible these negative consequences. One reason is obviously pragmatic. Humans are fouling their own nests. Beyond this anthropocentric reason, however, it helps to see plants, animals, and their communities as having interests that humans should respect. They have a dignity of their own kind. They experience pleasure and pain. The norm of participation should be extended to include these interests and to relieve pain, in effect to give other species a voice. Humans have an obligation to speak out for other forms of life that cannot defend themselves.

e. Solidarity

The norm of solidarity reinforces this inclusion as well as adding an important element to the inclusion of marginalized human beings. The norm of solidarity emphasizes the kinship and interdependence of all forms of life and encourages support and assistance for those who suffer. The norm highlights the communal nature of life in contrast to individualism and encourages individuals and groups to join in common cause with those who are victims of discrimination, abuse, and oppression. Underscoring the reciprocal relationship of individual welfare and the common good, solidarity calls for the powerful to share the plight of the powerless, for the rich to listen to the poor, and for humanity to recognize its fundamental interdependence with the rest of nature. The virtues of humility, compassion, courage, and generosity are all marks of the norm of solidarity.

Both creation accounts in Genesis emphasize the profound relationality of all of God's creation. These two accounts point to the fundamental social and ecological context of existence. Humanity was created for community. This is the foundation of solidarity. While all forms of creation are unique, they are all related to each other as part of God's creation.

Understood in this context and in relation to the concept of stewardship in the Gospels, the imago dei tradition that has its origins in Genesis also serves as a foundation for solidarity. Creation in the image of God places humans not in a position over or apart from creation but rather in the same loving relationship of God with creation. Just as God breathes life into the world (Gen. 7), humanity is given the special responsibility as God's stewards to nurture and sustain life.

In their descriptions of Jesus' life and ministry, the gospels provide the clearest examples of compassionate solidarity. Jesus shows solidarity with the poor and oppressed; he eats with sinners, drinks from the cup of a gentile woman, meets with outcasts, heals lepers, and consistently speaks truth to power. Recognizing that Jesus was the model of solidarity, Paul used the metaphor of the body of Christ to emphasize the continuation of this solidarity within the Christian community. Writing to the Christians in Corinth, Paul stresses that by virtue of their baptisms they are all one "in Christ." Thus if one member suffers, all suffer together; if one member is honored, all rejoice together (1 Cor.12:26). It would be hard to find a better metaphor to describe the character of compassionate solidarity. The implication is clear. Christians are called to suffer with each other and the rest of the creation, to change their ways, and to enter a new life of solidarity and action to preserve and protect the entire creation.

4. Conclusion

The problems associated with limited water resources and their equitable distribution are part of a larger whole. In the past two hundred years humans have developed powerful technologies to wrest resources from nature to improve the material conditions of human life. Improvements have been spectacular.

Now on the back of this good rides increased materialism, ecological degradation, and new forms of injustice. The present task is to orient these technologies to sustainable and sufficient ends and to balance the power of those who own and manage these technologies. Issues of limited water resources, water rights, and takings are only one part of this larger task. In setting policy the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should not lose sight of the larger task as it focuses on these issues.

Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do the following:

1. Approve the Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States, and call upon the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its governing bodies to take the following actions:

a. Advocate the establishment by law of a comprehensive legalization program for undocumented persons already living and working in the United States.

b. Advocate the reform of current immigration policies and procedures to ensure a more timely and humane process, with special attention to family reunification and to those persons who have been waiting for their immigrant visas and for naturalization.

c. Adamantly oppose the exploitation of any and all workers as a violation of the humane and just treatment due to all children of God.

d. Join with interfaith and secular organizations that are working for comprehensive legalization.

e. Direct the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to communicate the above actions to the president of the United States, members of the United States Congress, the United States Customs and Immigration Service (USCIS), and the national and international ecumenical organizations to which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) relates.

2. Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC), through its Ministries Divisions, and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to do the following as they relate to their respective areas of jurisdiction:

a. Establish a position in the Office of the General Assembly staffed by an attorney with current relevant information on immigration and visa issues for the purpose of providing reliable advice and counsel to presbyteries and pastors whose members have immigration problems.

b. Name a point of coordination for all ministry work related to racial ethnic and immigrant church growth and evangelism so that work that now crosses divisional lines can be better coordinated and focused in support of the Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Evangelism and Church Growth Strategy approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998).

c. Establish an Immigration Sunday on the church calendar, in consultation with Mission Education and Promotion.

d. Reaffirm the General Assembly policy on “Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounter with New Neighbors” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 28–30; 32; 353–355).

e. Direct the Office of the General Assembly to publish the entire report in the Minutes and place the document as a whole with study guide on the PC(USA)’s Website, distributing a copy to the presbytery and synod resource centers and the libraries of the theological seminaries, and making available a copy for each requesting session or middle governing body; and direct the Stated Clerk to notify the church that it is available on the Website.

Rationale

This report and its recommendations are in response to the following referral: Commissioners’ Resolution 01-27. On Full Legalization for Immigrants in the United States of America (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 62, 502).

I. Introduction

A resolution team was appointed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to draft a resolution responding to a referral from the 213th General Assembly (2001) calling for the “full legalization of immigrants in the United States of America.” The resolution team was asked to bring a draft to the committee’s meeting in January 2004.

The resolution team was composed of Presbyterian clergy and laity from diverse geographical areas and social locations. Only one was a Native American, a Navajo. All of the others had immigrant roots from many locations over varied spans of time. Five members were recent immigrants, having come to the U.S. from Haiti, Honduras, Lebanon, South Korea, and Venezuela. Team membership included such specializations as immigration law, Christian ethics and immigration issues, and national and international refugee and immigration service work. The members of the team included: Donna C. Bradley, In Soon Chi, Jacqueline Cho, Jonas Georges, Moufid Khoury, Susan Krehbiel, Sarah Barron LaBadie, James Hickson Lee, Adan Alexander Mairena, Ricardo Moreno, Kerri Sherlock, Sharon Stanley, and Trina Zelle.

Staff to the team were: Belinda M. Curry, associate for Policy Development and Interpretation for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy; Angel Suarez-Valera, associate for Immigrant Groups Ministries-USA; John Robinson, associate for Refugee Ministry and Government Relations of the Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Program; Catherine Dodson, young adult intern for the Presbyterian Washington Office; and Hector Rodriguez, associate for Hispanic Congregational Enhancement. Dana Wilbanks served as consultant and primary writer.

Most of the resolution team met October 16–19, 2003, in Niagara Falls, New York, along the U.S./Canada border. As part of its agenda, the team visited a program in Buffalo, named Vive la Casa, which assists asylum seekers to obtain safe haven. This was a profoundly moving experience for everyone. Vive provides a place for asylum seekers to stay for several weeks with three meals a day and overnight lodging.

As well as providing temporary hospitality, Vive gathers information from the asylum seekers that can be helpful as they make their claim. Vive works closely with Canadian officials in ways that help to ensure humane treatment and to expedite the processing of the asylees' claim. Team members were particularly distressed by the differences in treatment asylum seekers receive from U.S. officials compared to Canadian officials. Few applications are approved on the U.S. side, and asylum seekers receive little encouragement or assistance in making their claims. In Canada, however, the right to seek asylum is more consistently honored, even as Canada's practice is far from perfect. We were told, however, that Canada may not be able to accept as many asylees in the future due to changes in agreements with other countries. One important consequence of this development is that more asylum seekers will remain in the United States with a desperate need for safe haven.

The team prepared a content outline for its report. The writer prepared a draft from the outline, and the draft was discussed in a conference call on January 6. Revisions were made in the draft and the report was forwarded to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy for its consideration and action.

II. Pastoral Context

A Presbyterian elder who is an immigrant from Venezuela, Ricardo Moreno, tells the stories of two parishioners in a congregation. Rosa (not her real name) is a sixteen-year-old with a 3.5 grade point average in high school. Yet she will not be able to go to college because she and her parents are undocumented, and she cannot obtain in-state tuition rates or state scholarships. Her mother is a maid and her father is a cook. What would we advise that Rosa do?

Arturo (not his real name) worked primarily as a day laborer and had started attending a congregation. Both he and his wife are undocumented. His wife is sick at home, and they are living in a one-room apartment. While he was moving a refrigerator in a temporary job, he broke his leg. Although he was able to receive emergency care, he is not able to receive the long-term therapy he will need in order to be able to work again. What would we advise that Arturo and his wife do?

Another story the committee heard was about a recently established Presbyterian congregation of new immigrant Christians. Initially, they had formed themselves into a fellowship that was accepted by one of our presbyteries. Within three years, they had hired a pastor and grew in membership. They had not received financial assistance from the denomination. At the time they were received as a PC(USA) congregation, they had an active membership of 110. In a confidential conversation with the pastor, he reported that 65 percent of the membership was composed of undocumented immigrants.

These stories remind us that the subject of "undocumented workers" often hides the human realities of people's lives. The stories also reveal that undocumented workers are not simply "out there" but are in our churches and in our communities. The 208th General Assembly (1996) approved "the goal of increasing the racial ethnic membership to 10 percent of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) membership by the year 2005, and to 20 percent by the year 2010" (Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Evangelism and Church Growth Strategy Report, Minutes, 1998, Part

I, pp. 89–90, 406–19). As the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to increase its diversity and expand its ministries to racial, ethnic, and cultural minorities, we find that increasing numbers of immigrant workers are present in our midst. Our friendship with these neighbors can become a window to a deeper realization of the cruelties and vulnerabilities many immigrants experience in the U.S.

The church is called to witness to the reconciliation that Christ brings to the world. This is no cheap covering over of divisions and differences. Instead, reconciliation points to a dynamic unity of richly diverse humankind in which justice is established and each one is treasured as a gift of the Creator. General Assembly policies consistently emphasize that the “confession of Jesus Christ as Lord transforms ‘strangers’ into neighbors who are welcomed into our communities” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 353, a.(3)).

On September 11, 2001, residents of the U.S. experienced the insecurities brought by terrorism with unprecedented vividness. Sometimes we fail to recognize that many of the world’s peoples live with these realities every day of their lives. Indeed the pervasiveness of violence in one form or another has a great deal to do with the massive movement of people all over the world—for safety, for livelihood, for their families’ future. Furthermore we need to become aware that we unthinkingly accept the profiling of Arab and Muslim Americans and put them in great difficulty because of our societal concern for security. Indeed none of us is truly secure until all are secure.

In recent years the General Assemblies have affirmed a set of theological principles and policy principles that have guided the response of previous assemblies to immigration and refugee issues (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 364–71). They have called on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to open itself to the transformation God has in store by encountering more purposefully our new immigrant neighbors (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 365). In 2003, the General Assembly sharply criticized United States’ border policies for causing great human suffering (Overture 03-14. On the Crisis of Migrant Workers Deaths in the Borderlands—From the Presbytery of de Cristo, Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 39, 613–14).

This resolution on the legalization of undocumented workers responds to the challenges presented by large numbers of these workers in the United States. While the issues are complex and no policy response is without its weaknesses, the current situation has become intolerable. Both pro-immigration and anti-immigration activists agree that the current policy is not working. The immigration system is broken and something must be done. The resolution offers a way to respond that is consistent with General Assembly actions over many years.

III. Interpreting the Issues

Persons who are living and working in the United States without legal authorization are often referred to as “illegal aliens.” Instead, General Assemblies have consistently adopted the term “undocumented workers.” This change in wording is crucial. These immigrants are persons bearing the image of God, and the vast majority have come to the U.S. to work. Our language needs to reflect the Christian belief “in the intrinsic worth of each human as a person made in the image of God” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 353, a.(2)).

It is very difficult to know how many undocumented workers are in the U.S. since, by definition, they are not counted. Estimates are generally somewhere between nine to fifteen million. These persons are responding both to internal conditions in their home countries and to the need in the U.S. for low-wage labor. Immigration experts often call this the push-and-pull factor. It is important to recognize in this analysis that undocumented workers are not “forcing themselves” on a reluctant host society. Their labor is needed and desired by employers and by consumers.

Moreover, what is happening in the United States reflects a worldwide movement of huge numbers of people, largely from the south to the north. Some are moving because of well-founded fears of persecution (refugees). Others are moving because they do not have the jobs and life opportunities in their home countries that provide a realistic hope for a better future for themselves and their families. While many undocumented persons cross the border into the U.S. without legal authorization, there are also many who enter the U.S. legally with a valid visa but stay after the time has expired.

A. What Is the Situation Like for Undocumented Persons?

One important reason for the growing support for undocumented workers is the injustices and vulnerabilities these persons experience. During the summer of 2003, the “Immigrant Workers Freedom Ride” traveled across the U.S. from many different cities to Washington D.C. to generate support for documented and undocumented workers’ rights.

Undocumented immigrants constitute an underground labor force. The workers must keep a very low profile; otherwise they might be exposed and subject to deportation. They cannot afford to confront unjust treatment by employers, and they have virtually no rights they can appeal to in order to pursue cases of mistreatment. Yet they are working. They are contributing their labor, paying their taxes, and purchasing goods. The vast majority are law abiding. Those with children send them to schools. Family values are exceedingly important to them.

Undocumented workers often fill particularly “undesirable” jobs that current residents avoid. They are paid at the lowest end of the wage scale. Many employers are reasonably fair and humane. In fact, some develop strong personal ties to these workers. Still there are others that take advantage of the workers’ legal vulnerability by threats, imposing excessive demands and withholding portions of even their minimal wages.

Workers are often separated from their families with little chance to be reunited soon. Many are subjected to implicit as well as explicit racism. They have access to emergency health care but not long-term treatment, even though they may have injuries related to their jobs. They cannot organize with others to protest unjust treatment or to petition for changes in their work situation. They do not receive benefits that other workers receive. Their undocumented status puts them at considerable jeopardy and in abject subordination even as they are doing productive labor and contributing to the U.S. economy.

One crucial practice of justice is to correct the abuses occurring in our midst. The awful conditions that are experienced by undocumented workers are not intolerable to them because they are desperate for the income. But these abuses should be regarded as intolerable by others of us. Undocumented workers are put in the position of a servant class. Michael Walzer, a political philosopher, asserts that to use a person’s labor without making available the full rights of citizens is akin to tyranny (Spheres of Justice, Basic Books, 1983, pp. 56–61).

B. Contributions to the U.S.

Undocumented immigrants bring a great deal that is positive to our communities. This needs to be acknowledged and affirmed as we consider immigration reform. It is well known that immigrants are hard working risk-takers who have endured a great deal to emigrate to the U.S. It is often extraordinary what these immigrants have to deal with in this new land. Yet they persist with tenacity and courage in the face of great difficulties that would discourage many of the rest of us. They bring the gifts of their identities and cultures, which often include prevailing through experiences of war, persecution and tyranny.

They contribute to the economy through their labor. They pay taxes. They have a strong commitment to their children and to families. Some of their children excel in school and would like to be able to go to college. They sometimes organize new business activities that help to revitalize local economies. They are living with us and among us in our various communities. The immigrant success stories are still being lived out over time. General Assemblies have referred to immigrants as gifts of God to our society as well as to the church (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 365). These gifts are tangible in terms of the contributions they are making, often without recognition.

Persons who have been living in our communities and participating in a responsible way are, morally speaking, already members of our society. Membership is at its heart relational in character. When persons live and work as citizens do, they are in fact members even if their relationship to the community has not been formally established. The de facto membership of undocumented immigrants should be acknowledged and legalized.

C. Immigration Law

United States immigration policy is one of selective admission. Through our legal immigration system, U.S. citizens and lawful permanent residents may petition for close family members. Most immigrants are admitted in the family unification category; 480,000 family-based immigrants may be admitted each year. United States employers may also sponsor immigrants. Generally, U. S. employers must prove that no U.S. worker could fill the position. A certain number are authorized to immigrate each year. Like the family-based category, employment-based immigration is also limited numerically: only 140,000 persons per year may be admitted for purposes of employment. The U.S. also admits a very limited number of refugees (persons fleeing persecution) each year. Thus, immigrants may come to the U.S. through very limited channels. Individuals, families, or churches cannot “sponsor” an immigrant unless the individual is a close family member, potential employee, or refugee/asylee.

Currently, there are long backlogs in both the family-based and employment-based immigration categories. For example, a U.S. citizen seeking to bring his adult son or daughter to the U.S. from Mexico can expect to wait approximately ten years for an immigrant visa. A lawful permanent resident seeking to bring her spouse and children to the U.S. should expect to wait about five years. The long waits for immigrant visas have led many immigrant advocates to call for an increase in the numbers of immigrants permitted into the U.S. each year.

Undocumented immigrants who are present in the U.S. without a visa or who entered the U.S. illegally generally cannot change to a legal status while remaining in the U.S. In addition, undocumented immigrants who leave the U.S. and then seek to return on a legal visa may not be permitted to enter for a period of three to ten years and sometimes may never again be permitted to enter legally. Because of this legal predicament, many undocumented immigrants choose to remain in the U.S. “below the radar.” In the past, Congress has created laws to allow undocumented immigrants to “legalize” their status. These laws have always been temporary: the window of time for “legalizing” status is always limited. Currently, there is no law in place to allow a new immigration applicant to “legalize” his or her status.

The U.S. government allocates significant resources to enforcement of the nation’s immigration laws. There are three primary mechanisms of enforcement. The first mechanism, border controls, was an issue addressed by the 215th General Assembly (2003). In this action, the General Assembly declared its opposition to “Operation Gatekeeper” and other strategies of enforcement that have had disastrous consequences for Mexican migrants and Hispanic peoples living along the border (Overture 03-14. On the Crisis of Migrant Worker Deaths in the Borderlands—From the Presbytery of de Cristo, Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 39, 613–15). Second, employers are required to make sure employees are legally eligible to work. However, employers cannot always tell which documents are authentic. Third, undocumented immigrants may also be located through the criminal justice system. None of the enforcement methods are full proof and all of the methods have some negative impact on immigrant communities.

Persons who are in the U.S. without documentation are subject to deportation or voluntary return to their home country. The few who are able to return voluntarily are not prohibited from applying for legal immigrant admission to the United States, though the backlog of applicants makes this prospect illusory.

D. Policy Developments

In recent years, a number of proposals for immigration reform have been introduced. Most reform measures focus on the need to make the border region safer for Mexicans who want to emigrate, the need for some kind of legalization program for undocumented workers in the United States, and the need for opening channels through which additional Mexicans could work legally in the U.S. These discussions reveal the considerable discontent with the current law and the widespread support for something different, even among persons with widely different political points of view.

Some cities and states have taken initiatives to work with Mexican consulates to provide identification papers for undocumented workers from Mexico. For example, these I.D.s could be used as the basis for securing driver’s licenses. This is a recognition that the security of the society as well as the safety of the immigrants themselves would be better served by acknowledging and formalizing their presence.

When faced with the implications of strictly enforcing the current law, the public time after time favors making exceptions or practicing flexibility of one kind or another. Does the public want an undocumented high school honor graduate to be deported? No. Does the public want undocumented restaurant and hotel workers to be deported en masse? No. Does the public want seasonal low-wage resort workers to be unavailable? No. Whatever the merits of the existing immigration policy might be, the will to enforce it has largely collapsed.

A comprehensive legalization program makes it possible to clear the slate and to implement a different approach that will respond better to the dynamics of migration in today's world and to the specific needs of migrants, employers, and communities. It is time to face the reality honestly rather than intentionally ignore it and leave undocumented workers in the underground world of invisibility where they are deprived of their rights.

Prior to September 11, 2001, Presidents Bush and Vicente Fox seemed close to reaching an agreement about immigration reform. On January 7, 2004, President Bush returned to this pressing issue with a major policy presentation. The president recognized that the current immigration system is inhumane and is not enforceable. The centerpiece of his proposal is a greatly expanded "guest worker" program that would enable undocumented workers to become eligible to work legally for a three-year period. The workers must be employed and sponsored by their current employers. During this time, the workers would be free to travel freely and to live with their spouses and minor children. The three-year period would be renewable but could not be extended indefinitely. "Guest workers" would be eligible to apply for permanent residence but only through the existing immigration admissions system.

While this proposal recognizes the need for major reform, it is an unsatisfactory response to the status of undocumented workers. Many of these workers have lived and worked in the U.S. for years. Under the president's proposal, they would have only a remote chance to become permanent residents and citizens. By becoming "guest workers," they could be forced to return home after three years regardless of their community ties and significant contributions. While friendly to employers' needs for immigrant labor, the proposal is harsh to the workers and exceptionally complicated to administer. A humane and just policy requires a comprehensive and realistic path to legal permanent residency and citizenship, rather than a second-class population of American workers.

E. Response to Concerns and Questions

Proposals about comprehensive legalization are being made in a social and political climate greatly impacted by September 11, 2001, and its aftermath. Anxieties and fears have been intensified. Newcomers are regarded with greater suspicion. It is important to address these concerns. An important dimension of a Christian response is theological. That is, an obsessive concern with security can never be fully satisfied, and it can inhibit us from receiving the stranger as a neighbor whom we are called to love. Our only true security is to be found in God, not in constructing walls that separate us from others.

Is our society being swamped by newcomers? No. For one thing, the undocumented workers are already here and living among us. They are gradually being incorporated and so do not represent a large additional population. And this incorporation continues to be remarkably successful over time. In this resolution, we are primarily concerned with what response to make to those who are already here. Immigrants do indeed present challenges to host societies. But these challenges are also opportunities to continue the primarily positive story of immigration in the shaping of a multicultural and multiracial United States.

Would a legalization program signal disrespect for law? There is no question that the current law is being ignored by many, not because they have a thoroughgoing disrespect for the rule of law, but because they no longer have confidence in the justice and effectiveness of this law. When the law no longer persuades, then it is more prudent to change the law than to enforce it more vigorously. Adherence to law rests in the final analysis on the consent of the people. A fresh start is required as a prelude to a new law that better responds to the dynamics of migration and that elicits the support of the American people.

Is legalization fair to those who have been waiting for years to be admitted legally? In a certain sense, it is not fair to them. But how is this best corrected? Realistically, it is not plausible to deport undocumented immigrants and then bring in those who have been waiting for admission. Moreover, it is quite likely that many of them would not want to work in the jobs that undocumented immigrants have been filling. Again, it is better to look in a fresh, humane, and realistic way at the need of the U.S. for immigrant labor and the best ways to fulfill this need.

The above question helps to direct our attention to the need for new approaches to the unification of families. Too many families have been separated for too long. A restructuring of the family preference category should be given a high priority in comprehensive reform of U.S. immigration policy.

IV. Biblical and Theological Basis

As Christians we seek to respond to the challenges and opportunities of immigration from the perspective of our faith. The biblical witness will not give us specific answers to complex policy questions today. But it provides us with authoritative insights about God's will for persons and communities. Let us identify several of those insights that are especially pertinent to the dynamics of immigration.

A. What Was I Before and What Am I Now (Deut. 10:18–19; Eph. 2:19–20)

In Soon Chi was a member of the resolution team. She is an elder in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and lives in Lexington, Kentucky. In Soon presented a moving meditation to the group about her experience as an immigrant from South Korea. She told of her family's long journey as refugees from China to Pusan, South Korea, after the end of World War II, their desperate poverty, the death of her baby sister due to pneumonia, and her migration to the United States. The following is an excerpt from her meditation:

I came to this country as a foreign student a long time ago. Although I came here with all the legal documents, I was fearful because of cultural shock and I suffered an inferiority complex because of my language barrier. Now, I am a citizen doing all kinds of community work including serving as an election officer.

We are here to do our God-given work for the fear ridden and deprived strangers who came here with a hope to earn a living, to find a better life and to have a secure life with freedom. We are here to help these outsiders to become our good neighbors. We have to remember that once we were all foreigners in this land, not only spiritually, but also physically and socially.

This is a new challenge. As God loves us and grants us so many blessings, I dare say we must pursue ways to help these wounded people. I sincerely hope this meeting represents our first steps on the road that will lead to changed lives of our undocumented immigrants. So, they too have all the privileges of beings citizens of this land as well as being citizens of the Kingdom of God.

B. Hospitality to the Stranger (Lev. 19:33–34; Deut. 10:18–19; Matt. 25:44–45; Heb. 13:2)

Old Testament teachings challenged Israel to remember the time when they were "aliens" in the land of Egypt. By remembering, they will love the strangers as they do themselves and will treat them as fellow citizens. The provision of hospitality to the stranger is one of the most frequently cited marks of covenant faithfulness. In the New Testament, Jesus identifies with the stranger and emphasizes hospitality as one of the indispensable acts of discipleship. Indeed God may be present in the guise of a stranger, bringing news that we can hear only by receiving her or him.

In General Assembly policy on immigration, the theme of hospitality to the stranger is often emphasized. Immigrants are frequently experienced as "others," different in ethnicity and cultural background. They also are radically vulnerable, without the familial and societal structures of support that residents rely on without a second thought.

We are commanded not to treat immigrants with cruelty and unkindness but with hospitality, remembering that most of us too have an immigrant past and all have been recipients of God's mercy. Yet being a stranger is not a permanent status or identity. In Christ, strangers become neighbors. With hospitality comes community and mutuality in our relationships with one another.

C. Gifts of the Stranger (Acts 10 and 11:1–18; 2 Cor. 1:3–7; Matt. 25: 21–28)

It is tempting to think of hospitality in a paternalistic way. That is, those of us who are residents should do something for immigrants who are needy. To be sure, Christian responsibility does entail responding to the specific needs of neighbors. But what is often missed is the recognition that immigrants bring something that residents also need. Immigrants bring their hopes and dreams, their commitment to their children, their hard work, their contributions to the communities of which they are part. They also bring opportunities for residents to open ourselves to new learnings about ourselves, our world, and indeed our faith.

In the General Assembly policy on "Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounter with New Neighbors," the biblical account of Peter and Cornelius was lifted up as especially pertinent. It was through Cornelius, the outsider, that Peter came to recognize that Gentiles were included in the church's mission and ministry. This had a transformative impact on the church. Similarly today, churches are called to seek relationship with immigrant neighbors and to open ourselves to the transformation Christ is bringing to churches and to our society through them.

Immigrants are not simply objects of charity but subjects who bring rich gifts in their own personhood. All of us have surely been recipients of these gifts in the broadening and deepening of human relationships. Yet it is not all smooth or easy, especially for the immigrants themselves. Their experience is often characterized more by suffering than by hospitality. We are reminded in 2 Corinthians 1:3-7 that we are called to participate in the sufferings of others, and to console one another as we are consoled by God. God calls us to solidarity of such depth with immigrants that we experience their suffering as our own, supporting and being supported in an indistinguishable unity.

D. Justice as the Distribution of Power and Resources (Matt. 12:1--8; Micah 6:8; Lev. 25:18--19; Amos 5:24)

One member of the resolution team offered a vivid depiction of a Christian view of distributive justice. It is not a "cut the cake" image that suggests a finite amount of goods to be sliced up so that everyone gets a piece. Instead it is a "stretch the dough" image. By stretching the dough, more can be shared. In the Bible, injustice is not seen as the result of insufficiency. Instead injustice comes from some hoarding excess while others suffer from deprivation. Injustice comes from exercising power on behalf of some while holding others in subjection.

In the U.S., immigrants contribute a great deal to the creation of societal dough. Indeed they add to the totality of the dough, so that the dough keeps growing. Because of their work, there is more that can be stretched. It is not that they are taking more slices from the cake, reducing the size available to everyone. Immigrants contribute to the abundance from which they deserve a fair share. The problem of injustice is not that the immigrants are costing the U.S. too much. Instead they are not receiving a fair share of what they are helping to create.

Reformed theology teaches that a persistent manifestation of human sinfulness is the inclination of the powerful to use their power for their own interest rather than for the common good. For Christians, the implication is not that power is inherently evil but that power must be widely distributed so that all may have an influence on the shape of social and economic policies. It is not accidental then that undocumented workers receive minimal wages and no benefits and also that they have virtually no power to be able to alter the conditions of their labor. A Christian view of justice insists that undocumented workers receive what is due them and that the obstacles to their empowerment be removed.

The destruction of the World Trade Center towers in 2001 brought a surge of anxieties about the security of United States' national borders. Processing of travel visa applications as well as immigration and refugee applications has been slowed considerably. Some immigrants, documented as well as undocumented, especially from Arab countries, have been subjected to discriminatory treatment. Thus, added to the other vulnerabilities that immigrants experience is the greater level of suspicion, even hostility, generated by the anxieties about terrorism.

Christians certainly value security as a vital component of the peace for which we work and pray. We yearn for wider societal well-being in which each may flourish without fears of victimization, threat of violence, and injustice. And still we recognize that governments cannot provide total security. True security is to be found in God who often calls us to risk security in our love for neighbor. "Those who find their life will lose it, and those who lose their life for my sake will find it." The quest for security can become idolatrous. The more we seek to make ourselves safe, the more vulnerable we can feel. Security can be an obsession that prevents us from living fully and adventurously. Even the great walls of Jericho could not ultimately provide protection for those within.

It is possible, indeed desirable, to take reasonable measures to protect ourselves from terrorist attacks. However, it is possible at the same time to continue to be open to the presence of newcomers. We dare not let fears prevent us from exercising our responsibilities for neighbors, indeed for extending the reach of neighbor love for new neighbors. In this expression of human solidarity we continue to give witness to the peace and justice of God that is intended for all.

F. Peace and Reconciliation (1. Cor. 12; Gen. 1:26–28; Eph. 2: 11–18; Acts 17:26–28; Gal. 3:28)

In a Christian understanding, Christ is the presence and possibility of peace. He has broken down the barriers of hostility and enmity that divide peoples from each other. In Christ there is no longer Jew or Greek, slave or free, male or female; all are one in the reconciliation Christ has brought about.

As we examine issues related to immigration, distinctions based on nationality and ethnicity have often functioned to legitimate injustice. For Christians, these distinctions must give way to Christ's commandment to love our neighbor as ourselves. In fact, the hospitable reception of immigrants is a sign of the reconciling work of Christ in the world. Though diverse, all the world's peoples are one in the family of God, created for relationship with one another that excludes no one.

At the same time that human unity and reconciliation are central to the Gospel, this does not cancel or deny the wondrous diversity of creation. Diversity testifies to the glory of God's creation. The image of the church as body is also descriptive of God's intention for the world. We are created to flourish in our diverse specialness in ways that build a richer community. In a Christian vision, diversity no longer divides and separates or serves as a basis for injustice, but is embraced and transformed through Christ's reconciling activity.

The ministry of reconciliation given to Christians includes "making friends" with immigrant others who so often are treated as "aliens" in our society. Genuine reconciliation cannot take place without also doing justice; namely, ensuring that immigrants' personhood is fully respected, the immigrants' presence is acknowledged and welcomed, the immigrants' rights are fully protected, and immigrants are given the opportunity to be full participants in American life. The diversities which immigrants bring contribute to the dynamically evolving multicultural fabric of this society. As Paul affirmed the cultural distinctiveness of Jew and of Gentile and offered a vision of unity that could encompass both, so may we see the diversities represented by immigrant populations in terms of the possibilities they open for new relationships and a new society.

In conclusion, a Christian perspective on immigration challenges us above all to love immigrants, to establish justice for them, and to seek to be reconciled with them in a new and transformed community. While this does not automatically settle particular questions of public policy, General Assemblies have consistently advocated justice for these vulnerable neighbors. Furthermore, the General Assemblies have pursued policies that express hospitality and openness to the gifts that immigrants bring to our society. These themes continue to provide guidance as we express our strong support for a thorough legalization program for immigrants living and working in the United States.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 10-05

Comment on Item 10-05—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly counsels the 216th General Assembly (2004) to answer this item with the following action:

“To request that the General Assembly Council begin conversations with our ecumenical partners (Formula of Agreement denominations, members of Churches Uniting in Christ, etc.) in order to evaluate the creation of an office of immigrant/refugee issues that would assist governing bodies in providing leadership necessary to address the opportunities presented by the growing immigrant populations of the United States.”

The committee recognizes the enormous complexity of the issues surrounding immigration and its effects upon mission of the church. There is a need to provide reliable legal advice to presbyteries as they create and provide leadership to new immigrant fellowships.

The Standing Rules authorize the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to offer comment or advice on business under consideration by the General Assembly. The COGA is a committee of fifteen persons, elected by the General Assembly from across the church, made up of elders and ministers who supervise the work of the Office of the General Assembly.

Transforming Families

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do the following:

1. Approve the Introduction and Theological Context as follows:

I. Introduction

The 209th General Assembly (1997) called for an examination of changing families and social structures that support families, focusing especially on their effects on children, in order to develop principles and recommendations to strengthen the church's ministry to contemporary families in both the church and society in the 21st century (see Minutes, 1997, Part I, pp. 536ff). The resulting task force was to pursue its work with the understanding that there is a variety of families. Answering this call requires attention to the cultural and socioeconomic contexts of today's families, and it is of primary importance that we lift up the theological commitments that we bring to this endeavor. The church's reflection on families in contemporary society begins with theological affirmations grounded in the Bible and our Reformed confessions, is informed by the cultural and socioeconomic realities of our common life, and issues in a vision of transforming families.

As our Book of Order states concerning the church's mission, "God's redeeming and reconciling activity in the world continues through the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, who confronts individuals and societies with Christ's Lordship of life and calls them to repentance and to obedience to the will of God" (G-3.0103). The sovereign love of God, the gracious lordship of Jesus Christ, and the empowering fellowship of the Holy Spirit ground our lives as Christians; yet we are also rooted in family structures that evidence the corrosive pressures around and within us, as well as the failed relationships among us, even as they remain sites of God's gracious presence and activity. Our family lives, like the other spheres of our existence, need transformation by the Holy Spirit; and our world needs the transformative agency of families that understand the breadth of their vocation as disciples of Jesus Christ.

The Confession of 1967 declares: "God's reconciling work in Jesus Christ and the mission of reconciliation to which he has called his church are the heart of the gospel in any age" (The Book of Confessions, 9.06). It identifies four particularly urgent problems and crises through which God calls the church to action. Along with racism, war, and poverty, it lifts up interpersonal relations and family life; and we should recognize that these are not separate compartments, as witnessed by the destructive effects of racism, poverty, and war on families. Among the cited symptoms of "alienation from God, ... neighbors, and (self)" in the realm of interpersonal relationships and family life are "anarchy in sexual relationships," "pressures of urbanization," and "exploitation of sexual symbols in mass communication" (The Book of Confessions, 9.47). The sins of both inner inclination and outward condition are mentioned.

These symptoms have not disappeared. We, too, can cite current examples of failure to live the "chaste and disciplined lives" that The Heidelberg Catechism enjoins, "whether in holy wedlock or in single life" (The Book of Confessions, 4.108)—casual sex, disposable relationships, and children who are deprived of stable parental relationships. And marriage does not guarantee that God's good intention will be lived out. Infidelity, physical and emotional abuse, lovelessness, lack of mutuality, and casual divorce are further examples of our alienation and disorder. Cultural and systemic pressures that threaten family well-being have not abated. There may be disagreements among us about the weight to assign to various causes and cures, but few would deny that families face troubling challenges today. Without pretending that there was a golden age when happiness and stability reigned in families, we can acknowledge that family well-being in our time is beset with peculiar as well as perennial perils.

Without discounting the contemporary cries of alarm concerning family life, we cannot accord the last word to the laments. We would be belying the faith, hope, and love we profess if we did. The grace of God has not lost its determination to reconcile. The love of Jesus Christ has not lost its ability to include. The communion of the Holy Spirit has not lost its power to transform. Our faith should enable us not only to be honest about the depth of our dilemmas as families, but also to be visionary about the scope of our vocation as Christians living in families and bound together in the Body of Christ. By paying attention both to guidance that comes from God's Word and our faith traditions and to the awareness that comes from the living of these days and the study of them, we are challenged to discover a vision of family life as encompassing as our calling as Christians. In seeking first the reign of God, we should be receptive to the Spirit's work in the transformation of our lives in families and resolute about being transformative influences toward a society that is more family-friendly for other families as well as our own.

II. Theological Context

A. Loyalty to God

1. Sovereignty and Idolatry

In the Scriptures and the Reformed tradition, family loyalty stands under primary loyalty to God. The Ten Commandments begin with an expression of God's covenantal sovereignty: "I am the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of slavery" (Ex. 20:2). The first three commandments make it clear that no human authority, including family ties, should command our ultimate allegiance. The Fourth Commandment proclaims that God's sovereignty extends over time, setting aside our labors for worship of the Lord God in community and household. The covenant established by God also instructs us to honor our fathers and mothers and to honor our marital covenants as part of our service to God.

Jesus honored his family, but he also challenged deference to family authority with the shocking words: "Whoever comes to me and does not hate father and mother, wife and children, brothers and sisters, yes, and even life itself, cannot be my disciple" (Luke 14:26). Furthermore, he called people to new family ties that went beyond ~~natural~~ biological ones. When he was told that his mother and brothers were outside and wished to speak to him, Jesus replied, pointing to his disciples: "Here are my mother and my brothers! For whoever does the will of my Father in heaven is my brother and sister and mother" (Matt. 12: 49–50).

2. Baptism and Identity

Christian identity is formed in baptism and shaped in the continuous practice of discipleship within the covenant community. The identity given us at baptism takes precedence over family origins, ethnicity, social identity, or gender; for all are one in Jesus Christ. The Apostle Paul writes:

As many of you as were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus. (Gal. 3:27–28)

Having shed their clothes for baptism, the early Christians were being shown that they received the water with no identifying or status-giving garments. Whether adults or children, they had no merit to present, earned or inherited. Our incorporation into the body of Christ through baptism is sheer grace, regardless of our personal qualities, the character of our families, or anything else that we bring. By grace, we belong to the sovereign God who "claims us, and seals us to show that we belong to God." We receive a new identity, and with it a new ultimate allegiance. The Book of Common Worship beautifully expresses this new reality:

Through baptism we enter the covenant God has established. Within this covenant God gives us new life, guards us from evil, and nurtures us in love. In embracing that covenant, we choose whom we will serve, by turning from evil and turning to Jesus Christ.

B. Christian Vocation

1. Corporate Calling

In baptism, family life is embraced and placed in proper context. At the font we are surrounded by the commitments and ties of our families. This solidarity is seen most clearly in the baptism of children as one or both parents/guardians normally accompany their child, confess their faith, and make promises regarding the child's upbringing. The covenant God has made with the church is extended to the faithful and their children, even before those children are able to respond. This parental participation within public worship is deeply Reformed. In medieval Europe, baptisms were regularly performed in the presence of midwives and godparents in a private service. Parents almost never attended the baptisms of their children. As an element of the reform of the church, Calvin insisted that parents present their children for baptism during the services of public worship. In this way, the nurture of children in the family was placed in the context of the nurture of children in the church; family promises are placed in the context of promises by the wider community of faith.

The congregation makes a specific pledge to the baptized, to guide and nurture them “by word and deed, with love and prayer, encouraging them to know and follow Christ” (Book of Common Worship, p. 406). When members of the congregation make this commitment, they do so regardless of their own age or station in life. Everyone in the church is commissioned to a vocation that nurtures newly baptized members of the community. We are called to help each other “grow up in every way into him who is the head, into Christ” (Eph. 4:15). This commitment to God and one another defines the basic Christian vocation.

2. Reciprocal Responsibility

This remarkable, all-encompassing vocation is not expressed hierarchically. Of course, those who are more mature in the faith have a natural responsibility toward those who are younger in the faith, but all are called to a vocation to the whole body. Responsibility and accountability move in all directions—older toward younger and younger toward older, children toward parents and parents toward children. It is the vocation of young people to help older people grow in Christ, as surely as older people are called to help the young grow. All members of a household share a common vocation toward one another and the whole household.

3. Family Vocation

The vocation of Christians in families includes a vocation as families. The Presbyterian church’s Study Catechism begins with a question about God’s purpose for human life, answering, “God wills that I should live by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, for the love of God, and in the communion of the Holy Spirit.” This calling is the pattern for human life, both as individuals and in community. Families are called to a life together that is lived by grace, for love, in communion. God calls families, as well as individuals and churches, to lead a life worthy of the vocation to which they are called, promoting the family’s growth in building itself up in love (Eph. 4:1, 16).

Families are called to live by the grace of Christ. Families can be wondrous instances of grace, formed less by deliberate calculation than by serendipitous gift. Parents and children do not choose each other, sisters and brothers are not connected by mutual selection, and families extend in unintentional ways. Even the family choices we make—such as marriage and adoption—are shaped by a love that often surprises us rather than chosen after a calculation of benefits. In the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, families are called to live together graciously and to extend circles of Christ’s grace beyond narrowly conceived family structures.

Families are called to live for the love of God. Love within families can be grace-filled, not contingent on rational calculations. Familial love is delightfully irrational, transcending explanations and enduring beyond validations. Receiving love, we become ones who give love. Familial love is not dependent on the worth of the other, or the health of the other, or the success of the other. Instead, love grows from the sheer presence of the other. For the love of God, families are called to love openly and to extend circles of God’s love beyond immediate family structures.

Families are called to live in the communion of the Holy Spirit. Families are more than collections of individuals. Family relationships can go beyond the development of personal capacities and talents to the mutual enhancement of gifts. Individual development is nurtured by familial bonds that, in turn, enhance personal growth. In the communion of the Holy Spirit, families are called to extend circles of the Spirit’s communion beyond immediate family structures.

The Christian vocation of families is to nurture all members “to maturity, to the measure of the full stature of Christ” (Eph. 4:13). In fidelity to this calling, families are no longer confined to concern for their own well-being, for their purpose leads to the wider family of faith and the wider human family. This calling is both gift and duty, God’s endowment and God’s law.

Family life that is shaped by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, for the love of God, in the communion of the Holy Spirit finds its purpose beyond itself in the joyful worship of God loving God with heart, soul, mind, and strength, and loving neighbors. The full vocation of families does not occur naturally. The call of God shapes enduring familial commitments yet also requires the development of practices and skills. From prayer to service, Christian practices give concrete form to families’ vocation so that they may “do everything in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, giving thanks to God the Father through him” (Col. 3:17).

4. Encompassing Vocation

The church has a particular responsibility to encourage the vocation of families within the community of faith, giving special pastoral attention to struggling families. However, the church's responsibility extends beyond its own members. Authentic Christian discipleship moves us beyond ourselves in service to the whole human community. Families of all types struggle, and any family can be torn apart by abuse, economic devastation, desertion, and other reversals. The welfare of all families should not be ignored by withdrawal into residential, educational, and even religious enclaves of privilege. The Confession of 1967 reminds us that reliance on Scripture impels the church to service beyond itself: "The life, death, resurrection, and promised coming of Jesus Christ have set the pattern for the church's mission. His human life involves the church in the common life of all people. His service to men and women commits the church to work for every form of human well-being" (The Book of Confessions, 9.32).

C. Marriage and the Family

1. The Importance of Marriage

One of the critical issues in understanding family is the place of marriage. Three-and-a-half decades ago, the Confession of 1967 cited interpersonal relations and family life as a critical problem in society, and it provided guidance and language that continue to be valuable:

The relationship between man and woman exemplifies in a basic way God's ordering of the interpersonal life for which God created humankind. Anarchy in sexual relationships is a symptom of alienation from God, neighbors, and self. The church, as the household of God, is called to lead people out of this alienation into the responsible freedom of the new life in Christ. Reconciled to God, people have joy in and respect for their own humanity and that of other persons; a man and woman are enabled to marry, to commit themselves to a mutually shared life, and to respond to each other in sensitive and lifelong concern; parents receive the grace to care for children in love and to nurture their individuality. The church comes under the judgment of God and invites rejection by society when it fails to lead men and women into the full meaning of life together, or withholds the compassion of Christ from those caught in the moral confusion of our time. (Confession of 1967, Inclusive Language Text. Cf The Book of Confessions, 9.47d)

In its exploration of the basic ordering of human life that leads men and women into the full meaning of life together, the Confession of 1967 echoes the creation story in Genesis 2, where the constitutive relationship between man and woman is told in intimately relational terms: "Therefore a man leaves his father and his mother and clings to his wife, and they become one flesh" (Gen. 2:24).

This Genesis passage portrays the committed, enduring relationship between a man and a woman as foundational for married interpersonal life. Scripture itself exhibits several forms of marital and family relationships, none of which is a precise equivalent of contemporary marriage and family life. However, in the development of Israel's covenant history, the pattern of monogamous marriage became the established norm. This pattern was affirmed by Jesus (Matt. 19:5). The Reformed tradition embraced marriage as a good for all in society, Christian or not: "Marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family" (Book of Order, W-4.9001).

The Reformed tradition, while aware that diverse patterns of marital relationship are in evidence in the Scriptures, has read Genesis 2 in light of the later Old Testament and the New Testament direction toward monogamous marriage. Thus, the foundational pattern of Genesis 2 is prominent in the Presbyterian Service of Christian Marriage:

God created us male and female, and gave us marriage
so that husband and wife may help and comfort each other, living faithfully together in plenty and in want,
in joy and in sorrow,
in sickness and in health,
throughout all their days.

God gave us marriage for the full expression of the love between a man and a woman.
In marriage a woman and a man belong to each other, and with affection and tenderness freely give themselves to each other.

God gave us marriage
for the well-being of human society, for the ordering of family life, and for the birth and nurture of children. (Book of Common Worship, p. 842)

The church affirms that marriage is instituted by God, that marriage is good for human society, and that marriage is a form of family life that provides a suitable context for the nurture of children. Acknowledgement of the good of marriage for society does not deny the importance to society of the contributions of single persons. Neither singleness nor marriage is spiritually superior. Both single and married persons are called to be instruments of God's love and grace.

2. Marriage as Basic to Human Relationships

Affirmation of marriage's significance in the Christian tradition is by no means a claim that marriage exhausts what the church means by family. The church upholds the meaning and significance of marriage between a man and a woman, but it does not denigrate other forms of family life [that demonstrate and nurture godly character]. The language of the Confession of 1967 is instructive. The marital-biological family that is basic to human relationships is just that: basic. The marital-biological family is neither exhaustive nor exclusive as a family form. Rather, as the Confession of 1967 affirms, the marital-biological family "exemplifies in a basic way God's ordering of the interpersonal life for which [God] created humankind," but it is not the only form of interpersonal life; and it does not fully exemplify God's ordering of interpersonal life.

While basic, the marital-biological family does not ensure good and faithful family life. That such families fail and fall short is clear, not only from experience but also from reflection on the very scriptural texts that establish the basic pattern. The intimate mutuality of Genesis 2:23–24 is followed immediately by the fracturing of the relationship between Adam and Eve, sibling rivalry between Cain and Abel that climaxes in fratricide, and disordered sexuality. One of the most striking characteristics of the biblical descriptions of life in households is their ruthless honesty about family struggles. From Adam and Eve through David, to the scandal of Mary's pregnancy in the Gospels, the Bible is candid about the difficulties and failings of human relationships and human families. Moreover, there is no sense in Scripture that those who are part of other forms of family are necessarily living outside of the will of God. Scripture affirms a basic form of family life, and it also portrays other forms of human flourishing that are appropriate to the service of God. That portrayal does not mean that all forms of family life are equally equipped to live out faithful Christian vocation. Even God's good ordering of interpersonal life is lived out by fallen human beings, and thus is susceptible to distortion.

3. Mutuality in Marriage

Marital-biological families are not automatically faithful to God's good purpose. All too often they do not embody mutuality in marriage as equality between husband and wife or live out Christ's call to love our neighbors. The scriptural witness to God's ordering of interpersonal relationships is too often read in ways that subordinate women to men. "Christian families" can fail to fulfill their vocation; they can even be oppressive and destructive. The marriage service of the Presbyterian church reflects the contemporary understanding of marriage as a faith commitment in which "husband and wife are called to a new way of life, created, ordered, and blessed by God" (Book of Common Worship, p. 842). This new way of life is an expression of the theological commitment of mutuality that is disclosed in surprising ways in New Testament descriptions of the relationship between husband and wife: "Be subject to one another out of reverence for Christ" (Eph. 5:21); "For the wife does not have authority over her own body, but the husband does; likewise the husband does not have authority over his own body, but the wife does" (1 Cor. 7:4).

Contemporary Christian emphasis on mutuality in marriage owes much to broader cultural movements, especially the struggle for women's equality in the 1960s and 1970s. Reflection on the roles of women in families, church, and society, combined with fresh reflection on biblical texts, has reshaped the church's commitment to the full equality of men and women in all relationships. This marital equality is explicitly linked to the equality of all persons before God in baptism and the call to discipleship. For those that do marry, it becomes an arena of their growth in holiness. In our church's marriage service, the persons being married are asked: "In your baptism you have been called to union with Christ and the church. Do you intend to honor this calling through the covenant of marriage?" (Book of Common Worship, p. 859). Our equality as persons in baptism has implications for marital relationships. Subordination is replaced by mutuality, for "there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus" (Gal. 3:28).

The church's recovery of God's ordering of interpersonal life leads to hope that the promise of marriage can be fulfilled as husbands and wives better live out their new reality in Christ. The church must encourage enduring covenantal relationships between couples, sealed by public promises to each other that are made before God, marked by the fruit of the Spirit's presence. As the Apostle Paul writes, "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience kindness, generosity, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control. There is no law against such things" (Gal. 5:22–23). Moreover, recovery of God's ordering of interpersonal life offers possibilities for marital and family life that open toward a rich web of interpersonal relationships extending beyond the marital-biological family.

D. Beyond the Basic Structure of Human Relationships.

1. The Household

Beginning with its dramatic stories of families and long lists of “begats” in Genesis, the Bible indicates the importance of clan ties and households that endure through generations in Hebrew society. The household in Scripture is inclusive of the marital-biological family yet more expansive. In biblical times, the household was a basic relational unit, including parents, children, grandparents, aunts, uncles, cousins, and servants. Households embodied expanded kinship ties that we often reserve only for the marital-biological family. “Household” is an elastic concept in the Old Testament, sometimes restricted to the small, immediate cluster of persons who lived together, sometimes expanding to encompass a large community attached to a patriarch. In most cases, however, households embraced “blood relatives” and persons beyond blood relationships in a web of familial associations.

Households are prominent in the New Testament as well. Several epistles counsel families and households concerning their responsibilities. The importance of households is most clearly seen in references to the “house-tables”(guidelines for households) of Colossians and Ephesians (Eph. 5:21–6:9; Col. 3:18–4:1). These Christian instructions to families assume the reality of prevailing cultural arrangements that the church no longer condones (such as the subordination of women and the practice of slavery); yet they also exceed the bounds of the Roman world. Roman house-tables focused on the need for inferiors to obey superiors, but the Pauline house-tables emphasize the mutual responsibility of all parties to one another. While traditional family patterns are retained, they are relativized and reordered. The Christian house-tables do not simply set out the obligations of wives to husbands, children to parents, and servants to masters. Instead, all are addressed as responsible moral agents who are bound to one another by ties of mutual responsibility. Thus, alongside the expected direction that children are to obey their parents, we read that parents are not to provoke their children to anger (Eph. 6:1–4). It is even more surprising that the traditional injunction for slaves to obey masters is paired with a reciprocal admonition: “Masters, do the same [render service with enthusiasm] to them. Stop threatening them, for you know that both of you have the same Master in heaven, and with him there is no partiality” (Eph. 6:9). New Testament house tables are not prescriptions for 21st century family life (specifically, the hierarchical description of marriage and the acceptance of the institution of slavery). Yet their Christian re-ordering of 1st century family life offers trajectories and guidance toward patterns of genuine familial mutuality in Christ.

2. Single Persons

The Bible also includes depictions of persons who do not marry. There are hints in the lives of some prophets, but the New Testament offers the more prominent examples of John the Baptist, the Apostle Paul, and Jesus himself. There is no implication these men lived less than fulfilled lives because they lacked wives and children. In a similar way, single women have often been examples of heroic faith, serving faithfully in places that men deemed unworthy. It is clear that a person may live a full and faithful Christian life without marriage or parenthood. Marriage is one of God’s good gifts within human life; it is not the ultimate form of relationship within the age to come (Luke 20: 34, 35). The church must respect and honor those who remain single, whether through choice or circumstance. Persons who do not marry have a significant role in the development of children. In baptism, responsibility for the nurture of children is given to the entire faith community. Jesus’ invitation—“Let the little children come to me, and do not stop them; for it is to such as these that the kingdom of heaven belongs” (Matt. 19:14)—displays the whole community’s role in children’s lives, specifically the vital role of single persons as friends and mentors of children.

3. Adoption

The bonds we associate with families are not restricted to persons who are maritally or biologically related. Adoption is the clearest example of the family’s extension beyond marital-biological bounds. In adoption, one who was not previously in the family is now fully included. Adoption is such a powerful witness to the extension of kinship bonds to those outside of biological relationship that it becomes a primary way of speaking of our relation to God, especially in the New Testament. Paul writes to the Galatians:

But when the fullness of time had come, God sent his Son, born of a woman, born under the law, in order to redeem those who were under the law, so that we might receive adoption as children. And because you are children, God has sent the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, “Abba, Father!” So you are no longer a slave but a child, and if a child then also an heir, through God. (Gal. 4:4–7)

Instead of an anomalous way of referring to family relationships, adoption becomes a controlling metaphor for human relationships. In the New Testament, adoption is the image both for human relationship to God and for the establishment of familial ties among those who are brothers and sisters through adoption: “For all who are led by the Spirit of God are children of God. For you ... have received a spirit of adoption” (Rom. 8:14, 15). The biblical picture of adoption can be a helpful way for all family members to think about mutual relationships among themselves and also with persons beyond marital-biological family connections.

Adoption also provides a possibility for single persons to raise children. Single parenthood, whether through adoption or other circumstance, is often challenging, but it can be an opportunity for the community of faith to demonstrate its responsibility for supporting all parents, for shared parenting of all the church’s children, and for loving service to all the world’s children. Furthermore, the biblical understanding of our adoption by God can enrich the church’s support of adoption in society.

4. Extension of Familial Relationships

Familial commitments are extended to those outside the marital-biological family. This inclusion is dramatically apparent in the constant scriptural refrain of care for the widow and orphan and the strangers among us:

For the Lord your God is God of gods and Lord of lords, the great God, mighty and awesome, who is not partial and takes no bribe, who executes justice for the orphan and the widow, and who loves the strangers, providing them food and clothing. You shall also love the stranger, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt. (Deut. 10:17–19, NRSV)

This concern for care for those beyond our families is echoed in our confessions (The Second Helvetic Confession 5.235). Our devotion to our families fits within our devotion to God, but the living out of this love of God necessarily involves extending care to those outside our families as though they were bound to us by familial ties. Ruth and Naomi, David and Jonathan, Jesus’ disciples, and Paul and Barnabas are biblical examples.

Moreover, such compassion is to be extended even to those with whom we have no relation at all. Israel was commanded by God to love the stranger and alien since the people of Israel were once aliens themselves:

When an alien resides with you in your land, you shall not oppress the alien. The alien who resides with you shall be to you as the citizen among you; you shall love the alien as yourself, for you were aliens in the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God. (Lev. 19:33–34)

E. The Nurture of Children

1. The Importance of the Nurture of Children

The mandate for this study stipulated focusing especially on the effects of changing families and changing social structures on children, and we have strong theological warrant for attending to their nurture. As expressed in their vow at baptisms, all members of the Christian community bear responsibility for the well-being of children. Their well-being ranges from learning about God to knowing how to brush their teeth and tie their shoes, to discovering the joy of learning, and to being able to live in a technological world. The well-being of children also entails being shaped by the transforming love of Jesus Christ so that children come to love neighbors and seek justice, becoming people who can give and receive love. There is no “one size fits all” approach to children—we must pay attention to the needs of each one. The nurture of children is not a distraction from service to God; it is an integral aspect of service to God. The Second Helvetic Confession addresses “the rearing of children” in this way:

Children are to be brought up by the parents in the fear of the Lord; and parents are to provide for their children, remembering the saying of the apostle: “If anyone does not provide for his relatives, he has disowned the faith and is worse than an unbeliever” (1 Tim. 5:8). But especially they should teach their children honest trades or professions by which they may support themselves. They should keep them from idleness and in all these things instill in them true faith in God, lest through a lack of confidence or too much security or filthy greed they become dissolute and achieve no success.

And it is most certain that those works which are done by parents in true faith by way of domestic duties and the management of their households are in God’s sight holy and truly good works. They are no less pleasing to God than prayers, fasting and almsgiving. (The Second Helvetic Confession, 5.249–250)

Parents and guardians have the primary responsibility to care for their children, while churches are called to be communities that support and complete the nurture of children. Teaching children who they are in Christ is an honorable and important duty for the entire community. We should strive to provide for them, to keep them safe, to ensure that they will not be hungry or homeless, to prepare them for life, and to encourage their participation in the mission of the Triune God. In this way, families, individuals, and the entire church learn to live lives of service and love for the whole world.

2. Reverence for God

We can give no greater gift to our children than to nurture them in the love of the Triune God. Nurturing children toward the love of God is a calling that encompasses the totality of our daily lives. After Moses delivered God's covenant law to the people of Israel, he instructed them that these Ten Commandments, grounded in the commitment to God alone, were vital for the formation of their children:

Hear, O Israel: The Lord is our God, the Lord alone. You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your might. Keep these words that I am commanding you today in your heart. Recite them to your children and talk about them when you are at home and when you are away, when you lie down and when you rise. Bind them as a sign on your hand, fix them as an emblem on your forehead, and write them on the doorposts of your house and on your gates. (Deut. 6:4–9)

As persons who have made baptismal commitments to the children of the church, we tell the stories of promise, deliverance, sin, forgiveness, and peace so that our children will grow to love God with their whole beings and love neighbors as ourselves. We teach children in the formal settings of worship and Christian education, but we must not restrict the task to those areas. We are called to bear witness to the mighty acts of God at home and away, at the beginnings of each day, and when we prepare for sleep.

In teaching our children about God, we must instill in them habits of piety, daily disciplines, spiritual, moral, and practical, that will nurture love for God and equip them for a faithful life. Self-discipline is bedrock for the Christian life.

3. Provision of Material as Well as Spiritual Need

In Jesus' discourse on the character of God, he suggests that one of the signs of care for children is providing them with food when they are hungry (Luke 11:11–13). Riches can be dangerous, and poverty can devastate a family. As church communities, we must be committed to the economic well-being of all children and families.

4. Preparation for Adult Responsibilities

The Second Helvetic Confession notes that nurturing children in the love of and reverence for God embraces all aspects of life, including preparing them for a life of work. As people who believe that all true knowledge comes from God, we must ensure that our children are educated to understand the complexity of issues surrounding science and technology, and to be aware of economic realities in a global society of extreme poverty and excessive wealth.

We are called to teach children about the world. Families are called to turn outward in communal lives of love and service to others. Yet many families have a disturbing tendency to turn inward and function primarily for their own good. Instilling and demonstrating a vision of God's love for the whole world is integral to the nurture of children.

F. Resistance and Transformation in Family Life

As Christian families are being transformed by the power of the Holy Spirit, we will find ourselves in tension with the cultural values of materialism, consumerism, individualism, and hedonism, which are treated in the "Cultural Context" section of this report. Our calling should not only make us resistant to those values that compromise our discipleship; it should inspire the resolution to be culturally transformative, to work for change of those conditions that threaten the well-being of all families, not just our own.

1. Formation and Resistance

In particular, children can be nurtured to become suspicious of prevailing cultural attitudes towards wealth, consumption, entertainment, and sexual self-indulgence. Children, parents, and all in the church will need to have a strong sense of Christian identity in order to live out the life of discipleship within the broader culture. The church's primary call is to shape its practice in conformity with its profession of faith. Presbyterians cannot be content merely to make pronouncements about family life without a common life that is consistent with their public statements. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must enable families, households, congregations, and communities to honor God through strong family life. The church is called to strengthen existing families, to encourage the development of new, strong families, and to exercise compassionate ministry with struggling families in the name of Jesus Christ. Honoring God and one another through attention to Sabbath would be an excellent place to start, giving time for all to rest and restore relationships. Work, television, extracurricular activities, and even church activities can overwhelm families such that the Sabbath is honored more in the breach than the observance. The church must teach and model Sabbath for families.

2. Social Transformation

In light of our Reformed heritage, we should also seek to be agents of social change that does justice and loves kindness (Micah 6:8). Even in a time of diminishing cultural influence of our denomination as well as other mainline churches, we can combine nurture of a community that practices contrasting values to those of the dominant culture with the practice of civic responsibility for the public good. As the Confession of 1967 states: “The church is called to bring all people to receive and uphold one another as persons in all relationships of life: in employment, housing, education, leisure, marriage, family, church, and the exercise of political rights” (Inclusive Language Text, 9.44). In commenting on critical social policy issues, the church should not assume that it occupies privileged moral ground, avoiding its own responsibility for the significant pressures on family life in American society. Yet government and corporate policies and programs have profound effects on family life, for good or for ill, intended or unintended. Thus the church is faithful as it analyzes social realities and calls for public policies that encourage strong family life and remove impediments that families face in living out their full vocation.

3. Personal Responsibility and Institutional Constraints

The final two sections of this report provide two kinds of analysis of the current conditions and crises of families. One is primarily cultural, and the other is primarily economic and sociological. It is important to see the two as connected, and it would be a mistake to abandon either of them out of preoccupation with the other. Cultural analysis gives us ways of diagnosing failures of personal responsibility. Whether we speak of expressive individualism, hedonism, a marriage-averse culture, or a divorce-inclined society, we can cite personal self-indulgence, resistance to self-sacrifice, and heedless self-assertion at the expense of others’ welfare as “habits of the heart” that imperil the commitment and faithfulness that found and sustain family covenants. In sinfulness, people continue to make bad choices.

Socioeconomic analysis gives us ways of diagnosing systemic and institutional ills. Whether we speak of the utilitarian individualism of global capitalism, the injustices that reside in the persistence of classism, racism, and sexism, the dominance of “principalities and powers,” or the damage done by the absence or presence of particular governmental policies and programs, we can cite the victimization and injustice perpetrated by systems, structures, and institutions at the expense of various kinds of families. In sinfulness, our systems sorely limit people’s room to make good choices.

4. Sin of Two Kinds

At its best, our Reformed tradition has been able to speak both judgment and grace concerning both personal sin and social sin. It has been willing to label as idolatrous every “ism”—cultural, ecclesiastical, economic, political, or social—that solicits and receives the unqualified loyalty that belongs to God alone. If the church is to be resistant to questionable cultural values in our era, it must have the courage to take issue with both personal irresponsibility and institutional injustice. Sin always has a context, and we must address the systemic contexts that reduce us to consumers and make it difficult to establish and sustain family ties. Sin also persists in every context. No matter what cultural, economic, or political reforms we witness or accomplish, we shall not rid the world of either personal irresponsibility or institutional imperfection. The church should never settle comfortably and idolatrously into the “isms” that surround and shape it, and it should avoid simplistic dismissals of either personal or systemic analyses of the predicament of families. Promoting marriage should not relieve us from addressing structural roots of poverty, but relief of poverty alone will not guarantee willingness to assume the responsibilities of family commitments. The human heart will always need transformation, as will the systems, structures, and institutions that we inhabit. In us and in our systems are mentalities and practices that are not family friendly, and even our family norms need transformation by the power of the Holy Spirit. We confess our complicity in the materialism, consumerism, individualism, and hedonism of our culture and our families’ infection by these forces. We also believe that God’s grace can transform us and our families to reflect the glory of God.

G. Hope for the Future

Now the Lord is the Spirit, and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom. And all of us, with unveiled faces, seeing the glory of the Lord as though reflected in a mirror, are being transformed into the same image from one degree of glory to another; for this comes from the Lord, the Spirit. (2 Cor. 3:17–18)

As reflected in Paul's words to the church at Corinth, the church holds forth the promise of God's transformation of family life as it seeks, in the words of the Confession of 1967, to "lead [people] out of this [present] alienation and into the responsible freedom of the new life in Christ" (The Book of Confessions, 9.47d). The church hopes that, by the grace of God, all families and persons and institutions might be transformed to reflect God's good intentions. It seeks to extend the bonds of kinship—that every family might find its identity in and pattern its ways upon the "one universal family" (Ibid, 9.44a) that God is forming in Jesus Christ.

1. The Keynote of Compassion

Sensitive to both the sufferings and the joys in families and to the indications that all family arrangements are not equally conducive to human well-being, the church must stand against the inhumanity that marks too many relationships—the failure to receive and uphold one another in justice and love. The keynote of the church's response must be compassion. Just as its Savior had compassion for the crowds "because they were like sheep without a shepherd" (Mark 6:34), so the church must look upon families caught in the confusions and struggles of our time. This compassion is not contradictory, but rather complementary, to the church's obligation to lift up a vision for family life—to "lead men and women into the full meaning of life together." (Confession of 1967, Inclusive Language Text, 9.47d)

2. Cooperation and Resistance

The church seeks the well-being of each family; in whatever circumstance it finds that family, striving to strengthen family life "in cooperation with powers and authorities in politics, culture, and economics." The church is grateful for the individual and social values that have sustained families amidst such difficulties: the freedom of conscience, the promise of equal rights under law, the commitment to education, the concern for senior citizens and those with disabilities, and the tradition of community organizations that have unfolded in our nation's history. The church appeals to those values to buttress families in their vocation. But the church will also "have to fight against pretensions and injustices when these same powers endanger human welfare" (The Confession of 1967, The Book of Confessions, 9.25), such as the forces of disease and death, scarcity of time and resources, insecurity and conflicting interests that make family life difficult for most people. With vigor, the church also resists the forces of materialism, consumerism, individualism, and hedonism that undermine the common good and the vocation of families. It must call itself and society to repent when either is complicit with such forces.

3. Encompassing Care

Because all are touched by the sins and struggles of this world, the church extends its welcome and nurture to all persons and families. None should be excluded from care and compassion on the basis of family form. The church rejects principles or policies that would deny compassionate ministry to any persons, and particularly the most vulnerable persons (the children, the poor, the elderly, and the disabled), based on family circumstance. By the same token, the church cherishes hope for God's grace to work transformation in all persons and families.

4. Rejoicing Hope

Is there hope for Presbyterian and American families? Yes, but our hope is not dependant upon our good intentions or hard work, however much of both are needed. We do not see the future clearly, but we serve a God who is transforming us. In this hope we can rejoice, living in faith that our family lives will be redeemed and show forth the righteousness of Christ. In this way we will live out our baptism by participating in the ongoing mission of the Triune God who created us good, who has redeemed and saved us through the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and who continues to empower and enliven us through the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

Eternal God, our creator, you set us to live in families.
We commend to your care
all the homes where your people live.
Keep them, we pray, free from bitterness, from the thirst for personal victory, and from pride in self.

Fill them with faith, virtue, knowledge, moderation, patience, and godliness.
 Knit together in enduring affection
 those who have become one in marriage.
 Let children and parents have full respect for one another.
 Bind together in communities those who live in singleness, and light the fire of kindness among us all,
 that we may show affection for each other;
 through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. (Book of Common Worship, 749, adapted)

2. Approve “A Vision of Transforming Families.”

A Vision of Transforming Families

Given this theological context, and conscious of the cultural and socioeconomic forces affecting families today, the church affirms a vision of families being transformed by God and being agents of transformation in society. We envision a church and society in which persons freely devote themselves to building up one another within their families, and families freely devote themselves to the will of God and the welfare of others.

We envision a church and society that welcomes and nurtures all persons, regardless of their family circumstances. Both single persons and married persons should be respected and honored, in the community and in the family of God. We look toward a society in which all members of the family are valued equally, with special attention to children and others who are more vulnerable. The church rejects attitudes or practices that value some more highly than others—based on gender, age, class, ability, ethnic origin, sexual orientation, or any outward condition. It opposes the forces of racism and sexism, which cause great suffering in families and widespread blindness to that suffering.

We envision a society in which families assume primary responsibility for the care and guidance of their own members, supported by other citizens, members of faith communities, and social institutions. It is preferable that those institutions with the best combination of knowledge of the family situation and adequate resources respond to family needs.

We envision a society in which marriage is honored by the church and society as a basic social relationship of unique importance. The church commits itself and calls others to make coordinated efforts to prepare couples for marriage, assist couples in their marriages, reconcile their conflicts where possible, avoid divorce in non-destructive marriages, and seek healthy outcomes for all who experience divorce.

We envision a society in which the well-being of every child is nurtured and supported. In light of sociological data indicating that a loving, lasting marriage of the mother and father is the most successful (90 percent) context for children’s flourishing and that children who experience divorce flourish in a smaller, though significant, majority of cases (75–80 percent), the church urges both parents or guardians to be active in the nurture of children and recognizes the important assistance that congregations and other family support systems can offer.<sup>1</sup> The church commits itself to give special attention to those families [~~both single parent and two parent,~~] where the well-being of children is most at risk. With support from church and other institutions, [~~stepfamilies, adoptive families, and single parent~~] even at-risk families can successfully move through difficult times and their children can grow into healthy adulthood.

We envision a society in which adoption is honored, supported, and promoted. A variety of other family and family-extending relationships should also be encouraged, insofar as they fulfill the functions of family in a way that demonstrates and nurtures godly character.

We envision a society in which families have sufficient time together at home to nurture relationships, to care for children and other dependents, and to worship God together. Likewise, families need access to sufficient economic resources to support the household and care for dependents. Universal health-care coverage is imperative for family well-being. We reaffirm the call of the 207th General Assembly (1995), in its policy statement “God’s Work in Our Hands: Employment, Community, and Christian Vocation,” that “all conditions of paid employment, including compensation and working conditions, should sustain and nurture the dignity of individuals, the well-being of households and families, the social cohesiveness of communities, and the integrity of the global environment” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, p. 426, paragraph 34.522).

We envision a society in which families, faith communities, and other institutions work together to promote virtues and habits that make for healthy and stable families and communities. Coordinated efforts must be deployed against violence and abuse in the home, which shatter the bonds of family trust. We reaffirm the call of the 213th General Assembly (2001), in “Turn Mourning Into Dancing! A Policy Statement on Healing Domestic Violence,” to “hear the voices of victims and survivors and respond to their calls with the following goals: first, to protect the victims from further abuse; second, stop the abuser’s violence and hold the abuser accountable; and third, restore the family relationship if possible or mourn the loss of relationship” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 234, paragraph 25.017).

The church, along with other political, social and economic institutions, should cooperate to reduce the influence of powers that exalt family-distorting values of materialism, consumerism, individualism, and hedonism. We reaffirm the call of the 204th General Assembly (1992), in its policy statement “Pornography: Far from the Song of Songs,” for Presbyterians to “oppose pornography as defined by the report and support constitutional protection of free speech” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 718, paragraph 39.011).

This vision of transforming families presents a challenge to the church at every level. We call on the whole church to transform its own life in relation to the well-being of families and to renew its ministries to families and single adults. When Christian vocation is understood to encompass our lives together in families and our concern for the well-being of all families, it follows that the church must look to other social institutions to play important roles as well. This challenge of strengthening and transforming families will require wide collaboration and a multitude of co-laborers. The task is daunting, but the power of God can make more of our imperfect efforts than we could ask or think.

3. Approve the following recommendations:

a. That all church members and their families seek to embody biblical and confessional teachings about God’s intentions for families

(1) by practicing family-strengthening virtues and habits in their own lives;

(2) by extending the bonds of kinship beyond their own marital-biological families; and

(3) by undertaking at least one family-extending relationship, such as being mentors, adoptive grandparents, foster parents, big brothers/sisters, and other programs.

b. That sessions do the following:

(1) Commit themselves to a program of comprehensive support for loving, lasting, egalitarian marriages. [This program might include marriage and parenting education, use of an intensive pre-marital inventory that challenges couples to examine their relationships, marriage mentoring and marriage enrichment events, readily accessible counseling during marital crises, and connections to divorce recovery groups. All of these kinds of support need to be available to all family groupings including single parents, with the necessary adaptations to the circumstances of each.]

(2) Designate committees or individuals to review the congregation’s programs and practices, with a view to making them more family-friendly. [Questions to be asked include: Do the programs and practices welcome all families and singles, or do they implicitly exclude some? Do they tend to separate family members or bring them together? Do they make it easier or harder for families to spend time together at home?]

c. That presbyteries, clusters of churches within presbyteries, or particular congregations consider approaching local church bodies of other denominations about the possibility of joining in a community marriage policy consistent with the values affirmed in this policy statement and in community efforts on behalf of those fleeing domestic violence and abuse. [Such policies would help churches of different denominations in common support for marriage and family life. Such policies should not detract from ministries to single parents and other forms of families undertaken by particular congregations or groups of congregations.]

d. That presbyteries and synods supply their churches with information on area organizations that deliver education on marriage, parenting, and singleness; hold marriage and family enrichment events; offer marital and family counseling; assist people needing refuge from family oppression; sponsor divorce recovery programs; and facilitate adoption and family-extending relationships.

e. That the church's theological seminaries be urged to address family issues in their own communities, as well as family ministries issues and strategies in their curricula, field education training, research projects, and clinical pastoral education.<sup>2</sup>

f. That the General Assembly Council, through Congregational Ministries Division's Family and Single Adult Ministries Office, recommend, on CMD's Website and in its publications, useful resources relating to singles ministries, premarital counseling and premarital inventories, marriage and parenting education, marriage and family enrichment, marital and family counseling, domestic violence ministry, divorce recovery, Christian Families Week, adoption, and other family-extending relationships. [Where resources appropriate to Presbyterian churches are lacking, the Congregational Ministries Division shall consider publishing such resources.]

g. That the General Assembly Council, through National Ministries Division's Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) committee, urge employers to allow adequate time and provide sufficient wages and benefits for their employees to fulfill family responsibilities.

h. That synods, presbyteries, congregations, and individual Presbyterians in their own lives, occupations, and communities urge employers to offer more flexible work hours; more paid leave for the care of dependent persons and child-related activities; health insurance for all family members; telecommuting options; more possibilities for part-time jobs with prorated wages and benefits; family-supporting wages for all workers; and more available, affordable, and flexible child-care programs.

i. That General Assembly entities, synods, presbyteries, congregations, and individual Presbyterians "bring the church's influence to bear so that the media will act to strengthen moral values."<sup>3</sup> Inaccurate and demeaning pictures of family life, which encourage materialism, consumerism, individualism, and hedonism, should be contested. More attention should be paid to the nobler sides of singleness, marriage, parenting, adoption, and other family-extending relationships.

j. That the 216th General Assembly (2004) urge synods, presbyteries, congregations, and individual Presbyterians to advocate for local, state, and federal legislation that might strengthen family life. The following broad purposes, in the assembly's judgment, should be pursued in such legislation:

(1) Expand educational programs conveying information, attitudes, and habits conducive to healthy relationships in marriage, singleness, and other family situations.

(2) Affirm and advocate for tax codes, entitlement programs, and conditions of employment that assist all families. When revenues are lost or extra expenditures incurred through abolishing "marriage penalties," the resulting shortfall should not be made up at the expense of programs that serve the poor.

(3) Make generous financial support available for the care of children and other dependents. Such support should not discriminate among those who choose to have dependent family members at home, those who choose commercial care, and those who choose other care arrangements. The goal is to ensure quality, affordable, and safe care for every child and dependent.

(4) Induce employers to offer more flexible work hours, more paid leave for the care of dependent persons and child-related activities, more telecommuting options, more possibilities for part-time jobs with prorated wages and benefits, family-supporting wages for all workers, and more available, affordable, and flexible child care programs.

(5) Ensure “the right of every person to have access to quality health care that is adequate, affordable, and accountable” as a necessity for family life.<sup>4</sup>

k. That the Presbyterian Washington Office (and other appropriate General Assembly offices) convey these policy concerns to political leaders and church members; and that they monitor legislation addressing these concerns, reporting to Presbyterians when they have an opportunity to influence such legislation.

l. That the Board of Pensions make presbyteries, sessions, and plan members more aware of the assistance that is available to facilitate adoptions by pension plan members.

m. That the report be approved as a whole for churchwide study and use.

n. That the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) be directed to prepare a related study/action guide for churchwide study.

o. That the Stated Clerk be directed to publish the entire report “Transforming Families” in the Minutes; and that the Office of the General Assembly be directed to place the report “Transforming Families” with study/action guide on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s Website, to distribute it to the middle governing bodies and their resource centers, to sessions, and to the libraries of the theological seminaries, making additional copies available for sale to aid study and implementation efforts in the church.

p. That this assembly expresses appreciation to the members of the Task Force on Changing Families, the Changing Families Synod Consultation, the Changing Families Panel, the staff of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Theology and Worship Office, and others who offered comments and suggestions in the development of this report on behalf of the whole church.

q. That the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) report back to the 217th General Assembly (2006) on the progress it has made implementing these recommendations.]

Rationale

Introduction

An examination of the issue of changing families and changing social structures that support families on behalf of strengthening the church’s ministry requires attention not only to the theological heritage that informs our inquiry but also to the situation of U.S. families in today’s society. Moreover, consideration of social structures that support families is only part of the task. When we cast a critical eye on contemporary life in our nation, we see structures, systems, institutions, and cultural values that do not support families, but rather often undermine them. For the church’s ministry to be truly in touch with cultural reality and the actual struggles of families requires the discernment to sort out the pushes and pulls to which cultural and socioeconomic pressures subject them. In the two sections that follow, the church is offered two approaches to sorting out what is going on with families. Although the two are integrally connected, cultural and socioeconomic analyses offer somewhat different angles of vision. Exploration of the cultural values that shape us provides a way of assessing the damage done by the materialism, consumerism, hyperindividualism, and hedonism that saturate the culture that is part of us even as we are part of it. Socioeconomic analysis alerts us to the impact of our global economy, of our governmental structures and policies, and of the institutional arrangements of our work places, religious organizations, and other affiliations on family life. One gives us a way to address personal responsibility and irresponsibility in interpersonal and familial relations; the other gives us a way to address the conditions in our social environment that severely limit our room to make good choices and to create and maintain faithful family covenants of mutuality.

A. Cultural Context

1. Cultural Influence on Families

While large-scale social and cultural changes have profoundly shaped family life in recent times, there are other kinds of changes that families also experience. In modern societies, families still serve as a central institution for most people as they move through the stages of life. Families are typically the first and last source of support for individuals. At their best, they provide the first experience of unconditional love and acceptance. They are the first place where individuals practice the virtue of interdependence and develop the capacity for a responsible relation to self and others. Yet at different stages of life, people are bonded with one another differently as their needs, interests, and capacities change. Some of these changes are related to the life cycle development of individual family members. Family experience at any given time is profoundly shaped by how the developmental needs and issues of its members interact. Every family changes over time as its members mature and age.<sup>5</sup>

Families also experience change in less predictable and continuous ways through the impact of crisis experiences: illness, bereavement, estrangement, divorce, unemployment, discrimination, substance abuse, crime, victimization, and other disruptive events. Today, there are many configurations of people who lovingly bond as family in difficult situations. These include mutually adoptive families (where older youth who are homeless or from dysfunctional families are blended in by non-kin); organization-adopted families (in which a congregation as a whole, a community organization, or individual mentors become family to youth who are resettled refugees or who cannot live at home); shared parenting (in which a parent away at college or career visits with the other parent and child when possible); and grandparenting in place of parents. Few other human relationships are as affected as families are by the intimacy that bearing life's joys and burdens together creates.

At times of crisis, all families, regardless of family form or the cause of the crisis, should expect to find the support, solace, and encouragement of the Christian faith through the ministries of the church. Members of a congregation grounded in Christ and being transformed by the Holy Spirit can surely be expected to care for each other.<sup>6</sup> As Paul taught the Christians in Galatia: "Bear one another's burdens, and in this way you will fulfill the law of Christ" (Gal. 6:2, NRSV). Caregiving is a fundamental expression of the commitment and love with which Christians serve one another beyond biological ties and express the inclusive compassion of God. Yet both universal experiences of change and unanticipated events occur in particular social and cultural contexts. Cultures organize these events socially, interpret them, and guide individuals and families through them. This is the "cultural context" that shapes the intersection of family and congregational life. In formulating church policies for changing families, it is necessary to take into account how the particular features of U.S. culture, particularly the values and meanings that predominate in our society, influence families' experiences of change and the church's response.

Much has been written about the impact of U.S. culture on the family, and much of this literature raises disturbing issues. The U.S. values of self-sufficiency, respect for privacy, and individualism tend to cause those in need to be reluctant to seek help from the church. These values, as well as the impact of job mobility and time stress, may make church members reticent about contacting those who need care. In addition, the economic cost of caregiving is greatly increasing. As a result, care needs, especially long-term needs, are being met more and more by commercial providers while forms of congregational caregiving are relegated to the paid staff of the church. When this professionalization happens, congregational affirmations of love and faithfulness may seem hollow. As communities grounded in the love of God, congregations must struggle to resist the values and social forces that isolate people from one another and that depersonalize care. Earl Shelp and Ronald Sunderland remind us of our vocation:

God calls people to faith and community. Responding to God in love requires responding to God's children in love. Congregations in most instances are not gifted to meet all the needs of a member or family in crisis. But, without exception, congregations are gifted to be a sustaining presence in solidarity with broken people, bearing their burdens with them. There is hope for care giving among God's people because God continues to sustain the community called church.<sup>7</sup>

As cultural forces change patterns of social life, the church is called by God to use its imagination to create new ways of becoming Christ's community of effective and loving care.

2. U.S. Cultural Values

a. Materialism

There is much to appreciate in the material and technological progress that many U. S. families enjoy. The progress in better housing and modern home appliances has contributed to saving time, reducing labor, and enabling more shared participation in household tasks by family members. Affordable and safer automobiles have contributed to greater mobility and comfort in family travel. An abundant supply of food makes better nutrition possible for most families. Greatly improved medical technology and new pharmaceuticals have made better health care a possibility for many families. Communication technology has contributed to increasing educational opportunities for the general population and significantly improved worker productivity. The enjoyment of this domestic material progress is related to family income and, therefore, not equally accessible to all families. The persistence of poverty in the midst of abundance is a matter of basic justice and should deeply challenge the church and society. An equally important challenge is the value system that surrounds our material abundance.

Most U.S. families experience the enormous and pervasive impact of materialistic values on family life. Materialism is a pervasive cultural belief system in which the accumulation of material things is given ultimate value, defining individual and family success. Materialism influences what we think is important, how we spend our time as well as our money, how we frame the goals of our lives, and how we judge the value of other persons. The pressure to be “successful” in the sense of achieving material symbols of economic success, or of providing ever-increasing material benefits to one’s family and children, is often overwhelming. Many families, while well off by the standards of the world and even of this society, struggle to keep pace with the constant commodification and commercialization of middle- and upper-income U.S. lifestyles. Parents realize that doors open to their children depending on parents’ abilities to afford lessons, equipment, and practice time for activities that become sources of community, of belonging, for children. Families in stigmatized groups are tempted to buy social acceptance by buying status-identified products and activities.

In a materialistic culture, no upper limit to the accumulation of things is recognized. Moreover, “needs” expand due to both technological advancements and the powerful and constant drive of the economy to produce and sell new products. Where once a typewriter was sufficient, now high-speed Internet connections for computers are a necessity. Where once children shared bedrooms, now houses are built to accommodate individual bedrooms and baths for each member. Where a vacant lot once served every season’s sport, now scheduled participation in leagues is purchased along with the correct sport-specific attire and costly equipment.

Materialism tends to draw families into a more narrow and self-centered value system. While we may not agree with everything in his description, social ethics scholar Jack Nelson Pallmeyer puts the influence of materialism this way:

... we would all do well to assess our conduct in relation to values. If we did so honestly, I think it would become apparent that in our society things are more valued than relationships; money beyond essential needs is valued more than time with our children; ideological certainty more than diversity; individualism more than community; career more than family time; distorted masculinity more than peace in our homes and in our society; bombs more than schools; affluence isolated amid suburbs, gated communities, and guard dogs more than shared wealth and safer cities; and, perhaps most important, excessive consumption for some of our citizens is cherished more than social equality, the health of the environment, or the well-being of future generations.<sup>8</sup>

As Nelson-Pallmeyer indicates, the negative effects of materialism are multiple. Materialism tends to overshadow the important interpersonal values embedded in relationships based on care, love, mutuality, and loyalty. It can draw families away from cultivating among themselves and their children the values and pleasures that come from a non-calculating love of one another, community, knowledge, the arts, and even work. Materialism also tends to deny the social mandate of our faith that is rooted in God’s gracious love for all of God’s children: a divine love that is expressed in our redemption and in God’s passion for social justice. We confess God’s claim on us to be a people who will embody the image of God in the way we live and relate to all others. Materialism may cause us to neglect what John Calvin called the “rule of love” for both neighbors and enemies that leads to the “rule of moderation,” in which we practice a self-giving commitment for a common good.<sup>9</sup>

Many middle- and upper-income families wrestle with achieving a balance between what is necessary and what is enough. They wrestle with when to say “no” when cost is not at issue, but wasteful consumption is the issue. The crisis of affluent families goes deeper. It is a crisis that is spiritual and relational. Materialism sets before us false goals and false gods. It calls us to give our lives to work that rewards us with the financial power to own more things and gain more social status. It does not ask, nor does it want us to ask, the value of our work to meet the real needs of all families, communities, and the environment. Materialism may lead some families into an excess of things, overconsumption, in contrast to the virtue of frugality that Calvin taught. Frugality does not mean a devaluing of material goods. It is not a form of asceticism. On the contrary, frugality values the earth and all the material goods necessary for human fulfillment. It is a valuing rooted in God's love for all people.

The 1981 statement, "The Power to Speak Truth to Power," adopted by both the Presbyterian Church in the United States and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., states in part: "God calls Christians living in affluence to develop a lifestyle of frugality which assists human fulfillment while releasing scarce resources for use by the poor."<sup>10</sup> The 208th General Assembly (1996) also affirmed that church's commitment to the essential economic virtue of frugality in its statement, Hope for a Global Future: Toward a Just and Sustainable Human Development. That statement calls for "a basic reconception of the 'good life'" in less materialistic and more frugal terms. Fulfillment should instead be found "through the abundance of genuinely caring and mutually supportive community in Christ, and through adventurous faithfulness in response to God's call to restore creation, and discover the contemporary meaning of doing justice, loving kindness, and walking humbly with our God (Micah 6:8, NRSV)."<sup>11</sup> The statement further enriches the meaning of both frugality and the "contentment" of the good life:

Frugality denotes moderation, temperance, thrift, cost-consciousness, efficient usage, and a satisfaction with material sufficiency—similar to the "contentment" celebrated in the first letter to Timothy (6:6–10). As a norm for the economic activity of both individuals and societies, frugality means morally disciplined production and consumption for higher ends, such as the common good.<sup>12</sup>

Materialism may also distort our sense of time. Time is money, we are told. So there is little time for parents to discern and teach their own values, values that may run counter to those of a materialistic culture and economy. There is no time for the unproductive activity of being with children "wasting time" in play or prayer. There is little time for being neighborly or engaging in local participatory community building. When time is seen primarily as money, the time required for significant caregiving of dependent others or the time required for responsible citizenship takes valued time out of the workplace. The needs of children, families, and community are simply too expensive when time is money. Today in the U.S., the time needed to care for children, the elderly, neighbors, other dependent persons, and our intimate relationships receives little social support. Sylvia Ann Hewlett and Cornel West lament this loss of social support for the important work of parents. Their comments could also be extended to apply to families caring for any type of dependent person.

More than any other wealthy nation, the U. S. expects individual parents to foot the child-raising bill from childbirth all the way through college, and more than any other wealthy nation, America is facing profound and systemic child neglect. ... In an age that venerates the market, relying solely on parental altruism to underwrite the costs of raising children is risky for the nation and cruel for the child. Try as they undoubtedly do, millions of contemporary parents are simply too stretched and squeezed to do a stellar job.<sup>13</sup>

Job insecurity, inadequate wages, decreased corporate loyalty to employees, soaring compensation for executives, diminished health, vacation, and retirement benefits for employees, increasing job mobility, and mandatory overtime create immense time pressures and emotional stress on all types of families. Many U.S. families struggle to provide the bare minimum of shelter and sustenance for their members through long work hours, often at more than one job and at odd hours. A culture of materialism, by ignoring the balance Christians seek between overconsumption by some and the deprivation of others, threatens the human development and well-being of many people living on earth today as well as the many more who will be born into a depleted earth. The growth of inequality in income and wealth in the U.S. fragments our communities and our churches, divides our families, and diminishes our capacity as children of God to be stewards of the common good. A culture of materialism threatens our very relationship with God, who is the source of all things.

b. Consumerism

Consumerism is one of the products of a materialistic culture. In consumerism, individuals and families come to understand themselves, and their purpose in life, primarily as buyers. We live to buy; we work to buy; we educate to enhance purchasing power. Leisure is often characterized by the pleasure of buying. Going to shopping malls has become a major source of entertainment. The negative impact of consumerism causes people to focus their sense of self around material consumption. It reduces the understanding of human freedom to a sense of individual freedom exercised by choosing what to consume based on what we believe to be personal preferences. Even the sense of responsibility for others is too often met through purchases. Expression of love between family members, as well as care for others, is too easily reduced to the purchase of things or services. Consumerism diverts human and financial resources from being invested to build up and transform human life.

Consumerism is undeniably promoted and shaped in profound and pervasive ways by mass media: television, radio, film, videos, music, and the Internet. Families are barraged daily with the message of consumption through commercial advertising, including billboards, school, television, internet connections, park benches, and even clothing. Mass marketing encourages people to believe that our personal value depends on buying and using the right products. It presents consumer goods and expensive activities as replacements for time spent together as a family so that, even in leisure, family members are pulled in separate directions. Christian ethicist Larry Rasmussen speaks about the loss of what he calls “manifold engagement.” This is the relational aspect of routine activities that family members once did together: cutting the grass, preparing meals, playing neighborhood-lot baseball, pursuing hobbies, visiting neighbors and friends, giving a helping hand to others. Through these activities, families practice the skills of human relationship. From a Christian perspective, these are the routine family activities in which family members model and practice the Christian virtues of hospitality, care for the least, compassion, the valuing of every person, sensitivity to the needs of others, and passion for social justice. Through manifold engagement the Christian family, first rooted in the gathering of Christian community, nurtures Christian character.<sup>14</sup>

The decline of the family meal in the U. S. is a particularly telling and troubling indication of the family’s fragmentation and the “outsourcing” of its formerly unifying functions. According to Robert Putnam’s Bowling Alone (2000), only 34 percent of American families indicate that they usually eat together, which is a drop from 50 percent twenty years earlier.<sup>15</sup> This trend is all the more noteworthy in light of consistent research findings that eating together, regardless of family form, teens’ gender, and socioeconomic level, correlates with lower children’s rates of smoking, drinking, drug use, and sex at an early age and with higher rates of school success and healthy eating habits.<sup>16</sup>

The recovery of this crucial corporate connection should not be accomplished by burdening the woman of the household with the entire second shift of labor that precedes, accompanies, and follows family meals. Justice as well as charity should begin at home. Not only is the family table the primary grade of schooling for church membership and democratic citizenship; we can also learn there to share both the responsibilities and joys of being members of the same body (1 Cor. 12). As we consume food that we had a part in selecting, preparing, and maybe even growing or researching, and as we converse as critical consumers of the day’s news, the day’s media offerings, or the day’s class sessions, we cease to swallow whole what our culture feeds us. Instead, we partake as “companions” (sharers of the same bread). And if as families we welcome others to our tables or prepare meals together to take to the homeless, the hungry, or those in other crises, we also become “companions” of those who are missing meals against their will.

Christians cannot be defined primarily as consumers of material goods. We are first daughters and sons of God, redeemed by God’s love and called to participate in the building of God’s realm on earth. When we consume, then, we consume as children of a creating God who, having provided all the resources necessary for abundant life, intends that they be used to meet the needs of all God’s children, not just a few, while honoring the capacity of the earth to renew itself for future generations.<sup>17</sup>

c. Individualism

The North American prevailing culture highly values individualism, self-reliance, independence, and personal privacy—values that can stand in some tension with biblical concepts of a covenant community, responsibility for one another, and gratitude for the gracious gifts of a generous Creator. When individuality is understood to require respect and concern for the well-being of each person in all relationships, it reflects the biblical principle of God’s equal love for each person. In contrast to many other cultures, however, the predominant North American culture tends to treat the individual as the primary social unit rather than to emphasize the ties of kinship and community. This stress on the autonomy of individuals is sometimes expressed through our focus on the primacy of private property rights over community stake in a common good. Our consumer culture and its economic and social policies tend to promote an autonomous individualism that functions to fragment rather than strengthen families and communities. When individual rights become primary, communities and families are viewed as providers of services to an autonomous, self-interested individual, rather than as interdependent social units within which individual human character is formed. Family members may be treated as isolated individuals by employers, schools, social services, and even churches, rather than as interdependent members of a family and community.

The stress on individualism has had a particularly devastating impact on racial ethnic communities that practice different, group-based values. For example, in its report, "Family Preservation: Concepts in American Indian Communities," the National Indian Child Welfare Association finds that the Eurocentric value system promoting nuclear families and individualism has fostered repression of native cultures. It has resulted in the implementation of policy that, in the words of the report, "fuels identity crises, family dysfunction, and community disintegration." By contrast, the report observes, Native American cultures "do not separate individuals from family or family from community; community, tribal custom, language, religion, and cultural practice are fundamental to family preservation." However, these community-oriented values were identified as "forms of socialism" by the dominant culture, and "the nuclear family lifestyle and an ethos of individualism were forcibly imposed in the effort to 'civilize' the Native American people."<sup>18</sup>

The African American population, while suffering from long and deep social, economic and cultural discrimination, nevertheless brings to U.S. culture a history of vital and nurturing family ties in a supportive community context. The appreciation of family history, the vitality of extended family, long experience of mutual burden bearing, and intergenerational support are significant parts of African American family life. The centrality of the church in African American family and community life is a strong witness to Christian values of sacrificial service, compassionate caring, and human development. Black leadership in the historic struggle for overcoming the oppression of slavery, securing civil rights, and gaining economic opportunity is a powerful reality that has strengthened African American family life and brought vitality to the whole U.S. church and society. In contrast to these strengths, it must be emphasized that the influence of prejudice and the persistence of institutional racism continue to have negative effects on African Americans in every area of family life.

A Hispanic Presbyterian has written: "One of the few things that unite all Hispanic/Latin people (from all over—from all walks of life) is the strong belief in the family ties. However, we are losing those ties because of the values promoted by the broader society where we now live."<sup>19</sup> Her firsthand knowledge is supported by recent census data related to Hispanic immigrant families. The statistics consistently reflect low rates of divorce and of single-parent families among the first generation of immigrants, followed by striking increases in marital disruption over time in the U. S., particularly in later generations.<sup>20</sup>

Immigrants from Korea find that their children absorb the U.S. culture and do not understand the Korean culture's emphasis on "filial piety," in which children are reared to have a sense of devotion and obligation to their parents. Instead, as these children become adults, they tend to relate to their elderly parents "on a more or less equal and voluntary basis."<sup>21</sup> Korean American families, in spite of the prevailing culture, tend to continue to maintain a strong sense of family tradition and loyalty.

For better or worse, the strong sense of individual freedom that pervades U.S. culture also enables persons to marry across cultural and religious lines without feeling constrained to remain within the traditions of their birth family. Consequently, the number of interfaith families is growing. They often experience both the richness of new discovery and the stress of conflicting norms and assumptions. Rearing children in interfaith families creates difficult decisions regarding whose tradition will be carried into the future. Some families attempt to rear children with dual religious identities, while others attempt to avoid conflict by raising their children without any religious affiliation. Both responses may be problematic for the spiritual growth of children. To the extent that some persons enter an interfaith marriage with the intention to seek the conversion of a spouse, the positive value of individuality—that is, valuing all persons and their responses to God's activity in their lives—is undermined and violated.<sup>22</sup> For these and other reasons, many communities of faith regard interfaith marriages as problematic, as possibly causing religious syncretism, and as being destructive of people's faithful adherence to their religious traditions. Presbyterians need to be aware of the attitudes of other religious traditions and of the possibilities and problems of such relationships before entering into or officiating at interfaith marriages.

Even within the Eurocentric tradition, many have raised growing concerns about the impact of individualism on families, communities, and the future of a democratic society. The now-classic research into the white, middle class by Robert Bellah and his four co-authors of Habits of the Heart found individuals who “had no grounds for moral commitments beyond self-referential ones, no strong moral reference points beyond their own therapeutic selves and the pain, often depression, those self-absorbed entities seemed endlessly to recycle.”<sup>23</sup> They found a society in which biblical and civic individualism, both of which tie personal identity to community membership, were no longer able to balance or counteract utilitarian and expressive individualism. Utilitarian individualism calculates everything in terms of economic and material pay-off, and it believes that the combination of everyone’s pursuit of economic well-being will automatically result in the best conditions for all. Expressive individualism, in turn, measures every relationship, association, and activity for its emotional pay-off. It eschews long-term commitments on the chance of finding more self-fulfillment elsewhere.

Larry Rasmussen describes what he calls “the middle-class child’s cultural catechism” as “Gather to yourself all you can—experience, knowledge, goods, skills. Make your own world, as you see fit, and enjoy it. Grow for all you are worth, in every way. Never close off any options.”<sup>24</sup> As a mantra of self-reliance, denial of interdependence, and a fear of dependence, this individualism is destructive of persons, families, and communities. It understands human freedom primarily as a right to be left alone, to be free from the needs and desires of others. It strips justice of any substance, limiting it to those procedures that protect the rights and privileges of individuals. Such radical individualism relinquishes social responsibility for significant issues that frame the quality of national life. It constantly works to reduce what used to be called a “social wage”; that is, the share of national resources distributed according to the needs of human community rather than by market forces (for example, public education, parks, transportation, museums, and the social support system). It tends to reduce social morality to individual politeness.

The spirit of individualism in U.S. culture (as distinguished from the religious value of individuality and the God-given dignity of each person) weakens understanding and appreciation of the important ways in which human life, in families and communities, is inevitably interdependent. It also weakens the valuable place that true forms of dependency and interdependency play in human relations. Everyone arrives in this world totally dependent. All of us will experience additional times of dependency throughout our lives, especially in our later years. The continuation of generations depends upon this flow of giving and receiving care. Therefore, contempt for the positive and essential roles that dependency and interdependency play in family and community life contributes to their fragmentation. At the same time, expressive and utilitarian individualism weakens public support for the kinds of services, resources, and public policies that families and communities need to resist these fragmenting pressures. Christian ethicist Emilie Townes characterizes this pattern as the error of “stressing personal responsibility while detesting dependency.” She points out that from the perspective of dispossessed communities, “the notion of uninhibited personal freedom remains a utopian folly.” Social policies that focus on individual responsibility while detesting the shared responsibilities of society reflect “a basic inability or unwillingness to recognize structural sins and/or inequalities.”<sup>25</sup> The mantra of individualism serves to hide from us our essential connectedness with others, those close to us as well as those affected by our choices that we never see.

Once again the media, in all their forms, play a significant role in shaping perspectives on human relationships: family, marriage, partnering, parenthood, and social responsibility. Much of what the media portray about relationships is trivializing or outright hostile. Fathers may be characterized as ridiculous and incompetent; mothers as inept and overly emotional. Marriage is both romanticized as totally fulfilling life’s purpose and at the same time treated with contempt through routine portrayals of dysfunctional and manipulative behaviors in which each individual pursues his or her personal agenda. Casual sexual encounters are presented as the norm of adult sexuality; sexual activity is presented as the obsession of every adult life. Children cannot easily be protected from a daily consumption of distorted relations and hyper-individualism, consumerism, materialistic values, and gratuitous violence that is clearly inappropriate and may be developmentally harmful for some children at certain ages. Parental efforts to limit television and Internet access at home provide only partial control over a market-driven culture in which mass-marketed images appear everywhere. Concerns about the influence of media on families are reflected in long-standing positions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Specifically, the PC(USA) stands opposed to censorship and strongly supports the rights protected by the First Amendment. However, it also calls upon Presbyterians to develop strategies by which to condemn false values communicated through media and to influence what media present.<sup>26</sup>

d. Hedonism

Hedonism is the pursuit of pleasure or happiness as the purpose of life. It tends to be closely associated with the expressive individualism that is focused on personal fulfillment and self-satisfaction. It can be the driving motivation that leads people to seek pleasure in compulsive consumption of food, sexual gratification, high-risk adventure, and material possessions. Affluent societies are especially tempted by the culture of narcissism or self-love. Opportunities for pleasure seeking are abundant. Whole industries are built on selling pleasure through entertainment, alcoholic consumption, narcotic release from stress, instant material gratification using charge cards, and the exploitation of others for pleasure. Hedonism flourishes in cultures of materialistic consumerism. Hedonism fails to understand that happiness is a byproduct of positive and mutually fulfilling relationships.

In families, the hedonistic pursuit of pleasure and happiness tends to create misuse of resources, competition for time instead of cooperative collaboration, pursuit of fulfillment away from home, and diversion of human energy from core relationships, resulting in internal distress and ongoing conflict. Of course there is need for personal relaxation, stress reduction, and wholesome vocational activity. Not all of one's activity can or should be with other family members; there is need for creative balance in life. It is the tendency for family members to go off on individualistic tangents seeking purely personal expression and pleasure that becomes dysfunctional in contemporary family life. This type of behavior contributes to the destruction of the family as a cohesive, nurturing, and supportive body. The church needs to create new ways for families to learn that in sharing we receive and that in responsible community our individuality can be transformed and affirmed.

3. Church and Culture

The church itself may unwittingly contribute to the fragmentation of families and communities in its own life and witness. When church practices and programs are primarily defined by age or gender, for example, the church appears to be replicating our culture's fragmentation of family members into individual consumers. In contrast, all church members need a variety of ways to build and sustain their identity with the whole family of God. Children need to see adults worship and to join them in worship. Adults need to bridge separations by age, gender, race, income, and family form that mirror social inequalities. Additionally, church programs may unintentionally serve the needs of certain forms of families over others. Families with special needs, families caring for dependent adults, families of children with disabilities, interfaith families, single people who live alone, couples with children and couples without children—all need intentional practices that support, include, and value them as families. Ronald Peters suggests that the analogy of the extended family, long practiced in communities of African-diasporan descent, could serve as a paradigm for local congregations. In their ministries with families and communities facing oppressive realities, the churches of these communities ministered as a “helping institution particularly in the areas of caring, education, nurture, economic development, political thought, as well as religious instruction.” Peters argues that Jesus' response to family was to extend relational connections beyond blood and legal relations to include all who seek to do God's will, exercising inclusiveness across social divisions. As extended family, the church does not divide life into sacred and secular spaces, but “is inherently holistic in its approach to reality.”<sup>27</sup>

In summary, the gravest danger that faces all U.S. Christians is the corrupting influence of the popular American values of materialism, consumerism, individualism and hedonism on our theologies, ethics, liturgical practices, and church programs. The pursuit of happiness as our culture defines it can come to dictate the teachings and the daily practices of our church organizations, as well as in our times of worship. What do our organizational and liturgical practices communicate? To what extent do those cultural values that have served to divide us by race, gender, physical and mental abilities, and economic location also continue to divide the church family? The church does not exist as an end in itself. It is not a substitute community for the lack of community in U.S. society. Nor is it a haven for stressed people and their families. The church exists as a community of transformation that arises out of a different understanding of the meaning and purpose of human life. It exists as a larger community of faith, called into being by God to form “the people of the Way.” It exists to form our families, in all of their diversity, for journeying in discipleship together.

As the pace of life increases in speed, the challenges of life increase in complexity, and the gap increases between those with the means for leisure and those without the means for daily bread, the church—to be the church—must rediscover and newly proclaim the grace of the Sabbath gift.<sup>28</sup> In God’s creation of a day of rest, the greedy nature of human work to expand its purposes into every minute of every day is capped. As John Calvin said simply, “On the Sabbath, we cease our work so God can do God’s work with us.”<sup>29</sup> On Sabbath we are to become quiet in order to remember that we are not our own, that our life is not our own, that our possessions are not our own, that even our families are not our own. Being God’s, we learn to live in a world that is God’s among people who are God’s. When we receive Sabbath grace, we become prepared to walk as People of the Way, even when that Way sets us apart from the values of our culture. In reclaiming the meaning of the Sabbath gift, the church reclaims time and space for twenty-first century U.S. Christians. It seeks to become a fountain of alternative values flowing from communion with the living God: reclaiming rest for exhausted families, opening lives to God’s purposes, breathing thankfulness, and expanding our capacity to be a loving community of transformation. When the church is the church, Christian families of every form are known by the transforming power of their practices at home and in the wider society.

Prayer: Ever-loving Savior, who comes to us in our brokenness and transforms our lives through healing mercy, we confess to you that our nation is not always a healthy place for many of your families. Too often we have erred and gone astray, following after false cultural idols that whisper to us of security and success. Too often we have not encouraged families to dare to place the values of your Gospel above those of the prevailing culture. Too often we as a church have not spoken your prophetic word or acted your redeeming deed; we have instead remained silent, not daring to speak out against popular opinion. Forgive us, redeeming Lord, and renew our vision. Grant us the courage to place you and your love at the core of our family lives, and at the center of our communities and of our nation. Amen.

B. Socioeconomic Context

Study of sociological data helps to fulfill the mandate of the 209th General Assembly (1997),<sup>30</sup> stated at the beginning of this report, by discovering the current forms of U.S. families and the cultural and economic forces that shape them. From our biblical and confessional heritage, we know that Christian families face every age and culture with ambivalence—in some ways conforming to cultural family norms, yet striving to embody culture-transforming Christian identities. By helping us to understand why family life is changing, the social sciences contribute to the church’s development of authentic ministries for all families.<sup>31</sup>

First, we need to acknowledge who we are as Presbyterians.<sup>32</sup> According to the “2003–2005 Background Report” of the Presbyterian Panel, although racial ethnic persons now comprise more than 20 percent of the U.S. population, 97 percent of the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) identify themselves as white. The 2000–2002 survey reported that 2 percent of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) members were those of African-diasporan descent, 2 percent were Asian and Pacific Islanders, and less than 2 percent were persons of Hispanic, Latino, and Spanish origin. (Census forms allow checking more than one racial ethnic identification.) This racial ethnic make-up has remained essentially unchanged for more than twenty years. The median age of our members has been slowly rising, from forty-nine years in 1973 to fifty-five years in 2003. Sixty-one percent of members are women, as are half of elders and 23 percent of pastors. About 52 percent of us are employed, while one-third of us are retired. Seventy-seven percent of members are currently married, as are more than 80 percent of clergy. At the time of the 2000–2002 survey, only 19 percent of the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) had been divorced (compared to 21 percent of the U.S. population).<sup>33</sup> The median annual family income of our members is $72,000 while that of our elders is $71,600, placing the median family income of our families well above that of most U.S. families ($51,407 in 2001).<sup>34</sup> Most Presbyterians, then, are members of white, middle- and upper-income families. As we look at the data describing the rest of the U.S. population, we need to recognize the differing circumstances of most U.S. families. Understanding cultural, racial, and economic differences may be a key to reversing the decline in Presbyterian membership as well as its cultural, racial, and economic homogeneity.

1. What Remains the Same

As we look at how families are changing in the U.S., it is important that we keep in mind how much remains the same. While concern is often expressed about the future of marriage, it is still true that most people in the United States express the desire to marry for life and to raise their own children to be healthy and competent adults. Strong majorities of U.S. teenagers continue to report that a good marriage and family life are extremely important to them.<sup>35</sup> Most marriages, 55–60 percent, do indeed last until death. Marriage remains a blessing for most people. Married people continue to report higher levels of happiness and health than do single individuals. They live longer, are less likely to engage in risky behavior, and show fewer symptoms of anxiety and depression. Marriage continues to provide an economic benefit as two adults share resources. Household incomes of married people are higher, on average, than those of single people. While it is likely that people who have already achieved a good level of health and financial stability are more apt to marry, research also suggests that marriage is a cause of many positive outcomes.<sup>36</sup> It is also true, however, that most individuals who remain single by choice or circumstance are able to pursue fully happy and complete lives as single persons.

It remains the case that most children are raised by their biological parents, and those biological parents are successful in raising their children. Fully 90 percent of their children become competent adults who are able to form lasting intimate relations and participate successfully in education and employment. It is also true that most single mothers and most stepfamilies are successful in raising healthy and competent children. Seventy-five to eighty percent of the children of single mothers and stepfamilies score in the normal range of achievement and adjustment tests.

2. Marriage

Marriage is extremely important to people in the U.S.: 90 percent marry at some point, and of those who divorce, 70 percent re-marry. Married couple households make up about 53 percent of all households. While this percentage represents a decline from 71 percent in 1970, it should be remembered that such households make up only one stage in the life cycle. Today the later age of first marriage and longer life expectancy contribute to more single person households. Research shows that marriage is associated with many positive outcomes for women and men. As noted above, married people are, on the whole, happier, healthier, better off financially, and more likely to be employed than are single people. Successful marriages do more than simply avoid divorce. Successful marriages share a commitment to marriage as an institution; achieve a mutually supportive relationship built on respect, liking, support, and mutual interests; and develop a sense of partnership in life. Good marriages build up a history of goodwill and trust, of remembered joyful events and shared sorrows that enable couples to handle new problems as they arise.<sup>37</sup> Moreover, family research provides strong evidence that, on average, children do better in healthy, intact, two-parent (biological) families than they do in stepfamilies, adopted families, or single-parent families. Specifically, 90 percent of children in first marriage families score within the normal range of achievement and adjustment outcomes.<sup>38</sup> Thus, the vision of family life and marital mutuality found in the Confession of 1967 reflects an arrangement of intimate life that is profoundly good and an accurate expression of a great many people's hopes and expectations.

3. Divorce

The U.S. also has the highest divorce rate in the world. Today, within a forty-year period, almost half of first marriages end in divorce, as do more than half of second marriages.<sup>39</sup> Divorce rates, which had increased gradually since the 19th century, rose steeply in the second half of the 20th century, plateaued around 1988, and fell slightly thereafter. While there is no consensus in explaining the divorce rate, social scientists name several factors:

a. Transitions in Gender Role Expectations

One of the most striking changes in U.S. families has been the entrance of most wives and mothers into the workforce. In 1951, only 19.9 percent of wives worked in paid labor; by 1999, 47.6 percent did.<sup>40</sup> The sharpest increase occurred in the employment of white wives and mothers. In 1950, white women's labor force participation rate was less than 30 percent. By 2000, it was 59.8 percent. In comparison, the labor force participation rate of women of African-diasporan descent has consistently exceeded that of white women: 41 percent in 1900 and 63.2 percent in 2000.<sup>41</sup> By the turn of the 21st century, working mothers and, in married-couple families, two working parents are a norm that includes:<sup>42</sup>

- 75 percent of all mothers with children under the age of 18,
- 60 percent of mothers in married couple families with children under the age of six,

- 68 percent of single mothers with children under six,
- 57 percent of all mothers with children under the age of 3, and
- 51 percent of all mothers with children younger than one year.

Certainly one reason for this striking change in families is the success of the women's movement in gaining more education and more equal opportunities for women. However, research indicates that changes in gender role expectations have an impact on marital accord as couples renegotiate patterns of family life that once could be taken for granted.<sup>43</sup> In addition, while men are still the primary earners in most families, most women, even career women, experience marriage as a double shift. That is, women continue to have primary responsibility for children, other dependent persons, and domestic work while also being employed.<sup>44</sup> Some men respond by taking on more household tasks and creating more egalitarian relations. Others respond with an even greater emphasis on rigid gender roles. But studies confirm that employed women work more hours a week and have less leisure time than their husbands.<sup>45</sup> Consequently, many of today's marriages are sites of an imbalance of power and work responsibilities that is accompanied by increased conflict. Although three-fourths of women workers earn less than $25,000 annually, women's increased potential to support themselves may be a factor in allowing women and men to consider leaving conflicted marriages.

Gender roles are also affected by economic stress (discussed below). Studies show that declining male wages and women's engagement in wage work undermine some white men's traditional self-identity as the providers of their families.<sup>46</sup> Racial ethnic communities do not escape gender tension. For example, while most wives in South Korea do not work outside the home, most married Korean women in the U.S. do in order to assure the economic survival of their families. Yet many of these women would agree that it is best if a mother does not have to work for income. Consequently, Korean women in the U.S. are likely to work outside the home while holding more traditional gender beliefs and bearing almost all the responsibility for household tasks since such work is not what men traditionally do in Korea. In the U.S., Korean men face the frustrations of lost economic status and the inability to support their families with their work. This clash of traditional Korean gender roles with economic reality in the U.S. may contribute to the higher rate of divorce among Korean women and men in the U.S. than in Korea.<sup>47</sup>

b. Economic Stress and Deprivation

For most families, economic need sent wives and mothers into the workforce. Between 1979 and 1995, real hourly wages fell for the bottom 70 percent of wage earners.<sup>48</sup> For the median wage male worker, the wage decline amounted to about 15 percent. The share of workers earning poverty-level wages increased from 27.1 percent in 1979 to over 30 percent in 1995 before dropping back to 25 percent in 2000.<sup>49</sup> As a result, between 1979 and 1998 middle-income families would have seen a significant loss in income if wives had not added their paid work.

In addition to wages, an entire web of security once linked to men's employment is unraveling. United States families face lost or reduced employer-sponsored health insurance coverage, rising employee contributions and co-payments, and longer waiting periods before eligibility. The percentage of employees covered by defined-benefit pension plans has dropped significantly. While 401Ks offer greater employment flexibility, they require larger employee contributions and are subject to the fluctuations of the stock market. Economic pressures cause U.S. families to spend more time in the workplace. Between 1970 and 1990, the average American worker added 164 hours of employed work—a month of work—to their work year. In 2000, the average number of hours worked by U.S. workers exceeded that of any other industrialized nation.<sup>50</sup> In the last thirty years, middle-income, married-with-children families have added twenty more weeks of work time mostly through wives' employment.<sup>51</sup> Most U.S. families deal with declining real wages and benefits and increasing fears about job instability by adding more workers to the workforce and by spending more time at work. Insufficient time and economic insecurity are major sources of stress in many U.S. families.

Three decades of research substantiate the claim that economic stress and deprivation increase marital conflict and the likelihood of divorce.<sup>52</sup> Divorce rates are generally higher among lower-income families and less educated people. They are higher for couples of African-diasporan descent than for white couples (see statistics below). Researchers point to the economic conditions that plague the daily life of low-income families: higher rates of unemployment, greater job instability, inadequate income, insecure and inadequate housing, and less access to health care, transportation, and other needs. Studies that look at the relationship between deteriorated economic contexts and marriage rates find that marriage rates drop when men experience high unemployment and low earnings.<sup>53</sup> Other studies show that earnings stability and income levels correlate positively with rising marriage rates.<sup>54</sup> Recent studies of the impact of welfare reform have found that when two-parent families were supported by a combination of work, income supplements, and work supports (childcare, transportation, etc.), they were almost 40 percent less likely to separate or divorce.<sup>55</sup>

c. New Expectations for Marriage

Research indicates that men and women have developed new standards by which they evaluate marriage today. With the availability of safe and effective birth control, marriage is no longer an automatic indication of the intent to have children. With or without children, women and men expect marriage to be companionate; that is, an emotionally satisfying relationship that provides for individual development in a context of relational security.<sup>56</sup> Some interpret this change in expectations as evidence of an increasingly secularized view of marriage—marriage as a contract based on self-interest—rather than marriage as a covenantal relationship. The cultural emphasis on self-fulfillment may be replacing the covenantal emphasis on mutual commitment. Others point out that the egalitarian assumptions that underlie the theological concept of covenant were not met by the unequal gender roles in traditional marriages. From this latter perspective, it may be that the full promise of marriage as a covenantal relationship among equals has not been lost, but still lies in our future.

d. Response to Infidelity

Adultery has long been acknowledged as a legitimate reason for divorce. In the past, however, a sexual double standard, economic dependency, and social stigma often required wives to look the other way when husbands had affairs and supported mistresses. While it is extremely difficult to measure accurately the prevalence of adultery, current data suggests that about 50 percent of husbands and 30 percent of wives have had an affair in the course of their marriages. However, due to today's emphasis on the companionate marriage and gender equality, both women and men are much less willing to tolerate spousal infidelity. Monogamy remains an important norm in marriage.<sup>57</sup>

e. Erosion of Relationship

The decision to divorce is not easily arrived at for most people. Divorce is typically the result of a painful disintegration of a shared vision of marriage and family that occurs over a long period of time, preceded by long periods of conflict between spouses and lonely isolation. Women, who usually initiate divorce, think about it for a long time before arriving at this decision. In one study, half of the mothers thought about divorce for more than five years before finally deciding to file.<sup>58</sup> On the other hand, a majority of couples in low-conflict marriages, who once considered divorce but decided to remain married, report very happy marriages five years later.<sup>59</sup> This finding suggests that the church has a significant role to play in developing and providing marriage enrichment opportunities for couples in low-conflict marriages.

f. Domestic Violence

Research indicates that violence and the threat of violence play a role in about one-third of divorces. Physical violence was twice as high in families where the husband was unemployed as in families with an employed husband.<sup>60</sup> Serious and frequent quarreling was reported by another 30 percent of divorced parents.<sup>61</sup> According to the General Assembly policy statement, Turn Mourning into Dancing, we know that “domestic violence is of epidemic proportions. . . . [It] occurs in all types of family configurations and in every region of the United States, whether urban, suburban, or rural.”<sup>62</sup> In marital or intimate partner violence, most of the victims are women, and most of the abusers are men.<sup>63</sup> Recognizing the deep and long-lasting harm done to the victims of abuse and to those family members who witness abuse, the PC(USA) has recognized that reconciliation depends upon “the certainty and evidence that coercion and violence are no longer part of an abuser’s repertoire.”<sup>64</sup> Where that change is not evident, the church recognizes that the relationship has been lost.

4. Divorce and Children

Research literature on divorce indicates that concern for the well-being of children is often a central issue for those contemplating divorce. This concern is appropriate since studies show that children often experience divorce as “cataclysmic and inexplicable.”<sup>65</sup> To a child, a world that seemed safe and dependable suddenly became fearful and unstable. Family research presents convincing evidence that, on average, children do better in healthy, intact, two-biological-parent families than they do in stepfamilies, adopted families, or single-parent families. Specifically, 75–80 percent of children who have experienced divorce and 90 percent of children in intact families score within the normal range of achievement and adjustment. This leaves a significant 10–15 percent difference.<sup>66</sup> Research also shows that divorce and high levels of marital conflict among parents can be associated with a greater likelihood of divorce and lower marital quality among their offspring.<sup>67</sup> Knowing that children are most likely to do well in intact-families, many parents try to sustain marriages “for the sake of the children.” Today somewhat more than half of U.S. children live with both of their biological parents, less than 20 percent live in a stepfamily, and about one in four lives with a single (typically divorced or separated) parent.<sup>68</sup>

Concern for children may also be a reason for divorce. Research shows the long-term negative consequences for children who experience persistent marital discord.<sup>69</sup> Moreover, since children often begin to exhibit the difficulties associated with divorce a year or more before a divorce actually occurs, the negative effects usually associated solely with divorce may be, in fact, negative outcomes of disruptive behavior in deteriorating families.<sup>70</sup> However, if children move from a conflicted situation to one that is more harmonious and stable, they can become better adjusted than they were before the divorce. Researchers suggest that a stable environment is important for children following divorce. Parental love is important, and also “firm but responsive discipline” that teaches a child self-control.<sup>71</sup>

Because divorce is usually stressful and painful for children, researchers suggest ways to address and mitigate this pain. Judith Wallerstein points to three psychological factors that are protective for children of divorce as well as for children in intact families: reasonably harmonious and supportive relations between parents, the commitment and sensitivity of each parent to the child, and the maturity and morality of the parents. She writes:

Within the well-functioning two-parent or one-parent family, these three protective aspects of family life come together to provide an environment that is conducive to the healthy development of child and adult alike, a human environment that continuously changes to support the ever-changing needs of all family members.<sup>72</sup>

Divorce, through its trajectory of pre-divorce conflict, the period of the actual break-up, and the post-divorce adjustments, may well assault the protective factors that children need at any point along this process. Wallerstein advocates flexibility in policy responses to divorcing families that reflects the varying needs of children. She also advocates a one-year waiting period in which community resources are provided to families to help them shape divorce in ways that protect children.

Sara McLanahan’s research has documented that half of the 10–15 percent difference in outcomes between children raised by two biological parents and those raised by single mothers or stepfamilies was due to the low income of single-parent families. The other half was due to the effects of frequent residential moves experienced by single-parent and stepfamilies. Frequent relocation keeps families from establishing a stable community of friends and connections.<sup>73</sup> Having identified economic insecurity as the primary component in the disadvantages of single parenting, McLanahan strongly advocates public policies that would reduce the economic insecurity of children.

Mavis Hetherington points out that there is a good deal of variability in how individuals respond to the experiences of marital transitions. As she states, “Divorce does not inevitably produce permanent scars.”<sup>74</sup> For example, being caught in the middle of hostile parents or losing contact with the noncustodial parent can have significant negative effects on a child. She finds that providing a consistent, warm, supportive, and firm but responsive discipline buffers children from many of the stresses of divorce. For Hetherington, it is important to emphasize that, as was stated earlier, 75–80 percent of children from divorced families function as well as 90 percent from intact families.<sup>75</sup>

The question of the impact of divorce on children is a complicated one. Individual families differ, and individual cases cannot be accounted for by aggregate data. From the perspective of family researchers, the task is to account for the poorer performance of these children. Clearly, a warm, loving family of any form is a better environment for a child than a hostile, conflicted family of any form. The vast majority of children of intact families and a lesser majority of children of single-parent families, step-or-blended families, and adoptive families become well-adjusted adults. The church has a clear role in helping divorced parents to understand and address the special concerns of their children and in advocating public policies that reduce poverty.

5. Stepfamilies

Stepfamilies are created when one adult enters a relationship with another adult who is already a parent. Remarriage rates are high for divorced people: between 66–75 percent for women and between 70–80 percent for men. As a consequence, about a third of the U.S. population is now composed of “step-somethings”: stepparents, stepchildren, stepsiblings, and other steprelatives. More than half will experience being a step-something during their lifespan. However, divorce rates and problems in children’s adjustment are higher in remarriages than in first marriages.<sup>76</sup> Some social scientists have argued that because stepparents do not have a genetic investment in stepchildren, they are less likely to provide essential social investments.<sup>77</sup> Others point to the greater difficulties in negotiating the relationship between stepparents and stepchildren, the continuation of behaviors that undermined the first marriage, unrealistic expectations, and the remarried adults’ recognition that divorce can be survived if necessary.<sup>78</sup>

As was stated earlier, McLanahan attributes 60 percent of the different outcomes between children who have not experienced divorce and children in a stepfamily to the greater residential mobility that stepfamilies experience.<sup>79</sup> Mobility greatly weakens connections to friends, neighbors, and community resources. Hetherington and Kelly note that the creation of stepfamilies when children are younger than ten or older than fifteen has a higher success rate.<sup>80</sup> Ministry with stepfamilies should recognize that gender, parental, and extended family relationships within stepfamilies do not and cannot mirror the same patterns found in first-marriages. Ministry that respects flexibility and diversity in family roles and is informed by the practices of successful stepfamilies will be more effective in supporting stepfamilies.<sup>81</sup> From a theological perspective, stepfamilies and adoptive families remind us that blood kinship, or genetic investment, does not define the boundaries of our capacities to love and care for one another.

6. Single-Parent Families

A troubling change in U.S. families has been the dramatic rise in single-parent families. While statistical data may provide an overcount of single-parent families, the increase is undeniable.<sup>82</sup> It is estimated that about half of U.S. children will spend some of their childhood in a single-parent family, the vast majority of which are female-headed (94 percent in 1998). In 2000, while only 9 percent of all households were single parent-families, they comprised 31 percent of all families with children under 18. According to the 2000 census, 35 percent of single-mother families were the result of divorce, 18 percent were the result of separation, 4 percent were the result of death, and 43 percent were the result of nonmarital birth.<sup>83</sup>

a. Nonmarital Births

Nonmarital births accounted for one-third of all births in 1998.<sup>84</sup> However, to understand what this means, we need to distinguish between the rate of births to unmarried women and the proportion of births to unmarried women. Rate measures the number of unmarried births per one thousand women in a given year. Proportion is the percentage of all births that are to unmarried women. This latter figure is affected by the increase or decrease in marital fertility. It is possible, then, for a nonmarital birth rate to fall while the proportion of nonmarital births increases. In fact, this is the case for 1994–2000. The birth rate for unmarried women in the U.S. fell from 46.9 (per one thousand women) to 45.2. However, the percent of all births that were to unmarried women actually rose from 32.6 percent to 33.2 percent, reflecting a decrease in marital births.

b. The Teen Birth Rate

The teen birth rate has also declined steadily from 1991 to 2000, reaching a record low of 43 births per 1,000 women 15–19 in 2003 (see Figure 1 below).<sup>85</sup> In addition, the actual number of births to teens has declined 10 percent since 1991 (see Figure 2 below). There are not more “babies having babies” today, but teenaged mothers are much less likely to be married today. The marital teen (15–19) birth rate in 1960 was 531 per 1,000 women; today it is 311. The nonmarital birth rate was 15 in 1960; today it is 44 (see Figure 3 below). Whereas social values once expected pregnant teenaged women to leave school and get married, today, cohabiting and single parentings are options.

Despite these downward trends, the U.S. continues to have one of the highest teen pregnancy rates and teen birth rates among all of the developed countries, regardless of race/ethnicity. Whether in the U.S. or in Europe, most teen mothers are poor. In the U.S. more than 80 percent of the teenaged women who become mothers are living in poverty, or in near-poverty, before they become pregnant. Kristin Luker, citing the report of the National Academy of Science, Risking the Future, concludes, “At every step of the process that leads to early childbearing, social and economic disadvantage plays a powerful role. Poor kids, not rich ones, have babies as teenagers, and their poverty long predates their pregnancy.”<sup>87</sup> Therefore, one explanation for these high rates in the U.S. is that the proportion of the U.S. population that is poor is significantly larger (at least two-thirds larger) than that of other developed nations.<sup>88</sup> In addition, the use of effective contraceptives by sexually active teenage women is lower in the U.S. than in other developed countries.<sup>89</sup>

As noted in the section on divorce and children, we know that poverty plays a significant role in explaining the 10–15 percent of children with worse than average outcomes and that the poverty rate for single-mother families is much higher than for other family types. There are several reasons for this. The first is that there is only one employable adult in the family at a time when most families need to be supported by two. In addition, the lack of affordable and accessible childcare, flexible work hours, and transportation further limits opportunities for single mothers to do income-producing work as well as the work of parenting.<sup>90</sup> When single mothers are employed, they may not have access to the type of work that could raise a family out of poverty. In 1998, 58 percent of the single mothers who received any welfare assistance also worked. Of those who worked full-time, almost 40 percent earned poverty-level wages.<sup>91</sup> In 1993, more than 70 percent of working single mothers was in female-identified, service occupations that are typically low-wage, no benefit jobs.<sup>92</sup>

7. Cohabitation

In the U.S., more than half of all first marriages formed in the 1990s began as cohabitation, half of all married stepfamilies began as cohabitation, and about half of the under forty population has lived with an unmarried partner.<sup>93</sup> In 2000, according to the Census Bureau, cohabitating couples represented 3.7 percent of all U.S. households. Approximately one-third of these were same-sex couples.<sup>94</sup>

There appear to be several causes of heterosexual cohabitation. Both parental conflict in non-divorced families and parental divorce appear to increase the possibility that offspring will cohabit. The need for emotional intimacy joined with an unease concerning marriage may cause some to see cohabitation as an alternative to marriage.<sup>95</sup> However, research shows that cohabitation is not the equivalent of marriage. On average, cohabiting unions are less stable, lasting an average of two years with only about half ending in the marriage of the couple. Moreover, marriages formed by formerly cohabiting couples have a higher rate of divorce than that of marriages formed without cohabitation. Cohabiting couples report higher rates of relationship problems, including less happiness, less commitment, more likelihood of physical violence, and greater relationship instability than do married couples. They are also less likely than those married to be sexually faithful, share economic resources, or receive help from extended family.<sup>96</sup>

For many cohabiting couples, economic conditions seem to play a role in their decision to cohabit. The loss of manufacturing jobs and increased employment in service industries means that many young people are entering jobs with low wages and benefits. In 1999, real entry-level wages for high school graduates were well below what they had been in the 1970s.<sup>97</sup> Entry-level hourly wages for young men and women just out of college also declined between 1973 and 1995, and rose after 1995 to a level only slightly higher than in 1973. For most young people, the road to economic self-sufficiency that signals adulthood has gotten longer and harder. To compensate, young adults postpone marriage, plan future family life around two adult earners, and reduce marital fertility rates. The average age at first marriage has risen to 25.1 years for women and 26.7 years for men. Yet the average age for first sexual intercourse is 17.4 years for women and 16.9 years for men. Thus, young men and women spend on average eight to ten years between their first sexual activity and their entrance into marriage.<sup>98</sup>

For middle- and upper-income persons, cohabitation during this time is often a testing ground for an anticipated marriage put off by education and career steps. For low-income people, who have a greater likelihood of cohabiting, it serves as a hopeful step toward a marriage that is put off until greater economic stability is achieved. Sara McLanahan's recent study of low-income, urban, unwed mothers found that unmarried parents and their children functioned as family units held together by emotional commitment, whether living together or not. Most of these couples hoped to marry in the future. However, they associated marriage with financial stability, something that neither could provide the other. In fact, the loss of employment opportunities for men with low-skills, particularly in urban areas, has mirrored decreases in marriage rates for these communities. Studies show that cohabiting men who are higher paid, more educated, and employed full-time are much more likely to marry their partners than are men with lower earnings.<sup>99</sup> McLanahan's conclusion is that low-income, unmarried parents need the support of social policies to reach a level of economic self-sufficiency in which marriage becomes possible.<sup>100</sup>

Couples who have definite plans to marry, who are in this sense truly betrothed, present a different profile from that of those who simply decide to live together. These "betrothed" couples tend to think and act in ways that are similar to those of married couples with regard to health habits and attitudes toward divorce, marriage, leisure, and money. In fact, some researchers note that when the relational qualities, attitudes, and values, and past family experiences of cohabitants are taken into account, the disparity in subsequent marital divorce rates virtually disappears.<sup>101</sup> For these couples, churches may have an important pastoral opportunity to assist them in evaluating their relationships and moving toward healthy marriages.

Within the church today, there are also couples who have chosen to form deep, committed, and faithful relationships, but have no plans to marry. For some, especially the elderly, the reasons may relate to Social Security, pension benefits, and commitments to adult children. For others, the legal ramifications of marriage are viewed as unwelcome burdens on their mutual commitment. In such cases, the church has an opportunity to acknowledge the commitment in the relationships and to assist the couples in building on their strengths.

While cohabitation has increased in the U.S., it is a far more pronounced trend both in Latin America and in Europe.<sup>102</sup> Almost half the children born in Norway in 1999 were born to unwed parents. In Britain, the figure was 38 percent, in France, 41 percent.<sup>103</sup> Faced with changing families, many European nations have developed social policies that provide all children with the same social protections and benefits regardless of the marital status of parents, making child poverty rates in Europe much lower than in the U.S. In fact, using the international standard measure, the U.S. has the highest child poverty rate of all modern, industrialized countries.<sup>104</sup>

8. Same-Sex Families

In 1978, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) adopted a policy statement, "The Church and Homosexuality."<sup>105</sup> The statement called upon the church to treat homosexual persons with "the profound respect and pastoral tenderness due all people of God." It found fear, hatred, and contempt of such persons inconsistent with Christian faith and called the church to “welcome homosexual inquirers to its congregations.” At the same time, the statement declared, “Homosexuality is not God’s will for humanity.” Rather, it stated that “homosexuality is a contradiction of God’s wise and beautiful plan for human sexual relationships revealed in Scripture and affirmed in God’s ongoing will for our life in the Spirit of Christ.” The statement expressed the belief that through the grace of God, homosexual persons “can receive God’s power to transform their desires or arrest their active expression.” In subsequent statements over the last two decades, the church has expressed its support for civil and legal rights of homosexuals. It has challenged itself to be open to “more light on what goes into shaping one’s sexual preferences” and to continue to study this issue.<sup>106</sup>

An August 2000 survey by the Presbyterian Panel reported the beliefs that Presbyterians hold about homosexuality.<sup>107</sup> When asked if homosexuality should be considered an acceptable alternative lifestyle, 58 percent of members and 58 percent of elders disagreed or strongly disagreed; 28 percent of members and 28 percent of elders agreed or strongly agreed. 50 percent of pastors and 27 percent of specialized clergy disagreed or strongly disagreed; 41 percent of pastors and 61 percent of specialized clergy agreed or strongly agreed. A similar pattern was found in responses to questions concerning whether gay partners who make a legal commitment should be entitled to the same rights and benefits as couples in traditional marriages, whether Presbyterian ministers should be prohibited from performing a ceremony that blesses the union between same-sex persons, and whether it was appropriate for same-sex couples to hold a union ceremony in a Presbyterian church. In general, members and elders oppose or strongly oppose positions that would be seen as affirming same-sex unions; pastors tend to be divided, with about half opposing and another 40 percent supporting such measures, and specialized clergy generally approving such measures by 60 percent or more.<sup>108</sup>

The 2000 census found that same-sex families constitute about 1.6 percent of U.S. families and have many similarities with married couple households. For example, more than 30 percent reported having at least one child. Median household income was $60,000.<sup>109</sup> However, there is much less social science data about same-sex families and their children than there is about heterosexual families. From the studies that have been conducted over the past twenty years, no significant differences have been found between children reared by homosexual parents and children reared by a traditional set of heterosexual parents. A recent review of the existing studies has concluded that some slight differences exist in attitudes and behaviors. Children of same-sex families were less likely to hold to traditional gender stereotypes regarding behavior and roles. They were emotionally close to their parents, regardless of biological relationship, and also tended to be more expressive of their feelings.<sup>110</sup> Both the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Psychological Association support gay and lesbian parenting.<sup>111</sup> Despite lack of agreement among Presbyterians regarding same-sex families, children of such couples need the same advocacy, protection, and respect that we encourage for all other children.

9. Impact of Race/Ethnicity and Economic Location

Families of African-diasporan descent and non-white Hispanic families are disproportionately represented among those who have experienced single-parent families and poverty. Fifty-two percent of families of African-diasporan descent are single parent families. Fifty-three percent of children of African-diasporan descent live with a single parent, as do 30 percent of non-white Hispanic children. Thirty-seven point four percent of single mother families of African-diasporan descent live in poverty, as do 37.8 percent of non-white Hispanic single mother families.<sup>112</sup> Whereas 90 percent of the U.S. population will marry at some point, it is estimated that only 75 percent of people of African-diasporan descent will ever marry.<sup>113</sup> Sixty-nine percent of births to women of African-diasporan descent and 41 percent of births to Hispanic women are nonmarital births.<sup>114</sup> However, the teenage birth rate for women of African-diasporan descent has shown a sharp decline of more than 40 percent since 1991, reaching a new low of 43 births per 1,000 in 2003.<sup>115</sup> A considerable amount of controversy surrounds attempts to explain these patterns. The proportion of nonmarital births has clearly been influenced by a sharp decline in marital births. Researchers also focus on the loss of marriageable, meaning adequately employed, men due to the greater negative impact of economic changes on communities of color. As opportunities for stable employment recede, the basis for stable relationships recedes, and temporary commitments—already a trend in the larger society—become more plausible.<sup>116</sup> For decades, communities of both Hispanic and African-diasporan descent have lived under recession-level economic conditions. For example:

Unemployment Rates, Spring 2002<sup>117</sup>

- 9.6 percent persons of African-diasporan descent
- 7.1 percent Hispanic
- 4.9 percent white

Poverty-Level Wages<sup>118</sup>

- 31.2 percent of workers of African-diasporan descent
- 40.4 percent of Hispanic workers
- 20.1 percent of white workers.

Employer-Provided Health Insurance Coverage

- 60.2 percent of workers of African-diasporan descent
- 44.8 percent of Hispanic workers<sup>119</sup>
- 67.2 percent of white workers.

Studies of families of African-diasporan descent reveal that discrimination in the housing market reduces housing options for families of color and contributes to “hypersegregation”; that is, to an intense racial isolation. As a consequence, African American and Latino communities are usually poorer than predominantly white communities, resulting in inadequate staffing and funding for schools and other community resources that contribute to the success of families.<sup>120</sup>

In addition to hypersegregation, the disparate racial impact of the criminal justice system’s “war on drugs” is essential to any credible consideration of families of African-diasporan descent. As James Lanier documents, African Americans account for only 13 percent of the nation’s drug users, but 35 percent of its drug arrests and 52 percent of all drug convictions.<sup>121</sup> Consequently, for every male of African-diasporan descent who graduates from college, one hundred others are in prison or jail; and African American children are roughly nine times as likely to have a parent in prison as white children are.<sup>122</sup> With more than a half million males between the ages of twenty and thirty-nine incarcerated, at ages critical to starting careers and families, the loss to communities and families of African-diasporan descent is immeasurable.<sup>123</sup> As one pastor put it:

Of course the family structure breaks down in a place like the South Bronx! Everything breaks down in a place like this. The pipes break down. The phone breaks down. The electricity and heat breaks down. The spirit breaks down. The body breaks down. The immune agents of the heart break down. Why wouldn’t the family break down also?<sup>124</sup>

Achieving middle-income status is more difficult for African-diasporan families and Hispanic families. The average hours worked by middle-income, married-couple African American and Hispanic families with children exceeded that of white families in 1979 as it does today. According to statistics from 1998, the average middle-income, married-couple, African American family with children worked 489 more hours (twelve weeks) per year than a white family of comparable income.<sup>125</sup> Similarly, most Korean immigrants, regardless of their professional education, begin small family businesses in the U.S. in which husbands, wives, and children work long hours for economic survival.<sup>126</sup> The added stress of insufficient family time and economic insecurity for families of color may help to explain the higher divorce rates for lower-income families, less educated people, and families of color.

10. Economic Inequality

Several economic factors in the second half of the 1990s served to help families. An extremely low unemployment rate increased family income for both low- and middle-income families. In fact, the most vulnerable families (young families, minority families, and single-mother families) benefited the most from rising wages. After a period of relatively slow growth, from 1973–1995, productivity grew more rapidly in the late 1990s, resulting in growth in both living standards and wages.<sup>127</sup> Home ownership reached a record high of 68.4 percent in 2003.<sup>128</sup> However, as described above, most U.S. families continue to experience economic stress. Wage gains of the ‘90s still left the median male wage in 2000 lower than it was in 1979. Families continued to add more hours of paid work to their work year. And recession conditions that increased unemployment developed in late 2000.

While it is true that divorce can initiate a fall into poverty, especially for white women, and that single mother families are more likely to be poor than two-adult families, poverty and economic stress have been shown to be causal factors in divorce rates, nonmarital births, teen-pregnancy, cohabitation, and the worse outcomes of some children of single-parent families. Economic changes have been the main force affecting the poverty of families of African-diasporan descent.<sup>129</sup> Marriage by itself does not solve the problem of inadequate incomes. Almost half of all low-income families in 1999 were married-couple families, and about 47 percent of low-income children live with married parents.<sup>130</sup> Concern for the creation and maintenance of families must include a strong concern for economic well-being. Thus, when productivity grows but median compensation does not, or grows more slowly, attention must be paid to the increase in economic inequality in the U.S.

In the last three decades, despite increasing educational levels, the unequal distribution of income and wealth in the U.S. has hit historically high levels, surpassing all other modern industrialized nations (see Figures 4 and 5 below). In 1999, approximately 50 percent of the after-federal-tax income of American families went to the bottom 80 percent of families while the other 50 percent went to the top 20 percent. In 1998, the wealthiest 1 percent of households controlled 38 percent of the nation's wealth while the bottom 90 percent of households owned 29 percent of the nation's wealth.<sup>131</sup> This trend marks a shift in the distribution of productivity gains away from most workers and toward the wealthiest 20 percent of U.S. families. As noted above, most U.S. workers have experienced stagnant and declining real wages, while having to take on more of the cost of health care and pension benefits.

Growing inequality creates a number of problems both for Christians and for citizens of a democracy. As we have seen, most U.S. families have struggled to maintain their economic well-being by adding more workers and more working hours. Yet in 1999, the average annual compensation for chief executive officers increased by 23 percent to $11.9 million.<sup>132</sup> This example illustrates that most U.S. workers are not being rewarded by the growth in the economy. In fact, between 1978 and 1998, the poorest grew poorer in actual income—$900 less in average annual earnings. Lack of access to adequate income has devastating impact on health, education, family formation and stability, and even mortality rates for the poor. While it is true that the poor in the U.S. are typically better off than the poor in underdeveloped countries, we need to remember that those poor who live in the U.S. must be able to afford food, clothing, housing, education, and medical care and to compete for jobs with more affluent people in the U.S.

In addition, some economists argue that, as inequality increases, those who are most affluent have less interest in the public goods that sustain middle- and lower-income families.<sup>133</sup> In fact, there has been a decline in government support for programs that once promoted education, family-well-being, and home ownership for young adults, especially among low-income people. For example, the Pell Grant program, intended to help low- and middle-income students go to college, once covered 80 percent of the cost of public college tuition. Today it covers about 40 percent.<sup>134</sup> Today, the government spends about one-third of what it spent twenty years ago on employment and training programs.<sup>135</sup> Half of the cost of the federal mortgage interest deduction now goes to households making more than $100,000 annually.<sup>136</sup> Housing affordability has worsened over the past twenty-five years as the incomes of the lower 40 percent of households have remained flat, but housing prices and rents have increased faster than general price inflation. Therefore, about one-third of U.S. households have significant housing affordability problems. Federal support for subsidized housing programs nevertheless fell more than 80 percent between 1978 and 1988. In 1995, for the first time in more than twenty years, no new Section 8 certificates or vouchers were made available, and since 1995, no new public housing units have been built. Today 5.3 million people qualify for affordable housing but cannot get it.<sup>137</sup>

12. Summary of Socioeconomic Context

- The benefits of marriage are clear, and most people in the U.S. and most U.S. teens desire to marry and raise their own families. In fact, 90 percent of people in the U.S. will marry at some point in their lives, and more than half of those marriages will last until death. However, the U.S. has a troublingly high divorce rate and a growing rate of cohabitation. More attention is falling on the significant minority of marriages characterized by unhealthy patterns of domination and withdrawal, contempt, verbal and physical violence, and other forms of abuse. However, most adults who experience the pain of divorce manage to adapt and adjust positively to their new situations.

- Lengthened life spans mean that children are more likely to be raised by two living parents and that spouses are more likely to enjoy longer marriages together. However, today divorce and nonmarital births, not death, are more likely to cause childhood experiences of single-parenting.

- Most children are raised by their own biological parents, and 90 percent of them score within the normal range of adjustment and achievement tests. However, an increasing proportion of children will spend some time in a single parent home or stepfamily. While the majority of these children also score within normal ranges on adjustment and achievement tests, 20–25 percent of them do not. With proper support, a greater majority of children in stepfamilies, adopted families, and single-parent families can grow through difficult times and achieve normal adulthood.

- Greater opportunities for women have allowed more marriages to achieve a covenant of mutuality between equal partners. Many couples are developing flexible patterns of dividing household tasks. However, many women still experience marriage as a double shift in which they carry, in addition to their employment, heavier domestic responsibilities than husbands.

- The income of U.S. families has increased over the past three decades. However, due to declining real hourly wages, increased family income has depended upon wives entering the paid work force and more hours spent in paid work. Gains from rising productivity have benefited the highest income families, disproportionately causing an increase in economic inequality. Consequently, most families continue to experience insufficient time at home and increased economic insecurity. The lack of adequate health insurance coverage and retirement income weighs heavily on many families.

- The strength of racial ethnic minority families is shown in their long histories of coping with harsh economic conditions and racial discrimination through strategies that include two working parents, extended family supports, and increased hours spent in wage work. However, ongoing recession-like economic conditions continue to place a heavy burden on these families.

- The increasingly common practice of cohabitation, when accompanied by values more typical of married couples, sometimes results in successful marriages. However, cohabitation tends to be a relationship characterized by lower-levels of commitment and typically does not produce the same personal and social benefits associated with marriage.

Prayer: O God, whose infinite splendor is reflected in the immense variety of your created world, we give you thanks for the many ways in which families have shaped themselves to care for one another. We also give thanks for the great variety of ways in which your congregations minister to the diverse needs of families in their communities. Help us, as congregations, to celebrate and support your love wherever caring is found in families.

In a society that values personal fulfillment and individual rights over interdependence and caregiving, help us learn how to give primary place in our lives to caring for one another in your name. As members of families, called both to give and receive, grant us the gratitude to value the unique contributions each of us makes to family life. Grant us, as well, the wisdom to discern when to place the needs of others before ourselves and when to receive nurturing so that we might in turn be of service to others. Amen.

Postscript

The 207th General Assembly (1995) approved “God’s Work in Our Hands: Employment, Community, and Christian Vocation” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 424–42). That report responded to “changes in technology, productivity, and demographics that are redefining work” in a global economy. It offered an understanding of “good work” in light of a theology of vocation. It defined vocation both as “the total, inclusive purpose of a person’s life” in response to God’s grace in Jesus Christ as we participate in church and community and as the way we do our daily work in covenant with God and neighbor. In describing “good work” as full, fair, sustaining, and participatory employment, it challenged both providers of work and performers of work to live up to this covenantal vocation.

In a way, we have done it again—this time relating a theology of vocation to changing families and changing social structures that affect families positively or negatively. Just as our church sought a better understanding of “good work,” done in a covenant of mutual responsibility and service, in the earlier study, we seek here a better understanding of “good family life.” And a covenant of mutual responsibility and service is again relevant. Once again, we are surrounded and saturated with cultural and socioeconomic realities that militate against good family life even as they militate against finding, providing, enjoying, and moderating good work. And once again, we are called both to see our vocation as more inclusive than family life but most certainly as inclusive of family life. Our Christian calling includes vocation as family members to each other and as families to seek justice and well-being for other families and the common good.

Just as work is put in its place, transformed, and made transformative by the gracious power of God, so too family relationships are put in their proper place, transformed, and made transformative by the grace, love, and communion of the Triune God. As we strive to fulfill our covenantal vocation as Christians in both work and family life, we struggle with the difficulties of balancing the two and of bringing about conditions in our society that are truly family friendly and that recognize the great value of reproductive, nurturing, and caregiving work. As a church we are aware of the failings of our families and our resistance to the covenantal obligations entailed in being parts of families, and we are also prompted by our encompassing vocation to reach out to each other as actual or potential family members and to families of all kinds, especially to children and others who are most vulnerable, with compassion and justice.

Yet, it is also true that a large proportion of children who have experienced divorce scores higher on such tests than the average score from children in intact families. And a large proportion of intact families scores lower than the average score from children who have experienced divorce. This is a review of almost every quantitative study done on divorce. The authors found lower levels of well-being for children of divorce but found that these were not large. The more carefully controlled the studies were, the smaller the differences found.

These authors point out that, while parental divorce is correlated with a modest increase in child adjustment problems, the specific mechanics to explain this link are not well understood. Their research reaches the conclusion that the link between family form and child development issues is due to the increased likelihood that parents are "less likely to engage in competent parenting and are more likely to engage in parental conflict . . ." 82. There has been an increase in the practice of co-habitation that makes it difficult to distinguish unmarried, two-parent families from single-parent ones. For example, in 1998, when about one-third of all births in the U.S. were to unmarried women, almost 40 percent of these births were to cohabiting couples, many of whom expressed their intention to marry in the future. For nonmarital birth rates, see "U.S. Births Rise for First Time in Eight Years; Births to Teenagers Still Falling," Family Planning Perspectives, Vol. 32, #5 (Sept/Oct 2000) at www.guttmacher.org/pubs/journals/3226300.html. Larry Bumpass and Hsien-Hen Lu, "Trends in cohabitation and implications for children's family context in the U.S." Working paper #98-15, 1999, Center for Demography and Ecology, University of Wisconsin, Madison. Similarly, when the number of years a child will spend in a single-parent family is compared to the number of years spent in a married couple family, the trend appears to be an increase in the years a child will spend in a single-parent family. However, when cohabiting couples are included, not just married couples, the number of years a child will spend in a single-parent family have actually been decreasing. 84. Determining exact figures is difficult. The Census Bureau estimated that a large majority of the statistical increase in unmarried births identified in the early 1980s was due to more refined survey procedures introduced at that time. In the past, unwed mothers were more likely to tell a census worker that they were separated. Some states assume that a couple is unmarried if a woman's name differs from that of the father on the birth certificate. Steven Rawlings, Household and Family Characteristics: March 1993 (Washington, DC: Bureau of the Census, June, 1994). To determine if there has been an increase, and how much, also requires a comparison—compared to when? It may surprise us to learn that in the twenty years leading up to U.S. independence, one-third of the children born in Concord, Massachusetts, were conceived out of wedlock. 94. "America's Families and Living Arrangements: Population Characteristics," U.S. Census Bureau, (June 2001): 12. What is called "cohabitation" today is, of course, related to the not uncommon practice of informal marriage, self-marriage, or common-law marriage that was part of U.S. society in the past, particularly among poorer families and families living in isolated areas. Then, if couples looked and acted as though they were married, their communities and the courts tended to accept them as such. Today legal support for such relationships is more tenuous. Cohabitation is against the law in a few states. Most state courts will not provide the same property rights to cohabiting persons that married persons have without proof that the cohabiting persons had agreed to share property as though married. ## Appendix C

The Development of the Proposed Policy Statement on Families

Charge and Purpose

The Task Force on Changing Families was appointed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) in response to a referral the committee received from the 209th General Assembly (1997) "to examine the issue of changing families and changing social structures that affect families, particularly focusing on the effects of these on children...." (Minutes, 1997, Part I, pp. 42,44,536).

Members of the Task Force

The Task Force on Changing Families represented the breadth and depth of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Equally divided between clergy and lay, men and women, young and old, this racially diverse group also represented the broad spectrum of theological views of the Church.

Members of the task force included Clarence Page, parish clergy, military chaplain, Lumberton, North Carolina; Sarah Reyes, parish clergy, San Leandro, California; Marnie Abraham Russell, parish clergy, juvenile court judge, Jeannette, Pennsylvania; Lois McLendon Stroman, elder, retired educator, Dublin, Georgia; Jeanne Choy Tate, elder, Ph.D. candidate, children's spiritual formation, San Francisco, California; Bernice Thompson, elder, hospital-based clinical social worker, Chesterfield, Missouri; William (Beau) Weston, elder, associate professor of sociology, Danville, Kentucky; and Robert White, clergy, synod executive and social ethicist, Syracuse, New York. The task force was chaired by Barbara J. Gaddis, clergy, marriage and family therapist, from Boone, Iowa. Three members of the task force resigned for personal reasons. They were: Nancy Becker, pastor, Portage, Indiana; Jeffrey K. Light, clergy, Kansas City, Missouri; and Amanda Miller, other, New York, New York. Rodney J. Hunter, clergy, professor of pastoral theology, Atlanta, Georgia, served as the task force consultant. Belinda Curry, clergy, associate for policy development and interpretation, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), Louisville, Kentucky, staffed the task force.

The Task Force Process

Our work was structured by first writing a study guide on the issue of changing families, and distributing it in the winter 2000 for feedback from the church at large. This process helped us focus on issues of agreement and disagreement regarding the church's social witness about families.

The task force met six times, over a period of two years (1999–2001) at various locations around the country. Because the topic of families and family values inspires such strongly held opinions, we were concerned to hear from people in a variety of church settings, suburban, urban, rural, ethnic minority, and ethnic majority, and to hear from policy makers at the national level. In each meeting we attempted to make use of the resources available at that location resulting in visits to local churches and presentations by local and national experts.

Louisville, Kentucky—September 1999: Orientation to the work of the task force took place through examination of the prospectus, discussion of the problems and opportunities facing families and presentations by J. Bradley Wigger, director of the Center for Congregations and Family Ministries and associate professor of Christian Education, Louisville, Kentucky, and task force consultant Rodney J. Hunter. The task force outlined the work ahead, appointing a churchwide study guide steering committee and electing a chair.

Fort Worth, Texas—March 2000: Work proceeded on the churchwide study guide.

Phoenix, Arizona—May 2000: The task force met with Martha Sadongei, clergy, and staff affiliate for Native American Ministries Committee of Grand Canyon Presbytery to learn about the unique issues facing Native American families both on and off the reservation. Work on the churchwide study document continued.

Chicago, Illinois—September 2000: Time in Chicago was spent visiting local churches, their pastors and members. First we met with Jerry Andrews and members of the First Presbyterian Church of Glen Ellyn, Illinois to help us understand the issues facing families in a suburban environment. Next we met at the Fourth Presbyterian Church with John Wilkinson, staff and members to understand some of the ministries a large urban church offers. Also in the city we met with Jeff Doan and members of the Lincoln Park Presbyterian Church. Finally we traveled to Park Ridge, Illinois to meet with Yunchun Han and members of the Evergreen Presbyterian Church in order to gain insight about Korean American families.

Washington, D.C.—March 2001: Our perspective broadened to a national picture in meeting with the staff of the Presbyterian Washington Office to hear the issues they perceived to be of utmost importance for families. Rebecca Davis, Religious Networks Coordinator of the Children's Defense Fund and Susan Orr, Director of Marriage and Family Care of the Family Research Council, presented us their organizations' policy concerns and objectives. At this meeting we received the document "Strengthening American Families: Reweaving the Social Tapestry" from the Ninety-seventh American Assembly, and wrestled with the issues it presented and the points it raised.

Kansas City, Missouri—May 2001: We visited with Keith Harris from St. Paul Presbyterian Church of Kansas City, Missouri to help us understand African American families and their needs. We spent the bulk of the meeting reviewing the final draft of the proposed policy document and making policy recommendations.

In addition to its work as a task force the chair and several members of the task force shared in a presentation of its work to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) at a fall meeting in 2001. At that meeting the ACSWP thanked the task force for its work and referred the proposed draft policy report to an editing committee consisting of Ray Anglin, pastor, from Plantation, Florida; Sue Dickson, pastor, from El Paso, Texas, and Nile Harper, retired chaplain, from Ann Arbor, Michigan; Gloria Albrecht, clergy, professor of Religious Studies, from Detroit, Michigan, served as the editing team consultant; and Barbara J. Gaddis, chair of the task force. Belinda M. Curry, associate, and Peter A. Sulyok, coordinator, ACSWP, staffed the team.

The first meeting of the Changing Families Editing Team was held in Santa Fe, New Mexico, in late February 2002. The team developed a timeline for completion of its work on the draft changing families policy statement. The editing team presented a revised draft of the proposed changing families' policy statement to the ACSWP at the committee's summer 2002 meeting held in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Members of the editing team shared presentations of its work to a synod consultation on the proposed policy statement on "Living Faithfully with Families in Transition" jointly sponsored by the General Assembly Council (GAC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) in Louisville, Kentucky, on October 11–13, 2002. The feedback from this synod consultation was received by the ACSWP at its fall meeting in El Paso, Texas. The committee voted to send the proposed policy statement on "Living Faithfully with Families in Transition" to the 215th General Assembly (2003). Members of the Changing Families Editing Team and ACSWP staff shared in a presentation on this report to the commissioners to the 215th General Assembly (2003) in Denver, Colorado.

The 215th General Assembly (2003) referred a majority and a minority report on the proposed policy statement on “Living Faithfully with Families in Transition” back to the ACSWP “for further work to strengthen the policy statement” in consultation with the Office of Theology and Worship (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 56, 58, 458). In the summer of 2003, the ACSWP appointed a Changing Families Panel to respond to the referral from the 215th General Assembly (2003). The committee also requested the Office of Theology and Worship to draft a proposed theological statement for consideration by its Changing Families Panel.

The members of the Changing Families Panel included Gloria Albrecht, professor of religious studies from Detroit, Michigan; Sue Dickson, pastor, vice-chair, ACSWP, from Ashland, Ohio; Barbara J. Gaddis, marriage and family therapist and chair of the Task Force on Changing Families, from Boone, Iowa; Nile Harper, retired chaplain, chair, ACSWP, from Ann Arbor, Michigan; C. Eric Mount, professor emeritus of religion, commissioner to the 215th General Assembly (2003) and a drafter and signer of the minority report; Scott Williamson, associate professor of theological ethics, Louisville, Kentucky; William J. “Beau” Weston, sociologist and member of the Task Force on Changing Families, from Danville, Kentucky; Alan Wisdom, vice-president, Institute on Religion and Democracy, director of Presbyterian Action for Faith and Freedom, and a drafter of the majority report; and Marjorie A. Working, pastor, commissioner to the 215th General Assembly (2003) and a drafter and signer of the majority report. Belinda M. Curry, associate, ACSWP; Joseph Small, coordinator, Theology and Worship; Peter A. Sulyok, coordinator, ACSWP; and Charles Wiley, associate, Theology and Worship, staffed the team.

The Changing Families Panel met at Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary in Louisville, Kentucky on September 23–24, 2003, and received a preliminary “rough” draft developed by the Office of Theology and Worship and instructed them to make revisions for the panel’s second meeting at Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary on December 12–13, 2003. At the December meeting of the panel, by consensus the members changed the proposed policy statement on “Living Faithfully with Families in Transition” to “Families in Transition.”

Members of the panel shared presentations of its work to the ACSWP on the proposed policy statement on “Families in Transition” when the committee met in Louisville, Kentucky, on January 20–24, 2004. On February 25, 2004, the committee voted to send the proposed policy statement on “Families in Transition” to the 216th General Assembly (2004). Members of the Changing Families Panel, ACSWP staff, and Office of Theology and Worship staff shared in a presentation on this report to the commissioners to the 216th General Assembly (2004) in Richmond, Virginia.

Item 10-07

[In response to Item 10-07, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See p. 60.]

On Setting Compensation Standards—From the Presbytery of New Hope.

The Presbytery of New Hope overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Set as an ideal relationship between the total compensation for the highest paid employee (CEO) and the average of the salaries of the non-supervisory employees as no more than 200 to 1.
2. Instruct its investment committee to initiate stockholder resolutions on the floor of all corporations in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds shares, a motion to establish such a limit of not more than 200 to 1 between the highest paid employee’s (CEO) pay and the average of the non-supervisory employees’ salaries. A limit of not more than 200 to 1 would include the total compensation (stock options, retirement benefit, cars, tickets, country club memberships, etc.) of the highest paid employee (CEO) and the average salary of the non-supervisory employees total package.

Rationale

In the free enterprise system, in the for-profit economy, the relationship between capital, management, production, sales, and employees can become distorted and unjust.

The mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been expressed as expressing the love of God for all people by seeking to engage in the struggle to free people from sin, fear, oppression, hunger, and injustice; to minister to those who are poor and powerless.

One acknowledged manifestation of evil in the world is greed.

Scripture invites Christian people to free our hearts from the love of wealth.

It is a matter of fairness, a matter of justice, a matter of equity of value for individuals and their contribution to the good of society that workers and management deal with each other in an open and honest way.

The Prophet Amos and others call society into account for the mistreatment of workers, widows, and the poor.

The current relationship between corporation executives and non-supervisory employees has become excessively out of balance.

During the decade of 1990 to 2000, the average CEO pay went up 463 percent compared to the rise in the average worker's pay increase of 42 percent<sup>1</sup>.

During the decade of 1990 to 2000, the ratio of CEO to worker pay is nearly 411 to 1, which is now ten times larger than it was in 1982<sup>2</sup>.

There appears to be no relationship of the CEO payment to the value contributed: from January 1, 2001, until July 31, 2002, CEO's whose compensation totaled more than $1.4 billion saw the value of their companies' shares plunge by 73 percent of their total value<sup>3</sup>.

During 2001, the CEO's, whose own salaries increased the most, were responsible for the firing of more than 162,000 employees<sup>4</sup>.

As stealing is the taking of that which does not belong to you, many of the CEO's have stolen from retirees and others the value of their company, the value of their retirement, and the value of their trust in the economy.

Some of these compensation rewards were given to upper management at the same time that concessions were being requested from labor in order to avoid bankruptcy of the corporation—in acts of deceit and dishonesty.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 10-07 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to set compensation standards.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 10-07 be answered by approval of the following substitute recommendation:

“The 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) commends the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) for raising the issue of corporate compensation standards through proxy voting recommendations, and instructs MRTI to develop a comprehensive plan for increased advocacy on compensation standards, including dialogues with corporations, filing of shareholder resolutions, and public education. The MRTI should proceed to increase advocacy as it can within its mandate, and report its actions, and any recommendations, to the 217th General Assembly (2006).”

Rationale

Item 10-07 raises the important issue of compensation standards of corporations “between the total compensation for the highest paid employee (CEO) and the average of the salaries of the non-supervisory employees” and their relationship to the moral values of fairness, justice and the common good of all of society. This issue is currently being raised in the public arena and at corporate stockholder meetings. In fact, upon recommendation of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has urged stockholders to vote in favor of resolutions on corporate proxy statements calling for restructuring corporate compensation systems to reflect greater fairness and justice, include social and environmental performance as criteria when determining compensation, and provide greater shareholder oversight for compensation policies.

The MRTI has recognized through this process that the issue of compensation standards is complex and deserves careful, balanced, and thoughtful treatment. There are several General Assembly policies that can inform this work. These include: the 208th General Assembly (1995) statement on God’s Work in Our Hands, “Principles of Vocation and Work,” Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 426–27; the 120th General Assembly (1980) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) statement on Labor Relations, “Theological Affirmations from Biblical Perspectives,” Minutes, PCUS, 1980, Part I, pp. 229–30; the 208th General Assembly (1996) statement on Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development, Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 527; and the 193rd General Assembly (1984) statement on “Divestment Strategy: Principles and Criteria,” Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 193–94.

However, even with its complexity, more can be done to increase the involvement and advocacy of the PC(USA). Therefore, the suggested substitute would place the issue high on the work agenda of the MRTI Committee, the General Assembly committee with the responsibility to implement General Assembly policies regarding socially responsible investment.

Item 10-08

[The assembly disapproved Item 10-08. See p. 61.]

On Expressing the Desire That the Patriot Act Be Repealed—From the Presbytery of Northern New York.

The Presbytery of Northern New York overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to instruct the Stated Clerk and Moderator to express to the president of the United States and the United States Congress the desire that the Patriot Act be repealed.

Rationale

The Presbytery of Northern New York remains mindful of anxieties and genuine security needs generated by the events of 9/11/2001, but we express our deepening concern and opposition to emerging policies and practices of our government that infringe upon the rights of immigrants.

Legal aliens disappear from place of residence and work without notice.

Any person can, upon mere accusation of certain crimes, be arrested and incarcerated without representation, due process, or notice.

When anyone's rights are infringed, everyone's rights are infringed.

All these things are being done in the name of security and under the authority of the "Patriot Act."

Our only true security is to be found in our relationship with God, and through that relationship our relationships with one another.

ACSWP AND ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 10-08 instructs the Stated Clerk and Moderator to express to the president and the Congress that the Patriot Act be repealed.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advise disapproval of this overture with comment:

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) addresses the Patriot Act substantially in its Resolution on Violence, Religion, and Terrorism, Item 12-06. That report recommends the church support groups monitoring the act and that the objectionable aspects of the act be removed by amendments to the act. Therefore, the important concerns of the Presbytery of Northern New York should be considered in the review of Item 12-06, "Resolution on Violence, Religion, and Terrorism" by the Assembly Committee on Peacemaking.

Item 10-09

On Preparing a Policy Statement on Usury in the United States—From the Presbytery of Utah.

The Presbytery of Utah overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to investigate the question of usury in the United States and to prepare a [policy statement] [resolution] for the 217th General Assembly (2006) that would do the following:

- 1. More clearly define the sin of usury for the 21st century.
- 2. Suggest parameters (for example, a certain APR or a quadrupling of the amount of the original loan within a short period of time) beyond which Presbyterians could agree that the sin of usury was taking place.
- 3. Encourage Presbyterians to become aware of usury laws in their states and to advocate for stricter limits and enforcement when necessary to protect the poor.
- 4. Develop ethical criteria consistent with the Reformed Tradition for evaluating usury laws and other legislation to address various forms of lending, such as payday loans, sub-prime loans, predatory lending, and cash-back tax preparation arrangements.

Rationale

The Larger Catechism, one of the basic confessions of Presbyterianism, defines usury as a sin (The Book of Confessions, 7.252).

Over the centuries, Christians have changed the definition of usury from the charging of interest on a loan, to the charging of excessive interest on a loan. Although people of good will may disagree on the definition of “excessive,” there must be an upper limit beyond which most people of good will can agree that usury is taking place, or the definition is pointless.

Utah is one of the few states with no usury law and Presbyterians advocating for the establishment of one find no clear guidance in Presbyterian policy. The rise of payday lending companies in the past two decades has been a helpful way of providing loans for people with no easy access to credit, but has also been found to be predatory in some cases. Christians have a special duty to advocate on behalf of the poor.

Standard policy for many payday lenders is an interest charge of 10 percent per week, which equates to an APR of 525 percent (or a quintupling of the amount of a loan within the space of a year; by contrast, a home mortgage at present rates will only triple or quadruple the amount of a loan over a thirty-year period). Many Christians believe this APR is excessive, and therefore sinful, and would welcome guidance from the General Assembly on this issue.

ACSWP, ACREC, AND ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 10-09 calls for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) “to investigate the question of usury in the United States and to prepare a policy statement for the 217th General Assembly (2006)” to address the issue.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advise that Item 10-09 be approved with the following amendments:

1. In the first paragraph, replace “policy statement” with “resolution” so it reads as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through and brackets; text to be added or inserted is shown with an underline and with brackets.]

2. Add a Recommendation 4. that reads as follows:

“[Develop ethical criteria consistent with the Reformed tradition for evaluating usury laws and other legislation to address various forms of lending such as payday loans, sub-prime loans, predatory lending, and cash-back tax preparation arrangements.]”

Rationale

The General Assembly has addressed economic justice and concern for the economic plight of the poor on many occasions. This policy base provides a foundation for the development of a resolution addressing this issue. This would allow ACSWP to bring recommendations to the 217th General Assembly (2006). A policy statement would require a lengthier and more costly process that is not needed to accomplish the intent of the overture.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is already working in the public policy and corporate responsibility arenas on issues of lending that exploits people. This is focused primarily on sub-prime and predatory lending. The development of ethical criteria would assist the church in more effective evaluation and advocacy on all aspects of lending.

Item 10-10

[The assembly approved Item 10-10. See p. 60.]

On Reaffirming the Importance of Our Nation's Social Insurance System (Social Security and Medicare)— From the Presbytery of Hudson River.

The Presbytery of the Hudson River respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Reaffirm the importance of our nation's social insurance system, specifically Social Security and Medicare that were enacted to promote the general welfare, and to assure a guaranteed income and health care for the workers of the United States.

2. Urge our nation's leaders to support and maintain the fundamental structure and intent of Social Security, expressly that it continue to be

- a. universal, covering all persons in paid employment and their families,
- b. compulsory, requiring all working Americans to contribute to our future security,
- c. an earned right, based on contributions out of past earnings rather than charity,
- d. contributory and self-financed, out of dedicated taxes, e.g. wage-related rather than means tested,
- e. protected against inflation, by periodic, guaranteed, cost-of-living adjustments, and
- f. backed by the full faith and credit of the United States, rather than depending on the erratic performance of the stock market or the unpredictable financial stability and profit interests of a private company.

3. Request the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in concert with the Office of Health Ministries U.S.A., to review the PC(USA) position paper, "Economic Security for Older Persons," approved by the 195th General Assembly (1983), in order to update the changes in laws affecting mandatory retirement, Social Security, and pension policies; and to reexamine the interpretations of some of these policies. Request that the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in concert with Office of Health Ministries U.S.A., make a report of this review to the 217th General Assembly (2006).

4. Disseminate this overture immediately to members of Congress, to the president's administration, and to the media, synods, presbyteries, church congregations, and individual Presbyterians.

5. Instruct the Office of the General Assembly to communicate immediately with the National Council of Churches of Christ and with other ecumenical partners to express concern of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on issues surrounding our national insurance system; and inviting them to participate in developing a shared position and action strategy to affect public policy. Request that a report of these actions be made to the 217th General Assembly (2006).

Rationale

1. Theological Considerations

"The Gospel knows no laws, whether economic, social, or political, which are not subordinate to moral and spiritual laws and principles" (Minutes, PCUSA, 1936, Part I, p.150).

Rooted deep in the doctrines of grace and covenant is the concept of social responsibility which underlies the participation of Presbyterians in programs such as Social Security. . . . The ancients also understood the extended family as a basic unit for which everyone shared responsibility. Care of the fatherless, the widow, the poor, the sick and the aged was everybody's concern. Many provisions of the Deuteronomic Code helped people live in community in ways that allowed everyone a measure of dignity, even when they had special needs. . . .

These elements of mandated community were based on more than sociological need. From early times, the Hebrews confessed a God by whose grace they lived in covenant. "I will be your God," said Yahweh, "and you shall be my people." The old suzerain treaties provided a pattern for understanding how God provided protection in return for service and loyalty. This was a covenant with the community, made first with a patriarch but always with national implications. The clear understanding was that if God was caring for the people, they must care for each other. That was part of the covenant. (Minutes, 1986, Part I, p. 675, "A Pastoral Letter to Candidates Regarding Social Security," paragraphs 41.019 and 41.020)

Jesus' words in Luke, that "of them that have much, much will be required," are the root of progressive taxation and the priority of fair distribution over excessive consumption. John Calvin and the other early Reformers denounced luxury, waste, and inequality, and honored frugality, rational planning, and equal accountability before God, laying the ground for both democracy and economic progress.

The 211th General Assembly (1999) approved a resolution that affirms the Reformed biblical and theological heritage that health is God's intention for God's people, and therefore, a right for each person (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 345). The resolution urged the church, the government, and the health-care industry to support and work to maintain affordable, quality managed care (a phrase now used by HMO's) for all persons and especially for the vulnerable, the elderly, the disabled, and the low-income families in particular. (For text of this resolution, see Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 341–53.)

2. Rationale: Social Security

At a time when the nation should be bracing for the retirement of the baby boomers, radical ideas are being promoted that would severely damage Social Security, the most successful government program in American history. The poverty rate among people over age sixty-five is about 10 percent. Without their Social Security income, about 48 percent of beneficiaries would be living in poverty, and dependent on charity.

Social Security needs adjustments so it can accommodate the boomers, the largest generation in American history. The ranks of those Americans over age sixty-five, now about 35 million, will swell to 70 million by the year 2030. The diversion of Social Security tax revenues to create personal accounts for investment in stocks and bonds would weaken the system and make it more difficult to meet the challenge.

An essential feature of Social Security is shared or collective risks. Some workers will prosper, live prudently, and save for a comfortable retirement. Others will be hard-pressed and have no savings at all when they reach the age when they are unable to work. Still others may be forced to stop working because they become permanently disabled, and others die before reaching retirement age, leaving their survivors vulnerable. Social Security is the foundation, always there if needed, to cover the vicissitudes of life in a modern industrial society. Social Security continues to be a successful, universal system: there are an estimated 155 million workers in the United States and 96 percent are covered under Social Security. About 91 percent of elderly Americans are now receiving benefits. Being man-made, the system is not perfect. But it assures that checks flow every month from the Treasury to millions of retirees—many of whom depend on this return of their Social Security contribution to meet their basic needs.

Now the president has proposed partial "privatization" of Social Security, to allow workers to keep a portion of the taxes they pay to Social Security and invest these funds in individual accounts of stocks and bonds. The amount of money they would receive at retirement would depend on the success of the investment accounts. Costs of private brokers managing the investments would be accrued or paid along the way, which would reduce the income available at retirement.

The risk of investment success or investment failure would become an individual one, rather than a risk shared by other members of society. Many would drop back into poverty. This would radically change the philosophy of Social Security. Currently, the risk is shared by all members of society through the federal government. It is a collective risk, with the assurance that future presidents and Congresses will see that the checks keep coming—in the words of the United States Constitution—that our government will promote the general welfare.

By contrast, the proposal for substituting individual accounts would shift the burden and the risk from society to the individual. The amount a person could collect under these accounts could be linked to the uncertain volatility of the securities markets. One needs only look at the devastation of privately invested pension accounts during the recent economic downturn. A staggering $5 trillion in invested value was lost. The human cost can hardly be fathomed, let alone measured.

In addition to changing the basic nature of Social Security, the proposal for individual accounts would create financial strains on the Social Security system. The revenues collected from workers are paid out as benefits to retirees and family members, to workers who have disabilities and dependents, and to survivors. If a portion of these revenues are diverted to individual accounts to help finance future retirements, the money must be replaced so current benefits can be paid. Transition cost (i.e., paying current and future benefits at the same time) are estimated to cost more than $1 trillion.

By diverting money away from Social Security, the privatization plans could place the non-retirement benefits (disability, family, and survivor benefits) in jeopardy. To keep those benefits intact, Social Security would need vast new revenues.

The church has an opportunity now to speak out about Social Security, this successful social contract that our government has with its people. It is a contract that should not be weakened. Arguing technical issues about our social insurance system is important, but the “Presbyterian Church has an obligation to speak from the ethical and theological values of Christ’s community” (Health Ministries USA, 2002, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)). As children of God, we are called to protect the dignity and well-being of our families and our neighbors. Social Security and Medicare are consistent with our Judeo/Christian heritage of caring for the young, the old, and those who are sick and have permanent disabilities.

As an add-on to Social Security, individual accounts are alright. It is a worthy goal to encourage people to save and invest. But that money should not come from the flow of revenues that make Social Security the great financial safety net for millions of people.

3. Rationale: Medicare

Medicare is the federal health insurance program covering 35 million Americans age sixty-five and older, and more than five million disabled persons of all ages. It provides access to health care regardless of an individual’s income or health status. It is a universal system of care for older and disabled Americans.

Medicare has contributed to the dramatic increases in well-being and longevity of the older population. In 1960, before Medicare was created, women who reached age 65 had a life expectancy of 15.8 more years. Men could expect to live an additional 13 years. Today, women at 65 have a life expectancy of 19.2 years, while men can look forward to another 16.3 years.

Less than 3 percent of Medicare beneficiaries report having any difficulty getting medical care, and less than 5 percent reported they delayed getting treatment because of costs, although a substantial number reported delaying or forgoing drug treatment because they did not have drug coverage. This is a testimony to the effectiveness of the program in delivering quality care at an affordable price. This is a program that works well, but it is now under threats that would reduce the freedoms and the choices of its beneficiaries in return for a new and elusive panacea, prescription drug coverage.

Medicare gives its beneficiaries a great degree of freedom in selecting health-care providers. They may choose any doctor or hospital that has agreed to participate in the Medicare program. The vast majority of beneficiaries have chosen this traditional approach. About 4.6 million of the 41 million Medicare beneficiaries have chosen to join managed-care organizations, such as health maintenance organizations (HMOs). They agree to stay within the network of doctors and hospitals provided by the HMO.

This freedom is now threatened by the legislation just passed by Congress to provide prescription drug coverage for the first time under Medicare. The drugs will be available through HMOs or through new, stand-alone drug programs offered by insurance companies. However, none of these proposed stand-alone programs currently exists, even in pilot form. In 2006, when the drug benefit takes effect, seniors may find they are unable to get drug coverage unless they join an HMO, which will restrict their ability to select any doctor or hospital of their choosing. Seniors should have the continued freedom to join an HMO if they feel it would benefit them. But no senior should be coerced into joining an HMO as a condition for receiving the prescription drug benefit.

The legislation also marks a major departure from the tradition of universality, with all participants sharing in the benefits for an equal price, with no differentiation according to income. Currently, all beneficiaries pay the same premium, $66.60 a month, for the Part B coverage that helps pay for doctor bills. Part B is subsidized by general revenues, which provide about 75 percent of the total costs of Part B operations.

Starting in 2007, however, the tradition of equal payment by all beneficiaries will be shattered. Those individuals with incomes above $80,000 a year will pay a higher Part B premium. They will pay a greater share of the cost of the Part B program than their fellow beneficiaries without an increase in benefits. This division by income raises the threat of eroding support for Medicare among more affluent Americans.

Although Medicare will become the biggest buyer of prescription drugs, it is not allowed to negotiate for the best possible price to save the taxpayers money. Instead, the law explicitly forbids Medicare to seek the best deal. At the same time, the Veteran's Administration is required by law to seek the best prices when it buys pharmaceutical products. It does not make sense that one agency of government is ordered by law to negotiate for the best price, while another agency, the biggest of all drug customers, is forbidden from negotiating with drug manufacturers for the cheapest price it can get.

4. Background

Created out of the Great Depression, Social Security is a safety net for almost all working Americans and members of their families. It is an earned benefit for all who labor in the United States. Benefits go to retired workers, their spouses, and their survivors. Disabled workers and members of their families are eligible for monthly payments. And for those who die before reaching retirement age, such as the victims of the September 11 terrorist attacks, there are survivor benefits for family members.

Social Security is largely a pay-as-you-go system, with today's workers paying taxes to provide funds for current retirees and other beneficiaries. About 155 million Americans paid Social Security taxes and 46.7 million people collected benefits in 2003. Social Security is the major source of income for most people age sixty-five and over. For 64 percent of Social Security beneficiaries, the program provides 50 percent or more of all income. About 20 percent of beneficiaries have no income other than their Social Security benefits.

Benefits are a matter of right, rather than charity, earned by working or being a family member of a worker. Workers can begin collecting reduced retirement benefits at age 62. Full benefits are available at age 65. However, the age for full benefits is being gradually raised to 67. The beneficiaries include: 32.5 million retired workers and their families; and 7.4 million workers with disabilities and their dependents; and 6.8 million survivors of deceased workers or deceased retirees.

Social Security benefits are adjusted automatically each year to keep pace with inflation. This has enabled millions of older Americans to escape poverty because they receive Social Security benefits. Poverty among Social Security recipients age sixty-five and over was just 8 percent in 1999. Without their Social Security income, about 48 percent of people in this group would have been living in poverty.

Because Social Security has been a success, it should be maintained for future generations of workers. The baby boom generation, the largest generation in American history, will swell the ranks of the beneficiaries age sixty-five and over to 70 million by the year 2030.

Social Security will continue to be the key source of income for most retired Americans. While Social Security is virtually universal, about 55 percent of the American workforce does not have any private pension or 401(k) coverage.

Though Social Security must find new sources of revenue to meet the needs caused by the increase in the number of beneficiaries when the boomers reach retirement age, adopting individual accounts will make the problem even more difficult.

Social Security has worked well since it began disbursing benefits in 1940. It will continue to work well for future generations of retirees and should not be subject to drastic changes that would undermine the social compact that has stood the test of time.

Medicare serves all eligible beneficiaries without regard to income or medical history. Today it provides health insurance coverage to one in seven Americans. Part A of Medicare, the hospital insurance trust fund, pays for hospital services, limited skilled nursing facilities, home health care, and hospice care. It is financed by a payroll tax on salary earnings. The worker and employer each pay an amount equal to 1.45 percent of the worker's earnings. Part B, which helps pay for doctor services, and outpatient hospital care, has two sources of funding. A monthly premium paid by all beneficiaries provides about 25 percent of the funding, and the rest comes from general tax revenues.

Medicare spending is highly variable. Outlays averaged about $6,000 per beneficiary in 2001, but the spending was concentrated among a relative handful of people with severe health problems. Just 6 percent of the beneficiaries, those who used more than $25,000 a year in medical services, accounted for almost half of total spending.

The Medicare population is one of modest financial means: Some 51 percent have incomes below $25,000 a year. The Medicare population is demographically diverse and includes significant numbers of individuals who are financially and/or medically vulnerable. More than half (57 percent) of those enrolled in the program are female, reflecting women's longer life expectancy. The fastest growing group of Medicare beneficiaries includes those over age eighty-five who are more likely than younger beneficiaries to need medical care. The growth in the racial ethnic beneficiaries raises particular challenges for the program as African American and Latino beneficiaries tend to have had lesser access to health care resulting in greater health needs and lower incomes than their white counterparts. Medicare beneficiaries generally have modest incomes and depend heavily on Social Security as a primary source of income.

One of Medicare's major achievements has been helping to ensure mainstream medical care for most elderly and many disabled Americans, especially racial and ethnic minority beneficiaries.

ACSWP AND ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 10-10 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to reaffirm the importance and urge to maintain the structure of this nation's social insurance system, as well as authorize a review, update, and report on the PC(USA) position paper, "Economic Security for Older Americans."

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advise that Item 10-10 be approved.

Rationale

The position paper "Economic Security for Older Americans," approved by the 195th General Assembly (1983) on the issue of social security affirms that:

The church need not be caught up in this debate of how to modify the current system in order to guarantee its solvency in the short term however. It should instead be asking, what is an appropriate means of income redistribution that will protect the well-being of all older adults at this time in our nation's history. Any church recommendations on Social Security ought to arise out of our vision of the covenantal community of stewardship and interdependence. They should take into account not only the value of income redistribution but also the value of work in a covenantal community. (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 345)

General Assemblies have repeatedly called upon the church to support the right of every person to have access to quality health care that is adequate and affordable. Regarding Medicare, the 211th General Assembly (1999) called on federal and state government officials to “protect Medicare benefits” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 342–43) and in the Resolution on Christian Responsibility and a National Medical Plan, the 203rd General Assembly (1991) called upon the federal and state governments to expand medicare and medicaid benefits, until such time as a national medical plan is instituted (Minutes, 1991, Part I, p. 811).

Given that the financial future of the social security system looks grave and that the amount of older Americans will continue to increase substantially, it is imperative that the church support policy and legislation which preserve the existence of the most successful financial safety net for working Americans and their families.

Item 10-11

On Endorsing “A Christian Declaration of Marriage”—From the Presbytery of Santa Barbara.

The Presbytery of Santa Barbara overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to do the following:

1. Endorse “A Christian Declaration on Marriage” as an apt expression of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to work ecumenically and practically to strengthen marriage—an institution that is honored in the Scriptures and important in U.S. society today. “A Christian Declaration on Marriage,” in full, states:

As we celebrate the 2000th anniversary of the birth of the Lord Jesus Christ, entering the third millennium, we pledge together to honor the Lord by committing ourselves afresh to God’s first institution—marriage.

We believe that marriage is a holy union of one man and one woman in which they commit, with God’s help, to build a loving, life-giving, faithful relationship that will last for a lifetime. God has established the married state, in the order of creation and redemption, for spouses to grow in love of one another and for the procreation, nurture, formation, and education of children.

We believe that in marriage many principles of the Kingdom of God are manifested. The interdependence of healthy Christian community is clearly exemplified in loving one another (John 13:34), forgiving one another (Ephesians 4:32), confessing to one another (James 5:16), and submitting to one another (Ephesians 5:21). These principles find unique fulfillment in marriage. Marriage is God’s gift, a living image of the union between Christ and His Church.

We believe that when a marriage is true to God’s loving design it brings spiritual, physical, emotional, economic, and social benefits not only to a couple and family but also to the Church and to the wider culture. Couples, churches, and the whole of society have a stake in the well being of marriages. Each, therefore, has its own obligations to prepare, strengthen, support and restore marriages.

Our nation is threatened by a high divorce rate, a rise in cohabitation, a rise in non-marital births, a decline in the marriage rate, and a diminishing interest in and readiness for marrying, especially among young people. The documented adverse impact of these trends on children, adults, and society is alarming. Therefore, as church leaders, we recognize an unprecedented need and responsibility to help couples begin, build, and sustain better marriages, and to restore those threatened by divorce.

Motivated by our common desire that God’s Kingdom be manifested on earth as it is in heaven, we pledge to deepen our commitment to marriage. With three quarters of marriages performed by clergy, churches are uniquely positioned not only to call America to a stronger commitment to this holy union but to provide practical ministries and influence for reversing the course of our culture. It is evident in cities across the nation that where churches join in common commitment to restore a priority on marriage, divorces are reduced and communities are positively influenced.

Therefore, we call on churches throughout America to do their part to strengthen marriage in our nation by providing:

- Prayer and spiritual support for stronger marriages
- Encouragement for people to marry
- Education for young people about the meaning and responsibility of marriage
- Preparation for those engaged to be married
- Pastoral care, including qualified mentor couples, for couples at all stages of their relationship
- Help for couples experiencing marital difficulty and disruption
- Influence within society and the culture to uphold the institution of marriage

Further, we urge churches in every community to join in developing policies and programs with concrete goals to reduce the divorce rate and increase the marriage rate.

By our commitment to marriage as instituted by God, the nature of His Kingdom will be more clearly revealed in our homes, our churches, and our culture. To that end we pray and labor with the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

May the grace of God, the presence of Christ, and the empowerment of the Holy Spirit be abundant in all those who so commit and be a blessing to all whose marriages we seek to strengthen.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this endorsement to U.S. Christian communions that have already endorsed the declaration, as well as to other communions that might be encouraged to endorse the declaration in the future.

3. Instruct appropriate General Assembly entities to seek ways of working with other Christian communions in “prayer and spiritual support for stronger marriages; encouragement for people to marry; education for young people about the meaning and responsibility of marriage; preparation for those engaged to be married; pastoral care, including qualified mentor couples, for couples at all stages of their relationship; help for couples experiencing marital difficulty and disruption; influence within society and the culture to uphold the institution of marriage.”

4. Urge synods, presbyteries, and local congregations to seek ways of working with other Christian bodies in their areas toward these same purposes.

5. Ask all church members to join in a year of prayer for marriage renewal and reconciliation.

Rationale

Almost every couple contracting marriage desires sincerely “to commit themselves to a mutually shared life, and to respond to each other in sensitive and lifelong concern” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.47). But many of today’s marriages are more tenuous, the vows less certain of fulfillment, than marriages of one or two generations ago. The church has not been exempt from this trend, as nearly half of all U.S. marriages—both inside and outside of the church—end in divorce.

The church must take responsibility for its part in this troubling situation. We must confess that when we do not teach youth about God’s plan and purpose for marriage, when we perform wedding ceremonies without proper counseling, and when we do not provide support for persons in struggling relationships, we have failed to live up to our call to tend God’s flock.

In 2000, a nearly unprecedented coalition of Christian leaders came together to draft “A Christian Declaration on Marriage.” They recognized, “With three-quarters of marriages performed by clergy, churches are uniquely positioned not only to call America to a stronger commitment to this holy union but to provide practical ministries and influence for reversing the course of our culture.” The declaration called “on churches throughout America to do their part to strengthen marriage in our nation by providing: prayer and spiritual support for stronger marriages; encouragement for people to marry; education for young people about the meaning and responsibility of marriage; preparation for those engaged to be married; pastoral care, including qualified mentor couples, for couples at all stages of their relationship; help for couples experiencing marital difficulty and disruption; influence within society and the culture to uphold the institution of marriage.”

This declaration was signed by top officials of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Southern Baptist Convention, the National Association of Evangelicals, and the National Council of Churches. Subsequently, NCC General Secretary Robert Edgar withdrew his name, saying that he had not thoroughly consulted NCC member communions before signing the document and he was concerned that “misinterpretation of the declaration may be used by some as a pretext for attacks on gay and lesbian persons.” But the declaration takes no position on the contentious issue of homosexuality. Even after Edgar’s withdrawal, the declaration is still supported by leaders of two-thirds of U.S. Christians—more than fifty denominations representing more than 100 million members. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) can join itself to this broad ecumenical coalition, and encourage more denominations to do the same, by adding its endorsement to the declaration.

The declaration expresses an appreciation of marriage that is shared by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), along with virtually every major branch of the Christian tradition. Our Presbyterian confessions teach, “Christian marriage is an institution ordained of God, blessed by our Lord Jesus Christ, established and sanctified for the happiness and welfare of mankind, into which spiritual and physical union one man and one woman enter...” (The Book of Confessions, The Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.131). Endorsing the declaration would be a way of communicating this teaching more publicly, in a larger company of voices, to a wider audience.

The declaration’s focus on practical means of strengthening marriages accords well with one of the emphases in the proposed General Assembly policy statement on “Transforming Families.” A General Assembly endorsement of the declaration would be an excellent complement to a new PC(USA) policy on families, linking that policy to expanding ecumenical efforts to address problems in our most basic social institution. Together, these actions would be an important step in leadership for the General Assembly, providing guidance for church members and witness to the culture. Combined with a year of prayer for marriage renewal and reconciliation, these actions could re-energize the church’s family ministries.

The General Assembly Council advises that Item 10-11 be answered by the assembly’s action on Item 10-06, “Transforming Families” (Item 10-06).

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-11—From the Advisory Committee Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 10-11 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to endorse “A Christian Declaration on Marriage,” communicate such endorsement to other U.S. Christian communions, instruct General Assembly entities to seek ways of working with other Christian communions to uphold and strengthen the institution of marriage, urge all judicatories to seek ways of working toward these same purposes, and ask all church members to join in a year of prayer for marriage renewal and reconciliation.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness (ACSWP) advises consideration of the following:

1. Under the Book of Order, W.4.9001–.9006, the PC(USA) distinguishes between “Marriage as a civil contract between a woman and man” and a Christian definition of marriage as “a covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship. In a service of Christian marriage a lifelong commitment is made by a woman and a man to each other, publicly witnessed and acknowledged by he community of faith.” This distinction is important when endorsing a Christian declaration of marriage that may be distinct from a civil contract of marriage.
2. We advise that it is inappropriate to seek to impose our Christian understanding of marriage upon all citizens within our nation who are of different religious backgrounds, traditions, and cultures.
3. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) expresses a concern of the future use of the “Declaration” to influence the definition of a civil contract of marriage in light of the proposed “Marriage Amendment” to The Constitution of the U.S.A. and notes that the 214th General Assembly (2002) disapproved Commissioners’ Resolution 02-5 to support the Federal Marriage Amendment (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 74, 599–601).
4. Under the Book of Order, W.4.9001–.9006, the PC(USA) defines a Christian marriage as a “covenant through which a man and a woman are called to live out together before God their lives of discipleship...[and] a lifelong commitment” while the “Declaration” declares “that marriage is a holy union.” This may highlight a different theological understanding of the nature of a Christian marriage.
5. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) notes that the 208th General Assembly (1996) approved the following resolution: “Affirming the Presbyterian church’s historic definition of marriage as a civil contract between a man and a woman, yet recognizing that committed same-sex partners seek equal civil liberties in a contractual relationship with all the civil rights of married couples, we urge the Office of the Stated Clerk to explore the feasibility of entering friend-of-the-court briefs and supporting legislation in favor of giving civil rights to same-sex partners” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 122).

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Item 10-11 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to endorse “A Christian Declaration on Marriage” and communicate that endorsement to other United States Christian communions, to instruct General Assembly entities to strengthen the institution of marriage, to urge middle governing bodies to do the same, and to ask church members to join in prayer for the marriage renewal and reconciliation.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recommends disapproval of Item 10-11.

Rationale

Christians are called in marriage “to live out together before God their lives of discipleship” (Book of Order, W-4.9000). The theological statements found in “A Christian Declaration of Marriage” are incongruent with our theology as expressed in the Book of Order. Furthermore, the statement, “We believe that when a marriage is true to God’s loving design it brings spiritual, physical, emotional, economic, and social benefits not only to a couple and family but also to the church and to the wider culture” (“A Christian Declaration of Marriage,” paragraph 4) excludes couples who may live out their life together in poverty. Marriage does not necessarily lift individuals, spouses, or families out of economically unjust circumstances.

Additionally, at the 213th General Assembly (2001), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved Turn Mourning into Dancing!: A Policy Statement on Healing Domestic Violence, which cautions against definitive stances that would oppose divorce, especially in situations of domestic violence and abuse. Partners in an abusive relationship may need to terminate the marriage as a means of reconciliation or restoration to health and wholeness.

Item 10-12

Resolution on Allegations of Child Sexual Abuse Against Educators

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approve the following recommendations:

1. Approve the Resolution on Allegations of Child Sexual Abuse Against Educators, receive the full rationale, and encourage their churchwide study.
2. Urge individual Presbyterians and the sessions of local congregations to become actively involved in their local school districts and private schools to ensure both public and private schools have
  - a. adequate policies on child sexual abuse that set forth the responsibilities and rights of both students [when they are abused] and educators [when they are falsely accused];
  - b. mandated staff development and student education about sexual harassment, misconduct, and abuse; and
  - c. effective procedures that ensure due process that will protect both students and educators.
3. Urge sessions and middle governing bodies to approve and implement strong sexual misconduct policies, procedures, and training programs for prevention of and protection from sexual misconduct.
4. Urge the General Assembly Council (GAC) to
  - a. plan, develop, and implement national training programs on child sexual abuse prevention for clergy, church educators, and professionals who have access to children and youth;
  - b. support and expand the work of the Child Advocacy Office, the Presbyterian Child Advocacy Network (PCAN), Presbyterians Against Domestic Violence Network (PADVN), and Presbyterians for Disabilities Concerns (PDC) in their programs that encourage safety for children in church and society;
  - c. urge sessions and middle governing bodies to continue to plan and develop child advocacy programs during the Decade of the Child (2001–2011) and beyond; and
  - d. instruct the Presbyterian Washington Office to advocate speedy ratification of the United Nations' Convention on the Rights of the Child by the United States government.
5. Direct the Stated Clerk to write to the president of the United States and members of the Senate requesting the speedy ratification of the United Nations' Convention on the Rights of the Child.
6. Urge the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the General Assembly Council to advocate with government, universities, and seminaries for increased research into effective treatment for survivors of child sexual abuse and to better address prevention strategies.

~~[7. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to conduct a study of the future of contemporary public education in the context of the long history of Presbyterian support for public education. The study of the systemic issues confronting public education should focus on the individual's role in supporting pub-~~

~~lic education, and the appropriate citizenship for a multicultural and interfaith society and report to the 218th General Assembly (2008).]~~

[8:] [7.] Direct the Office of the General Assembly to publish the entire report in the Minutes and place the document as a whole on the PC(USA) Web site, distributing a copy to the presbytery and synod resource centers and the libraries of the theological seminaries, and making available a copy for each requesting session or middle governing body; and direct the Stated Clerk to notify the church that it is available on the Web site.

Rationale

A. Introduction

These recommendations and report are in response to the following referral: 2001 Referral: Commissioners' Resolution 01-13. On False Allegations Against Educators in Schools (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 62, 492–93).

This report represents the response of the Resolution Team on “Allegations of Child Sexual Abuse in Education” (Resolution Team on Allegations), formed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. The 213th General Assembly (2001) requested this study in response to Commissioners' Resolution 01-13 (CR 01-13) from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh (Minutes, Part I, pp. 62, 492–93). A summary of the instructions from that assembly and the CR 01-13 can be found in the rationale below with the response of the resolution team. The resolution team commends the entire report for study in the church.

B. The Mandate from General Assembly

The Resolution Team on Allegations received the following instructions from the commissioners of 213th General Assembly (2001)

That the 213th General Assembly (2001) refers Commissioners' Resolution 01-13 to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy for further study, with the following instructions:

1. evaluate the potential risk to children if their rights are not fully protected;
2. evaluate the complex legal and political issues in regard to potential violation of civil mandatory reporting statu[t]es, implementation of state administrative provisions, and our church's role in ecumenical work with educational and other child advocacy groups;
3. determine whether the scope of this study should be expanded to include other professions as well; and
4. assess the need to balance the rights and duties of those involved in incidents of alleged abuse or violence.<sup>1</sup>

Commissioners' Resolution 01-13 advocated attention to the increasing numbers of allegations of sexual misconduct against educators and mandatory reporting laws, which potentially contribute to the destruction of the reputations and careers of educators when the charges are not substantiated. In addition, schools and teachers are distracted from their focus on the instruction of students, and potential teachers are inhibited from joining the teaching profession. These concerns undermine the public trust in education and Presbyterians' historic commitment to education for all children.

In its several meetings, the Resolution Team on Allegations studied the commissioners' resolution along with the guidelines of the General Assembly referral and agreed to adopt as its working title, “Allegations of Child Sexual Abuse in Education,” thus limiting its focus to education and child sexual abuse. It decided the task would be overly complex if it expanded into other professions beyond education, even though there was some overlap in the issues. It grounded its theological reflection in scriptural interpretations of texts of welcoming the children to the Kingdom of God and texts against false witness. It engaged in reflection on the social context of our contemporary situation. For example, it accepted the international emphasis on the rights of children as initiated in the United Nations' “Convention on the Rights of the Child,” which has been approved by previous General Assemblies and many nations of the world. It noted the complex issues of society around family, gender, sexuality, and education in which sexual abuse of children had arisen. It focused on the challenge of balancing the rights and duties of those accused of alleged child sexual abuse with the inherent needs and rights of the protection of children from abuse. The study moves proactively to affirm procedures for mandating reporting of child sexual abuse and the importance of handling complaints of child sexual abuse according to standards of fair process. The study concerns the church's role in ministering to abusers and victims in cases of child sexual abuse. In its report, the Resolution Team on Allegations addresses the church in its internal community life and in its role as advocate within social systems such as public and private, state and local educational institutions.

C. Theological Introduction

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is already present in public education through students, educators, and staff. Historically, the church has been a pioneer in the development and support of public education. In recent decades the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been especially concerned about child sexual abuse. "Turn Mourning into Dancing! A Policy Statement on Healing Domestic Violence," approved by the 213th General Assembly (2001), defines child sexual abuse and determines that it "violates God's commandments to love God and love our neighbor."<sup>2</sup> This policy calls for ministering first to victims of abuse and then to the violators.<sup>3</sup> It directs "the Child Advocacy Office to work for the eradication of the sexual and immoral exploitation of children."<sup>4</sup> The principles of "restorative justice" affirmed by the 214th General Assembly (2002) recognize that "safety is the first consideration of the community. The first step toward restoration must be to protect those who have suffered and those who are at risk to suffer at the hands of others."<sup>5</sup>

The restorative justice principles recognize the following:

Offenders must be held accountable for their actions, expected to take responsibility for their behavior, and called upon to change. Offenders should be expected to make restitution whenever possible not as a matter of punishment but as an obligation and a means of helping to achieve restoration.<sup>6</sup>

The church teaches that abuse must stop, that offenders must be appropriately disciplined, and that individuals and communities must be given resources for healing. The church's statement, Sexual Misconduct Policy and Its Procedures, defines the detailed regulations required to protect the rights of the accused and accuser in cases of alleged sexual misconduct. Likewise, The Standards of Ethical Conduct, rigorously insist upon high moral standards for officers including requirements to avoid gossip and abusive speech.

The teachings of the church are morally rigorous in both directions, namely, shielding the vulnerable from sexual abuse and insisting on fair procedures for adjudicating allegations of sexual misconduct. This theology is grounded in the moral principles deduced from the Bible in guarding against sexual offenses or exploitation, in its protection of children, and in its insistence upon truthful procedures in matters of legal proceedings.

When Jesus taught about the protection of the little ones and said that children and the humble go first into the Kingdom of Heaven, it became a classical summary of the church's recognition of protection for children.

People were bringing little children to him in order that he might touch them, and the disciples spoke sternly to them. But when Jesus saw this, he was indignant and said to them, 'Let the little children come to me; do not stop them; for it is to such as these that the Kingdom of God belongs. Truly I tell you, whoever does not receive the kingdom of God as little child will never enter it.' And He took them up in his arms, laid His hands on them, and blessed them." (Mark 10:13-16)

The gospel calls us to care for our children, to protect them in their vulnerability, to empower them in their growing, and to be a sanctuary for them in a beautiful and yet dangerous world. A further text also applies:

It would be better for you if a millstone were hung around your neck and you were thrown into the sea than for you to cause one of these little ones to stumble. (Luke 17:2)

Yet we know that millions of children are violated in our country every year. Tragically, most of these violations are domestic abuse but some are in the streets and at schools. However, we also know that hysteria, dislike of teachers, misunderstanding, and malice occasionally lead to false allegations of sexual misconduct within the school. In its study, the Resolution Team on Allegations heard stories from educators and listened carefully to witnesses from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh who testified to such allegations against members who teach. Nearly every public and private school has established policies and procedures of fair process to adjudicate allegations, whether true or false. In these policies, a fair process usually includes the following: published rules of conduct, knowledge of charges, right of response, right to confront one's accusers, adequate time to prepare response, impartial fact-finding panel, adequate defense, the right of review, and finality of decision.

In our biblical and theological traditions, the care to avoid false allegations is based on the Ten Commandments, especially the ninth commandment: "You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor" (Ex. 20:16). In Matthew 15:19, Jesus lists "false witness" as an evil proceeding from a false heart. False witness is condemned repeatedly in the Bible, and it is central to the passion narratives of Christ who was convicted by "false witnesses" (Mark 14:56–57). Theologically we must respond to the evil of sexual abuse in schools with restorative justice by protecting children and guarding against false allegations.

In past centuries, Americans became aware of the damage of false allegations during the trials of so-called witches in Salem, the case of the "The Scottsboro Boys," and the McCarthy charges of unfounded lists of communists in the State Department. Because of attention by the contemporary mass media, the sexual abuse of school children sometimes seems to be associated with Roman Catholic priests or church schools for children of the First Nations in Canada. Presbyterians are especially aware of the problems at the Presbyterian School in the Congo. However, child sexual abuse exists in all communities, and congregations must pay special attention to the public schools where the majority of children in the United States are taught. In its internal life, the church and all of its institutions must protect children in its programs, and also shield its members from malicious gossip. As a part of this effort, all churches must establish procedures to guard against false witness to protect teachers, administrators, and staff from falsehoods.

D. The Social Context

1. The "Rights of the Child" (United Nations) and the Potential Dangers if These Rights Are Not Protected

When we consider the problem of sexual abuse of children, we remember our commitment to the principle of paying special attention to the needs of persons who are most vulnerable, in this case, the children. In addition to the mandates from Scripture and PC(USA) policies, we look to the international debates about the rights of children. The PC(USA) General Assembly has repeatedly reaffirmed the "Convention on the Rights of the Child"<sup>7</sup> passed by the United Nations in 1959 and endorsed by many nations since then. Sadly, the United States has not endorsed this declaration that leads to one of our recommendations above. Among the principles important to our report are the following statements from this declaration:

The [United Nations] General Assembly proclaims this Declaration of the Rights of the Child to the end that he (sic.) may have a happy childhood and enjoy for his (sic.) own good and for the good of society the rights and freedoms herein set forth, and calls upon parents, upon men and women as individuals, and upon voluntary organizations, local authorities and national governments to recognize these rights and strive for their observance by legislative and other measures progressively taken in accordance with the following principles.

Among the principles that support our conclusions in this paper are the following:

Principle 2: The child shall enjoy special protection, and shall be given opportunities and facilities, by law and by other means, to enable him to develop physically, mentally, morally, spiritually and socially in a healthy and normal manner and in conditions of freedom and dignity. In the enactment of laws for this purpose, the best interests of the child shall be the paramount consideration. ...

Principle 9: The child shall be protected against all forms of neglect, cruelty and exploitation.

While we acknowledge the justice claims of teachers who are falsely accused of child sexual abuse, we recognize that the vast majority of allegations are true and thus endanger the lives and health of children and families. Nothing in our report should be construed as a limitation on the priority of protecting children "against all forms of neglect, cruelty and exploitation." We agree with the United Nations that children need and have a right to "special protection" so that the image of God will be nurtured and they can develop into mature adults.

2. Social Issues

In an ideal world, society would carefully provide for the physical, emotional, and intellectual nurturance and education of children as a primary task of all members of the community. The goal of raising healthy children to adulthood is paramount to a healthy and sustainable society. Unfortunately, we live in a society in which poverty, racism, abuse, and neglect often accompany a child in his or her journey to adulthood. We are also a society of adults who struggle with complex physical, emotional, and intellectual challenges that come directly from childhood traumas. This cycle presents enormous challenges to those who work towards the goal of nurturing and educating children. Educators are forced to work towards a goal of preparing children for adulthood while they continue to live and work within the broken community that presents so many hurdles for the physical and emotional nurturing of everyone.

One of the threats to children in today's society is sexual abuse. In environments where children are devalued, where adults lack accountability for their behavior, where sexuality is commercialized, and where promiscuous behavior is too often presented as normal to children, educators and parents are faced with the challenge to teach and model behaviors that may be contradictory to behavior learned from media images, advertising, and peer influence.

Schools face the dilemma of providing safe and creative spaces for children to learn, while also ensuring protection for educators against false allegations of sexual abuse. Some children face a high risk of sexual abuse because of prior abuse, neglect, and psychiatric problems such as attention deficit disorder, depression, violent tendencies, and posttraumatic stress disorder. Unfortunately, the risk of false allegations of sexual abuse also increases in such a fragmented social order.

When allegations of sexual abuse of children are made, educators and parents face the challenge of balancing the rights and duties of all persons involved, including the accuser, the accused, family members, peers, and community members. Allegations that are eventually found to be true require courage to act and compassion for all concerned. Allegations that are false need the same compassion and care for all persons in the process of seeking God's justice and mercy.

E. Discussion Regarding Child Abuse in Education

1. Balancing the Rights and Duties of Those Involved in Incidents of Alleged Child Sexual Abuse

In the immediate aftermath of an accusation of sexual misconduct, abuse, or molestation, third parties to whom a report (however formal or informal) is made should remind themselves of the ongoing need of both accused and accuser and their families for sensitivity and support.

If the accusation is in a societal context but involves members of the church, pastoral care and the local church's support remain a priority and another role accrues to the local church: advocate for the rights of the accused and the accuser. Both have the right to a fair investigation, protection of their privacy, and legal representation until charges have been adjudicated.

Society's beliefs and laws reflect the inherent right of children to be protected from sexual exploitation. A child's accusation of sexual misconduct must be treated as seriously as any other charge of criminal misconduct. Even though various entities estimate some accusations are false, most school systems, in fact, experience relatively few false charges.

It is the right of both educators and students to have preventive practices and policies in place, and educators should have frequent staff development training. Educators, particularly, have the responsibility to know these policies and to practice preventive measures, but, above all, to never take advantage of a child's vulnerability or to abuse their authority. Both educators and students should be trained about their rights and duties and should have neutral investigations when there is an accusation. School systems, all too often, do not turn to persons outside of the system who are trained in the area of sexual misconduct investigation.

Students have the responsibility to tell the truth and not use a charge as retribution against an educator who has spurned them, has not given them the grade they wanted, is disliked, or to win favor with their peers.

At the same time, they also have the responsibility to report to an adult when they have been sexually molested, abused, or exploited.

Sometimes accused educators and their families, because of the culture of the school system and inadequate procedures, are left without emotional or financial help. They have the right to support and counseling, salary continuation until the charges are substantiated, and protective reassignment if exonerated. Without these it would be more difficult for an educator to reclaim his or her dignity, self-worth, and professional ability.

Accused educators have the responsibility not to give false testimony, to respect their accuser, and to refuse to criticize the character and motives of any child who has accused a teacher of sexual misconduct.

School systems have dual responsibilities to their employers and to their students. They must be encouraged to remember to act humanely for both. Congregations are urged to take this same position in individual cases, and also to advocate for appropriate policies and procedures in their local school system.

2. Having Fair Policies and Administrative Procedures for Handling Complaints in School Systems

Estimates vary as to the frequency of allegations that are proven to be false, but school administrators tend to believe that the number of charges of child sexual abuse that are unfounded is relatively small. Regardless of the prevalence, due process requires that the procedures utilized in handling charges provide for reliability, fairness, and accountability.

The "Sexual Misconduct Policy and Its Procedures," approved by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in 1993, provides principles that are applicable for school systems. This statement recognizes the duty imposed upon all persons to report incidents of sexual misconduct, the due process rights of all persons, the need for documentation of all action taken by persons responsible for investigating or resolving charges, and the need for educating and training a wide variety of persons. The policy is directed towards church members, church officers, nonmember employees, and volunteers. It asserts "Sexual misconduct is not only a violation of the principles set forth in Scripture, but also of the ministerial, pastoral, employment, and professional relationship. It is never permissible or acceptable."<sup>8</sup>

These principles can be applied to educational systems. A comprehensive policy for handling complaints against educators must recognize that school districts and other educational entities have not always acted effectively, and may not be equipped, to provide the education and training necessary to identify child sexual abuse when it occurs. School districts must follow the proper steps in reporting such abuse and processing complaints in a fair manner. Persons responsible for investigations of child sexual abuse must have adequate training to protect vulnerable children and also take into account the possibility of false allegations and the complex environment underlying charges of abuse.

State statutes vary with regard to the form and content of reports of suspected child sexual abuse. Certain professionals, such as teachers, administrators, counselors, and other educational staff, are mandated reporters who are required by law to report child sexual abuse to state agencies. Any person can report, in good faith, orally or in writing, an alleged child sexual abuse. When an oral report and written report are both required, the written report needs to be submitted within twenty-four to forty-eight hours. Some state statutes will specify what information is to be submitted in a report of suspected child sexual abuse. Usually this includes:

- Child's name, age, and address.
- Parents' names and address.
- Nature and extent of the injury or condition observed.
- Prior injuries and when observed.
- Reporter's name and location (not always required, but valuable to child protective staff).

To assist persons making oral reports of suspected child sexual abuse, many states maintain a toll-free, twenty-four hour telephone line just for receipt of suspected abuse. Educators and administrators should have ready access to this phone number.

The following principles of fair process apply to authorized investigators from state agencies as well as school administrators who may be involved in a preliminary investigation. The report should be submitted to a person responsible for implementing fair process on matters involving child sexual abuse, who is in a position to ensure that all appropriate parties are notified and the necessary investigation is conducted promptly and completely. The investigation must be promptly held, conducted in a manner that respects the privacy of all parties to the extent permitted by law and to the extent practical, and appropriate under the circumstances. The accused educator has a right to receive promptly, in writing, all charges against the accused that are being investigated along with the accused's right to be represented by an attorney or other person of the accused's choosing.

In cases where the investigation is completed and the responsible entity concludes that the charge is unfounded, the decision should be communicated promptly to the alleged victim, the accused, and to all other persons previously made aware of the pending charges. The accused is entitled to a written statement from the entity conducting the investigation declaring that the specific charge made against the accused was false and without foundation.

When the person(s) conducting the investigation concludes that there is substance to the charge, a hearing should be scheduled at which time the child victim or his/her representative presents the facts supporting the charge and the accused has the opportunity to both confront the accusers and offer any evidence in the accused's own defense. In all such cases, the vulnerability of children in such hearings must be respected. Where the testimony of children would be damaging to a child, their narratives might be given through recorded testimony or reports of interviewers. Any hearing is always subject to the right of the accused to be represented at the recording of testimony and to cross-examine the interviewers as to their reports. It will be held only after reasonable notice to the accused and only upon written charges provided to the accused prior to the hearing.

Due process normally requires that the accused retains a right to have the entire matter reviewed, by way of appeal, in those circumstances where investigators have determined that the accused has committed the alleged act of abuse. Fairness dictates that both the original hearing tribunal and the appellate body involve persons who are neutral in the matter and capable of rendering an impartial decision.

In those situations where it is determined, at any point in the process, that the allegation of child sexual abuse is false and was instituted by a person knowing the charge to be false, sanctions might be imposed in order to preserve accountability. The sanction should take into account the actual harm suffered by the accused and by the community as a result of the false accusation.

3. Mandatory Reporting of Child Sexual Abuse

Any consideration of mandated reporting must begin by recognizing the PC(USA)'s commitment to making the world a place where all children are treated with dignity and respect and have the opportunity to experience the fullness of life, which we believe was intended by God. As Presbyterians, we believe that the best interests of the child should prevail in all legal and administrative decisions and that the safety of the child has the highest priority. Thus, the state has an obligation to protect children from all forms of abuse, neglect, and exploitation, including sexual abuse, and to undertake preventive programs in this regard. The existence of mandatory reporting statutes is consistent with this belief. Every state has statutes requiring reporting of child abuse and neglect.

Under the U.S. Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA),<sup>9</sup> child sexual abuse is minimally defined as any recent act or failure to act, resulting in imminent risk of sexual abuse of a child under the age of eighteen by a parent or caretaker who is responsible for the child's welfare. All states require certain professionals and institutions to report suspected child abuse. Teachers and other school personnel are regularly included in the groups listed as being bound by mandatory reporting requirements.

The first issue arising under the mandatory reporting statutes is the extent of the knowledge that leads to a duty to report. Some statutes call for reporting upon a “reasonable cause to believe” or upon a “reasonable suspicion.” This requires that the facts be judged against an objective standard: would the facts available to the person reporting the abuse justify the conclusion that the facts observed or reported were abusive? To establish grounds for reasonable suspicion, the reporter whose impressions formed the basis for a report of child sexual abuse must articulate specific facts and observations that, in conjunction with reasonable inferences derived from those facts and observations, led the reporter to believe that sexual abuse had occurred and that the alleged offender, if named, is the person responsible for the abuse.

Other statutes require the reporter to “know or suspect,” which might be seen as a different degree of knowledge. None of the statutes set forth, within the reporting statute, a definition or explanation of what is meant by the term(s) “reasonable cause to believe,” “reasonable suspicion,” or “knows or suspect.” Because the mandatory reporting statutes are not always clear to every person, teachers and other school officials need to be trained on how to make appropriate reports of suspected child sexual abuse.

The failure to report suspected child abuse can result in both civil and criminal liability. Most statutes typically call for a misdemeanor punishable by a fine. By way of example, Pennsylvania permits a person who willfully fails to report a case of suspected child abuse to be fined $300 for a first violation and to be fined not more than $2,500 and undergo imprisonment for a period not to exceed one year for a second or subsequent violation.<sup>10</sup> As in most criminal prosecutions, the action of the defendant must be shown to have been intentional to support the conviction. On the civil side, the failure to report an incident of actual or suspected child sexual abuse potentially will give rise to a legal negligence action claiming that the child suffered injury as a direct result of the defendant’s failure to exercise a duty owed to the child.

Because of the real possibility that persons accused of sexual misconduct will react by bringing an action against the reporter, CAPTA requires states to enact legislation providing for immunity from prosecution under state and local laws and regulations for individuals making good faith reports of suspected or known instances of child abuse. In most states, this immunity is absolute, where it can be shown that the reporting was done in “good faith.”<sup>11</sup> Providing absolute immunity may encourage the making of unreliable or false reports, but this must be balanced against the state’s obligation to respond to child abuse and protect the safety of the child. This is best advanced by ensuring that persons with knowledge of abuse are not inhibited in coming forward through fear of retribution.

The 1993 CAPTA amendments require states to enact legislation providing for prosecution in false reporting cases. This would occur where the reporter lacked a “reasonable belief” or did not have “reasonable suspicion” that the report was true. States that already have perjury and falsification provisions in their criminal codes did not move to enact parallel legislation within their child protective services statutes. Nevertheless, the existence of false reporting sanctions should operate to discourage unsubstantiated charges against educators.

Where a school administrator or another teacher both knows that the law requires a person to report suspected child abuse and knows that there exists real penalties for failing to report, it is more likely than not that a report will be generated, even on weak grounds. Opposed to these policies encouraging reporting are those features providing criminal sanctions for false reporting and the risk of civil suit for either negligent reporting or defamation. Here, there is a risk that a reporter will “think twice” before making a report, since the penalties for a mistake are not merely superficial, and thus may neglect to make a report when child sexual abuse is occurring.

The mandatory reporting statutes have developed through an honest desire to put in place procedures that operate to enhance the government’s obligation, and desire, to protect the well-being and safety of its children. The remedy for alleviating any problem of false allegations does not lie in eliminating the requirement for mandatory reporting. Rather, available resources might be directed more properly towards training modalities aimed at providing teachers, administrators, and others working in an educational setting with a clearer understanding of what is intended when the law speaks of “reasonable cause to believe,” “reasonable suspicion,” “know or suspect,” and, indeed, what observable conduct actually rises to the level of reportable child sexual abuse. The Presbyterian church should support mandatory reporting because of the priority of protecting children.

F. The Church's Role

1. The Church's Role in Addressing Child Sexual Abuse

The church should be a primary source of care, nurture, and support for all persons, especially children who are dependent on adults for their nurture and survival.

Children are valuable members of the community, and because of their vulnerability, it is the responsibility of the adult members of the community to see that they grow up and thrive to be the human beings God created them to be.

The church provides ministry to the victims of sexual abuse when it proclaims the gospel of salvation, nurtures the children of God, maintains worship, teaches truth, promotes social righteousness, and embodies the Kingdom of God in the world. In countering the brokenness of the sin of the world, the witness of the church reduces the number of children of God that fall prey to the sin of sexual abuse. The gospel of forgiveness of sin frees humanity from the social injustice and the costs of human brokenness that contribute to the cycle of sexual abuse. Even as Jesus excised the demonic forces, so the everyday ministry of the church combats them. The church's preaching, education, nurture, and worship can benefit by more explicit reference to the ministry of saving children from abuse.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) has developed several studies and resources addressing child abuse, which include the following resources from our denomination: Surely Heed Their Cry, A Presbyterian Guide to Child Abuse Prevention, Intervention and Healing (1993, PDS #257-93-010); Striking Terror No More, The Church Responds to Domestic Violence, Bridge Resources (1997, PDS #095516); The Whole World in Gods Hands?, Church & Society (2000); Turn Mourning Into Dancing! A Policy Statement On Healing Domestic Violence, (2001, PDS #OGA-01-018); We Won't Let it Happen Here: Preventing Child Abuse in the Church, (Second Edition, 2002, PDS #72-651-02-002); and Anguished Hearts: A Study Guide to Accompany Turn Mourning Into Dancing! (2003, PDS #70-270-03-025).

2. Prevention of Child Sexual Abuse

There are many ways the church can work to prevent children from being abused. One way is through programs aimed at prevention of child sexual abuse. These prevention resources include policies that identify the behaviors that decrease the risk of child sexual abuse as well as decrease the risk of false allegations within the church communities. It is the church's responsibility to do all it can to ensure that children are safe from offenders by screening all paid and volunteer staff, those who have access to children and youth programs at church, and leaders in camps or other church-related activities. The church demonstrates its unwavering commitment to the physical safety and spiritual nurture of children and youth when sound child abuse prevention policies and procedures are in place. The burden of prevention is the responsibility of adults who are leaders in the church community.

We must use the resources of the church to ensure that sexual offenders do not have access to children in our church programs. Supervision of all church leaders helps to ensure that potential offenders are identified and removed from leadership positions. Additional prevention practices include the recommendation that two or more adults be available whenever children are around. In addition, doors should be left open, windows into rooms where children are engaged in programs should be unobstructed when individual adults must be with individual children, and transportation and supervision provided only with parental knowledge and consent.

The church has a role to play in teaching and nurturing our children. It is important that the home, the school, and the church present a consistent message to children about safety and the danger of child sexual abuse. The church can prepare our children to deal with a potential encounter with a sexual offender. This includes basic safety and survival information for children through educational awareness training. The churches should teach prevention in the context of biblical and theological foundations. The church should teach sex education and prevention from a sound theological perspective that includes mutual respect for all Gods' children regardless of race, ethnicity, gender, and culture.

We call for our church and our educational communities to provide education that goes beyond giving information to modeling appropriate and non-harmful behaviors and ways of relating to one another. Education should be conducted within the context of understanding the needs of different communities and creating culturally relevant strategies including language differences and cultural norms of sexuality. Educational programs may include:

- Age-appropriate educational materials about human behavior and touching such as “Good Touch/Bad Touch,” “Safe Kid Academy,” etc.
- Quality sex education: healthy sexuality with integrity.
- Instruction to help children and youth protect themselves from abuse.
- Instruction on pastoral care with families suffering from abuse including both the survivors' and abusers' families.
- Instruction on the consequences of child sexual abuse and the possibilities for healing.
- Local community resources for victims and survivors and their families.

The church should encourage and support parental education on healthy boundaries and healthy positive sexuality. Parents should be encouraged and trained to talk with their children using appropriate language about sex and sexuality.

Incidents of child sexual abuse are devastating to all who are involved: the child, the family, the child's peers, the peers of the child's parents, the local congregation, the community at large, the accused offender, and the family of the accused offender. Each person affected must be included in a ministry of pastoral care after an abusive incident. The desired outcome of a pastoral ministry to victims and the abusers is justice and healing for all as much as possible. There are no shortcuts or quick formulas to attain this outcome.

Abusers must be held accountable for their actions. The church can help foster accountability by advocating creative treatment options beyond incarceration. The church must also create opportunities for repentance, restitution, and change in behavior through abusers' programs such as “Men Stopping Violence.”

The good news is that child sexual abuse is preventable. However, child sexual abuse occurs at an alarming rate in all segments of society regardless of religion, economic status, race, ethnicity, or educational level. The church is called to bring the message of wholeness and fullness of life in the face of human frailty. The grace of God is present with all in our brokenness and our goodness.

Commissioners' Resolution. On Seeking a Thorough, Calm, and Reasoned Review of the USA Patriot ACT.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) instruct the Stated Clerk and the Moderator to express to the president of the United States and the United States Congress the desire that

- 1. there should be a careful, unhurried review of all parts of the USA Patriot Act;
- 2. there should be no rush to renew aspects of the USA Patriot Act, which are not due to expire until December 2005;
- 3. the clear division between intelligence and criminal investigation should be restored;
- 4. the wording of the renewed/revisited USA Patriot Act should grant the government only those powers that we, as a people acting through our representatives, actually intend that the government shall use.

Rationale

There is no reason based on the threat of terrorist action to rush to renew the nonpermanent provisions of the USA Patriot Act eighteen months before their expiration dates.

Given the haste with which the USA Patriot Act was approved, a complete review of all aspects of the USA Patriot Act is called for.

It is the nature of nations to do whatever they need to do in order to inform themselves fully about perceived threats. Therefore, if the distinction between intelligence gathering and criminal investigation is breached, individuals have no rights in the areas of free speech, free association, privacy, and security.

It has been suggested that the USA Patriot Act does not need stringent review because some parts have not been put into action yet. Such an argument goes against original historical basis of our Bill of Rights. We have a Bill of Rights because in 1789 a significant number of Americans were not willing to ratify a constitution on the basis that the resulting government would honor their rights even though those rights were not spelled out. A right that we have only as long as wise and benevolent leaders in Washington choose not to violate it, it is not a right.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Item 10-13 calls for a review of the USA Patriot Act.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises disapproval with the comment that the issues are the subject of Item 12-06 Resolution on Violence, Religion, and Terrorism.

Item 10-14

[The assembly disapproved Item 10-14 with comment. See pp. 60–61]

Commissioners' Resolution. On Appointing an Action Committee That Will Identify Media and Advertising That Has Excessive Sex, Violence, and Other Immoral Content for the Purpose of Influencing Producers and Sponsors.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) direct the General Assembly Council to establish a Media Committee that will create and maintain a list of television programs, movies, video games, music, and other media considered violent or with inappropriate sexual content for the purpose of encouraging church members to make calls, write letters, and, if necessary, boycott those listed. The committee will be composed of one member from each presbytery and a coordinator in Louisville, Kentucky, and with a simple majority vote, create and maintain a list of offending programs. Each committee member shall distribute updated reports at their presbytery meetings containing the names, along with comments, about media on the list. The list will also be made available to the News Service editor. All communication and voting shall be done by e-mail.

Rationale

The eroding of moral standards in our country is evident in the actions from those holding positions of responsibility in the public and corporate world to children in the classrooms and playgrounds across America. For more than fifty years, the PC(USA) has been concerned and has continually advocated for the reduction of sex, violence, and other immoral content in media. We haven't been heard. This resolution is a plan of action, a plan that identifies, involves and influences. The Media Committee will do the identification. Involvement starts when the offending program, CD, video game, etc. is reported to the presbyteries. Presbyteries in turn inform pastors, who then carry the information to their congregation for member involvement. The church members will then be encouraged to exert their influence through calling, letter writing, or sending e-mails to producers and sponsors informing them of their displeasure and their intent to abstain from viewing or buying the offending product. Profit should not replace moral standards. Our families and children deserve better.

Inappropriate material in the media has been a concern of the church as far back as the 1947 General Assembly and was again addressed in the General Assemblies of 1949, 1953, 1956, 1977, 1984, and 1992. It is addressed again in this the 216th General Assembly (2004) in the "Transforming Families" paper by quoting, as written below, from the 1993 overture to “bring the church’s influence to bear so that the media will act to strengthen moral values” (Minutes, 1993, Part I, p. 13, Item 10-06, Part 3.i.

In 1993, the following statement was made (Minutes, 1993, Part I, p. 884, Overture 93-54):

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Calls upon its members, congregations, and governing bodies to join in condemnation of immorality communicated through the media;
2. Shall develop and implement a plan of action for the General Assembly, the presbyteries, and the churches through their members to “bring the church’s influence to bear so that the media will act to strengthen moral values.” The plan shall address ways and means to stimulate members of the church to act in support of this objective and shall address whether the following approaches, among others, would have such influence to
  - a. identify the moral or immoral content of specific media presentation in order to assist parents in directing the activities of their children, and
  - b. influence producers and sponsors to cease producing media that emphasize, promote, or condone immoral conduct...

In 1995, the General Assembly Council responded to this overture (Minutes, 1995, Part I, p. 324) without creating a plan for implementation.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 10-14

Comment on Item 10-14—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council suggests that this commissioners’ resolution be disapproved. First, there are a number of sources available to the general public that screen and rate media offerings. Second, the cost of setting up the extensive system envisioned by this commissioners’ resolution would be prohibitive and would require curtailment of other existing ministry and mission programs.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-14

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-14—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Item 10-14 deals with appointing an action committee that will identify media and advertising that has excessive sex, violence, and other immoral content for the purpose of influencing producers and sponsors.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that the 216th General Assembly (2004) disapprove Item 10-14.

Rationale

Entities within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) sufficiently address the concern of Item 10-14:

- Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) partners with Interfaith Center on Corporate Responsibility to advocate for change in business entities that create and market violent video games;
- The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) includes on its Web page a link to “The Great Media Awakening,” with the purpose of making Presbyterians more aware of the immoral content in much of the media that we consume, including music, movies, and television;

- The Child Advocacy Office, with its focus on The Decade of the Child, disseminates information concerning the detrimental effect of violent video games on children and youth;
- The Presbyterian Peacemaking Office emphasizes the World Council of Churches' Decade to Overcome Violence.

Item 10-15

Commissioners' Resolution. Denial of Civil Rights in Virginia.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) urge the legislature and the people of Virginia to reconsider the recently passed law that will end all contractual rights between same-sex partners, and to direct the Stated Clerk to communicate to the appropriate officials in the Commonwealth of Virginia the church's support of equal access to civil rights to all.

Rationale

The 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), while enjoying the hospitality of the great Commonwealth of Virginia, is nonetheless aware that we are in the days moving toward a radical denial of civil rights to gays and lesbian person. This new legislation—due to take effect July 1st while the 216th General Assembly (2004) is in session—will ban any “partnership contract or other arrangement between persons of the same sex purporting to bestow the privileges or obligations of marriage.”

This assembly notes with shock and dismay the far-reaching effort to reject any claims of gay and lesbian persons to basic respect or legal standing for their long-term, committed relationships.

We continue as a church to deal with differences concerning the legitimacy of marriage for same-sex couples, and have disagreements about the full participation of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender persons of faith in the leaderships of our church. Nevertheless, as a denomination we have been committed “to work for the passage of laws that prohibit discrimination in the areas of employment, housing, and public accommodations based on the sexual orientation of a person” since the 190th General Assembly (1978) of the PCUSA. Additionally, the 214th General Assembly (2002) reaffirmed and expanded this stance, saying, “there is no legal, social, moral, or biblical justification for denying lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender persons access to the basic requirements of human social existence.”

Item 10-16

[In response to Item 10-16, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See p. 59.]

Commissioners' Resolution. On Supporting the Federal Marriage Amendment.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) direct the Stated Clerk and the Presbyterian Washington Office—and encourage all governing bodies and church members—to communicate to Congress and, as appropriate, state legislatures the following:

1. The historic and continuing support of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for the institution of marriage, defined as “a civil contract between a woman and a man” (Book of Order, W-4.9001).
2. The desire of the church to see that definition safeguarded in civil law by all appropriate means, including the Federal Marriage Amendment now proposed in Congress.

Rationale

The Federal Marriage Amendment has been introduced in both houses of Congress, with more than 100 co-sponsors from both major political parties. The text of the proposed amendment (Senate Joint Resolution 30) reads: “Marriage in the United States shall consist only of the union of a man and a woman. Neither this Constitution nor the constitution of any State shall be construed to require that marriage or the legal incidents thereof be conferred upon any union other than the union of a man and a woman.”

It has become necessary to take measures to preserve the definition of marriage under civil law as “the union of a man and a woman.” Laws regarding marriage and family life have traditionally been the domains of the state legislatures, elected by the people of the various states. To date, no legislature has acted to redefine marriage under the laws of its state. A large majority of the American people is opposed to any redefinition of marriage.

Nevertheless, a small contingent of activists is on the verge of redefining marriage for the entire nation. The strategy has been to file civil suits, alleging that state and federal constitutions require the abolition of legal distinctions between marriage and other sexual relationships. As a result of one such suit, four justices on the Supreme Judicial Court in one state have compelled the recognition of “same-sex marriages.”

Proponents of such marriages have announced their intention of asserting “federal constitutional claims” that would require all other states to recognize these “same-sex marriages.” Meanwhile, a polygamist in Utah has filed suit, lodging similar constitutional objections to the limitation of marriage to two persons. Legal observers think it highly likely that some litigants will succeed in finding sympathetic judges who will impose a redefinition of marriage all across the United States.

Many Americans would be happy to avoid making a “federal case” out of marriage. However, it is the advocates for non-marital, sexual relationships that have turned the debate over marriage into a federal and constitutional question. For this reason, the remedy to preserve marriage must be federal and constitutional. At this point, only an amendment to the U.S. Constitution can ensure that the historic and universal definition of marriage under civil law will be upheld.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) defines marriage clearly and succinctly in its Constitution. The Directory for Worship declares marriage to be “a civil contract between a woman and a man.” It adds that “marriage is a gift God has given to all humankind for the well-being of the entire human family” (Book of Order, W-4.9001). The rites of marriage found in the Book of Common Worship affirm the benefits that God intends marriage should bring not only to the man and woman who marry, but also to the church that blesses their marriage and the civil society that recognizes it.

Moreover, The Book of Confessions teaches that marriage “was instituted by the Lord God himself, who blessed it most bountifully, and willed man and woman to cleave one to the other inseparably” (Second Helvetic Confession, 5.246); that marriage is “an institution ordained of God, blessed by our Lord Jesus Christ, established and sanctified for the happiness and welfare of mankind into which spiritual and physical union one man and one woman enter” (The Westminster Confession of Faith, UPCUSA version, 6.131); and that it “exemplifies in a basic way God’s ordering of the interpersonal life for which he created mankind” (Confession of 1967, 9.47).

There are many other valuable human relationships. But marriage is unique in the mysterious physical and spiritual union of man and woman that it constitutes and in the combination of personal and religious and social purposes that it serves. Neither our Reformed church tradition nor our U.S. legal tradition has treated any other human relationship as the equivalent of marriage. In many other cultures and religions around the world, too, the marriage of man and woman has been recognized as a special relationship of great importance.

Recent sociological research has confirmed the many benefits of marriage. The report on “Transforming Families” from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy states: “Marriage remains a blessing for most people. Married people continue to report higher levels of happiness and health than do single individuals. They live longer, are less likely to engage in risky behavior, and show fewer symptoms of anxiety and depression. Marriage continues to provide an economic benefit as two adults share resources. Household incomes of married people are higher, on average, than those of single people.... Moreover, family research provides strong evidence that, on average, children do better in healthy, intact two-parent (biological) families than they do in step-families, adopted families, or single-parent families” (p. 23).

State recognition of marriage expresses a public policy preference that a mother and a father, committed to each other for life, should rear children. Any redefinition of marriage would vitiate that public policy preference, so crucial in shaping the next generation of citizens.

General Assemblies have asserted “the need for the church to stand for just treatment of homosexual persons in our society in regard to their civil liberties, equal rights and protection under the law from social and economic discrimination which is due all its citizens” (Minutes, PCUS, 1979, Part I) and to support their “access to the basic requirements of human social existence” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1978, Part I). The 208th General Assembly (1996) affirmed “the Presbyterian church’s historic definition of marriage as a civil contract between a man and a woman,” while urging the Stated Clerk “to explore the feasibility of entering friend-of-the-court briefs and supporting legislation in favor of giving civil rights to same-sex partners.” Nothing in this resolution contradicts these statements of earlier General Assemblies. The proposed Federal Marriage Amendment would not prevent any state legislature from enacting benefits for same-sex partners. Nor would it prevent private employers from providing such benefits.

Finally, and perhaps more importantly, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been sending confusing signals on this subject. In spite of the church’s historic stance on marriage and in spite of a clear word in March of 2004 from Stated Clerk Clifton Kirkpatrick, which reaffirms that stance, the PC(USA)’s Washington Office has been vigorously lobbying congress to disapprove the Federal Marriage Amendment. Those staff members are basing their actions on the fact that, when given the opportunity, the 214th General Assembly (2002) did not choose to support a commissioners’ resolution that would have endorsed the amendment. In fact, many commissioners simply saw no need for the church to take a position on a piece of legislation designed to address what was then a hypothetical future situation. The commissioners in 2002 also chose not to speak a word against the Federal Marriage Amendment, yet this one entity of the PC(USA) has interpreted their work as having done so.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) should resolve this confusion by clearly affirming the church’s long-standing conviction regarding marriage, which can thereby give appropriate guidance to the Washington Office and other General Assembly entities. That is the purpose of this resolution.

- Rejects laws that deny the right to a civil marriage to persons based on their gender or sexual preference.
- Urges state legislations to change state laws to include the right of same-gender persons to civil marriage and, thereby, to extend to them all the benefits, privileges, and responsibilities of civil marriage, and urges all persons to support such changes in state laws.
- Urges the Congress of the United States of America to recognize those state laws that allow same-gender marriage and to change federal laws to recognize all civil marriages licensed and solemnized under state to apply in all federal laws that provide benefits, privileges, and/or responsibilities to married persons.

Item 10-Info

A. *Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy Agency Summary

1. Assigned Responsibilities

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), as a servant of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), develops, interprets, and monitors policies that encourage and challenge the Church and society to reflect and act in faithful response to God's call to do justice. (Mission Statement, approved October 2002 in El Paso, Texas)

In every age, the Spirit calls on the church to discern afresh God's will for life in our particular time and place in history. The ACSWP's work is to discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in relation to contemporary society. In this work, the ACSWP and its task forces draw upon a great wealth of resources:

- the voices of the biblical text;
- the wisdom of theological discourse;
- the guidance of the Reformed confessions;
- the tradition of past policy statements;
- the insights of sociopolitical disciplines;
- the advice of members and all governing bodies of the Church;
- the insights of people who are poor, victims of existing policies, and those who have not had a voice in councils of the Church; and
- the counsel of ecumenical partners. (Minutes, 205th General Assembly (1993), p. 769)

Social witness can occur at many different points: in a church session, in a presbytery, in an advocacy group, in the participation of Christians in mission, in the challenge of a Christian community at home or in another country, in a meeting of the ecumenical church.

However, for Presbyterians, decisions about the church's social witness need to be made by persons elected to serve in governing bodies (session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly). As governing bodies meet, the elected persons are commissioned ". . . not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ . . ." (Book of Order, G-4.0301d).

In providing service and resources to meet the growing needs of congregations, middle governing bodies, and the General Assembly, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) finds guidance in this their Mission Statement as they participate in service to the one mission of the Church under Jesus Christ. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy engages with the grassroots in assisting the General Assembly to discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in relation to contemporary society.

Making a personal social witness begins with very individual and personal ways of growing and developing as a Christian—studying the Scriptures with prayerful discernment, deepening one’s understanding of faithfulness through the church’s social witness policy, connecting one’s faith with others in the church community, and then expressing one’s individual and collective faithfulness to the world beyond the church. The ACSWP is a partner and resource in this witness throughout the church.

The work of the churchwide Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is based on a number of passages from the Scriptures, The Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order. The 205th General Assembly (1993) policy statement Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness provides extensive documentation of these passages and is a useful document in local congregational interpretation of the ACSWP and its mission.

All of these passages, however, have a common theme. The Gospel says that to confess Jesus Christ as Lord is to believe that God can and has overcome the powers of sin in the world. Christians do not work alone, but join the Lord Jesus Christ who is already at work in our world. John Calvin said that social concern, expressed by action on behalf of our neighbors, is a central part of the faith. And, historic faith confessions, the work of theologians, and the actions of the General Assemblies have reaffirmed that message. Our faithfulness as Reformed Christians means action.

In support of the work of the assembly, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is given direct access to the assembly as it meets biennially. Between sessions of the assembly, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy also assists the General Assembly Council, the Office of the General Assembly, and other entities and agencies of the church as their work involves the development and interpretation of social witness policy.

The committee carries out its responsibilities in four major ways. They are the

- a. development and recommendation of new social witness and policy for approval by the General Assembly;
- b. interpretation and communication of the General Assembly’s social witness and policy, both to the church and the world at large;
- c. rendering of advice and counsel to the entities and governing bodies of the church on matters of social witness policy throughout the year; and
- d. rendering of advice and counsel to the General Assembly when it meets as a governing body.

The committee develops and recommends new social witness and policies primarily in response to referrals from the General Assembly and its entities, and in a manner consistent with the Manual of the General Assembly 2003–2004, “On Forming Social Policy.” This policy development requires depth of theological reflection, breadth of input, diversity of insight, and equity of participation in all policy development work. Before a policy statement is approved, extensive consultation is mandated at all stages of development. Thus, no work of the committee is independent of the concerns of Presbyterians gathered in worshiping and serving communities across the land.

The committee’s Advice and Counsel group carries out the task of providing advice and counsel at the meeting of the General Assembly. This group of elected committee members, together with other staff and resource persons from several General Assembly Council entities, advises commissioners in assembly committees and other entities about social policies, which are applicable to issues before the assembly. It may also comment on the need or direction for future social policy. Advice and counsel is provided throughout the meeting, through “Advice and Counsel Memoranda,” by oral testimony before assembly committees, and informally.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy consists of twelve members, nine of whom are elected by the General Assembly from the whole church and three who are General Assembly Council members. Members are: Donna C. Bradley, Tucson, Ariz.; Jackie Cho, Bryn Ardmore, Pa.; Sue Dickson (vice-chair), El Paso, Tex.; B. Gordon Edwards, Stillwater, Okla.; Nile Harper (chair), Ann Arbor, Mich.; Dorothy J. Henderson, Joliet, Ill.;

Leslie Klingensmith, Silver Spring, Md.; Josephine Lu, Huntington Beach, Calif.; Jananne Sharpless, Sacramento, Calif.; Ronald H. Stone, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Jack M. Terry, Minneapolis, Minn., and Hazel F. Whitney, Virginia Beach, Va. Staffing for the committee includes Peter A. Sulyok, coordinator; Belinda M. Curry, associate; Bonnie M. Hoff, senior administrative assistant; and Marilyn LaFountain, senior administrative assistant.

2. Accomplishments

Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy members and staff make themselves available for interpretive events as requested and as time allows. The committee welcomes inquiries through its office in Louisville. All governing bodies, churches, and members are encouraged to use the “Presbyterian Social Witness Policy Compilation,” which contains the core of the assemblies’ social policy statements since 1946. It is revised regularly to meet the needs of the church and is available in both print (policies through 2000) and on the World Wide Web (www.pcusa.org/acswp) and can be ordered through Presbyterian Distribution Services (#68-600-2000-001).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy meets following each General Assembly, to discern and prioritize its work; periodically between the assemblies, to review progress on papers and projects; and in January prior to an assembly, to edit and approve final drafts for submission to the assembly. This year the committee has prepared seven documents, including the biennial Human Rights Update, for the assembly’s consideration:

- Transforming Families;
- Resolution on Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future;
- Resolution on Violence, Religion and Terrorism;
- Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States;
- Report and Recommendations on Limited Water Resources and Takings;
- Resolution on Allegations of Child Sexual Abuse in Education; and the - Human Rights Update 2003–2004.

In responding to the submitted policy statement Living Faithfully with Families in Transition, the 215th General Assembly (2003) referred a majority and minority report to the ACSWP for “further work to strengthen the policy statement” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 56–58, 458). Working in consultation with the Office of Theology and Worship, the ACSWP appointed a Changing Families’ Panel to respond to the referral. Transforming Families is the result of a diverse panel’s work for the ACSWP.

The Work Group on “Violence, Religion, and Terrorism” concluded its study on terrorism, the relationship of religion to violence, U.S. military response, and U.S. political and economic involvement that may contribute to global problems. In submitting the “Resolution on Violence, Religion and Terrorism,” the ACSWP offers definitions of terrorism, war, and political violence for the General Assembly, and reviews the applicability of the concepts of just peacemaking, just war, and nonviolent intervention in the context post September 11, 2001. The work group also responded to the referral from the 215th General Assembly (2003) study “Iraq and Beyond” with the “Resolution on Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future.”

The committee appointed a Work Group on Immigration Issues as it moved to bring closure to its immersion in immigration issues. At its El Paso, Texas, meeting in October 2002 and at its Plantation, Florida, meeting in January 2003, the committee engaged in dialogue and saw firsthand immigration concerns and deepened its sense of the church and societies needs. Available to the church is the recently approved “Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounters with New Neighbors.” It is also available in Korean (PDS #68-600-01-004) and Spanish (PDS #68-600-01-005). These documents are also available on the Web (www.pcusa.org/acswp). The result of the work group’s focus work is the “Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States.”

A consultation took place on the issue of “takings” in Medford, Oregon, June 12–13, 2003, bringing together diverse perspectives on the use of scarce water resources in the Klamath Basin area of Oregon. Consulting with the Advisory Committee on Litigation, a work group of the ACSWP prepared the “Report and Recommendations on Limited Water Resources and Takings.”

The “Resolution on Allegations of Child Sexual Abuse in Education” is the result of the Work Group on “Allegations Against Educators.” The Work Group met in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and offers the resolution as an attempt to de-politicize the various interest groups involved in order to assist the church to think through the competing interests and to offer a pastoral support role to those involved.

In the area of new social witness policy development, the task force on “Harvesting Seeds of Justice: Ministering in Church and Society with Persons Who Have Disabilities” continued to meet and explore greater inclusion within church and society for people with disabilities. The “Prospectus for a Task Force on Comprehensive Serious Mental Illness” was distributed to presbyteries and congregations. Feedback and nominations were received. A task force was appointed and charged to begin its work. The committee maintains its concern for the development of two future new policy task forces related to earlier General Assembly referrals and calls for study: a task force on “End of Life Issues” and a task force on “Genetic Research and Development.”

The final two papers examining the environmental and cultural impact of trade and globalization in the series of four churchwide study documents on trade and globalization were published and made available for study: “The Globalization of Life: Challenge to the Church” (PDS 68-600-01-002); “The Employment Effects of Free Trade and Globalization” (PDS 68-600-01-003); “Globalization and the Environment” (PDS 68-600-03-004); and “Globalization and Culture” (PDS 68-600-03-003). The church is invited to read, reflect, and offer feedback to the committee on these study documents to assist it in thinking through a future resolution.

In addition, the committee assisted in the publication of three other documents. The Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion 2003 is available in a revised edition (PDS #68-600-03-008). The ACSWP responded to the 215th General Assembly (2003) request to make Iraq and Beyond (PDS #68-600-03-005) widely available to the church for study through its publication and has assisted in encouraging its distribution. The recently approved Resolution Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Private Prisons (PDS #68-600-03-006) was published and made available. These documents are also available on the Web (www.pcusa.org/acswp).

Each year, the committee submits a human rights update to the General Assembly, highlighting those areas of particular concern in our country and to our partner churches across the world. The Office of the General Assembly makes this document, the “Human Rights Update 2003–2004”, which is more descriptive than prescriptive, available. Previous year updates are often helpful when a concern is not raised in the current year.

In prioritizing emerging issues, the ACSWP has identified “Faith, Politics and the Common Good” as an area of future exploration and reflection. Time was spent with the staff of the Presbyterian Washington Office and with J. Philip Wogaman, retired pastor of Foundry United Methodist Church, during the Committee’s Washington, DC meeting in October 2003 discussing the theme of “Faith and Politics” as initial reflection on this identified emerging issue.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy works collaboratively with the divisions and other entities of the General Assembly Council, having liaison members from each division and from the Advocacy Committees for Racial Ethnic Concerns and Women’s Concerns. When possible, the committee spends time with church members and with relevant presbytery committees during its meetings. Such opportunities occurred this past summer in Sacramento, California. Significant time was spent at its fall meeting in Washington, DC to review and evaluate progress made since its “Blue Sky” Retreat held the previous summer in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy periodically monitors issues concerning Taiwan, its independence and United Nations membership, and relations between the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan and the China Christian Council, together with the Worldwide Ministries Division.

The committee sponsors an annual gathering of the Theological Educators for Presbyterian Social Witness. While the meeting in 2003 to be held at the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico in San Juan, Puerto Rico, was postponed, the TEPSW informally met for fellowship in Chicago in January 10, 2004 and learned that a publisher has been obtained for its “resistance” book project. Their fall meeting is scheduled for October 7-9, 2004 at McCormick Theological Seminary.

Other responses by the ACSWP to General Assembly work may be found in the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy Responses to Referrals, which can be found in the plenary report.

B. *Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns Agency Summary

1. Assigned Functions

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) works to fulfill its General Assembly mandate to provide advocacy and monitoring on issues of concern to people of color within the church and in society. The committee evaluates social trends in church and society, and provides advice and counsel to the General Assembly (GA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC). The committee addresses issues, including civil rights, racial justice, environmental justice, economic justice, public education, law enforcement, health care, employment, and housing, as they impact communities of color. The committee also monitors the implementation of programs and policies approved by the church that impact the participation and quality of life for people of color within the church. The committee works in close cooperation with other agencies and entities within the church, including the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to fulfill its responsibilities. The ACREC’s assigned functions, as stated in the GAC Manual of Operations are:

- a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or on its own initiative.
- b. Advise the General Assembly Council on matters of racial ethnic concerns including statements concerning pressing issues, that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.
- c. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners’ resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of racial ethnic concern.
- d. Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on racial ethnic concerns and provide information to the church as requested.
- e. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.
- f. Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies and programs relative to racial ethnic concerns.
- g. Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concern.

The work of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) is coordinated through the Office of the General Assembly Council by the Deputy Executive Director of the General Assembly Council. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly and its chair has corresponding member status with the General Assembly Council and with the General Assembly. Changes in the GAC staff support resulting from employee turnover raised concerns on the committee as to the lodgement of ACREC staff support in the organizational structure and the percentage of staff time allocated to support ACREC. The committee continues to be in dialogue with the Executive Director and Deputy Executive Director as to the most effective way in which to provide staff support. The committee maintains that it needs fulltime staff in order to adequately respond to its mandate; and that supporting staff is preferably lodged in the Office of the Deputy Executive Director, as provided the GAC Manual of Operations.

The committee is composed of twelve regular members, one co-opted member, and one consultant representing African Americans, Native Americans, Hispanic/Latina/o Americans, Asian Americans, Middle Eastern Americans, and European Americans. The current membership of the committee is as follows: Patricia Hew Lee, Asian Caucus, chairperson; Ralph Scissons, Native American Consulting Committee, vice chair; Moufid Houry, Middle Eastern Caucus; Judith Armour-Pingel, secretary, at-large Native American member and liaison to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Concerns (ACSWP); Carolin Graise, at-large Middle Eastern member; Evelyn Kelly, at-large member, African American, chair of the ACREC Resource and Referral subcommittee and liaison to Mission Responsibility Through Investments (MRTI); Lemuel Garcia-Arroyo, Hispanic Caucus member; Eugene Turner, Black Caucus member; Radames “Rod” Rodriguez, at-large Hispanic member and liaison to the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC); Sung-Kook Shin, at-large Asian representative; John Spangler, at-large European American member, chair of the Study and Comment subcommittee; Thom Hood, African American member from the General Assembly Council Executive Committee; Curtis Jones, co-opted member, National Black Presbyterian Caucus, chair of the ACREC Task Force to Examine General Assembly Entities; and consultant, Kirk Perucca, from Project Equality.

Liaisons to ACREC are: Cynthia Schweitzer Vives, liaison from the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC); Josephine Lu, liaison from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP); and R. Ann (Ani) Lelea, liaison from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

2. Accomplishments

The ACREC met three times in 2003: Jan. 3–4 in Austin, Texas; July 24–26 in Sacramento, California; and October 23–26 in Los Angeles, California.

a. Inclusive Diversity/Diverse Inclusivity

The October meeting of ACREC was held jointly with the National Racial Ethnic Cross Caucus for the first time, to discuss areas of common interest and concern. Both entities agreed that the opportunity for dialogue created by the joint meeting was productive and have agreed to continue find ways to work together.

Lifting up the PC(USA)’s commitment to an inclusive diversity and diverse inclusivity, to seek the full participation of the whole people of God in the whole life of the church (Book of Order, G-4.0403), ACREC and the cross caucus identified three issues they want to explore ways of working together on:

(1) Improving two-way communication with non-English speaking commissioners at General Assembly by providing translators with professional skills and training on the floor of the assembly to translate for people speaking from the floor to the podium/assembly.

(2) Working collaboratively to identify and support a Native American and Latina/o candidate for Moderator of General Assembly. While there have been candidates from both of these constituencies, there has never been a Moderator elected.

(3) To improve the representation of people of color in the General Assembly Council, explore the possibilities of including the moderator of the Racial Ethnic Cross Caucus as either a voting or corresponding member of GAC.

b. Report from the Task Force to Examine General Assembly Entities: Creating a Climate for Change

The final report of the task force will be submitted with recommendations to the 216th General Assembly (2004). Members of the task force include: Curtis Jones, chair; Kirk Perucca, consultant; Janet Ying; Ralph Scissons; Fuad Bahnan. The ACREC commends the task force for their work.

As a result of the dialogue begun by the task force, the Executive Director’s Office of the General Assembly Council contracted with consultant Kikanza Nuri Robins to begin implementation of the Cultural Proficiency Initiative. Kikanza Nuri Robins, a Presbyterian minister of Word and Sacrament and consultant in organizational development and cultural proficiency, provided an introduction to the tools of cultural proficiency to the executive leadership of the GAC and OGA staffs, along with other key employees. Working with a team of OGA/GAC employees, she conducted an assessment of the organizational culture of the Presbyterian Center, identifying issues impacting employee satisfaction and performance and provided a report to OGA/GAC.

Cultural proficiency acknowledges that patterns of oppression are embedded in the structures of organizations. Without direct intervention and intentional efforts to change, organizational cultures perpetuate systemic patterns of oppression, even where individuals within the organization do not intend to discriminate or marginalize those who do not belong or participate in the dominant culture.

Cultural proficiency is more than a diversity program or off-the-shelf training program. It is a process that focuses on organizational transformation and individual transformation. Cultural proficiency derives from the work of Terry Cross, a First Nation clinical social worker, who observed that European American clinicians in the center where he worked were not providing competent care to their Eskimo and First Nation clients because they were not taking into account the cultural perspectives and experience of the people with which they were working. As a result, Cross developed a set of tools to help people understand and respond more effectively to the differences between them.

Thus, cultural proficiency is not diversity management, it is about valuing diversity in people for the gifts they bring to the culture of an organization and the interactions between individuals. The tools of cultural proficiency work towards better self-awareness, clear articulation of core values and a process that results in positive, effective interactions among the people and the systems of a diverse environment.

Cultural proficiency provides language to describe, and standards to assess, both healthy and nonproductive policies, practices, and behaviors. It acknowledges that change does not happen overnight, that people and organizations move on a continuum highly exclusive and oppressive organizations and behaviors to highly inclusive organizations and behaviors. It is built on a foundation that aligns the principles of inclusivity in diversity with the core values and mission of the organization. It also acknowledges that organizations are resistant to change and that the causes of resistance must be taken into account and addressed openly in order to bring about cultural transformation within an organization.

Based on the initial assessment and report produced by Kikanza Nuri Robins, a project management team was formed to begin implementation. In addition to the GAC and OGA staffs, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program (PILP) and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) have joined the Cultural Proficiency Initiative. This incorporates the four entities with employees in the Presbyterian Center. The project team includes representatives of all four entities.

The goal of the Cultural Proficiency Initiative at the Presbyterian Center is to transform the organizational culture integrating the best of business practices and church values so that it becomes and serves as a model for a healthy church corporation.

For more information on Cultural Proficiency see: "Working for Justice," Horizons, Jan./Feb. 2004, pp. 4–7. Kikanza Nuri Robins is part of the Cultural Proficiency Group, which has authored two books published by Corwin Press:

- Nuri Robins, Lindsey, Lindsey, Terrell. Culturally Proficient Instruction: A Guide for People Who Teach, 2003.
- Nuri Robins, Lindsey, Terrell. Cultural Proficiency: A Manual for School Leaders, 2nd Ed., 2003.

c. The Task Force on Elections

The Task Force on Elections will report its findings and recommendations to the 216th General Assembly (2004). This task force, appointed in coordination with GAC, is chaired by Jack Baugh, staffed by Helen Locklear, and consists of the following members: Evelyn Kelly, Eugene Teselle, Ralph Scissons, and Ernie Freund. The ACREC commends the task force for their excellent work.

d. The Task Force on Reparations

The Task Force on Reparations will report its findings recommendations to the 216th General Assembly (2004). This task force, appointed in coordination with GAC and staffed by Mark Koenig, consists of the following members: Mark Lomax, Alice Nishi, Luther Ivory, Lydia Hernandez, Ron Kernaghan, and Alice Paul. The ACREC commends the task force for their excellent work.

e. Analysis of the Church's Effort to Combat Racism and Live Out Its Antiracism Commitments

The ACREC has prepared an analysis of the church's effort to combat racism and live out its antiracism commitments. This report will be submitted to the 216th General Assembly (2004) in the responses to referrals.

f. Summary of Strategic Plan

In order to fulfill its General Assembly mandate and set priorities for its work in the next few years, ACREC has devised a strategic plan that identifies several focus areas. The committee has identified specific goals within each focus area and is in the process of developing an implementation plan:

- Improve the probability for racial ethnic and immigrant persons to complete graduate theological studies and to be ordained to the ministry of Word and Sacrament in the PC(USA).
- Communicate to the General Assembly that racial ethnic/immigrant urban and rural congregations are not fulfilling their ministries because of the lack of pastors to fill their vacant pulpits.
- Concentrate and focus the liaison responsibilities of ACREC with other units of the GA to ensure that goals of ACREC are implemented.
- Request of the GAC full-time staff services for ACREC with his/her concentration being that of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic/Immigrant Concerns.
- Host a conversation at the General Assembly with the Moderatorial candidates, inviting all racial and ethnic people to attend, to discuss how the Moderator will assist in implementing the mandates of ACREC.
- Bind the operational and strategic relationships of the racial ethnic caucuses in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with that of ACREC.
- Plan and execute with the cross caucus an annual conference on seeking more cooperation, closer working relationships, more efficiency, and greater unity among all racial/ethnic/immigrant ministries and their leaders in the PC(USA).
- Lead a campaign to build housing for the poor with PC(USA), through the caucuses and racial ethnic/immigrant member churches, providing the guarantee of credit to mortgage companies advancing money needed for the construction of the housing.
- Monitor the GAC's adoption of the Cultural Proficiency Tool for its administrative use and request the General Assembly to commend it to congregations, presbyteries, and synods for their use in all aspects of their ministry of justice and cultural inclusiveness.

Item 11-01

[The assembly disapproved Item 11-01 with comment. See p. 38.]

On Calling for the End of Abortion, and Inserting a Statement in the Book of Order Regarding Abortion—From the Presbytery of Upper Ohio Valley.

The Presbytery of Upper Ohio Valley, in the light of God’s revealed word in Scripture and in adherence to our own historical standards of the Reformation, overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to do the following:

1. Determine that the 214th and 215th General Assemblies (2002) and (2003) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) erred in supporting abortion, especially late-term, partial-birth abortion.
2. Determine that the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) errs in providing abortions—except in the case of pregnancies truly endangering the life of the mother. (Such abortions are regrettable but necessary to protect the life of the mother.)
3. Publicly confess and repent (turn from) our sin against: Almighty God—the Father of us all; Christ Jesus the Son—the Lover of all children born and unborn; the Holy Spirit—the Lord and Giver of life; the aborted babies; the women and men who are victims of abortion; and the healthcare professionals we have led into sin by our silence about and approval of abortion.
4. No longer condone, teach as acceptable, or underwrite, the practice of abortion on demand as a means of birth control, population control, or social aggrandizement.
5. Develop and implement positive, life affirming, ministries and educational resources to protect and provide for unborn children, unwed mothers, and families in crisis.
6. Develop and implement a new ministry of healing for those women who have undergone abortions.
7. Provide Christian education resources teaching the biblical grounds for courtship, marriage, and family life.
8. Petition our national government to put an end to the sin that abortion is and that we call the United States of America to fasting, prayer, and repentance for our sin of abortion. This petition and call shall be addressed to all branches of the Federal Government: Executive, Legislative, and Judicial, and to all the various state and commonwealth governments.
9. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Shall the Book of Order be amended by adding the following text:

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stands with the Lord God and His Messiah Jesus in affirming the life of each unborn child, protecting that child and the child’s family, and in providing for their nurture. With the exception of abortion in order to protect the life of the mother, we stand against the practice of abortion and do condemn it while praying for and ministering to the victims of abortion and those who provide abortions.”

Rationale

“For I the Lord do not change; therefore you, O children of Jacob, have not perished” (Mal. 3:6).

“In the same way, when God desired to show even more clearly to the heirs of the promise the unchangeable character of [God’s] purpose, [God] guaranteed it by an oath, so that through two unchangeable things, in which it is impossible that God would prove false, we who have taken refuge might be strongly encouraged to seize the hope set before us” (Heb. 6:17–18).

“Your word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path” (Ps. 119:105).

“For the word of the Lord is upright, and all [God’s] work is done in faithfulness” (Ps. 33:4).

“The grass withers, the flower fades, but the word of our God will stand forever” (Isa. 40:8).

“Now that you have purified your souls by your obedience to the truth so that you have genuine mutual love, love one another deeply from the heart. You have been born anew, not of perishable but of imperishable seed, through the living and enduring word of God. For ‘All flesh is like grass, and all its glory like the flower of grass. The grass withers, and the flower falls, but the word of the Lord endures forever.’ That word is the good news that was announced to you” (1 Pet. 1: 22–25).

“[Children] are indeed a heritage from the Lord, the fruit of the womb is a reward” (Ps. 127:3).

“You slaughtered my children and delivered them up as an offering to them. And in all your abominations and your whorings you did not remember the days of your youth, when you were naked and bare, flailing about in your blood (Ezek. 16:21–22).

“... But Jesus said, ‘Let the little children come to me, and do not stop them; for it is to such as these that the kingdom of heaven belongs.’ And he laid his hands on them and went on his way” (Matt. 19:14–15).

Jesus said, “Whoever welcomes one such child in my name welcomes me” (Matt. 18:5).

“And the king will answer them, ‘Truly I tell you, just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me’ ” (Matt. 25:40).

“For it was you who formed my inward parts; you knit me together in my mother’s womb. I praise you, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made. Wonderful are your works; that I know very well. My frame was not hidden from you, when I was being made in secret, intricately woven in the depths of the earth. Your eyes beheld my unformed substance. In your book were written all the days that were formed for me, when none of them as yet existed” (Ps. 139:13–16).

“In those days Mary set out and went with haste to a Judean town in the hill country, where she entered the house of Zechariah and greeted Elizabeth. When Elizabeth heard Mary’s greeting, the child leaped in her womb. And Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Spirit and exclaimed with a loud cry, ‘Blessed are you among women, and blessed is the fruit of your womb. And why has this happened to me, that the mother of my Lord comes to me? For as soon as I heard the sound of your greeting, the child in my womb leaped for joy. And blessed is she who believed that there would be a fulfillment of what was spoken to her by the Lord’ ” (Luke 1:39–45).

“For you were bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body” (1 Cor. 6:20).

“You were bought with a price; do not become slaves of human masters” (1 Cor. 7:23).

“You shall not murder” (Ex. 20:13).

“That all Church power, whether exercised by the body in general or in the way of representation by delegated authority, is only ministerial and declarative; that is to say, that the Holy Scriptures are the only rule of faith and manners; that no Church governing body ought to pretend to make laws to bind the conscience in virtue of their own authority; and that all their decisions should be founded upon the revealed will of God. Now though it will easily be admitted that all synods and councils may err, through the frailty inseparable from humanity, yet there is much greater danger from the usurped claim of making laws than from the right of judging upon laws already made, and common to all who profess the gospel, although this right, as necessity requires in the present state, be lodged with fallible men” (Book of Order, G-1.0307).

“In its confessions, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) identifies with the affirmations of the Protestant Reformation. The focus of these affirmations is the rediscovery of God’s grace in Jesus Christ as revealed in the Scriptures. The Protestant watchwords—grace alone, faith alone, Scripture alone—embody principles of understanding which continue to guide and motivate the people of God in the life of faith” (Book of Order, G-2.0400).

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 11-01, RECOMMENDATION 9

Advice on Item 11-01, Recommendation 9—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

Item 11-01 from the Presbytery of Upper Ohio Valley requests that the General Assembly take a number of actions regarding the topic of abortion.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 216th General Assembly (2004) to disapprove Recommendation 9 of the overture.

Rationale

Recommendation 9 of the overture requests that a statement about a particular social issue be inserted into the Book of Order. There is no indication as to whether the framers of the overture believe it is appropriate to the Form of Government, the Directory of Worship, or the Rules of Discipline. There is no suggestion as to its placement. Since the overture does not address any particular point in the Book of Order, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has difficulty in addressing the request. The Book of Order is a document that declares the manner and means by which we govern ourselves as a provisional demonstration of the Body of Christ and how we interact with one another. While there are declarative statements in the document, they serve primarily as foundational statements in matters of governance, and not as social pronouncements.

The General Assembly has adopted guidelines as to how the denomination creates social witness policy statements. (See Manual of the General Assembly, Forming Social Policy, pp. 63–66.)

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution also observes regarding Recommendation 1 of the overture that the Book of Order declares that governing bodies of the church may, and do, err (G-1.0302 and G-1.0307). Yet the latter citation includes the admonition “that no Church governing body ought to pretend to make laws to bind the conscience in virtue of their own authority ....” Each General Assembly, relying on the working presence of the Holy Spirit, determines what it may and will say. Each assembly may alter, amend, or contradict the statement of any previous assembly. The presence of this overture before the 216th General Assembly (2004) affirms the freedom within our polity for change to occur in the policy statements of the church. It is for the General Assembly, not this advisory committee, to determine the wisdom of such a change in policy.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-01 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to determine whether several past assemblies have erred in “supporting abortion,” to publicly confess and repent, cease the practice of abortion, develop and implement new ministries and educational resources relating to fetuses, women, and families in crisis, and to provide for advocacy at the national government. In addition, Item 11-01 offers a proposed amendment to the Book of Order on these matters.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-01 be disapproved, with the following comment:

The 216th General Assembly (2004) reaffirms the “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” approved by the 214th and 215th General Assemblies in 2002 and 2003, respectively. In addition, we urge the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in their mandated monitoring report to the 217th General Assembly (2006) on the implementation of the assemblies’ policy on problem pregnancies, to include a survey of the ministries and educational resources seeking to implement the policies and to provide further encouragement and recommendations for additional ministries and resources as needed.

Rationale

Item 11-01 is unnecessary. The two most recent assemblies (2002, 2003) by large majorities approved current policy affirming the judicious study of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advisory Committee on Litigation (ACL).

Item 11-01 errs in its understanding of current policy on problem pregnancies, for example, in its claim that the two most recent General Assemblies “support abortion” or that the General Assembly’s policy permits abortion as a means of birth control or population control. These claims are simply not true. While uncompromisingly affirming the woman’s right to make ethical decisions, the church’s policy is very restrictive in providing guidance for such responsible decisions. In the 2000 “Monitoring Report on the Implementation of General Assembly Policy on Abortion,” fifteen themes were identified from policy between 1983 and 1992 as the guiding criteria for policy implementation (Minutes, 2000, Part I, pp. 271–72). These themes include:

1. The Holy Scriptures are the ultimate authority for faith and practice.
2. Within the church, as in society, there is a diversity of passionately held views regarding problem pregnancy and abortion.
3. Children of all ages need accurate and up-to-date information on sex that does not ignore the context of relationships.
4. Role models who model responsible sexual behavior are important for the development of children.
5. A woman faces many choices among options when confronted with a problem pregnancy.
6. Women have the ability and responsibility for making good moral choices regarding a problem pregnancy.
7. The church should support a woman’s decision regarding a problem pregnancy, whatever her decision may be.
8. There are circumstances under which an abortion may be considered a responsible and morally acceptable choice.
9. Abortion is not a method of birth control.
10. Abortion should not be used for gender selection only or solely to obtain fetal parts for transplantation.
11. The decision to abort should be made earlier rather than later.
12. No law(s) should be enacted that attach criminal penalties to those who seek or perform medically safe abortions.
13. No law(s) should be enacted that denies low-income women the option of abortion.
14. The church condemns the use of violence and/or abusive language either in protest of or in support of abortion.
15. Presbyterians need to work to alter the social structure (e.g., economic, health access, pornography, racism, and sexism) so as to decrease the number of abortions.

Item 11-01 is dishonest with the assembly’s own procedures by trying to make an end-run around the social witness policy process. In “Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness,” the 205th General Assembly (1993) approved a process for the careful development of social witness policy (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp.

117–18, 767–88). Item 11-01 attempts to make the assembly take an action without following its own proper procedures “decently and in order.”

To obtain a clear understanding of the actions taken by the 214th and 215th General Assemblies, the ACSWP refers commissioners directly to the “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” and the related rationales included in the publication provided. It addresses the complexity of moral decision-making and the issues that have been central to the church’s struggle around abortion for decades. These issues include:

- Life is precious to God—both the life of a woman and the fetus.
- Each person is endowed with the capacity and responsibility to make profound moral decisions, even about life and death.
- Such decisions can best be made within a loving, supportive community of faith.
- A central pastoral responsibility of church leaders and others is to provide counsel and support for all who face such decisions.
- Medical decisions are best left to qualified professionals.
- Public policies may constrain, but cannot ultimately bind, personal moral decision.
- Our decisions are sometimes flawed, and we can trust in God’s forgiveness when that occurs.

Because the recently approved policy provides a Reformed theological and biblical context for decision-making and clearly demonstrates the duties of the pastor and congregation for ministry, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-01 is unnecessary, dishonest, misleading, and should be disapproved.

On Urging Churches to Affirm in Their Ministries the Protection of Babies in the Womb Who Are Viable—From the Presbytery of Charlotte.

The Presbytery of Charlotte overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Urge its churches to affirm in their ministries the protection of babies in the womb who are viable—that is, well-developed enough to survive outside the womb.
2. Urge that our churches support live delivery of the baby in the interest of protecting the life and health of both the mother and the baby in cases where problems of life or health of the mother arise late in a pregnancy.
3. Urge its churches to provide pastoral and tangible support to women in problem pregnancies, seeking ways that the church can intervene to mitigate the problems in a pregnancy.
4. Affirm adoption as a provision for women who deliver children they are not able to care for, and ask our churches to assist in seeking adoptive families within the household of faith.

Rationale

The church’s support for the protection of human life is based on the biblical teaching that human beings are made in the image of God (Gen. 1:26–27), that we are charged to protect the lives of innocent human beings

(Prov. 31:8–9; Jas. 1:27), and forbidden to shed innocent blood (Jer. 7:6; Prov. 6:17) and that God expects us as followers of Christ to minister to those who are needy as if we were serving the Savior himself (Matt. 25:40).

Our confessions affirm this teaching of Scripture (The Book of Confessions, 4:105–.107; 7:244–.246), in that both the Heidelberg and Larger Catechisms reiterate the Sixth Commandment’s prohibition against killing, and further add that it is our duty to “preserve life” and to eschew “practices . . . which tend to the unjust taking away the life of any” (Ibid., 7.245).

Our general assembly has affirmed as policy that:

. . . after a human life has begun, it is . . . cherished and protected as a precious gift of God, [and] The strong Christian presumption is that since all life is precious to God, we are to preserve and protect it. (Problem Pregnancies and Abortion, the General Assembly’s current policy, 1992, p. 11; see also Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 369 and 368 respectively)

and

That the 209th General Assembly (1997) offer a word of counsel to the church and our culture that the procedure known as intact dilation and extraction (commonly called “partial birth” abortion) of a baby who could live outside the womb is of grave moral concern that should be considered only if the mother’s physical life is endangered by the pregnancy. (Minutes, 1997, Part I, p. 65)

The Scriptures, our confessions, and church policy all support the effort to avoid death as an outcome in situations of need, including abortion, and to seek ways to affirm and protect the lives of human beings, such that in late-term pregnancies, particularly, where babies could live if delivered live, the church is called to speak and act in ways that protect the lives and health of the unborn as well as their mothers.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-02 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to urge churches to affirm in their ministries the protection of viable fetuses with concern for both the woman and the fetus. Further, Item 11-02 offers support for women in problem pregnancies and affirms the option of adoption.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-02 be disapproved with the following comment:

The concerns raised in Item 11-02 are already present in current policy. The 216th General Assembly (2004) reaffirmed the “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” approved by the 214th and 215th General Assemblies in 2002 and 2003, respectively. The “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” should be more widely circulated and taken to heart by the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in their ministries.

Rationale

Item 11-02 should be disapproved because it is unnecessary and obscures current policy.

The issues and concerns raised in Item 11-02 are already clear and present in the “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” approved by the 214th and 215th General Assemblies in 2002 and 2003, respectively. The language suggested in Item 11-02 would muddle the current policy carefully considered by prior General Assemblies with the effect of not offering the clarity that is currently present. Substituting new wording runs the danger of eliminating all other carefully reasoned and balanced supporting materials.

The “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” in a new way lifts up the duties and responsibilities of pastors and congregations in the context of abortions and problem pregnancies. Both pastors and congregations need to be encouraged to take these concerns to heart in their compassionate ministries and advocacy. The church has strong affirmations of adoption already in its policies.

To obtain a clear understanding of the actions taken by the 214th General Assembly (2002) and 215th General Assembly (2003), the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) refers commissioners directly to the “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” and the related rationales included in the publication provided. It addresses the complexity of moral decision-making and the issues that have been central to the church’s struggle around abortion for decades. These issues include the following:

- Each person is endowed with the capacity and responsibility to make profound moral decisions, even about life and death.

- Medical decisions are best left to qualified professionals.
- Public policies may constrain, but cannot ultimately bind, personal moral decision.
- Our decisions are sometimes flawed, and we can trust in God’s forgiveness when that occurs.

Because the recently approved “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” provides a Reformed theological context for decision-making and clearly demonstrates the duties of the pastor and congregation for ministry, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-02 is unnecessary, needlessly would obscure current policy, and should be disapproved.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL FOR ITEM 11-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Item 11-02 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to urge churches to affirm in their ministries the protection of viable fetuses with concern for both the woman and the fetus. Further, Item 11-02 offers support for women in problem pregnancies and the affirmation of adoption.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 216th General Assembly (2004) disapprove Item 11-02 with the following comment:

“The concerns, offering support for women in problem pregnancies and affirmation of adoption as well as other issues, raised in Item 11-02 are already present in current policy. The 216th General Assembly (2004) reaffirms the “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” approved by the 214th and 215th General Assemblies in 2002 and 2003, respectively. The “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortions” should be more widely circulated and used by the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in their ministries.”

Rationale

The language offered in Item 11-02 does not clarify the church’s current policy on late-term and post-viability abortion. Instead, this statement selectively chooses parts of the current policy that limit the options of a woman facing a problem pregnancy. This restricts the decision-making options provided by the church to women making profound moral decisions.

Approving Item 11-02 could negate the work of careful study conducted by committees for two General Assemblies (2002 and 2003). Item 11-02 greatly restricts the positions past General Assemblies have approved.

If approved, this misleading rendering of policy could become current policy, thus slowly constricting the church's position that allows people in this sinful world to make moral decisions prayerfully with the support of family, spiritual community, and doctors.

Item 11-03

[The assembly answered Item 11-03 with the action taken on Item 11-02 above. See p. 37.]

On Clarity of Late-Term Pregnancy—From the Presbytery of Beaver-Butler.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) does the following:

1. Urges all members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to affirm in their ministries the protection of babies in the womb who are viable—that is, well-developed enough to survive outside the womb. In cases where problems of life or health of the mother arise late in a pregnancy, we urge our members to support the live delivery of the baby in the interest of protecting the life and health of both the mother and the baby.
2. Urges our members to provide pastoral and tangible support to women in problem pregnancies, seeking ways that the church can intervene to mitigate the problems in a pregnancy. We affirm adoption as a provision for women who deliver children they are not able to care for, and ask our members to assist in seeking loving, adoptive families with the household of faith.

Rationale

The church's support for the protection of human life is based on the biblical teaching that human beings are made in the image of God (Gen. 1:26–27), that we are charged to protect lives of innocent human beings (Prov. 31:8, 9; Jas. 1:27), and forbidden to shed innocent blood (Jer. 7:5) and that God expects us as followers of Christ to minister to those who are needy as if we were serving our Savior himself (Matt. 25:40). Our confessions affirm this teaching of Scripture (The Book of Confessions, Westminster Larger Catechism, 7.244–.246).

The Scripture, our confessions, and church policy also support the effort to avoid death as an outcome in situations of need, including abortion, and to seek ways to affirm and protect the lives of human beings. In pregnancies, particularly where babies could live if delivered live, the church is called to speak and act in ways that protect the lives and health of the unborn as well as their mothers.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-03 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to urge all members of the church to affirm in their ministries the protection of viable fetuses with concern for both the woman and the fetus. Further, Item 11-03 urges members to provide support for women in problem pregnancies and affirms the option of adoption.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 13-03 be disapproved with the following comment:

The concerns raised in Item 11-03 are already present in current policy. The 216th General Assembly (2004) reaffirms the “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” approved by the 214th and 215th General Assemblies in 2002 and 2003, respectively. The “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” and the church's policies on adoption should be more widely circulated and taken to heart by the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in their ministries.

Item 11-03 should be disapproved because it is unnecessary and obscures current policy.

The issues and concerns raised in Item 11-03 are already clear and present in the “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” approved by the 214th and 215th General Assemblies in 2002 and 2003, respectively. Item 11-03 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to urge churches to affirm in their ministries the protection of viable fetuses with concern for both the woman and the fetus. Further, Item 11-03 offers support for women in problem pregnancies and the affirmation of adoption.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that the 216th General Assembly (2004) disapprove this overture with the following comment:

“The concerns, offering support for women in problem pregnancies and affirmation of adoption as well as other issues, raised in Item 11-03 are already present in current policy. The 216th General Assembly (2004) reaffirms the “Statement on Post-Viability and Late-Term Abortion” approved by the 214th and 215th General Assemblies in 2002 and 2003, respectively. ## Item 11-04

[The assembly disapproved Item 11-04. See p. 38.]

On Urging the FDA to Make Emergency Contraception Available Over the Counter—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to approve the following resolution (in accordance with General Assembly guidelines “Forming Social Policy” paragraph 4):

Whereas, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessor denominations have frequently and consistently supported the availability of the means of contraception by adopting policy statements of which the following are key:

- 1959 (UPCUSA): “Urges the repeal of laws prohibiting the availability of contraceptives. ...” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1959, Part I, p. 385].
- 1970 (UPCUSA): “Calls for repeal of laws hampering access to contraceptive help and equipment, recognizing the need to maintain proper professional control over the prescription and use of dangerous substances” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1970, Part I, p. 891).
- 1971 (PCUS): “Calls for more vigorous, better coordinated and more adequately funded efforts to make available both the information and the means of birth control to all persons in this country” (Minutes, PCUS, 1971, Part I, p. 150).
- 1992 (PC(USA)): “Churches must ... support full and equal access to contraceptive methods” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 371]; and

Whereas, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has similarly urged measures that would reduce the number of abortions:

- 1983: “We call upon Presbyterians to works for a decrease in the number of problem pregnancies, thereby reducing the number of abortions” (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 368); and “[The General Assembly] Affirms the church's commitment to minimize the incidence of abortion and encourages sexual education and the use of contraception to avoid unintended pregnancies" (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 367).

- 1992: "Our denomination and its member congregations must commit themselves to reduce the overwhelming number of situations in which women choose to abort" (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 371); and

Whereas, emergency contraception (Plan B, levonorgestrel, manufactured by Women's Capitol Corporation and to be marketed by Barr Laboratories) and Preven (ethinyl estadiol, manufactured by Gynetics Medical Products, N.V. of Belgium) is presently only available by prescription thus limiting its availability and the timeliness of its use, contrary to the principle of availability as enunciated by previous General Assemblies; and

Whereas, the timely use of emergency contraception can reduce the numbers of unwanted pregnancies and therefore abortions, consistent with clearly stated General Assembly policy; and

Whereas, emergency contraception has proven to be safe and reliable and, in December 2003, was recommended for over-the-counter sales by the Nonprescription Drugs and the Reproductive Health Drugs Advisory Committees to the Food and Drug Administration (FDA); and

Whereas, the FDA has announced that it has delayed its decision as to whether it will follow the recommendations of its advisory committees and make emergency contraception available over the counter; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) supports the availability of emergency contraception over the counter, without prescription, and does the following:

1. Directs the Stated Clerk to communicate the foregoing position to the commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) with copies to the chair and ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions; the chairs and ranking minority members of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce and its Subcommittee on Health; the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and the president.
2. Authorizes and encourages the Presbyterian Washington Office, Health Ministries (USA), Women's Ministries, and Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Options, to advocate for over-the-counter availability of emergency contraception, and encourages these entities to educate and inform Presbyterian women, and the society at large, about the availability, safety, and effectiveness of emergency contraception.
3. Encourages middle governing bodies to take appropriate measures to further these goals.
4. Directs that when educational curricula of the PC(USA) that deal with sexuality, reproduction, and contraception are revised, that the then current availability of emergency contraception and the moral and medical implications of its use and possible abuse be included in the revised materials.

Rationale

Women's health advocates and other supporters of the over-the-counter availability of emergency contraception have feared the politicization of the FDA's decision on this issue, and the delay recently announced by the FDA suggests that this fear is valid. If, in fact, political factors are likely to be determinative in the matter, then public policy advocacy is appropriate on an issue that should otherwise be resolved on its medical and public health merits.

The overwhelming support by the two advisory committees to the FDA makes it clear that from a medical and public health standpoint, emergency contraception should be more readily available.

The issue is not just the availability of emergency contraception, though that is the immediate concern, but also the education of women, especially young women, regarding its availability, use, and possible abuse. Therefore, the resolution addresses this issue and encourages agencies of the church to address it as well.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Item 11-04 urges the Food and Drug Administration to make emergency contraception available over the counter.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that the 216th General Assembly (2004) urge the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) to move forward in the process of making available safe, economical, accessible, and effective emergency contraceptives.

Further, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises the 216th General Assembly (2004) to direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, to develop a resolution on unintended pregnancies.

Rationale

The 204th General Assembly (1992) addressed the importance of reducing the number of abortions, “because it will never be possible to eliminate completely unintentional pregnancies, our denomination and its member congregations must commit themselves to reduce the overwhelming number of situations in which women choose to abort. There is an alarming trend in the large numbers of women making this difficult choice. The church must affirm the importance of trying to reduce these numbers” (Report of the Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), 1992, p.14).

Emergency contraception, or post-coital contraception, consists of the same hormones found in ordinary birth control pills. When taken in a concentrated dose within seventy-two hours after unprotected intercourse, these hormones can prevent a pregnancy from occurring. The emergency contraception (EC) pill will not abort an established pregnancy, (i.e. one in which the fertilized egg has already attached itself to the wall of the uterus).

Emergency contraception has been estimated to have an effectiveness rate of 75 percent when it is used within seventy-two hours of unprotected intercourse. This is important since 45 of every 1,000 women aged 15–44 in the United States had an unintended pregnancy in 1994 (latest year for which data are available). These figures are due to three factors: the failure to practice contraception, incorrect or inconsistent use of contraceptive methods, and method failure. About one-half of the unintended pregnancies end in abortion.

One estimate is that for each pregnancy that occurs after the use of emergency contraceptive pills, three pregnancies are prevented. It is estimated that 43 percent of the lower abortion rate in 2000 compared to 1994 was due to use of emergency contraceptive pill (Rachel R. Jones, Jacqueline E. Darroch, and Stanley K. Henshaw, “Contraceptive Use Among U.S. Women Having Abortions in 2000–2001,” Perspectives on Sexual and Reproductive Health 34, 6, 2002).

This is especially important as there are fewer resources to provide access for low-income women to free and low-cost contraceptive services and supplies and to educate women and their partners about relationships, sexuality, and contraception. The emergency contraceptive pill is one way to reduce unintended pregnancies. However, recent decisions by the Food and Drug Administration have slowed the process of making emergency contraceptive pills available over the counter.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has traditionally resisted directing the medical community in the appropriateness of medical decisions. However, in May 2004, FDA ignored the advice of its medical advisory teams. It is important that the FDA move forward in the process of making safe, economical, accessible, and effective emergency contraception available.

While making emergency contraception pills available over the counter is one way to address this issue, we recognize that prevention of unintended pregnancy is key to reducing abortions. A new resolution is needed to address the complex issues involved in unintended pregnancies. These issues include, but are not limited to:

- Education about methods of pregnancy prevention, including abstinence, contraception, and emergency contraception;
- Barriers to access;
- Safety of contraceptive methods;
- Building communities that support those making difficult moral decisions.

Item 11-05

[The assembly approved Item 11-05 with amendment. See pp. 37–38.]

On Opposing the Change in Requirements of Emission from Smoke Stack Industries—From the Presbytery of Savannah.

The White Bluff Presbyterian Church and the Presbytery of Savannah overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to do the following:

1. Declare our opposition to the change in requirements of emission from smoke stack industries, changes instituted by the Environmental Protection Agency on August 27, 2003, in the New Source Review permitting requirements for emissions from power plants and manufacturing facilities. “The new rules would allow thousands of older power plants, oil refineries, and industrial units to make extensive upgrades without having to install new antipollution devices” (New York Times, August 22, 2003, Katherine Q. Seeley).

2. Petition the president of the United States to draft rules that would further reduce tailpipe emission by increasing the fuel efficiency of new ~~automobiles~~ vehicles.

3. Petition the major manufacturers of vehicles to accelerate the use of existing technologies that would increase fuel efficiency and to develop new technologies that would achieve further gains.

~~3-~~ 4. Request the Stated Clerk to communicate with the president of the United States and the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and the appropriate members of Congress. The communication should include the impact that smoke stack and tail pipe emission is having on the health of our most vulnerable populations and on our environment, due to acid rain, smog, increased ozone levels, and emissions of mercury and heavy metals.

Rationale

The most vulnerable population in Canada and the U.S. suffer with severe respiratory health problems. Pollution is a contributing factor in the severity of asthma in the very young and the very old and a cause of premature death.

People that fall in the lower socioeconomic class tend to be most effected because frequently the industries that are heavy polluters are located in their neighborhood.

Our hardwood forests of both the northeast and the Great Smoky Mountains suffer due to the effect of acid rain, which is the result of sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emission.

Annually “people with asthma experience more than 100 million days of restrictive activity, costs for asthma exceeds $4 billion, and about 4,000 people die of asthma” (Ibid).

“The health cost of human exposure to outdoor air pollutants range from $40 to $50 billion” (Centers for Disease Control, National Center for Environmental Health, Air Pollution and Respiratory Health Branch).

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-05

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-05—From the Advisory Committee Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-05 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to declare opposition to the easing of requirements for emission from smoke stack industries and to petition the president to draft rules that would further reduce tail-pipe emission by increasing the fuel efficiency of new vehicles.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 11-05 be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through and brackets; text to be added or inserted is shown with and underline and with brackets.]

“1. Declare our opposition to ~~[the change in requirements of emission from smoke stack industries.]~~[changes instituted by the Environmental Protection Agency on August 27, 2003, in the New Source Review permitting requirements for emissions from power plants and manufacturing facilities.] The new rules would allow thousands of older power plants, oil refineries, and industrial units to make extensive upgrades without having to install new antipollution devices. (New York Times, August 22, 2003, by Katherine Q. Seeley)

“2. Petition the president of the United States to draft rules that would further reduce tailpipe emissions by increasing the fuel efficiency of new ~~[automobiles]~~ [vehicles].

“~~[3.]~~ [4.] Request the Stated Clerk to communicate [this action] with the president of the United States and the administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and the appropriate members of Congress. The communication should include the impact that smoke stack and tailpipe emissions is having on the health of our most vulnerable populations and on our environment ~~[due to acid rain,]~~ [such as smog, increased ozone levels, acid rain, and emissions of mercury and heavy metals].”

Rationale

The 1981 joint energy policy statement “The Power to Speak Truth to Power” adopted by the former Presbyterian Church in the United States and the United Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirmed that:

In our age an important mission of the community of God is to help rescue creation from thoughtless exploitation [of the environment] and to tend it with care.

To Presbyterians the present energy situation should symbolize judgment on the misuse of power and hope for a new era of energy responsibility. It should also be the occasion for speaking truth about energy and power to those who make decisions. (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1981, Part I, p. 294)

The 196th General Assembly (1984) called for “legislation that will reduce the emissions of sulphur dioxide and the oxides of nitrogen to a level necessary to protect the health of the most sensitive environments and individuals...” (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 348–49).

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) urged prompt action “...to strengthen fuel economy and emission standards for automobiles, buses and trucks...” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 669).

Certainly the weakening of restrictions on existing power plants and other industrial units to make appropriate upgrades and install new antipollution devices sets the state for increased pollution and severe health problems for those in surrounding areas. The cost to human lives as well as the impact on the environment could be exorbitant and irreversible. Therefore, it is the church's moral responsibility to take positions and advocate against dangers to the spiritual and communal life of congregations.

Item 11-06

Commissioner's Resolution. On Reaffirming Ethical Values of Fetal Research.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) reaffirm the “Ethical Guidelines for Fetal Tissue and Stem Cell Research” approved by the 213th General Assembly (2001) in order to add the faithful voice of the PC(USA) to the rapidly progressive debate about fetal tissue and stem cell research.

Rationale

In light of current national and international discussions pertaining to stem cell research, it is important our denominational voice be once again heard. And as we remember former President Ronald Reagan and share in expressing our compassion and condolences to Nancy Reagan, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through its General Assembly, should make our feelings visible by affirming the theological and moral support of the “Ethical Guidelines for Fetal Tissue and Stem Cell Research.” As noted in the overture presented in the 213th General Assembly (2001), the words of the Prophet Micah, sets a broad and critical stage for the theological perspectives of our denomination to be heard, “... what does the Lord require of you but to do justice, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with your God?” (Micah 6:8, NRSV).

It is desirable that the hope of many may be rekindled in light of tremendous strides in bio/medical research involving stem cells. The research community continues to fund stem cell research through many diverse sources, one of them being pre-embryonic in form. The most recent research testifies to the continued discovery of a multitude of sources for human stem cells. The theological and ethical concerns previously developed will assure our denomination's voice in this rapidly progressive debate.

Nancy Reagan has pleaded with the current United States of America administration to increase funding and encourage stem cell research so that other patients and their families may so reap the benefits of healing from diseases such as Parkinson's, Alzheimer's, spinal cord injuries, and other conditions that have been considered hopeless in the past. “A lot of people who could be helped are not being helped,” Mrs. Reagan has stated. It is hoped that our presence in Washington, D.C., and our voice being heard in the ongoing political debate can result in many lives being improved through this applied research and future medical advancements. Our ability to speak with a unanimous and prophetic voice will provide hope and eventually cure to many people whose voices have been lost to the other priority sounds of our culture.

This commissioners' resolution is submitted with great hope and prayers for all those who suffer.

[In response to Item 12-01, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 64–66.]

On Supporting the Geneva Accord, Urging Israel and Palestine to Implement the Accord—From the Presbytery of St. Augustine.

The Presbytery of St. Augustine respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to do the following:

1. Affirm support for the Geneva Accord and urge both sides to engage in negotiations to implement the accord.
2. Urge an end to the assassination policy of the Israel government and to Palestinian suicide bombings.
3. Urge the Congress to end all military aid to Israel until the occupation ends.
4. Urge the Congress to cease all loan guarantees for building or expanding settlements in Palestinian areas.
5. Call on our Board of Pensions to divest itself of investments in companies receiving one million dollars or more in profits per year from investments in Israel or that have invested one million dollars or more in Israel.

Rationale

In support of this overture, the Presbytery of St. Augustine observes the following:

1. The state of Israel has occupied East Jerusalem, the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, and the Golan heights since the Six Day War of 1967, and this occupation has resulted in great suffering for the 3.5 million Palestinians who live in the occupied territories.
2. The government of Israel has confiscated large areas in the West Bank to build settlements for Jews only, and these settlements are connected by roads restricted to settlers and the Israeli military.
3. Several thousand Palestinians have been killed during the second Intifada, which began in September of 2000. During this same Intifada, hundreds of Israeli citizens have been killed by suicide bombers.
4. The government of Israel has signed and ratified the Fourth Geneva convention that prohibits the use of collective punishment as represented by the imposition of closure, curfew, house demolitions, the transfer of parts of a conquering nation's own civilian population into territories it occupies (a clear ban on settlements), and massive land expropriations. Virtually every element of Israel's occupation violates a provision of the Fourth Geneva Convention. The General Assembly has called for an end to the occupation of the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, and East Jerusalem.
5. The government of Israel is currently building a "Separation Fence" that encircles several Palestinian villages on three sides, divides others in half, and reaches twelve miles into the West Bank in places.
6. The General Assembly has urged the Israeli government to end its expansionist policies of
  - a. confiscation of land and water resources and the building and enlarging of settlements,
  - b. collective punishment of Palestinians, such as is exercised through administrative detentions, demolition of homes, mass house imprisonment ("curfews"), uprooting olive trees, setting up road blocks and check-points, and other forms of harassment and humiliation (see Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 635; Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 732).

7. The General Assembly has supported United Nations resolutions affirming the right of Israel to exist within secure borders and the right of the Palestinians to self-determination, including the establishment of its own sovereign state and the right of return of Palestinian refugees (see Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 635; Minutes, 2002, Part I, p. 732).

ACSWP, ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 12-01 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to support the Geneva Accord, urging Israel and Palestine to implement the Geneva Accord.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), in consultation with concerned entities of the General Assembly Council, advise that Item 12-01 be answered by approving the following alternate statement and recommendations:

“At the time the Presbytery of St. Augustine approved Item 12-01, support for the ‘Geneva Accord’ urging Israel and the Palestinians to implement the Accord seemed a practicable way forward in light of the derailed ‘road map,’ especially in light of action taken by the 215th General Assembly (2003) strongly urging Israeli and Palestinian leaders ‘to be serious, active, and diligent about seeking peace for their peoples; or, if they are unwilling or unable, to step down and make room for other leaders who will and can’ (Resolution on Israel and Palestine: End the Occupation Now, Recommendation D, Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 636.).

“At this time, however, several months since the approval of the proposed item by said presbytery, the situation and the prospects for a negotiated just peace have so deteriorated that people in the region generally, and particularly the Palestinians, have been driven to the edge of despair and hopelessness. Therefore, the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does the following:

“1. Confesses the sovereignty of God over all nations, states, governments and peoples, acknowledging God’s supreme act of love for the whole world manifest in Jesus Christ so that by faith the world might not perish but be saved. In Christ, God has called us to show love, seek peace and to pursue justice so that the world might be transformed into a foretaste of God’s peaceable kingdom.

“2. Continues to be inspired by the tenacity of hope of our Palestinian Christian partners in the face of ominous, cumulative gloom and foreboding; it affirms that God has not given us a spirit of timidity, nor have we been called to surrender hope to an attitude of despair.

“3. Commends the Presbytery of St. Augustine on its concern for a just resolution of the conflict between Israel and the Palestinians, and for moving the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to persist in voicing this concern. The assembly, therefore, welcomes the possibilities for peace contained in the ‘Geneva Accord,’ as a useful and practical approach. It would also be encouraged by other inspired initiatives that could advance the prospects of peace in the Middle East.

“4. Reiterates and reaffirms the call of last year’s General Assembly on the Israeli government to ‘end the occupation now,’ asserting that:

“a. The occupation must end; it has proven to be at the root of evil acts committed against innocent people on both sides of the conflict.

“b. The security of Israel and the Israeli people is inexorably dependent on making peace with their Palestinian neighbors, by negotiating and reaching a just and equitable solution to the conflict that respects international law, human rights, the sanctity of life, and dignity of persons, land property, safety of home, freedom of movement, the rights of refugees to return to their homeland, the right of a people to determine their political future, and to live in peace and prosperity.

“c. Horrific acts of violence and deadly attacks on innocent people, whether carried out by Palestinian ‘suicide bombers’ or by the Israeli military, are abhorrent and inexcusable by all measures, and are a dead-end alternative to a negotiated settlement of the conflict.

“d. The policies and actions of the United States government have proven to hinder rather than promote a promised peace. No political power, however mighty, has the right to consign an entire people to such a hopelessly oppressive future as may be inherent in the Bush-Sharon plan articulated during the latter’s visit to Washington in mid April 2004. The United States needs, now more than ever, to become an honest, even-handed broker for peace, and should review its approach to the problem, allowing more room for the more meaningful participation of other members of the U.N.-designated “Quartet” (the United States, Russia, Germany and France) and others;

“e. The international community has an obligation to provide physical protection for those isolated by fear and/or by physical and psychological barriers, thus making space for the restoration of security and creating a climate for the resumption of negotiations between the Israelis and Palestinians. We support the Palestinians’ persistent request to the United Nations to send a peacekeeping force.

“5. Vigorously urges the U.S. government, the government of Israel, and the Palestinian leadership to move swiftly, and with resolve, to recognize that the only way out of this chronic and vicious impasse is to abandon all approaches that exacerbate further strife, lay aside arrogant political posturing, and get on with forging negotiated compromises that open a path to peace.

“6. Endorses the letter sent on April 19, 2004, by the Stated Clerk, reiterating concerns of our denomination for Christian partners and their institutions that serve as agents of reconciliation and hope, as well as for their Palestinian and Israeli neighbors, in the Holy Land, in the framework of previous statements of the General Assembly.

“7. Finally, with respect to the recommendations in Item 12-01 calling on the Board of Pensions ‘to divest itself of investments in companies receiving one million dollars or more in profits per year from investments in Israel...etc.,’ the 216th General Assembly (2004) refers the proposal to the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI) to initiate the process of phased selective divestment, in the framework of the assembly’s investment policy and stated positions on Israel and Palestine, and to make appropriate recommendations to the General Assembly Council for action.”

Item 12-02

[The assembly approved Item 12-02 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 66–67.]

On Calling for an End to the Construction of a Wall by the State of Israel—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

~~[The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures]~~ [Recognizing that God’s love as evidenced in Jesus Christ is for all God’s children, and recognizing the human rights of all people to God’s resources including land and water and livelihood,] the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ~~request[s]~~ ~~[that]~~ ~~the Stated Clerk~~ make known to the president of the United States, the members of Congress of the United States, ~~and~~ ~~the State of Israel,~~ and the Palestinian National Authority] its opposition to the construction of a wall and other barriers by the State of Israel and further to make known the desire of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that the United States of America make no monetary contribution to the 1.3 billion dollar cost of the construction of this wall, construction of which has already begun and will continue for several years.

Rationale

For if you truly amend your ways and your doings, if you truly act justly one with another, if you do not oppress the alien, the orphan, and the widow, or shed innocent blood in this place, and if you do not go after other gods to your own hurt, then I will dwell with you in this place, in the land that I gave of old to your ancestors forever and ever. (Jer., 7:5–7)

President George W. Bush has called for an end to Israel's construction of the wall that separates Israel from the Palestinian Territories (November 2003) and United Nations Secretary Kofi Annan has condemned the building of the wall as a "deeply counterproductive act" that "could damage the longer term prospects for peace."

The wall adversely affects the economy, education, social relationships, and medical care of Palestinians.

The wall devastates the Palestinian economy, which is based on agriculture, because it separates Palestinian farmers from their land making crop cultivation an impossibility. It renders previously productive land unproductive because the wall separates land from the waters that are necessary for irrigation. And, those farmers who are able to access their land and raise crops are now unable to sell their produce because the wall isolates them from their markets.

Since many farmers are unable to reach and cultivate their land because of the construction of the wall, their land is in effect confiscated by the order of the Israeli High Court, which states that land that is uncultivated for three years is subject to seizure by the Israeli government and lost to its owners. Moreover, Palestinian farmers typically are notified of the confiscation of their land only by military orders that are nailed to a tree or dropped on their inaccessible land.

Village life is imperiled. Because of the wall, some villages no longer have access to their wells and are therefore unable to sustain human life. Homes, schools, and shops are being destroyed to make way for construction equipment and the wall itself. Palestinian villagers are being confined to their communities by the wall and an accompanying system of permit requirements that control their movement and isolate them in areas defined by the State of Israel. The wall and its accompanying depth barriers (trenches 25 meters wide filled with barbed wire) and checkpoints create sealed Palestinian communities that over time will be unable to sustain their populations.

The wall extends well beyond the Green Line and makes significant incursions into traditional Palestinian territories as defined in 1967. On at least one occasion, Prime Minister Sharon stated his intention to treat the wall as the new territorial border.

The construction of the wall and the wall itself cause the destruction of homes, schools, medical facilities, markets, trees, and infrastructure. The social structure of the Palestinian communities is shredded and ultimately its residents are banished from their land.

The wall humiliates, demoralizes, frustrates, and angers the Palestinian people and ultimately decreases the security of Israel and its citizens fostering a sense of hopelessness and despair.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 12-02

Comment on Item 12-02—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council urges the commissioners to approve Item 12-02 with the following comment:

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has approved numerous resolutions on Israel and Palestine, repeatedly affirming, clearly and unequivocally, Israel's right to exist within permanent, recognized, and "secure" borders (for example: 1969, 1974, 1977, 1983, 1989, etc.). It has deplored the cycle of escalating violence—carried out by both Palestinians and Israelis—which is rooted in Israel's continued occupation of Palestinian territories (cf. statements of successive assemblies since 1967). Presbyterians have continued to be concerned about the loss of so many innocent lives of Israelis and Palestinians (see "Resolution on the Middle East," approved in 1997, and "Resolution on Israel and Palestine: End the Occupation Now," approved in 2003).

Because of its deep concern for peace in the area, and how the “Separation Barrier,” generally referred to as the “Security Wall,” is impacting the lives of people on both sides, the GAC expresses grave alarm at the construction of this barrier. Further, given the long-standing, deeply rooted spiritual and programmatic bonds existing between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its partner churches in the Holy Land, it is particularly concerned that the life and ministry of the dwindling remnant of the Christian community will be severely impeded. As it voices these concerns within the framework of many General Assembly statements over more than thirty-five years, the GAC wants to help Presbyterians to understand some of the aspects of the wall’s impact. These may be summarized as follows:

- The “Separation Barrier,” currently under construction, consists of a twenty-five-foot high concrete wall meandering through mostly Palestinian lands, plus stretches of electrified barbed-wire fence extensions of the wall.
- Israel claims it is building the wall between Israel and the West Bank, but only 10 percent will be on the Green Line (i.e., Israel’s 1967 border).
- Ninety percent of the rest stretches into the West Bank, isolates significant amounts of land, and affects the lives of many thousands of Palestinians. This year approximately 210,000 people will be economically and socially cut off from their neighborhoods, their families, their farmlands, their employment, their educational and health-care facilities, and their places of worship.
- A wall built along the Green Line would be half the length of the current wall and much easier to patrol.

Many believe that the route of the wall has been determined not by security, but by the political goals of maintaining the settlements and impacting future peace talks. Palestinian church partners have expressed the view that they might not object to the construction of a wall if it were built on Israeli land. The current wall ghettoizes the Palestinians and forces them onto what can only be called reservations.

The General Assembly Council is engaged in various ministries that support the Christian churches and ecumenical bodies in their own work of evangelism, outreach and church growth, health ministries, education, economic and social development, peacemaking, interfaith dialogue, reconciliation, and cooperation.

Especially following a recent visit by an official PC(USA) delegation to Israel and Palestine (in February 2004), the GAC believes that the best hope for security for both Israelis and Palestinians may be found in laying down all forms of aggression on both sides, ending the Israeli occupation, and finding ways to build bridges of peace rather than walls of separation. Good neighborly relations, rather than mutual isolation and suspicion, are urgently needed between Israel and its neighbors in Palestine and the Middle East.

On Confronting Christian Zionism—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

[The assembly approved Item 12-03 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 67–70.]

The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to actively oppose Christian Zionism and to develop a plan to communicate the theological and political ramifications it engenders within our denomination, in the mass media, and among U. S. government officials. Specifically, we call upon the General Assembly to do the following:

1. [Call upon the Stated Clerk to] [H][i]ssue to all churches in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) a pastoral letter on Christian Zionism and the ongoing conflict in Israel and Palestine and make this letter available on the PC(USA) Web site. [The assembly requests the following offices to assist the Stated Clerk in the preparation of this letter: the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Corporate Witness, Interfaith Relations, Middle East, and the Office of Theology and Worship.]

2. [Direct the Stated Clerk to] [H][i]nform current government officials [~~of the Christian alternatives to Christian Zionism~~] [that Christian Zionism does not represent the majority of American Christians and the faith of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)].

3. Continue to commend and promote the PC(USA) list of resources found in the September/October 2003 issue of Church & Society, entitled “Israel and Palestine: The Quest for Peace,” so that Presbyterians can and will become knowledgeable of the present day Middle East situation and have a better understanding of its history and people.

4. [Direct the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council to] [E][e]ducate Presbyterians about the Reformed principles for interpreting Scripture [in light of the gospel and the rule of love of God and neighbor,] as affirmed by previous General Assemblies. [Specifically, interpreting Scripture as follows:

[a. In light of the entire witness of Scripture: “Thus the New Testament’s emphasis on the gospel is not to be understood apart from the Old Testament’s emphasis on the grace of the law; and the Old Testament’s emphasis on the law is not to be understood apart from the New Testament’s emphasis on the grace of the gospel,” Presbyterian Understanding and Use of Holy Scripture (Minutes, PCUS, 1983, Part I, p. 615).

[b. And the rule of love of God and neighbor: “The fundamental expression of God’s will is the two-fold commandment to love God and neighbor, and all interpretations are to be judged by the question whether they offer and support the love given and commanded by God,” Presbyterian Understanding and Use of Holy Scripture (Minutes, PCUS, 1983, Part I, p. 615).

[5. Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC), through its offices on the Middle East, Interfaith Relations, Theology and Worship, and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, to develop a brief resource and study guide to assist Presbyterians in understanding how biblical faith and Reformed theology guide our understanding of present realities and possibilities in the Middle East. This resource/study guide is to be mailed to all churches and posted on the PC(USA) Web site.]

[9. Pray for the guidance of the Holy Spirit to illumine our minds as we continue to seek a deeper understanding of God’s Word for us and for the world today.]

Rationale

We are called by Scripture to love God and all our neighbors. Christian Zionism promotes a theology that justifies grievous violations of basic rights of people who are also made in the image of God and is contrary to the gospel of Jesus Christ. Its teachings invite contempt for fellow Christians in the Middle East, and foreclose decent human relations with many Evangelical Christians in our own American society and in our churches. The implications of this issue need to be understood and to be given much broader attention by our denomination.

The term, “Christian Zionism,” is used to refer to the use of passages of biblical prophecy out of context to influence political and religious leaders to accept the State of Israel as a necessary condition of the return of Jesus Christ and the eschatological end of time (Armageddon), when Jews and others will be given the option to either convert or perish.

Christian Zionism fails to relate to or defend Palestinian Christians who are fleeing their homeland because of Israeli occupation, economic closures, continuing confiscation of land and settlement construction, military aggression and now the “Wall.” Christian Zionism is actually anti-evangelical in that it undermines the presence and witness of the indigenous Middle East Christians, whether in the Holy Land itself or throughout the Middle East. Christian Zionism creates a false image of Christianity, one that is militant, western, and Zionist; and the repercussions often affect the continuity of indigenous Middle East Christians. Our Palestinian Christian partners urge us to speak out on this issue, notably the churches of the Middle East, the Middle East Council of Churches, the Sabeel Ecumenical Center, and others, as well as our good friends, the leaders of these bodies: the Reverend Naim Ateek of the Sabeel Center in Jerusalem, the Reverend Riad Jarjour, general secretary of the Middle East Council of Churches, and the Reverend Mitri Rahab, pastor of Christmas Lutheran Church in Bethlehem, who last year served as a mission partner in residence on the Worldwide Ministries Division staff of the PC(USA).

Christian Zionism has become a divisive voice in American churches that turn prophetic texts of the Bible into apocalyptic scenarios for the end times in a predictive and reductionist form of prophecy. The Christian Zionist message jams the airwaves every day on Christian radio and television and follows a theological approach to the Bible called “premillennial dispensationalism,” a theme that emerged in the early 1800s and was promoted in the U.S. by the Reverend John Nelson Darby. The 1995 novel Left Behind by Tim LaHaye and Jerry Jenkins, and the subsequent series of novels that pick up on this view and focus on events leading to the end of history and the return of Jesus, found a profitable market among millions of North America readers, thereby finding popular but largely uninformed support. Influential members of the current U.S. government endorse Christian Zionist positions as a basis for U. S. foreign policy. Christian Zionists, aligned with the minority Jewish settler group, take positions on the Israeli/Palestinian conflict that are contrary to the position of the Israeli government and of most Israelis, opposing a two-state solution and supporting transfer of all Arabs out of Palestine. Finally, pre-millennialist interpretations that underlie Christian Zionism ultimately exclude any validity of the continuity of efficacy of God’s covenant with the Jewish people themselves, and ultimately are anti-Semitic.

Jesus rejected efforts to speculate on the future by saying it was not for them to know the “times or the seasons” that God has chosen (Acts 1:6–11).

Christian Zionism is contrary to the Reformed principles of interpreting Scripture that call us to read Scripture in light of the gospel; and to interpret Scripture in light of the one commandment of God that summarizes all other commandments, love for God and for all our neighbors.

Our denomination is part of a coalition of Christian organizations called Churches for Middle East Peace. Its “Theological Reflection #1” describes the effect of the Zionist claim as the active dispossession of Palestinians of their land. Adding our voice to this specific issue will strengthen our joint efforts.

The 215th General Assembly (2003) reaffirmed the actions of previous General Assemblies that support peace in the Middle East; further, the 2003 resolution urged pastors, lay leaders, sessions and individual members of the PC(USA) to avail themselves of study resources that help them understand the history, nature, and dimensions of the conflict between Israelis and Palestinians (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 622–23).

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 12-03

Item 12-03 calls on the General Assembly to oppose Christian Zionism and to develop a plan to communicate the theological and political ramifications it engenders to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in the mass media, and among U.S. government officials.

Item 12-03 rightly calls on the General Assembly to look closely at the role that Christian theology has in relation to current struggles in Middle-East politics and to work for peace in that troubled region.

Presbyterians have a strong history of careful theological and social analysis, and the question of Christian Zionism and its relation to U.S. policies toward the Middle East deserves that type of consideration.

1. What Is Christian Zionism?

Christian Zionism “weds religion with politics and interprets biblical faithfulness in terms of fidelity to Israel’s future” [<http://www.hcef.org/hcef/index.cfm/ID/159>]. It is a particular political philosophy and strategy. Christian Zionist leaders share 5 core beliefs:

(1) The Covenant. God’s covenant with Israel is eternal and unconditional; the promises of land given to Abraham will never be overturned. The church has not replaced Israel; therefore, Israel’s privileges have never been revoked.

(2) The Church. God’s plan has always been for the redemption of Israel. When Israel failed to follow Jesus, the church was born as an afterthought or “parenthesis.” At the rapture the church will be removed and Israel will once again become God’s primary agent in the world. We now live in ‘the times of the Gentiles’ that will conclude soon. There are two covenants now at work, that given through Moses and the covenant of Christ. The new covenant in no way makes the older covenant obsolete.

(3) Blessing Modern Israel. Genesis 12:3 is applied literally and applied to modern Israel: “I will bless those who bless you and curse those who curse you.” Christians have a spiritual obligation to bless Israel and “pray for the peace of Jerusalem.” While many Christians throughout history have also believed it important to observe the injunction of Genesis 12:3 in regard to the Jews, Christian Zionism links this specifically to support of the modern state of Israel. To fail to support Israel's political survival today will incur divine judgment.

(4) Prophecy. The prophetic books of the Bible specifically refer to events today, though some may also refer to events in Biblical times. Therefore when we look at, say, Daniel 7, if we possess the right interpretative skills, we can see current events foreshadowed in it. This quest for prophecy has spawned countless books of end-time speculation involving the state of Israel based on Biblical prophecy.

(5) Modern Israel and Eschatology. The modern state of Israel is a catalyst for the prophetic end-time countdown. If these are the last days, then we should expect an unraveling of civilization, the rise of evil, the loss of international peace and equilibrium, a coming antichrist, and tests of faithfulness to Israel. Above all, political alignments today will determine our position on the fateful day of Armageddon. Since the crisis of 9/11, the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, it has been easy to persuade the public that history is unraveling precisely as Dispensationalism predicted. [<http://www.hcef.org/hcef/index.cfm/ID/159>]

2. What Is Dispensationalism?

Historic Premillennialism holds that Christ will return to the earth prior to the Last Day in order to exercise rule over the nations for a thousand years in the last stage of human history. It is pessimistic concerning the role and prospects of the Church in human history; therefore it posits another age, the millennium, between Christ's return and the Last Day, during which Christ rules in person over a theocratic kingdom to which all the nations of the world are subject.

Periods of great world upheaval and crisis have tended to spawn and multiply despair in society, and premillennial visions within Christianity. . . .

Dispensationalism gives premillennialism a complete system. Human history is regarded as a series of ages (dispensations) in which humanity is tested with respect to some aspect revealed of God's will. In each case humankind fails, is judged by God, and then set on the trail under new covenant conditions. (For further detail, see "Dispensationalism," Minutes, PCUS, 1944, Part I, pp. 123–27.)

The General Assembly in 1944 was very careful to distinguish premillennialism in general from its specific application in Dispensationalism. It was the latter that was singled out for specific criticism:

It is the unanimous opinion of your Committee that Dispensationalism as defined and set forth above is out of accord with the system of the doctrine set forth in the Confession of Faith, not primarily or simply in the field of eschatology, but because it attacks the very heart of the Theology of our Church, which is unquestionably a Theology of one Covenant of Grace. ["Dispensationalism," Minutes of the General Assembly, PCUS, 1944, Part I, pp. 123–27.]

We, too, must make important distinctions. Most Christian Zionists are Dispensationalists, but this does not imply that all Dispensationalists are Christian Zionists, especially in respect to political action. Many Dispensationalists still remain completely apart from the U.S. political system, for instance. Further, we cannot assume uniformity on every point. For instance, Item 12-03 states "Finally, pre-millennialist interpretations that underlie Christian Zionism ultimately exclude any validity of the continuity of efficacy of God's covenant with the Jewish people themselves, and ultimately are anti-Semitic." John Hagee, a popular television preacher and Christian Zionist leader who recently delivered $1 million to Israel [<http://www.hcef.org/hcef/index.cfm/ID/159>], has defended a parallel and enduring covenant with the Jews: "I believe that every Jewish person who lives in the light of the Torah, which is the word of God, has a relationship with God and will come to redemption" ["San Antonio fundamentalist battles anti-Semitism," Houston Chronicle, April 30, 1988, sec. 6, pg. 1.]. In such matters, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must speak with a firm, but careful voice. See also: [<http://www.pcusa.org/ga213/business/OVT0125>] and [<http://www.pcusa.org/theologyandworship/issues/reflection>] "Between Millennia" and "Eschatology: The Doctrine of Last Things."

In a time when the PC(USA) is beset with its own internal disagreements, we should resist the temptation to bolster our own self-confidence by throwing stones at others. Any judgments must be made with great care.

ACSWP, ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 12-03 calls on the General Assembly to oppose Christian Zionism and to develop a plan to communicate the theological and political ramifications it engenders to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in the mass media and among U.S. government officials.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advise that Item 12-03 be approved as amended: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through and with brackets; text to be added or inserted is shown with an underline and with brackets.]

“The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to actively oppose Christian Zionism and to develop a plan to communicate the theological and political ramifications it engenders within our denomination, in the mass media, and among U. S. government officials. Specifically, we call upon the General Assembly to do the following:

“1. [Call Upon the Stated Clerk to [F][i]ssue to all churches in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) a pastoral letter on Christian Zionism and the ongoing conflict in Israel and Palestine by making this letter available on the PC(USA) Web site. [The assembly requests the following offices to assist the Stated Clerk in the preparation of this letter: the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Corporate Witness, Interfaith Relations, Middle East, and the Office of Theology and Worship.]

“2. Inform current government officials [of the Christian alternatives to Christian Zionism] [that Christian Zionism does not represent the majority of American Christians and the faith of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).]

“3. Continue to commend and promote the PC(USA) list of resources found in the September/October 2003 issue of Church & Society, entitled “Israel and Palestine: The Quest for Peace,” so that Presbyterians can and will become knowledgeable of the present day Middle East situation and have a better understanding of its history and people.

“4. Educate Presbyterians about the Reformed principles for interpreting Scripture [in light of the gospel and the rule of love of God and neighbor,] as affirmed by previous General Assemblies. [Specifically, interpreting Scripture as follows:

“[a. In light of the entire witness of Scripture: ‘Thus the New Testament’s emphasis on the gospel is not to be understood apart from the Old Testament’s emphasis on the grace of the law; and the Old Testament’s emphasis on the law is not to be understood apart from the New Testament’s emphasis on the grace of the gospel,’ Presbyterian Understanding and Use of Holy Scripture (Minutes, PCUS, 1983, Part I, p. 615).

“[b. And the rule of love of God and neighbor: ‘The fundamental expression of God’s will is the two-fold commandment to love God and neighbor, and all interpretations are to be judged by the question whether they offer and support the love given and commanded by God,’ Presbyterian Understanding and Use of Holy Scripture (Minutes, PCUS, 1983, Part I, p. 615).

“[5. Continue to cooperate with other denominations and like-minded groups to promote an understanding of peace in the Holy Land. ] [Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC), through its offices on the Middle East, Interfaith Relations, Theology and Worship, and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, to develop a brief resource and study guide to assist Presbyterians in understanding how biblical faith and Reformed theology guide our understanding of present realities and possibilities in the Middle East.]

“6. Continue to cooperate with other [denominations’] church bodies and like-minded groups to promote [an understanding of] peace in the Holy Land.

“~~[6-]~~ [7.] Urge our Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)-related colleges and seminaries to address this issue

“[8. Commend to the church the following works to better understand dispensationalism and Christian Zionism:

“[a. Our own resources from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

“[• Between Millennia: What Presbyterians Believe About the Coming of Christ (PDS 70-420-01-007)—commended by the 213th General Assembly (2001) to the church.

Item 12-04

[The assembly approved Item 12-04 with amendment. See pp. 70–71.]

On Urging Peace in Colombia, South America—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to do the following:

[1. Reaffirm the positions of the 210th and 213th General Assemblies (1998) and (2001) that call for ecumenical efforts toward peace in Colombia and call for the United States to demilitarize its anti-drug policies and support in Colombia, that it speak against the violation of human rights, and that aid be in the form of national debt relief and humanitarian and self-developmental grants for the Colombian people.]

[1-] ~~[2.]~~ [Join the Presbyterian Church of Colombia, Council of Churches of Colombia, and Colombia’s Commission of Human Rights and Peace in calling for the transformation of the vicious circle of death and destruction produced by military aid into a “virtuous circle” of abundant life and peace, so that the Colombian people will begin to receive a different type of message from the north, sent by the church, a message of solidarity and respect for human life.] [Join the Presbyterian Church of Colombia, other Christian churches, and other Christian organizations in calling for the redirection of United States military aid into social, educational, health, and developmental assistance in the hope that peace would be restored.]

[2-] ~~[3.]~~ Decry the characterization of human rights workers as terrorists.

[3-] ~~[4.]~~ [Commend the Nonviolent Communities of Resistance in Colombia] [Support and accompany the “communities of peace and resistance”] who reject all military involvement [by guerillas, paramilitary, and Colombian armed forces].

[5. Call for the immediate closure of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, previously known as the School of the Americas.]

[4-] [6.] Stand with our sisters and brothers in Colombia who are witnessing to the truth that peace cannot be achieved by armed military violence.

[7. Because of the dire plight of more than 3 million internally displaced people in Colombia, including the Colombian Church, we urge the members of the PC(USA) to pray for displaced people, and to provide direct aid to the church, for their work with the displaced; and we direct the Stated Clerk and Presbyterian Washington Office to use every opportunity to urge the United States government to provide food, water, medicine, and other necessities to Colombia rather than weapons.

[8. Commend the ministry and work of the Reverend Dr. Alice Winters with the Reformed University of Colombia, School of Theology. Winters has served on behalf of the PC(USA) since 1977.]

[5-] [9.] Urge Presbyterians to ~~[go to Colombia to get to know our sisters and brothers there]~~ [learn about the situation through study and organized visits] and better understand the realities ~~[they]~~ [Colombians] deal with every day.

[10.Call upon all transnational corporations operating in Colombia to utilize their influence to promote publicly peace and justice, protect their employees from violence in the workplace and as they participate in trade union activities, and contribute to the well-being of the communities where they are located.

[11.Commend to the church the resource created by the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, in cooperation with the PC(USA) Office for Latin American and the Caribbean, entitled “Colombia,” (PDS # 70-270-04-015), which is available from the Peacemaking Office and through the PC(USA) Website.]

Rationale

As the war in Colombia has escalated and evolved into part of the “war on terrorism,” and President Uribe has declared those who work to defend human rights as terrorists, Presbyterian church leaders and other Colombians have been put at risk. Presbyterians in Colombia who help displaced persons have too often appeared on “hit lists.”

They have asked for our help, by calling attention to their plight and coming to Colombia to stand with them and to learn of their situation firsthand.

They have taught us of International Humanitarian Law that allows for communities to organize themselves into Humanitarian Zones. These Peace Communities in Colombia reject all military, guerilla, and paramilitary presence. More than fifty such communities have organized, and their numbers are growing. While these nonviolent communities of resistance offer hope, and they are reluctantly tolerated by the government, they are still somewhat vulnerable. They need our support, and the presence of internationals helps to ensure their security.

Our sisters and brothers in the church in Colombia want us to come, and share in their lives. There are many kinds of trips that could be arranged, from study tours, trips with presbyteries that have partnerships with presbyteries in Colombia, mission work camps, to standing in solidarity with the nonviolent communities of resistance.

ACSWP, ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 12-04 from the Presbytery of Baltimore calls on the PC(USA) to add our voice to and with the voices of Colombian Presbyterians, other Christians, and human rights advocates. In the face of increasing violence, the PC(USA) is being asked to be both spiritual and physical companions with Colombians in their circumstances.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advise that Item 12-04 be approved with the following amendment:

1. Amend Recommendation 5. to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through and with brackets; text to be added or inserted is shown with an underline and with brackets.]

“5. Urge Presbyterians to [~~go to Colombia to get to know our sisters and brothers there~~] [learn about the situation through study and organized visits] and better understand the realities [Colombians] [~~they~~] deal with every day.”

2. Add a Recommendation “6.” To read as follows:

“[6. Calls upon all transnational corporations operating in Colombia to utilize their influence to promote publicly peace and justice, protect their employees from violence in the workplace and as they participate in trade union activities, and contribute to the well-being of the communities where they are located.]”

Rationale

The 210th General Assembly (1998) approved Overture 98-20 that dealt with working ecumenically in effort to promote peace and justice in Colombia. The full text of the overture can be found in the Minutes, 1998, Part I, pp. 76–77; 662–63.

The 213th General Assembly (2001) approved Overture 01-59 that called for the United States to demilitarize its anti-drug policies and support in Colombia, that it speak against the violation of human rights, and that aid be in the form of national debt relief, humanitarian and self-developmental grants for the Colombian people (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 46, 470–73).

Numerous transnational corporations operate in Colombia including Coca-Cola, Dole Food, Drummond, ExxonMobil, and Occidental Petroleum. When companies are involved in countries with serious human rights problems, clear codes of corporate conduct and public commitment to supporting human rights are essential. This proved to be true in South Africa during the era of apartheid, and remains valid today. Even so, with involvement come risks. For example, according to Amnesty International, at least eighty Colombian trade unionists were killed or “disappeared” in 2003, and more than 70 percent of the killings and threats occur within the context of labor disputes. Recently on April 20, 2004, a Coca-Cola bottling worker who was the brother-in-law of the labor union president was killed by unidentified gunmen. His partner and one of their three children also died. This followed previous murders and attempted assassinations of Coca-Cola bottling employees.

While concerns raised in the General Assembly’s “Human Rights Update” each year are not formal policies of the General Assembly, the following reports in the narrative demonstrate concern raised for the situation in Colombia:

The 208th General Assembly (1996) reported on the violent conflicts between guerillas and the paramilitaries with many victims being innocent civilians in the Human Rights Update (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 501).

In the 1997–1998 Human Rights Update (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 497), the concerns of a growing number of displaced persons, the violence against human rights workers, and the internal warfare were addressed.

Item 12-05

Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future

[The assembly approved Item 12-05 with amendment. See pp. 71–73.]

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approve the following resolution with recommendations and receive the background rationale to be included in the Minutes:

Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future

The invasion of Iraq by the United States and those countries belonging to the “coalition of the willing” and the ensuing conflict have created diverse opinions, strongly held, as to whether or not this has been a justified action.

There are many different points of view within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) about war as a moral issue. They include those who believe that war in all circumstances is contrary to the teachings of Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace. Others feel that resort to arms is a necessary measure to be taken in certain situations when there are gross violations of human rights or where there is an imminent threat to the life and health of all or part of the human community. Both of these positions are supported by the social teaching of our church.

Opposition to the military action against Iraq based on just war principles and other principles of conscience, while not unanimous among Presbyterians, has been sufficiently widespread to indicate much concern. From the beginning, it has been the judgment of many church leaders, both in the United States and elsewhere, that an [~~essentially unilateral~~] invasion of Iraq has been unwise, immoral, and illegal. The [216th] General Assembly [(2004)] concurs with this judgment. That judgment has also been evident in widespread public feeling in numerous countries, including countries long friendly to the United States.

[Since “God alone is Lord of the conscience,” those who have come to a different judgment are entitled to their convictions, but they are not entitled to regard those with other views as “unpatriotic” or somehow lacking the moral stamina to combat evil.] [Presbyterians affirm, “God alone is Lord of the conscience.” Every member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is both entitled, and called upon, to consider this matter prayerfully and lovingly. Every Presbyterian, however, is also called upon to treat those with whom they disagree with respect. We deplore the actions of those who regard persons with positions different from their own as being unpatriotic or un-Christian.]

Moreover, the military action taken against Iraq is not directly or necessarily connected to the effort to deal with the threat of terrorism. It raises different issues and must be assessed using different moral considerations.

Despite the moral cloud surrounding the military invasion of Iraq and growing concern about the loss of life on both sides of the conflict, there is widespread agreement that the United States bears a legal and moral burden for the reconstruction of Iraq. Many people feel this burden can only be carried out properly and successfully through full cooperation with the international community, especially the United Nations. The complexities and difficulties in the road ahead must not be the occasion for indecision or for seeking simplistic solutions in the momentous task of nation building. Acknowledging the moral perplexity caused by Operation Iraqi Freedom, the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does the following:

1. Affirms the Reformed principle that “God alone is Lord of the conscience,” and that in evaluating U.S. actions in Iraq every Presbyterian has the right to arrive at their own judgment, even if, after prayerful consideration, that places them in opposition to the position of the General Assembly.
2. Reaffirms the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s solidarity with Iraqi Christians, especially the Presbyterian churches of Iraq, with whom we have had a strong bond of partnership for more than a century and a half, as they make their witness in their own society to the faithfulness of God and as they seek to have a significant role in the rebuilding and progress of their own country.
3. Calls for pastoral support at every level of the church’s life for U.S. military personnel and their families who suffer pain and loss as a result of this military action, and expresses compassion for Iraqis who are also the victims of this conflict.

4. Recognizes that many who are called to arms in this military action are responding out of conviction and others out of obedience to duty, or both, but all of whom do so at great sacrifice, both in their personal and family lives and also in relation to vocational responsibilities at home. The General Assembly further recognizes that there are many military officers and soldiers serving in Iraq who, out of convictions rooted in their faith, are engaged in various constructive activities of social service, such as rehabilitating hospitals and rebuilding schools.

5. Urges the United States government to move speedily to restore sovereignty to Iraq, to internationalize the reconstruction efforts without penalty to those nations that chose not to endorse the U.S.-led invasion, and to recognize the United Nations as the body most suitable to facilitate the transition to peace, freedom, and participatory governance in Iraq. We commend the administration for its recent efforts to work through the United Nations to help the Iraqi people take charge of their own political destiny and urge the United States to recognize that the United Nations should play the leading role in helping the transition to Iraqi self-rule. [In light of the transfer of power from the representatives of the United States Government to the Interim Governing Council in Iraq, we urge that further steps be taken to internationalize the reconstruction efforts and to help the people of Iraq to take charge of their own political destiny. Meanwhile, we continue in prayer for peace and stability in that country.]

6. ~~[We suggest]~~ [Suggests] that the United Nations, with more than fifty years of experience of peace-building in more than 170 countries, play a lead role in the recruiting and training of persons who have special skills in establishing the rule of law—police, judges, ~~[lawyers,]~~ court staff, and correction officers—to establish peace and stability in Iraq and other areas of the world striving to build post-conflict stability and order. The deployment of military personnel for this purpose should be avoided as much as possible as it places additional burden, responsibility, and need for training that stretches the current forces beyond their expertise.

7. ~~[We deplore the use of torture against prisoners. Such use violates international law, the best traditions of our country, Christian morality, and just war teaching.]~~ [Condemns in the strongest possible terms torture and abuse of prisoners held any place in the world, in United States government, military, or civilian custody, and we oppose any continuation of this practice.] As a church in the United States, we acknowledge and repent of our complicity in the culture leading to such acts, confess our collective sinfulness that is at the root of this practice, and ask God's forgiveness.

8. Calls attention to the need to understand and take into account the role that religion plays in the cultural and political affairs of nations, particularly those with large Muslim populations, and encourages Presbyterians to reaffirm their commitment to peacemaking in Iraq through dialogue and engagement in their community.

[9. Supports the people of Iraq on a long-term basis in rebuilding their government and nation without prejudice to any ethnic and religious group and urge the United States government to provide assistance to Iraq in the long-term rebuilding efforts, including working for relief of foreign debt.]

~~[9-]~~ [10.] Commends the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly for his strong leadership in ~~[opposing, on the basis of previous General Assembly policies, the U.S. led intervention in Iraq]~~ [representing policies of the General Assembly and brothers and sisters in the church at large], and for his leadership among world religious leaders in calling for interfaith cooperation to address the crisis created by this action for relations between Christians and Muslims.

~~[10-]~~ [11.] Expresses deep regret over the failure of the current administration, prior to military action, to meet with religious leaders seeking to offer a full explanation of the basis for their opposition to an invasion of Iraq, and the subsequent unwillingness of the administration to meet with those leaders to discuss the role the churches might play in creating a free and prosperous future for Iraq.

~~[11-]~~ [12.] Approves the report as a whole for churchwide study and implementation (noting that the study developed for Iraq and Beyond, approved by 215th General Assembly (2003), has continuing usefulness for the church: PDS order # 68-600-03-005).

~~[12.]~~ [13.] Directs the Office of the General Assembly to publish the resolution (with recommendations and background rationale) and place the document as a whole on the PC(USA)'s Website, sending a copy to the presbytery and synod resource centers, the libraries of the theological seminaries, making available a copy for each requesting session or middle governing body, and directs the Stated Clerk to notify the entire church of the availability of this paper on the Website.

[14. Due to the immense sacrifice of our partner churches in Iraq, calls on the PC(USA) to give sacrificially to the real needs of our brothers and sisters in Christ. We call on the General Assembly Council (GAC) to immediately develop and promote a coordinated effort to highlight the Extra Commitment Opportunity titled, "Iraq—The Peace Fund for Solidarity with the Churches" (E051722).

[15. Calls on the GAC to research and dialogue with our partner churches in Iraq in order to present at the 217th General Assembly (2006) a plan for the use of personnel (mission co-workers, mission volunteers, etc) and other resources that responds to the needs and concerns of our brothers and sisters in Iraq.]

Rationale

In approving the study document "Iraq and Beyond," the 215th General Assembly (2003) requested the task force making a study of Violence, Religion, and Terrorism to examine the moral issues raised by military action against Iraq. Following the announcement that the combat phase of "Operation Iraqi Freedom" was concluded, the United States and other coalition forces have occupied Iraq seeking to oversee the restoration of services and promoting the establishment of a democratic government. They have found themselves increasingly confronting hostile actions by unidentified groups bent on expelling the United States from Iraqi soil. In a certain sense, Iraq has now become a major theater for terrorist activity. While President Bush has heralded the action in Iraq as something that has reduced the threat of terrorist action against the continental United States, the people of Iraq are not necessarily more secure.

While the invasion and occupation of Iraq have been linked to the effort to combat terrorism by the rhetoric of its advocates, military operations launched against a sovereign state on the basis that it might pose a danger to international stability must be analyzed separately and differently from efforts to stop disruptive violence as carried on by terrorists. The moral issues that surround these two different activities are not the same, nor can the basis for supporting one be carried over as a matter of course to legitimize the other. Because these two matters cannot be conflated, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy is addressing this issue in separate discussions. One background paper and set of recommendations deals with terrorism and religiously related violence; this paper and the recommendations that go with it deal with the use of armed force against Iraq as an instance of preemptive intervention.

Reviewing the Background of the Iraq War

Most present day military action involves crossing the boundaries of other countries in order to accomplish some particular objective. Military activity can be utilized to intervene under a variety of possible conditions, each of which presents its own particular issues.

Humanitarian Intervention

So-called humanitarian intervention crosses national boundaries in order to either alleviate suffering or establish some sort of stability in situations of great turmoil. This kind of intervention has only developed quite recently and support for it has been slowly forthcoming since it usually involves some overriding of complete national autonomy.

A number of interventions for humanitarian purposes have been undertaken over the last decade. Examples include Somalia (1992), Haiti (1994), Bosnia-Herzegovina (1995), Kosovo (1999), and Liberia (2003). All were approved by the Security Council of the United Nations or by a regional alliance of several countries. Many were undertaken at the invitation of or with the consent of the countries involved. Those interventions that have been successful do not attract public attention as much as those that do not succeed either because they are ill-conceived, not supported, or because the parties originally involved broke their commitments. Although the effectiveness of humanitarian intervention has to be considered on a case-by-case basis, such intervention has not been widely deemed to raise fundamental moral objections, although some do object to these actions on the grounds that they involve the use of military force in undertakings that might be done more appropriately by civilian agencies.

Remedial Intervention

Another kind of intervention deploys military forces within the boundaries of other nations for the purpose of combating groups whose behavior is threatening. Intervention that seeks to deal with unrest, disturbances, and threatening actions in other countries might be called remedial intervention—though no term to designate it has the prevalent usage that the term humanitarian intervention has. Sometimes the presence of the military in such nations occurs with the approval of the regimes involved, although this has not always been obtained. For instance, in the case of the pursuit of Al Qaeda in Afghanistan, the alliance between Al Qaeda and the Taliban was understood as a threat to the government in those countries as well as to the world. The United States intervened to support the Northern Alliance in its effort to destroy Al Qaeda. This action was generally supported by the international community and the United Nations.

Actions taken by the United States in dealing with the drug problem in Colombia may be another example of this kind of intervention. However, these actions also demonstrate the potential problems that can attend such efforts, for keeping the task of interdicting drugs separate from taking sides in the civil war has not been entirely feasible.

Strategic Intervention

A third form of intervention is illustrated by the effort of the United States to remove the regime of Saddam Hussein in Iraq. Although often called a war rather than an intervention, this action was taken to remove a head of state and his supporters, not to destroy the Iraqi people (except insofar as some of them supported the head of state). The aim has been to change the ruling regime in Iraq, not to bring its people to submission. Moreover, this action never contemplated bringing Saddam Hussein to a surrender in which he changed his policies yet remained in power. Although this form of intervention has more aggressive features than the two types of intervention mentioned above, it does not have the same intentions as wars fought to subjugate or destroy another nation in its entirety.

Clearly the moral considerations required to legitimize a particular instance of intervention change as one moves from one type of intervention to another. The burden of proof required for humanitarian intervention is less demanding than that required for remedial intervention. The burden of proof required when invited to intervene in domestic conflicts is not as high as that required when intervention is undertaken to remove an unacceptable regime. As one moves from humanitarian intervention to strategic intervention, the burden of proof becomes higher and higher. Moreover, the possibility of disagreement about the wisdom or legitimacy of such action is increasingly likely.

Historically, military action has been undertaken on the sole authority of individual nation-states. Such sovereign entities have long assumed that while they may gather allies for their cause, they are entitled to decide unilaterally what actions they will take. This state of affairs has been gradually changing as efforts have developed to hold the behavior of individual nations up to the standards of international law and to the collective scrutiny of the international community working through the United Nations. It is now common to undertake military action at the behest or with the approval of international bodies. Efforts to provide international warrant for military action have emerged only with considerable uncertainty as to their effectiveness and considerable disagreement as to their legitimacy. Having international sanction for military action has been considered by many groups to be an important safeguard against illegitimate interventions by individual nations. Many religious bodies have emphasized this view in their thinking about world affairs. But others, especially those in the United States now referred to as neoconservatives, have opposed subjugating the sovereignty of our nation to international judgments. We are living in a situation in which the sovereignty of individual nations continues to be regarded by many as complete and autonomous, yet a situation in which many look to the international community as the proper place for the adjudication of reasons for taking military action. This dichotomy constitutes one of the underlying reasons for deep disagreements about the legitimacy of operations like those taken against Iraq.

The action taken in Iraq has also raised an issue regarding what should be done about terrorism. If terrorism is a form of aggression either instigated or aided by the rulers of nation-states, then efforts to combat it can be based on a model of war, which leads to regarding whole countries as responsible for terrorism and attacks upon the ruling regimes of those countries as called for. If, however, terrorism is a crime—as it is often characterized in the documents of the United Nations—then a more focused method of bringing terrorists to justice must be employed in order to deal with the small and unofficial groups that are responsible for it. The second type of intervention—one that assists other governments in efforts to suppress wrongdoing—becomes appropriate and the third type of intervention is rendered problematic.

Three interrelated reasons were advanced for taking action against Iraq when it was ruled by Saddam Hussein: (1) its regime was unacceptably brutal and showed little respect for the human rights of its citizens; (2) it was considered contemptuous of a international mandate calling for it to cease and desist from pursuing plans to create so-called weapons of mass destruction (that is, nuclear, chemical, and biological munitions); and (3) it offered no assurance it would refuse to support terrorists. None of these factors, however, were new developments with the events of September 11, 2001, although the second and third were alleged to acquire new urgency at that time. The brutality of its leader was long-standing and did not constitute a factor directly related to the spread of terrorism. Iraq's effort to create weapons of mass destruction was being scrutinized by renewed inspections carried out under the direction of the United Nations and there was considerable doubt as to whether or not Iraq actually had such weapons. Iraq was not the only nation that could be suspected of supporting terrorists and the alleged link between its regime and that of terrorist organizations was never decisively demonstrated (and possibly could not have been). Iraq was not the only nation that posed problems for world order. It is not the only nation that has refused to conform to the mandates of the United Nations. Both Turkey and Israel, which the United States supports, have on occasion defied such mandates. The reason for singling out Iraq for aggressive intervention while not attacking other nations whose role in supporting terrorists was similarly—if not, indeed, even more—probable was never given definitive clarity. Moreover, questions have persisted as to whether the rationale provided for attacking this particular nation was based upon either the exaggeration or even misconstrual of evidence available from intelligence agencies regarding the extent to which Iraq had proceeded with the development of unacceptable weaponry. It can even be argued that Iraq complied, however reluctantly, with the international mandates placed upon it. Such questions have gained additional importance following the military occupation of Iraq because the weapons of mass destruction have not (or not yet) been found, and the premise that Iraq intended to use them has never been proven.

The impulse for taking military action against Iraq was very likely an outgrowth of a new policy regarding the use of American military power—a policy that advocates using military action to remove potential threats to peace and international stability before they escalate into imminent dangers. This policy, calling for preemptive strikes, works against the posture of restraint that characterizes much traditional teaching about when resort to military action is warranted. The doctrine of preemptive strikes tends to impel decision makers toward military action rather than away from it. To hold that military action should be used to remove dangers before they become major threats is to prompt policymakers to search out such dangers and deal with them as soon as possible. It inclines toward rather than discourages strategic interventions.

The Debate Over the Military Action in Iraq

Before the military action in Iraq was undertaken, several groups expressed reservations about its wisdom or possible efficacy. Early on, some of these doubts came from military experts—though those still on active service soon muzzled their views. Senator Robert Byrd of West Virginia attacked the administration's motives for the Iraq war on the floor of the Senate in May 2003. He argued that the reasons for the war were built on lies. Many international affairs experts, regional specialists, and international lawyers also expressed reservations about the intended action. Doubts about the legitimacy of this action were also raised by several nations, such as France and Germany, with a long history of friendship with the United States. Their opposition seriously strained their relationships with our administration.

The problems raised by the intended action against Iraq were aired at length in the Security Council of the United Nations in late 2002 and early 2003. As the Bush administration vacillated between wanting to go it alone and wanting the approval of the international community, it presented the Security Council with a clear proposal to be either accepted or rejected, rather than as a matter for the community of nations to resolve through consultation and deliberation. The signal was clearly given that a rejection of the American agenda would be ignored and the action taken anyway. The result was that a “coalition of the willing” was co-opted by the Americans despite strong opposition from many other nations.

Opposition to the projected action against Iraq was also expressed by a wide range of Protestant, Catholic, and Orthodox leaders in the United States, as well as Pope John Paul II. From August 2002 until February 2003 religious leaders appealed to President Bush multiple times citing opposition to preemptive military action, a fear of destabilizing the region, concern for the erosion of support for combating terrorism, and a desire to work within the structure of the United Nations. Leaders of the National Council of Churches of Christ, representing thirty-six denominations, called for restraint and a halt to the “rush to war.” The Moderator and Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) were consistent voices in the call for restraint along with the leaders of other so-called mainline churches. The appeals regularly asked for a meeting between the president or his national security advisor and leaders of the mainline churches.<sup>1</sup> Requests for such meetings were rejected by the administration.<sup>2</sup> For an overview of the opposition that came from religious bodies see Peter Steinfels, “Deaf Ears on Iraq,” The New York Times, September 28, 2002.

The extent and emphatic tone of these religious leaders were unprecedented in recent history. By comparison, widespread opposition to the war in Vietnam arose only in the mid to late 1960s, after the conflict was well underway, rather than as an effort to prevent military action in Southeast Asia from beginning. While the recent opposition to taking military action against Iraq represented a significant consensus among mainline religious leaders, that opposition appears to have had no impact on senior leaders in the Bush administration who repeatedly refused to meet with these religious leaders so they could present their concerns.

The religious leaders who opposed military operations in Iraq questioned the proposed action primarily on moral grounds. Some of those who expressed such opposition were leaders fundamentally committed to non-violence. Others used just-war teaching to substantiate their opposition. Such use is significant because it diverges from the way just-war teaching has been commonly used throughout much of western history. Historically, just-war teaching has tended to furnish the basis for supporting military operations, although during the twentieth century instances have become more frequent in which application of the criteria to specific cases has resulted in opposition to proposed military action.<sup>3</sup>

Granted, there was support from some religious leaders for the projected military action against Iraq. This high-profile support came from conservative religious leaders whose strength has emerged as a political factor since the Vietnam era. Some of that support took the form of enthusiastic endorsement of the administration’s plans—even, unfortunately, of suggesting that the Muslim religion is inherently belligerent and therefore a proper target for restraining efforts. Much of the support of that genre came very close to endorsement of a holy war, or crusade. But some of those who supported the planned attack on Iraq used just-war teaching to make their case.<sup>4</sup> They appealed to the same moral criteria as did the opponents of the action but came to quite divergent judgments as to their implications. One commentator has suggested that what has developed as a consequence are two kinds of just-war thinking—a justifying version and a restraining version.<sup>5</sup> This may suggest how indecisive just-war thinking may be in evaluating the legitimacy of particular conflicts.

The wisdom of taking military action against Iraq continues to be debated on pragmatic and policy grounds. Former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, writing after the initial hostilities had taken place, criticizes the linkage that was used to defend Operation Iraqi Freedom as a crucial part of the “war” against terrorism. She contends that the military action against Iraq has shifted attention away from Al Qaeda and other sources of terrorism and has focused attention and the relegation of resources on the nations designated as the so-called “axis of evil.” Secretary Albright’s analysis uses prudential considerations to make the case that the military action against Iraq was ill-advised and not essential to the effort to counter terrorism.<sup>6</sup>

The opposition from mainline religious bodies continues, as in a statement made by the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches in late August of 2003. The terms used in that statement include these words: “illegal,” “immoral,” and “ill-advised.” The action is condemned as “a breach of the principles of the UN Charter.” The Central Committee of the World Council of Churches brings together Christians from many countries and therefore is a significant barometer of the opinion of the leadership of the worldwide Christianity community, although many Christians in the United States disagree in good conscience.

Issues for the Community of Faith

The history so briefly sketched above raises a number of issues for communities of faith. The action taken in Iraq does not enjoy overwhelming approval. The responses to it not only show a rift between two approaches to world order in the society at large, but they evidence a division within Christianity itself between those who hope that religious faith can help to create world community and those who believe religious faith furnishes the warrant for moralistic efforts and even the unilateral use of military force to combat international malfeasance. How are Christians to be faithful in the face of this situation? Does any place remain for a significant social witness which policy makers will consider helpful and which is germane to the making of public policy, or must the vocation of Christians who find a particular military venture wrong be one of dissent and protest, of noncooperation and/or withdrawal? Will Christianity become deeply divided, either on the parish level or in the higher echelons of denominational and ecumenical affairs, between those who emphasize peace and reconciliation as important means of advancing the well being of the human family and those who advocate vigorous efforts to deal punitively with those who threaten that well being? Will all the thinking that has been done since the Second World War about the importance of international efforts to build a peaceful world—thinking that seemed to be enjoying something of a reasonable consensus—simply become one side of a deeply polarizing division that results from policies that favor unilateral domination of others for the purposes of ensuring reliable order and safety?

With these questions in mind, let us explore some possibilities for thinking that can get beyond destructive polarization. Clearly there is a need for some rethinking and modification of just-war teaching. It is important to recall that the purpose of just-war theory is not to justify war but to make war next to impossible. Just-war theory is a theory of moral exception—an exception to the fundamental Christian stand to be peacemakers. In its practical application, the just-war theory at times does not seem to provide adequate guidance for determining when military action is, or is not, morally justified. Clearly, there is need for constant rethinking of the theory as it applies to particular cases. What, then, in light of the action taken in Iraq, can be said about just-war thinking and its significance for making moral judgments about particular conflicts?

Rethinking Just-War Teaching: Last Resort

One principle suggested by just-war theory is that military force should only be used as a last resort. The problem comes, not with the principle itself, but with judging when the conditions it sets up have been met. There is no doubt but that considerable effort had gone into making Iraq change behavior before it was decided to take action against it. For months a mandate of the United Nations forbidding Iraq to pursue the development of Weapons of Mass Destruction had been in place, and economic sanctions had been invoked in the effort to enforce the mandate. Moreover, much diplomatic activity had been made to seek a change in Iraq’s behavior, including extensive use of inspections under the auspices of the United Nations. Both actions were aimed at bringing Iraq in line, requiring it to conform to certain expectations and demands felt to be warranted by the community of nations expressing its will through the United Nations. A judgment that these various efforts were of no avail was reached by the Bush administration. When the possibility of military action was contemplated, Iraq was given an ultimatum by the president of the United States (concurrent in by the prime minister of Great Britain) prior to the unleashing of force against it—but this was basically a unilateral threat rather than an expression of multinational opinion. All of these actions, in the eyes of those who favored taking military action, amounted to meeting the conditions necessary for “last resort.” Those who opposed taking such military action reached different conclusions.

Many of these efforts presumed that Iraq would change only under duress. Economic sanctions are designed to produce duress. In fact, they create a good deal of hardship on the civilians of the nations against which they are imposed. Although sanctions do not involve the use of overt violence, they do use force and they do cause harm. Sanctions impact noncombatants adversely and raise some of the same moral issues as strategies in war that violate the just-war principle of noncombatant immunity. Several of the nations which President Bush identifies as constituting an axis of evil have all been subject to such sanctions and few have changed their behavior as a consequence. Although economic sanctions have possibly been useful in other situations, the imposition of sanctions by itself does not satisfy the necessary conditions for asserting that all efforts short of war to solve an international problem have been undertaken. “Last resort” can be claimed, not only when efforts based on duress have not resolved issues, but also when other efforts to resolve issues—such as diplomatic negotiations—have been employed to the fullest extent.

While the practical difficulties in satisfying the condition of last resort pose one kind of problem, the move to a policy of the preemptive strike formulated by the administration and used as the basis for the military action against Iraq creates a very different premise for guiding actions. This abrogates the very principle that undergirds just-war teaching rather than merely asserting those conditions have not been met. The idea of preemptive strike is the direct antithesis of last resort. Just-war teaching is founded on the premise that the use of military measures must be clearly restrained and carefully circumscribed. The idea of the preemptive strike is founded on the premise that the shrewdest and most calculating use of military measures is warranted—and the sooner the better. The touchstones are victory and success, not restraint and responsibility. All efforts to resolve differences or to bring about changes in the behavior and policies of nations that might be threats to peace are likely to be cast aside before even being tried. The idea of preemption counters everything for which just-war teaching stands and for which just-war theorists have been working to make that idea more significant in international relationships. It scuttles every possibility of moving further toward making just-war teaching an effective restraint on unwarranted international combat. If this crucial aspect of just-war teaching is abandoned, what is to prevent the other aspects of just-war teaching from being similarly discarded? The implications of this shift are enormous. Military force will become mainly a tool of domination, carried out with power and arrogance even if claiming to be in the interest of advancing world order. Those who believe just-war teaching has importance for international affairs should vehemently oppose the doctrine of preemption.

Rethinking Just-War Teaching: Just Cause

Fundamental to just-war thinking is the recognition that the use of military action must be for a just cause. For a cause to be just, a threat must be real and imminent and the party initiating military action must have been significantly wronged or acting in self-defense. Although the determination of what constitutes a just cause has traditionally been made by a party claiming just-war legitimation for its action, the determination of what constitutes just cause has been moving to the community of nations, now most visibly represented by the United Nations. The charter of the United Nations provides for the redress of grievances and for taking military action in self-defense. When action to redress grievances is contemplated, a nation is to present its case to the international body, or when action has been taken for purposes of immediate self-defense, the party involved is to report such action to that body as soon as possible. Such provisions are designed to give greater weight to the claim to have a just cause. Members of the United Nations are bound by treaty to let their use of military action be subject to such review.

Normally the possession, or attempt to possess, any particular kind of weapon (conventional or mass destructive) has not been considered a just cause for war—neither in international law, by moral consensus or in any decision of the United Nations. Neither has association with (or tacit support) of terrorist groups by an otherwise internationally recognized government been judged to provide a just cause to attack such a government. Finally, though most citizens of the United States and other democratic societies recognize the value of their form of government, the imposition of democracy on another sovereign nation has never been regarded as a just cause for taking military action. These alleged reasons for taking military action against Iraq (several of which have not been entirely substantiated) did not receive the endorsement of the community of nations. Unilaterally asserted to be the basis for just cause they fail. By using them to forge a coalition to take military action without the endorsement of the United Nations the United States has spurned its treaty obligations and is considered by many to have acted illegally.

Rethinking Just-War Teaching: Legitimate Authority

Another principle in just-war teaching is the rubric that requires the use of military action to be declared by a legitimate authority. This can be understood as a simplistic legal requirement that certain proper authorities must make the decision to go to war—as though it has to be done by the king and not a subordinate minister, by Congress and not by the president acting alone. That, however, is a narrow reading of the requirement. A significant historical intent of this requirement has been to prevent private insurrections from claiming moral warrant. The use of force by an individual or small group against the larger public order is always fraught with the possibility of creating chaos. The requirement of legitimate authority seeks to avoid that danger. Even so, this requirement does present some problems. Stringently applied, it can be used, for instance, to preclude the possibility of legitimate revolt against tyranny. But more broadly understood, it would indicate that a revolution can be considered just only if it is undertaken as the effort of a significant band of profoundly motivated persons concerned for justice who are bound in covenant to one another to seek a larger public good rather than their private advantage.

Thinking about what constitutes legitimate authority should be updated. That authority should be as broad as possible. The unilateral use of military force by a single nation today is likely to be as much a threat and repudiation of the common good as the private use of military force would have been when just-war thinking was first developed. Military action today, particularly when that action is an instrument of policy and involves other parts of the global community, should be considered legitimate only if sanctioned by the international community. The present channel for doing this is the United Nations. The Presbyterian church has been committed for many years to the construction of international legal organization and standards.

The United Nations and the charter, which is its framework, are vibrant evidence of this important movement toward international law. Yet this charter makes clear that international law was violated by the recent U.S.-led intervention in Iraq. A brief review of parts of Chapters 1, 6, and 7 indicates the steps that legally should have been taken in making a decision to intervene.

In Chapter 1, Article 3, all member states agree to “refrain in their international relations from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any other state.” Article 24 of Chapter 6 of the charter states unequivocally that “Member States confer on the Security Council primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. In this chapter, the security council, not individual nation-states, is given the responsibility to explore all peaceful means of dispute resolution, and is accorded the right to decide what kind of action should be taken in situations that threaten international peace and security.

Chapter 7, which deals with the use of force, reserves for the security council the power to determine: (1) when a breach of security has occurred; and (2) what measures to take to remedy the situation. While Article 42 of this chapter gives the security council the right to decide to use force against a state if a breach of security is found to exist, the subsequent articles give to this council the sole right to put together a coalition of forces, whose plans for the use of military force are, according to Article 46, to be made by the military staff command. All military actions to resolve a threat to peace are to be taken, according to Article 48, by the security council, not by member states.

The strongest case for the illegality of the actions taken in Iraq by the U.S.-led coalition can be made from the terms found in Article 51. Cited often by political leaders as allowing intervention as a form of “self-defense,” the article nevertheless states firmly that measures taken by states in self-defense “shall not in any way affect the authority and responsibility of the Security Council.” Since the action taken in invading Iraq did usurp the authority and responsibility of the council, and never received a motion of support by the council, it is clearly in violation of the rules carefully crafted by the community of states to ensure the safety of security of all other states.

Just as no individual is warranted in starting a war to advance a private agenda, under modern circumstances no single nation should be considered warranted in unilaterally starting a war to advance diplomatic or policy agendas, even if those agendas are well-intentioned. In the case of being attacked, any nation whose defensive military action was accorded the approval of the international community would have a moral advantage. The decision to launch Operation Iraqi Freedom was pursued with the clear indication it would take place regardless of the feelings and judgments of other nations. The agreement of other nations was solicited but not regarded as constituting a condition for proceeding. That action constitutes a serious erosion of the governing premise of just-war teaching that requires the use of military actions to be governed by the authority most concerned for the common good. When the issue is global in its dimensions, the only legitimate authority must be international in character. Some of the most serious problems associated with the action in Iraq stem from the fact that for all intents and purposes it was an action initiated and sustained by the United States acting in concert with its self-interested partner, the United Kingdom, and other smaller members of the so-called “coalition of the willing” but was not undertaken with full support from the world community.

Rethinking Just-War Teaching: The Matter of Success

Another criterion in just-war teaching is the provision that military action must have a reasonable chance of success. This is sometimes felt to be an almost opportunistic provision—which may well be the case if by success one has in mind only the question as to whether or not it is possible to subdue an opponent in battle. But success needs to be more broadly understood—not as mere victory in combat but as a constructive achievement in the aftermath. Regime wrecking does not automatically result in nation building, and in the case of Iraq success must be understood as involving both. This means that just-war teaching must come to be understood, not as applying merely to the outcome of the immediate military operation, but as including necessary and important responsibilities for creating new relationships and new political order following conflicts.

There are grounds for doubting whether the administration entered into the conflict in Iraq with this broad requirement of success in mind. It was overly quick to claim military operations had been successful even when conflict had not ended and obviously before the political situation in Iraq had been stabilized. Casualties continue to mount, and much disorder is evident. Iraq is now the location of random and unpredictable yet serious terrorist activity, which the presence of American occupying forces seem unable to prevent (if, indeed, American presence does not attract it). It is also apparent that rebuilding the country and leading it to democratic order is going to be a long and expensive undertaking. Although the administration showed little willingness to have its projected action stayed by opposition from other nations, it has now gone to other nations seeking their aid in the aftermath. If this reflects a genuine turning away from unilateralism, this move can be welcomed and should not be dismissed as merely self-serving. It is unfortunate that it arrives so late.

Rethinking Just-War Teaching: The Matter of Means

Just-war teaching offers guidance for the use of armed force as well as guidance as to when resort to war is justified. A just-war must be conducted in ways that can bring about constructive results—by means that are proportional to the evil required to achieve them. Moreover, noncombatants are not to be directly attacked.

As warfare has changed judgments as to what constitutes legitimate means have had to be recast with the aim of keeping the means under controlled restraint and as low as is consistent with the goal of subduing an enemy. Modern weaponry poses these issues in new ways. Instruments of mass destruction—whether chemical, biological, or nuclear—create the possibility of means that are lethal on such a massive scale as to be morally unacceptable. Massive air strikes against centers of population pose similar issues to only a somewhat lesser degree, especially when there may be military targets that cannot be isolated for separate destruction. Just-war thinking has waffled on the moral issues connected with the use of such strikes—not least because any blanket condemnation of air strikes would only encourage the placing of military targets in population centers as a way of granting them immunity.

Efforts to make the use of air strikes more discriminating and thus render them morally less problematic have made some progress. So called “smart bombs” may be preferable to massive obliteration. The use of intelligence to identify military targets so that they may be discretely attacked has possibilities of making military means morally less problematic. The extent to which these developments have been significant in the war in Iraq has been a matter of uncertainty. Clearly, civilian populations have been injured by the conduct of military operations—whether more than necessary is a matter of debate. Many people feel that in the case of the invasion of Iraq by the United States there was not enough known about the location of civilian populations or its government leaders to assure that aerial bombardment could be carried out justly. While great care was sometimes exercised to protect civilians there was not enough known to ensure that collateral damage would remain minimal. Particularly early in the war civilians were grievously hurt, wounded, and killed.

Hence, some conclude it would have been better to refrain from this war than to have murdered civilians because of faulty intelligence. However, this is not a judgment that can be rendered with decisive certainty.

But we can speak with moral clarity about the matter of the treatment accorded prisoners of war. Not only just-war thinking but international agreements have been clear and explicit about how those who are incarcerated during a war are to be treated. Once unarmed, prisoners of war are protected by Article 17 of the Geneva Convention of 1949, which states:

No physical or mental torture, nor any other form of coercion, may be inflicted on prisoners of war to secure from them information of any kind whatever. Prisoners of war who refuse to answer may not be threatened, insulted, or exposed to any unpleasant or disadvantageous treatment of any kind. <http://www.unhcr.ch/html/menu3/b/91.htm>

In light of this provision of international law it is possible to make the moral judgment that the treatment of those incarcerated in Iraq has been morally unacceptable.

An Overarching Consideration

Behind just-war teaching in a representative democracy lies a premise so fundamental that it is not even stated as a formal principle. It is assumed that any action proposed will be preceded by public debate and that the reasons advanced for taking those actions will have the substantive credibility required to meet the requirements of open scrutiny. This assumption is indispensable to the principle that the cause for which military action is taken must be legitimate. No cause can be just if it is based on deceptive, fabricated, distorted, or even insufficiently demonstrated considerations. The burden of proof needed for taking military action should be rigorous, excluding both deliberate misuse of information (lying) and the triumph of ideology over reality. The import of this premise increases enormously when military action is considered for preventive or preemptive reasons. Conjectural assertions about the likelihood of a threat, however plausible, are insufficient to satisfy this fundamental premise. To discover after military action has been taken that the reasons given for it were not warranted is to undercut the trust essential for viable international relations. Misperception becomes the functional equivalent of falsehood.

Beyond the question of just-war teaching and international law is the fundamental concern for truth telling as a moral obligation. In his January 2003 State of the Union address, President Bush repeatedly raised the specter of weapons of mass destruction (WMD) in the hands of Saddam Hussein and the threat the dictator posed to states in the Middle East. Later, in a dramatic briefing to the United Nations Security Council, Secretary of State Powell detailed in satellite imagery, communications intercepts, and human intelligence a story of WMD production, deception, and denial. Yet months after these assertions were cited as the just cause for invasion, no significant evidence of WMD production and secret storage has been uncovered.

As citizens and as people of faith we must raise appropriate questions in dealing with the “facts” so emphatically touted to justify military invasion. Has the nation been subject to the misshaping, distortion, and twisting of intelligence information to meet predetermined policy positions? Were senior officials so focused on “regime change” that all potential evidence was molded to support the argument for ousting Saddam?

On the Question of Democratization

It is possible to raise serious doubts as to whether or not the administration understands the full dimensions of the task of creating a democratic society in Iraq. Most of its emphasis has been on destroying those who engage in violence. Even the speech of the president delivered on September 6, 2003, although calling for the long-sustained effort to bring democracy to Iraq, was primarily concerned to strike down opposition and thwart terrorist threats. The speech gave almost no indication of what would be needed—other than to free Iraq from violent threats—to establish a democratic society. The assumption that democracy will automatically flow in when oppression is broken and threats are subdued is woefully naive. Success in battle is—at the most—only a first step. Democracy is a unique achievement that is possible only when a people come to understand covenant obligations to each other, the need to abide peacefully with orderly determination of majority wishes, and when its members are assured of at least minimal conditions of material well-being. We need to have a much wiser and more explicit realization of what must be done to bringing such conditions to Iraq than has been as yet forthcoming. Moreover, the role of voluntary associations must not be overlooked. These are important aspects of a viable democratic society; and unless their role is acknowledged and supported, the possibility of creating a free and functional society will be scant indeed. When American leaders suggest “We will stay the course,” they should be prepared to indicate the complex and difficult actions beyond maintaining military superiority that are required to do that successfully.

Democracy is the government of the people, for the people, by the people, and it can be achieved under various models of governance (i.e., various constitutional, parliamentary or presidential systems). Democracy, therefore, is always open to the future and does not presume a priority that a nation will adopt one economic system or another. It would be a mistake to expect that a democratic Iraq would necessarily emerge as an economic ally of the U.S.—unless democracy means alignment with the U.S. regardless of the will of the Iraqi people (which is, obviously, a contradiction of terms).

It is significant that many of the opponents of the military operation in Iraq understand the need for, and are willing to support, efforts to rebuild the country and to prepare the way for it to embrace democracy. This may be an agenda that can garner the support of all groups and help to transcend the polarization that threatens to keep them divided. No previous position as to the wisdom of taking military action prevents acknowledging the immensity of the task of nation building, the sacrifice that will be necessary in order to come up with the needed resources, and the fact that only insofar as Iraq is brought into the community of nations without punitive and vindictive sanctions does such an undertaking have any chance of success.

Moreover, this undertaking must be planned and carried out by the United Nations on terms that are developed out of the corporate wisdom of all its members. The United Nations must not be used as a front for the pursuit of an agenda developed only on the basis of the wishes of the United States—or even on the basis of the wishes of the “coalition of the willing.” The result should not be expected to please everyone in all respects. Compromises may need to be made and working solutions pursued that do not conform entirely to idealistic hopes. Having been an agent of liberation of Iraq from the grips of a dictatorship does not provide the license to dictate how it will develop a more viable society in the future.

On the Role of Religion

Finally, any understanding of this issue must take into account the positive and negative roles that religion plays in the social process of a country like Iraq. It will take much sensitivity and thought to appreciate these factors. The place of religion in this situation is complex and cannot be ignored or treated superficially.

The diversity of religious expression in Iraq, including Sunni and Shia Muslims, Christians, and others, means that a variety of views are present in that country regarding the ways in which religion and public life should be related. The conflict between European-type modernization and Islamic traditions are not resolved and will not yield to easy accommodation. Listening to the complex and varied religious voices and positions in Iraq and encouraging the engagement of the religious communities there in constructing a politically viable future will be challenging and important work. The religious forces in Iraq are not agreed on a single vision for their country and are not likely to be co-opted to serve a specific political agenda, especially if it is imposed from the outside. The eventual cooperation of groups presently holding sharply contrasting views will be necessary for the success of any rebuilding effort.

One potentially dangerous approach, which would sow further discord and civil strife, would be one that supports the attempt to convert Iraqis to Western Christianity as a path to the resolution of the social issues facing Iraq and its people. We should be aware of those ministries from the United States and other countries that are now poised and ready to undertake just such a major effort in Iraq. Such an outreach carried out in a country, as torn and fragile as Iraq will be for some time, could easily introduce further instability and anti-Western violence.

To be successful in bringing a viable and stable situation to Iraq will require as much expertise, planning, and wisdom from Iraqi civil, intellectual and religious leaders, and from others of good will from the international community as has been utilized to undertake military operations. The task of nation building, or re-building, can only be accomplished at comparable risks, greater costs, and a higher competence than has been expended in regime destruction. The religious communities of Iraq have much to contribute to this process if it is to succeed. International religious communities, such as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), may do well to support the work of our Christian partners and the many other responsible religious leaders of Iraq in this work.

Terrorism uses violence to create fear in people by attacking unarmed noncombatants for political purposes. Ordinarily it is not a successful strategy, but occasionally, if allowed to persist, it accomplishes some political change.

The ultimate response of Christian people to terrorism is the response of the angel to the first two Marys’ fear on discovering the stone rolled back from the tomb: “Do not be afraid,” (Matt. 28:5). Faith as unconditional trust in God overcomes fear and is a basis for wise penultimate responses to terrorism. The fear of Jesus’ ministry led the political and religious authorities to kill him. The disciples showed fear, but it was overcome by the power of God’s resurrection of Christ and the response of faith in the followers who within fifty days received the gift of the Holy Spirit.

The immediate response to an attack of terrorism is to thwart it if possible. On learning of the intentions to utilize their plane as a bomb, some of the passengers on United Flight 93 responded, “Let’s roll.” Failing to secure the plane, it crashed near Shanksville, Pennsylvania. In an appropriate first response to protect others they gave their lives. In New York City, hundreds of police and fire officials gave their lives to save other victims of terrorism—faithful action combined with responses of duty to save other hundreds. Though fear was present, Americans worked through faith to overcome the terrorist acts.

B. *Definitions

Discussion of these matters is facilitated if we have a common vocabulary for describing various forms of violence in our world.

1. *Terrorism

Terrorism is best defined by focusing on the act of violence and its component parts rather than the cause for the action. As an operational definition, terrorism involves an act of violence, an audience, the creation of a mood of fear, victims who are not parties to the dispute, and political or social motives or goals. The challenge of a precise definition of terrorism is that there are always exceptions to the act of violence that demand moral reflection.

2. *War

War is a term that is used in many ways:

a. When used metaphorically, war describes an action undertaken with an unusual amount of effort or high resolve, as in the “war on drugs” or the “war on crime.”

b. When used more conventionally, war describes the violence carried out at the deliberate decision of a nation-state against another nation-state by personnel selected, trained, and equipped for combat.

c. War can also describe a revolution where organized groups of oppressed or marginalized people train, arm themselves, and fight to obtain their freedom from some form of tyranny.

d. War also arises from the traditions of religious groups—especially those in the Abrahamic traditions. Whether the term used is “crusade,” “herem,” or “jihad,” they are commonly referred to as “holy war,” carrying the sanction, not merely of nation-states, but of a divine power itself.

3. *Violence

Violence is a characteristic of human behavior found throughout societies and most visibly expressed in warfare, in several kinds of crime, and in terrorism. Although some violence can be the venting of anger or deep hostility, purposive violence has the intent to inflict injury on others to obtain a change in behavior that is not freely forthcoming.

C. *Christian Responses to Terrorism

Beyond the immediate responses of ministering to the victims of terrorism, burying the dead, healing the wounded or traumatized, and rebuilding what has been destroyed, people of faith are called to make wise responses. Christians need to ponder the message of attackers who are so desperate that they surrender their lives to kill others, supporting our government in applying just and legal measures against those who engage in criminal activity, supporting the use of military and police force to suppress terrorist actions within the limits of international law and traditional moral limits for the use of force. Finally, we must join in the never-ending struggle to provide help through just and sustainable policies and actions for overcoming conditions of injustice and human depravity. Desperate acts of terrorism are less likely to grow out of just societies where there is hope, and they can be reduced in this world by pursuing justice.

D. *The Church’s Confessions and Policy

Support for acts of listening, for legal responses, for military and policing actions, and for efforts of human development are found in Presbyterian peacemaking policies approved by General Assemblies. The Presbyterian church has long antecedents in its peacemaking work. These commitments toward peacemaking stem from Holy Scripture, from The Second Helvetic Confession (1561), from The Westminster Confession of Faith (1647), and from The Declaration of Barmen (1933). In the late 20th century, The Confession of 1967 articulated the reconciling work of Christ in a manner directly relevant to this “Resolution on Violence, Religion, and Terrorism.” Further development of church policy is found in “Peacemaking: the Believers’ Calling” (1980), “Christian Obedience in a Nuclear Age” (1988), and “Just Peacemaking and the Call for International Intervention for Humanitarian Rescue” (1998). All of these sources inform the background paper. Selections from the 20th century policies affirm the Trinitarian faith of the church in its relevance to just peacemaking as a response to terrorism:

1. God's Sovereignty

The Resolution on "Just Peacemaking and the Call for International Intervention for Humanitarian Rescue" (1998) emphasized God's sovereignty and human sin as the occasion for a just peacemaking approach that allowed within limits international intervention for humanitarian rescue. God's sovereignty calls for human order and rescue of victims from human sin. As God's sovereignty overrides all human sovereigns, armed intervention even by the well-intentioned is subject to limits of international morality and international law. Criteria limiting such actions were part of the policy. Terrorism is clearly illegal and immoral and violent responses to it must be carried out prudently and within limits spelled out in that policy and in the background paper of this resolution.

2. Christ's Call to Peacemaking

The Presbyterian church's priority for peacemaking was established in 1980 in the General Assembly's action, "Peacemaking: the Believers' Calling." Here the emphasis was on the work of the resurrected Christ for peacemaking. Three particular affirmations were proclaimed: (1) "The church is faithful to Christ when it is engaged in peacemaking." This affirmation recognized the role of the church in changing our "military might, economic relations, political institutions and cultural patterns." (2) "The church is obedient to Christ when it nurtures and equips God's people as peacemakers." This affirmation challenged the church to develop its capacity for peacemaking and called for the creation of a program to implement this churchwide peacemaking emphasis. (3) "The Church bears witness to Christ when it nourishes the moral life of the nation for the sake of peace in our world." This affirmation called for the church to act on specific issues of foreign policy for our day. The issues of terrorism and the role of religion regarding it have been placed before us today for our faithful response to Christ (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1980, Part I, pp. 202–3).

3. The Spirit Moves the Church

The Spirit leads the church to respond to terrorism, to discern its religious and political messages, and to think and act in a new way to the challenge. Through "Peacemaking: the Believers' Calling," the Holy Spirit who led the church to discern the signs of the times, promises fresh direction as we choose "... either to serve the Rule of God" or to side with the powers of death through our complacency and silence" (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1980, Part I, 202). One aspect of this fresh direction is for the church to engage with peoples of other faiths as never before in conversation, theological discussion, and actions for the common good. True religion finds terrorism and unjust wars immoral. Our faith teaches us that the Holy Spirit leads us in prayer, reflection, and action to overcome sin that leads toward religious or civilizational conflicts.

Fear of terrorism is overcome through trust in the sovereignty of God, engagement in Christ's transformative work in church and society, and openness to the leading of the Holy Spirit in facing new peacemaking challenges. It is in such faith that we are bold to give ourselves as peacemakers to overcome terrorism, its causes, and its effects.

E. On Religion and Violence

The Presbyterian church recognizes that religion is significantly involved in violence even while wise religious leaders pursue just peace. The history of religion is replete with acts of violence. Its origins and major religious symbols are implicated in violence. The church needs to confess its associations with violence and repent of its support for violence. Our faith teaches us that God wants humanity to be transformed and to embrace active and effective peacemaking. At the same time, violent sectarian movements within major faith traditions must be rendered ineffective by reconciliation, dialogue, and, if necessary, the legitimate use of force by the state and the international community.

F. The Immorality of Terrorism

The General Assembly proclaims as PC(USA) policy that our moral criteria of both just peacemaking and justifiable war (Helvetic Confession, Westminster Confession) find terrorism whether state, group, or individual as immoral because it wrongfully and deliberately attacks innocent civilians. It also condemns any targeting of civilians by military forces participating in wars that otherwise might be justifiable.

G. The Imperative of International Cooperation

The General Assembly affirms the imperative of international cooperation in developing and carrying out responses to terrorism. Whether responding to specific acts of terror or addressing the root causes of terrorism, the United Nations remains the international organization where such responses are best debated and decided upon.

H. *On Transforming Strategies

The General Assembly calls for less reliance on the military response to terrorism and a greater and sustained investment by the United States government in the transforming strategies that will address the political, economic, social, and cultural causes that underlie the resort to acts of terrorism.

I. *Acknowledging our Complicity in Confession

Our tradition calls us to confess our sin and acknowledge our complicity in contributing to the circumstances that prompt individuals to engage in acts of terrorism.

As a people who believe that God intends for us to live in right and just relationships with all of God's children, we confess the following:

1. That by our disproportionate consumption of the earth's resources, we have not always been mindful of the economic impact of our daily living on the lives of people in the developing world.
2. That in the export of the artifacts of our popular culture such as movies, music, and television programming, we have been insensitive to and destructive of the cultural norms of others.
3. That our support for military responses to acts of terrorism has too often been motivated by a desire for vengeance and not a desire for justice.
4. That we have relied on the military response to acts of terror without sufficient call for the transforming strategies that can improve the daily circumstance of life.
5. That we have too often condemned the religious faith of those who are different without taking the time to understand that faith.

J. *Relevant to This Time

In developing policies for particular issues, the General Assembly recognizes that such policies are important for guiding actions and that they should be open to modifications as circumstances and understandings change. The policies embodied in the resolutions that follow are offered as the most helpful judgments available to us at this time. They are for guidance as helpful and important, not as universal or immutable.

B. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy makes the following recommendations to the 216th General Assembly (2004), to the middle governing bodies, to sessions, to members and local leaders, and to the colleges and theological seminaries of the PC(USA):

1. That the 216th General Assembly (2004) do the following:
  - a. Approve the report for churchwide study and implementation.
  - b. [~~Discourage~~] [Disavow] the resort by the United States government to "preemptive attack" against other nation states as a means to deter terrorism.
  - c. Urge the United States government to balance the use of the military option to deter terrorism with increased investment in programs that can transform and reduce the root causes of terrorism across the developing world.
  - d. Hold up to the care of God and our churches all who serve at personal risk and cost to alleviate terrorism, whether serving in the armed forces, law enforcement personnel, emergency responders, relief agencies and workers.
  - e. Affirm that the just peacemaking principles of the PC(USA), as recognized by the 210th General Assembly (1998), are equally pertinent for addressing terrorism. These include
    - (1) the promotion and preferential use of nonviolent means for conflict resolution and change;
    - (2) the importance of human rights, religious liberty, and democratic principles as foundational to peace;

(3) the necessity for sustainable economic development in the achievement of just societies and the protection of the environment;

(4) the abolition of nuclear weapons, limitations on the development of new weapons, restrictions on the sale and transfer of instruments of destruction;

(5) the strengthening of international cooperation through the United Nations, including its peacemaking and peacekeeping roles;

(6) the promotion of racial and gender justice in the achievement of social harmony and prosperity;

(7) the use of unilateral [peacemaking] initiatives to reduce risks of conflict; and

f. Affirm the contents of “Respectful Presence: An Understanding of Interfaith Prayer and Celebration from a Reformed Christian Perspective,” approved by the 209th General Assembly (1997) (Minutes, 1997, Part I, pp. 434–40).

g. Encourage all levels of the church to establish supportive connections with American Muslim groups to enable “support systems” where the U.S. government is engaging in discriminatory actions against Arab Americans and other Muslims in our midst.

h. Encourage all levels of the church to support civil rights organizations engaged in monitoring the impact of the USA PATRIOT Act of 2001 on citizens and noncitizens alike, and to publicize abuses.

i. Encourage all levels of the church to advocate for the passage of the amendments of the USA PATRIOT Act that would limit wiretap authority, limit “sneak and peek” warrants, limit business records warrants, limit use of administrative subpoenas with libraries, impose additional sunset clauses on several provisions, and modify the definition of “domestic terrorism.”

j. Affirm the right of all individuals detained by the United States government to judicial review and counsel, on a case-by-case basis.

2. That the 216th General Assembly (2004) direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to do the following:

a. Send this resolution to the president of the United States, the secretary of state, the secretary of defense, the national security advisor, the homeland security director, the joint chiefs of staff, and each member of the United States Congress.

b. Send this resolution to the general secretary of the United Nations and to the heads of the delegations of the permanent members of the UN Security Council.

c. Send this resolution to selected partner churches of the Reformed Tradition for review and response.

d. Send this resolution to selected partner churches in the World Council of Churches and the National Council of Churches of Christ for review and response.

3. That the 216th General Assembly (2004) direct the General Assembly Council to do the following:

a. Direct the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program to prepare a study guide for this resolution and the accompanying background paper; distribute it to the sessions, middle governing bodies and their resource centers, and libraries of the theological seminaries; and place the document as a whole on the Web.

b. Direct the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, the Presbyterian United Nations Office, and the Presbyterian Washington Office to continue to monitor and report to the church on the most significant developments in the “war on terrorism” and on efforts to amend the USA PATRIOT Act.

c. Urge the colleges and theological seminaries of the PC(USA) to use this resolution in their study of terrorism and the responses to terrorism.

Rationale

Your steadfast love, O Lord, extends to the heavens your faithfulness to the clouds.

*Your righteousness is like the mighty mountains, your judgments are like the great deep;
you save humans and animals alike, O Lord.*

*How precious is your steadfast love, O God!
All people may take refuge in the shadow of your wings.*

*They feast on the abundance of your house;
and you give them drink from the river of your delights.*

*For with you is the fountain of life;
in your light we see light. (Ps. 36:5–9, NRSV)*

I. Introduction

This resolution and background paper have been developed in response to the following referrals:

- Alternate Response to Overture 95-36, #5(1). On Directing ACSWP and ACREC to Study and Develop Recommendations on National Terrorism—From the Presbytery of Denver (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 73, 684).
- 2002 Referral: Item 14.07. Direct ACSWP to Authorize a Task Force to Study, Report on Terrorism, Role of Violence in Religion, and U.S. Political/Economic Involvement in the Middle East; Report to the 216th General Assembly (2004) (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 55, 711).

The 214th General Assembly (2002) directed the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy “to authorize a task force to study and report on terrorism, the relationship of religion to violence, U.S. military response, and U.S. political and economic involvement that may contribute to global problems, and report to the 216th General Assembly (2004).” The assembly further described the work in this way: “A vital part of the work will be the defining of terrorism, war, and political violence and reviewing the applicability of the concepts of just peacemaking, just war, and nonviolent intervention in the context post September 11, 2001.” Therefore, this resolution is intended to provide a framework for Presbyterians to understand more fully and accurately the phenomenon of terrorism and its probable causes, as well as to make responsible judgments about the nature, size, and potential result of possible responses.

This report will focus on the role that religion plays in relationship to violence, most specifically the form of violence used to attack important centers and symbols of American power on September 11, 2001. It will also examine actions that have been, or can be, mounted to counter such violence and the role religion plays in supporting or challenging those counter terrorist actions.

The attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon (as well as the hijacked plane crash in Pennsylvania) have momentous implications for thinking about American policy regarding issues of war and peace, global economic development and international relations as well as domestic public safety. These were surprise attacks (though the extent to which they might have been anticipated is a matter of current investigation); they employed methods that violated important canons of international morality; they were done by people who did not identify themselves, they attacked symbolic as well as functional centers of both civilian and military operations; and, they were theatrical actions of unprecedented scope. All of these factors differentiate them from traditional warfare as carried on between sovereign nation states. It is generally assumed that religion was a factor in the motivation of those who carried them out. Although terrorist attacks have been occurring across the world for decades, having the attacks hit home in America jarred us out of our complacency. They should lead to, not merely responsive actions, but careful rethinking of many questions about the stance that religious faith should have toward the uses of violence for political purposes, including the use of violence for purposes of combating terrorism as a form of violence.

We realize that religion, historically, has been used both to resist and transform violence and to instigate and justify it. Further, we can see that faithful followers of all religions must confront the violence around them and in their own lives, including that violence that is woven into the very fabric of religion itself. The scriptures of many religions include descriptions of violence undertaken by the faithful, as well as depictions of divine violence (e.g., the ten plagues God visited on the Egyptians in the Exodus narrative, and Jesus' acceptance of death on the cross in the Gospels). Human sinfulness involves all of us in violence and in the struggle to find ways to deal with violence rooted in our own religious traditions. For Christians, God's resurrection of Jesus represents the ultimate triumph over the forces of violence and death. In Christ, the path of reconciliation is opened to use as the disciple's calling.

Throughout the centuries since the time of Jesus, however, the behavior of Christians has often not always contributed to peace. Christians have often blandly tolerated the world of violence and even made use of it in extraordinary ways. Even today there are Christians who employ, or would employ, violence to achieve what they consider to be important moral and political objectives—such as bombing abortion clinics to prevent actions that they consider to be murder, bashing gas guzzling vehicles to thwart environmental damage, or using military action to settle international disputes.

There is a deep and persistent division within the Christian tradition over the use of violence. Some groups eschew violence as a political tool; others have generally supported carefully circumscribed uses of violence as a means to combat social evils that yield to no other means of control; still others have regarded violence as a legitimate means for advancing the fortunes of religion or destroying evildoers. All of this means that the response to terrorism as a special form of violence must be made without the clarity and credibility that might be forthcoming from a more adequate consensus within the Christian community regarding the moral implications of God's work in Christ.

Terrorism is a vivid indication of the degree to which human interactions can be affected by sin. But terrorism is not the only form which sin takes; it is not the only form of evil. The Christian doctrine of original sin holds that all persons and all institutions fall short of God's intentions for them. While there is considerable difference between terrorist wrongdoing and many other political wrongs, that difference is a matter of degree and not an absolute contrast. In thinking about sin in relation to social and political struggle, Christians are called to ask how their behavior as well as that of others falls short of God's intention for human community. This means that we must examine our own policies to see to what extent they have been a factor in creating the resentments and the sense of despair that drive terrorists to their behavior. To use the idea of sin mainly to draw a complete contrast between those who are "good" and those who are "evil" is, ironically, a manifestation of sin in the most insidious form.

II. Concepts and Definitions

The study deals with several important concepts whose use in what follows deserves to be carefully spelled out:

A. Religion

Religion is the way of life of a community of people whose existence is shaped by beliefs and convictions about ultimate reality, particular understandings of the world and of human nature, and a set of practices both devotional and practical. Adherents of all religious traditions express their commitments in word and deed. Religious people orient their living toward a source of ultimate meaning, often understood to be sacred. Most religious communities have a collection of writings or stories that serve as a source of authority for interpreting how to live in their particular way. There are marked similarities and profound difference among the goals and points of orientation of different religions. One important dimension of religious living shared by all religious believers is the need for those living by a particular tradition to interpret and apply the insights and practices that they have inherited from the traditions to their own time and place.

B. Violence

Violence is found throughout human societies and is expressed most visibly in warfare, in several kinds of crime, and in terrorism. Although there are instances of violence that can be understood as the venting of anger or deep hostilities, it is purposive violence that is of greatest concern for this study. Purposive violence is the intent to inflict injury on others in the effort to obtain a resulting change in behavior that is not freely forthcoming. Some of the deepest moral disagreements within the Christian tradition revolve around the legitimacy of such efforts, especially when the desired consequences have moral warrant (as, for instance, in the case of self-defense or the protection of another). Some Christians condemn violence on the ground that any effort to be coercive is morally wrong; others hold that violent forms of coercion are illegitimate but that nonviolent action (sometimes called “soul force”) can be used to deal with threats and obtain social goals; still others believe that violence is sometimes necessary in order to exert the force necessary for the protection or enhancement of human well-being. Each of these attitudes toward purposive violence will significantly affect the way in which the problem posed by terrorism will be addressed and the differences between them account for differences in thinking about how to counter terrorism.

C. War

War is a term that is used in several ways. When used metaphorically, it describes an action undertaken with an unusual amount of effort or high resolve, as in the “war on drugs” or the “war on crime.” The conventional use of the term describes violence carried out at the deliberate decision of a nation-state usually against another nation-state by personnel deliberately selected, trained, and equipped for combat. Such individuals are usually identified by uniforms, take orders from a hierarchical command structure, observe certain conventions developed over the years, and can be ordered to cease the use of violence when the political situation comes to the point it desires such action to take place.

Another situation in which armed conflict is often described as “war” is revolution, in which organized groups of oppressed or marginalized people train, arm themselves and fight to obtain their freedom from some form of tyranny. They may not wear uniforms, though may adopt an identifying item of clothing. They may also resort to unconventional forms of violence in the face of the superior force of their oppressors. Furthermore, they do not have any officially sanctioned legitimacy of the kind described in the traditional rules of military engagement. On the other hand, they usually have a command structure, training camps, and other features of traditional armies. While those in power often characterize such initiatives as “terrorism,” they are “wars of liberation” to those who initiate them.

Still another use of the term “war” arises out of the traditions of certain religious groups, especially those in the Abrahamic tradition. Whether the term used is “crusade,” “herem,” or “jihad” they are commonly referred to as “holy war,” carrying the sanction, not merely of nation-states, but of a divine power itself.

D. Terrorism

Too often the word “terrorism” is applied in a pejorative fashion, attached as a label to those groups or individuals whose political objective someone finds objectionable. In order to develop a policy to respond to this phenomenon, we must first establish a workable and useful idea of what terrorism is—useful in that it has sufficient precision to allow us to identify the phenomenon when it occurs, and workable in that it is acceptable to us as a Christian community. Terrorism is best defined by focusing on the act rather than the cause.

While it has not yet been possible to create a universally acceptable definition of “terrorism,” it is both possible and necessary to specify certain features common to the phenomenon. Acts possessing all of these features could then be identified as acts of “terrorism” with some consistency. Without falling into the political quagmire of attempting to label individuals, groups, or governments as “terrorists,” certain types of actions could be identified consistently as “terrorism,” regardless of who commits them, and no matter the nature of the cause for which they are committed.

A working concept of terrorism must, of necessity, be focused but flexible. The operational definition fairly widely accepted today defines terrorism as a synthesis of crime and theater, a dramatization of the most proscribed kind of violence—that which is perpetrated on innocent victims—played before an audience in the hope of creating a mood of fear, for political or social purposes. There are, in this definition, a number of crucial components. Terrorism, by this definition, involves an act of violence, an audience, the creation of a mood of fear, victims who are not parties to the dispute, and political or social motives or goals. Each of these elements deserves some clarification.

First, it is important to note that terrorism involves some form of violence or credible threat of violence. Sit-ins, protest marches, picket lines, and other similar forms of protest, no matter how disruptive, are not terrorist acts. Violence, or threats that demonstrate a capacity and willingness to commit violence, are essential to terrorism. The violence need not be fully perpetrated—that is, the bomb need not be detonated or all of the citizens of a village killed—in order for the act to be considered “terrorism.” But the capacity and the willingness to commit a violent act must be present.

This means that the perception of an audience that there is a potential for violence is crucial to classifying an act as “terrorism.” Terrorism is, essentially, a crime of theater, an act played before an audience, designed to call attention to a situation through shock, producing reactions of outrage and horror by doing the unthinkable without apology or remorse. Unlike similar acts of violence in war that aim to destroy the sources of danger, terrorists acts are often only tangentially related to the ends sought. They are simply crafted to create a mood of fear and to demand attention to an issue or cause. This theatric horror is also to be witnessed by the constituency that terrorists claim they represent. Terrorists hope that the injuries, fears and life disruption caused by their attacks will promote their message and give them political legitimacy. They hope such reactions will consolidate even more support for their cause, and more importantly encourage more individuals to join their ranks.

This mood may not be created merely as a result of the numbers of casualties caused by the act of violence. While the number of people killed in the attacks on September 11, 2001 was appalling, it was the nature of the victims of those acts that earned the opprobrium of “terrorism” for those events. Automobile accidents cause greater numbers of injuries and deaths each year in the United States, without generating the mood of terror that swept the country in the wake of 9/11. Instead, the individuals who died in the Trade Towers were assumed not to be guilty of any particular crimes nor engaged in any military operations. They were only in the wrong place at the wrong time—civilian noncombatants who lost their lives in a totally unpredictable act of violence. Therefore, their deaths terrified a nation because they were unexpected and uncalled for.

Terrorism is thus distinguished from guerilla warfare since it consists of deliberate attacks upon persons who are not parties to the conflict (that is, who are bystanders), and because of the separation of the victims from the ultimate goal of the perpetrators. Unlike the soldier, the guerilla fighter, or the revolutionary, an individual committing a terrorist act is often in the paradoxical position of undertaking actions the immediate physical consequences of which are not of particular interest to him or to her. While someone committing an ordinary murder will kill someone because he or she wants the person to be dead, an individual engaged in an act of terrorism will shoot someone even though it is a matter of complete indifference to him whether that person lives or dies. It was not the individuals in the Trade Towers who were the specific object of the perpetrators rage. They were only in the wrong place when the attacks occurred, and their deaths were necessary to create the mood of fear and send a warning message.

Put more simply, the difference between terrorist acts and many crimes and the activities of warfare is that terrorist acts are perpetrated deliberately upon third parties in an effort to coerce a second party or persons into some desired political or social course of action. Victims are chosen, not primarily because of their personal stance (in terms of membership in opposing military or governmental groups), but because their deaths or injuries will so shock the public that concessions can be obtained in order to avoid a recurrence of the incident. The laws of war permit waging war between armies, within certain humanitarian limits. Even for enemies in a violent protracted conflict, some types of behavior (such as genocide and torture) are expressly forbidden, and certain basic amenities are required to be preserved (regarding such matters as the protection of civilians and humanitarian treatment of prisoners-of-war). Terrorist acts violate these rules in that those targeted for destruction are not armed military opponents, but helpless civilians. Rules of international behavior for warfare, particularly those that pertain to political responsibility and military obligation, supposedly offer significant protection to civilian noncombatants. Terrorism, in contrast, involves the persistent, deliberate attempt to harm precisely that type of person.

There is one further element in this working definition of terrorism: the political or social motive for the act. While this element is crucial to delineating acts of terrorism, it is important to remember that a political or social motive may be necessary but is not sufficient to earn special legal protection to such acts of violence. Most of those who engage in acts of terror today have genuine social or political goals, some of which may even be just—perhaps even laudable. But no goal, however just, can make legitimate the use of force that deliberately targets the lives of those who have no connection with the matter being contested.

III. Why Terrorism Arises

Along with the impulse to achieve certain political objectives, acts of terrorism often give vent to broader feelings and aspirations. We cannot ignore the conditions that motivate men and women to carry out acts of terrorism. These must be understood if we are to respond with a tough, even love-directed, concern for justice rather than with cries for vengeance. Studies of terrorism suggest that those who commit acts of terrorism are often alienated and de-socialized. They seldom get this way in a day or due to a single event (although if one's whole family or home is destroyed the response can be sudden). Instead, they have developed such attitudes over a period of years. This suggests that the roots of terrorism are very deep.

Terrorism is almost always an attempt to communicate a message. Acts of terrorism give expression to the feelings and perhaps even the aspirations of those who resort to this form of violence as a way to express themselves when they are not otherwise recognized. Therefore, whenever a terrorist act occurs it is important to ask, "What is being said?" Terrorism will be understood adequately only if that message can be discerned despite the shock created by the horror produced by the violence with which the message is foisted upon the world.

A. Political and Social Causes of Terrorism

A major theme in the message being sent by terrorist behavior is unhappiness, discontent, and frustration with many of the trends at work in every part of the contemporary world. But in the case of terrorism these feelings have reached a point of desperation and anger far exceeding normal responses. Through the financial and technological transformation commonly referred to as "development," the contrasts that once sharply distinguished the so-called "under developed" from the so-called "developed" countries are breaking down, but not always in beneficial ways. The transitions to "development" from "underdevelopment" often involve disruptions that disturb as much as they help. Moreover, not all economic development furthers the cause of economic justice. Affluent countries and transnational corporations frequently act in thoughtless and heedless ways.

Abject poverty continues to be the plight of many people. About half the people on earth today survive on less than $2 per day. The number of "have nots" is growing faster than the number of "haves," and the gap between them is widening rapidly, often enhanced by the process of globalization that has made the world a "neighborhood" in the technical sense but not a "community" in the moral sense. The development of more extensive international communication often increases people's awareness of the disparities that do exist. Disease, overcrowding, and hunger breed despair, anger, and hate. More than a generation of such conditions, offering little hope for a better future, can lead to alienation and ultimately to a willingness to commit acts of terror. Terrorism, therefore, while never justified, should be examined for the possibility that it can be a protest against the economic and social changes that are ongoing in the emergence of a new world. But alienation can occur, not merely among those who are economically deprived, but from any group that feels outcast for any reason.

Historical legacies have a dramatic impact upon contemporary economic developments—legacies that have included imperialism where the strong have been enriched at the expense and suffering of the weak. The historical process through which the world has been moving has taken place in three major waves: (1) the age of discovery during the 15th and 16th centuries; (2) the age of mercantilism during the 17th and 18th centuries; and (3) the age of imperialism/colonialism during the 19th century and the early 20th century—coinciding with the industrial revolution. Through this long history Western countries accumulated enough economic and political power to organize their own internal social, cultural, and political structures, and to determine and/or dictate how the newly “discovered” and conquered nations would organize themselves. Imperialism and colonialism have been ways of securing both natural resources and labor-power at the lowest possible cost (the corrosive attitudes of racial superiority and “Social Darwinism” were furthered as a consequence). The acquisition of colonies was important and beneficial not only for economic gain but also because it foreclosed action by rival nations. Thus, European nations did not hesitate to exercise violence against their colonial dominions but also against each other to secure their advantage.

Along with colonialism and economic imperialism went a profound cultural imperialism; i.e., the imposition of a world view in which Euro-American nations defined themselves as modern, history-making, scientific societies, and in turn defined the newly conquered nations as prehistoric, traditional, and superstitious societies. Western superiority was assumed and used as the basis for the natural right to civilize other nations and exploit the world’s resources to create a world in its own image.

The same ideologies that undergirded the self-image of the powerful proved themselves effective in disabling the self-image of colonized nations and peoples. The colonized came to believe that they were subservient to the superior Europeans and saw themselves as having at best instrumental value, while the Euro-Americans were to be honored and respected as beings with dignity. The colonized in turn came to feel that they were not equal and ought not to aspire to build a world in which they were equals. While it is not clear how much this has been universally true, such attitudes are being sharply challenged by the rise of liberation thinking.

The Europeanization of the “new world” was the product of the massive diaspora of ordinary travelers, merchants, explorers, adventurers and fortune hunters, missionaries and soldiers that settled in the “new lands.” They were the ones who exploited and developed the available material and human resources (which resulted in uneven growth and social inequality between the colonial powers and the satellite nations) and the ones who undertook the creation or the alteration of political social and cultural institutions which led to uneven power relationships among members of the ruling colonial power and native inhabitants.

Practices of imperialism have survived even where colonial relations have been eliminated. While most vestiges of colonialism formally ended during the period between 1945 and 1990, a form of neo-imperialism continues as Western nations (particularly the United States) secure wealth and power through continuing economic enterprises within, and political domination of, other parts of the world.

These developments, based on unequal economic and military power relationships, have increasingly encountered resistance. In some cases this has resulted in struggles for national liberation, which, while preferable to oppressive colonial rule, have not always delivered on their professed intentions. The hope that political independence would lead to greater social justice for most of their populations has not always been realized. In Central and South America, colonial dominance was replaced by control through a dominant class mostly composed of the direct inheritors of former European colonial rulers whose power stemmed from access to that inheritance. In parts of Africa, colonial dominance was often replaced by military juntas that came to power following the overthrow of the weak leadership that emerged at the time of independence. In parts of the Arab world, colonial dominance was replaced by royal families that gained power through the support of the departing colonial power. Many of the regimes that emerged have proven to be more repressive and violent against their own citizens than were the former colonial rulers.

Globalization is a natural extension of the imperial economic and cultural project pursuing the same goals of enhancing wealth, securing natural resources and cheap labor, enhancing markets and consolidating regional influence. The term globalization, however, points to significant changes in the technological, economic, political, and financial spheres and to developments within the communication and information industries that for the first time in history have created the possibility of establishing a world that functions as an organic community or as a truly integrated economic, political and cultural global village.

Those who control the worlds of finance and technology have reached such a degree of dominance that they are often able to override the power and limits of the nation-state. The nation-state continues to be a major political player at the world scene; however, its capacity to control and regulate the flux of international capital and to establish autonomous policies has been significantly diminished. This role is increasingly being assumed by transnational corporations.

The process of globalization, like all complex historical processes, is quite ambiguous, hard to define, and difficult to evaluate. It can be seen as a constructive and positive process that forwards unity and integration among all nations and peoples, and also as a process that has the capacity to generate greater wealth and additional opportunities for more people to enjoy a meaningful life. Furthermore, the immediate access to information that the new communication technologies put in the hands of individuals and social groups are creating more occasions for consciousness raising and for solidarity between groups committed to issues such as the preservation of the environment, arms reduction and upholding the rights of those who have been traditionally marginalized and oppressed.

At the same time it can be seen as the culmination of the inhumane and cruel process of imperialism. Transnational globalization raises the following problems:

- It gives transnational corporations the power to undermine local political practices and to disregard matters of social justice. Such actions can lead to social unrest that generates repressive responses, even the militarization of society.
- Its expectation of never ending growth may disregard environmental limits and assumes a triumphal and overly optimistic sense of its capacity to provide a technological fix to whatever social or natural problem might emerge, thus contributing to greater ecological degradation and depletion of scarce resources.
- It challenges and even distorts existing cultural and moral values. Matters of love, justice, and service to others take a back seat to matters relating to materialistic consumption and the immediate gratification and satisfaction of base desires and pleasures.
- And, finally, the quest, otherwise positive, of an integrated world community is impoverished and distorted by the imposition of a homogeneous global culture centered mostly on the mass-consumption lifestyle and values of Western nations. Transnational globalization is perceived as a serious devaluation of the plurality of values and meanings that define the sense of truth, of the forms of beauty and goodness that have traditionally given meaning to the lives of the many and diverse cultures and peoples.

The foregoing analysis of “what is going on” helps to explain in part the possible motivations which are behind the rise of terrorism in the world today. Much of the violence is protest against economic and social developments that seem threatening to large numbers of people.

B. Cycles of Violence

Terrorist violence is often but one development within a cycle of violence. Terrorists frequently claim that those against whom they use violence already engage in violence to gain their way or support their power. Most revolutionary groups assert that it is terrorism by the state that provokes, and by its presence justifies, acts of terrorism by non-state groups seeking to change the government or its policies. Casualty figures give some indication of the magnitude of the harm states can inflict on their people. In the decade between 1968 and 1978, approximately 10,000 people were killed by terrorist incidents by non-state actors. By comparison, almost the same number of civilian deaths occurred under the new military dictatorship in Argentina in just one of those years (1976–77). When violence is carried out by official agencies on such a scale, it becomes more difficult to consider its use by unofficial groups as uniquely evil.

C. Religion and Terrorism

There is often a powerful linkage between religion and terrorism. Today mention of one often prompts attention to the other. Religion is something that gives life meaning and purpose, even when the possibility of finding meaning and purpose in ordinary achievements has been cut off by misfortune and oppression. Religiously motivated terrorism connects the will to kill or the will to die for a cause to a transcendent purpose that is seen as connected with a divine will. Even though this connection is often repudiated by the majority of adherents of a religion involved, the drive that religion can provide to terrorism is formidable.

The modern trend toward secularization—which many foresaw as inevitable (even as potentially healthy) just a few decades ago—is no longer characteristics of a “world come of age.” Cool, rational, detachment has not proven to be a characteristic that necessarily promises to bring harmony and agreement to the political process or prevents emotive excess and convictional bias of a sort that works havoc in public life. A truculence and rigidity rooted in faith stances that claim absolute authority has increasingly become an aspect of public life in almost every part of the world. This development is often referred to as “fundamentalism,” a term that should be used with caution because it refers to many dimensions of religious behavior besides truculent rigidity and because it has a very specific meaning in American religious history.

The religious orientation that is of most concern with respect to terrorism is characterized by intense devotion that helps to justify, in the minds of its adherents, the use of violence in order to advance faith or to repress heresy. Religion is used as a driving force to maintain cultural cohesion and social unity in face of perceived threats from outside sources, often pluralistic and diverse in nature. When so exercised religion may involve strict adherence to dominant beliefs and morals. In doing so it draws sharp lines between believers and infidels, and may become an instrument of oppression. These trends have become characteristic of groups in every religion and have caused divisions that are often far greater within those religions than the differences between the various religions. Terrorism often develops when those who embrace such a passionately held and narrowly conceived religious stance feel it is their duty to attack (usually verbally but sometimes physically) those who embrace secularizing trends or beliefs and practices that differ.

One consequence that may flow from this development is a trend toward a religious domination of the political sphere. The separation of church and state is challenged on the ground that religion as guidance for moral behavior should be used to enforce certain norms and practices through available channels of authority—thus preserving traditional practices.

In Islam, for instance, the writer/philosopher/activist Sayyid Qutb has perceived the expansion of Western dominated market and political models to be major threats to the integrity of Islam. He and other radical Muslims see this threat taking place on at least three levels: political, economic, and moral. Their outlook differs in this respect from mere fear or discomfort with secular changes in that it makes resistance to those changes a matter of religious duty.

Among the developments feared by Islamic sectarians are political and social changes that seem to them to pose a threat to the doctrine of “Tawhid” (the belief that in the unity of God and the solidarity of the human family God is to be worshiped in surrender without reservation or rationalizations). In their view, Islam frames the roles played by politics and economics. To those who embrace this view, the continuing Westernization of Islamic societies is especially unacceptable. At the heart of this corruption, from the sectarian Islamic perspective, is the Western style of law and the importation of Western style democracy that undermines Shari’a (Islamic law) and justifies values that are offensive to God—such as portrayal of behavior considered immoral on public channels of communication and the opening of Islamic societies to market practices that promote usury and greed. Qutb and his followers call this separation of religion from social values a “hideous schizophrenia” promoted by the Christian West and lament its penetration of Islam.<sup>1</sup>

Among the moral issues raised by such Muslims is objection to the exposure of certain aspects of human life to the public. Some sectarian Muslims would also zealously enforce quite distinct roles for men and women in the affairs of society. These are convictions that place these Muslims and their movements in tension with other Muslims and Islamic society in general, and sharply at odds with dominant trends in Western outlooks, in which freedom of expression allows (perhaps even encourages) more openness in matters of dress and where the movement for equality between men and women in all functional roles has the support of huge segments of the population.

Religious zealotry is not found only in Islam. The same developments are present in most faith traditions in the world today. In the United States the “Christian Identity” movement, the Aryan Nations, and the Ku Klux Klan fear cultural change and strongly oppose religious diversity. And some adherents of these groups have resorted to theatrical violence to combat the “evil” they deplore. These radical “Christians” employ the same harsh rhetoric as those in other faith faiths who support terrorist means to oppose trends and practice they despise.

Few matters create more intense feelings than loyalties to land and place. Conflict over the Holy Land (and those regarding Ireland) may be among the most powerful forces behind the development of modern terrorism. The efforts, often violent, to establish a Jewish homeland on land occupied for millennia by Palestinians have long been a source of the resentments that lead to terrorism. Inability to resolve this conflict in its many dimensions by numerous diplomatic efforts has done much to create the kind of feelings that give rise to terrorism. Religious elements are very much involved in this thorny and complex issue, especially when political Zionism asserts scriptural support for its possession and control over the land. This belief in the divine intention to offer such possession is taken to be an unchallengeable promise in the biblical record that cannot be eroded by compromise or tampered with for the sake of peace. When demands of dogma foreclose the possibility of genuine interaction, the groundwork is laid for the use of terrorism. Violence may quite understandably arise from within a group that presently feels it has been deprived of the use and control of the land over which it has had a long period of recent control.

D. Resort to Violence: A Religious Dilemma

Terrorism is never justified. Nevertheless, as Christians we are compelled to understand it. The various factors that have been examined above certainly must be taken into account in understanding the causes of terrorism, but the analysis needs to be pushed even deeper, especially if we are to understand how religion—which normally teaches its adherents to eschew violence, and especially terrorism—on occasion becomes a very potent instigator of violence, especially when those adherents feel their place, their identity, or their community is threatened.

Religions have not been able to escape the moral perplexity generated by such crises. When what is regarded as most precious is seriously threatened, it may seem that the only available defense may require their adherents to violate a fundamental moral tenet such as the prohibition of violence. Sometimes this results in terrorist actions—an extreme response to an extreme threat.

In the case of the Palestinian people seeking protection in a land and state of their own, and fearing the overwhelming threat to life and livelihood represented by the Israeli Defense Force, many have responded with terrorist attacks. While religious sanction is often cited for them as “martyrs,” these actions are in fact undertaken in spite of the normative teachings of their faith, which condemn such violence.

Over against the Palestinians stand the Israelis, with an equally strong fear of their neighbors, yet with overwhelming military power. That fear becomes the occasion for justifying their campaigns of terror against the Palestinian population, obliterating villages and assassinating Palestinian leaders, in spite of the normative teachings of their faith that condemn such violence.

In a more extreme example, this rationale has been invoked by Osama bin Laden and Al Qaeda, representing their terrorist acts as the only reasonable way to protect the essential values of Islam—holy lands, sacred sites, and the practice of the true faith—against the destructive influences of the West.

The frequent resort to terrorism by people of faith for reasons of dire necessity demands that morally sensitive people think through the appeal of such exigencies as a basis for terrorist acts and examine mitigating circumstances in which terrorism may be understood. Is there anything that distinguishes the firebombing of Germany and the atom bombing of Japan toward the end of World War II from the officially sanctioned terror of the Israeli Defense Force or the Palestinian responses to Israeli actions or from the terrorist acts perpetrated by Al Qaeda? To answer these questions is a fundamental religious and moral challenge that is increasingly difficult to escape in light of the rise of international terrorism.

IV. Responses to Terrorism

Not only must the messages imbedded in terrorism be understood, but the possible responses to terrorist threats must be examined. The possible responses to terrorism are complex. For the sake of analytical clarity, four types of response are presented in the following discussion: military, legal, nonviolent, and just peacemaking. A response may consist of more than one type. Therefore, respondents to terrorism using a mixed strategy may find their actions in more than one of the four. They may also find themselves promoting strategies that in the abstract seem to combine suppressive and transformative approaches.

A. Attempts at Suppression

1. United States Policies

Since the attacks of September 11, 2001, the United States government has developed a complex series of interlocking strategies to guide the nation's "war against terrorism." The National Security Strategy, the National Strategy for Combating Terrorism, the National Strategy for Homeland Security, Vision 2020, and other documents outline how the instruments of power—diplomatic, economic, law enforcement, financial, information, intelligence, and the military—will be harnessed for the purpose of countering terrorism.

In February 2003, the National Strategy for Combating Terrorism precisely defined the objective of the U.S. response:

The intent of our national strategy is to stop terrorist attacks against the United States, its citizens, its interests, and our friends and allies around the world and ultimately, to create an international environment inhospitable to terrorists and all those who support them.<sup>2</sup>

Four objectives determine the direct and indirect use of U.S. national power. These are:

- defeat terrorists and their organizations;
- deny sponsorship, support, and sanctuary to terrorists;
- diminish the underlying conditions that terrorists seek to exploit; and
- defend U.S. citizens and interests at home and abroad.<sup>3</sup>

United States military responses have focused on depriving terrorists of protected territory from which they can plan, train, and launch attacks. Additionally, the responses have been intended to eliminate state sponsorship of terror on a case-by-case basis. Much less has been attempted to implement the third objective, to overcome the conditions that terrorists seek to exploit.

In October 2001, the United States and its allies launched a military campaign as a response to the events of 9/11 to overthrow the Taliban regime in Afghanistan and to disrupt or destroy the infrastructure of the Al Qaeda network of Osama bin Laden. By destroying training camps, weapons caches, safe houses, and cave complexes, the combined military action significantly disrupted Al Qaeda's ability to plan and launch attacks from within the sanctuary of Afghanistan. Current U.S. policy denies individuals detained as suspected terrorists any administrative or judicial review or counsel, leaving hundreds detained indefinitely without hope of case review. While bin Laden has so far apparently escaped, many of his top lieutenants have been killed or have subsequently been captured in follow-on operations in Pakistan or elsewhere. Despite this, and less known military operations in other parts of the world conducted for the same objective, terrorism has continued with high visibility and costs.

During 2003, President Bush offered many reasons for the invasion and occupation of Iraq and the overthrow of Saddam Hussein. Principle among these reasons was the need to prevent weapons of mass destruction (WMD) from being made available to terrorists. Much uncertainty has subsequently developed regarding the actual presence of nuclear, biological, or chemical weapons that could have been transferred to terrorists. However, intensive air attacks did destroy the terrorist camp used as a safe haven by members of Ansar al-Islam and the Al Qaeda network.

As U.S. military forces have engaged abroad in the war against terrorism, so U.S. forces have taken part in protecting citizens at home at a scale unprecedented in the nation's history. Since September 11, 2001, thousands of fighter and helicopter patrols have flown over America's cities to prevent the use of a commercial or private aircraft as a weapon. National Guard members have provided medical, airlift, and security support at state facilities. Reservists have provided medical, engineering, and civil support. And, in what has been described as "the most significant command change since 1946," the Department of Defense established the U.S. Northern Command with headquarters in Colorado Springs, Colorado. Northern Command's mission is homeland defense against military threats emanating from outside the United States and support to local, state, and federal authorities in their responses to terrorism.

In the wake of September 11, the employment of U.S. military forces has reached a tempo not seen since the Cold War. War in Afghanistan, war and occupation in Iraq, counterterrorism training around the globe, forward deployment of rapid reaction forces such as those in the Horn of Africa have significantly elevated the role of the military instrument of national power compared to other elements. Along with the new demands have come increased military budgets, both regular and supplemental. The fiscal year 2004 military budget request was $399.1 billion. By comparison, the military budget of the United States was more than six times that of the second ranking military (Russia); almost double that of the next six nations (Russia, China, Japan, United Kingdom, France, and Germany); or equal to the next twenty nations combined budgets.

2. Actions by the United Nations

The modern wave of terrorism has brought forth responses, not only from the United States government, but from the United Nations as well. The UN has and will continue to take a role in combating international terrorism. The United Nations primarily combats international terrorism through two of its main bodies, the General Assembly and the Security Council. With these two bodies the United Nations has created a framework of international law that defines acts of terrorism as crimes and obliges states to cooperate both in preventing them and in bringing perpetrators to justice. In addition to individual responses from each of its bodies to particular incidents of terrorism, the United Nations has brought together twelve major multilateral conventions identifying the crimes and establishing the responsibilities of individual states to combat acts of terrorism.

Since the 1963 drafting of the Convention on Offences and Certain Other Acts Committed on Board Aircraft, the United Nations has defined the specific responsibilities incumbent upon states in regard to terrorism. The conventions range in topic from terrorism occurring specifically on airplanes, to kidnapping and/or assassinating heads of state, to the marking of explosive devices to enable detection and identification. One of the last of these conventions deals with the issue of bombing, and the most recent of these conventions, the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism, came into effect in 1999 and explicitly says that those who finance terrorism are to be held criminally, civilly, or administratively liable for all such acts.

International terrorism has become even more an area of focus for the United Nations General Assembly and the Security Council since the events of September 11, 2001. On September 12, 2001 the UN Security Council passed resolution 1368 condemning the attacks. While highly symbolic, the resolution was nonetheless an important step in consolidating the international will to fight terrorism. On September 28 the Security Council passed resolution 1373 calling on states to control “the financing and preparation of any acts of terrorism,” and to ratify and implement all relevant UN protocols and conventions. The General Assembly also held a weeklong session on terrorism October 1–5, 2001. During that time, delegates from all nations had a chance to share their concerns related to the spread of international terrorism and their ideas of how best to combat the growing threat.

The UN conventions and protocols, along with the various General Assembly and Security Council resolutions signed and passed in regard to terrorism, have influenced the creation of an ad hoc committee to deal specifically with topics surrounding the suppression and elimination of terrorism. The Counter Terrorism Committee (CTC) was convened immediately after the passage of Security Council Resolution 1373. Taking its mandate from that resolution, the CTC is composed of the fifteen members of the UN Security Council.

In addition to the work of the CTC there are two international treaties on terrorism currently under discussion at the United Nations. The first is a draft Convention Against Nuclear Terrorism. This treaty, like the twelve extant treaties on terrorism, would continue and enhance what is viewed by many as the current piecemeal approach to combating terrorism. The second convention in the works is the Comprehensive Convention on International Terrorism. This convention would seek to replace the current topical treaties with one unified document. The American news media often emphasizes what our country has been doing to combat terrorism and fails to provide adequate attention to the work done by the United Nations.

3. An Analysis and Critique of Suppressive Responses to Terrorism

How are we as Christians within the Reformed Tradition, members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and citizens of the United States called to understand, to critique, to support, and, if necessary, to challenge aspects of these U.S. and UN responses to terrorism?

The U.S. responses since September 11 have flowed directly from the Constitution of the United States. In the Preamble to the Constitution, our founders stated that “We the people” share the responsibility of shaping our nation’s role in the world. “We” take on the responsibility to “provide for the common defense” and to “secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.” And, from that same document the president of the United States swears that he “will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.”

The National Security Strategy issued in September 2002 outlined the administration’s approach to international engagement in the post-911 environment. The topic that has prompted the greatest debate deals with “pre-emptive” attacks against adversaries. The document states:

... We will disrupt and destroy terrorist organizations by ... identifying and destroying the threat before it reaches our borders. While the United States will constantly strive to enlist the support of the international community, we will not hesitate to act alone, if necessary, to exercise our right to self defense by acting preemptively against such terrorists, to prevent their doing harm against our people and our country.<sup>4</sup>

Is the seriousness of the threat of terrorist attack in an age of weapons of mass destruction sufficient to move the United States to a posture of preemptive attack? In adopting such a posture, does the United States set an example that gives other states the sanction to attack preemptively to defend their national interests as they perceive them? Are there to be limits to preemption and, if so, how are those limits to be defined?

In developing its blueprint of how the U.S. military will fight and win the wars of the next two decades, the Joint Chiefs of Staff released Vision 2020 in June 2000. At its core is the concept of Full Spectrum Dominance, which is a reformulation—indeed, a sharp contrast—with previous policy.

The overall goal of the transformation (of America’s Armed Forces) ... is the creation of a force that is dominant across the full spectrum of military operations—persuasive in peace, decisive in war, preeminent in any form of conflict ...<sup>5</sup>

For the joint force of the future, this goal will be achieved through full spectrum dominance—the ability of U.S. forces, operating unilaterally or in combination with multinational and interagency partners, to defeat any adversary and control any situation across the full range of military operations.<sup>6</sup>

We have responded with the massive capability of our armed forces to the threat of terrorism. As the United States seeks allies in the global fight against terror, special attention must be paid to the sale or transfer of high technology weapons to states that, before September 11, demonstrated little regard for human rights or for controlling nuclear weapons proliferation. Uzbekistan and Tajikistan may provide assistance in the Afghan campaign, but what of their own treatment of minorities? Pakistan and India are embraced for cooperating in the war on terror, but have their nuclear weapons programs been scaled back or have they taken sufficient steps toward resolving the crisis in Kashmir? Adapting the ancient adage “the enemy of my enemy is my friend,” the United States, throughout the Cold War period and beyond, has supported governments where repression and oppression have bred terrorism. It runs risks when it does not carefully examine the record of those states that become members of a “coalition of the willing.”

Few people debate the requirement for a comprehensive response on the part of the United States to the rise in global terrorism represented by Al Qaeda and the September 11 attacks. Ours is to bring a Christian perspective shaped by the Reformed Tradition to bear on the nature of the response. The Reformed versions of the Christian faith emphasizes the power and sovereignty of God, the reality of sin in all human actions, and the personal appropriation of faith in its implications for the totality of our personal and social lives. For this set of convictions certain questions arise. Is the employment of military force balanced by similarly focused political and economic actions? Is the cost paid by U.S. citizens to defeat and defend against terrorism commensurate with the price paid in delayed progress in domestic education, social service, and health-care programs? Does making the response to terrorism a “war” open the way to emphasize military action and to forget the broader and more significant (and equally expensive) tasks that have to be undertaken to overcome the conditions from which terrorism arises?

The use of military force is insufficient to bring about a satisfactory end to terrorism, especially if it is employed without the involvement of the world community. Our faith points us to participate in a world community, where well-being and survival require a “world vision” and a willingness to work with the peoples of all nations to face common threats. It is imperative that the U.S.-driven effort to combat terrorism be truly internationalized by integrating U.S. initiatives and resources with those of the rest of the United Nations community.

The problem posed by seeking to counter terrorism with the model exemplified by the United States is that of creating credibility for the unilateral use of preemptive force on such a worldwide scale. The problem with efforts of the United Nations is an inability to muster sufficient impact to carry out its effort, particularly when support for such efforts is either lacking, half-hearted or deliberately undermined. Using force without sufficient international credibility creates one kind of problem; attempting to establish credibility without sufficient resources creates another. Acting alone the United States can create the force, but cannot legitimate its use. The United Nations may create the legitimacy, but in the absence of full cooperation may not be able to mount the logistics needed to make its role effective.

For all the counterterrorist work being done through the UN and around the world it is unfortunate that the international community appears more disposed to absorbing the enormous costs of conflict than to pooling resources for prevention. Reports from the committee of the UN General Assembly responsible for social, humanitarian, and cultural issues, point out that the terrorism branch of the Center for International Crime Prevention, the UN body most qualified to deal with terrorism, remains underfunded and understaffed. There is simply not enough money in the system and the effects can be seen in daily catalogues of underfunded UN appeals and in more serious warnings from UN agencies like the Center for International Crime Prevention.

Although there are many facets to what has been done by the American administration to counter the threat of terrorism, most of the nation’s actions are built on a model of war, albeit extended and intensified. These actions have been largely taken on a unilateral basis. In contrast, the efforts made by the United Nations have been built on what might be called an international criminal justice model. Such a model presupposes that the issues at stake are defined and adjudicated by the world community and that the force used is subject to the restraint exercised by the world community. It also, ideally, seeks to apprehend and punish the particular individuals or groups that are responsible for the terrorism rather than to mount campaign against whole countries or the regimes of particular nations. Because our goal as Christians is not just to suppress terrorism or to punish terrorists, we must go further and seek strategies that are genuinely transformative.

B. Proposals for Transformation

The foregoing responses to terrorism seek to curtail or eliminate terrorism by taking measures that deter its use by creating the fear of retaliation, punishment, and possible destruction. We come now to responses to terrorism that are based on a hope that by listening to the messages terrorists are sending ways can be found to deal with their distress and get them to desist from their behavior. Suppressive approaches do not need to listen to the messages of terrorists; it is enough to recognize their behavior as an evil to be stopped. Transformative approaches must discern the message, take account of the feelings that drive terrorists to violence, and work to overcome the root causes of the behavior rather than simply to repress it by counterviolence or the threat of counterviolence.

There are two major approaches to transformative action: nonviolent direct action and peacemaking (which provides for but is not limited to nonviolent direct action). Both seek alternatives to war. A difference between them lies in how they deal with extremely destructive conflicts. Just-peace advocates do not rule out that these crises may justify the use of military force in certain circumstances, whereas those who promote nonviolence, believing that military intervention will create further harm, rule it out.

1. Nonviolent Direct Action

Over the years there has been increasing awareness that nonviolent direct action can be used to achieve significant results in dealing with oppression, even aggressive threats. It played a major role in the process by which India overcame British colonial rule. It also played an equally impressive role in the civil rights struggle in the United States. Many of the things that the advocates of nonviolent direct action propose—attention to the root causes of terrorism, flexible negotiation, willingness to compromise—are best done before hostilities break out, before the cycle of destroy-and-revenge takes hold. In conflict, since the power of nonviolent direct action may depend upon close interactions between individuals in conflict, it may not prove to be a major answer for dealing with attacks in which there is no such personal interaction.

The working premise of nonviolence theory is that violence breeds violence and that conflicts can only be overcome by breaking that cycle. It reflects a recognition that warfare too often leads to more warfare rather than to the resolution of conflict. This is more than a pragmatic observation. The theory comes also from Scripture, from teaching about breaking the cycle of violence. We are admonished “not to render evil for evil,” but to follow what is “good” (1 Thess. 5:15). We have Jesus’ teaching that the “Son of Man came not to destroy lives but to save them” (Luke 9:55) and what is more important his challenge not only to “love our neighbors” but even to “love our enemies and pray for those who persecute you” (Matt. 5:44). This is a radical departure from the “take revenge and destroy” model for responding to being attacked. It opens up space for new negotiation and perhaps even for reconciliation. According to its advocates, nonviolent responses might induce terrorists to abandon their reliance on violence, when they find they cannot break the morale of societies by their actions.

Nonviolent direct action has proven effective. The Gandhian movement in India and the civil rights struggle in the United States are only the most famous cases where it has been successful. There have been many other uses of direct action. Among them are elections that peacefully removed military dictatorship, as for examples, in Guatemala (1944), Brazil (1985), the Philippines (1988), Chili (1989), and Serbia (2001). Long-standing armed conflicts have been resolved by negotiations, as in El Salvador (1992) and South Africa (1994), and the peace settlement of 1998 in Northern Ireland shows promise of finally ending that long struggle. “People power,” that is, massive nonviolent protests and general strikes, played a part in preparing for those settlements, and peoples’ protests played the major role in forcing the Society Union out of East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia, and Hungary in 1989–90. And in many of these cases, notably in the Philippines and East Germany, the churches played a major role.

Nonviolent direct action requires close encounters between the parties to a dispute. Unlike acts of war, which can use technological weaponry against others with whom no communicative interaction takes place, nonviolent direct action must be open and straightforward and carried on through actual interactions. Whereas in violent combat, stealth and deceit can be used to possible advantage—for instance, to destroy an enemy by surprise—they would be entirely inappropriate in nonviolent direct action. Much imaginative thinking is needed to develop ways to carry out nonviolent direct action against terrorists, whose actions differ from those of the oppressors against whom it has been successfully used.

Moreover, advocates of direct nonviolent methods of responding to violence urge training in conflict resolution, a step that may be useful in guiding initial responses to terrorist attacks—responses that keep retribution from being thoughtlessly hostile or even preemptive. It is important that peacekeeping forces, whether unilateral or multilateral, be especially trained for this dangerous work. We must have peacekeepers who speak the language and know the culture of the contested area, and who have experience in conflict resolution. An unarmed civilian force, trained in conflict resolution, may play a significant role. On a small scale, this is called “accompaniment.” Trained civilians interpose themselves between warring groups. Some pioneers in this approach to nonviolent direct action are Witness for Peace, Peace Brigades International, and Christian Peacemaker Teams employing groups of two to five persons. A new nongovernmental group, Nonviolent Peaceforce, is emerging to apply the same principle in larger numbers. All of these groups differ from UN Peacekeepers in that they are unarmed, taking the risk of injury onto themselves, to open up a space for peace. Who can tell what transformations might occur if there were as much attention and resources given to training in nonviolence as is presently devoted to preparing persons to use violence to settle disputes?

It may be that nonviolent direct action can be carried out more successfully by small groups than by nation-states. The efforts of such groups can take many forms, not necessarily only those of direct nonviolent action. For instance, third parties are needed to monitor elections, support fragile judicial systems, and possibly police public areas.

Nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) can work in local communities to bring about changes in policies and attitudes. They must work without recourse to violence. They can influence positively the behavior of many groups, those associated with governments and those associated with private commerce. Transnational corporations, which operate in many countries and communities, often have a negative impact on people’s lives through abusive labor practices, low wages, and environmental contamination. Their policies and behavior must be evaluated, not only by what they produce and their impact of the environment, but also by how they contribute to sustainable community and whether or not they undermine the dignity of the human person. When their policies are destructive or exploitative nonviolent protest can pressure them to change.

International and local NGOs play an important role in holding transnational corporations accountable to promoting human rights, labor rights, and environmental responsibility, which contributes to sustainable communities and a just peace. Religious and labor groups have been effective in Central America as monitors of factories in export processing zones to ensure compliance with core labor rights and the creation of safe and healthy workplaces. Individual investors, particularly in the religious community, have put pressure on corporations through filing shareholder resolutions and dialogues to adopt policies that are socially and environmentally responsible. The NGOs have launched effective boycotts of offending corporations and play an integral role in making sure responsible corporate social policies are implemented throughout the company's operations and supply chain. This can help to change the conditions that lead to the resentments that breed terrorism.

2. Just Peacemaking

A response to terrorism informed by the idea of just peacemaking could be even more proactive than a response informed by belief in the possibilities of nonviolent direct action. It would ask what initiatives could be taken to address the message that terrorists are conveying by their actions. Just peacemaking seeks to understand the world from the perspective of "the other" instead of from the perspective of the powerful. It seeks to root out causes of distrust, sources of anger, and reasons why people come to feel they cannot get grievances ameliorated by dialogue and negotiation.

In its resolution approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998), which considers the matter of humanitarian intervention, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) renewed its commitment to just peacemaking. It stated a number of principles that are equally pertinent for addressing terrorism. These include

- (1) the promotion and preferential use of nonviolent means for conflict resolution and change;
- (2) the importance of human rights, religious liberty, and democratic principles as foundational [to peace];
- (3) the necessity for sustainable economic development in the achievement of just societies and the protection of the environment;
- (4) the abolition of nuclear weapons, limitations on the development of new weapons, restrictions on the sale and transfer of instruments of destruction;
- (5) the strengthening of international cooperation through the United Nations, including its peacemaking and peacekeeping roles;
- (7) the use of unilateral initiatives to reduce risks of conflict; and
- (8) the importance of self-examination and repentance in international relations as steps in the healing of conflict and the promotion of reconciliation. (Minutes 1998, Part I, pp.75, 457)

The initiatives characterizing just peacemaking are most important for taking action before a conflict actually breaks out, but they are never useless. All initiatives designed to advance human well-being are significant for peacemaking. Over the years the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has called attention to the need for such initiatives, ranging from nonviolent interventions to military actions. For example, the 208th General Assembly (1996) approved a policy statement "Hope for a Global Future" which called attention to the steps that would be needed to create a world in which the needs and concerns of all people would be cared for in ways that lead to peace. The 211th General Assembly (1999) approved a policy statement "Building Community Among Strangers," which emphasized the moral obligation to combat racism, religious intolerance, and conflict. This document points to the need for people of diverse identities and interests to learn to live with one another. It is an example of a peacemaking initiative, even if it was not explicitly designated as such.

Just peacemaking cannot guarantee the success of efforts to change political, economic, and social processes in ways that foster peace and justice. But no efforts to better the human condition are ever assured of success.

What just peacemaking can do is to listen thoughtfully for clues as to what prompts people to threaten peace; imagine creatively how their concerns can be alleviated; and work, perhaps even sacrificially, for changes that will alter conditions for the better.

V. Theological Perspectives on the Responses to Terrorism

The various models and proposals for dealing with terrorism are each grounded in a set of theological claims, moral values, civic-cultural loyalties, and socioeconomic commitments. Any proposal for responding to terrorism should be taken seriously only to the extent to which it makes clear the fundamental premises in which the proposal is grounded. Doing this means going beyond defending any particular proposal for its utility in combating terrorism. Such fundamental premises—including faith stances—must be acknowledged for their potential implications and possible impacts.

A. Theological Issues Raised Suppressive Approaches

Both suppressive responses accept the possibility that force may sometimes be needed to preserve social order from destructive attack. In this they are part of a long tradition that accepts the possibility that military force can be used to defeat a threat. But that does not altogether resolve the issues, since that same tradition has elaborated criteria for arriving at a judgment as to conditions that must present for the use of force to be legitimate.

Among other conditions that just-war teaching has elaborated as a warrant for using force is the idea of last resort. According to this doctrine, all other means for dealing with aggression or malfeasance must have been tried and failed before the use of force is legitimate. Many religious groups have given attention to what constitutes last resort, especially as issues have arisen about certain features of American strategy in recent years. But the consideration always involves pragmatic judgments about a particular crisis. Historically, just-war thinking has generally been used to approve, not criticize, military action but recent thinking has now developed to the point that raises the possibility that in some instances the use of force will be considered as illegitimate. For instance, just-war thinking was either explicitly or implicitly involved in the opposition of many religious people or groups to extending the war against terrorism into action against Iraq.

Although the idea of last resort does not settle the issue in any specific case as to whether all efforts at avoiding military conflict have been exhausted, it does stress the importance of making such efforts and undertaking military action only for dire emergencies. The doctrine of preemptive strike that was central in guiding the administration, especially in its decision to take the action in Iraq, is a radical reversal and repudiation of moral teaching about just war as it has been developed through thoughtful reflection about such matters, especially in recent years. Over the long haul, the preemptive use of military action is bound to be destabilizing because it opens the door for any nation that sees fit to do so to make quick and sudden use of military action.

Another moral consideration that is advanced in just-war thinking about the use of force is the requirement that war be undertaken on by appropriate or legitimate authority. The trend across the years has been to consider the use of force to be legitimate to the extent that it is sanctioned and monitored by responsible political officials. All civil societies have judged the use of force by individuals acting alone to be illegitimate except for self-defense against a very evident attack. The restriction against the unilateral use of force by private citizens is the foundation of law and order. Societies marked by law and order restrict the use of force to specifically commissioned officials and even limit the use of police power to the apprehension of wrongdoers using minimal necessary force. In such societies only courts can mete out punishment.

Ever since World War II much effort has been expended to enlarge and extend the scope of authority in world affairs to the United Nations. Just as sovereign states promote civil order by curtailing the rights of individuals to employ violence, it has been the aim of this movement toward international order to curtail the unilateral use of force by individual nations in order to enhance world order. The progress in this direction has been slow, yet significant.

If the impulse to deal with terrorism quickly and decisively undercuts the efforts to extend international order, the consequences will be tragic and long-lasting. The struggle against terrorism must not become the excuse for treating the concerns of the international community as having no significance for shaping policy. No world order will be significantly achieved until the use of force can only be sanctioned an authority that is international in character.

One of the most radical aspects of biblical faith is found in the prophetic denunciations of God's own chosen people who are condemned for their own unfaithfulness and for their own failure to do justice and love mercy. The prophetic stance stands forever as a critique against any and every pattern in which any group claims the right to be master of other groups because its own faithfulness gives it the moral standing to do so with confidence in its own righteousness. This may not preclude taking actions necessary for the protection of the group's own life or even to protect the well-being of others, but it does rule out doing so in ways that overlook the moral shortcomings of the very group that takes such responsibilities upon itself. The normal tendency of people is to exaggerate the evils in others and to overlook evil within the self. Prophetic religion reverses this tendency by insisting that those who stand in covenantal submission to God's will are judged by even higher standards than others. Covenant creates the obligations of fidelity; it is misunderstood and corrupted when it is claimed to bestow righteousness on a people or to mandate them to be the instrument of vengeance on others. Any use of force for the alleviation of wrong that is carried out with self-righteous fury rather than a humble reluctance is a form of sin.

B. Theological Assumptions Raised by Transformative Approaches

The theological and moral premises that inform transformative responses to terrorism start with the conviction that no person or group is incapable of repenting wrong and moving toward amendment of life. Although there are differences between the use of nonviolent direct action and negotiations designed to achieve such transformation, both responses believe in the possibility that those who do evil can be led to change. No one can prove this assertion; it is a statement of faith—it is a form of that which must be hoped for, the evidence of something not seen.

This assumption is more significant for these approaches than is their repudiation of violence. It is the positive premise that gives these approaches warrant. History contains many cases in which a group once considered an "evil empire" has come to be seen as a legitimate partner. Therapeutic, rather than retributive, approaches to dealing with wrongdoing can work, though not without costs or uncertainty. The advocates of nonviolent action and just peacemaking believe that it is at least as legitimate to take risks and face uncertainties in the effort to allow others to change as it is to take risks and uncertainties in the effort to destroy them. Nor are efforts at peacemaking morally ruled out even if they are more costly than repressive strategies.

One possible cost associated with transformative approaches to terrorism might be having to live with the possibility of attacks. There is no evidence, however, that efforts at suppression eliminates those risks. The need to live with the possibility of harm may be recognized more readily by those who advocate transformative responses than by those who place their trust in suppressive responses. The nature of terrorism is such that efforts to reduce threats by the use of counterforce are less and less likely to be reliable. Terrorism may be sending the message—even if it does not intend to do so—that the use of counterforce is no longer able to guarantee safety.

VI. Counterterrorism and Domestic Liberties

Efforts to counter terrorism and its threat have consequences for the life of the countries that take such responsibilities upon themselves. The legitimacy of such efforts cannot be judged merely by the extent to which they are effective in stemming terrorism but must be examined for the consequences such actions have on people who undertake them. It is possible to endanger freedom at home in the process of seeking to prevent being destroyed from abroad. The current U.S. policy to detain indefinitely individuals suspected as terrorists without administrative or judicial review or counsel goes against the basic right to judicial review and counsel continually affirmed by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in its policies on restorative justice.

Among the responses of the Bush administration to the attacks of September 11, 2001, four aspects of domestic law enforcement and government policy bear particularly on the protection of the civil liberties of Americans and resident aliens: support for and active administration of new "emergency" legislation; proliferation of executive orders and governmental regulations and policies that expand the government's ability to surveil and detain suspected terrorists or subject them to secret proceedings; use of the U.S. court system for prosecuting suspected terrorists; and the development by the Defense Department of a special antiterrorism surveillance system.

The USA Patriot Act,<sup>7</sup> the centerpiece of the government's post-September 11 "emergency legislation," was passed on October 26, 2001, with the full support of the Bush administration. The act variously relaxes a variety of civil liberties protections for American citizens and for resident aliens, and as such is a very controversial law. Among other things, three aspects of the legislation are particularly troubling.

1. Arbitrary Detention. Non U.S. citizens may be held secretly, and virtually indefinitely, not for what they have done, nor on the basis of evidence supporting a probable cause that they are a risk to public order and safety, but typically for trivial offenses, and because they are regarded for some undisclosed reason as "a danger to national security."

[O]ur country now jails large numbers of people not for what they have done, nor even with case-by-case evidence that it would be dangerous to leave them at liberty, but only because they fall within a vaguely defined class, of which some members might pose danger.<sup>8</sup>

2. Guilt by Association. According to the Patriot Act, organizations can be designated as "terrorist" based on "classified evidence," which need never be made public because such disclosures might jeopardize national security. Consequently, noncitizens, and possibly American citizens, associated with such groups are liable under the act, if they have contributed money or solicited membership, unless they can prove that they did not know or could not reasonably have known that the group is terrorist. That could be impossible to do, since the reason the group is called terrorist can remain undisclosed!

[O]ne potential consequence of the Act could be to create a broad new definition of 'domestic terrorism' that could sweep in people who engage in acts of political protest and subject them to wiretapping and enhanced penalties.' This broad sweep of [the Act] conjures some scenarios by which entire religious groups might be identified as terrorist organizations and by which members of those religious groups might be identified without warrant as engaging in terrorist activity. For example, if two or more members of a church, unbeknownst to the wider congregation, conspire to bomb an abortion clinic, and in carrying out this act, a federal agent is killed, the Patriot Act implies that the entire church may be labeled a terrorist organization.<sup>9</sup>

3. Expanded Government Authority for Search and Surveillance. The Patriot Act enlarges the permissible range of government surveillance, while minimizing traditional forms of judicial oversight.<sup>10</sup>

Such secret searches were formerly permitted, pursuant to a special warrant for that purpose, only if the primary purpose of the search was to collect information about a foreign nation's activities in this country. Now they are permitted if the primary purpose is to collect evidence of a crime that can be used in prosecution, so long as the intelligence gathering is a subsidiary purpose, as it can always said to be when a suspected terrorist's property is searched.<sup>11</sup>

In ways supplementary to the expanded emergency powers granted by the USA Patriot Act, and that raise related problems, the U.S. government has claimed the right to relax conventional civil protections in relation to three specific areas: subjecting non U.S. citizens arrested for immigration violations to secret deportation hearings; indefinitely detaining individuals considered potential material witnesses in terrorism cases, and indefinitely detaining American citizens regarded as "enemy combatants" on the side of terrorists, and denying them access to legal counsel.<sup>12</sup>

There are a few encouraging signs in regard to "monitoring the monitors." A report sharply critical of the Justice Department and the FBI, as well as of certain corrections facilities, in administering the laws and policies adopted and applied after September 11 was issued on April 29, 2003, by the Office of the Inspector General of the Justice Department. The report found "significant problems" in the arrests and detentions of around seven hundred suspects, including insufficient evidence, "a pattern of physical and verbal abuse," and the denial of access to lawyers. Despite a rather belligerent and unbending public response by the attorney general, the administration has nevertheless agreed to implement nearly all of the recommendations put forward in the report.

Furthermore, as of February 2003, the Congress has determined that a Pentagon project designed to uncover terrorists by monitoring Internet e-mail and commercial databases for health, financial, and travel information may not be employed against Americans.

All the same, there is countervailing evidence that the administration continues to run the risk of substantially overreacting to the terrorist threat. This is made clear by the large number of lawsuits brought against the government by civil rights groups. For example, the American Civil Liberties Union is currently involved in more than thirty legal initiatives challenging the government's practices regarding closed hearings, surveillance, material witness detention, discrimination against Arab Americans, treatment of citizen detainees, search and seizure violations, and infringement of the First Amendment rights to assemble and protest. These cases will of course have to work their way through the system, but the sheer volume attests to the degree of apprehension in the land concerning the practices of the government.

In addition, the administration has a new proposed piece of "emergency legislation," called, Patriot II, which would further expand the law enforcement and surveillance powers of the government. Among other things, it would authorize secret arrests carried out in connection with "international terrorism." It would give the attorney general unlimited discretionary power to deport foreign nationals, including lawful permanent alien residents based on a judgment by him that such persons represent a threat to "national security." The bill would entitle the government to withdraw citizenship from people who belong to or support organizations designated as "terrorist" by the attorney general, and would authorize him to bypass the courts altogether in regard to searches and wiretaps conducted under Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. It would allow more intrusive wiretapping and Internet surveillance activities, and it would further relax the restrictions on domestic criminal investigations allegedly connected to terrorist activities.

VII. Faith for the Times in Which We Live

There is every probability that the future will be characterized by experiences of escalating vulnerability. That probability is consistent with a biblical worldview that assumes both good and evil increase in their intensity with the passage of time. The premise that underlies the modern belief in progress—that goodness increases and propensity for evil decreases over time—has been called into question by terrorism. This is not to say we are in the millennial moment when the final conflict between good and evil is taking place. To believe that is to open the door to actions that could have enormously destructive consequences. What it does say is that we should not expect to overcome evil by actions aimed directly at doing so suppressively—actions we might be tempted to make as surrogates of God in history. As the stakes get higher, the obligations of fidelity get greater and the possibilities of effecting transformation are both more momentous and demanding.

This means that in dealing with terrorism there is need for a heroism of patience that is just as demanding as a heroism of action, for a prudence of steadfastness that is just as important as the pursuit of expedient strategies, for a willingness to approach others in trust that is at least as important as the need to defend one's self. We are called to a discipleship that trusts God even more than to exercise a shrewdness that is founded only on what seems humanly prudent.

sense that is defined, then he may detain that alien for seven days with no charge. If the alien is then charged with any, even a wholly unrelated crime, and the attorney general finds that ‘the release of the alien will threaten the national security of the United States or the safety of the community or any person, he may be detained for six months and then for additional six-month periods so long as the attorney general continues to declare that his release would threaten national security or anyone’s safety.’

The Justice Department has now detained several hundred aliens, some of them in solitary confinement for twenty-three hours a day. None of them has been convicted of anything at all, and many of them have been charged with only minor immigration offenses that would not by themselves remotely justify detention. It has refused repeated efforts on the part of the ACLU, and other groups even to identify these detainees” (p. 44).

[The assembly approved Item 12-07 with amendment. See p. 74.]

The General Assembly Council, upon recommendation of the Congregational Ministries Division, recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) approve the following:

THE COMMITMENT TO PEACEMAKING

The 216th General Assembly (2004), recognizing the usefulness of the “Commitment to Peacemaking” to the peacemaking efforts of congregations, does the following:

1. Commends [~~those sessions~~] [the 4,723 sessions (as of June 4, 2004)] that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking[.]” [and the 216th General Assembly (2004) gives thanks for the faithful work for Christ’s peace by the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program staff and countless volunteers throughout the PC(USA) for twenty-five years.]

2. Recognizes that the office of the Stated Clerk sends a certificate of commendation to the stated clerk of the presbytery in which the congregation is located for presentation at a stated meeting of presbytery for those sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

3. Requests stated clerks of presbyteries who receive the certificates for sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” to present them at a stated meeting of presbytery in such a way as to adequately commend the congregation for this achievement.

4. Urges presbyteries to find ways to share and celebrate the experiences of congregations where sessions have adopted and implemented the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

5. Urges presbyteries and synods also to consider adopting the “Commitment to Peacemaking” in forms appropriate to those governing bodies and commends those governing bodies that have done so.

6. Commends the [~~seventy-one~~] [seventy-two] presbyteries and six synods that have 50 percent or more of their congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

7. Commends presbyteries that have 75 percent or more of their congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

8. Urges peacemaking committees of the presbyteries to contact the sessions in their presbytery that have not adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” to express the importance of this commitment and to urge their adoption of it.

9. Recognizing that the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program maintains a list of those sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” in order to serve them in their peacemaking efforts, requests that a report be made to the 217th General Assembly (2006) on the number of sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

10. Requests the 216th General Assembly (2004) to commend publicly those presbyteries that have actively incorporated peacemaking into their ministry, including acknowledging and supporting those congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

11. As requested by the 215th General Assembly (2003), the 216th General Assembly (2004) honors those presbyteries that have reached 50 percent or more of their congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” since the 215th General Assembly (2003).

Rationale

This recommendation is in response to the following referral: 2003 Referral: Item 12-02. “The Commitment to Peacemaking,” Recommendation 9. That the General Assembly Request a Report Be Made to the 216th General Assembly (2004) on the Number of Sessions That Have Adopted “The Commitment to Peacemaking”—From the General Assembly Council (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 16–17, 647).

Item 12-08

[The assembly approved Item 12-08 with amendment. See pp. 74–75.]

The General Assembly Council, in concurrence with the Congregational Ministries Division and the National Ministries Division, recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) approve the following:

~~[CALL TO CONFESSION OF PRISON ABUSE IN IRAQ]~~

~~[A RESOLUTION AND CONFESSION ON THE TORTURE AND ABUSE OF PRISONERS]~~

1. That it call upon the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), while recognizing the honorable performance of the majority of coalition forces in rebuilding Iraq, to join with the commissioners to

a. reaffirm our support for human rights and the Geneva Convention relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War;

b. explicitly reject torture and abuse as methods of interrogation and treatment of prisoners for they are inconsistent with the Gospel; and

c. acknowledge we are inescapably part of our culture and offer our confession in repentance.

~~[2. That the “Call to Confession of Prisoner Abuse in Iraq” and the following letter be sent to all Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations, middle governing bodies, and appropriate international partners:~~

~~[Dear Sisters and Brothers:~~

~~[The brutalization and humiliation of Iraqi prisoners by United States (U.S.) personnel has caused revulsion among people in the U.S. and around the world. In symbolic terms, it fans the fires of hatred for the U.S. and its occupation forces.~~

~~[The videotaped beheadings of [expatriate civilians] hostages have also caused revulsion. Their murders have fanned the fires of hatred toward Arabs and Muslims.~~

~~[Acts of violence by one part of the human community against another do not occur in a vacuum. They reflect larger cultures of self-righteousness, ethnic hatred, and, in some cases, even good intentions, out of which wars are born and in which brutality becomes the “order of the day.” God only knows where this inhumanity will end.~~

~~[As Reformed Christians, the lengths to which humans will go to tear each other apart should not surprise us Presbyterians. Long ago, our teachers who affirmed the reality of human sin—even “original sin”—reminded us of the way good people, convinced of the righteousness of their cause, may turn against each other with devastating results.~~

~~[As members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), we are represented, often in disproportionate numbers, in the seats of social, economic, and political power. We have contributed much to the development of the culture of confidence that undergirds this great nation to which we belong. We have been pivotal in providing the theological underpinnings of our social contract. Because of that, we must be constantly on guard against the easy shift from confidence to arrogance; from moral strength to immoral self-righteousness, from power that protects to power that oppresses. At the very least, we must acknowledge that because we are U.S. citizens, we are present in the voice of our president, our secretary of defense, and all those who speak for America.~~

~~[Many Muslims have spoken of the murder of hostages as a violation of the Quran, and express contrition and shame that these reprehensible acts were done in the name of Islam. Should we not, as Christians in the U.S., speak with equally contrite hearts to the people of Iraq, voicing our shame that their fellow citizens have been subjected to torture, humiliation, and death in the name of “Iraqi Freedom,” and that this abuse is contrary to the Gospel?~~

~~[Let us lift up our prayers for the healing of all involved. Let us say in prayers alone and when gathered, “Lord, have mercy upon us.”~~

~~[Merciful God,
in your gracious presence
we confess our sin and the sin of this world.
Although Christ is among us as our peace,
we are a people divided against our selves
as we cling to the values of a broken and violent world.
The fears and jealousies that we harbor set neighbor against neighbor and nation against nation.
The profit and pleasures we pursue lay waste the land and pollute the seas.
We abuse your good gifts of imagination and freedom, of intellect and reason,
And have turned them into the bonds of oppression.]
[Lord, have mercy upon us;
heal us and forgive us.
Set us free to serve you in the world as agents of your reconciling love in Jesus Christ.~~

~~[(Adapted from the Book of Common Worship)]~~

2. The treatment of those incarcerated in the naval base in Guantanamo, Cuba, and in the Abu Ghraib prison in Iraq (and perhaps elsewhere), has highlighted serious legal and moral issues that cannot be ignored and must not be allowed to pass unexamined. Violations of international law as well as serious moral malfeasance are involved.

[Such treatment is contrary to the Geneva Convention Relative to Treatment of Prisoners of War (1949), particularly Articles 13, 14, 15, 17, and 18. Article 17, Fifth Paragraph, provides:

[Neither physical or mental torture nor any other form of coercion may be inflicted on prisoners of war to secure from them information of any kind whatever. Prisoners of war who refuse to answer may not be threatened, insulted, or exposed to any unpleasant or disadvantageous treatment of any kind.]

[Objections to such practices have been voiced by lawyers within the armed services as well as by human rights organizations. Such practices have been deplored by a great majority of the citizens of our country, quite irrespective of their views as to the legitimacy of taking military action against Iraq. These actions have undercut American claims to a moral high ground and opened the way for enemies to maltreat members of our own society that fall into their hands. Moreover, they constitute flagrant violations of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, to which the United States is a signatory [<http://www.unhchr.ch/html/menu3/b/911.html>].]

[As citizens of our country, members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have been urged to engage in repentance for these actions, even if their personal responsibility for them is indirect and minimal. That call for repentance is an indication of the extent to which these actions must be deplored.]

[But efforts must be made to ensure that such actions are eliminated from future practice. This can be done only if there is a complete and adequate understanding as to why they have arisen—a matter of present uncertainty and possible confusion.]

[3. Further, efforts must be made to ensure that such torture and abuse do not occur in the future. To that end, the 216th General Assembly (2004) directs the Stated Clerk to take the following actions:

[a. Commend all who have brought this prison abuse to the attention of the public as well as all who have recognized the seriousness of the issues raised and the need to deal vigorously with the policy and administrative questions that are involved;

[b. Urge the U.S. Congress to direct an appropriate independent and formal inquiry to determine what led to these events. This body should have full investigative powers and issue its findings publicly.]

[c. Urge government officials to develop safeguards that will serve to prevent such behavior from arising in the future.]

[4. Write and send a pastoral letter to the churches, communicating the intent of this resolution.]

Item 12-09

[In response to Item 12-09, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See p. 75.]

Commissioners' Resolution. On Establishing a Palestine Working Group.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do the following:

1. Direct the General Assembly Council to do the following:

a. Establish a Palestine Working Group to develop strategies (in consultation with representatives of the affected communities) aimed at changing the conditions that erode the humanity of Palestinians living on the West Bank and in Gaza.

b. Ensure that the working group is not bound to programmatic or policy tasks, but rather, is free to counter the harsh realities of humiliation, economic deprivation, and collective punishment experienced by Palestinians under the occupation. For example, Palestinian contractors could be hired to build housing for displaced or disadvantaged Palestinians, medical professionals and mental health experts could be trained and hired from members of the Palestinian population, a business representative could be included as a member of the Palestine

Working Group, Oikiocredit could be tapped for help in small business opportunities for women whose husbands have been detained or killed, and other creative ideas for economic development and local empowerment could be explored.

2. Instruct the Moderator of the General Assembly to appoint the five-member working group for four years, at which time its effectiveness will be evaluated by a team of Palestinian pastors and elected members of the General Assembly Council, as well as the denomination's area coordinator to the Middle East. Results of its work must be measurable (for example, the number of jobs created, the number of houses built by local contractors, etc.).

Rationale

Our Christian sisters and brothers in Palestine have expressed a deep sense of abandonment by Christians in the United States as the Christian population is being decimated in the very birthplace of Christianity.

The support that does exist is often limited to statements that often do not address the basic living needs of Palestinians who are treated as aliens in their own land.

Our new moderator, Rick Ufford-Chase, has challenged us to go out into the world, not merely talking about our faith, but actually taking bold strides to act on it.

The General Assembly has joined with the World Alliance of Reformed Churches to declare that we would “cross ten seas” to bolster the fellowship of Christians worldwide, “that all may have life in fullness” (John 10:10).

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has long-standing policies supporting the right of Palestinians to self-determination. It has directed the Stated Clerk to advocate for peace. It has conducted travel seminars, urged its members to pray and to write Congress. It has put mission personnel in place.

However, there are limited concrete ways of addressing basic unmet needs in a situation that is rapidly deteriorating. The church has demonstrated a desire to open itself to new ways of hearing and responding to the needs of persons in the world, and there is a need to respond in untraditional ways, “to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace” (The Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, 10.4, lines 70–71).

The study and reflection guide approved by the 211th General Assembly (1999), called “Transforming Churches and Society Through Encounters with New Neighbors,” calls churches and Christians to seek justice for refugees and asylum seekers, and to advocate for the rights of displaced persons. The United Nations “Universal Declaration of Human Rights” has also affirmed that everyone has the right to leave and return to their own country, to claim their own nationality, and to have a standard of living within their homeland adequate to support themselves and their families. The Reverend Mitri Raheb, in his book I Am a Palestinian Christian, has clearly articulated the plight of the Palestinian Christian community, which is being decimated by emigration (55 percent or 175,000 of the Palestinian Christians reside in the diaspora, compared to 145,000 still living in Palestine). Once having left, they are often denied the right to return, losing their right to a homeland.

There have been other successful models of proactive actions that has resulted in concrete, measurable improvement in the midst of devastating conflict (see, for example, the approach taken by the Northern Ireland Working Group in recruiting businesses to invest in the troubled cities in the 1990s, thereby bringing economic progress for these communities and hope as well as jobs for their residents).

For further information from the perspective of a Palestinian Christian, we commend to the committee assigned to study this resolution and the General Assembly the book referenced above by Rev. Raheb (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress Press, 1995).

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 12-09

Comment on Item 12-09—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council affirms the spirit of the Item 12-09, “On Establishing a Palestine Working Group,” and suggests that it be answered with an alternate resolution as follows:

“In response to Item 12-09, that the 216th General Assembly (2004) approve the following resolution:

“1. Direct that the formation of a Worldwide Ministries Division-related Palestine Mission Network move forward as soon as possible, for the purpose of creating currents of wider and deeper Presbyterian involvement with Palestinian partners, aimed at demonstrating solidarity and changing the conditions that erode the humanity of Palestinians living in Jerusalem, the West Bank and Gaza.

“2. Authorize a feasibility study to be conducted by the Worldwide Ministries Division (WMD) of the General Assembly Council to explore the dimensions, costs, appropriate development approach, stability of political conditions, availability of expertise, and possible sources of funding, of an intentional and systematic effort of development and compassionate action in Palestine either by or through a team connected to the WMD-related Palestine Mission Network, and to make recommendations to the General Assembly Council at its fall meeting in 2005.”

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Calling on the Stated Clerk to Justify His Endorsement of the World Council of Churches and Reviewing PC(USA) Relationship with the World Council of Churches.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) do the following:

[The assembly disapproved Item 12-10, Recommendation 1. See p. 76.]

1. Call the Stated Clerk, the Reverend Clifton Kirkpatrick, to define the intention of the World Council of Churches’ (WCC) request to “prosecute,” to discuss the relevant Scriptures, confessions, General Assembly Council (GAC) directives, and General Assembly statements in justifying his endorsement, and to defend his authority as Stated Clerk to make such endorsements that are contrary to the stated position of the General Assembly in regards to Item 12-08 of the 215th General Assembly (2003) of the PC(USA) (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 656ff).

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-12, Recommendation 2. See p. 21. (Note: This recommendation was sent to 6 Assembly Committee on Catholicity and Ecumenical Relations as Item 06-12.)]

2. Review the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) relationship with the World Council of Churches at each General Assembly through the committee charged with that work to ensure the WWC’s actions and positions more closely represent those of the majority of PC(USA). [Note: This recommendation was sent to 06 Assembly Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations as Item 06-12.]

Rationale

The 215th General Assembly (2003) of the PC(USA) approved the statement entitled “Iraq and Beyond” as a resource for study and reflection; and acknowledged that there are ongoing disagreements regarding the war and urges tolerance for differing opinions.

“Iraq and Beyond” clearly states that the position of the PC(USA) is “to encourage a process of reflection, discussion, and understanding ...” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 656). [Editor’s Note: This quote originally came from a statement of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, which followed the recommendation section and was rationale for writing “Iraq and Beyond.” That statement reads as follows: “The U.S.-led war against Iraq, the motives, dynamics, and process leading up to it, and the consequences that will flow from it have presented our church and its members with serious issues around which much reflection, theological debate, and prayerful discussion is yet to be done. To encourage a process of reflection, discussion, and understanding, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy made the above recommendations.”]

“Iraq and Beyond” explains that, “The church must urge every jurisdiction within the land, from the federal government to the local governing body, to make every effort to protect the right of disagreement, to sustain the civility of policy debate, and to tolerate demonstrations in support of all viewpoints” (Ibid, p. 658).

“Iraq and Beyond” goes further to say, “The anguish of those who feel that this war is unjustifiable and the conviction of those who support the war must be acknowledged as legitimate moral responses that should not be condemned” (Ibid).

“Iraq and Beyond” emphasizes the need for continued debate on differences of moral judgment regarding U.S. military doctrine “with poise and graceful thoughtfulness.”

“Iraq and Beyond” warns of tabling debate “for the sake of maintaining an assumed sense of peace,” which is contrary to “American political, social, and religious life.”

In contrast, the World Council of Churches issued a “Statement on Iraq,” which clearly states that the war was an “immoral” and “illegal resort to war.” Additionally, the WCC’s “Statement on Iraq” calls for the United Nations to “promptly investigate” and “prosecute” the democratically elected officials of the coalition forces in Iraq. Finally note, the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, the Reverend Clifton Kirkpatrick, endorsed the WCC’s “Statement on Iraq” during the 8/26/03–9/6/03 meeting of the WCC without the consent of the General Assembly or in consultation with it’s council.

Item 12-Info

Worldwide Ministries Division Report Without Recommendations on Peace and Reunification of Korea

In response to the 215th General Assembly (2003)’s “A Joint Statement on Peace and Reunification of Korea” by the Presbyterian Church of Korea, the Presbyterian Church in the Republic of Korea, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) area coordinator for East Asia and the Pacific took the following actions:

- The area coordinator made a trip to the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea (North Korea) and shared the joint statement with the leaders of the Korean Christian Federation in North Korea.
- The area coordinator attended the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Korea (South Korea) and expressed gratitude that our two churches could speak with one voice on the important issues of peace and reunification with one voice.
- The area coordinator shared the statement with ecumenical partners from around the world at a Church World Service and the National Council of Churches in the U.S.A Peace Conference in Washington, D.C.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) supported medical and food aid to children who are suffering from famine and malnutrition with 3,650,000 bowls of noodles; The Presbyterian Church of Korea helped to build a new theological seminary building in Pyongyang, North Korea, and participated in the dedication service. Our partner churches in South Korea, the Presbyterian Church of Korea, and the Presbyterian Church in the Republic of Korea, are calling for a Peace and Mission Conference to be held in Seoul in the Spring of 2004 with North Korean Christian partners and ecumenical partners around the world.

On Expressing Our Solidarity with the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan and with the Taiwanese People—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) take the following actions:

1. Humbly reaffirm the action of the 206th General Assembly (1994) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in which it affirms the “Resolution on the Future of Taiwan” (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 109; for text of resolution, see Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp. 446–47) and supports self-determination for people of Taiwan and for the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan in its struggle for freedom and human rights; and its support for Taiwan and its national integrity and selfhood in the community of nations.

2. Humbly direct the Stated Clerk to express our solidarity with the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan and with the Taiwanese people.

3. Humbly direct the Stated Clerk to express our support for the Taiwanese people to participate in the World Health Organization (WHO) to the president of the United States and urge the president to follow through with the action already taken by the United States Congress to the World Health Organization to accept Taiwan to be a member of WHO. Additionally, direct the Stated Clerk to also express our support for the Taiwanese people to the members of the United States Congress.

4. Humbly direct the United Nations Office of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to advocate for Taiwan’s application for WHO membership to international organizations whenever opportunities arise.

Rationale

According to the United States Center for Disease Control weekly report, on April 22, 2003, the Taiwan Department of Health (DOH) was notified of seven cases of severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) among health-care workers at a large municipal hospital in Taipei. Subsequently, as of May 22, 2003, a total of 483 probable cases had been reported, including 45 cases among health-care workers, and 26 (19 percent) persons died.

The non-membership status left Taiwan without access to time-sensitive information through the United Nations World Health Organization’s (WHO) Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network (GOARN), which disseminates essential information on the management and control of communicable and infectious diseases, such as SARS.

World Health Organization personnel arrived after SARS had been active in Taiwan already seven weeks. There were thirteen deaths reported between March 17 and May 7 (as of May 12, the number of deaths was twenty-four). Furthermore, WHO personnel while in Taiwan were prohibited from speaking directly to Taiwan’s government official or from making any public statement. At that time, the Taiwanese government and the United States Center for Disease Control had effectively enforced quarantine while WHO listed Taiwan in the international travel advisory category.

Although Taiwan was not a WHO member country, it adhered to WHO guidelines in transmitting its daily evaluation and status reports to WHO. The Taiwanese government promptly reported new cases voluntarily, unlike the lack of cooperation by People’s Republic of China, which downplayed SARS virus outbreak severity and prohibited media reports and WHO evaluation until the SARS virus had spread to Hong Kong and Canada. By concealing the SARS outbreak, China was responsible for the infection of more than 8,000 people in more than thirty countries.

The WHO is mandated to “attainment by all peoples of the highest possible level of health.” Nevertheless, the 23 million Taiwanese people were deprived of their human rights to the services that WHO provides. Ironically, while the World Health Assembly rejected Taiwan’s bid for membership during the May 19–28, 2003, eighty-nine Taiwanese people died subsequently from SARS infection.

The SARS infection in Taiwan constituted a medical emergency according to WHO’s categorical system. More than thirty nations were infected by SARS, but only Canada, China, Hong Kong, and Taiwan were listed in WHO international travel advisory category as well as in the Pattern C of local transmission.

In the past, Taiwan has experienced WHO’s exclusion with devastating consequence. In 1998, the entero virus infection was transmitted from Malaysia that claimed the lives of nearly eighty Taiwanese children while Taiwan’s request for information in the virus outbreak was ignored by WHO.

Taiwan’s population of 23,500,000 people is greater than that of three-fourths of the member states already in the WHO.

While the 23 million people of Taiwan are entitled to equal and fair protection under the WHO system, Taiwan is also committed to do its part by working together with the world community and contributing its resources and experiences in order to advance the noble goal of health for all peoples. For example, in response to the 911 terrorist attacks in New York in 2001 and the resulting worldwide antiterrorist campaign, Taiwan has also contributed in significant ways. Both the Taiwan Tzu Chi Charity Foundation and the Taiwan Red Cross, for instance, swiftly assisted the victims and their families. Together with overseas donations and government contributions, Taiwan provided more than US$20 million to the Afghanistan humanitarian relief effort—including medical goods, freight trucks, wool blankets, and other supplies. Furthermore, four Taiwanese medical teams are currently stationed in Burkina Faso, Malawi, Chad, and Sao Tome and Principe, where they assist the respective local governments.

The United States government has been actively advocating for the observer status for Taiwan in WHO. In addition, the United States Congress passed H.R. 422 and S. 243 that authorized the secretary of state to “initiate a United States plan to endorse and obtain observer status for Taiwan at the annual weeklong summit of World Health Assembly in May 2003 in Geneva, Switzerland.” The H.R. 422 and S. 243 were signed into public law by President Bush on May 29, 2003 (Public Law No: 108-28 bbc).

ACSWP, ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 13-01 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to express solidarity with the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan and with the Taiwanese people, and calls for advocacy for Taiwanese membership in the World Health Organization (WHO).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advise that Item 13-01 be answered by approving the following alternate recommendation:

“The 216th General Assembly (2004), recognizing and honoring the feelings about national identity expressed on both sides of the Taiwan Straits, reaffirms the action of the 208th General Assembly (1996) in both its “Resolution: Taiwan Monitoring” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 522–23, paragraphs 36.443–.456) and the ‘affirmations concerning partnership in mission with Christians in Hong Kong, Taiwan, and China’ (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 381–82, paragraphs 34.019–.027). In addition, the 216th General Assembly (2004) does the following:

“1. Directs the Stated Clerk to commend both the Taiwan Center for Disease Control for its prompt and thorough action in addressing the outbreak and management of Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) and the United States of America Center for Disease Control and Prevention for its mission and continuing commitment to engage in the international public health community and, particularly, for its involvement with Taiwan during the SARS outbreak.

“2. Directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in consultation with the General Assembly Council (GAC), to continue its monitoring of the China/Taiwan relationship as an emerging issue fraught with danger and to consider providing study materials on the situation.

“3. Calls on Presbyterians and General Assembly entities to advocate for access that permits direct interaction and provision of services in the WHO for Taiwan and other peoples and places in times of health crisis.

Rationale

Item 13-01 and Item 13-07 request that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) reaffirm its support of Taiwan and seek support to advocate for Taiwan’s membership in the World Health Organization (WHO) because, in their rationales, lack of membership led to the rapid spread of the new epidemic Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) spring of 2003 in Taiwan.

Following a 1995 mission study trip to Taiwan/Hong Kong/China jointly sponsored by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Worldwide Ministries Division, the 208th General Assembly (1996) approved two actions: the “Resolution: Taiwan Monitoring” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 522–23, paragraphs 36.443–456) and the “affirmations concerning partnership in mission with Christians in Hong Kong, Taiwan, and China” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 381–82, paragraphs 34.019–.027). This mission study trip to Taiwan/Hong Kong/China came about as part of a response to the monitoring of the situation requested by the 206th General Assembly (1994). The policy recommended and approved by the 208th General Assembly (1996) reaffirms the assembly’s solidarity and partnership with the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan and in their efforts for self-determination, integrity, and international acceptance. It also encourages dialogue between the Presbyterian Church of Taiwan and the China Christian Council and commits to work for justice and reconciliation between people and churches in Taiwan and China.

The 215th General Assembly (2003) approved a revision of Commissioners’ Resolution 03-9 urging support for the Presbyterian Church of Taiwan and the people of Taiwan and called on PC(USA) to ask its international partners to advocate for their governments to support observer status for Taiwan in the World Health Organization. The U.S. Congress passed PL 108-28bbc on May 29, 2003, but earlier in May, the WHO voted to deny membership to Taiwan since it is not a member of the United Nations. This is a highly political question grounded in China’s membership in the UN Security Council and its view of Taiwan as a part of China. Efforts to communicate directly with the WHO concerning this matter proved fruitless.

Our research does not sustain the concern that the population of Taiwan suffered unduly due to its nonmember status in the WHO in 2003. All WHO expertise was available to the CDC Taiwan through the CDC USA who was in Taiwan within two days of the first reported case. (According to Dan Rutz, communication specialist for CDC-USA, “an important part of the mission of CDC-USA is to engage in the international public health community of which Taiwan is a part.”)

Upon determining that travelers from two areas of China were the cause of the primary infection and that poor hospital sanitary procedures provided the secondary spread of the disease, the CDC-Taiwan took rapid action in screening travelers into Taipei from China, reporting all probable and confirmed cases to WHO, training hospital staff in better sanitary procedures, and alerting the public about the causes and means of spreading the disease.

The CDC-USA served as a surrogate for the WHO in this matter and will continue to do so. Subsequently, WHO unanimously passed a resolution on May 28, 2003, providing the legal basis for the WHO to respond appropriately to all requests related to SARS monitoring, prevention, and control. This provides Taiwan with the access to WHO it sought, at least concerning SARS. Also, Taiwan’s CDC played a major role in SARS education and eradication through the Asian Pacific Economic Council (APEC) and working in collaboration with Canada’s CDC.

On Authorizing the Inclusion of a Fund to Combat HIV/AIDS and Diseases of Poverty in Africa in the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering—From the Presbytery of New Castle.

The Presbytery of New Castle overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to authorize the inclusion of a new fund to combat HIV/AIDS and diseases of poverty in Africa in the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering for one-fourth (25 percent) of the total funds raised each year for five years beginning in 2005, and that these funds be utilized for education, prevention, care, and treatment of HIV/AIDS and other diseases of poverty in Africa by PC(USA) and partner church programs.

Rationale

The Presbytery of New Castle is aware that Sub-Saharan Africa accounts for 70 percent of the more than 43 million people in our world living with HIV/AIDS.

The Presbytery of New Castle believes that the devastating pandemic of HIV/AIDS in Africa is a defining moment for the PC(USA) and it confronts us with an urgent challenge and a great opportunity to display an increased level of financial commitment to the healing ministry of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The 215th General Assembly (2003), responding to requests by our partners who are infected and affected by HIV/AIDS, and called by our God to participate in the fight against HIV/AIDS in new and creative ways, called on congregations to prepare HIV/AIDS Home Based Care Kits for our partners in Malawi. [See Resolution on Africa, approved by the 215th General Assembly (2003) (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 590ff).]

The 214th General Assembly (2002) challenged the denomination, through its members, congregations, and presbyteries, to adopt the giving goal of 0.7 percent in support of the denomination's international development programs, with an appreciable portion of this funding targeted for HIV/AIDS education, prevention, and care.

The 213th General Assembly (2001) designated the year 2002–2003 to be a year of Global AIDS Pandemic Awareness in the church (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 335). [See also Women and AIDS: A Global Crisis, approved by the 213th General Assembly (2001) (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 336ff).]

At the PC(USA) sponsored consultation on HIV/AIDS in October 2002, church partners from the Congo, Malawi, South Africa, and elsewhere told the PC(USA) that the church in their countries is critically affected by HIV/AIDS, and called on us to join them in doing God's work for the sake of the world God so loves, in the spirit of partnership between brothers and sisters who are most affected by the plague of HIV/AIDS and brothers and sisters who are least affected.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 13-03

Comment on Item 13-03—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council suggests that the General Assembly disapprove Item 13-03. The General Assembly Council welcomes the attention that Item 13-03 has focused on the HIV/AIDS crisis and we urge the assembly to call the church to use the following Extra Commitment Opportunity accounts to support a growing and sustained response to that crisis:

ECO#862706	AIDS Crisis Overseas
ECO#051700	Home-Based Care Kits in Africa
ECO#051791	0.7 Initiative
ECO#051702	AIDS Prevention
ECO#051701	AIDS - Mother-to-Child Transmission Prevention
ECO#051656	AIDS Consultant in Central and West Africa
ECO#051673	AIDS Consultant in Southern and East Africa

1. A Critical Concern

The General Assembly Council agrees that HIV/AIDS and the other diseases of poverty are issues of critical concern for the global church and merit the focused attention of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Our own concern for the victims of these diseases is compounded by the calls for help from the leaders of partner churches, particularly in Africa. The GAC appreciates the leadership that the Presbytery of New Castle has provided in helping the PC(USA) respond to this crisis and particularly acknowledges the support that the presbytery-related Speer Trust has provided for the Worldwide Ministries Division's AIDS initiative. We affirm the overture's intent to create new and creative responses to HIV/AIDS and the diseases of poverty.

2. The Wrong Funding Source

Research commissioned by the Special Offerings Task Force concluded that PC(USA) members are not inclined to give additional support for special offerings addressing international health issues. Nor would they welcome the inclusion of additional causes in current special offerings. The task force also concluded that short-term changes to special offerings prove to be detrimental. These research findings, combined with the experiences of other denominations seeking to support AIDS initiatives through special offerings, convinces us that inclusion of HIV/AIDS as an additional focus of the One Great Hour of Sharing is unlikely to significantly increase the size of the offering. (See Item 07-06, Report of the Special Offerings Review Task Force.)

The likely immediate result of adding a new HIV/AIDS fund to the offering would be

- loss of focus in the offering with the effect of reducing loyalty and support built up over the past fifty-five years; and
- The reduction of support for ongoing programs that effectively address the underlying causes of the HIV/AIDS crisis.

The One Great Hour of Sharing offering supports three programs: Self-Development of People, Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, and the Presbyterian Hunger Program. These programs provide an integrated and comprehensive response to the global poverty that underlies what have come to be known as "the diseases of poverty." They also fund more direct responses to these diseases, including community-based care, development, and advocacy efforts.

Our international partners tell us that it is impossible to address the HIV/AIDS crisis without simultaneously addressing poverty, and the GAC believes that it would be shortsighted to reduce the efforts of these poverty-focused programs or change the offering that supports them.

Furthermore, the General Assembly Council calls attention to the fact that one of the Special Offerings Criteria states that "Special offerings will not be used to create funding for a cause when a similar program already exists." During the past year, all of the special offerings and the criteria used to guide the offerings were reviewed by the Special Offerings Review Task Force, which is making a report to the 216th General Assembly (2004) (Item 07-06). This particular criterion—to avoid using a special offering to create funding for a cause when a similar program already exists—is affirmed in the task force report. Because International Health Ministries currently manages an HIV/AIDS program and because the One Great Hour of Sharing offering currently funds programs that combat HIV/AIDS and diseases of poverty in Africa, we believe that the action recommended by Item 13-03 would be in opposition to the Special Offerings Criteria.

3. Current PC(USA) Response to AIDS in Africa

The Worldwide Ministries Division's International Health Ministries Office coordinates a growing PC(USA) response to HIV/AIDS and other diseases of poverty. It has found many partners in that initiative, including congregations, presbyteries, Presbyterian Women, and the programs supported by the One Great Hour of Sharing. A U.S.-based AIDS program manager and three mission co-workers in Africa help support and interpret the efforts of our African partners and provide channels through which U.S. Presbyterians can be involved.

The PC(USA) HIV/AIDS strategy continues to evolve, based on ongoing consultation with overseas partners. The PC(USA) has sponsored HIV/AIDS consultations in Africa in both 2002 and 2003, each of which included significant participation by African women. A consultation of African church leaders is scheduled for September of 2004. Through these consultations and other conversations with our partners, a consensus has emerged on culturally appropriate responses within the African church context. The resulting strategy focuses on prevention, community-based care, and behavior change. These responses primarily require educational and capacity-building activities that enhance our partner churches' ability to respond to the HIV/AIDS pandemic.

Funding for PC(USA) HIV/AIDS initiatives has been provided by several sources. The General Assembly Council gratefully acknowledges the contribution of the Speer Trust, which has underwritten the HIV/AIDS program manager position. Other support has come through seven Extra Commitment Opportunity giving accounts, which focus on areas such as orphan care, prevention, counseling, training, and community-based care. In 2003, approximately $355,000 for HIV/AIDS ministry was received through these accounts. As the PC(USA) response to HIV/AIDS and other diseases of poverty continues to evolve and grow, we believe they will provide the channels for increased support from across the church.

4. Appropriate Role for the PC(USA)

In addition to calling for use of One Great Hour of Sharing funds, the overture calls for the denomination's strategy to include a focus on medical treatment. The International Health Ministries Office recognizes the importance of medical treatment for HIV/AIDS and other diseases of poverty. It seeks to link mission-related medical institutions to available sources of funding, including the "faith-based" funding initiatives of the U.S. government.

Direct PC(USA) involvement in funding medical treatment, however, would demand coordination far beyond the current capacity of the Worldwide Ministries Division and require the creation of its own administrative staff, at a time when denominational staffing is being reduced. Furthermore, medical treatment requires a level and consistency of financial commitment that makes it an inappropriate focus for a limited-term special offering. A more appropriate role for the church in the area of medical treatment is advocacy for an effective response by governments, business and civil society, including the United States, the United Nations, corporations, and international nongovernmental organizations (NGO's).

The Presbyterian United Nations Office, funded by the Peacemaking Offering and the Presbyterian Washington Office, have been active in coordinated advocacy efforts among churches and other organizations. Working with organizations such as the Washington Office on Africa, which receives funding from the Worldwide Ministries Division, and Bread for the World, which receives significant funding from the One Great Hour of Sharing, they have been instrumental in securing the commitment of billions of dollars of U.S. funding for international AIDS programs.

ACREC, ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC).

Item 13-03 calls for the authorization of the inclusion of a fund to combat HIV/AIDS and diseases of poverty in Africa in the One Great Hour of Sharing offering.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns advise that Item 13-03 be approved with the following amendment: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through and with brackets; text to be added or inserted is shown with an underline and with brackets.]

“The Presbytery of New Castle overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to authorize [~~the inclusion of a new fund~~] [creation of a five-year special offering] to combat HIV/AIDS and diseases of poverty in Africa [~~in the One Great Hour of Sharing Offering for one-fourth (25 percent) of the total funds raised each year for five years~~] beginning in 2005, and that these funds be utilized for education, prevention, care, and treatment of HIV/AIDS and other diseases of poverty in Africa [~~by PC(USA) and partner church programs~~] [in conjunction with efforts of partner churches; and, that the 216th General Assembly (2004) direct the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to communicate with the president of the United States of America, encouraging the president to fulfill his fifteen billion dollar commitment over a five-year period to combat HIV/AIDS in Africa.”

Rationale

The recent downsizing of General Assembly Council staff and budget reductions has diminished the church's capacity to address many historic program initiatives. To designate 25 percent of the One Great Hour of Sharing offering would further diminish the church's ability to honor many other vital and substantive program and ministry initiatives. The One Great Hour of Sharing offering presently is divided between three program initiatives: Self-Development of People, Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, and Presbyterian Hunger Program. To interrupt these ministries would seriously erode capacity and program delivery.

In Africa, HIV/AIDS has reached pandemic status and requires a major campaign to stop the death and suffering. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the faith-based community must respond with compassion and passion to provide assurance, education, and treatment and prevention services to the people of Africa.

While research conducted by the Presbyterian Research Services suggests that Presbyterians would not be receptive to a special offering at this time, on issues of suffering, life, and death we cannot allow ourselves to be led by polls. This is a time for action, healing, and prophetic leadership. The cross of Jesus Christ reminds us that we are wounded healers.

For these reasons and with a sense of urgency, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) call on the 216th General Assembly (2004) to modify Item 13-03 and thus lead our full constituency in a direction that positively and prophetically responds to one of the greatest threats to life facing our times.

On Global Population Stabilization and Reduction—From the Presbytery of Lackawanna.

The Presbytery of Lackawanna respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to approve the following actions and positions:

1. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), while reaffirming the naturalness and goodness of the human desire for procreation, recognizes that human numbers in our time are far exceeding the intent of the biblical mandate in Genesis 1:28 to “be fruitful and multiply,” because the health and well-being of human creatures depend upon the continuing fruitfulness of the earth and the health and integrity of the natural systems by which God governs to make life possible and good.

2. The General Assembly

a. Calls upon the president and the Congress of the United States of America to reverse the recent policies and directives that have reduced and withheld appropriations to the United Nations Population Funds and other voluntary international family planning agencies, and provide fully restored or increased funding for these agencies and/or organizations.

b. Calls upon the president and the Congress of the United States of America to honor the action plans of the United Nations Conference on Population Development (1994) and other United Nations conferences, and to provide strong leadership and substantial funding to ensure the availability throughout the world of contraceptive and reproductive health services, so that all who chose to determine the size of their families may do so, and also to promote the kind of economic development that actually reduces poverty while protecting the environment, and to extend educational opportunities in developing countries, especially to the girls and women who have been denied them, and to enhance women's status and access to health care, credit, and employment.

c. Urges the president and the Congress of the United States of America to develop and implement, together with appropriate state, national, and international governments and agencies, long-range policies and plans to achieve the goal of stabilizing and then reducing human populations in the United States of America, other nations, and the world, so that by concerted efforts the total births in this world may be fewer than deaths by the decade 2020–2030.

3. The General Assembly urges those who support and those who oppose the legality of abortions to work together to support measures that prevent unintended pregnancies, recognizing that abortions, whether legal or illegal, increase when family planning services are not available.

4. The General Assembly calls upon young people and couples—Presbyterians, those of other denominations and other faiths, and all who acknowledge responsibility to serve the common good—to make their private decisions about procreation in the light of the compelling need to reduce the human impact upon the planet, so that the degradation and depletion of natural resources, the disruption of natural systems, and the losses and extinctions of nonhuman species may cease, in accordance with the Creator-Redeemer's will for the harmony, liberation, and fulfillment of the whole community of life.

5. The General Assembly continues to encourage all who make decisions about having children to consider conscientiously and prayerfully their options, including that of remaining birth-free and considering the possibility of adopting children.

6. The General Assembly understands and declares that the earth's protection and restoration require a very substantial reduction of consumption by the comfortable and the affluent; that the overpopulated, impoverished countries in the world are unlikely to give priority to population stabilization and reduction unless the international community as a whole gives priority also to global poverty reduction and the reduction of unnecessary, excessive consumption; that Christians and all other people of goodwill are called to resist the temptations posed by advertising and other enticements to wasteful, injurious consumption; and that if the economic system requires ecologically unsustainable consumption in order to generate employment, it is the system that has to be changed in basic ways, so that all people may participate in a livelihood that is both sufficient and sustainable.

7. The General Assembly directs the Stated Clerk to send copies of these resolutions with their rationale to the president of the United States of America, all the members of Congress, and appropriate governmental and nongovernmental population and environmental agencies, including the Environmental Protection Agency, the Council on Environmental Quality, the Population Reference Bureau, the Worldwatch Institute, the Population Institute, the Population Connection, the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, any Pro-Life organization, Friends of the Earth, National Wildlife Federation, and other religious bodies with which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is in communion, as well as the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and the governing bodies of the National Council of Churches and the World Council of Churches.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for many years has recognized the need to curtail human population growth in order to preserve the balances of nature and the integrity of God's created order, and to reduce the social strains and conflicts exacerbated by population pressures. The PC(USA) has strongly supported voluntary family planning and reproductive health programs and their availability to all who choose to limit family size, and has also advocated for improvements in living standards and the status of women, which in many countries are factors in lowering fertility rates.

The 208th General Assembly (1996), in its policy statement “Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development,” declared, “Complacency about continued population growth now constitutes defiance of the wisdom of God” and is as though “human creatures alone [could be] forever exempt from the . . . laws by which God governs complex processes and the [interactions] of living creatures” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 533, paragraph 36.547).

The peril to the future of life does not come simply from overpopulation, since the human impact upon the natural world is the product, not only of the number of people, but also of the technologies used by industry and agriculture and the magnitude of per capita production and consumption; and this means that the greatest global impact comes from the affluent, industrialized nations, the United States of America above all.

The 213th General Assembly (2001), recognizing the massive encroachments of human beings and economic development upon the habitats of other creatures, issued a “Call to Halt Mass Extinction,” declaring that the “Creator-Sustainer of all life wills its continuance, diversity, beauty, and interconnectedness” and that the “Creator-Deliverer calls human communities to work with God to rectify the abuses whereby human impacts upon the earth are leading to a mass extinction of living species,” and calling for “steps in practice, policy, and systemic change that will prevent mass extinction and preserve the biodiversity essential to the flourishing of life” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 473).

The 210th General Assembly (1998) declared that “the inestimable worth of every child” makes it “imperative now to bring human numbers into balance with other creatures, within healthy natural systems, so that all children, present and future, may enjoy a habitat conducive to the realization of their potential under God.”

The same 210th General Assembly (1998) stated: “Recognizing the natural human desire for procreation . . . but recognizing also the compelling need for fewer births, so that God’s creation, human and nonhuman, may flourish according to God’s intent, [the General Assembly declares] that both those who choose not to conceive children and those who do choose to conceive should be accorded encouragement and support, respect and honor for their decisions.”

In the United States of America, human births exceeded deaths in 2002 by more than 1.5 million.

The Worldwatch Institute and the Population Institute provided the following information: the human population of the world more than tripled in the 20th century, reached 6 billion in 1999, and now exceeds 6.2 billion and is projected to increase to somewhere between 7.9 and 10.9 billion by 2050. Almost all of the increase will take place in developing countries where resources are already strained. The population of India, now just over a billion, is expected to reach 1.6 billion. Many impoverished countries must cope with cropland that is insufficient for their needs and declining in quality. An even greater threat is the shortage of water, with half a billion people in regions of chronic drought, a number expected to increase fivefold by 2025; and in some African countries, including Liberia, Rwanda, the Democratic Republic of Congo, and Ethiopia, women average six children each, and these countries have recently suffered civil war, genocide, and/or famine.

By 2003, according to the Population Reference Bureau, twenty-six nations had Total Fertility Rates (TFRs = average birth per women) of 1.3 or less; this means that they are at the point, or very close to it, at which births are fewer than deaths. Most of these nations are European, eastern and western, but they include Russia, Japan, Hong Kong, South Korea, and Taiwan. Five years earlier only thirteen nations had TFRs of 1.3 or less; this represents a rapid movement toward fewer births and population stabilization and reduction in a significant number of countries—a movement, however, that will require strenuous, concerted efforts if it is to be extended throughout the world, including our own country.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Item 13-04 calls upon the United States government to support policies to reduce global population and calls for actions that would improve the status of women and their families worldwide, as well as promote sustainable development.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recommends that the 216th General Assembly approve Item 13-04.

Rationale

The United States has recently withdrawn its funding of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) and has negated prior commitments to support the outcomes of the International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD), which recognized that women’s human rights and well-being lead to a reduction in population and an improvement in the well-being of families, communities, and nations. Family planning is an essential part of this equation.

Family planning is the conscious effort of couples to regulate the number and spacing of births through natural and artificial methods of contraception. Family planning increases the rate of survival and the health of women and their children by reducing pregnancies in young women who are at greater risk for complications; enabling women to space their pregnancies, protecting women from disease, and giving women prenatal care. Most women around the world still lack access to such services.

In developing countries, complications of pregnancy and childbirth are the leading cause of death and disability for women aged 15 to 49. More than 585,000 women die each year from complications of pregnancy and childbirth. Lack of U.S. support for family planning has sent a message to some governments that family planning and women’s health is not an important priority, weakening their resolve to address reproductive health concerns in their own countries.

Delays and restrictions on the delivery of comprehensive family health services in poor communities around the world have drawn concern from a wide-range of leading nongovernmental organizations including CARE, Save the Children, and World Vision. In 1997, for instance, all three of these organizations wrote members of Congress to express their concern regarding cuts to family planning and their impact on child survival. According to the World Bank, family planning is one of the best way to improve maternal and child health at the annual cost of only one-to-two dollars for each person in a country. The UNICEF has stated that family planning could bring more benefits to more people at less cost than any other single technology now available to the human race.

The USAID, the United Nations, and leading reproductive health organizations (including the Alan Guttmacher Institute and Population Action International) have conducted numerous studies that demonstrate that family planning reduces the number of abortions by preventing unintended pregnancies. Family planning could unite people with various perspectives on abortion since most are in favor of reducing the number of abortions. Family planning can accomplish that goal.

Rationale

The Human Rights Update is an annual report developed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to bring to the attention of the church significant national and international human rights concerns that occurred during the course of the previous year, especially those brought to the attention of the General Assembly Council (GAC) by the partner churches around the world.

The yearly report affirms the longstanding commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to human rights at home and worldwide. The “Human Rights Update 2003–2004” includes reports on the United Nations; North America; Central and West Africa; Southern and East Africa; Central, South, and Southeast Asia; East Asia/Pacific; Europe, the Middle East; and Latin America and the Caribbean. Categories of concerns included in these updates are: civil, political, economic, social and cultural, and religious.

The ACSWP encourages people interested in regions not included in this year’s update to review previous year’s responses, which can be found in the Minutes of the General Assembly, Part I, on the PC(USA)’s Website (http://www.pcusa.org/oga/publications/human\_rights03-04.pdf), and in printed form from the Presbyterian Distribution Service (PDS), or by contacting the ACSWP.

I. Introduction

The “Human Rights Update 2003–2004” is an annual report developed by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP). This yearly report affirms the Presbyterian church’s longstanding commitment to human rights at home and worldwide.

This year’s report includes five categories of concern brought to the attention of the General Assembly Council (GAC), for the most part, by the partner churches around the world. They are civil, political, economic, social and cultural, and religious. The “Human Rights Update 2003–2004,” however, should not be construed by the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as the definitive statement of all the human rights violations received by the GAC during the course of the year. The 216th General Assembly (2004) encourages the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to continue to pray and work to end all forms of human rights violations worldwide. The “Human Rights Update 2003–2004” includes an action study guide developed to assist the middle governing bodies, sessions, and individual members to engage and focus on human rights issues.

We hope adult study and advocacy groups, as well as session and presbytery committees, will use the “Human Rights Update 2003–2004” and will work for the guarantee and fulfillment of human rights for all God’s children, locally and globally.

II. Global Update—The United Nations (UN) and Human Rights

The United Nations Charter, adopted and ratified as international law in 1945, set out as one of the organization's main purposes:

To achieve international co-operation . . . in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion (Source: Charter of the United Nations, Article I, 3).

In pursuit of this commitment the United Nations (UN) adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948), the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, (1966/76). These three documents now constitute the International Bill of Rights. In addition the UN has overseen the drafting and adoption of more than twenty other human rights treaties and protocols, as well as other human rights declarations, establishing a comprehensive body of international law. These cover the rights of specific groups perceived in need of special attention (e.g., children, women, labor, refugees, etc), and of concerns of specific gravity (e.g., slavery, torture, migration, etc.). In the process international standards and norms have been set, institutions for monitoring compliance and addressing abuses have been created, and human rights have become a recognized focus of international concern and foreign policy. That work continues to expand with the entering into force [i.e., receiving the necessary ratifications to make it law] of the International Convention of the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families on July 1, 2003, and the initiation of a process to draft an International Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities. [Both of these developments should be of interest to those Presbyterians involved in migrant ministries and those working on behalf of persons with disabilities.]

The focus of the United Nations on promoting and protecting human rights is still a work in process, work not made easy for a many reasons, including the following.

- While there has been a remarkable development of international legal documents and standards, there is still much disagreement on the nature, origins, and applicability of the human rights standards.
- While few, if any, governments in the world, want to be identified as abusers or violators of fundamental human rights, either for reasons of image or because of penalties that can occur in the international arena, abuses occur in every country, some more pervasive and egregious than others. The dilemma and paradox exist, therefore, that the very process of dealing with and responding to human rights violations allows for the participation of those who themselves may be among the accused. The reality is that attention to human rights violations of particular countries has always been driven by political interests rather than the interests of the victims. Consequently, while it may be argued that investigation and dealing with the specifics of many situations may be compromised, they are not unchallenged. Few countries, including the United States, want the human rights conventions applied to them. While unfortunate, the process itself is not negated, and continues to gain attention, and hopefully, credibility.
- While the United Nations has instruments for dealing with Human Rights, e.g., the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (UNHCHR) and the Commission on Human Rights (CHR), and specific treaty related committees, they all work with inadequate funding, which means limited staffing, and restricted ability to investigate and address complaints that are made.
- While the standards are clear, until recently, the UN and the global community have lacked the international judicial instruments to bring violators to justice, a reality that has resulted over time in the creation of special tribunals to address certain issues. The recent creation of the International Criminal Court (ICC) affords an opportunity to address this limitation. [See section 5. below for further information on the (ICC).]

This report is intended to draw attention to recent developments, trends and issues of immediate importance, those with particular concern for the church, and those reflecting the role of the United States (U.S.).

A. The Secretary General's Annual Report 2003

Secretary General [SG] Kofi Annan, in his seventh annual report (58th General Assembly, 2003), deals with the international legal order and human rights. In doing so, he notes both the positive and the negative. The negative tends to be the most visible, that is, the continuation of situations in which gross violations of human rights are occurring. The process of building the legal order is less visible. With human rights remaining central to the work of the United Nations (UN), a growing international consensus is emerging regarding the universality of human rights. Many member states are making efforts to implement the covenants and conventions, and the UN has been assisting some fifty national human rights institutions and their secretariats. It provides technical cooperation and training in more than thirty countries in order to develop functioning national protection systems. A UN field presence is maintained in twenty-nine countries to monitor and assist. The Commission on Human Rights has approximately forty special rapporteurs and experts working on specific themes and country difficulties. More than 700 appeals in response to petitions have been made. Human Rights (HR) treaty committees have considered during the year reports of 112 states. Over the year of the report, more than twenty ratifications were received for specific HR treaties, increasing their significance.

The SG draws attention to the fact that societies that are undergoing major political, social, and economic transformation often have severe human rights violations. The concern of the UN goes beyond the specifics, but reflects the “multiplier effects on democratization, economic development and conflict resolution.”

B. The Work of the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the UN Commission on Human Rights

The position of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (UNCHR) was created following the World Conference on Human Rights held in Vienna (1993), its first incumbent being Jose Ayala Lasso. This action reflected the growing commitment to human rights and the necessity for better coordination of the UN activity related to it. From 1997 to 2002, the position was held by the former president of Ireland, Dr. Mary Robinson, who during her tenure helped Secretary General Kofi Annan in making human rights an integral part of all UN activity. In 2002 she was succeeded by the appointment of the Brazilian diplomat, Sergio Viera de Mello, who had more than twenty years of distinguished service at the UN, being the under-secretary general for Humanitarian Affairs and emergency relief coordinator at the time of his appointment. In May 2003, UN Secretary General Annan asked Mr. de Mello to take a four-month leave of absence to serve as his special representative in Iraq to oversee the establishment of the UN work there following the war and occupation of that country. Unfortunately, on August 19, 2003, the UN headquarters in Baghdad was the target of a violent criminal attack. It claimed the life of Mr. de Mello and resulted in the deaths and wounding of numerous others. Subsequent attacks on UN personnel brought about a reduction of UN operations in Iraq, given the inability to protect them in their civilian roles. Mr. de Mello’s death was a severe blow to the UN, and to its work on human rights.

The acting United Nations high commissioner is Dr. Bertrand Ramcharan of Guyana, a UN career officer with more than twenty-five years of service, including service as the deputy commissioner under Dr. Robinson. In his New York years he was an occasional speaker at Presbyterian UN seminars. In his Human Rights Day message (12/10/03), Dr Ramcharan, began on a disturbing note:

We must all be deeply distressed and anguished on this Human Rights Day that . . . human rights are grossly violated throughout the world because of poverty, conflicts, terrorism, violence, prejudice, and bad governance.

Calling attention to the toll taken by these forces, all forms of discrimination, and the continued injustices against women and children, Dr. Ramcharan stated, “we continue to experience a crisis of values among humankind.” Noting that 2003 marked the fifty-fifth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, he pleaded “for the world of the Universal Declaration to become reality for all the world’s peoples on the ground.” While acknowledging that we have not yet attained that world, he remains convinced that one day we shall. “The promise of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights beckons us to a better world”Source: Message of Acting UN High Commissioner for Human Rights (Dec. 10, 2003 [www.un.org/events/humanrights/commissioner.html)]. Other UN sources suggest that there are armed conflicts currently being fought in twenty-eight countries. Each brings human rights violations.

In an address to a conference on human rights convened by the World Council of Churches, Dr. Ramcharan spoke of the State of Human Rights Ten Years after the Vienna World Conference on Human Rights (1993). He provided a balance sheet worth noting:

. . . on the positive side . . . formal commitment to universality [of human rights]; formal commitment to democracy, the rule of law and respect for human rights; the impact of the Convention on the Rights of the Child; the end of the apartheid regime; the establishment of the International Criminal Tribunals for Yugoslavia and Rwanda and the International Criminal Court; the efforts of special procedures of the Commission on Human Rights; and the growing mobilization of non-governmental organizations.

On the negative side, one can place the continuing gross violations of economic, social and cultural rights and civil and political rights; violence against innocent people committed by terrorists; stifling of freedom on the ground of countering terrorism; violence and injustices against women; trafficking in women; inequality and prejudice; deprivations experienced by minorities and indigenous populations; and bad governance in many parts of the world. [UNHCHR Press Release 12/23/03]

The UNCHR, at its 59th Session, Geneva (Spring, 2003), considered, among its many reports and studies, eighty-three resolutions, forty-nine of which were adopted by consensus, somewhat belying the notion that the commission cannot function because of the presence of some members considered undesirable. The fifty-two member body is elected according to the rules of the General Assembly, occasionally including countries the United States feels do not belong there. Divided votes, however, are more apt to reflect broad international differences [the developed world versus the developing world], rather than the reputations of individual countries. The United States voting pattern has a character of its own.

The work of the UNCHR is a part of the annual process. The report and resolutions of the UNCHR are reviewed by the Economic and Social Council and by Committee Three of the General Assembly. Matters approved by the General Assembly then reflect the will and interests of the UN membership. Some of these matters will be considered below.

C. The Report of the UNCHR Rapporteur on Freedom of Religion or Belief, Professor Abdelfattah Amor

In 1986, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights (UNCHR) appointed a special rapporteur to examine response to the provisions of the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief, adopted by the UN in 1981. The appointment has been regularly renewed. A change in title has put the emphasis on the positive, promoting freedom of religion or belief, not just reporting on violations. Since 1994, eighteen general and interim reports have been submitted on the work of the rapporteur. The 2003 report of the incumbent rapporteur, Professor Abdelfattah Amor, includes reports on communications with thirty-three governments regarding petitions or complaints received. The process involves investigation and governmental communications regarding complaints received. The distribution of the countries involved is wide, with concerns raised about China, the Russian Federation, the United States, four or five central or south central European states, the Arab world, Israel, and southern Asia (east, central, and west). Included in this grouping are the five “stans” (five new states that arose in Central Asia after the Soviet Union collapsed in 1991: Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, Tajikistan, and Kyrgyzstan), now independent of Russia. Nigeria and Sudan come under criticism in African countries. No countries in central or South America are under scrutiny. In the majority of circumstances, the complaints involve governmental or military actions impacting religious communities. In some of these circumstances, the concerns are intercommunal—violence between religious groups or even competing factions within specific religious communities.

The issues under investigation and complaint are similar to those reported in the past. In Islamic countries there is an ongoing concern about the unwillingness to accept the Bahai religion as anything but heretical and an unacceptable break from Islam. In a number of countries, mistreatment of Jehovah Witnesses (JW) focuses primarily on the unwillingness of JW’s to accept military service or the authority of government. Another question relates to the registration of religious bodies: in some instances religious bodies refuse to register in opposition to the government; in others, the government refuses to register groups seeking registration for various reasons.

In a few countries there has been complaint about efforts to bring about forced conversions. Christian missionaries have been occasionally the object of violent communal attacks, or of government restriction or expulsion. In some countries, government antireligious activity is directed against all groups, in others, against minority groups in favor of policies supporting the culturally dominant religion.

Attention is called to the difficulty merging countries and those in transition are having in the drafting of religious regulatory law where none has existed. This often involves questions regarding the definition of religion, appropriate forms of registration and regulation, the status of historic religious groups often identified with the peoples and the culture as over against new religious bodies, the relation between dominant and minor religious traditions that have often been in conflict, and more mundane matters related to property.

D. Consideration of Human Rights Issues by the Fifty-Eighth Session of the UN General Assembly

The United Nations General Assembly, at its 58th Session (2003), adopted seventy resolutions and eight decisions covering a wide range of issues, concerns, and specific situations. The voting pattern at the General Assembly reflects the voting pattern of the fifty-two member Human Rights Commission. The public presumption might therefore be the UN is prevented from functioning on human rights matters because of the “rogues.” The voting pattern tells a different story. Of the seventy resolutions that were approved, forty-eight were approved by consensus, i.e., without vote. Roll call votes were taken on only twenty-two resolutions, with preliminary votes on sections of several of those resolutions. No single factor accounts for the pattern on roll call votes. They range from votes where the body is almost equally divided between affirmative and negative votes and abstentions, to votes where there is a single country voting against the rest. The United States (U.S.) voting pattern says more about the U.S. than about the countries that are on our dislike list.

It should be remembered that at the World Human Rights Conference in Vienna in 1993, the U.S. agreed to the understanding that human rights are universal and that they included not only civil and political rights but also economic, social, and cultural rights.

In the ongoing struggle over the conceptual understanding of human rights values, norms, and standards, the U.S. government has been uncomfortable with that commitment. It is not in the vanguard of establishing and broadening the values base or in accepting the emerging standards that the rest of the world is struggling to address. It opposed resolutions on the right to food (176 to 1), the right to development (173 to 3), the right to health (174 to 2), and the right to medicines in case of pandemics (181 to 1). It opposed two resolutions designed to follow up on the World Conference Against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia, and Related Intolerance (here after: WCAR), which it had boycotted. On one of those the only other negative vote came from Israel. It cast the only vote against a resolution designed to promote the Rights of the Child. Such resolutions do not create “international entitlements.” They do lay responsibility on member countries to seek to achieve the goals for their own members.

While the U.S. government perhaps leads the vanguard pressing for democracy, the impression is given to the world that the U.S. limits democracy to transparent elections and political processes, not to the idea that democratic societies may understand that democracy means assuring the needs and rights of their citizens. It is also reluctant to support the concept of self-determination, voting against a resolution reaffirming self-determination as a right. While the implementation of such a concept has its obvious difficulties, it cannot be separated from the concept of democracy.

With regard to the matter of capital punishment, the U.S. is increasingly on the defensive on its continued support of and use of capital punishment, being, perhaps, the only modernized country that continues to support it, even for minors. In the present context when the U.S. government is concerned about terrorism, it is loath to come out strongly against the use of mercenaries, particularly as one sees a trend to privatization of military activity. These views are reflected in the voting patterns at the United Nations (UN).

In country-regional specific resolutions, the U.S. voted against those resolutions that would have supported the human rights of Palestinians. A new voting pattern seems to have emerged in this regard. Often the U.S. has stood alone with Israel. Currently it is able to enlist the votes of several of its island “dependencies.” With three countries the effort seems to be to use the human rights issues for political agendas: Turkmenistan, Iran, and the Democratic Republic of Congo. In these resolutions, the U.S. voted with the majority in raising human rights issues. The political dynamics are far more evident with these than with the conceptual values focused concerns. In all three situations the majority vote was less than the combined vote of the negative and the abstentions, revealing much greater difference in regional, cultural, or economic blocs. In a resolution on the Democratic Republic of Congo, the U.S. voted with the majority for a resolution on the Congo, but in the negative on dealing with the treatment of child soldiers caught up in the Congo fighting.

E. The International Criminal Court—Establishment and Problems

As noted in the introduction, one of the weaknesses of the United Nations (UN) has been the absence of permanent international judicial mechanisms to deal with matters considered violations of international criminal and human rights law. In 1948, at the same time the UN adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, it also called for the establishment of a permanent international criminal tribunal. Though work toward that goal was begun, the effort, as with many other matters, became hostage to the cold war, and was only seriously revived after the thawing of that war. A lengthy process resulted in the adoption on July 17, 1998, at an international conference in Rome, of the “Rome Statute on the International Criminal Court (ICC).” The treaty, considered by many to be one of the most important developments in international law since the founding of the UN itself, was adopted by a vote with 120 countries and seven opposed. (The United States [U.S.] voted with the opposition.) The requirement of sixty country ratifications in order for the treaty to become law was achieved in June 2002, and the treaty entered into force July 1, 2002. [The number has reached 91 with 139 in total signing as of this writing.]

The first session of the Assembly of States Parties was held shortly thereafter, and among other things began the processes of electing eighteen judges and the prosecutor. The selection of the judges was made at the resumed session, February 2003, from a list of forty-three nominees. The eleven men and seven women chosen were sworn in on March 11, 2003, in a ceremony held in a 13th century room in the Dutch Parliament. The prosecutor was subsequently chosen and took his oath of office on April 22, 2003. The chief prosecutor is Luis Moreno Ocampo, a jurist from Argentina. The Netherlands is providing a new building for the ICC in the Hague where the World Court also sits. The ICC will begin to function in 2004, with more than two hundred complaints already before it. Indications are that Ocampo will focus first on the situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo where between 2.5 and 3.3 million people have been killed since 1998.

Expectations are high among supporters of the ICC, given the need reflected in the ad hoc tribunals (the Former Yugoslavia and Rwanda) that have been created to deal with those critical situations, and as the debate over a credible judicial process for trials of Saddam Hussein and other Iraqi figures reveals. The Rome Statute provides jurisdiction over crimes that are already defined in international law: genocide, crimes of war, and crimes against humanity, whose definitions include mass murder, etc. Included in these laws are most acts that are used in most forms of international political terrorism. While the court is also given authority to deal with the crime of aggression, the court faces the task of giving that a legal definition, a challenge that will daunt the most dedicated legal and political minds. The challenge is to provide a workable and meaningful definition with which states parties can live, knowing each state would wish to avoid a definition that could be applied when its acts on its own interests.

The ICC is confronted by the current efforts of the U.S. to cripple it and undermine its effectiveness. The paradox is evident. The U.S. seeks to be able to hold other countries and individuals before the bar of judgment but to ensure that neither it nor American citizens will be held to international account. Domestic legislation has provided coercive measures for application against countries that choose to participate in the ICC. This has been reflected in a number of ways. While the U.S. did not vote for the Rome Treaty, it later signed it expressing intent to consider ratification. On May 6, 2002, the U.S. renounced that signature. In 2002 and 2003 it subsequently pressured the United Nations Security Council to provide U.S. personnel involved in peacekeeping operations (i.e., those sponsored by the UN) immunity from investigation and prosecution, an immunity provided in each instance for a one year period. The American Service Members Protection Act, also passed in 2002, authorizes the president to use military force to retrieve U.S. nationals held in detention by the court. It further provides for the ending of U.S. aid to countries not willing to grant the U.S. nationals complete immunity from the court. The U.S. has subsequently pressured countries to sign and ratify Bilateral Impunity Agreements (BIAs). More than fifty have signed, but few have actually ratified the agreements. Many have resisted the pressure. The irony is that the agreements would force those countries that have become members of the court to violate the treaty obligations of the court, thus breaching international law. The Rome Statue provides that countries are responsible for holding their own personnel accountable, but in cases where that is not done, the court can prosecute. The dominant rationale for the U.S. position is the fear or worry that the U.S., somehow uniquely, would be subject only to politically motivated prosecutions.

Part of the historic reasoning for an ICC is that the twentieth century's experience of immunity and impunity of dictators and military leaders has been one characterized by massive violations of human rights.

[Note: the 211th General Assembly (1999) of the PC(USA) approved a Resolution on the International Criminal Court in support of the Rome Treaty process and called upon U.S. ratification of the treaty and participation in the International Criminal Court (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 51, 435–39).

F. Human Rights and Terrorism

Acts of terrorism constituted violations of human rights long before the crimes of 9/11/01. Indeed, a major resolution on terrorism and human rights was adopted by the Human Rights Commission in the spring of 2001 despite the opposing vote of the United States (U.S.). The Human Rights Commission dealt with the link between human rights and terrorism with an added twist, namely concern over the violation of human rights in the pursuit of terrorists and in the efforts to prevent acts of terrorism. Reflection of this concern has been much discussed in the U.S. in light of the various legislative and administrative actions taken in the name of “Homeland Security,” including the holding of prisoners at the U.S. base in Guantanamo without charges or access to legal council. The international community has raised its own questions in numerous venues, including the United Nations and the European Union. United Nations resolutions have spoken to the need to ensure that efforts to combat terrorism do not themselves result in the violation of human rights.

G. Human Rights and Racism

Following the World Conference Against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia, and Related Intolerance (hereafter: WCAR), attention has been given to the implementation and follow-up to the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action, two of the products of that conference. The message from Durban was clear and remains so, that the conditions identified and discussed continue to exist and remain as scourges and violations of human rights. As pointed out in Durban, victimization that occurs in these forms often subjects individuals and groups to multiple or aggravated forms of oppression, particularly as they often intersect with discriminations based on religious or gender bias. The Durban Conference, held in 2001 just days prior to the September 11, 2001, attacks in the United States (U.S.), had been opposed by the U. S. and its low level delegation withdrew before the end of the meeting.

A report of the Commission on Human Rights Special Rapporteur [SR] on Racism on the fight against these human rights violations was presented to the 58th General Assembly by the secretary general. In addition to describing the work of the SR, these current manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia, and related intolerances were highlighted:

- The growth of the use of the Internet to spread hate. The resurgence of racism at sporting events, particularly noted at international tennis and football events, despite the critical role sports have played in fostering racial integration and the promotion of international understanding.
- The resurgence of anti-Semitism and the growth of Islamophobia both undoubtedly spurred by events in the Middle East and the Gulf region.
- The special rapporteur called for focused attention on the forms of discrimination that affect and increase the vulnerability of immigrants, refugees, and non-nationals.

(On resolutions related to the follow up of Durban in both the Human Rights Commission (HRC) and the United Nations General Assembly [UNGA], the U.S. voted in the negative. The UNGA vote was 102/2.)

H. Human Rights and Indigenous Peoples—A Process on Hold

In 1994, the United Nations General Assembly (UNGA) designated the years from 1995 to 2004 as the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People. The goal was the strengthening of international cooperation for the solution of problems faced by indigenous peoples in matters related, among other things, to human rights, environment, development, education, and health. It recognized that some 300,000,000 people the world over, identified as indigenous peoples, peoples whose lands and cultures were overrun by colonial and imperial developments, continue to suffer under conditions of deprivation of need, denial of rights, and denigration of personhood.

One of the commitments and intentions of the decade specified in 1994 was the completion of a “United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.” To this end the Commission on Human Rights (CHR) established in 1995 an “open-ended intercessional working group.” As interest and concern has developed, the CHR established also the position of the special rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms of Indigenous People. Indigenous issues were prominent at the 2001 World Conference Against Racism, in Durban, mentioned previously in this report.

In 2002, a “Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues (PFII),” a subsidiary organ of the Economic and Social Council (created in 2000) had its first meeting. It is worth noting that the International Labor Organization set a precedent in 1989 with the Convention Concerning Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries (Convention 169). However, as the “International Decade of the World’s Indigenous People” draws to a close, no agreement on a Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples has been achieved. Therefore, one of the major goals of the decade is in doubt. Requests by the PFII and major indigenous organizations for a second decade have been sidetracked pending a review of the achievements of the first decade. Supporters of the indigenous peoples movement are concerned that without action by the end of the decade the chances of achieving a precedent setting declaration are diminished. (The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), with its commitments to indigenous concerns has the possibility of advocating both for the conclusion of a responsible declaration and a call for a second decade as the indigenous issues will remain pressing on the global as well as national scene. The Presbyterian delegation in Durban worked extensively with the Indigenous caucus and a representative continues to work with the UNHCHR on this matter.)

Insiders indicate that the countries most reluctant to concluding a substantive declaration include the United States, Canada, and Australia. The issues, indeed, are challenging, particularly to these countries: honoring of treaties of long-standing historic record, honoring and protecting land claims, respecting religious and cultural traditions, assuring rights of autonomy and self-determination, rights as citizens, and the question of acknowledgment, compensation, and/or reparations for the victimization that has occurred throughout history.

The Organization of American States (OAS), all of whose members have indigenous populations, has been working on its own draft, the American Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples. Symbolically these negotiations have marked a historic step, more that 500 years after the European conquest of the hemisphere: an inclusive meeting of indigenous representatives and those of the national governments. The indigenous peoples face numerous difficulties in the process: even at the table they lack equivalent status as the government representative. The indigenous persons involved are those who represent peoples’ organizations, e.g. the Council of Large Land-Based Tribes and the Indian Law Resource Center, but they do not have equality of political status. Nor do they have the financial resources of governments to assure adequate representation at appropriate meetings. A United Nations Voluntary Fund for the International Decade, set up to help enable participation in the worldwide efforts, remains underfunded.

Difficulties in the Americas have been increasing, with growing militancy of indigenous peoples in Bolivia and Ecuador, pressures for protective legislation in Mexico, and growing anxiety among the Inuit peoples faced with the prospects that global warming will threaten destruction to their way of life. (The Inuits are the indigenous people of the arctic region, inclusive, among others, of Alaskan Inupiat, Canadian Inuits, and Russian Yupiks. Many years ago a grant from the Presbyterian church helped enable the creation of a Circumpolar Conference to address their common concerns.) Some of these groups have asked the European Court of Human Rights to bring a judgment against the United States for failure to endorse the Kyoto Protocol.

The OAS draft text discussed at meetings in 2003 is quite comprehensive, but reaching agreement on critical matters is still to be achieved. The conflicts center on what the states themselves are willing to commit to, particularly the states with large indigenous populations, as well as those disagreements between the states and the representatives of the indigenous peoples themselves. As an example, the draft treaty tries to constrict the right to “self-determination,” a well-established but controversial human-rights principle, to a condition to be recognized “within” existing states (Article III & XX), limiting the concept to the right to autonomy or limited self-government (but not sovereignty) within existing states.

I. The United States, the United Nations and Human Rights

The role/relation of the United States (U.S.) to the human rights efforts of the United Nations (UN) needs/must be seen on a number of levels: support of programs and activities; voting records, political use of the UN for its own purposes; protection of “clients;” or pressure on foes; and its ratification to and adherence to international human rights covenants and conventions. Much of what can be seen reflects both the ongoing dynamics of world events and the internal domestic politics within the U. S. (such as on matters of women’s reproductive rights and capital punishment). The most immediate, visible, and telling impression given to the rest of the world—friend and foe alike—is its unwillingness to ratify and adhere to some of the major international instruments, even though it has helped to draft them all.

While the numbers of countries ratifying the major human rights covenants and conventions continues to grow, the U.S. continues its resistance to committing itself to the international norms. Of the major human rights instruments and protocols, the U.S. has ratified less than half. It has not ratified the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), and the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (MWC). It is the only country in the world that has refused to ratify the major international treaty to ensure the well-being of the world’s children, the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC), a sad reflection of the fact that it is negligent regarding the well-being of its own children. Given the link between fighting terrorism and transnational organized crime, the U. S. has not ratified the UN Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime, nor, as of 2002, had it ratified two protocols to that convention, one aimed at the prevention, suppression, and punishment of trafficking in persons, especially women and children, the other dealing with the smuggling of migrants.

(The General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have called on numerous occasions for the ratification by the United States of ICESCR, CEDAW, and CRC.)

J. Human Rights as an International Issue in the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict

In the international arena, Israel remains one of the major sources of concern for its violations of the rights of Palestinians, rooted in its continued illegal occupation of the West Bank and Gaza. The impact of this occupation is seen in road and transportation blockages, curfews, detention without trial, house demolitions, land- and air-based military strikes with continuing civilian casualties, isolation through constructions of limited highways and an ever lengthening wall, exploitation and control of labor and economy. The Israeli government continues to justify these actions in the name of security. The responses of the Palestinians, including those of violence, are used to rationalize their continued repression and oppression.

While Iraq was correctly criticized for its defiance of United Nations (UN) resolutions (both General Assembly and Security Council), it should be remembered that two supporters of the U.S./United Kingdom (UK) war on Iraq have been in defiance of more UN resolutions and for longer periods of time: Turkey and Israel. The 58th General Assembly of the UN had before it a series of resolutions concerning the practices of the Israeli government in treatment of the Palestinian people. The U.S., with consistent support for its client, has opposed most, if not all of them. While occasionally the U.S. is embarrassed to the point that it must verbally chastise the Israeli government (e.g., on the settlements of the wall), there is little evidence that it is prepared to hold Israel accountable for its continued occupation, repression, settlement development, and the encirclement of Palestine by the construction of a wall designed to cut off the Palestinian people. The violence from both the Israeli people and Palestinian people is to be condemned.

III. Regional Updates

A. North America

With growing unemployment, rising housing cost, and escalating health-care expenses, the area of economic rights and access is a crucial one for this North America update. The continuing concerns of civil and political rights remain a concern for advocates of justice issues in the United States. This section of the report, although entitled North America, will focus on the United States. Mexico and Central America will be covered within the Latin America section as appropriate. The concerns of Canada are similar to those of the U.S.. The one difference would be the access they have to medical care, as they are a universal health-care access system.

1. Civil Rights

a. Immigrants Rights and Challenges

Education—Undocumented high school students currently face barriers to higher education by colleges and universities as these institutions make scholarships and in-state tuition available to them at out-of-state rates and guidelines. Even as parents or legal guardians attempts to become legalized citizens, these barriers remain an obstacle to their children's higher education. There is a bill pending in the United States Congress that has only received subcommittee support. Anti-immigrant groups have increased their lobbying efforts against those senators who voted in favor of the bill, causing some to go so far as to withdraw support.

It is estimated that there are approximately 7.5 to 9.5 million undocumented immigrants in the United States (U.S.). "The new data available from March 2000, 2001, and 2002 Current Population Surveys (CPS) (consistent with Census 2000) ... places the number of undocumented alien children who have lived in the United States for 5 years or longer reaching age 18 each year at the top of the range previously estimated, or about 80,000... About one-sixth to one-fifth of each cohort fails to complete high school, leaving roughly 65,000 undocumented immigrants who have lived in the United States five years or longer who graduate from high school each year." This statistics reflects a potential of those who could or would apply, if more programs were available to them. Not all graduating students want to go on to college. (Quote from "Further Demographic Information Relating to the DREAM ACT, by Jeffery S. Passel, Ph.D., The Urban institute 2100 M. Street, N.W. Washington DC—www.nilc.org/immlawpolicy/DREAM)

b. Hate Crimes

There is good news in this category. Hate crimes have decreased in the U.S. according to the latest Federal Bureau of Investigative Report (FBI). The FBI received 7,462 reports of hate crime incidents from 12,400 state and local law-enforcement agencies around the nation during the 2002 reporting period. These 2002 bias crimes included eleven killings that were motivated by race (48.8 percent), religion (19.1 percent), sexuality (16.7 percent), ethnicity/national origin (14.8 percent), or disability (0.6 percent). By comparison, there were 9,700 such crimes in 2001. Hate crime killings in 2001 was nineteen.

Two-thirds of the 2002 crimes were against individuals while the remaining third were against property as actions of vandalism. When against an individual, the victim is usually the brunt of intimidation. The FBI reports that the perpetrators of these crimes during 2002 were—61.6 percent white; 21.8 percent black; 1.2 percent Asian or Pacific Islander; and 0.6 percent were American Indian or Alaskan Native. Following September 11, 2001, the Department of Justice has added a hotline number for those who want to report crimes that are connected to terrorism. The "Terrorism Victim Hotline" is 1-800-331-0075 or 1-800-833-6885 (Office of Justice Programs-Department of Justice at www.ojp.usdoj.gov/ovc/assist/nvaa2002).

c. Juvenile Death Penalty

Since 1976, twenty-one juvenile offenders have been executed. The executions were carried out in seven states: Texas, Virginia, Georgia, Louisiana, Missouri, Oklahoma, and South Carolina. Texas alone carried out thirteen executions-almost two-thirds of the total. There are eighty-one juvenile offenders currently on death row.

The juvenile offenders currently on death row can be found in fifteen of the twenty-two states that permit juvenile executions: Texas, Alabama, Mississippi, Arizona, Louisiana, Florida, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Missouri, Kentucky, Nevada, Oklahoma, and Virginia.

Currently, twenty-eight states (along with the federal government and the District of Columbia) prohibit juvenile executions. Of the twenty-two states that permit juvenile executions, seventeen states set the minimum age (at the time of offense) for execution at sixteen years, and five states set the minimum age at seventeen years. Missouri is one of the states that has set the minimum age for juvenile executions at sixteen. It has had four juveniles on death row, and executed one in the early 1990s.

Since 1999, two states have enacted laws to abolish the juvenile death penalty—Indiana (2002) and Montana (1999). Legislation that would ban juvenile executions has recently progressed at least partway to adoption in three states (Arkansas, Florida, and Texas). Similar legislation has been introduced in at least another six states (Arizona, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, Pennsylvania, and South Dakota). In contrast, not a single state has lowered the minimum age of execution during the same period. (Information on the juvenile death penalty is taken in its entirety from (www.mokids.org/juveniledeathpenalty.org).

2. Economic Rights

a. Health Care

The number of people who are uninsured grew by 2.4 million between 2001 and 2002, to 43.6 million, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. That means that an estimated 15.2 percent of the population had no health coverage during all of 2002. The Census Bureau noted that the overall increase in uninsured is attributable to the decrease in the percentage covered by employment-based health insurance. Public programs, particularly Medicaid, covered more people through this time period and helped soften the loss of employer-based health insurance.

Those who are insured are experiencing increased costs for health insurance premiums and prescription drugs. According to the National Coalition on Health Care, health insurance premiums rose at a rate eight times faster than general inflation in 2002, experiencing the largest one-year surge in premiums in more than a decade. In the absence of comprehensive reform, the average annual premium for employer-sponsored family health insurance could reach $14,545 by 2006.

While Americans were faced with all these aforementioned challenges, the U.S. Congress and the administration failed to pass legislation to address the issue of the uninsured. In November 2003, Congress passed legislation to add a prescription drug benefit to Medicare. While that bill will provide some help to some Medicare beneficiaries, it does not do nearly enough to reduce the escalating cost of drugs, nor will it help to reduce the number of uninsured Americans. (Sources: Robert J. Mills and Shailesh Bhandari, Health Insurance Coverage in the United States: 2002, Current Population Reports, U.S. Census Bureau, September 2003, www.familiesusa.org, and www.nchc.org.)

b. Poverty/Anti-Hunger

- Food insecurity and Poverty. According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, new census data surveys show that food insecurity and hunger increased in the United States in 2002 for the third consecutive year. In the U.S., 34.9 million people currently live in households experiencing food insecurity, an increase of 3.9 million since 1999. Eleven percent of U.S. households (twelve million households) experienced either food insecurity or hunger in 2002. Food insecure households are those that are not able, for financial reasons, to access a sufficient diet at all times in the past twelve months. Households labeled hungry are those where one or more household members experienced hunger due to lack of financial resources at some time in the past twelve months.

In 2002, the nation's official poverty rate also rose—from 11.7 percent in 2001 to 12.1 percent in 2002, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. Almost thirty-five million people are living below the poverty level. Under the official poverty measure, children under eighteen had a poverty rate of 16.7 percent in 2002. The official poverty threshold, under which people are considered to be living in poverty, is $9,359 for an individual under sixty-five and $18,244 for a family of four. More than forty-seven million people are living below 125 percent of the poverty level. (Sources: Mark Nord, Margaret Andrews, and Steven Carlson, "Household Food Security in the United States, 2002," Food Assistance and Nutrition Research Report No. (FANRR35), Economic Research Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, October 2003 and <http://www.census.gov/prod/2003pubs/p60-222.pdf>.)

- Minimum Wage. At the same time as food insecurity and poverty increased, the federal minimum wage for nonexempt employees remained stagnant—at $5.15 per hour. The last time the federal minimum wage was increased (from $4.75 to $5.15) was in 1997. (Many states also have minimum wage laws. When an employee is subject to both federal and state wage laws, the employee is entitled to the higher of the two minimum wages.) An individual working for minimum wage would earn only $10,712 a year if he or she worked 40 hours a week, 52 weeks a year. This means that if a single parent with one child worked full-time, without taking sick days or vacation, he or she would be living below the poverty line. Legislation has been proposed to increase the minimum wage, including legislation by Senator Tom Daschle (D-SD) and Representative George Miller (D-CA) to increase it to $6.65 an hour. This legislation has not been brought to a vote in the U.S. Congress. (Sources: thomas.loc.gov and <http://www.dol.gov/dol/topic/wages/minimumwage.htm>)

- Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF). As people of faith and religious commitment, the church has always been called to stand with and seek justice for those who are vulnerable or living in poverty. This is central to many religious traditions, sacred texts, and teachings. People are more than the sum of their economic activities. Anti-hunger programs must provide more than economic incentives and disincentives; and, as a people, we must overcome biased assumptions that feed negative social stereotypes about those living in poverty.

Since Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) began in 1996, the number of people on the welfare rolls throughout the nation has been reduced. However, during the last three years, the number of people living in poverty has increased. Of those no longer on the TANF rolls, many have obtained jobs that do not provide a living wage. At the same time, they have lost the supportive services that are essential to maintaining their households, so that they are often poorer than they were on welfare. The TANF must continue to provide work support for people moving into the workforce but earning low wages.

As advocates continue to work for the reauthorization of TANF, they are calling on Congress to provide more funds for TANF to ensure its ability to act as both a work support program and a safety net for those for whom work is not an option. A strong and reliable safety net is more essential than ever at times of disaster.

Members of the faith community, including the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), are calling for a TANF reauthorization to include, among other improvements:

- (1) Poverty reduction should be the primary goal of TANF;
- (2) A funding increase of at least $5.5 billion should be provided to meet childcare needs;
- (3) The restoration of full benefits to immigrants, including access to federal TANF money, State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP) and Medicaid services, childcare, and appropriate education and training;
- (4) The maintenance of the current work requirement of thirty hours per week (20 hours for parents of preschool children); and
- (5) Expanded access to education and training by allowing vocational training to count as a work activity for twenty-four months and by removing the cap on participation in educational activities, and the review of personal and structural barriers that affect TANF recipients' ability to work before sanctions are imposed.

c. Women's Earnings

Despite affirmative action and equal opportunity laws in the United States, women still earn 20.3 percent less than a male would earn in same or similar positions. This statistics comes from a General Accounting Office study reported in the Washington Post on November 21, 2003. The study took into account the fact that women may work fewer hours and are more likely to take time off from employment to raise children than do men. Even accounting for this disparity, women still earned less. Those analyzing and preparing the data have said that women still face significant discrimination in the workplace.

A man's work time is typically about 2,147 hours per year, while a woman's is less at 1,675. Other differences—nine out of ten men work full-time, only two out of three women work full time; men are out of the labor pool an average of one week per year, women are out for up to three weeks annually. (Direct access to the study can be found at www.gao.gov. The report is dated October 31, 2003, and numbered GAO-04-35.)

B. Central and West Africa

The Democratic Republic of Congo, Liberia, Sudan, and Burundi made substantial progress in resolving protracted and deadly conflicts in 2003. In July 2003, African leaders adopted the Protocol to the African Charter on Human and People's Rights on the Rights of Women, committing their governments to ending discrimination and violence against women and promoting women's political participation.

1. Civil and Political Rights

a. Democratic Republic of Congo

The December 2002 peace accord enabled the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) to achieve slow progress toward peace in 2003, but grave human rights violations persisted, especially in the country's strife-torn eastern regions.

The formation of a government of national unity at the end of June 2003 ostensibly brought an end to a five-year civil war that has claimed more than three million lives. The transitional government, composed of representatives of the former government, the main armed factions, opposition political parties, and civil society organizations, is due to serve for two years until the DRC can hold its first democratic elections since it won independence from Belgium in 1960. By late 2003, there were a number of signs that the nation was moving towards greater unity and stability: the Congolese flag was again flying throughout the country, a single national currency had been re-established, and the Congo River system had been reopened to commercial traffic.

A new wave of violence, however, gripped the resource-rich Ituri district, where fighting among local ethnic militias and armed political factions claimed the lives of at least 5,000 people between July 2002 and March 2003. For the past few years, the area has been almost continuously occupied by soldiers from neighboring Uganda, whose repeated shifts in support for various factions helped to fuel the conflict. When Uganda withdrew its 9,000-strong force from Ituri at the end of April 2003, the 200 United Nations (UN) peacekeepers who had been deployed in the district were ill-equipped to protect the vulnerable civilian population. Armed groups burned Bunia, the region's main town; several hundred people were killed and thousands more displaced as militia attacks escalated dramatically.

In early June 2003, the European Union (EU) launched a UN-mandated interim peacekeeping mission that averted more widespread killings, initiated a political dialogue with local militias, and allowed many people displaced from the town in the previous weeks to return. Three months later, EU forces relinquished control of the town to the now 4,500-strong UN peacekeeping mission in Ituri.

Despite these developments, civilians remained vulnerable to attacks and banditry at the hands of militia members. Between May and September 2003, more than 1,000 people, including a disproportionate number of women and children, were killed. In October 2003, at least 65 people, mainly women and children, were massacred in a rural area of Ituri district.

A further 7,500 UN peacekeepers were deployed in the strife-torn, neighboring provinces of North and South Kivu. The UN mission was also working to address the widespread problem of child soldiers through its human rights and demobilization program and through the posting of child protection officers throughout the country.

b. Angola

After nearly three decades of civil war, Angola continues to confront the challenges of reconstruction. By mid 2003, roughly half of the 4.1 million people internally displaced by the war, and nearly a third of the estimated 400,000 refugees in neighboring countries had returned to their home areas or to resettlement sites, most spontaneously.

The Angolan government has worked with the United Nations (UN) to enhance protection for displaced people, but returning refugees still face many problems. According to Human Rights Watch, some have been coerced into returning, in violation of international standards. In one case, officials reportedly burned crops and houses at a transit center in Angola to compel people to move on. Former combatants often receive government assistance in preference to civilians, in part because of the security risk that they may pose if they are unsatisfied. Female household heads and their children are often particularly vulnerable to violence and harassment, especially at border posts and in transit centers, where they are sometimes housed with ex-combatants. Landmines pose a further threat; Angola continued to experience the continent's largest number of landmine casualties (287 in 2002), although the death toll is slowly declining.

Angola has limited capacity to meet the needs of refugees. Although malnutrition rates have stabilized and the humanitarian situation is gradually improving, 1.8 million people still depend on food aid for their survival. There has also been a pervasive failure to provide adequate identity documents to displaced persons so that they may exercise their rights to recognition as persons before the law.

c. Sudan

During 2003, Sudan made significant progress toward ending the conflict that has devastated Africa's largest country for a generation. But substantial issues remain unresolved and could ignite further conflict if they are not adequately addressed.

In June 2002, peace talks opened in Kenya between Sudan's Islamic government and the Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army (SPLM/A), which controls much of the nation's largely Christian south. These negotiations produced the October 2002 Machakos Protocol, which established the framework for future talks, provided for possible southern secession after a six-and-a-half year interim period, and recognized the government's right to enforce Islamic Sharia law in the north.

On September 25, 2003, SPLM/A leader John Garang and Sudanese Vice-President Ali Osman Taha concluded a second agreement that resolved contentious security concerns. In terms of the accord, the SPLM/A will be allowed to retain a separate army during the interim period, but joint/integrated units, made up of equal numbers of Sudanese Armed Forces and SPLA soldiers, will also be established as a symbol of unity and a model for possible integration of the two armies. The agreement demarcated operational areas and deployment patterns for each of the forces and declared an internationally monitored ceasefire. Demobilized SPLA soldiers will be given positions in Sudanese government institutions, such as the police, prison, and wildlife services.

Although both government and SPLM/A leaders hailed the agreement as one of the last steps on the road to peace, pitfalls remain. While the current agreement holds out hope of resolving the long-running conflict between the SPLM/A and the government, it does not address the grievances of people in east and west Sudan. A bilateral accord that excludes these areas, as well as other armed factions in the south, could create further tensions; indeed, there were signs of intensifying conflict in the east and west in late 2003.

The agreement also does not resolve issues of power and wealth-sharing or control of three contested areas: the Nuba Mountains, Southern Blue Nile, and oil-rich Abyei. Garang and Taha began to discuss the last issue in October 2003, but any sustainable agreement must also be acceptable to the people who live in these areas. A new round of negotiations began in December 2003.

A government-SPLM/A accord would offer no direct relief to the majority of Muslims in the north who do not necessarily share the military dictatorship's fundamentalist brand of Islam. Human rights groups have accused the Sudanese government of numerous abuses, including arbitrary arrests, torture, harassment of churches, and closure of newspapers. However, in the face of emerging alliances between the SPLM/A and northern opposition groups, the Sudanese government has initiated a process of consensus building that may ultimately result in a more open society with greater protection for human rights and religious freedom.

d. Nigeria

Nigeria's transition to democratic civilian rule in 1999 was widely believed to coincide with improved human rights conditions and greater freedom of expression. However, a recent Human Rights Watch report (Nigeria: Renewed Crackdown on Freedom of Expression, December 2003) details numerous incidents of harassment, intimidation, detention, and even extrajudicial killings of government opponents, particularly in the run-up to Nigeria's presidential and parliamentary elections in April and May 2003. At least 100 people were killed and many more injured during the election period. An additional 250 people died in fighting between Christian and Muslim groups at the time of the Miss World contest in November 2002, with dozens of casualties caused by Nigerian security forces deployed to quell the violence. Nigeria's oil-rich Delta State also continued to be plagued by conflict during 2003, leading to hundreds of deaths and the displacement of thousands of residents. Although the violence has ethnic and political dimensions, it is essentially a struggle for control of resources, fueled by the ready availability of small arms and widespread impunity for abuses by all parties, including the security forces. Although the number of human rights abuses remain far fewer and less violent than under the previous military dictatorship, these breaches of national and international obligations in Africa's most populous nation are a cause for concern.

e. Liberia

Following decades of maladministration, dictatorship, and conflict, Liberia faced its best prospects for peace in years at the close of 2003. But security remained elusive in many parts of the country as civilian populations continue to face looting and attacks by armed groups.

Early in the year 2003, the civil war that had been gathering momentum in the northeast spread steadily to engulf much of the country. In April 2003, Liberians United for Reconciliation and Democracy (LURD), a rebel movement active since 1999, launched an attack on Gbarnga, forcing more than 50,000 people already displaced by earlier fighting to flee south towards the capital, Monrovia. Tens of thousands of refugees poured into Monrovia's suburbs. Meanwhile, a second rebel faction, the Movement for Democracy in Liberia (MODEL), broke away from LURD and opened a new front in the war in the southeast. Both rebel movements and government forces persistently violated the rights of civilians. International human rights groups documented numerous incidents of murder, summary execution, looting, rape and other forms of sexual violence, and forced recruitment of child soldiers.

With rebel forces advancing steadily on the capital, President Charles Taylor's government negotiated a ceasefire with the insurgents on June 17, 2003, but the offensive continued. By the end of June 2003, battles were taking place in the streets of Monrovia, causing panic and more than 1,000 deaths among the civilian population. The United States dispatched 2,000 Marines to the country, briefly landing a small contingent following President Taylor's flight into exile on August 11, 2003. The city's anguish was relieved mainly by 3,000 Nigerian peacekeepers, sent by the West African economic community. They succeeded in restoring calm in several urban centers, but the limited force had little impact on the countryside, where most Liberians live.

The situation began to improve in the last quarter of the year. All-party negotiations in Accra, Ghana, produced a peace agreement on August 18, 2003, in terms of which a National Transitional Government was inaugurated in October to administer the country for two years, in preparation for national elections. Liberia's new president, Gyude Bryant, set up a commission responsible for disarming the 40,000 LURD, MODEL, and former government soldiers and mended fences with many of the country's neighbors. The United Nations commenced its largest peacekeeping operation to date in Liberia. However, Liberia continues to face daunting challenges.

Previous governments left Liberia bankrupt, with a debt burden in excess of $3 billion. The civil war disrupted agricultural production and sent the prices of basic goods soaring. President Bryant has cut the price of petroleum products and rice, Liberia's staple food, and launched a campaign to rebuild war-ravaged schools. However, civilians in many parts of the country remain vulnerable to attacks by increasingly desperate and undisciplined armed bands. Many combatants have yet to surrender their weapons and, despite a provision in the peace agreement that requires them to remain in the areas that they held in mid-August, there have been numerous attempts to grab additional spoils of war. Hundreds of thousands of people remain displaced from their homes, and many more continue to flee to escape physical and sexual assault, abduction, forced labor and looting. Although international peacekeepers have enhanced security in many areas, only about one third of the envisioned 15,000-strong force had arrived by the end of the year. The delays have limited the force's capacity to protect civilians in all areas. Even in areas under UN control, former combatants retain easy access to weapons, as riots in Monrovia in early December 2003 illustrated.

f. Côte d'Ivoire

In November 2002, two new rebel groups launched an antigovernment offensive in western Côte d'Ivoire. The campaign came at an opportune moment for the Mouvement Patriotique de Côte d'Ivoire (MCPI), which orchestrated a military mutiny on September 19, 2002, that enabled it to seize control of roughly half of the country. The MCPI combatants had signed a ceasefire with the government in October 2002 and could not make further military gains without violating this agreement. By the end of 2002, the rebels had captured substantial territory in the west.

In January 2003, French intervention secured a new ceasefire agreement between the government and the western rebel forces, but reports of ongoing fighting along the Liberian-Ivorian border persisted. Peace talks in France produced a framework for a new government of reconciliation, in terms of which Laurent Gbagbo, the declared winner of the flawed 2000 elections, retained the presidency while most substantive powers were to be delegated to a prime minister selected by consensus. The agreement called for the creation of a national human rights commission, the establishment of an international inquiry into grave breaches of human rights, and an end to the impunity of those responsible for summary executions, in particular the death squads. In February 2003, the United Nations (UN) gave its support to the January 25 peace accord and authorized French and West African peacekeepers to protect civilians in their zones of operation. Implementation of the plan stalled, however, as the factions haggled over the allocation of ministerial portfolios. Meanwhile, fighting, and reports of massacres, continued in the west as government and rebel forces pursued a proxy war using Liberian mercenaries. The MCPI representatives refused to take up their seats in government, citing security concerns.

While civilians throughout the country suffered as a result of the war, residents of western Côte d'Ivoire became the main targets of killings, sexual violence, looting, and other abuses committed by government and rebel forces. Government forces and government-recruited Liberian mercenaries executed, detained, and attacked perceived supporters of the rebel forces based on ethnic, national, religious, and political affiliation. Civilian militias, tolerated if not encouraged by state security forces, targeted immigrant communities. The once-fertile west was devastated, triggering a humanitarian crisis marked by serious child malnutrition.

Thousands of people fled the region for uncertain refuge in Liberia and Guinea, including many Liberians who had previously crossed the border in an attempt to escape civil war in their own country. Liberian refugees in western Côte d'Ivoire faced not only violence and forced recruitment at the hands of the Ivorian army and other armed groups but also xenophobic attacks by Ivorians incited by local political leaders and press reports that portrayed Liberians as accomplices of the rebellion.

Another ceasefire was signed in early May 2003, and members of the government of reconciliation finally took up their seats. The UN approved a delegation of military liaison personnel and human rights monitors in May. By late May, the security situation in the west was improving, but the humanitarian situation remained dire. The following month, French and Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) forces moved into western areas to monitor the ceasefire.

By July 2003, the war was officially at an end and implementation of the January 2003 peace accord seemed to be on track. The government reopened the border with Burkina Faso and normalized trading relations with Burkina Faso and Mali. The National Assembly adopted an amnesty law, in line with the peace agreement.

In September 2003, however, ministers from the former rebel groups (now cooperating under the name Forces Nouvelles) resigned from the government, citing President Gbagbo's unilateral appointment of ministers and his failure to delegate executive powers to the prime minister. Disarmament of the former rebels failed to commence on October 1, 2003, as promised. Although ECOWAS stepped up diplomatic interventions in an effort to salvage the situation, by November 2003 rebel leaders had declared a state of emergency in their northern strongholds, and it appeared that the war could resume at any moment.

C. Southern and East Africa

1. Civil, Economic and Political Rights

a. Zimbabwe

Zimbabwe's economy deteriorated alarmingly in 2003, exacerbating a complex humanitarian crisis. Agricultural production and commercial distribution networks continued to collapse in the face of adverse weather conditions, the ravages of HIV/AIDS, persistent fuel shortages, and the seizure of commercial farms. As a result, more than five million people relied on food assistance from international agencies by the end of 2003.

Local and international relief organizations accused the government of manipulating food distribution to reward party loyalists and punish perceived opponents. The problem was reportedly particularly grave in government-sponsored programs, which were further complicated by corruption, but it also affected international efforts that inevitably relied on local authorities to assist with food distribution. Some international donors have also made aid conditional on criteria other than need. The government compounded the problem by prohibiting private merchants and all but a handful of nongovernmental organizations from importing grain in an attempt to consolidate its control over food distribution.

Critics of the government's policy choices have faced harassment, intimidation, beatings, and imprisonment. The primary targets have been political opponents, human rights monitoring groups, and the independent media. Although much of the abuse meted out to critics is illegal, the government has also enacted new legislation to suppress freedoms of expression, association, and assembly. For instance, the Labour Relations Amendment Act, adopted in March 2003, effectively denies workers' right to strike.

In May 2003, Zimbabwe's Supreme Court struck down a key provision of the controversial Access to Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which criminalizes the publication of falsehoods. Shortly after the ruling, however, the government deported an independent journalist, ignoring a court order staying his expulsion. Four months later, security forces closed Zimbabwe's only independent newspaper, the Daily News, for failing to register with the National Media and Information Commission. A number of the paper's reporters and directors were subsequently arrested and attempts to resume publication were thwarted by authorities, despite court rulings in the paper's favor.

The Committee for the Protection of Journalists (CPJ) has cited Zimbabwe as one of the worst places in Africa to be a journalist, along with Eritrea, Ethiopia, and Togo. In July 2003, the CPJ reported that twenty-five journalists were imprisoned in Africa for their work, including seventeen in Eritrea alone. Both Ethiopia and Togo introduced new legislation to restrict press freedom and silence journalists.

b. South Africa

In November 2003, after years of legal and political battles with grassroots organizations campaigning for a national program for the prevention and treatment of HIV/AIDS, the South African government finally unveiled plans to make vital anti-retroviral medications available through public health facilities. The plan envisions that each health district in the country will have at least one anti-retroviral service point within one year.

Land reform remained a critical issue for the nation's post-apartheid transformation, especially in light of the experiences of neighboring Zimbabwe. Many rural dwellers, including many who were forcibly displaced during the apartheid era, have limited access to land and minimal security of tenure. South Africa's Parliament is considering new legislation to improve land tenure security for people living on communal land. However, land rights organizations have been critical of proposals that would entrench the authority of unelected traditional leaders and provide insufficient tenure security for women.

c. Uganda

In July 2003, 20,000 young people staged a peace march in to draw attention to one of Africa's most brutal, but most overlooked, conflicts. For nearly eighteen years, the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) has been terrorizing communities in northern Uganda, looting and burning villages, killing and maiming civilians, and planting landmines all in a supposed attempt to protect residents from the aggression of the Ugandan army. The LRA is most notorious for its practice of abducting children to serve as soldiers, porters and, in the case of girls, as sex slaves. The movement is thought to have kidnapped more than 20,000 children since the late 1980s, including 8,500 children since June 2002 alone. As many as 90 percent of the movement's soldiers are reportedly abducted children.

Violence in the region has been escalating since the Ugandan government launched an offensive against the LRA in March 2002. An estimated 800,000 people have been displaced by the recent round of fighting. A peace initiative, undertaken by area religious leaders, stalled in the face of the intensified fighting. Recently, the LRA has begun to target religious leaders, humanitarian workers, and those living in camps for internally displaced people.

D. Central, South, and Southeast Asia

1. Civil and Political Rights

a. Pakistan

Four years after President Pervez Musharraf seized power in Pakistan, Human Rights Watch sadly reported on October 10, 2003, "military agencies have frequently tortured and harassed political opponents, critical journalists, and former government officials. The past four years have also seen a rise in activity by extremist religious groups and an increase in sectarian killings in Pakistan, in part due to the Musharraf government's policy of marginalizing mainstream opposition political groups. Opposition legislators have told Human Rights Watch they have been beaten, harassed and subjected to blackmail for opposing Musharraf's policies." In addition, the report is also alarming in regards to the violation of human rights of women and religious minorities: "The growing influence of extremist religious elements has impinged on the rights of women and religious minorities. Laws regarding rape and honor killings still discriminate against women. The number of blasphemy cases registered has risen while discrimination and persecution on grounds of religion persist. Adherents of the Shi'a branch of Islam have faced numerous violent attacks by Sunni Muslim militant groups." (Source: <http://www.hrw.org/press/2003/10/pakistan101003.htm>)

In 2003, the northwest frontier province of Peshawar adopted the Sharia law. The unanimous and debtless adoption of the bill is no doubt troubling to Christians, moderate Muslims, and other minorities alike, especially in regards to its impact on the national level.

Christians in Pakistan are a vulnerable minority, often viewed as consenting allies to the international policies of United States (U.S.) administration. Sometimes Christians are unjustly singled out and lashed against when lawless extremists criminally choose to vent their anger and hatred toward the U.S. political and military intervention in the region coupled with indifference to justice and human dignity.

b. Indonesia

The nation of Indonesia, where almost 235 million are spread over about 17,000 islands, home for about 300 ethnic groups speaking about 600 languages and dialects, of whom about 88 percent are Muslims and about 8 percent Christians. Indonesia boasts the largest population of Muslims and Reformed Christians in the world.

Growing concerns are mounting over the violent conflict in the province of Aceh. In October 2003, Human Rights Watch called on the government of Indonesia to "remove from its military campaign in Aceh officers responsible for gross human rights violations in Indonesia and East Timor." Human Rights Watch also cited the following restrictions:

Since the start of the military operation (May 19, 2003), the Indonesian government has severely limited the flow of information from Aceh. The government has interfered with the ability of local journalists to cover the war. It has denied access to Aceh to almost all diplomats, independent international observers, and international human rights organizations. It has also severely restricted access to United Nations and non-governmental humanitarian agencies and the foreign media (Source: <http://www.hrw.org/press/2003/10/aceh101503.htm>).

Likewise, the security conditions in Papua continue to deteriorate despite the special autonomy law passed on October 23, 2001. For the last forty-two years, the government has been seen by many in Papua as suppressing their aspirations for independence.

According to Human Rights Watch, in 2003, corruption was a serious concern in Indonesia. There were violations of international human rights law by the Tentara Nasional Indonesia (TNI) military forces, separatist conflict in Aceh and Papua, religious violence in Maluku and Poso, as well as attacks on human rights defenders. These failures stemmed in part from the administration's lack of political will to resist former supporters and beneficiaries of the Soeharto government, including the TNI. Thus, as in previous years, the Jakarta courts and prosecutors showed little willingness to take on major corruption cases. In 2004, however, due to encouraging modifications to its constitution, Indonesia is bracing for direct elections, a bicameral legislative structure, and a fully civilian government after eliminating the thirty-eight governmental seats formerly reserved for the military.

c. India

Known as the most populous democracy, India has more than one billion in population where 81 percent are Hindu, 12 percent Muslim, and only 2.3 percent Christian. Sporadic violence continues in the seven states in the Northeast, most of which is fueled by several separatist militant groups.

India is the second largest producer and consumer of silk, accounting for 20 percent of the world silk production and 8 percent of its consumption. In 2001, the United States, the largest silk consumer outside of India, imported more than 163 million in silk commodities.

In its report of January 23, 2003, Human Rights Watch details the gross human rights violations against children, whose fate is entangled with that of their families and the market economy. The silk industry in particular oppressively employs (abuses) more than 350,000 children. The report appeals to the government of India to: "implement its national laws to free and rehabilitate these 'bonded children.'"

Known as "bonded children," the report describes the children's sad reality as follows:

Bound to their employers in exchange for a loan to their families, they are unable to leave while in debt and earn so little they may never be free. A majority of them are Dalits, so-called untouchables at the bottom of India's caste system. . . . Human Rights Watch interviewed children, employers, government officials and members of nongovernmental organizations in three states that form the core of India's sari and silk industries: Karnataka, Uttar Pradesh and Tamil Nadu. At every stage of the silk industry, bonded children as young as five years old work 12 or more hours a day, six and a half or seven days a week. Children making silk thread dip their hands in boiling water that burns and blisters them. They breathe smoke and fumes from machinery, handle dead worms that cause infections, and guide twisting threads that cut their fingers. As they assist weavers, children sit at cramped looms in damp, dim rooms. They do not go to school and are often beaten by their employers. By the time they reach adulthood, they are impoverished, illiterate, and often crippled by the work (Source: Human Rights Watch, Small Change: Bonded Child Labor In India's Silk Industry, New York: Human Rights Watch, January 23, 2003 Vol. 15, No. 2 (C), <http://www.hrw.org/reports/2003/india/india0103.pdf>).

In a grim description of the reality of this oppressive cycle, children are the most vulnerable since they are perceived as mere articles of trade caught in two webs, the poverty web of their families and that of the greed of their employers. In the words of the report:

The child is, in a sense, a commodity, exchanged between his or her parents and the employer. The parents or guardians, who receive the money, are often destitute and have no other way to obtain credit—children most frequently told Human Rights Watch that their parents used the loan to pay for a wedding or funeral, birth or treatment for illness; to pay off another loan; or just to put food on the table. The employers use the loan to secure indefinitely the cheapest form of labor possible (Source: Human Rights Watch, Small Change: Bonded Child Labor In India's Silk Industry, New York: Human Rights Watch, January 23, 2003 Vol. 15, No. 2 (C), <http://www.hrw.org/reports/2003/india/india0103.pdf>).

While the stakes are high, the pay is very low; for this child-labor force, the present is depressing, and their future is gloomy. The Human Rights Watch reports on the bleak and unjust compensation or damages:

In exchange for working twelve or more hours a day, six or seven days a week, employers pay children small sums of money, sometimes just enough for transportation or snacks. The employer/creditor dictates the rate. In the silk industry, children reported starting off making from nothing to around 100 rupees (U.S.$2.08) a month, which might eventually increase to as much as 400 or 500 rupees (U.S.$8.33 to $10.42). However, the children may not actually receive this amount as some or all may be deducted against the loan. These salaries are far below minimum wage. . . . the children, typically illiterate, have no way to monitor whether the repayment is being accurately accounted for and are dependent on their employer/creditor to report how much they still owe (Source: Human Rights Watch, Small Change: Bonded Child Labor In India's Silk Industry, New York: Human Rights Watch, January 23, 2003, Vol. 15, No. 2 (C) , <http://www.hrw.org/reports/2003/india/india0103.pdf>).

These unfortunate children do not only inherit the poverty of their families, but their debts as well. In addition to the fact that their childhood is sadly lost, and instead of preparing for and building their own future, the children's fate is entangled with the miserable socioeconomic circumstances of their families, as articulated in the report:

Children may be bonded either as individuals or with their entire families. Even where the parent technically takes the loan, the child may be put to work to help pay it off and may inherit the debt when the parent dies. . . . Debts may also pass to a younger sibling when a child reaches adulthood or stops working (Human Rights Watch, Small Change: Bonded Child Labor In India's Silk Industry, New York: Human Rights Watch, January 23, 2003 Vol. 15, No. 2 (C), <http://www.hrw.org/reports/2003/india/india0103.pdf>).

E. East Asia/Pacific

Asia has been an arena of devastating wars and revolutions during the last century. The relative peace that Asia had enjoyed for almost a quarter century has been shattered in recent years by the war in Afghanistan and the bombing in Bali. Many in the region know from bitter experience that war and economic deprivation foster intolerance and a cycle of violence. Thus, war and terrorism are two issues of tremendous concern to most Asian and Pacific Islanders.

In 2003, the Iraq war and the nuclear security crisis in the Korean peninsula added new dimensions to regional instability. The Bali bombing and other random bombings claimed innocent lives in disparate locations as India, Indochina, Pakistan, and the Philippines. These crises have served to heighten religious and ethnic tensions. In 2003, Asians of different faiths and ethnicities joined the global movement for peace by rallying around the call for a peaceful solution to the Iraqi crisis. Their message was very clear: peace cannot be achieved through the use of force.

Japan's support for the United States (U.S.)-led military efforts in the Middle East has become another source of heightened tension and regional instability. Its support in Afghanistan and subsequently in Iraq, through the sending of troops and warships abroad in military action for the first time since 1945, violated its peace constitution.

China joined Russia, Germany, and France in an effort to resolve the Iraqi crisis through peaceful means. It continues to play a key role in maintaining peace in the Korean peninsula. However, China has not renounced the use of force in resolving the Taiwan issue, which has led to increase tension over the Taiwan straight.

1. Civil Rights

Peace and justice issues continue to be a deep concern for the people of Japan. The campaign for the removal of the United States (U.S.) military bases in Okinawa is an ongoing civil rights concern in this region. Citizens of Okinawa are opposing the bases because of their negative environmental impact and an increase in crime due to the location of the bases in the midst of heavily populated cities. As reported in the previous year, the "Guidelines for Defense Cooperation between Japan and U.S.A.," was bitterly opposed by peace activists and religious groups in Japan and is in conflict with Japan's Peace Constitution.

Protest against the U.S. military presence in Korea has also increased, especially when two junior high school girls were crushed to death by an U.S. armor vehicle. The Korean government is not allowed to investigate the case, because of the unequal treaty (the Status of Forces Agreement, known as SOFA) between the U.S. and the Korean governments. Without revision, the SOFA will continue to be a contentious issue in Korea, which violates the basic human rights of Koreans. Korean people want equal protection from the U.S. military violence against Korean civilians.

Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Korea have invited foreign workers into their countries in order to fill a labor shortage. A large number of foreign migrant workers labor in these countries under harsh working and living conditions. Industrial accidents happen frequently, compensation and wage payment are often delayed, and other human rights abuses have been reported, particularly among domestic female migrant workers. In South Korea, immigration authorities adopted a tough stance against migrant workers, and several thousand were arrested and deported.

Other civil rights concerns in the region include discriminatory laws and practices, and government misuse of people's rights. In Japan, minority people, such as Ainu, Burakumin, Okinawans, and Koreans, often find themselves the victims of discrimination. In Taiwan, Australia, New Zealand, China, and the Philippines, cultural minorities and aboriginal people's rights and opportunities continue to be a concern.

In the People's Republic of China and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, civil rights are severely restricted or denied. Thousands of North Korean asylum seekers in Northeast China were arrested and forcibly sent back during the year. In response to dozens of North Koreans entering foreign diplomatic facilities, the Chinese authorities stepped up their crackdown on North Koreans and forcibly returned them to North Korea. It was reported that after their return some North Koreans faced long interrogations, torture, and ill treatment. Some were reportedly sent to prison or labor camp.

Normally, citizens of China and North Korea do not have the right to participate in any peaceful acts that would lead to a change in the government. Open opposition to the Chinese Communist Party is still not tolerated.

2. Political Rights

The Constitutions of China and North Korea provides for fundamental human rights, but they are often ignored in practice. The constitutions clearly state that the freedom of speech, press, assembly, and religion are fundamental rights for all citizens. However, restrictions have been put on these rights.

In North Korea, political opposition of any kind is not tolerated. Any person who expresses an opinion contrary to the position of the government faces severe punishment. People are not free to travel within their own country, and such restrictions are imposed on foreigners as well.

China continues to stress its jurisdictional claim over Taiwan and its intent to bring about its reunification. On the other hand, the people of Taiwan desire the rights of self-determination as provided for in Article 1 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

In South Korea, the National Security Law continues to be used to imprison people for nonviolent political activities. This is a left-over regulation from the regimes of military dictators. It was often used to arrest, torture, and imprison people for anti-state activities that were as, "praising and benefiting" the enemy.

3. Economic Rights

Unemployment has been one of the most serious problems faced by the people of the region. China, with its market-based economy, has been expanding tremendously, especially along the eastern seaboard. The standard of living in this part of the country has improved, and yet, the majority people in other regions in China have not received equal benefits. Within the eastern seaboard, many export-oriented factories have poor working conditions, which contributed to the number of accidents. Workers are not properly compensated when they are injured.

In the Philippines, child labor continues to be a concern. It is said that there are more than half a million Filipino migrant women workers who are exported to Japan, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Singapore, Korea, and the Middle East as domestic laborers or entertainers. Many of these women often face underemployment as well as physical and sexual violence by their employers (Source: Human Rights Watch, December 9, 1999, p.1).

In 2003, North Korea continued to suffer from famine and malnutrition. Export oriented factories are virtually closed in this region. In recent years, North Korea began to allow commerce activities for individuals. However, the country cannot sustain its economy without international aid, particularly from South Korea.

4. Social and Cultural Rights

Aboriginal people in Taiwan have been encouraged to use their name, language, and traditional culture in recent years. As a result, many have begun to use their tribal language names. Such cultural adoption, however, has not been accompanied by a fair sharing of economic wealth. Unemployment among the aboriginal people is higher than the Taiwanese or Chinese.

Family violence and the divorce rate are rising sharply in China, Japan, Korea, and Taiwan as they enjoy new found wealth. Abandonment of disabled children and some female children continues to be a challenge, especially in China. The problem is due to poverty and ignorance on the part of parents, who do not know how to deal with disabled children or would like to have a male child. A growing number of these “unwanted” children are living in social welfare institutions.

5. Religious Rights

Religious freedom in countries of East Asia and the Pacific, although guaranteed by the constitution, either was honored or in practice sharply curtailed. China, for example, requires all religious organizations, including Christian churches, temples, and mosques, to register so as to be legally protected. In order to register a church or temple or mosque, the following conditions are required:

- a place of worship;
- a leader (priest, nun, minister, elder, or monk) of the church;
- members, a minimum of 30 to 50 persons; and
- finance and management of the building and religious activities.

Those religious groups that are not registered will not receive legal protection or face discrimination. There are cases, however, in which officials overstep the bounds of appropriate behavior. Furthermore, religious groups have varied in their willingness to comply with registration requirements made by civil authorities. Most Christian churches have registered and, in general, Christians prefer to witness to the love of God in Jesus Christ in a quiet manner that does not step out of line with government regulation.

In North Korea, freedom of religious practice is severely limited. There is one Catholic church, two Protestant churches, and a number of house churches in Pyongyang open for worship. A new theological seminary building was completed in Pyongyang in the fall of 2003, which was supported by the Presbyterian Church of Korea in South Korea. Twelve students are enrolled for study at the seminary.

Since 1945, Christians in North Korea have been labeled as vestiges of western imperialism and severely persecuted. Many Christians in the region fled to South Korea during the Korean War in 1950–53. During the 1970s, citizens in North Korea were allowed to worship at “house churches.” In the late 1980s, the Changchun Catholic church, the Bongsoo, and the Chilgol Protestant churches were built. It has been reported that there is currently more than 10,000 Christians with five hundred house churches in North Korea.

F. Europe

1. Civil Rights—Russia and Belarus

In 2003, serious challenges to the civil rights of some Russian citizens increased as the war in the Caucasus Republic of Chechnya continued, the spiral of terrorist attacks and responses escalated, and the government seemed unable to curtail increased incidents of racial attacks against minorities.

Since the war between Russian security forces and Muslim separatists in Chechnya reignited in 1999, the area of operations and the corresponding civil rights abuses have expanded. According to Human Rights Watch, “security” operations by pro-Moscow forces moved westward into the neighboring Republic of Ingushetia in 2003. Previously, Ingushetia was a place of refuge for Internally Displaced People (IDP) fleeing the violence in the cities and towns of Chechnya. Following a well-documented pattern, the security forces engaged in arbitrary arrest and detention, ill treatment, and looting of local citizens and IDPs. In an effort to create the appearance of normalcy in Chechnya, Russian officials placed renewed pressure on displaced people to leave their tent camps and relocate to their former communities.

Even as the standoff in Chechnya continued, high profile terrorist suicide bombings (reputedly by Chechens) greatly increased across the Russian Federation. Two bombings of military personnel in North Ossetia killed seventy people. Two attacks in Moscow (one at a rock concert and one in Central Moscow) killed twenty. Train bombings of civilian commuters killed at least forty in Southern Russia. In the spiraling cycle of violence, it is likely that the repressive search and seizure tactics of Russian security forces in and around Chechnya will only increase. No political resolution to this war is in sight.

Racial attacks against minorities in Russia, particularly in Moscow, continue unabated. The Task Force on Racial Attacks and Harassment of the Moscow Protestant Chaplaincy continues to document the hundreds of attacks on African, Asian, and Latin American students and refugees annually. The life-threatening beatings by skinheads and other racists almost uniformly go uninvestigated and unresolved by the Russian police. Official reports to the contrary, the fatal dormitory fire at Moscow's Friendship University, which killed forty-one students and injured another two hundred, is viewed by many students as an act of arson.

2. Political Rights—Russia and Belarus

Twelve years have past since the end of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR) and a movement toward democratic practices began in Russia. Events in 2003, however, did not represent steps forward, but rather steps backwards. In May 2003, the Kremlin succeeded in forcing the closure of the last independent TV channel to emerge in the 1990s. The further curb on media freedom ensured that the views of President Putin and his administration were the dominant views seen and heard by the public. Likewise, the parliamentary election of December was critiqued as a "regression in the democratic process" according to Organization for the Security and Cooperation election monitors. Viewed as "overwhelmingly distorted," the election was flawed by the unfair use of the state-controlled media supporting candidates of President Putin's party and limiting exposure to challengers from other parties.

3. Religious Freedom

a. Russia and Belarus

With six years of perspective, Russia's 1997 law on religion now looks less draconian than was first perceived. Church registration has generally proceeded without the dire consequences predicted by many, and wide-scale discrimination is not orchestrated on a national level. While low-level religious discrimination continues, it is largely undertaken based on the political agendas and personal loyalties of local politicians according to Forum 18, the Oslo, Norway, based religious freedom monitoring organization.

Unlike the communist period, the Russian Federation has no centralized state body dealing with religious policy affairs. Religious freedom concerns, therefore, are resolved in an "ad hoc" manner often left to government departments and/or regional administrations reports Forum 18.

This pattern of relative religious freedom in Russia stands in sharp contrast to the policies and practices in the neighboring state of Belarus. In November 2002, "the most repressive religious law in Europe" entered into force in Belarus (Keston News Service). Events of 2003 validated the initial assessment. Religious freedom is now restricted by multiple actions of the state: denial of state registration for some congregations; breaking up of home worship meetings; restrictions on religious events held in public; refusal of permission to build, purchase, or reclaim premises; and restrictions on the right of foreigners for religious work. As many as sixteen religious organizations are banned including Ahmadiyya Muslims, communities of the Full Gospel Church, and Hare Krishna, classified as destructive sects (Forum 18).

b. Spain

What follows are inserts from the report presented by Mariano Blazquez Burgo, executive secretary of the Spanish Federation of Evangelical Churches (FERDE), on May 8, 2001, to the Spanish government in Madrid Spain on “Religious Liberty and the Implementation of the Co-operation Agreement Between the Spanish State and the FEREDE (Spanish Federation of Evangelical Churches).”

(a) 6.1. Priority Interest Areas(i) B. Approval of Transitory Legislation

The FEREDE requests to complete the Royal Decree 369/99 with transitory provisions similar to those applied to the Catholic Church, to rule the situation of the following persons:

- “Cult Ministers” older than 65 years with no right to a contributive retirement pension due to the past prohibition to contribute to the Social Insurance, and also the widows without right to widow’s pension for the same reasons.
- “Cult Ministers” who were more than 50 years old when the Royal Decree entered into force and, because of that, they could not satisfy the minimum qualifying period to enjoy the contributive retirement pension right.
- “Cult Ministers” affected for one of the legal conditions foreseen to receive the permanent sickness benefits and death benefits before the accomplishment of the minimum qualifying period, thus impeding the right of social benefits or his family (widow, orphans).
- We also ask for the recognition of the years of work of the Cult Ministers as contributed years in the same terms as for the catholic priests.

(b) C. Social Insurance Book and Pensions

This issue affects a few numbers of pastors (or pastors’ widows), could not contribute to the Social Insurance, and who are now supported by their churches. Some of these people even do not have a “Health Record Book” because the Social Insurance considered that they have enough resources (the church donations).

Health Care assistance is needed for more than 100 evangelical pastors/ widows who do not have any pension (because they were not able to contribute).

4. A Special Report on the Roma People (Gypsies) in Europe

(Note: The Roma People constitute the largest ethnic minority in Europe, with communities in every country on the continent. Most of them prefer to be called “Roma” instead of the often-pejorative term “gypsies,” which is used more commonly in the vernacular.)

a. Civil Rights

The Human Rights Update 2002–2003 reported that one of the most dramatic human rights discrepancies in Europe today is the situation of the Roma and gave a report about the situation (Source: A Special Report on the Roman People (Gypsies) in Europe in the Human Rights Update 2002–2003, http://www.pcusa.org/oga/publications/human\_rights02-03.pdf). Many Roma still experience various forms of discrimination and have been increasingly victimized by extreme-rightist groups not only in Eastern or Southeastern Europe, but in other parts of Europe as well. Issues related to Romani migration, asylum, and changes in migration laws within the Schengen Agreement were discussed among churches and nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) in 2003 like in the years before. A new situation will appear with new European Union (EU) members in May 2004. Some 5 million Roma are expected to become EU citizens when eight Central and Eastern European countries join the EU in 2004, to be followed by 4 million more when Romania and Bulgaria are admitted in 2007. In principle, workers will be able, after a transition of some years, to move anywhere in the EU and to seek employment. Many West Europeans fear that this impoverished, fast-growing population may become a source of mass migration and create a crime wave.

On the 12th General Assembly of the Conference of European Churches (CEC) in Trondheim (Norway) June/July 2003, the Churches’ Commission for Migrants in Europe (CCME) has organized two hearings: On Roma and the Nordic Churches and on Migration in Europe.

In the late 90s, the Nordic churches ... issued statements asking for forgiveness and engaged in diaconal and human rights work related to Roma issues. On various occasions, events were organised in cooperation with Roma organisations. Roma organisations from their side have tried to respond to the developments in the churches and an interesting process has developed. Yet statements from inside the Nordic churches show that many church members believe that reconciliation and healing of memories still has a long way to go (www.cccassembly.no).

The assembly proposed in its final report of the Policy Reference Committee the following:

12. That CEC scrutinize the ongoing legislative work of the European Union, in close contact with the member churches, as well as the implementation of the conventions of the Council of Europe, in particular concerning minorities such as the Sinti and Roma and the Sami people, and call upon the churches to work for the improvement of the status of these people. . . .

27. That work with migrants in Europe be strengthened through the integration of CEC and CCME, in order to protect the rights of migrants, refugees, and ethnic minorities. Special emphasis needs to be given to the protection and rehabilitation of victims of racism, new forms of slavery and trafficking, with particular consideration of women and children. Equally CEC should encourage the fight against the reasons for Migration (poverty, discrimination, racism, lack of economic development) in the homelands of the migrants and encourage the finding of ways to make it meaningful for people in poorer countries to stay there. (www.cccassembly.no)

The Slovak government reacted to serious claims of alleged forced sterilization of Roma women in Slovakia as reported in an NGO paper entitled “Body and Soul” by launching a criminal investigation. Reacting to demands from both Slovak and foreign government and nongovernmental experts, the minister of the interior set up a special investigating team to ensure the impartiality and transparency of the investigation process. Besides other Eastern European countries, communication about new anti-discrimination policies have been introduced in Albania, Bulgaria, Russia, and Ukraine in roundtables of government institutions with Romany NGO.

b. Political Rights

Strategies to improve the living conditions of Roma lack any chance of success without participation and support by the Roma themselves. There is an increasing number of Roma NGOs and a growing culture of lobbying and cooperation. However, Roma still are largely underrepresented in national and most of local parliaments.

On the European level, a new European Roma Information Office started operating in Brussels in March 2003. The office will act as a lobby organization and connecting point between the Roma grassroots organizations and the international organizations such as the Council of Europe (CE), Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), and NGOs like the European Roma Rights Center (ERRC), etc. Another transeuropean organization, the European Roma Information Office (ERIO), aims at intensifying the political discussion on Roma by providing factual and in-depth information as well as promoting Roma rights in the whole European society.

In local elections in Bulgaria in 2003, the Roma political parties and coalitions were victorious in achieving participation of Roma in the local government. There was more than a 60 percent increase in this area (a total of 164 Roma deputies compared with 100 at the last local election). On the other hand, for the first time after democratic changes in these local elections, anti-Roma suggestions were used as a weapon in the pre-election campaign (Source: Human Rights Project in Sofia, Bulgaria).

Research shows that Roma, particularly in countries emerging from the dissolution of large federations such as the former Yugoslavia, the Soviet Union, and Czechoslovakia, are still affected by a lack of personal documents. Many Roma are unable to access citizenship and are barred in practice from registering to vote, to reside, and to access rights to employment, education, health care, and social benefits (www.errc.org).

The situation of the Roma refugees on the border between Macedonia and Greece has been heated up in 2003. Thousands of Kosovo Roma refugees that fled their homes when the Albanian refugees had returned after the end of NATO’s bombing campaign in 1999 have been living as “protected persons” in Macedonia without enjoying refugee status or permit to work, and without a right to vote in Macedonia. A group of some 700 Roma living in a refugee camp near the Greek-Macedonian Boarder has described their situation:

On May 19, 2003, we ... came to the Medzitlija border crossing with Greece. We have been on the Macedonian side of the Greek-Macedonian border since then, unable to cross the border and seek asylum in the European Union. Our homes are in Kosovo, but many of these have been burnt to the ground or otherwise destroyed. ...Kosovo remains dangerous for us and we are aware that the lack of safety for Roma, Ashkaelia, and Egyptians has been broadly acknowledged by competent international bodies. The Macedonian government has invited us to apply for refugee status in Macedonia and has threatened that those of us who do not do so may be expelled to Serbia and Montenegro. We are aware of Roma who have applied for refugee status in Macedonia and who have subsequently been detained by Macedonian police and expelled to Kosovo, and we know that last week a Romani man from Kosovo who requested refugee status in Macedonia was rejected by the Macedonian High Court. (Petition by Kosovo Roma in Macedonia to European Commission President Romano Prodi and to Prime Ministers of European Union Member States forwarded by European Roma Rights Center, www.errc.org)

c. Economic Rights

The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) has issued a detailed report on the social economic situation of Roma Hungary, the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Bulgaria, and Romania. According to its findings, most of the Roma, especially the youth, are said to lack the skills and education needed to make a living wage. Only 20 percent of Roma were found formally employed, while another 20 percent worked in the shadow economy. But in some countries, up to 70 percent of Roma households live on state welfare. The European Union (EU) has so far spent almost 70 million to help the Roma. The UNDP report asserts:

Human Development seeks to assess development levels of groups or communities according to a broader set of criteria. . . . The application of the human development paradigm to marginalized minorities is a new framework for Roma issues and includes a focus on human rights. This is particularly relevant as the survey revealed that the Roma understand “human rights” as being inseparably linked with access to jobs and education. An approach that emphasizes the centrality of human rights while expanding the debate to larger developmental issues, responds to one of the Roman minority’s greatest concerns about existing opportunities and choices (UNDP “Avoiding the Dependency Trap—A Human Development Report on the Roma Minority in Central and Eastern Europe”).

Supported by the Hungarian government, George Soros, and World Bank President James D. Wolfensohn, have been launching what they called a “decade of the Roma” between 2005–2015, with a conference, “Roma in Expanding Europe: Challenges for the Future,” which was held in Budapest on June 30–July 2, 2003, and characterized as the first time that the plight of the Roma was receiving high-level, integrated attention across Europe. Attended by European Union leaders, the premiers of Romania, Bulgaria, Macedonia, and Montenegro, and top officials from the Czech Republic, Slovakia, Serbia, and Croatia, the conference was intended to focus European attention on the chronic problems of discrimination and poverty faced by Roma (<http://www.worldbank.org/romaconference>).

d. Social and Cultural Rights

In the five countries covered in the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) report cited above, one out of three Roma children failed to complete elementary school. The report calls for free textbooks and hot meals in schools for Roma children, affirmative action by local governments, and the development of incentive programs for employment.

A World Bank’s report on Roma and findings of other bodies, such as the Council of Europe (CE) and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), are warning that Romany children face serious discrimination in education, which leads to unemployment and a life mired in poverty.

Romany leaders at the World Bank conference in Budapest considered most urgent education, employment, and housing issues. The leaders specified the kind of education they seek as follow:

- obligatory and free preschool in desegregated classrooms;
- Romany assistants in the classroom;
- antibias training for teachers and school administrators; and
- inclusion of Romany parents in school-based decision-making.

The World Bank pledged to support the Roma initiative with a special education fund. Anna Diamantopoulou, the EU’s commissioner for employment and social affairs, warned Roma in her speech at the Budapest conference that traditions that breach human rights would not be tolerated in the EU. “When fundamental human rights and certain traditions collide, it is the traditions that must change,” The practices in question include arranged marriages of teenagers, bride-selling, and keeping children away from school (www.errc.org).

In Hungary, a survey was developed to inquire about the possible social acceptance of the Roma integration program in schools. The program was to be launched in September 2003 by the ministry of education with the ambition to incite schools to introduce integration programs into their curriculum by allocating to them a normative per capita financial support under the condition that they accept to realize at least one integration program. According to the survey, 44 percent of the interviewed citizens, 48 percent of the teachers, and 38 percent of the parents share the view that an integrative school system is far more favorable for Roma children. The vast majority of the citizens think that with the help of appropriate pedagogical methods, Roma children are capable of performing remarkably well in their studies. Two thirds of the parents questioned would not object to enroll their children to schools attended also by Roma pupils (Source: Office for National and Ethnic Minorities, Budapest, Hungary, May 2003).

e. Religious Rights

Several churches, ecumenical bodies, and faith-based organizations in Central and Eastern Europe support the process of bridge building between Roma and non-Roma. The mission department of the Hungarian Reformed Church in Hungary has a new position for Roma mission that works in close connection with an educational program of the Hungarian government. The Reformed Church of Transcarpathia, Ukraine, has decided to support a Center for Roma Mission by allocating a building complex.

The Ecumenical Council of the Slovak churches has started a program for Roma projects of local congregations in Eastern and Central Slovakia. The Czech Ecumenical Council has an ecumenical Roma committee that prepared its second Roma conferences of different Roma denominations in the Czech Republic.

The European Diaconal Year Network (EDYN) has set up a program for youth exchange in relationship with Roma communities, which had its first attendees in Transcarpathia and Hungary and is preparing programs in Slovakia and the Czech Republic. In the vision of the new 2003–2005 strategy, the Ecumenical Association in Romania continues to pay attention to the situation of Roma in Romania. The General Assembly of AIDRom, in June 2002, had decided the establishment of the special department “Roma Outreach and Minorities” having the following objectives:

- Advancing religious minorities rights in relationships with state authorities.
- Facilitating and supporting initiatives and programs for the alleviation of child labor within Roma communities.
- Improving school reintegration/integration of Roma children and youth.

G. The Middle East

The practice of justice, peace, and human rights has suffered a setback in the past few years, especially since the events of September 11, 2001. It was then that major powers began to apply many pressures on the governing regimes of the Third World, especially those of the Arab world, limiting the freedoms of these states. Therefore, and for a variety of other reasons, oppression increased in the region. As a consequence, the misery factor has increased on a broad scale, and the hope for a life of justice and peace has been all but occluded.

One quick perusal of the reports of Arab and international human rights organizations reveals that the human rights of the individual Arab citizen today are in a sorry state indeed. An attempt to look into the Arab States’ protection of their citizen’s civil and political rights as enunciated and standardized by the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR—16 Dec 1966), reveals the immensity of the task and necessitated, however, its limitation to the Arab constitutional guarantees with ICCPR’s standards. Part of the reason for this further limitation is that it quickly became evident that a theoretical look at Arab constitutional guarantees alone is deceptive; one cannot understand the status of rights without at least a brief look at the operation of those guarantees and their implementation within States.

1. Civil and Political Rights

Most of the Arab states, with the exception of Lebanon and Algeria, continue to suffer from the president/king-for-life syndrome. Tunisia arrived to abolish the president for life provision in its constitution. The regimes of many Arab countries came to power through a coup d'état. The threat of further coups d'état are ever present, and whenever such attempts are uncovered, they result in mass trials, executions, and purges in the army and government. Serious armed opposition and periodic insurrections are occurring, to varying degrees of intensity and duration, in Algeria, Djibouti, Egypt, Iraq, Lebanon, Mauritania, Sudan, Syria, and Tunisia—not to mention the recent situation in Iraq and the resultant multinational war that will redraw the political map of the region. Situations of such extreme instability make difficult a normal and proper functioning of the institutions of government or a rigorous implementation of constitutional principles and human rights guarantees.

All but one of the Arab States, irrespective to their political systems, now have constitutions or basic laws that define in varying degrees of details their fundamental aims, the principles and systems of governmental organizations, as well as the rights, liberties, and duties of their citizenry. Most human rights and fundamental freedoms, with few notable exceptions, are protected in Arab constitutions. One illustrative example: all Arab constitutions guarantee freedom of expression, in one simple phrase and with rare elaboration of the scope of that freedom. They all condition this freedom and regulate it by law, using a variety of formulae. Thus we find that in most constitutions, the freedom of expression is guaranteed “within the limits of the law,” “in accordance with the law.” The Arab constitutional provisions contain none of the restrictions allowed for by Article 19 (3.) of the United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, which states that freedom of expression is a right that “carries with it special duties and responsibilities.” The article proceeds to allow for certain restrictions, but those shall only be such as are provided by law and are necessary:

- (i) For respect of the rights and reputations of others; and
- (ii) For the protection of national security or of public order (ordre public), or of public health or morals (Source: The United Nations International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights—<http://www.hrweb.org/legal/cpr.html>).

Rather, the limitations they impose seem to focus more on the broader concepts of “special duties and responsibilities” in the exercise of that freedom. For example, Article 38 of the Syrian Constitution, while providing for every citizen’s right to “freely and openly express his view in words, in writing, and through all the other means of expression,” states that: constructive criticism (is to be conducted in a manner) that will safeguard the soundness of the domestic and nationalist structure and will strengthen the socialist system.

A deep study of civil and political rights, as standardized in the ICCPR and guaranteed in Arab constitutions, reveals that in principle, the Arab States have indeed accepted and recognized most of those rights, evidenced by their inclusion in the constitutions. The standard and degree of protection of rights, however, leaves a lot to be desired. There is a lack of clarity in the language used, which tends to be rather broad and elastic, making it overly prone to subjective interpretations. Furthermore, the standard practice in all of those constitutions is to defer the regulation of the substantive content of those rights to the law, thus allowing the legislative and executive authorities a great leeway in interpreting the constitutional provisions at will. In general, one can say with some confidence that the guarantees and protection of human rights in any one Arab State’s constitution and in practice are inversely proportional to the proximity of those rights to the political life of that country; the more the exercise of those freedoms and rights is perceived to be political, the less guaranteed and protected those rights are. The preponderance of excessive executive power in most of the Arab countries puts human rights at severe risk. The presidents, kings, and emirs of the Arab world, conscious of their tenuous hold on power, have sought—and succeeded—to institutionalize that power in the constitutional, legislative, and even the judicial machinery of their countries.

a. Obstacles and Challenges to the Implementation of Human Rights in the Region

Colleagues working with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s partner churches in the Middle East reported that they have experienced the following obstacles in this region.

- Authoritarian patterns in relationships in the Middle East where authority and power are confused. Authoritarianism prevails in the family, in the schools, and in all social institutions, clouding the ethical perception of rights and duties.

- Another obstacle is represented in educational methods and pedagogical culture. Students are subjected to rote learning and not taught to think for themselves. It results in a kind of brain washing that is particularly felt in the Palestinian context. Middle Eastern society is often bedeviled by cultural practices that cloak serious things in silence and conceal them. The barrier of silence is a serious obstacle to analyzing and addressing the practice of human rights in the region.

- In addition to globalizing pressures, internal factors also contribute to an increasing sense of alienation in Arab society. Official or semi-official suppression of human rights as well as the tendency of religious discourse to focus upon otherworldly matters constitute obstacles in building people's awareness of their rights, and it contributes to a sense of internal alienation and despair.

Human rights are also obstructed by the violence that grows out of poverty. Illiteracy is increasing and fanaticism is growing as byproducts among those who feel deprived and marginalized by power structures and deteriorating economic conditions.

There are seven main obstacles to the implementation of human rights in the Arab region:

- Authoritarian patterns in relationships. In current Arab practices, there is no distinction between authority, which has a social function and is subject to restraints and criteria, and power that may become authoritarian. In the family, schools, and intermediary bodies in society, the authoritarianism trend prevails over rights and duties. For example, a field study concluded that a classroom representative may develop authoritarian and subjection relations because of lack of follow up. It also presented cases of behavior in family relationships. One of the deliberations mentioned that there is no problem for the person in authority if the case that is presented does not constitute a threat or loss for him in his position of authority.

- Alienation in teaching methods. This is seen, in particular, in Palestine where students are exposed to brain washing and a policy of "Jewishisation" and in absence of organized, structural equality.

- Barrier of silence and concealment. Cases related to human rights are often presented as individual cases that are dealt with according to our priorities or overlooked by a barrier of silence (Janane Abdu).

- A feeling of alienation. The following question was posed: What has happened to the Egyptian personality? Negative changes that are taking place in issues of religious freedom and defending them increase our feeling of alienation. The religious discourse, as well as religious institutions, increase this feeling of alienation when partnership and commitment are not adopted and practiced (Maged Yanni).

- Violence related to poverty. Manifestations of violence that are attributed to poverty, deprivation, and illiteracy were emphasized.

- Fatalist traditions. These traditions are given religion as justifications, which contradict citizenship and development. Moreover, they express lack of citizen power and self-confidence in general. It was also noticed that human rights activists are sometimes alienated from employees, doctors, engineers, and the different professional sectors that constitute the foundation for these rights.

Therefore, human rights culture is not confined to the legal media and to introducing people to human rights, but it includes the values of human rights in the social infrastructures. Confining human rights culture to the formal legal aspect gives human rights an individualistic, contractual character whereas human relations are not all of a contractual character in the legal sense. Family and professional relationships and economic and social rights require sacrifices for the public good (interest). In general, every value, such as equality, that is separated from the general system of values will deviate from its goal. Equality in family relationships will lose its meaning if it is separated from the need to sacrifice for the interest of one member in the family, who is in need of special care. This requires continual work to support the rights of the individual who is nonexistent in the current culture, and harmony between individual and group rights. The great challenge in the Arab region lies in avoiding drifting into a mere contractual ideology in the human rights culture, which leads to splitting of social relations. This is similar to what happens in societies where human rights have developed because of these relations.

b. Potential and Capabilities of the Church and Religious Institutions

The church and religious institutions in general, whether Christian or Muslim, have a distinctive position and role in promoting human rights culture for three main reasons:

- Behavioral and spiritual dimension: Values contained in the holy books: A behavioral dimension and a spiritual direction. Sometimes, they correct the course of human rights culture in case it deviates from its goals, especially the human rights charter of 1948 states clearly the integration between civil, political, social, and economic rights. Consequently, it calls for harmony between rights of the individuals and collective rights.
- Courage and struggle. Courage has become less, due to the predominance of interests over principles. Religious bodies seem to be convenient with the authorities in violating human rights. “We want a striving church” and we need to readopt the gospel of the poor and the suppressed in a more comprehensive way, and to reconsider resisting injustice. In this context, it was mentioned that Jesus was a revolutionary.
- Material and human potential. Religious institutions, and organizations related to them, are able to provide a framework for the efforts of educational and media institutions in Lebanon. In addition, the support and defense that religious bodies give to human rights provide social legitimacy to them and help activists when the political authority tries to restrain their activities. Moreover, the church has an effective role in defending victims of injustice. This role has not been understood and introduced in the Arab civilization.

c. Identifying Needs

Primary needs related to human rights culture include the following.

- The legal media. There is a need to make legislation and laws available to people, emphasizing not only situational rights but means of defending and implementing them also through public departments and the judiciary system.
- Expanding the scope of human rights culture. Human rights culture includes different sectors of society; consequently, it must not be confined to specialized centers. This includes educating women socially and legally; renewing jurisprudence; combating generalization and absolutism; clarifying concepts, especially those related to honor; organizing workshops to learn and teach; removing negative images about women from school text books and educational agencies; and renewing legislation and monitoring laws that are contrary to human rights.
- Production of authentic materials. Emphasis has been given to the need to collect and write counseling materials, to document distinguished production in the Arab countries, and to produce a handbook that contains selected material suitable for training and educational sessions. These materials are not restricted to the legal media, but they include arts and literature, i.e. reaching through the law only. The historical context of the law must be highlighted as a means to protect individuals and religion from political domination. From a historical point of view, human rights were established to protect man from political and religious domination.

Emphasis was also given to the need to rewrite the Arab civilization and history, with human rights as its starting point, instead of dictating the history of submission, eulogy, and satire as distinctive qualities of Arab civilization to more than one hundred million Arabs.

Human rights culture, on the other hand, includes the spirit of justice, commitment, and resisting fear and a system of values.

- Commitment of conflicts. It was emphasized that conflicts are not negative, but a factor of change in developed societies on conditions that regulation and criteria are available to resolve conflicts. The more developed societies are, the more complicated they are, the more competition they have, and the more interests are intertwined. There is a need to avoid the reconciliatory aspect in training people to resolve conflicts; otherwise, human rights become a mere business exchange. There are means to contain conflicts, based on forgiveness, sacrifice, tolerance, friendship, and love.

In Lebanon, there is excessiveness in compromise in all cases in such a way that everything becomes infected with sickness on account of the public interest. Training and educating people to resolve conflicts is therefore educating them in criteria and regulations. The two prominent factors in producing violence are:

(1) Injustice. There is a need to be committed to resisting injustice by nonviolent means. In case of resorting to violence in extreme cases, cost and benefits should be taken into consideration.

(2) Suppression. It springs from lack of dialogue and mechanisms of expression and listening. Suppression builds up with time. Then it explodes after a few years or a period of time with all what was accumulated at home, in the school, university, and public life.

- Harmony and complementarities between religion and human rights. Avoiding religion or presenting it as contradictory to human rights will not be of benefit to these rights. What kind of religion is it that contradicts the universal principles of human rights? How can rights be human if they are contradictory to religion? In the West, a process of harmony and complementarities took place, but it has not been completed in the Arab countries. The subject is more often cultural rather than religious. It was mentioned that religion benefits by being reconciled to human rights. For example, Islam has a negative image in the West because of fanatic trends. In Christianity also, young people run away from religion when religious bodies do not play an effective role in defending victims of injustice.

Religion is able to meet the needs of future generations that are looking not only for rights, but also for meaning. The French ex-minister of Education and Higher learning published a book entitled The Right to Meaning.

d. Extrajudicial Executions/ Unlawful Killings

In Egypt, at least thirty-two prisoners of conscience were sentenced to prison terms of up to seven years. Legal restrictions and government controls continued to limit the activities of political parties, nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) professional associations and trade unions

Between October 20th and 24th, 2003, twenty-two people were arrested in Egypt in connection with identity cards being illegally changed to reflect conversion from Islam to Christianity. Of these, twenty have been released on bail, one died of illness, and one remains in detention, namely Mariam Girgis Makar who was remanded in custody on November 20th for a further fifteen days. She is being held in Cairo, 200kms from her home in Alexandria. She has two young daughters.

The arrests began on October 20, 2003, when Yousef Samuel Makari and his wife, Mariam Girgis Makar, were arrested. They were transferred to Cairo and interrogated, a process that included torture and sexual abuse. Over the next three days, twenty more people were arrested in connection with the same allegations. All were beaten.

These arrests center on the issue of identity cards stating a person's religion. The Egyptian Constitution allows freedom of religion, and there are no laws that make conversion from Islam a crime. However, while converts to Islam can get their identity cards changed within twenty-four hours, converts from Islam cannot get changed documents. This leads to some people changing their papers illegally.

Maker is accused of both illegally changing her own papers and assisting others to do likewise. The other people arrested are accused of either illegally changing their papers or of assisting others to do so. Some are converts to Christianity from Islam, the others are either Christians or civil servants accused of assisting converts to illegally change their identity cards. Fathr, who died, was a Muslim civil servant accused of accepting bribes to illegally change identity cards.

Maker and her husband converted to Christianity several years ago and have been living openly as Christians in Alexandria ever since. They have two young daughters. The couple changed their names when they converted, their original names being Mohamed Ahmed Imam Kordy and Sahar ElSayed Abdel Ghany. It is normal in Egypt for married ladies not to adopt their husband's surname.

2. Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights

The separation that existed for a long time between civil and political rights and social rights often resulted in conflicting interests as to what comes first. Since the fall of the Berlin wall, the realization is growing that both sets of rights are so interrelated and interdependent that they cannot be put in a priority order. At the same time, another conflict of interest became prominent: economic globalization versus human rights. This conflict of interest is reflected in the changing balance of power of the world institutions that govern these interests. In the past ten years, the Bretton Wood Institutes, World Bank, International Monetary Fund, and the World Trade Organization have gained considerable power while the power of the United Nations (UN) system that overlooks human rights, has been weakened. Significantly the first cluster representing the economic power is a closed and undemocratic bloc while the UN-System is its opposite being open and democratic.

With regard to development, Arab countries have not developed as quickly or as fully as other comparable regions. In all sectors, the Arab world is “richer than developed.” As a result, despite the existing resources, the economic and social rights of the people in the region are not respected: most people face poor access to education, to water, to health, and to labor. This reality shows that major challenges facing the region are linked to peace and development. In fact, development is indivisible from the promotion and respect of human rights and democracy.

Women’s rights are of great importance in the Arab countries, since one of the three main deficits that hinder development in the Arab world is the status of women according to the United Nations Development Programme report 2003 (see http://hdr.undp.org/reports/view\_reports.cfm?region=ABS&regionname=ARAB%20STATES). Due to the widespread discrimination and violence against them, women are the first to be negatively affected by the disregard of human rights, the lack of democracy and underdevelopment in the region. Further, in order to achieve peace and security in the region, it must be kept in mind that there can be no democracy without the full and equal participation of women, and no human rights without women’s rights. Women in the developing countries have many fewer job opportunities: the employment participation rates of women are on average only 50 percent those of men, and amounts to 16 percent in Arab States. Wage discrimination is also a feature in all countries. Women who are not in paid employment tend to work much longer hours than men. These women also have a shorter life expectancy.

In every country, all institutions—whether social, legal, political, economic, or the media—are permeated with values that discriminate against women and legitimize and institutionalize social placements on the basis of gender. The question of gender is normally ignored in the development of policies or programs for dealing with economic, social, and cultural issues.

3. Religious Rights

Human rights are universal in their principles for two reasons:

- First, because of the unity of human nature regardless of the diversity of races, individuals, and groups.
- Second, they are universal because of the unity of fundamental human values regardless of the diversity of religions, civilizations, and cultures.

Religions experience contradictions and confusion in practice or are exploited for political gain in spite of their belief in One God. Religious values and heritage have enriched the establishment and spread of human rights. Today, religious principles support or refute attitudes and practices related to human rights.

A lot of research has been done in the West about the crisis of secularism, the different ways of organizing the relationship between religion and politics, religions without borders, the struggle of civilizations, sects, and managing cultural diversity (including its religious components). Religious diversity may be a source of interaction and enrichment or a source of conflicts and violation of the principles of human rights.

Religions in the Middle East suffer a crisis in dialogue, in which historical, social, and cultural elements mingle. Religion is used to justify fanaticism or deep social traditions and authoritarian practice. Sometimes, religion is used to stop the ratification of international legislation regarding human rights.

We frequently forget that atheistic trends in modern history such as Fascism, Nazism, and Communism were a source for violating human rights. These trends do not give a human being an absolute, subjective value grounded in the image of God; rather the individual is considered a producer or an effective member in a political group.

4. Special Report on Israel and Palestine

September 28, 2003, marked the third anniversary of what has become known as the Al Aqsa Intifada. The year was permeated with violence—Palestinian suicide bombings coupled with Israeli air strikes, targeted killings and incursions into Palestinian cities and towns, leaving more than 2,660 Palestinians and 825 Israelis dead and thousands more seriously injured on both sides.

May 2003 witnessed the unveiling of the so-called “road map,” which sets out provisions for the creation of a Palestinian state by 2005. The “road map,” a “performance-based and goal-driven” plan drafted by the United States, the United Nations, the European Union, and Russia (the “Quartet”), envisages a three-phased process and a set of goals that include the establishment of a Palestinian state, an end to Palestinian violence and Israeli occupation, and a final resolution to the conflict. But the roadmap repeats the failure of previous Israeli-Palestinian agreements to address basic human rights and international humanitarian law protections. Instead, all parties let abuses proliferate to the point where they fatally damaged the entire negotiating process.

“Every serious effort at conflict resolution has a human rights component,” said Hanny Megally, executive director of the Middle East and North Africa division of Human Rights Watch. “There’s no reason why the Israeli-Palestinian conflict should be any different” (Source: Human Rights Watch 2003, <http://www.hrw.org/press/2003/06/isrlpa060303.htm>).

Following a deadly attack on an American diplomatic convoy in Gaza in mid October 2003 that left three American security guards dead, the United States once again distanced itself from any real engagement “on the ground.” Senior American officials ceased visiting the region, and the American envoy, John Wolf, whose posting in Jerusalem signaled the promoting of the road map, failed to return to the region from an extensive home leave.

Mid October 2003 also saw the unveiling of a peace proposal that members of the Israeli leftist opposition and Palestinian officials have been working on for the past two-and-a-half years. The initiative was spearheaded by Oslo architect Yossi Beilin on the Israeli side and former minister Yasser Abed Rabbo for the Palestinians.

The plan, dubbed the “Geneva Accord” in tribute to the funding and support supplied by the Swiss Foreign Ministry, offers itself as a decisive solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, based on the plan drawn up by former U.S. President Bill Clinton after the breakdown in the July 2000 talks between former Prime Minister Ehud Barak and Yasser Arafat. At the heart of the proposal is a Palestinian concession on the right of return to lands within the State of Israel, in exchange for sovereignty over the Temple Mount. The plan also calls for an Israeli withdrawal from most of the West Bank and the entire Gaza Strip. The proposal was met with furious disapproval by the Sharon government, which accused Israelis involved in the initiative of trying to act in place of a democratically elected government (Source: www.haaretz.com “Geneva Accord,” <http://www.haaretz.com/hasen/pages/ShArt.jhtml?itemNo=349832&contrassID=2&subContrassID=1&sbSubContrassID=0&listSrc=Y>).

In mid November 2003, four former Israeli-security chiefs launched a scathing attack on the Israeli government’s handling of the peace process with the Palestinians, and called on Israel to withdraw from the Gaza Strip and dismantle Jewish settlements or face “disaster.” Karmi Gilon, who led the Shin Bet between 1995 and 1996, said the Israeli government’s strategy for handling the Palestinian uprising was shortsighted. “It is dealing solely with the question of how to prevent the next terrorist attack,” he said. “It ignores the question of how we get out of the mess we find ourselves in today.”

Avraham Shalom, who headed the service from 1980 to 1986 said Israel was heading for disaster if “we do not recognize once and for all that there is another people which is suffering and towards which we are behaving shamefully” (Source: http://newsvote.bbc.co.uk/mpapps/pagetools/print/news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/world/middle\_east).

The restrictions on movement that Israel has imposed on the Palestinian population in the Occupied Territories since the outbreak of the current intifada (September 28, 2000) are unprecedented in the history of the Israeli occupation in their scope, time, and severity of damage they cause to the three million Palestinians. In the past, Israel imposed a comprehensive closure on the Occupied Territories or a curfew on a specific town or village to restrict Palestinian freedom of movement; however, it never imposed sweeping and prolonged restrictions comparable to those currently in practice.

Israel employs three types of collective restrictions on movement: closure, siege, and curfew.

- Closure—total prohibition on Palestinian residents of the Occupied Territories to enter Israel unless they have a special permit. Since October 2000, Israel has issued almost no entry permits. In exceptional cases, or during the occasional easing of the closure, a few thousand Palestinians laborers are allowed to enter Israel. Palestinians who stay in Israel without a permit are subject to expulsion back to the Occupied Territories, incarceration, or a fine (Source: http://www.btselem.org/english/Freedom\_of\_Movement/Closure.asp).

- Siege—blocking of the access roads to certain towns and villages by means of staffed checkpoints or concrete blocks, dirt piles, or deep trenches. Since October 2000, most of the Palestinian communities in the West Bank have been closed off in this manner, and their residents severed from the outside world. (Source: http://www.btselem.org/english/Freedom\_of\_Movement/Siege.asp)

- Curfew—the most extreme restriction on movement. During curfew, the residents are completely prohibited from leaving their homes. Since the beginning of “Operation Determined Path,” on June 18, 2002, curfew has been routine for hundreds of thousands of Palestinians. (Source: http://www.btselem.org/english/Freedom\_of\_Movement/Curfew.asp)

Israel’s policy applies only to Palestinians and thus constitutes flagrant discrimination based on nationality. Jewish residents are allowed to enter and exit the settlements freely. Furthermore, more than once the IDF has expressly admitted that the restrictions on freedom of movement of the Palestinian population is intended to ensure the free movement of Jews along roads in the Occupied Territories.

As occupier, Israel is responsible for the safety and well-being of the civilian population under occupation. In practice, the harsh restrictions on movement lead to appalling and even lethal consequences.

The right to freedom of movement is enshrined in international law. The extensive restrictions imposed by Israel in the name of “security needs” prevent the Palestinians from living a normal life and also endanger their lives. Israel is entitled to defend itself by various means, including restrictions on movement. However, the sweeping nature of the restrictions indicate that Israel has deliberately chosen to prevent the Palestinians from living a normal life. As currently employed, the restrictions on movement constitute collective punishment, which is prohibited by both Israeli and international law (Source: B’Tselem—The Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories [www.btselem.org]).

a. Israel’s Separation Wall

On April 14, 2002, the Israeli cabinet announced that “fences and other physical obstacles” were to be constructed to prevent Palestinians crossing into Israel. The government announcement, made during Israel’s “Operation Defensive Shield” campaign launched after a spate of suicide attacks against Israeli civilians, said the “buffer zones” were to be created in three areas along the Green Line, the post-1948 demarcation line between Israel and the West Bank.

The “fences” mentioned in that announcement have since become known as the separation barrier, made up of multiple obstacles that will wind through the northern and southern West Bank as well as East Jerusalem. Israeli officials refer to the barrier as the “seam zone.”

Although many public commentators liken the barrier to the fence surrounding the Gaza Strip, the two are not alike. Most important, the separation barrier does not follow the Green Line that divides Israel from the occupied West Bank. The barrier’s division of Palestinian land is what contributes to its harmful humanitarian impact on the Palestinian population.

The first phase of the separation barrier was completed at the end of July 2003. It winds approximately 108 miles through the northwestern West Bank. It has resulted in the confiscation of some 2,850 acres of land and carved off some 2 percent of the total area of the West Bank. Two more phases are under construction: one in the northeast of the West Bank, and another in the region of East Jerusalem and Bethlehem. The route of a fourth phase is still under negotiation. Depending on the barrier’s final route, the cost of construction is estimated at up to 1.3 billion dollars.

Although the barrier’s exact elements differ according to location and topography, its core is an electrified fence, 10 feet high, equipped with surveillance cameras and other sensors. It is flanked on either side by six-foot-tall barbed-wire pyramids. Other obstacles include a trench six to eight feet in depth, a military patrol road, and a dirt path to record footprints. The barrier’s total width ranges from 60 to 100 yards.

In at least two locations, Qalqilya and Tulkarem, the barrier takes the shape of a twenty-six-foot-high concrete wall with embedded guard and surveillance towers. As is common in other locations throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip, Israeli officials have informed local residents that all movement in the area fifty to eighty yards adjacent to the barrier will be forbidden. Passage through the barrier will be arranged via gates and larger terminals, although the Israeli authorities have yet to specify the basis on which people will be allowed to cross.

In addition to the separation barrier, Israeli planning maps specify the creation of three “depth barriers,” presumably deep trenches to prevent vehicular traffic, in Jenin and Tulkarem governorates. These are to be built significantly further into the West Bank than the separation barrier’s first phase. (Source: Human Rights Watch www.hrw.org/press/2003/10/israel100103.htm.)

In a letter to U.S. President George W. Bush, Human Rights Watch said the barrier’s path and operating arrangements violate the freedom of movement of Palestinians, endangering their access to food, water, education, and medical services. With every mile the barrier cuts into the West Bank, towns, villages, and residents become separated from their lands, crops, services, water, and jobs.

According to the World Bank, some 150,000 Palestinians will be harmed by the first phase of the barrier, which has already been completed. Other phases were likely to affect at least 150,000 more. “Even in its first phase, the barrier is taking a terrible toll on tens of thousands of people,” said Joe Stork, acting executive director of the Middle East and North Africa division of Human Rights Watch. “President Bush should ensure that the U.S. government does its utmost to prevent these serious violations of international law. Deducting the barrier’s cost from the loan guarantees is an obvious place to start” (Source: Human Rights Watch. <http://www.hrw.org/press/2003/10/israel100103.htm>).

Amnesty International added its voice to worldwide protests (starting Sunday, November 9, 2003) against Israel’s construction of the fence/wall in the Occupied West Bank. The organization called on the Israeli authorities to stop the construction of the fence/wall in the West Bank that is affecting the lives of hundreds of thousands of Palestinians. “This fence/wall is having devastating economic and social consequences on the daily lives of hundreds of thousands of Palestinians, separating families and communities from each other and from their land and water—their most crucial assets,” said Amnesty International.

Israel is continuing the construction of the fence/wall, with the second phase running even more deeply than the first phase into the West Bank, cutting off many more thousands of Palestinians from their land and/or from essential services in nearby villages/towns, and further restricting the movements of all Palestinians in these areas.

The Israeli authorities' claim that the fence/wall is being constructed to prevent potential Palestinian attackers from entering Israel to carry out suicide bombings and other attacks is not borne out by the reality on the ground. The fence/wall is not being constructed on the Green Line separating Israel from the West Bank, but mostly on Palestinian land several kilometers inside the West Bank, in order to isolate Palestinians away from Israeli settlements illegally built in the Occupied Territories.

"The construction of this fence/wall in its current location must be halted immediately," said Amnesty International. "As the fence/wall continues to snake through Palestinian land, more and more Palestinians find themselves trapped into enclaves and cantons, unable to have any semblance of a normal life."

"Israel has the right to take reasonable, necessary and proportionate measures to protect the security of its citizens and its borders. These include measures to prevent the entry into Israel of Palestinians or others who are reasonably suspected of intending to carry out suicide bombings or other attacks," Amnesty International said.

"However, Israel does not have a right to unlawfully destroy or confiscate Palestinian land and property and hinder the movements of Palestinians inside the Occupied Territories in order to consolidate its control over land that is being used for illegal Israeli settlements," the organization added.

In order to build the fence/wall, large areas of mostly cultivated Palestinian land have been destroyed. The land on which it is constructed has been seized by the Israeli military authorities for "military needs." Although the seizure orders for the land are generally "temporary," usually until the end of 2005, they can be renewed indefinitely. Over the decades Palestinian land "temporarily" seized by Israel has been used to build permanent structures, including settlements and roads for settlers, and has never been returned to its owners.

The very expensive and sophisticated structure of the fence/wall indicates that it is likely intended as a permanent structure. Affected Palestinians have to cross the fence/wall at designated checkpoints or gates to reach the rest of the West Bank, to go to work, to tend their fields, to sell their agricultural produce, and to access education and health centers in nearby towns and villages.

The Israeli authorities have consistently refused to provide advance information about the route of the fence/wall and information about the precise routing only become available when preparation work for the fence/wall begins on the ground or when the authorities deliver seizure orders to the local Palestinian communities whose land is going to be seized for the construction of the fence/wall (Source: Amnesty International, AI Index: MDE 15/099/2003 (Public) News Service No: 254 <http://www.reliefweb.int/w/rwb.nsf>).

- Approximately 210,000 acres—or 14.5 percent—of West Bank land (excluding East Jerusalem) will lie between the wall and the green line, according to the latest Israeli government projecting of the West Bank Wall.
- This land, some of the most fertile in the West Bank, is currently the home for more than 274,000 Palestinians living in 122 villages and towns. These people will either live in closed areas—areas between the wall and the green line—or in enclaves totally surrounded by the Wall.
- More than 400,000 other Palestinians living to the east of the Wall will need to cross it to get to their farms, jobs and services. This means that approximately 680,000—30 percent of the Palestinian population in the West Bank—will be directly harmed by the wall.
- Stretching a total of 680 kilometers (including Jerusalem), the new wall will run from Jenin in the northern West Bank to the southern-most tip of Hebron in the south. Because of its meandering path into the West Bank, its length is more than twice the length of the entire Green Line. The finished wall will be four times longer than what is now completed.
- Only 11 percent of the wall's length runs along the 1949 Armistice Line or Green Line.

For the rest, the wall's planned path cuts deep into the West Bank—up to 22 kilometers—where it envelopes the Israeli settlement of Ariel (Source: <http://www.reliefweb.int/hic-opt/>).

b. Civil Rights

The Israeli government gives preferential treatment to Jewish residents of the occupied territories and East Jerusalem in the areas of permits for home building and civic services. For example, Muslim Arab residents of Jerusalem pay the same taxes as Jewish residents; however, Arab residents receive significantly fewer municipal services than Jewish residents. There is a general consensus among Palestinian and Israeli human rights organizations that many of the national and municipal policies enacted in Jerusalem are designed to limit or diminish the non-Jewish population of Jerusalem. According to these activists, the Israeli government uses a combination of zoning restrictions on building for Palestinians, confiscation of Palestinian lands, and demolition of Palestinian homes to “contain” non-Jewish neighborhoods (Source: Israel and the Occupied Territories—International Religious Freedom Report, released by the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor p. 8, <http://www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2002/13997pf.htm>).

Under customary international humanitarian law, Israel has a positive obligation to ensure the welfare of residents of the West Bank (1907 Hague Regulations on Land Warfare, Article 43). It is also obliged to ensure the passage of emergency medical services, to respect the sick, to allow the passage of foodstuffs and medical goods, and to facilitate education (Fourth Geneva Convention, Articles 16, 20, 25, 50, 55 and 59). Israel is prohibited under customary international law from making permanent changes to the West Bank that do not benefit the local inhabitants (1907 Hague Regulations, Article 55, and from transferring members of its own population into the Occupied Territories (Fourth Geneva Convention, Article 49 (6)).

Israel has also ratified numerous human rights treaties that oblige it to uphold rights to freedom of movement, and access to education, healthcare, work, and water. These include the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR), and the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC). In August the U.N. Human Rights Committee said that “in the current circumstances, the provisions of the (ICCPR) apply to the benefit of the population of the Occupied Territories, for all conduct by (Israeli) authorities or agents in those territories that affect the enjoyment of rights enshrined in the Covenant and fall within the ambit of State responsibility of Israel under the principles of public international law.” (Source: www.hrw.org/press/2003/10/israel100103.htm)

c. Political Rights

Since the beginning of the current Intifada in September 2000, the Israeli government has pursued an open policy of assassination (targeted killings) of those Palestinians who it alleges have orchestrated, facilitated, or carried out attacks against Israeli targets both within the Occupied Territories (OPTs) and inside Israel. This policy is carried out without recourse to any effective judicial procedures; no evidence is presented before or after the attack, proving the alleged immediate threat to life poses by the targeted individual; in many instances, the targeted individual could have been arrested by the Israeli military at Israeli military checkpoints, or border controls.

These operations have been conducted using various methods, but have invariably involved the excessive, disproportionate use of lethal, often indiscriminate, force. The increasing numbers of deaths and injuries to non-targeted civilians resulting from this policy evidences an increasing disregard for civilian life by the Israeli military.

The willful killing of a Palestinian civilian constitutes a violation of international human rights and humanitarian law, and in particular constitutes a grave breach of the Fourth Geneva Convention, namely a war crime (Source: <http://www.pchrgaza.org/Commission/item%2011b.pdf>) The Palestinian Center for Human Rights, Gaza and Al Haq—Law in the Service of Man).

On September 24, 2003, a group of twenty-seven Israeli Air Force reservist pilots signed a letter in which they stated that they refused to carry out targeted killings or other operations in the West Bank and Gaza because they considered them “immoral and illegal” (Source: http://news.bbc.co.uk/go/pr/fr/-/1/hi/world/middle\_east/3140032.stm (“Refusenik Israeli pilots under fire”).

d. Economic Rights

The consequences of Israel's policy of restriction on movement have been horrendous. The economic situation of Palestinian residents in the Occupied Territories has sharply declined, and malnutrition has jumped. Fifty-five percent of the Palestinian population live in poverty (per-capita income of less than 2 dollars) and unemployment has reached about 50 percent. The restrictions on movement are the primary, if not the only, cause of this grave situation. Prohibiting entry into Israel, for example, has eliminated the source of livelihood of Palestinians who used to work in Israel. Movement of merchandise, both within the Occupied Territories and from there to Jordan and Egypt, has been severely restricted. Farmers have been unable to work their land because of the prohibition on leaving their communities and the denial of access to their fields. The prolonged curfew has paralyzed industry, trade, and tourism in the Occupied Territories (Source: B'Tselem—The Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories (www.btselem.org)).

In mid November 2003, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) announced that it was ending its emergency food program in the West Bank, saying the economic collapse there was the direct result of Israeli military closures and that Israel must live up to its responsibility as the occupying power for the economic needs of the Palestinians.

Israel is concerned that other international organizations may follow the Red Cross, which would leave Israel to face the cost of providing services they currently provide—a cost that some estimates put as high as 1.1 billion a year.

The Palestinian economy has collapsed under the weight of military closures of Palestinian cities, making it impossible for Palestinians to move their produce or travel to jobs in other cities or in Israel. In both 2002 and 2003, curfews, imposed for all but a few hours a week by the Israeli army, made it impossible for Palestinians to work at all.

As a result of economic collapse, a fifth of Palestinian children are malnourished, according to a report last year by an American government aid agency (Source: (http://news.independent.co.uk/world/middle\_east/story.jsp?story=464142)).

e. Social and Cultural Rights

In the past year, the Israeli military closure and curfew policy, the property destruction and house demolition policy, and ongoing Israeli military operation throughout the Occupied Territories (OPTs) have effectively suffocated the enjoyment of economic, social, and cultural rights.

Of particular concern is the deepening humanitarian crisis directly precipitated by the Israeli military policy of closure and curfew. The severe restrictions on freedom of movement and goods have resulted in an escalation in poverty levels to more than 60 percent throughout the territories (more than 80 percent in the Gaza Strip); unemployment rates have reached as high as 80 percent in some areas, and there are severe food and water shortages. Access to medical care and supplies, including emergency treatment, has been subjected to increasingly regular delays, often resulting in loss of life, including to children and infants. Education has been severely disrupted and both schools and hospitals have been subjected to targeted attacks by the Israeli military or used as military posts. The physical and mental health of the wider population, and in particular among children and women, continues to deteriorate. Recent surveys estimate acute and chronic malnutrition among Palestinian children as high as 22 percent. Approximately 54.6 percent of children in the Gaza Strip suffer symptoms of post-traumatic stress disorder. More than 1.8 million Palestinians are currently dependent on humanitarian assistance from international aid agencies, including food packages.

As many as 5,381 Palestinian homes have been destroyed during Israeli military operations, affecting more than 56,000 Palestinians. In addition there have been widespread destruction to other property including water, electricity, sewage, and communications infrastructure; agricultural land and crops; commercial, NGO, and civilian governmental buildings; media offices; important historic, cultural and religious sites (Source: <http://www.pchrgaza.org/Commission/Item10.pdf>).

f. Religious Rights

The vast majority (98.4 percent) of the Palestinian residents of the occupied territories are Sunni Muslims. According to the Palestinian Central Bureau of Statistics, there are 40,055 Palestinian Christians living in the territories. However, according to the sum of estimates provided by individual Christian denominations, the total number of Christians is approximately 200,000. A majority of Christians are Greek Orthodox (approximately 120,000), and there also are a significant number of Roman Catholics and Greek Catholics (approximately 50,000 total), Protestants, Syrians, Armenians, Copts, Maronites, and Ethiopian Orthodox. In general, Christians are concentrated in the areas of Jerusalem, Ramallah, and Bethlehem. In early 2001, approximately 1,000 Christians from Bethlehem left the occupied territories for other countries. According to Christian leaders, most of the Christians left their homes for economic and security reasons and not due to religious discrimination (Source: International Religious Freedom Report, released by the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor [U.S. Department of State], p. 7., www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2002/13997pf.htm).

Due to increased violence and security concerns, the Israeli government imposed closure on the occupied territories beginning in October 2000. One result of the closure was to impede significantly freedom of access to places of worship for Muslims and Christians. Even before the outbreak of the Intifada in October 2000, Palestinians in the occupied territories were required to obtain a permit to enter Jerusalem. The Israeli government frequently denied requests for permits, and Israeli security personnel at times denied permit holders access to Jerusalem, even to visit holy sites. During periods of closure, Palestinians from the occupied territories were prevented from traveling to pray inside the Haram al-Sharif. In practice, Israeli closure policies prevented tens of thousands of Palestinians from reaching places of worship in Jerusalem and the West Bank, including during religious holidays, such as Ramadan, Christmas, and Easter. On a number of occasions, the Israeli government also prevented worshippers under the age of forty-five from attending Friday prayers inside the Haram al-Sharif. The Israeli government stated that it did so in an effort to prevent outbreaks of violence following Friday prayers. However, many Palestinians believe that the real purpose of closure is ethnically based harassment and humiliation (Source: International Religious Freedom Report, released by the Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor [U.S. Department of State], p. 9, www.state.gov/g/drl/rls/irf/2002/13997pf.htm).

g. Israeli Settlements

The U.S. Bureau of Intelligence and Research (INR) has recommended the Bush administration apply “clear and intentional pressure” on Israel regarding Israeli settlements, as part of making headway with the Palestinians, as well as helping to calm the situation heating up in Iraq (Source: Ha’aretz, November 3, 2003, www.haaretzdaily.com),

The Israeli settler population in the West Bank (excluding East Jerusalem) and Gaza Strip grew by 5.7 percent in 2002, increasing to 220,100 from the 2001 figure of 208,200. Israel’s overall growth was only 1.9 percent. When added to the 180,000 Israelis residing in East Jerusalem, the settler population now comprises almost 8 percent of Israel’s Jewish population of 5.1 million.

According to Israel’s Central Bureau of Statistics (CBS), births accounted for 3.1 percent of the 5.7 percent growth among settlers. The remaining 2.6 percent of the growth resulted from the “migration” of new settlers. The CBS reports that 14,000 Israelis moved to settlements, and 10,600 moved out of them in 2002. According to interior ministry numbers released in July, an additional 5,415 Israelis had moved to the settlements since the beginning of 2003.

The CBS reports that 3,648 homes are under construction in West Bank and Gaza settlements, comprising more than 15 percent of the 23,000 under active construction in Israel and the settlements. During 2003, the Sharon government marketed land for the construction of 1,713 dwelling units. Additional homes are being built privately and in East Jerusalem. Yet, between January and June 2003, only fifty-eight apartments were sold in the settlements (excluding East Jerusalem), barely one-third the 164 apartments sold during the same period in 2002. The decrease in sales is attributed to Israel’s economic slowdown and the increased security concerns associated with the al-Aqsa intifada (Source: Report on Israeli Settlement in the Occupied Territories, produced by the Foundation for Middle East Peace, <http://www.fmep.org/reports/2003/v13n6.html>).

h. House Demolitions

Since 1987, the Israeli authorities have “administratively” demolished at least 2,500 Palestinian houses in the West Bank (including East Jerusalem), and hundreds of other structures. Assuming that the average number of residents per house over this period is similar to average occupancy throughout the West Bank, it is estimated that more than 16,000 Palestinians lost their home since 1987 as a result of “administrative” demolition (Source: www.btselem.org/English/Planning\_&\_Building/Statistics.asp).

In October 2001, during its invasion of territory under Palestinian Authority control, Israel renewed its activity of demolishing houses as punishment. Israel had ceased its house-demolition-as-punishment policy in late 1997. However, unlike previous cases, this time the army acted without an order in accordance with Regulation 119, and without giving the owners the opportunity to petition the High Court of Justice to prevent the demolition. As in prior cases, the army demolished houses in which suspected Palestinian perpetrators of attacks in Israel lived. As a result, the suspects’ family members who lived in the houses were left homeless. Since then and up to October 23, 2003, Israel completely demolished 453 houses and partially demolished two. During this period, Israel sealed three houses. Since the beginning of the first intifada (9 December 1987) and until the end of 1997, Israel has completely demolished in the Occupied Territories at least 449 houses as punishment, partially demolished 62 houses, completely sealed at least 296 houses, and partially sealed 118 houses (Source: www.btselem.org/English/House\_Demolitions/Statistics.asp).

H. Latin America and the Caribbean

1. Civil, Economic, and Political Rights

Virtually all Latin American countries now have democratic governments, and, at least in broad terms, respect the political rights of participation, freedom of speech and press, the right to assembly, and so on. However, few, if any, have civil rights laws to protect women and minorities from discrimination, and so in most there is considerable discrimination against women, Native Americans, and African Americans, particularly in the area of employment, though the discrimination against Native Americans and African Americans is rather less virulent in Latin American than it was historically in the United States. Latin American societies are among the most economically unequal on earth; this means that although the Latin American elite often lives in considerable comfort and even luxury, the poor, particularly in the poorest countries such as Bolivia, Paraguay, Peru, Ecuador, and some of the Central American countries, do not have access to the basic essentials of life such as medical care, proper education, safe housing or even potable drinking water. These problems also affect the Brazilian poor who must contend with life in one of the most economically unequal countries in the world.

Economic difficulties are also at the root of political problems in many Latin American countries. Of all the countries in Latin American, only Chile has experienced real growth in per capita income since 1980.

a. Colombia

Colombia continues to have the most serious human rights problems in Latin America. The longstanding civil war between the government, right wing paramilitary groups, and left wing revolutionary groups continues unabated; violence has increased since Colombian President Uribe abandoned peace talks with rebel groups in favor of a hard line military response to the insurgency. Rebel groups, such as the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC), continue to use such tactics as kidnapping and the bombing of civilian targets, and right wing death squads continue to operate with impunity in rural areas of the country and especially in the border areas with Venezuela and Panama. Human rights organizations have expressed special concern about the large number of children used as soldiers in the conflict, largely by the FARC and the other large guerilla group, the National Liberation Army (ELN). It appears that one quarter of the combatants in these groups is under age eighteen, and the number of child soldiers in Colombia is only exceeded by those in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and in Myanmar (Human Rights Watch’s report on this problem may be found at the following Web address: <http://hrw.org/reports/2003/colombia0903/> here).

The use of torture, particularly by the right wing paramilitaries, is widespread. Amnesty International’s report on torture in Colombia may be found here (<http://hrw.org/press/2003/09/colombia091803.htm>). While one of the right wing paramilitaries, the United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia (AUC) has made repeated public promises to disband and demobilize, it continues to operate and has been declared a terrorist group by the U.S. State Department. The state department's report on human rights in Colombia may be found here (<http://www.state.gov/documents/organization/19598.doc>).

The conflict poses the risk of expanding beyond Colombia's borders and involving neighboring countries. In 2003, there were several instances of conflict between Colombians and the Venezuelan military on the Colombia-Venezuela border. The Colombian military claims that rebels are given sanctuary inside of Colombia, which Venezuela denies.

Despite Colombia's grave human rights problems, the U.S. government continues to certify that the Colombian government is in compliance with international human rights standards, which permits the U.S. to continue extending military assistance to Colombia.

b. Venezuela

While strikes and civil protests have decreased in Venezuela since 2002, the society continues to be deeply polarized over the country's president, Hugo Chavez. Efforts by other Latin American countries, acting through the OAS, to insist that Venezuela must solve its political problems through constitutional and peaceful means, have helped avoid a repetition of the 2002 coup attempt. Currently, the opposition is attempting to call a constitutional plebiscite to recall Chavez from the presidency. It remains to be seen whether such a plebiscite will actually be held, and if so, whether the losing side will accept its results. Charges including treason have been brought against a number of individuals who supported the 2002 coup attempt, including the president of the Venezuelan Chamber of Commerce, though the defendants have not been mistreated and have had access to lawyers.

In 2003, legislation was approved in Venezuela that restricts freedom of the press (<http://www.hrw.org/reports/2003/venezuela/>). While the Chavez government claims that this law is simply meant to protect children from seeing violence on television during the hours they are likely to be viewing it and protects public figures from invasion of their privacy, opponents of the government see it as a means to inhibit criticism of the government and full coverage of demonstrations and protests by a press that has been critical of the Chavez government.

c. Brazil

Brazil has one of the more violent societies in Latin America, and Brazilian police are often quite violent and corrupt. Extrajudicial killings of suspects are not uncommon, and deaths at the hands of police are more than 2,000 per year. Torture is practiced both by police and in prisons, and prison conditions are generally overcrowded and harsh. There are many prison riots, which are generally put down by force. Even children who are detained by the police in Brazil can be subject to physical and mental abuse (<http://www.hrw.org/reports/2003/brazil/>).

d. Argentina

The Argentine people continue to suffer as a result of the government's debt default in late 2001 and the subsequent collapse of the economy. While Argentina remains a democratic country, the high and ever increasing levels of poverty in what was once one of the seven richest countries in the world put the society under great strain and have caused serious increases in crime. One of the most frightening aspects of the problem is the veritable explosion in kidnapping, especially in the province of Buenos Aires. Well-organized gangs prey not only on the wealthy, but also on middle- and lower-class victims, and it is widely believed that corrupt police are acting in concert with the gangs. Such charges have even been made by government leaders, and the relationship between the police and the Argentine government is now quite difficult.

During the election campaign of now President Nestor Kirchner, he promised to extradite current and former members of the military who were under indictment in Spain for human rights violations and, following his election, the Argentine Congress repealed the amnesty laws that had prevented the prosecution of members of the police and military who were responsible for human rights violations during the 1976–1983 military dictatorship.

While challenges to the constitutionality of the repeal remain to be resolved by the Argentine Supreme Court, there is now at least the possibility that these cases, now over twenty-five years old, may finally be brought to trial.

e. Chile

The year 2003 marked the 30th anniversary of the September 11, 1973, military coup that brought General Augusto Pinochet to power, and was the cause for the most open and truthful discussion of the events surrounding the coup and the military government's human rights violations ever to have occurred in the Chilean media. The current democratic government has continued its efforts to learn the truth about the disappeared, and has gained a certain amount of cooperation from the Chilean armed forces in its inquiries, though relatively little new information has come to light. While the Chilean Supreme Court declared General Pinochet to be mentally incompetent to stand trial in the "Caravan of Death" case in 2002, prosecutors have now brought a new case against the general for his involvement in Operation Condor, a joint operation by the secret police forces of Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, and Brazil in the 1970s directed against leftist dissidents in those countries. It remains to be seen whether the Supreme Court will allow this case to proceed to trial.

While human rights are generally well-respected in today's Chile, there remain significant current problems in freedom of expression and the press. Chilean journalists can be and are prosecuted for reporting even truthful news under a variety of legal theories including "insult to authority," the "right to privacy" and libel. While businessman Eduardo Yañez was acquitted in April 2003 of charges of insult to authority for criticizing the judiciary on a television talk show in July 2003, the Chilean courts prohibited the broadcast of a television show about a sensational murder case in which the victim was murdered while entertaining prostitutes in his office. Although the program had evidence, including a confession of one of the murderers, that suggested another person had been wrongly convicted, the show was banned on complaint of the victim's wife, who claimed the broadcast would violate her family's right to honor and privacy. Most seriously, in November, an investigative reporter for Chilevision was jailed for conducting and broadcasting a hidden camera interview with a Chilean judge who was presiding over the investigation of a major pedophile ring allegedly involving, among others, senators of two political parties.

The journalist conducted the interview after obtaining information, including tape recordings, which indicated the investigating judge had visited a sauna where underage boys were present. While the judge was later removed from the case and disciplined, the case against the journalist continued to proceed. A bill that would even further restrict the press under the rubric of protecting privacy has been approved by the Chamber of Deputies, though the Chilean president has now stated that the bill in its present form must be scrapped.

f. Bolivia

A series of strikes and protests led to the resignation of Bolivian President Gonzalo Sánchez de Lozada on October 17, 2003. Fifty-nine people were killed in these protests by the Bolivian armed forces, which forcibly broke up a number of protests. While the Bolivian Congress has called for a "trial of responsibility" for these deaths, human rights organization have expressed concern that jurisdiction over these cases has been retained by the military courts and no progress seems to have been made in identifying those responsible.

g. Peru

On August 28, 2003, the Peruvian Truth and Reconciliation Commission released its findings, which can be found in Spanish here and in English here (http://www.cverdad.org.pe/ingles/pagina01.php). The report stated that almost 70,000 people had been killed in the civil unrest and guerilla activities between 1980 and 2000, and of these, about half had been killed by the Shining Path (Sendero Luminoso) guerilla group and another third by government security forces. While trials of Vladimiro Montesinos, the intelligence chief of the former Fujimori government under which the bulk of the government caused deaths occurred, are continuing, Fujimori himself remains in Japan as a Japanese citizen, though the Peruvian government has repeatedly requested the Japanese government to extradite him. There was considerable opposition and obstacles to the work of the commission by various political sectors linked to the Fujimori government, and few prosecutions of other individuals have begun since the commission issued its report

Meanwhile, the Shining Path has again become active in some parts of the country, and has apparently been involved in several bombings in Lima. At the same time, Fujimori, through his well-financed Internet site (<http://www.fujimorialberto.com/index.php>) in Japan, has begun a campaign to rehabilitate himself politically in the hopes of returning to power in Peru.

Note: The Peruvian human rights group, Asociación Pro Derechos Humanos (APRODEH) or Pro Human Rights Association (APRODEH), maintains a Website in Spanish [here (<http://www.aprodeh.org.pe/>). The national coordinator of human rights—Peru has its site here (<http://www.dhperu.org/Index.html>)].

h. Mexico

When, in 2001, Vicente Fox became the first president from a political party other than the Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) to be elected in more than sixty years, he made a commitment to establish a special prosecutor's office to address human rights violations that had occurred under previous governments. However, in 2003, the special prosecutor had yet to produce significant results, and the Fox government's commitment to fulfill its commitments was questioned (<http://www.hrw.org/reports/2003/mexico0703>) by human rights organizations.

Beginning in 1993, there have been a large number of rapes and murders of young, poor women in the Ciudad Juarez, which is across the border from El Paso, Texas. In 2001, fifty-one of these crimes occurred; in 2002, the number was forty-three. The local police had been unsuccessful in solving these cases, and often attempted to blame the victims themselves for what had happened to them. In 2003, Amnesty International (<http://web.amnesty.org/library/Index/ENGAMR410262003?open&of=ENG-MEX>) and other Mexican and international organizations began to apply pressure to the Mexican government to solve these cases. The government's National Commission of Human Rights (CNDH) investigated the situation, recognized its seriousness, and produced a report (<http://www.cndh.org.mx/Principal/document/informe2003/index.htm>), which made recommendations to the various authorities and governmental units involved, and President Fox established an intergovernmental task force to further investigate. However, no breakthrough has been made to solve these cases.

i. Cuba

Both Amnesty International (<http://web.amnesty.org/library/Index/ENGAMR250172003?open&of=ENG-CUB>) and Human Rights Watch (<http://www.hrw.org/press/2003/09/cuba090403-tst.htmz>) have characterized 2003 as the worst year for human rights in Cuba in many years—perhaps even since the 1959 revolution. Beginning in mid March, more than seventy-five dissidents were arrested, given hasty trials, and sentenced to up to twenty-eight years in prison. Moreover, in April, three men convicted of attempting to hijack a Cuban boat to Miami were executed, breaking a three-year moratorium on capital punishment in Cuba and making Cuba the only country in the Western Hemisphere other than the United States to apply the death penalty. These events caused the breakdown of what had been improving relations between Cuba and the European Union (<http://europa-eu-un.org/article.asp?id=2403>).

However, even after these events, Amnesty International (<http://web.amnesty.org/library/Index/ENGAMR250172003?open&of=ENG-CUB>), Human Rights Watch (<http://www.hrw.org/press/2003/09/cuba090403-tst.htm>), and the European Union (<http://europa-eu-un.org/article.asp?id=2954>) continued to criticize the U.S. trade embargo of Cuba as being harmful to the process of encouraging change in Cuba as well as causing hardship to the Cuban people. Our partner church in Cuba, the Reformed Presbyterian Church in Cuba, is also critical of the embargo.

2. Religious Rights

The question of religious liberty deserves special consideration in Latin America. Historically, the Roman Catholic Church was the state church in all Spanish-speaking countries as well as in Brazil, and there remains some degree of privileged treatment for it in most countries. In some countries, such as Peru and Argentina, the Catholic Church continues to receive a unique recognition by the state and state financial support; in other countries, such as Chile and Mexico, the law separates church and state, but there remains a de facto preference for the Roman Catholic Church.

Protestants and other faiths are generally free to form churches and evangelize, but their ability to engage in public ministries—chaplaincies in the armed forces, hospitals, and other state institutions, as well religious education in state schools—is severely limited or completely absent in most countries. Non-Roman Catholic churches are often subject to legal regulations and controls on the part of the state that are not applied to the Catholic Church, and can be subject to very different treatment under local tax and property laws. Generally, there is no legal impediment to the state interfering in the internal government of non-Roman Catholic churches, though the autonomy of functioning under canon law of the Roman Catholic Church is usually respected.

The Catholic Church continues to exercise some degree of control over organs of censorship of the public media, and has used it to repress religious opinions expressed in the public media that it deems offensive. The Roman Catholic hierarchy is generally not sensitive to these sorts of religious discrimination, and can view attempts to equalize the legal treatment and rights of all churches as attempts to diminish the Roman Catholic Church or treat the “Catholic Church as though it were just another church.” This, along with the social discrimination that is practiced in many countries against Protestants, who often come from the poorest sectors of society, produces religious tensions between the Latin American Roman Catholic Church and Protestants that are different than anything experienced in the United States and, therefore, difficult for many North Americans to understand. Some progress in changing this situation has occurred. The Chilean Ministry of Justice has put forward the Chilean law on Religious Organizations to the United Nations as an example of a “human rights experience that can be replicated in other countries,” and studies of reforms of the law are proceeding in several other Latin American countries.

Item 13-06

[The assembly approved Item 13-06. See p. 91.]

The General Assembly Council, upon recommendation of the National Ministries Division, recommends that the 216th General Assembly remove Talisman Energy from the General Assembly divestment list.

Rationale

This recommendation is in response to the following referral: 2003 Referral: Item 11-11. Recommendation that the General Assembly Remove Talisman Energy from the General Assembly Divestment List—From the General Assembly Council (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 41, 630).

The General Assembly placed Talisman Energy, a Canadian oil company, on its divestment list in 2001. The 213th General Assembly (2001) had asked the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to recommend whether divestment action was appropriate considering Talisman Energy’s role in the Sudan oil exploration and pipeline that was playing a prominent role in the Sudanese civil war and human rights abuses (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 212ff). In recommending divestment, MRTI noted that the New Sudan Council of Churches had asked all non-Sudanese oil companies to withdraw from their country until the civil war was resolved. Talisman had refused to heed this call.

However, in the time following the General Assembly’s divestment action, Talisman Energy came under significant pressure, and concluded that it could no longer justify the additional cost of remaining in Sudan. In the fall of 2002, the company announced its intention to withdraw. The MRTI then recommended to the 215th General Assembly (2003) that Talisman Energy be removed from the divestment list after the company had sold its interests in the oil exploration and pipeline project (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 630). The sale was completed in March 2003, and verified by our Canadian ecumenical partners. The General Assembly declined to remove Talisman Energy seeking further proof that the company was no longer in Sudan, and was not engaged in similar situations elsewhere in the world.

Talisman Energy is no longer in the Sudan except for some continued funding of humanitarian projects it started while there. A check of Talisman Energy's Web site revealed the following information about its international operations. In Africa, Talisman Energy is in a joint venture producing oil in Algeria, and has an exploration effort underway in Qatar. In South America and the Caribbean, Talisman Energy has a 30 percent participation on an exploration project in Columbia, and a 25 percent interest in an offshore production project in Trinidad. In Southeast Asia, the company has oil and gas production in Indonesia with a 15 percent interest in a pipeline project. It is also in production and exploration in Malaysia and Vietnam.

A contact with Canadian ecumenical partners and a Web search revealed no serious concerns about these operations.

Talisman Energy is not out of the woods yet. The company is being sued by the Presbyterian Church of Sudan for "violations of international law for participating in the Sudanese government's ethnic cleansing of Christian and other non-Muslim minorities in the areas of Southern Sudan where Talisman is [was] exploring for oil." This suit was filed on November 8, 2001. The case will proceed even though the company is no longer in Sudan. However, Talisman Energy was placed upon the General Assembly divestment list due to its refusal to withdraw from Sudan when urged by the New Sudan Council of Churches and many others. The company later complied with this urging, and thus the rationale for Talisman Energy's continued placement on the General Assembly divestment list no longer holds. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), however, can continue to support the legal case filed by the Presbyterian Church in Sudan, and urge Talisman Energy to comply with any judgment in the case.

Item 13-07

[In response to Item 13-07, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See p. 90.]

On Expressing Our Solidarity with the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan and with the Taiwanese People—From the Presbytery of the Pacific.

The Presbytery of Pacific humbly requests that the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (USA) take the following actions:

1. Reaffirm the action of the 206th General Assembly (1994) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in which it affirms the "Resolution on the Future of Taiwan" (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 109; for text of resolution, see Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp. 446–47) and supports self-determination for people of Taiwan and for the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan in its struggle for freedom and human rights; and its support for Taiwan and its national integrity and selfhood in the community of nations.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to express our solidarity with the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan and with the Taiwanese people.

3. Direct the Stated Clerk to express our support for the Taiwanese people to participate in the World Health Organization (WHO) to the president of the United States and urge the president to follow through with the action already taken by the United States Congress to the World Health Organization to accept Taiwan to be a member of WHO. Additionally, direct the Stated Clerk to also express our support for the Taiwanese people to the members of the United States Congress.

4. Direct the United Nations Office of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to advocate for Taiwan's application for WHO membership to international organizations whenever opportunities arise.

5. Direct the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Washington Office to advocate and work collaboratively with the Senate Taiwan Caucus and the House of Representative Taiwan Caucus and the Human Rights Caucus for Taiwan's application for WHO membership whenever opportunities arise.

6. Encourage all Presbyterians to become familiar with issues and concerns of the East Asia region and the United States foreign policy in regards to the United States-Taiwan-China triangular relationship.

7. Invites all Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) related media outlets and publications, such as the Presbyterians Today, Stewardship for Public Life (Washington Office), and Church & Society magazine to devote one publication on the human rights and democracy development in Taiwan.

Rationale

According to the United States Center for Disease Control weekly report, on April 22, 2003, the Taiwan Department of Health (DOH) was notified of seven cases of severe acute respiratory syndrome (SARS) among health-care workers at a large municipal hospital in Taipei. Subsequently, as of May 22, 2003, a total of 483 probable cases had been reported, including 45 cases among health-care workers, and 26 (19 percent) persons died.

The non-membership status left Taiwan without access to time-sensitive information through WHO's Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network (GOARN), which dissipates essential information on the management and control of communicable and infectious diseases, such as SARS.

World Health Organization personnel arrived after SARS had been active in Taiwan already seven weeks. There were thirteen deaths reported between March 17 and May 7 (as of May 12, the number of deaths was twenty-four). Furthermore, WHO personnel while in Taiwan were prohibited to speak directly to Taiwan's government official or from making any public statement. At that time, Taiwanese government and the United States Center for Disease Control had effectively enforced quarantine while WHO listed Taiwan in the international travel advisory category.

Although Taiwan was not a WHO member country, it adhered to WHO guidelines in transmitting its daily evaluation and status reports to WHO. The Taiwanese government promptly reported new cases voluntarily even though Taiwan had been excluded from the WHO membership. The SARS outbreak in the end impacted the lives of more than 8,000 people in more than thirty countries.

The WHO is mandated to "attainment by all peoples of the highest possible level of health." Nevertheless, the 23 million Taiwanese people were deprived of their human rights to the services that WHO provides. Ironically, while the World Health Assembly rejected Taiwan's bid for membership during May 19–28, 2003, eighty-nine Taiwanese people died subsequently from SARS infection.

The SARS infection in Taiwan constituted a medical emergency according to WHO's categorical system. More than thirty nations were infected by SARS, but only Canada, China, Hong Kong, and Taiwan were listed in WHO international travel advisory category as well as in the Pattern C of local transmission.

In the past, Taiwan has experienced WHO's exclusion with devastating consequence. In 1998, the entero virus infection was transmitted from Malaysia that claimed the lives of nearly eighty Taiwanese children while Taiwan's request for information in the virus outbreak was ignored by WHO.

Taiwan's population of 23,500,000 people is greater than that of three-fourths of the member states already in the WHO.

Even though the 23 million people of Taiwan are not equally treated by WHO due to its "non-member" status to receive fair protection under the WHO system, Taiwan is committed to do its part by working together with the world community, contributing its resources and experiences in order to advance the noble goal of health for all peoples. For example, in response to the 911 terrorist attacks in New York in 2001 and the resulting worldwide antiterrorist campaign, Taiwan has also contributed in significant ways. Both the Taiwan Tzu Chi Charity Foundation and the Taiwan Red Cross, for instance, swiftly assisted the victims and their families. Together with overseas donations and government contributions, Taiwan provided more than US$20 million to the Afghanistan humanitarian relief effort—including medical goods, freight trucks, wool blankets, and other supplies. Furthermore, four Taiwanese medical teams are currently stationed in Burkina Faso, Malawi, Chad, and Sao Tome and Principe, where they assist the respective local governments.

The United States government has been actively advocating for the observer status for Taiwan in WHO. In addition, the United States Congress passed H.R. 422 and S. 243 that authorized the secretary of state to “Initiate a United States plan to endorse and obtain observer status for Taiwan at the annual weeklong summit of World Health Assembly in May 2003 in Geneva, Switzerland.” The H.R. 422 and S. 243 were signed into public law by President Bush on May 29, 2003 (Public Law No: 108-28 bbc).

ACSWP AND ACREC ADVICE & COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 13-07 calls for the 216th General Assembly (2004) to express solidarity with the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan and with the Taiwanese people, and calls for advocacy for Taiwanese membership in the World Health Organization (WHO) whenever opportunities arise, and encourages the members of the church to become familiar with issues and concerns in the East Asia area.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advise that Item 13-07 be answered by the action taken on Item 13-01 as advised in the Advice and Counsel by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Rationale

Item 13-01 and Item 13-07 are similar in the issues and concerns they address. Since the issues in Item 13-07 have been addressed in the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns’(ACREC) response to Item 13-01, ACREC and ACSWP ask that Item 13-07 be answered by the action taken on Item 13-01.

Item 13-08

[The assembly approved Item 13-08 with amendment. See p. 91.]

Commissioner’s Resolution—On the Murders of Women in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) do the following:

1. Instruct the Stated Clerk to express the concern, dismay, and grief of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to [President Vicente Fox and] Governor Patricio Martinez Garcia, State of Chihuahua, Mexico, over the systematic murder and disappearance of large numbers of young women in Ciudad Juarez, Chihuahua, over the last eleven years.

2. Request that wherever they are able, representatives of Pasos de Fe Border Ministry, our bi-national ministry in the Ciudad Juarez area, express the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s deepest sympathy to the families and friends of the more than 350 young women murdered and the more than 4,500 young women who have disappeared.

3. Instruct the General Assembly Council to communicate our concern to appropriate ecclesiastical partners and civil institutions to help focus international attention on the violence and marshal regional and national support for competent, timely, and complete investigation.

4. Direct the General Assembly Council to participate in[, and request the Moderator of the 216th General Assembly (2004) to represent the PC(USA) in,] a service to be planned by [Pesas] [Pasos] de Fe, the presbyteries of Sierra Blanca and Tres Rios, in dialogue with the church in Mexico and other ecumenical partners to join in public witness and worship that cries out for justice and claims the promise of the Resurrection.

Rationale

The number of murders of women in Ciudad Juarez over the last eleven years range in estimate from 269 to more than 350, and as many as 4,500 women are said to be missing. The majority suffered sexual violence before being killed. In 1990, 2.1 women were murdered per every 100,000 women in the state of Chihuahua. By 2003, that figure rose to 4.7 per 100,000. There is evidence of a pattern in that particular types of women have been targeted—most were between 13 and 22 years of age and were either students or wage earners at low-paying jobs. More than 70 percent of these murders were by strangulation or beating, and the manner of disposal of the bodies indicates a predetermined pattern by which victims were selected and murdered.

Public confidence in the ability of police and government authorities to investigate and prosecute these crimes has collapsed. Amnesty International reports that investigations of murdered women in Chihuahua State has been marred by negligence, police tampering and destruction of evidence, and accusations of official corruption. Both the major political parties of Mexico have reneged on campaign promises to pursue and solve these cases. Further, the impunity of a large number of perpetrators sends to the public a message that violence against women is condoned, tacitly endorsing an attitude that possibly perpetuates such crime.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has an interest and investment in the Ciudad Juarez, Chihuahua/ El Paso, Texas/Sunland Park, New Mexico, area through Presbyterian Border Ministry and our project sited there. Our joint ministry and witness with partners in the National Presbyterian Church of Mexico calls us to concern for the physical safety, mental and spiritual welfare, and public good of all the citizens of this part of our shared international border. Our common witness may serve to curb the politicization of crime, urge effective intervention by authorities responsible for justice, and bring the consolation of solidarity to a troubled people.

ACSWP, ACREC, ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-08—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Item 13-08 calls for the Stated Clerk to express the concern, dismay, and grief of the PC(USA) to Governor Patricio Martinez Garcia of Chihuahua, Mexico, over the systematic murder and disappearance of women in Ciudad Juarez over the last eleven years; requests that sympathy be extended to the families and friends of the women through the Presbyterian Pasos de Fe Border Ministry; and instructs the General Assembly Council (GAC) to communicate the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s concern to the appropriate ecclesiastical partners and civil institutions.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advise that Item 13-08 be approved.

This overture is consistent with biblical and reformed mandates, the Book of Order, and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) policy.

The 197th General Assembly (1985) stated, “A church committed to peacemaking cannot avoid its responsibility to address the issue of domestic and international violence against women” (Minutes, 1985, Part I, p. 571).

The Book of Order defines discipleship as including the participation of the church in “ministering to the needs of the poor... and the powerless; engaging in the struggle to free people from sin, fear, oppression... and injustice; [and] giving itself and its substance to the service of those who suffer” (G-3.0300c(3)).

In addition, the 213th General Assembly (2001) approved the policy statement, Turn Mourning Into Dancing, that states “the church promotes the respect and human dignity of all persons and through God’s love and grace, their right to safety, nurture, care, and freedom from abuse and violence” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 242).

Item 13-09

[The assembly approved Item 13-09 with amendment. See pp. 91–92.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Opposition to the Central American Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA) #07.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do the following:

1. Declare our opposition to the Central American Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA) [in its current form, as it fails to adequately protect workers’ rights, human rights, food security, and environmental standards, and it limits the ability of governments and sovereign indigenous peoples to regulate corporations to protect the common good].

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate with the president of the United States and members of Congress the opposition of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the Central American Free Trade Agreement [and other free trade agreements].

3. Direct the General Assembly Council, ~~[in consultation with borderlands synods and presbyteries, to prepare a study document on the Central America Free Trade Agreement.]~~ [through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) programs dealing with economic justice, hunger, and advocacy, to promptly communicate the General Assembly position to the U.S. trade representative, U.S. senators and representatives, congressional committees with trade jurisdiction, and state legislators,] with emphasis on those sections [of CAFTA and other free trade agreements] that negatively affect our partners ~~[in Central America].~~

4. ~~[Urge synods, presbyteries, and congregations to study the impact of the Central America Free Trade Agreement on our]~~ [Request the General Assembly Council to identify] sisters and brothers [and institutional partners] [in Central America and to communicate their concerns to members of Congress] [who have been impacted by free trade policies, and help interpret these stories and effects to church members through itineration in the U.S. and inclusion of these into a congregational study guide on trade issues and economic globalization.]

5. Direct the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment [MRTI] to explore the implications of CAFTA [and other free trade agreements] and advise the General Assembly.

[6. Call on presbyteries, churches, and church members to do the following:

[a. Become educated about how CAFTA, and other free trade agreements, can further economic globalization policies that are unsustainable and unjust, by drawing on the resources of the Presbyterian Hunger Program, the Presbyterian Washington Office, and other offices of the National and Congregational Ministries Divisions.

[b. Advocate with state legislators and U.S. senators and representatives, urging them to oppose CAFTA and other free trade agreements in their current form.

[c. Join in coalitions with community and nonprofit groups, including other Christian denominations, which are organizing opposition to CAFTA and other free trade agreements with similar provisions.]

Rationale

In 2003, numerous religious, humanitarian, development, labor, and public policy organizations called on the United States to honor a set of standards of fairness and justice in trade negotiations with Central America.<sup>1</sup> CAFTA, as negotiated, will harm, rather than help, farmers and workers in Central America who are struggling to overcome poverty. We believe as well that CAFTA will not benefit ordinary people in the United States. The CAFTA will not contribute to equitable, just, and sustainable development in the United States or Central America.

The following impacts would occur in Central American countries and in the United States:

1. Central American Countries
  - a. Destroy subsistence farming.
  - b. Create a threat to food security.
  - c. Create inadequate environmental protections.
  - d. Cause negative impact on fair trade enterprises and cooperatives.
  - e. Erode essential services.
  - f. Create loss of national sovereignty.
2. United States
  - a. Increase forced migration of people from Central America to the United States.
  - b. Increase militarization of the border between Mexico and the United States.
  - c. Export additional jobs from the United States.

The Central America Free Trade Agreement builds on the foundation of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), which went into effect in 1994. Ten years of NAFTA are indicative of some of what can be expected under CAFTA. Additional information is available online at www.citizenstrade.org, which includes signatures from forty-eight organizations, including the PC(USA) Washington Office.

1. Under NAFTA, more than a million Mexican farmers and their families have had to abandon their land and livelihood because they are unable to compete with subsidized food crops from the United States. They migrate to cities, where jobs are scarce and wages low, or migrate to the United States, through dangerous border crossings.

2. Between 1994 and 2003, the percentage of the Mexican population living in poverty rose from 58 to 79 percent. This represents a 36 percent increase in the poverty suffered. For women-headed households, poverty increased by 50 percent. Increasing poverty both arises out of, and leads to, lower wages, sweatshop conditions, deterioration of health, increased marginalization, and instability.

3. Food security has been threatened by the export to Mexico of subsidized corporate foodstuffs from the U.S. and Canada, undercutting local producers in Mexico.

4. Threats to the environment have increased as industrialized agriculture has replaced small farms, and export-driven economic growth has led to over-use of natural resources. Dumping of hazardous wastes near factories has caused birth defects in children and other illnesses.

5. Foreign corporations have been allowed to bring lawsuits against governments that pass labor, public health, or environmental laws that reduce corporate profits.

In addition, the Central American Free Trade Agreement:

1. does not include adequate enforcement for violations of internationally recognized labor and environmental standards;

2. threatens essential services, in that it promotes privatization and deregulation of services including education, health care, postal service, construction, energy, transportation, and water supply;
3. specifically discriminates against products of nongovernment organizations and producer cooperatives. This would include fair-trade enterprises such as Equal Exchange and Just Coffee, which provide a living wage to farmers and producers.

The trade agreement was not negotiated within a framework of democratic accountability and did not include broad-based citizen participation. The text was only made public after the negotiations were completed. There were no social reviews or impact assessments by independent bodies on the potential impact of CAFTA on workers, people living in poverty, women, indigenous and ethnic groups, or the environment. The CID Initiative, a Central American coalition that participated in a side room of the negotiations, called for a moratorium mid-way through the process, due to the limited participation.

WORKER RIGHTS: The agreement merely states, “[a] Party shall not fail to effectively enforce its labor laws, through a sustained or recurring course of action or inaction, in a manner affecting trade between the Parties.”<sup>2</sup> For countries where labor violations are egregious and systemic, this clause is insufficient to guarantee protection of workers’ rights. Although fines may be levied against a trading partner, the money collected is not required to be used to remedy the labor rights violation, but is designated vaguely for “appropriate” labor initiatives. Suitable labor initiatives are never defined. The CAFTA allows a trading partner to re-impose import duties if the violating government does not pay the fine, but not for failure to correct the labor rights violation. The labor provision in CAFTA will also replace the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP), which includes a petition process, leading to the loss of a useful, if modest enforcement mechanism. Finally, no protection systems are established for rural or urban workers adversely affected by the trade agreement.

AGRICULTURE: Central American countries will be required to eliminate import tariffs on rice, beans, yellow corn, and dairy products, staple products on which the livelihoods of 5.5 million small and medium producers depend. The U.S. refused to negotiate the agricultural subsidies and supports it provides that enable U.S. agribusinesses to export goods at below the costs of production, undermining Central American farmers. Without the compensating protection of tariffs, Central America’s doors will be opened to the dumping of U.S. farm products, risking massive displacement of rural workers and increased food insecurity in Central America.

TRADITIONAL KNOWLEDGE & THE RIGHT TO ACCESS TO MEDICINE: CAFTA provisions on intellectual property threaten to place HIV/AIDS treatment beyond the reach of many Central Americans in need. CAFTA provides for expanded patent rights for brand-name medicines and new restrictions on using inexpensive generic versions. This will drive up the cost of lifesaving drugs, and delay or obstruct generic competition. It will become almost impossible for Central Americans to acquire affordable medicines for HIV/AIDS and other diseases. In addition, CAFTA will place restrictions on Central America farmers’ ability to use and save certain seeds, undermining traditional agricultural practices. The CAFTA goes beyond World Trade Organization (WTO) regulations, and violates the spirit of the Doha Agreement and the Convention on Biodiversity.

INVESTMENT RULES: Under CAFTA, national development needs will be secondary to the rights of foreign investors. A USTR fact sheet on free trade with Central America states that U.S. investors will enjoy “in almost all circumstances the right to establish, acquire and operate investments in Central American countries on an equal footing with local investors, and with investors of other countries.”<sup>3</sup> Accordingly, governments will not be able to harness foreign investment for economic development strategies that promote domestically oriented growth or support new domestic industries. “Furthermore, CAFTA includes NAFTA-like investor-to-state lawsuits, which will allow corporations to sue governments over regulations that they believe infringe on their business interests.” Finally, investors do not have binding responsibility to comply with International Labor Organization (ILO) standards.

ESSENTIAL PUBLIC SERVICES: CAFTA negotiators did not exempt essential public services from the national treatment standards. Governments will lose the flexibility to subsidize these services and guarantee adequate provision of these services to citizens.

As Presbyterians, we affirm the right of all people to meet their basic needs, including enough food, clean water, housing, healthcare, and education, all of which presuppose a living wage. We affirm the right of farmers to make an adequate living on their lands, and of local businesses to succeed without the threat of competition of large foreign corporations. We affirm the rights of nations to set their own standards for labor, public health, and the environment, without the threat of lawsuits by corporations. We support trade that is fair. We therefore stand in opposition to the Central American Free Trade Agreement.

ACSWP, ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Item 13-10 calls on the 216th General Assembly (2004) to request that the current U.S. administration rescind recently proposed policies that further restrict travel to Cuba and limit family contacts.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of Item 13-10 with amendment to the first paragraph as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“That the 216th General Assembly (2004) call upon the ~~U.S. Department of State Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) of the Treasury Department~~ to rescind ~~the recent policies that restrict travel to Cuba and limit family contacts,~~ by restoring the following regulations: recent new regulations.”

Rationale

Recently, the Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) issued new regulations that were published in the June 16, 2004, Federal Register (with an effective date of June 20, 2004) that severely restrict travel and impose shorter duration time for family visits. The regulations also substantially reduce the terms and amounts of remittance to family members in Cuba, as well as curtailed educational travel.

For many years, the PC(USA) assembly has urged the U.S. to end its economic boycott of Cuba, lift all travel restrictions, and remove any obstacle to normalizing relations between the two countries. Recent General Assembly actions calling for an end to the embargo include:

- Resolution on U.S.-Cuba Relations (Minutes, 1990, Part I pp.78, 101, 612–89).
- Overture 92-47. On Urging the U.S. Department of State to Change Its Policy on Granting Visas to Selected Representatives from the Presbyterian Reformed Church in Cuba—From the Presbytery of New York City (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp.52, 55, 882).
- Commissioners’ Resolution 93-16. Concerning the United States Cuban Democracy Act and How That Affects the Churches and People in Cuba (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp.56, 60, 939).
- “Resolution on the United States and Cuba: A Call for Change” (Minutes, 1997, Part I, pp. 42, 25, pp. 588–92).
- Overture 00-85. On Mission Partnership with the Presbyterian Reformed Church in Cuba—From the Presbytery of Long Island (Minutes, 2000, Part I, pp. 36, 471–73).
- Overture 03-24. On Reaffirming the Church’s Commitment for an End to the U.S. Embargo Against Cuba and the Restoration of Diplomatic Relations—From the Presbytery of Santa Fe (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 39, 615–16).

Item 13-11

[The assembly referred Item 13-11 to the General Assembly Council, Global Education and International Leadership Development Office and the International Presbyterian Education Network. See pp. 92–93.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. Regarding Adult Basic Education

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) direct the General Assembly Council to establish a commission on adult basic education to foster projects and programs to functionally illiterate adults, most of whom are in developing countries.

Rationale

While the Presbyterian church has traditionally sponsored education for children and has emphasized higher education for leaders and the elite of society, the poor, illiterate adults have been left to remain in ignorance and poverty. This imbalance needs to be corrected by a concerted effort to give mothers and fathers an opportunity to become fully human and have life in its fullness. Illiteracy is dehumanizing.

While formal education for children is a long-term process, non-formal education for adults is a short-term achievement, which is both efficient and economical. In six to nine months, for only one hour per day, a mother or father can reach the third to fifth grade reading and writing levels. Thus, a man can either get a better job or do his own job better. A mother reads booklets on preventive health measures for herself and for her family, boiling the drinking water and feeding her family with a more nutritious diet.

Educated parents can read God’s Word in private and family devotions. Elders can study the Bible as well as other literature to have a fullness in their ministry.

Formal education without non-formal education for adults and parents leads to tremendous wastage in educational inputs. Up to 50 percent of children of school-going age are not sent to school by their parents. And up to 75 percent of the students in the primary classes drop out and become functionally illiterate. However, newly literate parents realize the value of education and not only send both their boys and girls to school but sacrifice to keep them in school. In many societies, only one out of ten children who start school finish high school.

Just as the Commission on Higher Education has enabled many potential leaders to escape their ghetto-type societies and find jobs in developed countries, a commission on adult basic education will enable many of the poor laity to become functionally literate and continue to contribute to their own societies.

May the Presbyterian church again become a pioneer in education by filling the void and give adult basic education a top priority, especially for developing countries around the world.

GAC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE COMMENT ON ITEM 13-11

Comment on Item 13-11—From the General Assembly Council Executive Committee.

The General Assembly Council Executive Committee decries the damaging reality created by illiteracy around the world and celebrates the hope that comes when children and adults learn to read and write and have doors opened to them. It is an essential part of the Good News the church is to proclaim through deeds.

We agree with the essence of the need expressed in Item 13-11 and celebrate past and current mission efforts of our partners and our mission personnel that have done much in many places to address the need for basic adult education.

Therefore, we urge that the assembly approve an alternate resolution to read as follows:

“In response to Item 13-11, that the 216th General Assembly (2004) refer the concerns expressed in Item 13-11 to the General Assembly Council, Global Education and International Leadership Development Office and the International Presbyterian Education Network, with the encouragement that issues of adult basic education be raised with partners as plans are made for PC(USA) involvement with and support of international church partners’ educational ministries.”

Background

1. Decreased denominational giving to General Assembly Council (GAC) ministries has meant we are already unable to meet the priority requests of our overseas partner churches in education. Funding this initiative would mean not funding other partner-requested educational ministries from a hurting budget.

2. Given the change of mission energy and financial resources from the national level to the local and presbytery level, we don’t believe the “commission” approach at the national level of the church is a workable model.

We have tried to acknowledge and embrace a new model of direct mission involvement by the grassroots of our church through the creation of mission networks.

Worldwide Ministries Division-related mission networks gather Presbyterians (individuals, local churches, presbyteries, and synods) involved and passionate about mission with our Presbyterian church partners in certain countries or around particular issues. Through these networks, mission endeavors are shared and exciting cooperation around educational, health, evangelism and development projects are taking shape.

3. Two years ago, it was noted that an overwhelming majority of mission projects and engagements by U.S. Presbyterians overseas centered on supporting educational projects of our partners. And so, a group gathered to begin an educational network and called itself IPEN—International Presbyterian Education Network. This growing grassroots group consists of U.S. Presbyterians involved in supporting the educational needs of our overseas partner churches. It is related to and is given staff support through the WMD Global Education and International Leadership Development (GEILD) office.

Much of the impetus of this group arose from the concern for our church partners who are still struggling to maintain primary and secondary educational programs. Unfortunately, governments in many countries in Africa, the Middle East, and parts of Asia have still not adequately assumed the role of educating all their citizens. And our church partners, believing in the right of all God’s children to read the Bible and be participant members of their churches and communities, have been left with this task with too few resources.

And so, we believe there is an exciting alternative to Item 13-11 that can accomplish its goals and hopefully ignite some additional energy in the denomination. The International Presbyterian Education Network would gladly incorporate those with energy and resources interested in supporting our church partners who are engaged in literacy work. We would encourage those with passion around overseas literacy work to get connected with this Presbyterian grassroots movement. We feel this has a much better chance for accomplishing the goal of providing literacy for all God’s children and effectively engaging Presbyterians in this worthy mission.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Item 13-11 directs the General Assembly Council (GAC) to establish a commission on adult basic education to foster projects and programs to functionally illiterate adults, most of whom are in developing countries.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises disapproval.

Rationale

Principle 2 of the Presbyterian Do Mission Partnership policy statement, approved by the 215th General Assembly (2003), states, “Partnership calls for interdependence in which mutual aid comes to all, where mutual accountability resides, and no partner dominates another because of affluence or ‘expertise’” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 587–90, particularly p. 589). The unilateral creation of a commission by the General Assembly to do new work overseas would appear to circumvent the current mission in partnership in process. Therefore, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises disapproval of Item 13-11.

Item 13-12

[The assembly approved Item 13-12 with amendment. See p. 93.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Commissioning 2005 Mission Co-Workers During 100th New Wilmington Missionary Conference.

That the 216th General Assembly (2004), meeting in Richmond, Virginia, from June 26–July 3, 2004, direct that the commissioning of mission [~~co-workers~~] [personnel and volunteers] in 2005 shall take place during the meeting of the 100th New Wilmington Missionary Conference, July 23–30, 2005.

Rationale

The General Assembly has annually commissioned all mission co-workers.

In 2005, the General Assembly is not scheduled to meet.

Prior to the 1958 merger of the United Presbyterian Church in North America (UPNA) and the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (PCUSA), missionaries serving the UPNA were commissioned at the New Wilmington Missionary Conference on the campus of Westminster College in New Wilmington, Pennsylvania.

The celebration of the 100th New Wilmington Missionary Conference will take place in July of 2005.

These events provide an opportunity to return to our historic roots.

The New Wilmington Missionary Conference is the only national, Presbyterian-related, annual mission conference.

The New Wilmington Missionary Conference is the logical place for the commissioning of mission co-workers of The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in 2005 when the General Assembly is not in session.

Approximately 2,000 people attend some portion of the New Wilmington Missionary Conference.

GAC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE COMMENT ON ITEM 13-12

Comment on Item 13-12—From the General Assembly Committee Executive Committee.

Since the General Assembly commissioning of denominational mission personnel includes all patterns of service<sup>1</sup>—both national and international—and is coordinated jointly by the National Ministries Division and the Worldwide Ministries Division, at the General Assembly Council Staff Leadership Team's request a team composed of staff from both Ministries Divisions met to discuss the issues surrounding commissioning in the years in which there is no General Assembly.

After discussing several options, keeping in mind the standing invitation by the New Wilmington Missionary Conference (NWMC) to host Mission Personnel Commissioning at their 100th anniversary in 2005, the team recommended the following:

The group recommended that Commissioning of Mission Personnel should take place during meetings of the General Assembly Council in the "off years" since it is an official body of the General Assembly. Moreover, commissioning mission personnel during the General Assembly Council would do the following:

- Allow flexibility and coordination of the cycles of orientation and mission personnel deployment.
- Keep costs at a minimum since GAC meetings are usually held in Louisville at least twice per year.
- Give General Assembly Council members an opportunity to be exposed to the experience of participating in the commissioning of mission personnel, thus enhancing their knowledge and understanding of the process and dynamics leading up to the commissioning.

The Staff Leadership Team decided to send this recommendation to the GAC meeting in September for final disposition.

Furthermore, in a letter co-signed by Marian McClure, WMD director, and Les Sauer, WMD liaison to the NWMC, the Ministries Division outlined the following ways in which WMD would contribute to a successful NWMC's 100th anniversary celebration:

- Publicity: The Worldwide Ministries Division would help get the word out about this event.
- Recruiting: The Worldwide Ministries Division, through the Mission Service Recruitment Office, will have a recruitment presence at the New Wilmington Missionary Conference.
- Mission Personnel Presence: The Worldwide Ministries Division will make it possible for some current and past mission personnel as well as some young adult alumni of mission service programs to be there and be available. One possibility is the Young Adult Volunteer Interpretation Team.
- A Speaker from Abroad: Because of the Mission to the USA program, the Mission Partner in Residence program, and all the information we have about who is being invited to the U.S. by various mission networks, the Worldwide Ministries Division believes that a prominent person from a partner church could be a speaker.
- Marian McClure's presence as a keynote speaker as per an invitation from New Wilmington.
- A General Assembly Council elected presence: Judy Angleberger will still be on GAC in 2005 and has agreed to attend the 100th anniversary.
- Other possibilities: The Worldwide Ministries Division is open to other possibilities and every request from the leadership of the New Wilmington Missionary Conference will be considered.

Endnote

1. Presently, the patterns of service are: national volunteers, international short-term and long-term volunteers, national and international young adult volunteers, reconciliation and mission exchange, and mission co-workers (international).

Recommendation Concerning the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The Board of Pensions recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) approve the amendment of Section 8.10 of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as follows, effective July 1, 2005: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with as italic.]

“Sec. 8.10 Payment of Benefits. All ~~pension~~ benefits payable under the Pension Plan shall be paid monthly at the beginning of each month. Payment of Pension Plan benefits shall commence as of the first day of the month consecutive with or next following the satisfaction of the applicable requirements of Sec. 8.1(b) and (c) by a Member, an eligible survivor as defined in Sec. 9.2 or an Alternate Payee.”

Rationale

The process for amending the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“Plan”) is established in the Plan document. The specific provisions of the Plan that relate to amendment are:

Sec. 19.1 Right to Alter or Amend Plan. The right to alter or amend the Benefits Plan is reserved solely to the Board except that any alteration or amendment to a provision of Articles VI, VII, VIII and IX (relating to the Pension Plan) that is in the nature of a benefit reduction to the members or a dues increase shall be effective only with the approval of the General Assembly. Notice of any such proposed alteration or amendment to the Pension Plan requiring the approval of General Assembly shall be given by the Board to members, local churches and presbyteries at least sixty (60) days prior to the date of the meeting of the General Assembly at which such alteration or amendment will be considered. Notice of any other amendment to the Benefits Plan shall be provided by the Board to the General Assembly, Members, local churches and Presbyteries in such manner as the Board deems reasonable and appropriate based on the nature of the amendment.

Sec. 19.2 Amendment of Medical Provisions. The Board, in its sole discretion, taking into consideration claims experience, administrative expenses, changes in the health care industry, and other relevant factors, shall have the right, from time to time, to amend the Medical Plan and report any such amendment to the next succeeding General Assembly of the Church.

Sec. 19.3 Amendment of Optional Benefit Provisions. The Board, in its sole discretion, shall have the right from time to time to amend the Optional Benefit Plans or adopt such other additional optional benefits as it deems in the best interest of the Members of the Benefits Plan. Any such amendment or additional optional benefit provision shall be reported to the next succeeding General Assembly of the Church.

Since the 215th General Assembly (2003), the Board of Pensions adopted amendments to the Plan that require the approval of the General Assembly prior to becoming effective or are to be reported as required by the Plan provisions quoted above. Notice of the amendments being presented to the 216th General Assembly (2004) was given by letter dated March 16, 2004, from Earle Robbins, Esquire, chair of the Board of Pensions, to all Benefits Plan members, local churches, presbyteries, and synods.

The Board of Pensions adopted the amendment to Section 8.10 of the Pension Plan, to be effective as of July 1, 2005, subject to the approval of the 216th General Assembly (2004). This amendment conforms the Plan to an industry standard thereby facilitating an improvement in the Board of Pensions’ benefit administrative processes and avoiding a software program customization in the Board of Pensions’ new benefit administration software.

Item 14-02

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) direct the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to

1. continue its churchwide gifts program, as well as utilize the Foundation's subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., for the benefit of churches, church organizations, and individuals who wish to use the foregoing to make gifts as an expression of Christian faith and stewardship;

2. continue promoting appropriate investment in New Covenant Funds, a family of mutual funds organized with participation by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation in July 1999, which are managed in a way that is consistent with the social witness principles of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and

3. explore and initiate ways to enhance its expertise and capacity in support of wills emphasis, planned gifts, and to explore the services of New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., and New Covenant Funds, that will allow these programs and entities to be ever more effective contributors toward the fulfillment of the Great Commission for the Glory of God.

Rationale

Each year, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation trustees ask the General Assembly to endorse the Foundation's work in support of mission and ministry throughout the church. This unbroken series of affirmations allows the Foundation to confidently pursue its ministry among congregations, presbyteries, synods, related organizations, and individual Presbyterians. General Assembly validation of our vital work on behalf of mission and ministry is essential to our effectiveness throughout the church.

Section 5.07. General Powers. All officers of the Fiduciary Corporation, as between themselves and the Fiduciary Corporation, shall respectively have such authority and perform such duties in the management of the property and affairs of the Fiduciary Corporation as may be determined by resolutions or orders of the Board of Trustees, or, in the absence of controlling provisions in resolutions or orders of the Board of Trustees, as may be provided in these bylaws.

ARTICLE VI

Indemnification of Trustees, Officers, Etc.

Section 6.01. Scope of Indemnification.

(a) The Fiduciary Corporation shall indemnify an indemnified representative against any liability incurred in connection with any proceeding in which the indemnified representative may be involved as a party or otherwise, by reason of the fact that such person is or was serving in an indemnified capacity, including without limitation any liability resulting from any actual or alleged breach or neglect of duty, error, misstatement or misleading statement, negligence, gross negligence or act giving rise to strict or products liability, except:

- (1) where such indemnification is expressly prohibited by applicable law;
- (2) where the conduct of the indemnified representative has been finally determined pursuant to Section 6.06(d) or otherwise to constitute willful misconduct or recklessness within the meaning of 42 Pa.CS Section 8365(b) or any superseding provision of law sufficient in the circumstances to bar indemnification against liabilities arising from the conduct;
- (3) to the extent the liability is finally determined pursuant to Section 6.06(d) or otherwise to be based upon or attributable to the indemnified representative gaining any personal pecuniary profit to which such indemnified representative was not legally entitled; or
- (4) to the extent such indemnification has been finally determined in a final adjudication pursuant to Section 6.06(d) to be otherwise unlawful.

(b) If an indemnified representative is entitled to indemnification in respect of a portion, but not all, of any liabilities to which such person may be subject, the Fiduciary Corporation shall indemnify such indemnified representative to the maximum extent for such portion of the liabilities.

(c) The termination of a proceeding by judgment, order, settlement, conviction or upon a plea of nolo contendere or its equivalent shall not, of itself, create a presumption that the indemnified representative is not entitled to indemnification.

(d) For purposes of this Article:

- (1) “indemnified capacity” means any and all past, present and future service by an indemnified representative in one or more capacities as a Trustee, officer, employee or agent of the Fiduciary Corporation or a Foundation Constituent Corporation, or, at the request of the Fiduciary Corporation, as a director, officer, employee, agent, fiduciary or trustee of another Fiduciary Corporation, partnership, joint venture, trust, employee benefit plan or other entity or enterprise;
- (2) “indemnified representative” means any and all Trustees, officers and employees of the Fiduciary Corporation, and any other person designated as an indemnified representative by the Board of Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation (which may, but need not, include any person serving, at the request of the Fiduciary Corporation, as a director, officer, employee, agent, fiduciary or trustee of another Corporation, partnership, joint venture, trust, employee benefit plan or other entity or enterprise);
- (3) “liability” means any damage, judgment, amount paid in settlement, fine, penalty, punitive damages, excise tax assessed with respect to an employee benefit plan, or cost or expense of any nature (including, without limitation, attorneys’ fees and disbursements); and
- (4) “proceeding” means any threatened, pending or completed action, suit, appeal or other proceeding of any nature, whether civil, criminal, administrative or investigative, whether formal or informal, and whether brought by or in the right of the Fiduciary Corporation, a class of its security holders, if any, or otherwise.

Section 6.02. Proceedings Initiated by Indemnified Representative. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Article, the Fiduciary Corporation shall not indemnify under this Article an indemnified representative for any liability incurred in a proceeding initiated (which shall not be deemed to include counter-claims or affirmative defenses) or participated in as an intervenor or amicus curiae by the person seeking indemnification unless such initiation of or participation in the proceeding is authorized, either before or after its commencement, by the affirmative vote of a majority of a quorum of the Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation. This section does not apply to reimbursement of expenses incurred in successfully prosecuting or defending an arbitration under Section 6.06(d) or otherwise successfully prosecuting or defending the rights of an indemnified representative granted by or pursuant to this Article.

Section 6.03. Advancing Expenses. The Fiduciary Corporation shall pay the expenses (including attorneys’ fees and disbursements) incurred in good faith by a Trustee or officer and may, by act of the Board of Trustees (including the votes or consents of interested Trustees), pay the expenses (including attorneys’ fees and disbursements) incurred in good faith by any other indemnified representative in advance of the final disposition of a proceeding described in Section 6.01 upon receipt of an undertaking by or on behalf of the indemnified representative to repay such amount if it shall ultimately be determined pursuant to Section 6.06(d) or otherwise that such person is not entitled to be indemnified by the Fiduciary Corporation pursuant to this Article. The financial ability of an indemnified representative to repay an advance shall not be a prerequisite to the making of such advance.

Section 6.04. Securing of Indemnification Obligations. To further effect, satisfy or secure the indemnification obligations provided herein or otherwise, the Fiduciary Corporation may maintain insurance, obtain a letter of credit, act as self-insurer, create a reserve, trust, escrow, cash collateral or other fund or account, enter into indemnification agreements, pledge or grant a security interest in any assets or properties of the Fiduciary Corporation, or use any other mechanism or arrangement whatsoever in such amounts, at such costs, and upon such other terms and conditions as the Board of Trustees shall deem appropriate. Absent fraud, the determination of the Board of Trustees with respect to such amounts, costs, terms and conditions shall be conclusive against all security holders, if any, officers and Trustees and shall not be subject to voidability.

Section 6.05. Payment of Indemnification. An indemnified representative who is entitled to indemnification shall be entitled thereto within 30 days after a written request for such indemnification has been delivered to the secretary of the Fiduciary Corporation.

Section 6.06. Indemnification Procedure.

(a) An indemnified representative shall use such indemnified representative's best efforts to notify promptly the secretary of the Fiduciary Corporation of the commencement of any proceeding or the occurrence of any event which might give rise to a liability under this Article, but the failure so to notify the Fiduciary Corporation shall not relieve the Fiduciary Corporation for any liability which it may have to the indemnified representative under this Article or otherwise.

(b) The Fiduciary Corporation shall be entitled, upon notice to any such indemnified representative, to assume the defense of any proceeding with counsel reasonably satisfactory to the indemnified representative, or a majority of the indemnified representatives involved in such proceeding if there be more than one. If the Fiduciary Corporation notifies the indemnified representative of its election to defend the proceeding, the Fiduciary Corporation shall have no liability for the expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) of the indemnified representative incurred in connection with the defense of such proceeding subsequent to such notice, unless (i) such expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) have been authorized by the Fiduciary Corporation, (ii) the Fiduciary Corporation shall not in fact have employed counsel reasonably satisfactory to such indemnified representative or indemnified representatives to assume the defense of such proceeding, or (iii) it shall have been determined pursuant to Section 6.06(d) that the indemnified representative was entitled to indemnification to the benefits of this Article shall have the burden of proof. The Fiduciary Corporation shall reimburse an indemnified representative for such expenses under this Article or otherwise. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the indemnified representative may elect to retain counsel at the indemnified representative's own cost and expense to participate in the defense of such proceeding.

(c) The Fiduciary Corporation shall not be required to obtain the consent of the indemnified representative to the settlement of any proceeding which the Fiduciary Corporation has undertaken to defend if the Fiduciary Corporation assumes full and sole responsibility for such settlement and the settlement grants the indemnified representative an unqualified release in respect of all liabilities at issue in the proceeding. Whether or not the Fiduciary Corporation has elected to assume the defense of any proceeding, no indemnified representative shall have any right to enter into any full or partial settlement of the proceeding without the prior written consent of the Fiduciary Corporation (which consent shall not be unreasonably withheld), nor shall the Fiduciary Corporation be liable for any amount paid by an indemnified representative pursuant to any settlement to which the Fiduciary Corporation has not so consented.

(d) Any dispute related to the right to indemnification as provided under this Article shall be decided only by arbitration in the metropolitan area in which the principal executive offices of the Fiduciary Corporation are located at the time, in accordance with the commercial arbitration rules then in effect of the American Arbitration Association, before a panel of three arbitrators, one of whom shall be selected by the Fiduciary Corporation, the second of whom shall be selected by the indemnified representative and the third of whom shall be selected by the other two arbitrators. In the absence of the American Arbitration Association, or if for any reason arbitration under the arbitration rules of the American Arbitration Association cannot be initiated, and if one of the parties fails or refuses to select an arbitrator, or the arbitrators selected by the Fiduciary Corporation and the indemnified representative cannot agree on the selection of the third arbitrator within 30 days after such time as the Fiduciary Corporation and the indemnified representative have each been notified of the selection of the other's arbitrator, the necessary arbitrator or arbitrators shall be selected by the presiding judge of the court of general jurisdiction in such metropolitan area. Each arbitrator selected as provided in this subsection is required to be or have been a director or executive officer of a corporation whose shares of common stock were listed during at least one year of such service on the New York Stock Exchange or the American Stock Exchange or quoted on the National Association of Securities Dealers Automated Quotations System. The party or parties challenging the right of an indemnified representative to the benefits of this Article shall have the burden of proof. The Fiduciary Corporation shall reimburse an indemnified representative for the expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) incurred in successfully prosecuting or defending such arbitration. Any award entered by the arbitrators shall be final, binding and nonappealable and judgment may be entered thereon by any party in accordance with applicable law in any court of competent jurisdiction, except that the Fiduciary Corporation shall be entitled to interpose as a defense in any such judicial enforcement proceeding any prior final judicial determination adverse to the indemnified representative under Section 6.01(a)(2) or (3) in a proceeding not directly involving indemnification under this Article. This arbitration provision shall be specifically enforceable.

(e) Upon a payment to any indemnified representative under this Article, the Fiduciary Corporation shall be subrogated to the extent of such payment to all of the rights of the indemnified representative to recover against any person for such liability, and the indemnified representative shall execute all documents and instruments required and shall take such other action as may be necessary to secure such rights, including the execution of such documents as may be necessary for the Fiduciary Corporation to bring suit to enforce such rights.

Section 6.07. Discharge of Duty. An indemnified representative shall be deemed to have discharged such person's duty to the Fiduciary Corporation if he or she has relied in good faith on information, advice or an opinion, report or statement prepared by:

- (1) one or more officers or employees of the Fiduciary Corporation whom such indemnified representative reasonably believes to be reliable and competent with respect to the matter presented;
- (2) legal counsel, public accountants or other persons as to matters that the indemnified representative reasonably believes are within the persons' professional or expert competence; or
- (3) a committee of the Board of Trustees on which he or she does not serve as to matters within its area of designated authority, which committee he or she reasonably believes to merit confidence.

Section 6.08. Contract Rights; Amendment or Repeal. All rights to indemnification under this Article shall be deemed a contract between the Fiduciary Corporation and the indemnified representatives pursuant to which the Fiduciary Corporation and each indemnified representative intend to be legally bound. Any repeal, amendment or modification hereof shall be prospective only and shall not affect any rights or obligations then existing.

Section 6.09. Scope of Article. The indemnification of indemnified representatives, as authorized by this Article, shall not be deemed exclusive of any other rights to which those seeking indemnification or advancement of expenses may be entitled under any statute, agreement, vote of the General Assembly or disinterested Trustees or otherwise, both as to action in an official capacity and as to action in any other capacity. The indemnification provided by or granted pursuant to this Article shall continue as to a person who has ceased to be an indemnified representative in respect of matters arising prior to such time, and shall inure to the benefit of the heirs, executors, administrators and personal representatives of such a person.

Section 6.10. Reliance on Provisions. Each person who shall act as an indemnified representative of the Fiduciary Corporation shall be deemed to be doing so in reliance upon the rights of indemnification provided by this Article.

Section 6.11 Interpretation. The provisions of this Article have been approved and ratified by the General Assembly Council and are intended to constitute Bylaws authorized by Section 5746 of the Pennsylvania Nonprofit Corporation Law of 1988 and 42 Pa.C.S. Section 8365.

ARTICLE VII Investments

Section 7.01. Administration. Unless otherwise specifically directed in the instrument by which any property, real or personal, is given, granted, conveyed, transferred, bequeathed, devised, assigned to or otherwise vested in the Fiduciary Corporation, including but not limited to its capacity as fiduciary or otherwise, and subject to the general investment policies, adopted from time to time by the General Assembly so far as consistent with the fiduciary responsibilities of the Board of Trustees, the appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees is authorized to invest and reinvest the property thus received or the proceeds of any property thus received and to retain property thus received and investments heretofore or hereafter made if done in the exercise of that degree of judgment and care, under the circumstances then prevailing, which persons of prudence, discretion and intelligence exercise in the management of their own affairs, not in regard to speculation, but in regard to the permanent disposition of their funds, considering the probable income to be derived therefrom as well as the probable safety of their capital. The appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees may employ such investment advisors and consultants as it desires to assist it in making investments, reinvestments and retention of investments.

Section 7.02. Certain Unrestricted Funds. With respect to investment of property and funds free of any standard of investment or over which the General Assembly has power of appropriation, the appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees may invest and reinvest such property and funds in such manner as the General Assembly or any body formed by the General Assembly thereto authorized may suggest or require, without reference to the standard provided by Section 7.01 of this Article.

Section 7.03. Restricted Funds. Where the terms of the gift or the instrument by which property or funds are received by the Fiduciary Corporation specify or limit the type of investments to be made with such property or funds, the investment or reinvestment of such property or funds shall be made in the discretion of the appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees in accordance with the terms provided or limited in the instrument by which such property or funds are received. In every case where a donor has specified that the principal of the gift be invested and that only the income be expended, the Fiduciary Corporation shall refrain from making any expenditure of principal, and in every case where a donor has specified the purposes for which principal or income may be expended, the Fiduciary Corporation shall refrain from making any expenditure inconsistent with the terms of the gift.

Section 7.04. Custodians and Nominee Registration. All investments and securities owned by the Fiduciary Corporation shall be held in the custody of a bank, or a trust company or other depositories as the Board of Trustees, the Advisory Leadership Team or another appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees may approve or designate. Investments and securities owned by the Fiduciary Corporation may be held in the name of a nominee which may be the nominee of a bank, or a trust company or other depository, provided the bank or trust company or other depository in the name of whose nominee investments and securities of the Fiduciary Corporation are held first gives a bond or letter to the Fiduciary Corporation where by it assumes full responsibility for the safe custody of the investments and securities and agrees to indemnify the Fiduciary Corporation and its Trustees and officers and employees against any loss or claims by reason of such nominee registration or default or infidelity of such nominee, and that all such investments and securities shall be so designated upon the records of the bank, or trust company or other custodian so that the ownership of the same in the Fiduciary Corporation shall clearly appear at all times.

Section 8.04. Deposits and Disbursements. All funds of the Fiduciary Corporation shall be deposited from time to time to the credit of the Fiduciary Corporation in such banks, trust companies, or other depositories as the Board of Trustees may approve or designate, and all such funds shall be withdrawn only upon checks signed by, or bearing the authorized facsimile signature of such one or more officers, employees or agents as the Board of Trustees shall from time to time determine. The name or accounts to which such deposits are made, and the name of the Fiduciary Corporation on checks drawn against such accounts may be "Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)", and may include such other words including the name of the Fiduciary Corporation and an appropriate designation to identify by purpose or otherwise. The Fiduciary Corporation shall designate the Central Treasury Corporation as attorney-in-fact of the Fiduciary Corporation and of each of the Foundation Constituent Corporations for the purpose of disbursing unrestricted income or unrestricted principal of invested funds (and restricted income or restricted principal to the extent specifically authorized by the Board of Trustees) pursuant to appropriations made by the General Assembly or any officer or agency thereof thereunto duly authorized. In the case of disbursements of unrestricted income or unrestricted principal, the personnel of the Central Treasury Corporation, and not the Board of Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation and the Foundation Constituent Corporations, shall be accountable and responsible for such disbursements.

Section 8.05. Annual Report of Trustees; Accounting System. The Board of Trustees shall direct the president and treasurer to present at a regular meeting of the board in every year a report, verified by such officers, showing in appropriate detail the following:

- (1) The assets, liabilities and fund balances, including the trust funds, of the Fiduciary Corporation as of the end of the fiscal year immediately preceding the date of the report.
- (2) The principal changes in assets, liabilities and fund balances, including trust funds, during the year immediately preceding the date of the report.
- (3) The revenue or receipts of the Fiduciary Corporation, both unrestricted and restricted to particular purposes, for the year immediately preceding the date of the report, including separate date with respect to each trust fund held by or for the Fiduciary Corporation.
- (4) The expenses or disbursements of the Fiduciary Corporation, for both general and restricted purposes, during the year immediately preceding the date of the report, including separate date with respect to each trust fund held by or for the Fiduciary Corporation.
- (5) The number of members of the Fiduciary Corporation as of the date of the report and a statement of the place where the name and address of the current member of the Fiduciary Corporation may be found.

The Central Treasury Corporation and the Fiduciary Corporation shall be subject to a single coordinated accounting system, the elements of which shall be compatible. Financial statements reported on by independent certified public accountants may be statements which have been combined with those of the Central Treasury Corporation.

The annual report shall be filed with the minutes of the meeting of the Board and copies shall be transmitted to the Central Treasury Corporation, the General Assembly Council and the General Assembly.

Section 8.06. Amendment of Bylaws. These bylaws may be amended or repealed, or new bylaws may be adopted either: (1) by the action of a majority of Trustees present and voting at any regular or special meeting of the Board of Trustees at which a quorum is present, if ten days' written notice of such proposed amendment, repeal or new bylaws is given to each Trustee, or (2) by the action at any regular meeting of the Board of Trustees of a majority of all of the Trustees in office, where no notice of such proposed amendment, repeal or new bylaws has been given.

Any such amendment, repeal or new bylaws shall be consistent with the Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and with the directions from time to time of the General Assembly. The substance of any proposed amendment, repeal or new bylaws shall first be approved by the General Assembly Council.

Rationale

The amendments made to the Articles of Incorporation and the Bylaws have been made in response to the following referral: 2003 Referral: Item 02-03. C. Recommendation That Corporations Amend, as Necessary, Their Articles of Incorporation, Bylaws, and Other Pertinent Documents and Report to the 216th General Assembly (2004) (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 34, 125).

Item 14-04

[The assembly approved Item 14-04. See p. 23.]

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) confirm the reelection of Robert E. Leech by the Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, and the concurrence of the General Assembly Council, for an additional four-year term as Foundation president and chief executive officer.

Rationale

At its regular spring meeting, the trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation unanimously, and with gratitude to God, called and elected Robert E. Leech to a second, four-year term as president of the Foundation subject to the concurrence of the General Assembly Council and confirmation of the General Assembly.

Robert Leech is a resident of Louisville and a member of Second Presbyterian Church. A lifelong Presbyterian, he has served as an elder and deacon at five churches across the country.

Leech earned a Bachelor of Arts degree from Ursinus College in Pennsylvania, and a Masters of Business Administration degree from the College of William and Mary. He is also a graduate of the National Trust School and Trust Management School at Northwestern University. Prior to joining the Foundation, Leech spent thirty years in the banking industry.

During his first term, Leech worked with the Foundation Board to implement a plan to increase overall planned giving to local churches, institutions, and the national church. He has worked with the General Assembly Council to better respond to the stewardship and funds development needs of the church.

Additionally, Leech has improved the financial position of the Foundation by managing expenses and increasing reserves despite a difficult economy. He has coordinated the inclusion of the Foundation's new subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, for which he also serves as chief executive officer, with the overall operation of the Foundation.

Finally, Leech worked with the board to create a strategic plan for the Foundation to ensure the organization serves the whole church by nurturing the stewardship of accumulated resources to fund the mission of the church.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 14-04

Comment on Item 14-04—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council Executive Committee, on behalf of the General Assembly Council, voted to concur with the election of Robert E. Leech to an additional four-year term as the president and chief executive officer of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation on Friday, May 7, 2004.

Item 14-05

[The assembly approved Item 14-05. See p. 23.]

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation and the General Assembly Council, on behalf of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, request the 216th General Assembly (2004) approve the transfer of jurisdiction, control, and responsibility for the three Foundation Constituent Corporations listed below from the Foundation to become Constituent Corporations of the Church Corporation:

- 1. Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a New York corporation,
- 2. Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a Pennsylvania corporation, and
- 3. The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a New York corporation.

Rationale

The deliverance adopted by the 198th General Assembly (1986) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and modified by the 199th General Assembly (1987) and by the 214th General Assembly (2002) (the deliverance) established the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, also known as the Central Treasury Corporation (the Church Corporation), and Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, also known as the Fiduciary Corporation (the Foundation), allocated ten Constituent Corporations to the Foundation, set out in Annex A of the Foundation's bylaws, and seven Constituent Corporations to the Church Corporation, set out in Annex A of the Church Corporation's bylaws. Section 1(e) of the deliverance directed the Foundation to review the need to continue the separate corporate existence of its Constituent Corporations and to merge them with and into the Foundation at as early a date as is deemed feasible and appropriate.

The Foundation officers have notified officers of the Church Corporation of the Foundation's intent to merge many of its Constituent Corporations into the Foundation as contemplated by Section 1(e) of the deliverance. However, three of the Constituent Corporations hold property in foreign countries: The Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the Presbyterian Church (USA), a New York Corporation; the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a Pennsylvania corporation; and the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a New York corporation (Three Constituent Corporations). Since the property and finance laws of many foreign countries are challenging and merging these properties into the Foundation could cloud title in foreign countries, these Three Constituent Corporations are not among those to be merged into the Foundation.

The Church Corporation is responsible for overseas property, finance, and legal matters on behalf of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council (GAC) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the GAC's Worldwide Ministries Division (WMD) and has been managing the property of the Three Constituent Corporations pursuant to a limited power of attorney with the Foundation since the deliverance. The deliverance gave the Church Corporation the right (which it has exercised) to request that all properties of the Constituent Corporation be transferred from the Foundation Constituent Corporations to the Church Corporation. However, because it is vital for the mission of the General Assembly, GAC, and WMD that the continuing corporate authority and existence of the Three Constituent Corporations remain clear, the Foundation requests authorization to transfer the Three Constituent Corporations rather than the individual properties as previously authorized.

Item 14-06

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) do the following:

1. Confirm the election of the following individuals as members of the Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment & Loan Program, Inc:

Nominated by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation: B. Cary Tolley III, Class of 2006; Marcy M. Moody, Class of 2008.

Rationale

The 1995 deliverance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment & Loan Program, Inc., assigns General Assembly Council the responsibility for election of directors to the program's board. Directors are nominated by various agencies, e.g., General Assembly Nominating Committee, General Assembly Council Nominating Committee, National Ministries Division, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation.

The General Assembly Council Executive Committee, acting on behalf of the General Assembly Council, elected the above-named individuals to the Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment & Loan Program, Inc., during their conference call meeting of March 12, 2004.

2. Confirm the election of the following persons to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. Board of Directors: Joe Rigsby, Class of 2006; Isaac St. Clair Freeman, Class of 2006.

Rationale

The 1995 Deliverance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment & Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), assigns to the GAC responsibility for election of directors to the board of PILP, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Directors are nominated by various agencies, i.e., the General Assembly Council Nominating Committee, the National Ministries Division, the General Assembly Nominating Committee, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation. The above-named persons were nominated by the General Assembly Council Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly Council during its meeting of February 10–14, 2004.

3. The General Assembly Council recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) confirm extending the term of Ben F. McAnally, for the Class of 2006 to the Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

Rationale

Extending McAnally's term for the Class of 2006 is consistent with the newly adopted bylaws coordinating board terms with biennial General Assemblies.

Item 14-07

[The assembly approved Item 14-07. See p. 23.]

The General Assembly Council, on behalf of the Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) confirm the election of the Reverend James L. Hudson as president of the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

Rationale

Hudson has a Master of Business Administration in marketing from Indiana University, and a Master of Divinity from Princeton Theological Seminary. During his twenty-plus years with the Synod of Lincoln Trails, Hudson managed the synod's investment portfolio, which contributed about $200,000 a year to the synod's mission budget, trained 200 "mission advocates" in the synod's seven presbyteries, while he organized a series of mission-funding consultations. In addition, he helped establish sixteen new churches, and had a hand in twenty congregational redevelopment projects.

Hudson was unanimously elected by PILP's board of directors on July 31, 2003. The General Assembly Council Executive Committee, acting on behalf of the General Assembly Council, concurred with his election during their conference call meeting of August 29, 2003. Hudson began his service with PILP on September 2, 2003.

On Appointing a Task Force to Review the Medical Plan of the Board of Pensions—From the Presbytery of Abingdon.

The Presbytery of Abington overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to appoint a task force to review the medical plan of the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This task force is to be composed of nine persons appointed by the Moderator of the General Assembly. Those appointed shall have knowledge of health insurance but not be affiliated in any way with the Board of Pensions or have any conflict of interest that could perceptively influence their objectivity. This task force will report to the 217th General Assembly (2006).

Rationale

Many ministers and lay members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have questions concerning costs and coverage offered by the Plan. It is time for the Board of Pensions to have an administrative review. The medical plan review could be added without additional cost.

There are increasing numbers of ministers and lay members of the Plan who are expressing discontent with the escalating costs and co-pays with decreasing levels of benefits.

The increase in medical cost by the Board of Pensions appears to be greater than the cost of health care in general.

The medical cost part of the Board of Pensions' program continues to increase.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Plan members have been told in past years that we have one of the best medical plans offered.

This review will permit the task force to compare the Board of Pensions Plan with other denominational medical programs.

Concurrences to Item 14-08 from the Presbyteries of Baltimore, Eastern Virginia, Kiskiminetas, Peaks, and South Louisiana.

---

Concurrence to Item 14-08 from the Presbytery of Palisades (with Additional Rationale).

Rationale

1. The Board of Pensions Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) currently prohibits the enrollment of clergy in temporary relationships employed less than twenty hours per week, thereby denying presbyteries from utilizing temporary, part-time positions to fulfill the mission of specific churches, as well as denying presbyteries their responsibility "... for the mission and government of the church throughout its geographical district (G-11.0103)."

2. The policy of the Board of Pensions billing churches for part-time positions to pay medical dues at a full-time rate places an undue burden on small congregations and part-time ministers, and also encroaches on presbytery ability to discharge its authority to direct its mission.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 14-08 requests the 216th General Assembly (2004) to appoint a nine-member task force to review the medical plan of the Board of Pensions and report to the 217th General Assembly (2006), from the Presbytery of Abingdon, with concurrences from the Presbyteries of Baltimore and Kiskiminetas and from the Presbytery of Palisades (with additional rationale).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 14-08 be approved.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns especially agrees with specific issues cited in the statement of rationale from the concurring Presbytery of Palisades, namely, the prohibitions, limits, and undue burdens that current policy and practice of the Board of Pensions place on smaller membership churches, part-time ministers, and presbyteries in fulfillment of their call and mission.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns highlights these additional factors as rationale for approval of Item 14-08:

Factor One: The PC(USA) has a deeply rooted and long-standing commitment to diversity and inclusiveness in the whole church. Biblically, theologically, and constitutionally, those commitments call for full access and participation for the whole life and leadership of the church.

Factor Two: The 210th General Assembly (1998) approved a churchwide commitment to goals and strategies for significantly increasing the growth of racial ethnic/immigrant churches and congregational membership.

Factor Three: There are timely renewed calls [e.g. the report to this 216th General Assembly (2004) of the ACREC Task Force to Examine General Assembly Entities: Creating a Climate for Change; the feature article in the March 2004 issue of Presbyterians Today on “Guess Who’s Coming to Church: Newcomers from Places Like Brazil and Sudan Are Changing the Face of the PC(USA)”]; and the feature article/editorial/research data in the December 2003 issue of Presbyterians Today on “Finding God in Small Places”] to continue and expand church-wide commitments to diversity and inclusiveness, with a special emphasis on making substantive organizational and functional changes that move beyond mere principle and polity to public practice and experience.

Factor Four: Racial ethnic/immigrant churches, leaders, and ministries carry a disproportionate part of the burden placed upon presbyteries, smaller churches, and part-time pastors/leaders who are adversely affected by current financial inequities of a medical plan that requires full-time rates for part-time ministries.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Item 14-08 asks the Moderator of the 216th General Assembly (2004) to appoint a nine-person task force to review the medical plan of the Board of Pensions.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) recommends that Item 14-08 be answered by the action taken on Item 14-11.

Rationale

Item 14-11 asks for a review of the relationship between the pension and the medical plans to consider a recommendation, among others, that the two be separated thus providing for careful study of several options rather than only reviewing the medical plan. The rising costs of medical care and coverage affect single parent clergy-women severely. They serve disproportionately as pastors of smaller congregations. A 12 percent increase in the medical dues went into effect January 2004. This increased cost makes it more difficult for smaller congregations to retain ordained pastors.

While the Board of Pensions has struggled to maintain the community nature of its plans, a thorough review is important to explore ways of decreasing the economic burden on single clergy parents.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 14-08

Comment on Item 14-08—From the Board of Pensions.

The Presbytery of Palisades offered additional rationale for the appointment of the task force. The two points raised relate to a presbytery’s ability to direct its mission based on the policies of the Board of Pensions as they relate to temporary and part-time employment relationships.

The requirement of the Benefits Plan that there be an appropriate employment relationship in order for an individual to be enrolled for coverage is separate and apart from the decision of a presbytery/church to rely on temporary part-time assistance to meet the pastoral leadership needs of a particular congregation. The Benefits Plan is governed by federal laws as an employee benefits plan. Some reasonable level of hours worked and compensation received is required to establish such a bona fide employer/employee relationship; the standard that the Board of Pensions has adopted is twenty hours per week and compensation consistent with the minimum Pension Plan participation requirement.

Despite the fact that there are great cost pressures on the funding of the Benefits Plan, particularly with respect to the Medical Plan, family coverage continues to be provided for those with lower salaries at a cost below true value. In this environment, the directors of the Board of Pensions have determined that an expectation that an individual serving a church for a few hours per week should be so subsidized is beyond the ability of the Board of Pensions to meet. Presumably, the individual who is serving only a few hours per week does not rely on compensation from church employment for his/her sole or even primary support; similarly, there should not be an expectation that the church employer will provide full healthcare and other benefits for the individual and his/her family.

The second point in the rationale for the concurrence is that the policy of billing churches for medical dues on a part-time participating position at an equivalent full-time rate adopted by the Board of Pensions beginning in 2004, places an undue burden on small congregations and part-time ministers. It also encroaches on presbytery ability to discharge its authority to direct its mission.

This concern is essentially answered by the response to the first point, with the exception that, if the position is installed, participation is mandated and the minister of the Word and Sacrament must be enrolled in the Benefits Plan. If the congregation is unable to meet the expense of calling a full-time pastor, its pastoral leadership needs may be met in a variety of ways, many of which do not include mandated participation in the Benefits Plan. The decision about how those needs would be met is the responsibility of the church in consultation with presbytery; the Board of Pensions is not involved. While the Board of Pensions continues to provide access to full-time healthcare benefits for those employed in part-time church service, our directors have determined that it is no longer affordable for the community to do so on the basis of dues paid on part-time salaries.

The Board of Pensions advises that the Item 14-08, including all concurrences and comments, be referred to the agency review committee that will review the work of the Board of Pensions.

Item 14-09

On Directing the Board of Pensions to Revise Their Rules for the Calculation of Salary for Churches with a Clergy Couple Installed to One Position—From the Presbytery of Southeastern Illinois.

The Presbytery of Southeastern Illinois respectfully overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to direct the Board of Pensions to revise their rules concerning the calculation of the “full-time equivalent annual salary,” for churches with a clergy couple, married to each other, installed to one position, to use the combined “total” effective annual salary for the one position, at any given church, where the “total” includes the sum of the clergy couple’s effective annual salaries for the couple installed to one position; permitting one of the pastors to receive medical coverage as dependent/family member of the other spouse. This revision includes the following limitations and clarification:

- 1. Limit this exclusion/exception to clergy couples installed to one position as verified by the church and the presbytery, married to each other, jointly serving the equivalent of one, full-time position.
- 2. Permit one member of the clergy couple to receive medical/healthcare coverage as the spouse dependent/family member of the other, with the total cost of the medical dues not to exceed those calculated by the total effective annual salary of the combination of the two pastors (as if it was one pastor installed to the same one position); in accordance with the current Board of Pension guidelines for medical dues calculations (including the greater of the combined effective annual salary for one position or the minimum salary participation basis for one position).
- 3. This change would only apply to the medical dues and would not affect the current method of calculating the pension or the death and disability coverage or the dues thereof.

Rationale

Due to an apparent unanticipated impact from the substantial changes in the Board of Pension (BOP) Medical Dues calculation, the amount a church will pay for a clergy couple, married to each other, installed to one position will have the following effect; assuming a combined full-time equivalent annual salary equal to the churchwide median of $44,200: In January 2003, the total this church paid for the medical dues was $3,920 for each of the pastors, totaling $7,840 (2 x $22,100 x 16.5%). In January 2004, this church will pay $7,155 for each of the pastors, totaling $14,310 (2 x $22,100 x 18.5% x 35/20). A couple with one spouse serving full-time as a pastor installed to this same one position would have the same healthcare coverage, with the other spouse as a dependent—this church will pay medical dues of only $8,177 ($44,200 x 18.5%). Obviously, the impact of $6,133 ($14,310–$8,177) is a gross inequity for a clergy couple installed to one position, and the church that they serve—usually a small church. [Note: It is stipulated that the use of the words “clergy couple” in this document only applies to a “clergy couple married to each other.”]

Clergy couples installed to one position have answered God’s call, as they have discerned it, to serve Christ together by filling one installed position in the church because, as a couple, they feel the call to share in a common ministry as they grow together in marriage and career, usually including family responsibilities to children at the same time, as well. Generally these are couples with young families and are serving in small churches, each of which has limited financial resources; therefore, the church they serve should not be penalized by treating them as part-time pastors.

The Board of Pensions has adopted a 12 percent increase in the medical dues for all plan members by increasing the rate from 16.5 percent in January 2003 to 18.5 percent in January 2004. However, the medical dues will increase from 18.5 percent to more than 32 percent for a church with a clergy couple installed to one position.

The situation for a church with a clergy couple installed to one position is exacerbated in 2004 by

1. the 21 percent ($23,600 to $28,730) increase in the minimum salary participation basis,
2. the new calculation of the “full-time equivalent annual salary” prorated for the part-time salary based on the number of hours worked compared to 35 hours, and
3. then using the greater of the “full-time equivalent annual salary” and “minimum salary participation basis” as the “effective annual salary for medical dues calculation.

For a clergy couple installed to one position making a combined total equal to the churchwide full-time median salary of $44,200, the total increase in medical dues from January 2003 of $3,920 for each to January 2004 of $7,155 for each is a $3,235 increase for each of the pastors totaling a $6,470 increase for the church. This is an 82.5 percent increase in a period of twelve months with the church paying on a full-time equivalent annual salary of $77,350 ($44,200 x 35/20).

If one member of a clergy couple served the same church full-time in the same one position, the spouse would be covered under the medical portion of the plan as a dependent; but if this couple is called for both of them to fill the same single position, they and the church are penalized by an amount of $6,133.

If the actual effective salary for each member of the clergy couple installed to one position is $25,257 or greater, the church will pay on a full-time equivalent annual salary of $88,400 (2 x $25,257 x 35/20 x 18.5%)—this is the maximum any church will pay for one full-time position even if the pastor made $200,000 or more, while this clergy couple is only making a total of $50,514 combined. In both cases, the church will be paying $16,354 just for medical dues.

It is understandable why the Board of Pensions added the “full-time equivalent annual salary” calculation for most part-time members since part-time members are receiving full medical coverage and benefits under the medical portion of the plan, thus making it reasonable that most of those members should be paying a prorated amount based on their part-time salary. But it is not understandable why the Board of Pensions calculates salaries for a clergy couple installed to one, full-time position as two, full-time equivalent annual salaries.

For a clergy couple installed to one position, the “full-time equivalent salary” should be the sum of the two effective annual salaries and each part-time salary, individually, should not be subject to the “minimum salary participation basis.” The maximum this church should pay for medical dues should be based on the greater of the combined effective annual salary for one position or the minimum salary participation basis for one position; not two positions.

Due to the community nature of the Board of Pensions plan, we are not requesting a change for clergy couples who serve different churches or separate entities even though they also feel the pinch of each spouse having to pay full medical dues. The difference being that each entity does need to fulfill the obligation to the total community by paying a share of the cost of the benefits received; and recognizing that part-time members receive full benefits under the pension and death and disability part of the plan, no change in this portion of the benefits plan is requested.

Due to the unique aspects involved for a clergy couple installed to one position, we submit this overture petitioning the Board of Pensions to exempt this one classification of members from the calculation based on the part-time effective annual salary of each member individually with the minimum salary participation basis and the full-time equivalent annual salary. Instead, it is more reasonable to use the current Board of Pensions medical dues calculations for the combined total effective annual salary of both members of the clergy couple. The Board of Pensions has informed us there are not many clergy couples installed to one position. Therefore, this will have a minimal effect on the total income to the Board of Pensions; but it is a gross inequity for the clergy couple installed to one position, and for the church that they serve—generally a small church with limited resources.

ACSWP, ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-09—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 14-09 asks the 216th General Assembly (2004) to revise their rules for the calculation of salary for a clergy couple installed to one position.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advise approval of Item 14-09 with the suggestion it be combined with elements in Item 14-12 with guidance from the Churchwide Personnel Services.

Rationale

Both overtures (Items 14-09 and 14-12) deal with calculating salary for clergy couples sharing one pastoral call. The overture will help congregations of moderate and smaller size.

New guidelines that are more generous and fair will help strengthen the ministry of clergy couples who share one pastoral call. New guidelines will help encourage presbyteries to assist congregations seeking to call clergy couples.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 14-09

Comment on Item 14-09—From the Board of Pensions.

Item 14-09 addresses concerns of ministers of the Word and Sacrament who are married, serving together in the same congregation, and both installed to calls with scheduled hours less than full-time, full-time being defined as thirty-five hours per week. The wording of Item 14-09 describes these arrangements as “a clergy couple, married to each other, installed to one position” and asks that dues for the Medical Plan be based on the sum of the two, part-time salaries, presumably subject to the minimum participation basis, with one of the couple receiving medical coverage as the spouse of the other. There would be no change in how dues and benefits are determined under the Pension Plan and the Death and Disability Plan.

A similar overture (Overture 94-27) was presented to the 206th General Assembly (1994) and answered by the Board of Pensions by a response to the 207th General Assembly (1995), with a recommendation for no action, that was affirmed. In its response, the Board of Pensions made the following comments, which are relevant to this overture:

The Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes that persons are called to church offices as individuals (see Chapter VI. of the Book of Order, G-6.0000–.0503).

The provisions for ministers of the Word and Sacrament include the permanent pastoral position of co-pastor, which needs the permission of presbytery (Book of Order, G-6.0201b). The Book of Order defines co-pastors in the following terms:

Co-pastors are ministers who are called and installed with equal responsibility for pastoral ministry. Each shall be considered a pastor and they may share duties within the congregation as agreed upon by the session and approved by the presbytery. When a particular church has two pastors serving as co-pastors and the relationship of one of them is dissolved, the other remains as pastor of the church. (G-14.0501c)

The Form of Government of the Book of Order expressly provides for individuals being called to pastoral positions. There is no constitutional provision identifying one call for two people. If, in fact, there is some provision for each person assuming parts of a position by job description, the presbytery must approve that arrangement for each person. The call is still separate and individual.

When the General Assembly first adopted the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in 1986, the Plan was mandated for all pastors installed in and serving churches (Minutes, 1986, Part I, p. 700). Further, the terms of call require that all calls include provisions for participation in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (Book of Order, G-14.0506b). ...

The Benefits Plan is designed to follow the polity of the church insofar as possible. Therefore, the Benefits Plan is designed for individual plan participation with each person receiving identical benefits. The Plan also provides for call-neutral benefits—in other words, age, gender, family composition, and health status are not considered in the dues.

The Plan is also an employer plan. Dues are assessed on the position, not the person, which further protects the call-neutral status of the benefits. The dues represent the employing organizations’ share in the collective plan experience. (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 637–38)

The Board of Pensions recognizes the burden that the change in the dues calculation for those in part-time employment has placed on a church calling a part-time clergy couple to fill what was once a single position. However, it also is concerned about favoring one class of part-time members over another, and one class of clergy couple over another.

There are approximately 2,000 members enrolled in the Medical Plan who are scheduled to work less than full-time schedules, serving in a variety of positions. The cost of providing medical coverage for them and their families far exceeded the dues paid on behalf of their positions; the change to base dues on full-time equivalent salaries will bridge some but by no means all of the gap. Unlike Pension, Death, and Disability benefits, it is not practical to prorate medical benefits for part-time employment. In making this difficult decision, the board of directors recognized the demands the previous arrangement placed on other Plan participants and that a growing reliance on part-time staffing would exacerbate the problem. Unhappiness with the change is not confined to clergy couples; the Board of Pensions has heard from small churches and individual ministers of the Word and Sacrament, concerned about church budgets, and from part-time lay workers, afraid that their coverage will be discontinued by their employing organizations because of cost.

Similarly, there are approximately 500 clergy couples enrolled in the Medical Plan, of which slightly fewer than fifty couples serve in part-time calls at the same church. Over the years, clergy couples serving in a variety of ways, both full-time and part-time, questioned the need for dues to be paid on two positions. In its responses, the Board of Pensions has continued to point to the Book of Order mandate for all installed positions, regardless of any incumbent’s marital status. There is no link between eligibility for, and receipt of, benefits and the payment of dues. Rather, dues are paid on each position to generate an adequate fund from which the needs of all may be met.

The loss of income if the methodology recommended by Item 14-09 is implemented is not substantial and would be partially offset by the corresponding elimination of the enhanced benefit now provided to these clergy couples. More important will be the acceptance by the employers of other clergy/church worker couples and other part-time employees of a special arrangement for this particular class of member. A subsequent request to amend the dues determination for all positions held by member couples would have dues implications for all employing organizations, even if the enhanced benefits are discontinued. Any reversal of the dues determination process for part-time employees is likely to result in broader demand for change.

The Board of Pensions referred three questions that relate to this issue to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution. The questions are:

1. Can more than one minister of the Word and Sacrament be installed to one position?
2. If the answer to Question #1 is yes, is it a single call or multiple calls, each subject to Section G-14.0506b?
3. If the answers to questions one and two are negative, is there authority for an exception to be granted for married clergy couples only?

The Board of Pensions advises that Item 14-09 be referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

Item 14-10

[In response to Item 14-10, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See p. 24.]

On Creating a Fund to Provide Shared Equity Loans for Pastors Serving Churches Where the Average Cost of a Home Is Twice the U.S. Average—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to do the following:

1. Create a fund that would provide shared equity loans for the purchase of homes by pastors who are serving churches located in areas where the average cost of home ownership is at least twice the average of home ownership in the United States.
2. Encourage the Board of Pensions and the Presbyterian Foundation to commit 1 percent of their funds to this fund, as a real estate investment.
3. Create a mechanism that would evaluate the program after five years.
4. Create a General Assembly task force to develop recommendations that implement the above, consisting of representatives appointed by the Board of Pensions, the Foundation, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment & Loan Program, and the presbyteries wherein the average cost of home ownership is two times the national average.
5. Direct that each entity underwrite the expenses of their task force members.
6. Direct the task force to report to the General Assembly Council within one year with recommendations that would implement the plan.

Rationale

In presbyteries such as the Presbytery of San Francisco, medium and small churches often have pastoral searches that last longer than two years because of the inability to attract pastors to move to the area due to the high cost of home ownership. In October 2003, the median price home in the San Francisco seven county area (four of which comprise the Presbytery of San Francisco) was $466,000. The median price home in the United States at that time was $172,000 (November 23, 2003, San Francisco Chronicle). Additionally, pastors who rent homes and then decide to purchase homes often are required to purchase homes that have 1½ to 2 hours commute time to their churches. Both of these situations negatively affect the quality of pastoral leadership in medium and small churches. Creating a shared equity loan program would eliminate these problems.

The return on these investments would accrue to the Board of Pensions and the Foundation, thereby enhancing their return on real estate investments.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concern (ACREC).

Item 14-10 calls for creation of a fund to provide shared equity loans for pastors serving churches where the average cost of a home is twice the U.S. average, from the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns advises that Item 14-10 be approved.

Rationale

The ACREC supports Item 14-10 because it aids in enabling all to serve in the ministry of the PC(USA), especially where the cost of housing prohibits many from receiving calls, affecting racial ethnic ministers and the poor. The rationale provided by the Presbytery of San Francisco makes the argument very well. The ACREC expands its argument supporting Item 14-10 by indicating it will address the committee's concern for the inclusion of all people in the work of the ministry.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns calls attention to G- 9.0104 of the Book of Order that states an intention of the PC(USA) to be an inclusive church at all level of its ministry. Item 14-10, if approved, will remove one more barrier to service in the ministry of the PC(USA).

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 14-10

Comment on Item 14-10—From the Board of Pensions.

Item 14-10 encourages the Board of Pensions to commit 1 percent of "its funds" to this fund, as a real estate investment.

The Board of Pensions holds most of its funds in its capacity as trustee for the pension, medical, disability, and related benefits plans of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Benefits Plan funds must be invested for the sole and exclusive benefit of the Benefits Plan members and cannot be made available, as a matter of law, for this program.

The remaining funds held for investment by the Board of Pensions, the assistance program funds, are raised through the Christmas Joy Offering, gifts, and bequests to the Board of Pensions. Approximately 50 percent of those gifts are restricted by the donors for specific purposes. The remaining funds have been designated by the Board of Directors of the Board of Pensions for specific assistance programs. In investing these funds, the Board of Pensions is subject to a fiduciary duty to invest to provide sufficient funds for financial assistance programs for the retired and active members of the Benefits Plan. While some use of the unrestricted funds may be permitted legally for the purpose stated in Item 14-10, most of the currently available assistance program funds are committed to existing programs. The unspoken for assistance funds are insufficient to fund the proposed program. As a result, if Item 14-10 were approved, an existing assistance program would need to be terminated or reduced in scope, or new funds would need to be raised. Since the proposed program is essentially recommended to meet a local need, it would be best addressed to be designed and funded through a local or regional initiative.

The Board of Pensions advises that the 216th General Assembly (2004) not approve Item 14-10.

Item 14-11

[The assembly disapproved Item 14-11 with comment. See p. 24.]

On Appointing a Task Force to Review the Pension and Medical Plans of the PC(USA)—From the Presbytery of Providence.

The Presbytery of Providence overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to appoint a task force, which will report to the 217th General Assembly (2006), to

1. review the relationship between the pension and the medical plans to consider a recommendation that the two be separated;
2. review the feasibility of partnering for medical coverage with denominations with whom we are in correspondence and, if feasible, to recommend a plan;
3. review the feasibility of adopting a “cafeteria plan” of medical benefits and, if feasible, to recommend a process for this;
4. review the mandatory requirement that all ministers of Word and Sacraments and all lay employees of a certain classification be enrolled in the medical plan and to recommend exceptions for certain personnel who are adequately covered by other means;
5. review the vacancy dues policy and to recommend exceptions or exclusions from this policy for small churches and any churches in difficult situations as endorsed by the presbytery;
6. review the equalization of pay for determining dues for part-time staff with the end of recommending a more adequate policy.

Rationale

Almost 73 percent of the congregations in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have an average worship attendance of 100 or fewer people.

Many of these congregations are finding it difficult to afford an installed, ordained minister because of the rising cost of medical dues.

The long-term economic implications of the pension plan often discourage ministers of the Word and Sacrament from pursuing ministry in these congregations.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns.

Item 14-11 asks for the appointment of a task force with six specific review directives.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recommends that Item 14-11 be approved.

Rationale

Rising medical costs severely affect single parent clergywomen who serve disproportionately as pastors of smaller churches. Small churches have the greatest struggle with affording installed, ordained pastors due to increased costs of the Board of Pensions medical and pension plans. Item 14-11 proposes review of six alternatives for potentially addressing the current dilemmas.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 14-11

Comment on Item 14-11—From the Board of Pensions.

The significant increase in medical costs in recent years has put considerable pressure on all employers who sponsor medical benefit plans for their employees, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is similarly impacted. The effect on small churches is especially troublesome. After a number of favorable years in the mid to late 1990s, when the Board of Pensions was able to grant dues and benefit credits to participating employing organizations and Plan members, those cost pressures have forced dues increases and benefit reductions. Employing organizations and Plan members and their families, with all other American businesses, and their employees fortunate enough to be protected against catastrophic medical expenses, have experienced similar realities—the ever-increasing cost to the sponsor and the need for greater cost-sharing by the member/patient. This is particularly problematic when dues must be met from the collection plate in a time of economic downturn and the patient's share of cost is increasing at rates that outpace salary change.

The net result is an understandable level of frustration all around, because, unfortunately, there seem to be few prospects for immediate improvement and no good answers in sight.

This year and next, the directors of the Board of Pensions, who are elected by the General Assembly, already have planned to devote considerable time to the Medical Plan and its future structure. In their most recent discussions, the results of which were shared with the full board of directors at its March 2004 meeting, the directors on the Healthcare Committee identified several features of the Medical Plan for study, overlapping the overture list in a number of places. Issues of mandated participation, dual income families with access to more than one source of medical coverage, the advantages and disadvantages of introducing choice into the program, the possible role of participant contributions, these and other design ideas are being debated on an ongoing basis as the directors respond to the annual challenge of ever-increasing levels of Medical Plan expense.

Given that just 30 percent of participants (16,000 people) use some 97 percent of the total claim dollars (projected to be $130 to $140 million in 2004), any change that results in dues savings for one church will almost certainly mean a dues increase for another, or will require that a greater share of the cost be shouldered by the patient, who perhaps can least afford it, if the healthcare needs of the whole community of participants are to be met. The basic principle of insurance is that dues (premiums) must be paid for many positions with healthy incumbents, if there are to be sufficient funds to meet the expenses of those needing care.

The Current Model. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stated its policy on medical coverage through Resolution on Christian Responsibility and a National Medical Plan, a report approved by the 203rd General Assembly (1991). In that report, the church essentially calls for universal coverage financed through a progressive public taxation system. Although as a nation we have not adopted this policy, the Medical Plan for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) follows the proposed universal approach since all installed pastors are mandated to participate (which provides call neutrality and a stable risk pool). Furthermore, the funding of the Plan is provided by a progressive linkage of dues to salaries paid by employing organizations. The net result is a portable benefit, providing career-long family coverage, through a financially viable program.

The Pension Plan and the Medical Plan are funded through two separate trusts, and the segregated funds legally may not be commingled. As a pay-as-you-go program, the Medical Plan relies on the dues income each year for payment of claims as they are presented.

Crafting Models for the Future. While the current design of the Medical Plan may be viewed as both complex and somewhat paternal, it does, however, respond to the peculiar needs of its particular participant group, a community of members and employing organizations with sometimes widely varying resources. The Plan was designed to meet the objectives expressed by previous General Assemblies: to ensure that neither a Plan member nor his or her family would face poverty as a result of medical expenses and to provide that every call would be “neutral” in terms of the dues to be paid for a participating position.

Current trends in healthcare plan design are to shift significant portions of the cost of the benefit from the employing organization to the plan member, either through employee contributions, high deductibles, or high co-pay requirements. Nominally, this cost shifting is rationalized as providing more “choice” to the participant. Cafeteria plans offer a classic illustration of this approach.

As we study new models, we must ask the question whether our membership is in a position to assume any more personal financial risk.

Current Cost Saving Initiatives. The Board of Pensions already is in ongoing dialogue with our sister denominations through the Church Benefits Association, and is part of a joint purchasing group for the services of Highmark and Express Scripts, resulting in current annual savings of more than $2 million in administrative expenses alone. The Board of Pensions will continue to partner with others in pursuit of opportunities for similar cost-effective purchasing.

Vacancy Dues. Vacancy dues do not accrue to the benefit of the Medical Plan, but to the Medicare Supplement program that benefits retired servants of the church. Today, those dues (about $3.7 million in 2004) cover only some 13 percent of the cost of this program, so that the participants must pay the difference from their pension checks. As vacancy dues decrease, the cost of the program to these retired servants will grow larger. Each participating retiree already pays $190 per month, with another $190 to cover a spouse, and still has deductible and other cost-share requirements to meet. Vacancy dues are required for no longer than twelve months and the Board of Pensions does grant relief in difficult situations where vacancy dues create an undue burden for the payer.

Conclusion. In the absence of any major change in the financial circumstances of the Medical Plan, further focused study is already planned for 2005 with any significant structural change being reported to the 217th General Assembly (2006) before taking effect January 1, 2007. A second study on the same considerations seems duplicative, with unnecessary cost to the church.

The Board of Pensions advises that the 216th General Assembly (2004) not approve Item 14-11.

Item 14-12

[The assembly answered Item 14-12 by the action taken on Item 14-09 above. See p. 24.]

On Urging the Board of Pensions to Correct an Inequity for Churches Calling a Married Couple as Co-Pastors Sharing Less than Two Full-Time Calls—From the Presbytery of Northern New England.

The Presbytery of Northern New England overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to urge the Board of Pensions to remove an unfair burden upon primarily small congregations, by eliminating the medical dues penalty when a congregation calls a married couple as co-pastors to share less than the equivalent of two, full-time calls.

Rationale

When a congregation calls a pastor and pays the medical benefits dues to the Board of Pensions, the benefits program covers the pastor’s entire family. Whether the pastor is single or married with several children, the dues paid by the congregation is the same. Whether the spouse is unemployed, or employed by a business, the dues paid by the congregation is the same. However, when the congregation calls the spouse as a partner in their ministry, the congregation’s dues are doubled, even though the benefits to the co-pastors remains unchanged.

In the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), there are approximately 8,706 clergy serving as pastors, co-pastors, and associate pastors. Of those, only some 96 clergy couples are serving as co-pastors. That means, for all of the medical benefits system, the Board of Pensions would need to waive dues for a maximum of 48 congregations. Almost all of these are some of our smallest congregations, paying some of the lowest salaries, so the reduction of real income to the Board of Pensions would be too small to be statistically significant.

This is an opportunity for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to make a significant difference in both moral and financial support to congregations in need, while costing very little for the denomination or its Board of Pensions.

ACSWP, ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 14-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 14-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC).

Item 14-12 asks the 216th General Assembly (2004) to revise their rules for the calculation of salary for a clergy couple installed to one position.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) advise approval of Item 14-12 with the suggestion that it be combined with elements in Item 14-09 with guidance from the Churchwide Personnel Services.

Rationale

Both overtures (Items 14-12 and 14-09) deal with calculating salary for clergy couples sharing one pastoral call. The overture will help congregations of moderate and smaller size.

New guidelines that are more generous and fair will help strengthen the ministry of clergy couples who share one pastoral call. New guidelines will help encourage presbyteries to assist congregations seeking to call clergy couples.

On Reinstating Board of Pension Medical Coverage for Persons on Active Duty—From the Presbytery of Eastminster.

The Presbytery of Eastminster overtures the 216th General Assembly (2004) to approve that any person whose medical coverage through the Presbyterian Board of Pensions (BOP) was discontinued while on active duty with a Reserve or National Guard unit will have his/her medical coverage reinstated upon assuming civilian status. Said coverage will be in force for six months (185 days) or until employment or school-related issues can be resolved and current eligibility guidelines met. Premiums that have been paid out-of-pocket for BOP medical coverage under these circumstances since 1/1/03 will be returned to the payee.

Rationale

Some of our ordained clergy, nonordained staff, and dependents had medical coverage through the Presbyterian Board of Pensions (BOP) until such time as they were called into active military duty by the Reserves or National Guard.

The BOP has determined that they would not be covered when they are released from active duty until their job or educational status is resolved and fits within current eligibility guidelines.

The BOP will already provide medical coverage upon the voluntary payment of additional premiums upon their return—until their job or educational status is resolved and fits within current eligibility guidelines.

It could take one to six months for a person whose civilian life was interrupted to re-enter the workforce or a qualifying educational institution.

These persons need medical coverage immediately upon assuming civilian status, and such coverage would be secondary for any medical conditions that arose as a result of military service, for which the U.S. government bears a continuing responsibility until those conditions are resolved.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 14-13

Comment on Item 14-13—From the Board of Pensions.

The overture addresses the availability of medical coverage for returning military personnel for the period of time between release from active duty and resumption of their civilian lives. The overture proposes that the Benefits Plan provide free medical coverage for up to 185 days to former Plan members and dependents upon their return from service. However, this coverage is already provided by the military benefit program and by the requirement that the former civilian employer immediately rehire the returning employee with full reinstatement of benefits.

TRICARE, the program that provides healthcare benefits to members of the uniformed services and their eligible dependents, continues coverage when members of the Reserve or National Guard return to civilian status. Effective November 6, 2003, the Transitional Assistance Management Program provides 180 days of coverage for members of the reserves who were deployed more than thirty days and who separate from active duty status before December 31, 2004. Members who are deployed for thirty days or less retain coverage under the Benefits Plan for their entire period of military service. Several bills presently before Congress would extend the December 31, 2004 date. If the temporary program is not extended, service members with five or more years will be entitled to 120 days of free coverage and those with less than five years will be entitled to sixty days.

In addition, any Plan member who is mobilized for military service is covered by Federal law, the Uniform Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act of 1994 (USERRA). The USERRA requires that the military members' civilian employers immediately restore the jobs and any medical coverage to which they were entitled prior to their military service. As a result of this reemployment requirement, all Plan members who serve in the uniformed services will be able to return to civilian employment and resume their prior medical coverage immediately.

Plan members' spouses and dependent children under age twenty-one who are mobilized retain their coverage under the Benefits Plan during their period of military service and coverage continues with no interruption upon their return. Dependent children age twenty-one or over who were previously enrolled as full-time college students experience a disruption of their coverage under the Benefits Plan if they are mobilized. These individuals are entitled to free coverage under TRICARE for 180 days after their return. If the TRICARE benefit expires before the next school term begins (fall or spring semester), the Board of Pensions will provide medical coverage for an affected dependent child between the end of the TRICARE benefit period and the first available date that the child may re-enroll as a fulltime student. Coverage is provided on the same terms as for any other dependent. Under the traditional Benefits Plan, no member contribution is required. For participation under the Affiliated Benefits Program, the contribution requirement, if any, will be that established by the employing organization for coverage of dependent children.

Because these existing programs fully meet the needs of returning service members, no additional benefits are required of the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Board of Pensions advises that the 216th General Assembly (2004) not approve Item 14-13.

Item 14-14

[In response to Item 14-14, the assembly approved an interpretation of G-14.0506b(2). See p. 25.]

ACC Request Regarding G-14.0506b(2), Mandatory Participation in the PC(USA) Benefits Plan—From Minister, Presbytery of Pittsburgh.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) answer Item 14-14 (ACC Request 04-3) with the following response:

Item 14-14 requests interpretation of the provision in G-14.0506b(2) for participation of pastors serving with a call in the benefits plan of the denomination.

The language of G-14.0506b(2) includes the mandatory “shall” not the permissive “may.” However, that which is mandatory applies to the employing body, not to the plan member. The language does not permit the employing body to omit the payment based on a sum equal to the requisite percent of the minister’s compensation. It would appear that the language would permit the minister to decline to be enrolled. This might occur if the enrollment interferes with other benefits. It would not relieve the church of the payment. That would require amendment of the Book of Order.

Should the General Assembly wish to make the payment optional, the word “shall” would need to be changed to “may.”

Letter of Request Received by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

I would appreciate an interpretation of G-14.0506b(2), specifically of the following question:

Can a pastor, who has other medical insurance and does not need the BOP plan, opt out of the medical portion and thus relieve the church of having to pay the dues. Or does the requirement in the Book of Order that churches must offer the coverage mean that there can be no choice?

Thank you very much for your consideration of this matter.

Peace,

Don Dilley

Item 14-15

[The assembly referred Item 14-15, with amendment and with comment, to the Board of Pensions. See p. 25.]

Commissioners' Resolution. Benefits Feasibility Study

That the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) request the Board of Pensions to explore the feasibility of ~~[implementing the policy of the church by]~~ providing domestic partners in long-term committed relationships the same benefits accorded to married couples, and to report its findings to the 217th General Assembly (2006).

Rationale

The 117th General Assembly (1977) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States affirmed “the need for the Church to stand for just treatment of homosexual persons in our society in regard to their civil liberties, equal rights, and protection under the law from social and economic discrimination, which is due to all citizens” (Minutes, PCUS, 1977, Part I, p. 174).

The 214th General Assembly (2002) reaffirmed the call of the 190th General Assembly (1978) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America for members to work for the passage of laws that prohibit discrimination in the areas of employment, housing, and public accommodations based on the sexual orientation of a person (Minutes, UPCUSA, 2002, Part I, p.265).

The 208th General Assembly (1996) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) urged the Office of the Stated Clerk to explore the feasibility of entering friends-of-the court briefs and supporting legislation in favor of granting civil rights to same-sex partners, and did so by affirming the Presbyterian church’s historic definition of marriage as a civil contract between a man and a woman, yet recognizing that committed same-sex partners seek civil liberties in contractual relationship with all the civil rights of married couples.

The Stated Clerk, on April 1, 1997, wrote to the members of the Legislature of the State of Hawaii, “It is the conviction of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that both married couples and other couples in long-term relationships should have equal rights to hospital visitation, to making health-care choices for one another, to pension benefits, to holding property together, and to inheritance of one another’s estate.”

These rights, which married couples in our society take for granted, are routinely denied to same-sex couples in long-term relationships.

A rapidly increasing number of corporations are granting domestic partner benefits to their employees in same-sex, long-term relationships, including health, dental, and vision-care insurance, beneficiary designations for pensions and other income benefits, funeral and bereavement leave, flexible spending accounts for health and childcare expenses.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce reports that benefits account for close to 40 percent of employee compensation, meaning that providing the same benefits to employees involved in long-term, same-sex relationships as are given to married employees results in equal pay for equal work.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment advocates “a policy of nondiscrimination on the basis of sexual orientation” for corporate entities. Integrity with this position requires that our own Board of Pensions not discriminate in its administration of benefits.

The General Assembly has also asserted, “to affirm standards of humane treatment and justice within the agencies and institutions of the church which are less compassionate than those of the civil order is a contradiction to the gospel” (Minutes, PCUSA, 1985, Part I, p. 53).

General Assembly Committee on Review—The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

I. Introduction

The General Assembly Committee on Review is pleased to present to the 216th General Assembly (2004) a written review of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. Hereafter the report will use the initials “PILP” to refer to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. This review is the result of the decision of the 213th General Assembly (2001) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that established a new evaluation process of the General Assembly agencies. [Agencies related to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corp, Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., General Assembly Council, and Office of the General Assembly.] The purpose of the review process is “to evaluate the relationship of their individual [agency] ministry with the mission of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 67, addition of Standing Rule E.10. Agency Review). The instructions to the General Assembly Committee on Review were that the committee must conduct the process according to predetermined standards and present a written report to the next General Assembly (Manual of the General Assembly, pp. 71–72).

The review process is founded on the principle that an agency of the General Assembly shall participate in a self-study review process with a General Assembly Committee on Review elected by the General Assembly. The General Assembly Committee on Review, likewise, shall participate with the agency in a study process whose scope is limited to helping the assembly and its agency see that the mission of the church is being fulfilled according to certain standards. (See Manual of the General Assembly, pp. 71–72.) It is not the intent of the review process to find fault but rather to evaluate and offer suggestions for improvement.

Thus it is important to note that the scope of the review is also limited by the amount of time and resources allocated for the review process. Initially, the General Assembly Committee on Review spent three days together to be trained for the task, had some initial interviews with the agency leadership, and prepared for the on-site visit. Subsequently, the committee came back together for four days to conduct staff and board interviews. Finally, the committee returned for two more days to finalize the report, present the report to the agency, and make editorial revisions. The committee then submitted the report to the Office of the General Assembly for presentation at the next General Assembly.

The following report is the result of the work of the Office of the General Assembly in developing an “Agency Review Manual,” the published Agency Review Self-Study of PILP, and the work of the elected General Assembly Committee on Review for PILP. The elected committee brought skills from all facets of church and society. They were versed in matters related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) theology, polity, and ethos, as well as investment and church loan industries and business community. The committee approached its task with the aid of the insights of the review committee that first used the process last year. This review committee, too, relied on the common bond of the mission of the church and strengthened by the common desire to be faithful to Jesus Christ, the General Assembly Committee on Review was able to complete its task.

The committee based the report on the self-study published by PILP; interviews with Chairman of the Board Molly Baskin, Acting President and CEO Jay Wilkinson, and newly elected President and CEO Jay Hudson, PILP staff, General Assembly Council Executive Director John Detterick, others identified by the committee; and the results from a survey conducted by Research Services Office. The General Assembly Committee on Review organized itself around three focus groups: Church Relatedness, Policies and Practice, and Program Effectiveness. The committee also structured the report around these three areas.

The General Assembly Committee on Review expresses appreciation to Chairman Molly Baskin and President and CEO Jay Hudson, PILP's board of directors, the staff of PILP, and the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council for their helpfulness and willing cooperation in completing this review.

In accordance to Standing Rule E.10., the following persons were elected by commissioners of the 215th General Assembly (2003) to serve as the General Assembly Committee on Review: The Reverend Bryant George, moderator (Presbytery of National Capital); the Reverend Stephen A. Bacon, (Presbytery of Greater Atlanta); Linda Bailey (Presbytery of Grand Canyon); the Reverend John Niles Bartholomew (Presbytery of St. Augustine); the Reverend David Bower (Presbytery of West Virginia); William Dillon (Presbytery of Chicago); Richard Dzina (Presbytery of Grace); Dorothy Farris (Presbytery of Los Ranchos); Richard Hong (Presbytery of Palisades); Lidia Serrata (Presbytery of Mission); the Reverend Linda Shatzer (Presbytery of East Iowa); and Catesby Woodford (Presbytery of Transylvania).

II. Church Relatedness

The first criterion for assessment was to review church relatedness. This is significant at several levels. In the simplest sense, when the General Assembly creates an agency of the church, it is because the church has need of skills and resources that the agency is expected to provide. Thus, simple responsiveness to the originating mandate remains a major criterion for measuring the effectiveness of the agency, on behalf of the church. At a more subtle level, any complex business organization takes on a life of its own: an internal culture, response to the external business environment, and particularly, response to government regulators to whom the agency must be accountable, but whose criteria of accountability are quite different from the church's concerns. Some of these factors produce inescapable tension with the agency's defined mission on behalf of the church. The church must accept the reality of these external influences on the agency, but the church must continue to assess these costs, and determine whether it is truly in the church's mission to live with these tensions. Even more elusive, perhaps, but still worth considering, is the extent to which a specific-purpose agency (in PILP's case: to raise and loan funds for capital costs of church property) can contribute strategically to the church's mission in ways that may reach beyond the nominal (financial) task.

Perhaps the most important finding of your review committee regarding church relatedness is the fact that PILP does achieve something more than just balancing investments and loans, its direct fiscal task. We found that staff and board members alike not only exhibited a clear sense that PILP is, at its best, far more an arm of mission than simply a savings and loan program; they showed strong commitment to the use of the PILP loan application process as a vehicle for helping churches clarify their mission goals, their realistic capacity, and for finding the appropriate level of capital investment to give them a reasonable expectation of success in their mission. Our interviewees were proud of the counseling that goes into that process, so that churches will scale their building aspirations to what is financially feasible, and will result in a congregation doing mission, not simply paying off building debt. Both staff and board also pointed out that they believed they were helping build the church, even when a congregation obtained its loan from some commercial source. The PILP is able to help such a congregation to define its needs, and PILP provides a realistic rate for the loan, which in some markets encourages a commercial lender to offer an even better rate, which serves that church well, and enables PILP to lend its money to churches that cannot find better rates from local lenders.

Staff and board were consistently articulate about their sense that PILP is a mission agency. On the loan side, clarity and right-sizing the project, and blending loans and grants to get the job done, was a clear commitment. On the investment side, these leaders were very direct in saying that while PILP offers a reasonable return, there are certainly higher returns available, and that the PILP appeal to investors must be in terms of the mission resources that are generated for both new church development and church redevelopment work.

We explored with PILP the question of whether their loans reflect the commitment of the General Assembly to increase our effort to develop racial ethnic diversity. They acknowledged that, in getting PILP up and functioning, they were not proactive in reaching the underserved segments of our church community. They accepted the fact that they need to learn more specifically both the needs (in terms of types of loans and investment products) and the culturally shaped giving patterns of our racial ethnic and immigrant congregations. They did point to some specific lessons they have gained in these areas. They also declared that they believed that, while they must, by security regulations, maintain positive net income and capitalization to protect their investors, they are committed to a strategy of investing more of available funds in churches where the risks may be more difficult to ascertain, rather than offering lower interest rates by only funding the very lowest risk loans. Your review committee is in agreement with the need to stretch in the direction of greater access to these funds, particularly for redevelopment congregations (church transformation) and in racial ethnic and immigrant communities. For many of these congregations, space needs will be to provide daycare, after school tutoring, and the like, as much or more than worship space. For some inner-city church buildings, converting them to serve a new constituency means downsizing some parts of the facility, while modernizing and improving energy efficiency while meeting modern building codes. The PILP may need to shorten the time that loans are committed but not taken up, by helping presbytery committees to work more effectively on all the aspects of inspections and permitting earlier in the loan application process. Also, in order to reach out to these churches and help them to grow, there is a need for PILP to offer training support for staff at the presbytery level so that presbytery staff can assist these churches to prepare their applications and do the due diligence that is needed before being ready to submit an application.

Your review committee believes that PILP is at a significant point in its history, having met the regulatory requirement of three years of positive net income and having made the transition to a new CEO. The PILP is now positioned to begin moving to the next stage of development, which should include addressing more directly the mission concerns that are priorities of the church.

A significant dimension of church relatedness is cooperation, both with other General Assembly agencies and with middle governing bodies and their agencies. This is particularly true in the case of the four synods that have their own loan programs. We had initial questions about these areas, because it was plausible that PILP could be seen as a competitive system. The responses we received suggest that PILP is now perceived as a partner. Where there is opportunity for joint financing, it happens. Referrals appear to be exchanged, not as an obligation, but with a clear sense of cooperation in shared ministry. The fact that PILP's new CEO was formerly the head of one of the synod programs seems to have brought a valuable sense of perspective and the opportunity for personal trust among the leaders of these programs.

At the level of constitution and governance, both the officers and staff of PILP seem clear about our polity, and show both full respect for it and a good appreciation of how to work within it.

Overall, we believe the leadership of PILP deserves high marks for its commitment to the General Assembly's intent that agencies serve the church's mission. As PILP grows and matures, it should formalize and strengthen its strategic business planning process. That plan should be responsive to the mission priority of the church for significant growth in racial ethnic congregations.

III. Policies and Practices

The second criterion for assessment was to review how PILP is managing its assets for the good of the whole PC(USA) as reflected in its policies and practice. The General Assembly Committee on Review reviewed the current policies and practice of PILP and the documents guiding the work of the agency.

The PILP was properly constituted when it was formed effective July 31, 1995, as a nonprofit, membership corporation. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation ["PC(USA)"] is the program's sole member. The PILP's functions, as listed in its deliverance, are to:

- (1) Sell and issue certificates, notes, or any other financial instruments approved by its board of directors in order to raise capital for the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
- (2) As to the investment funds received by [PILP], set the underwriting standards and loan criteria for loans to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations, governing bodies, theological institutions, and educational institutions related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to enable them to acquire or improve real property. All such loans shall be processed and administered by the National Ministries Division, pursuant to such underwriting standards and loan criteria as may be established . . . by the board of directors of [PILP]. [The processing and administration of loans was consolidated later within PILP as discussed under B. Two Church Loan Programs.]
- (3) Contract with existing Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) entities, or outside parties, for various services. These include, but are not limited to, marketing of investments, management of assets, record keeping, and processing and servicing of loans. In so doing, a collaborative relationship shall be maintained with the Mission Support Services, the National Ministries Division, and its associate director for Evangelism and Church Development to avoid the duplication of services already performed by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) entities.

- (4) Train and orient volunteers, committees, employees, and others within synods and presbyteries who have responsibilities related to the work of [PILP].
- (5) Provide accounting and reporting with respect to all the foregoing.
- (6) Provide such other mission, finance, and related services as the General Assembly or the General Assembly Council may direct or approve. (Manual of the General Assembly, p. 46)

A. Raising Capital

1. North American Securities Administrators Association Requirements

The PILP was formed to raise capital to support the mission of church growth. It was known that to raise capital through the sale of certificates and notes, there would be the need to comply with the North American Securities Administrators Association (“NASAA”) Guidelines and state securities laws.

The NASAA provides financial standards guidelines for an organization that offers a church specific investment products that could both generate working capital for use in the denomination’s mission and provide a bona fide stewardship program for a portion of the investors’ assets.

The NASAA Guidelines (NASAA Reports, Section 1954, pp 1145–1147, Financial Standards) include the following threshold criteria for those entering into this market:

- Capital Adequacy: The entity offering the investment product must be capitalized sufficiently to meet or exceed a capital ratio at the end of any given fiscal year of at least 3%, where the numerator shall be defined as net worth (or, as in PILP’s case, Unrestricted Net Assets) and the denominator shall be total assets.
- Liquidity Status: This entity must continuously maintain a liquidity ratio at the end of any fiscal year of at least 5%, where the numerator shall be defined as cash, cash equivalents and readily marketable assets and the denominator is the total outstanding liabilities.
- Positive Net Income: This entity must have positive net income for three of its last five fiscal years.
- Other guidelines speak to cash flow performance and loan quality.
- There is also a guideline that the entity must describe the investment in an Offering Circular. This disclosure insures “that investors receive adequate information to make informed investment decisions.”

2. Managing Risk

The best mission-driven decisions for the church can create credit risk. Without a thorough understanding of the connectional nature of the Presbyterian church, lenders may not wish to lend to our best church growth opportunities, including new church developments.

Quantitative analysis for credit risk is a precursor to the management of interest rate and loan portfolio risk, and as such is a component in the establishment of process that results in access to investor dollars and the capital markets.

3. Initial Capital Funds

The PC(USA) provided an initial capital contribution of $4 million to PILP in January 1996. In February 1999, the PC(USA) provided an additional $1 million to sustain growth and meet the capital and liquidity ratios.

4. Individual and Corporate Investors

Term Notes are being offered of six to sixty months in duration. Either a fixed or adjustable rate of return is available. A Term Note is an unsecured obligation of PILP and is not guaranteed or insured by the FDIC or any other governmental or corporate entity. The minimum required investment is $500. (This information does not constitute an offer, sale, or request to purchase an investment. Such an offer is made solely through the Offering Circular that is available from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.)

The surveys conducted for the review committee indicated very high (89 percent) level of satisfaction that the mission of the church was being accomplished through their investment. Nearly all (96 percent) of the same respondents believe the work of PILP is important to the overall PC(USA) and nearly all (89 percent) would recommend investments in PILP to others.

Investors receive both an interest return, which is taxable, as well as achieve an intangible reward in rebates to their church. The PILP provides a rebate to the borrowers, known as Get the Point rebate program, based on the amount of money invested in support of the church's (or presbytery's) mortgage. It does not change the investors' risk or return. The borrower can gain a rebate of up to 1 percent of the loan balance annually. Thus the investor both supports the mission of church growth and development but can also help reduce the church's cost of borrowing and return more funds for local mission.

5. Partner Investors

Several of PILP's larger investors are middle governing bodies and agencies of the General Assembly. They invest through Depository Accounts, which have the same characteristics, benefits, and risks of a Term Note.

Both the General Assembly Council (GAC) and the Foundation have commitments to invest in amounts of $5 million and $10 million, respectively. Portions of these commitments expire on May 1, 2004, and the balance on February 1, 2005. The GAC has confirmed an extension of their commitment through May 2009. The Foundation is expected to complete, by April 2004, the process of providing a similar extension. It is an objective of PILP to reduce the dependency on these investments with Term Notes from individual Presbyterians and Depository Receipt Accounts from middle governing bodies during the next five years.

The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation and The Office of the General Assembly are also investors in PILP. There are also a number of synods and presbyteries that are investors.

The review committee strongly encourages the Board of Pensions to consider ways it might help fund the needs of this worthwhile mission of the church. No agency is too large to participate.

Partner investments are currently a material portion of PILP's working capital. However, this portion, as a percentage of the total portfolio, is shrinking. As PILP grows, individual investment in Term Notes will become the core source of funds.

6. Syndications

Sale of Term Notes is not expected to provide sufficient working capital to meet loan demand during the first decades of PILP. Therefore, first lien participations are sold to financial partners, including synod partners, presbyteries, and some commercial banking partners. This has been done without diminishing the standards. It has generated capital that has allowed serving larger borrowers and has added additional net revenue for PILP.

7. Securitizations

The 213th General Assembly (2001) approved the establishment of a separate corporation, The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Mortgage Corporation, to generate additional working capital through securitization of revenue generated by the sale of portfolios of loans. The PILP would be able to sell loans to the Mortgage Corporation, thereby raising additional funds for lending. Due to changing market conditions, PILP is not using the Mortgage Corporation at this time.

B. Two Church Loan Programs

Implied in the General Assembly action in establishing PILP was the retention by the General Assembly of two church loan programs. The Church Loan Program, lodged in the National Ministries Division, would continue to lend endowment funds to churches throughout the denomination. The Investment and Loan Program, a new and separate corporation, would lend investor funds to churches in twelve of the sixteen synods, and to borrowers in the four synods with existing investment/loan programs upon invitation. It was potentially confusing and cumbersome to borrowers and to their governing body guarantors.

The GAC contracted with PILP to underwrite, service, and administer the Church Loan Program's portfolio of loans. Thus any potential borrower could come to one place to inquire about loans. Different terms are available for the two programs. The Church Loan Program loans are generally limited to $350,000 maximum ($400,000 for new church developments); can go up to 75 percent of a project's cost, and give a five-year commitment on rates. The Investment Loan Program gives twelve to twenty-four month commitments on rates and makes loans from $50,000 to more than $5 million.

From surveys of loan recipients conducted for the review committee, we learned that a large portion is satisfied with the responsiveness (89 percent) and helpfulness (79 percent). Many of these recipients, too, believe the work of PILP is important to the church (90 percent) and would recommend PILP to others (90 percent).

The review committee commends PILP for directing applications to the most economical program for each situation.

The review committee further commends PILP for merging the administration of Church Loan Program and Investor Loan Program. Might this be a pattern for developing a process to coordinate various programs of church grants?

Shortly after it commenced operation, PILP bought a book of existing church loans from the PC(USA), in order to establish a loan portfolio within the operating system that had been created. This allowed for review and continued development of the operations as well as a beginning source of revenue. It allowed PILP to be a fully functional business within the industry. This was of great importance to the state security administrators that would evaluate PILP as a part of the registration, qualification, or exemption of the investment offering in the fifty-two jurisdictions. This loan portfolio was sold back to PC(USA) in 1998.

Observation: Since its founding, PILP has been focused on having positive net income in three of first five years to qualify for remaining in business. The PILP appears to be meeting this goal as we prepare this report in late 2003. Meeting that goal will now allow it more flexibility in operating decisions.

To that end, the review committee encourages PILP to broaden its marketing efforts to specifically help the denomination reach its stated goals in broadening the diversity and reaching increased proportions of racial ethnic membership in coming years. Many of the areas of the country where there are increasing numbers of racial ethnic residents have congregations that will require creative efforts to provide financing for development and redevelopment. As PILP continues to support the mission of PC(USA) conscious efforts to effectively reach these opportunities must be made. The review committee is pleased that the new president and CEO has expressed his concurrence that this must be a priority.

Strategic planning to this point has had, of necessity, a short-term focus. The review committee recommends that both the PILP management and the board of directors look with a longer time horizon as the strategic plans for both marketing loans and generating investment capital are developed.

C. Support Organization

The PILP focuses on the sale of securities, limitation of credit risk, and the management of a portfolio of mortgages. For the operational services such as legal, accounting, human resources, office information management, payroll and purchasing services, it has contracted with the GAC and Mission Support Services. The services are provided under a negotiated contract for a monthly fee. This is one demonstration of the collaborative nature of the relationship between PILP and the church.

D. Employee Training

The PILP's employees are well trained for the functions they perform, whether it be marketing, administration, or operations. Many are well versed in the operations of PC(USA). The review committee is pleased about the ability of some staff to direct inquiries to sources of funds that might be a response to a congregation's needs, even when those funds don't come thru PILP. We encourage building of that skill set among more staff as often callers are not sure where to turn when first calling for information.

E. Financial Reporting

As it is required to segregate all funds from the other assets of PC(USA), PILP established a separate financial accounting system and there is no co-mingling of funds. An annual audit is provided by a regional accounting firm. The PILP's financial condition is reported to the GAC and to the General Assembly.

F. Other Observations

The Board of Directors of PILP and PILP management are knowledgeable about and fully conversant with the mission of the PC(USA), its current overall condition, and the Constitution of the PC(USA).

The General Assembly Committee on Review commends PILP for its personnel policies, which are modeled after those of the General Assembly Council.

IV. Program Effectiveness

The final criterion focused on an assessment of program effectiveness. It is the conclusion of this General Assembly Committee on Review that the programs and services of the agency are consistent with its assembly mandate. The program offers investments that provide a competitive financial return plus the opportunity to support Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations. It offers low-cost loans to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) bodies to buy, renovate, and expand worship and mission space. Guided by the best practices of the financial community, the program is committed to faithful stewardship of the resources entrusted to it for the support of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

While the agency does not currently have a formal process for measuring the delivery of services, they inquire randomly of borrowers and investors, seeking evaluation of their experience with the program. That ongoing feedback helps them to assess what they offer and their performance. They have considered offering evaluation surveys—a formal process with borrowers after they have completed the process of a new loan and again several years into the loan. They have also considered a similar survey of investors in two time-periods—immediately after purchasing an investment and a couple of years into an investment.

The agency had made 117 loans with investor funds in the six-and-a-half years since they began making loans and 95 loans with endowment funds in the three years and three months that they have been servicing the Church Loan Program. (For comparative purposes, the 117 investor loans represent more than three times the loan amounts of the 95 endowment loans.)

The congregational characteristics of a church that receives an approved loan vary a great deal. In all cases, they have been able to demonstrate their ability to service the debt. Sometimes this is because they believe they simply have adequate cash flow, other times it is because they believe they can raise the money in a capital campaign and they have the pledges to support their belief. There have been new church developments with dramatic growth trends in membership, attendance, and pledges that have been approved for a loan based on future growth. (However the agency will discuss these situations with the presbyteries in more detail to ensure that they are in full support of the church and loan—and fully understand the added responsibilities that this may have on the presbytery as a guarantor.)

Although records are not kept on loan approval/decline ratios, an estimate of the number of loans rejected is twelve or less. The main reason for the low number of loans that are declined is the extensive consulting work that is completed prior to the application. The congregational characteristics of a church whose loan has been rejected also vary. They have the common thread of asking for a loan that they are not able to service. Either the loan request is too large or their revenue (or their ability to raise what would appear to be sufficient revenue in the future) is too small. The agency will work with these churches to help them in their decision as to the best direction for them to proceed.

The breakdown of loans (as of August 2003) by racial ethnic categories is as follows:

Predominant Membership	Number of Loans	% of Loans	Amount (in Millions)	% of Funds
African American	6	5.6%	$2.6	6.4%
Asian—Korean	3	2.8%	1.1	2.7%
Asian—Other	1	0.9%	0.4	1.0%
Caucasian	76	70.4%	28.0	70.4%
Hispanic	1	0.9%	0.3	0.8%
Multicultural	13	12.0%	5.4	13.6%
Presbytery Loans	8	7.4%	2.0	5.1%
Total	108	100.0%	$39.8	100.0%

The normal loan process begins with the applicant holding at least one extensive discussion (and usually multiple conversations) with a marketing person or an underwriter of PILP. The purpose is to ascertain what the church is seeking and to explain how the coordinated loan program can work for their church. The initial talks give the agency the opportunity to share with potential borrowers much of what they have learned from working on hundreds of loans.

A primary goal of these consultations is “right-sizing” the loan request to balance “need” with debt service capacity. The PILP is conscientious in helping a congregation to avoid the pitfalls of entering into a mortgage-poor situation that would starve the church of needed program dollars or potentially financially handicapping their church. They are also effective in assessing that the church is looking at the entire financial picture, understanding how best to use their assets and how to estimate future cash flows. They often seek a complete preliminary evaluation or review to see how numbers stack up in order to more effectively counsel the church on their capital plans. This careful consultation process is designed to help in guiding the borrower so that by the time an application is filed, the project has been adjusted to fall within acceptable underwriting guidelines. In cases where adjustments are needed to dollar amounts or structure, most churches agree once they understand the reasoning. Sometimes, applications are withdrawn while the church rethinks its direction. In some cases, the church decides that their plan is truly viable and goes elsewhere for their lending needs, but this is a relatively small number of potential borrowers.

The primary purpose of PILP is to broaden churches’ access to capital. The PILP serves as a valuable alternative source of funds. And, PILP serves as a respected resource to churches in assisting them in careful assessment of their financial needs in order to improve their viability with local lenders. It is worth noting that PILP’s assistance in developing the loan package has sometimes brought about rates even below PILP’s from local lenders, to the advantage of the local congregation. However, it is essential for PILP to gain critical mass to operate efficiently and effectively. Now at $40 million, the agency’s goal is to grow both investments and loans by 25 percent in 2004.

The president/CEO and the governing board have policies and procedures by which they assure that the agency staff hold the necessary and appropriate skills, licenses, and experience to perform their work. The review committee is pleased to see the agency’s commitment to staff development and ongoing training through their professional development program. The staff is highly dedicated, mission-minded, and sincerely enthusiastic about their work.

As stated in the program’s self-review:

Management and the board continue to develop the program’s intellectual capital through training and professional accreditation that enhances the probability of success in the syndication and securitization markets.

The review committee agrees with the management and the board in their goal to augment the sales team as soon as it is financially prudent by adding an additional staff person to serve Southern California and the southwest.

While PILP has had an effective strategy for producing quality communication with its constituencies, it is time to move forward in enhancing communication through new and creative ways and in producing materials in additional languages, such as Korean and Spanish. There is room for improvement in the area of marketing from a multicultural perspective. Currently, the program advertises exclusively in Presbyterians Today magazine. The review committee would like to see PILP consider advertising in additional Presbyterian publications and elsewhere. It would be very helpful to have a PC(USA) guide listing all the possible areas for denominational grants and loans.

In the area of current and emerging technologies, PILP has a good initial Website, but there is room for improvement in making the Website a more interactive and effective tool in helping PILP to fulfill its mission and in generating new leads. And it would be worthwhile for PILP to encourage presbyteries to offer a link to PILP from their individual Websites.

V. Conclusions

The following conclusions are a summation of suggestions to PILP by the committee on review. These suggestions are intended to help strengthen the programs and services of PILP as it continues to grow and mature. The committee on review would like to thank Chairman Molly Baskin, President and CEO Jay Hudson, PILP's board of directors, the staff of PILP, the Office of the General Assembly, and the General Assembly Council for their assistance and cooperation in completing this review. Members of the review committee are appreciative of the considerable planning and preparation that was done prior to each of their visits.

1. By helping presbytery committees to work more effectively on all the aspects of inspections and permitting earlier in the loan application process, PILP can shorten the time that loans are committed but not taken up.

2. The committee suggests that PILP work with GAC to develop a "one-call" system for loans and grants. Just as PILP has combined the administration of the Church Loan Program and Investor Loan Program, we suggest that PILP work with the GAC to develop a comprehensive directory of all church loans and grants.

3. In the area of marketing, the review committee encourages PILP to broaden its print advertising and enhance its Website. An additional marketing emphasis should be placed on further educating presbytery executives, stated clerks, and church development personnel on the roles that PILP is prepared to play in providing loans and investment opportunities. In strengthening its marketing strategy, PILP should target the culturally diverse community.

4. The leadership of PILP is to be recognized for its commitment to the General Assembly's intent that its agencies serve the church's mission. The hope of this committee is that as PILP grows and matures, it will strengthen its strategic business plan in ways that are fully responsive to the mission priority of the church for significant growth in racial ethnic congregations.

APPENDIX

Findings from the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program's Evaluation (From Questionnaires Circulated by PC(USA) Research Services)

A. Background

The review committee chose to ask the perceptions of several groups dealing with PILP: Investors, borrowers from both the Endowment Funds program and the Investor Loan Program, other congregations, middle governing bodies, other PC(USA) agencies and PILP leadership.

B. Respondents

A random sample of 500 congregations and a random sample of 498 investors were asked to participate in the evaluation. Forty-seven percent of the congregations responded and 72 percent of the investors responded. All 182 presbyteries and synod executives were asked to participate and 54 percent responded. Ninety-seven loan recipients whose loans were funded (partially or in whole) through the investor funds of PILP were invited to participate and 56 percent responded. Loan recipients whose loans were funded exclusively through the endowment funds of the Church Loan Program were also invited to participate and 56 percent responded. Lastly, 31 PILP leaders, including members of their board of directors, the PILP management team, and program officers and leadership from other PC(USA) agencies, were also asked to participate and 81 percent responded.

C. Results

Those things in which we were interested included: how effective PILP is in making itself known; the extent to which the options PILP offers are known; satisfaction with the options; how important is PILP's work within the denomination. As might be expected, those who had need of either securing loans or making short-term investments were the most knowledgeable. If those needs were not on one's radar screen, it was not unusual to have respondents unaware of the offerings.

1. Familiarity

Respondents were asked about their familiarity with PILP. Very few congregations were familiar with PILP, while majorities in the other samples were familiar. (See Table 1.)

Table 1
Respondents Familiarity with PILP by Sample:
Percentages Responding "Very Familiar" & "Familiar"

	Very Familiar or Familiar
Congregations	17%
Investors	68%
Presbyteries & Synods	74%
Loan recipients	81%

2. Source of First Knowledge About PILP

Overall, respondents were most likely to have heard about PILP through their presbytery, though presbyteries and synods first learned about PILP through the General Assembly. (See Table 2.)

Table 2
How Respondents First Heard About PILP

	Congregations	Presbyteries & Synods	Loan Recipients	Investors
Presbytery	44%	27%	54%	14%
Synod	2%	6%	3%	1%
General Assembly	8%	38%	5%	5%

3. Responses of PILP Loan Recipients

a. Loan recipients were asked to assess the work of PILP based on their recent experiences with PILP loan services. When asked about the extent they were aware of the different loan services, those receiving loans funded partially or fully through PILP investor funds (PILP-funded) were much more aware of the choices when compared to those whose loans were funded through the Church Loan Program (CLP-funded). As might be expected, recipients were most knowledgeable about the type of loan they were seeking. (See Table 3.)

Table 3
Loan Recipients' Awareness of Loan Services Available through PILP
Percentages Responding "A Very Great Extent" and "A Great Extent"

	PILP-funded	CLP-funded
New construction or building purchase loans	78%	63%
Site and site addition loans	70%	54%
Renovation/repair loans	55%	38%
Loans to refinance existing bank loans	52%	20%
Incentive loans for improvement in accessibility, technology, and energy loans	24%	22%

b. Loan recipients were asked how satisfied they were with the effort put forth by PILP in explaining the different loan rates, guidelines, and features associated with their loans. Some 30 percent of the recipients of CLP-funded loans said that the assistance on the affordability analysis was “not applicable” as did 18 percent of the recipients of the PILP-funded loans. About 20 percent of the recipients of the CLP-funded loans also said “not applicable” to interest rebates and availability of presbytery/synod loans. (See Table 4.)

Table 4
Loan Recipients’ Satisfaction with PILP’s Explanation of Their Loan Service
Percentages Responding “Very Satisfied” and “Satisfied”

	PILP-funded	CLP-funded
Types of loans available for your project	89%	83%

Potential for interest rebates	80%	52%
Loan interest rates	76%	74%
Availability of local presbytery/synod loans	60%	50%
Assistance in project affordability analysis	58%	37%

c. Satisfaction with the various aspects of obtaining a loan through PILP was also measured. Responses were lower for those using CLP-funded loans. Responsiveness and helpfulness of the staff ranked high with both groups. The Website’s helpfulness was generally considered low. (See Table 5.)

Table 5
Loan Recipients’ Assessment of the Process of Obtaining a Loan through PILP
Percentages Responding “Very Satisfied” and “Satisfied”

	PILP-funded	CLP-funded
Responsiveness of staff to initial inquiry	89%	81%
Overall quality of service after the loan was closed	87%	74%
Helpfulness of staff during loan processing	86%	73%
Responsiveness of staff during loan processing	83%	80%
Length of time required for loan approval	76%	56%
Amount of information required for loan approval	74%	57%
Helpfulness of PILP’s Website	36%	25%

d. Effectiveness was another measurement. Overall, 90 percent or more of the recipients of loans said the service/assistance received from PILP was “excellent” or “good.” Similar percentages were either “satisfied” or “very satisfied.”

Loan recipients were asked how effective PILP was in providing for different constituencies with different needs. From Table 6 below it appears that PILP is effective in providing congregations with the opportunity to borrow funds. Nearly 20 percent of those receiving CLP-funded loans responded, “don’t know” to the questions about investing and supporting church growth. (See Table 6.)

Table 6
Loan Recipients’ Assessment of PILP’s Effectiveness in Providing Loans for Different Constituencies

Providing congregations with the opportunity to borrow funds	89%	80%
Providing Presbyterians with the opportunity to invest as part of stewardship	70%	48%
Providing Presbyterians with the opportunity to support church growth through investing	69%	49%

e. Loan recipients were asked about the extent to which PILP provided some leadership, the importance of their work, and how it enriched the life of the church. All agreed that the work was important. (See Table 7.)

f. Loan choices and opportunities were options for most borrowers. Nearly all of the loan recipients considered commercial loan services; 87 percent of those with PILP-funded loans and 89 percent of those with CLP-funded loans. Presbytery and synod loans had also been considered by some.

A variety of purposes are met with loans through PILP. (See Table 8.)

g. Is PILP to be recommended to other borrower applicants? The large majority of those with whom PILP has given loans would recommend them to others. (See Table 9.)

4. Responses Of Investors

a. Of the 360 investors responding to the questionnaire, 96 percent described their most recent investment experience with PILP as “Excellent” or “Good.” When asked to rate several areas related to their investment, usually two-thirds or more were satisfied. (See Table 10.)

Table 10

	Very Satisfied & Satisfied	Not Applicable

Loan recipients were asked how effective PILP was in providing for different constituencies with different needs. From Table 11 below it appears that PILP is effective in providing congregations with the opportunity to borrow funds.

b. Investors strongly feel that PILP is providing opportunities for the different constituencies of the PC(USA). (See Table 11.)

d. Investors were asked about the extent to which PILP provided some leadership; the importance of their work and how it enriched the life of the church. All agreed that the work was important. Many investors said they didn't know about how PILP's leadership guides local churches with its services. (See Table 13.)

5. Responses of Congregations and Presbytery and Synod Executives

These questions in the survey were from the 132 congregations and 96 presbyteries and synods responding to the survey and were at least somewhat familiar with PILP. Presbyteries and synods are also known as "Middle Governing Bodies" and "MGB" will be used in the tables for identification.

a. Awareness

Overall, congregations were less aware than MGB executives of the choices available through PILP, especially the loan choices. (See Table 15.)

Table 15
Awareness of PILP's Services According to Congregations and MGB Executives
Percentages Responding "A Very Great Extent" and "A Great Extent" or "Not at All"

	A Very Great Extent and A Great Extent		Not at All
	Congregations	MGB	Congregations	MGB
Loan choices	13%	60%	21%	2%

Information on presbytery and synod loan options	7%	38%	43%	11%
Assistance to borrowers in affordability analysis	4%	30%	35%	18%
Loan interest rebates	2%	43%	48%	13%

b. Satisfaction

Most presbytery and synod executives were satisfied with the available choices, while among congregations, around one-half of the respondents were not aware of the choices offered through PILP. (See Table 16.)

Table 16
Respondents' Satisfaction with the Choices Available through PILP
Percentages Responding "Very Satisfied" and "Satisfied" or "Am Not Aware"

	Very Satisfied and Satisfied		Am Not Aware
	Congregations	MGB	Congregations	MGB
Loan choices	39%	70%	42%	12%
Investment choices	33%	70%	46%	16%
Information on presbytery and synod loan choices	29%	61%	53%	20%
Loan interest rebates	27%	62%	59%	24%
Assistance to borrowers in affordability analysis	26%	57%	58%	29%

c. Effectiveness

One-quarter of the congregations (28 percent) and 57 percent of the MGB executives said that PILP is either "effective" or "very effective" in providing congregations with the opportunity to borrow funds. Fewer respondents in both categories reported similar levels of effectiveness in providing Presbyterians with the opportunity to support church growth through investing.

Just 17 percent of the congregations and 54 percent of the executives said that PILP is "effective" or "very effective" in making its services known throughout the PC(USA). Congregations and executives were asked about how effective PILP is in serving different constituency groups. More MGB executives believe PILP is "effective" in serving those with borrowing needs than those with investing needs. (See Table 17.)

Respondents' Assessment of PILP's Effectiveness Serving Its Different Constituencies
Percentages Responding "Very Effective" and "Effective" or "Don't Know"

	Very Effective and Effective		Don't Know
	Congregations	MGB	Congregations	MGB
Congregations with borrowing needs	23%	59%	58%	12%
Presbyteries and synods with borrowing needs	14%	46%	74%	23%
Congregations with investment needs	16%	36%	67%	28%
Presbyteries and synods with investment needs	10%	37%	76%	27%
Individuals with investment needs	9%	25%	72%	44%

Interestingly, 45 percent of the congregations “don’t know” if they have made an investment with PILP, and 37 percent of the congregations “don’t know” if they have taken out a loan from PILP. In contrast, only 8 percent of the executives “don’t know” about making an investment with PILP, and 3 percent of the executives “don’t know” if they have taken out a loan from PILP. Only 11 percent of congregations report an investment with PILP, and 18 percent report a loan from PILP. One-third of MGB executives (35 percent) report that their presbytery, synod, or church has made an investment with PILP, and 43 percent report a loan from PILP. The importance of the work of PILP to PC(USA) is perceived more highly by the MGB executives than those congregations that are familiar with PILP. (See Table 18.)

Table 18
How Important Do You Believe the Work of PILP Is to the PC(USA)?

	Congregations	MGB
Very important	27%	41%
Important	42%	43%
Somewhat important	20%	8%
Not very important	10%	8%
Not at all important	2%	1%

d. The executives had more feeling than did the congregations about the leadership in investment and loan services and the extent PILP cooperated with other agencies and/or offices doing similar work. (See Table 19.)

Table 19
Responders’ Assessment of PILP’s Leadership in Guiding Churches, and Extent PILP Cooperates with Other Agencies/Offices in Similar Work

“A very great extent” and “A great extent”	11%	33%
“Some extent”	8%	15%
“Don’t know”	80%	48%

e. Two-thirds or more of the executives said that all the loan choices were “helpful” or “very helpful” and somewhat fewer congregations said the same. (See Table 20.)

f. Nearly one-half to two-thirds of the executives thought the investment choices from PILP were “helpful” or “very helpful.” One-third to one-half of the congregations responded similarly. (See Table 21.)

6. Responses of the PILP Board, Program Officers, and Management Team

Members of the PILP Board of Directors and management team and program officers were asked to identify their particular leadership role within PILP. One-half were members of the board of directors. Forty-four percent identified themselves as holding other leadership roles within PC(USA), yet outside of PILP.

- a. According to this group, PILP appears to be successful in providing services to the PC(USA). (See Table 22.)

- b. This group was also asked to assess PILP's ability to reach its constituencies. It appears that PILP is more effective in reaching those in need of loan service than those with funds to invest. (See Table 23.)

Item 14-B

[The assembly committee approved and the assembly accepted Item 14-B. See p. 26.]

Recommendations to Receive Reports Concerning the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The Board of Pensions recommends that the 216th General Assembly (2004) do the following:

1. Receive the report of the Board of Pensions regarding its grant of the following experience apportionments in the Pension Plan and the corresponding amendment of Appendix B of the Benefits Plan (the History of Experience Apportionment table):

a. A 2 percent (2%) increase in retirement and survivor's pension benefits for members and eligible survivors receiving benefits as of December 31, 2003, effective August 1, 2004; and

b. A 2 percent (2%) increase in accrued pension credits for active and vested inactive members of the Pension Plan as of December 31, 2003, effective August 1, 2004.

Rationale

The process for amending the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ("Plan") is established in the Plan document. The specific provisions of the Plan that relate to amendment are:

Sec. 19.1 Right to Alter or Amend Plan. The right to alter or amend the Benefits Plan is reserved solely to the Board except that any alteration or amendment to a provision of Articles VI, VII, VIII and IX (relating to the Pension Plan) that is in the nature of a benefit reduction to the members or a dues increase shall be effective only with the approval of the General Assembly. Notice of any such proposed alteration or amendment to the Pension Plan requiring the approval of General Assembly shall be given by the Board to members, local churches and presbyteries at least sixty (60) days prior to the date of the meeting of the General Assembly at which such alteration or amendment will be considered. Notice of any other amendment to the Benefits Plan shall be provided by the Board to the General Assembly, Members, local churches and Presbyteries in such manner as the Board deems reasonable and appropriate based on the nature of the amendment.

Sec. 19.2 Amendment of Medical Provisions. The Board, in its sole discretion, taking into consideration claims experience, administrative expenses, changes in the health care industry, and other relevant factors, shall have the right, from time to time, to amend the Medical Plan and report any such amendment to the next succeeding General Assembly of the Church.

Sec. 19.3 Amendment of Optional Benefit Provisions. The Board, in its sole discretion, shall have the right from time to time to amend the Optional Benefit Plans or adopt such other additional optional benefits as it deems in the best interest of the Members of the Benefits Plan. Any such amendment or additional optional benefit provision shall be reported to the next succeeding General Assembly of the Church.

Since the 215th General Assembly (2003), the Board of Pensions adopted amendments to the Plan that require the approval of the General Assembly prior to becoming effective or are to be reported as required by the Plan provisions quoted above. Notice of the amendments being presented to the 216th General Assembly (2004) was given by letter dated March 16, 2004, from Earle Robbins, Esquire, chair of the Board of Pensions, to all Benefits Plan members, local churches, presbyteries, and synods.

The Pension Plan provides in Section 7.3 that the Board of Pensions may determine, in its sole discretion, that sufficient Pension Plan assets have accumulated, due to favorable investment and actuarial experience, over and above those required for actuarial reserves, general contingency reserves and other special reserves, to grant an experience apportionment.

The Board of Pensions is pleased to report to the 216th General Assembly (2004) that in the judgment of the Board of Directors of the Board of Pensions, sufficient Pension Plan assets were in hand at the end of 2003 as a result of cumulative favorable investment and actuarial experience to permit an experience apportionment. Therefore, at its meeting on March 6, 2004, the Board of Pensions approved the grant of the following experience apportionment for the Pension Plan and the corresponding amendment of Appendix B of the Benefits Plan (the History of Experience Apportionment table):

- A 2 percent (2%) increase in retirement and survivor's pension benefits for members and eligible survivors receiving benefits as of December 31, 2003, effective August 1, 2004; and
- A 2 percent (2%) increase in accrued pension credits for active and vested inactive members of the Pension Plan as of December 31, 2003, effective August 1, 2004.

2. Receive the report of the Board of Pensions regarding its grant of the following disability benefit increase in the Death and Disability Plan and the corresponding amendment of Appendix C of the Benefits Plan (the History of Disability Benefit Increases table): A 4 percent (4%) increase in disability benefits for those receiving such benefits on December 31, 2003, beginning August 1, 2004.

Rationale

The Death and Disability Plan provides in Section 11.3(h) that the Board of Pensions may determine, in its sole discretion, that sufficient Death and Disability Plan assets have accumulated, due to favorable investment and actuarial experience, over and above those required for actuarial reserves, general contingency reserves, and other special reserves, to grant a disability benefit increase.

The Board of Pensions is pleased to report to the 216th General Assembly (2004), that in the judgment of the Board of Directors of the Board of Pensions, sufficient Death and Disability Plan assets were in hand at the end of 2003 as a result of cumulative favorable investment and actuarial experience to permit a disability benefit increase. Therefore, at its meeting on March 6, 2004, the Board of Pensions approved a Disability Benefit Increase in accordance with Section 11.3(h) of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); in the form of a four percent (4%) increase in disability benefits for those receiving such benefits on December 31, 2003, beginning August 1, 2004, and the corresponding amendment of Appendix C of the Benefits Plan (the History of Disability Benefit Increases table).

3. Receive the report regarding the amendments to Section 2.1(u), 4.4, 13.1(j), 13.4, 13.5, 13.6, 13.7, 13.9, and Appendix B and C of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as set forth in Appendix A.

Rationale

Since the 215th General Assembly (2003), the Board of Pensions adopted several amendments to the Medical Plan. The intent and effect of each amendment is summarized below. The verbatim text of each amendment is provided in Appendix A. Amendments to the Medical Plan are only required to be reported to the General Assembly. The effective date of the amendments is January 1, 2004, unless otherwise noted.

- Medical Participation Basis

The Board of Pensions amended the definition of Medical Participation Basis in Section 2.1(u) of the Plan to increase the minimum Medical Participation basis from 55 to 65 percent of the Pastors' Median salary. In addition, for part-time members, the Medical Participation Basis is now based on a full-time equivalent basis.

- Minimum Salary Basis Option

The Board of Pensions amended Sec. 4.4, relating to the Minimum Salary Basis Option, to increase the basis on which the minimum dues payable by members enrolled on the unemployed basis for coverage under the Medical Plan are determined from 55 to 65 percent of the Pastors' Median salary.

- Mental Health/Substance Abuse Amendments

The Board of Pensions moved its mental health/substance abuse claims administration services from Highmark to ValueOptions. The Board of Pensions continues to use Highmark for its Medical Plan claims administration services, other than prescription drug and mental health/substance abuse claims. To effect this change and facilitate stand-alone claims processing, separate deductible and copayment limits were established for mental health/substance abuse charges. The Plan's aggregate maximum member responsibility for medical costs other than prescription drugs did not increase; deductibles and copayments (other than office visit copayments) for mental health/substance abuse claims are combined with those paid for other medical costs, excluding prescription drugs, in determining maximum Member responsibility. These changes were made by amending Sections 13.1(j), 13.4, 13.5, 13.6, 13.7, and 13.9.

- Office Copayment Increase

Effective January 1, 2004, the Medical Costs copayment per visit for a primary care doctor increased from fifteen dollars to twenty-five dollars and the copayment per visit for a specialist increased from twenty-five to thirty-five dollars.

- Maximum Benefit Limit

The Board of Pensions amended Sec. 13.9(a) to raise the lifetime maximum claims payment limitation from Two Million Dollars to Three Million Dollars.

4. Receive the report regarding the amendment to Section 8.11 of the Retirement Savings Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as set forth in Appendix A.

Rationale

The Board of Pensions amended Section 8.11 of the optional Retirement Savings Plan to permit an in-service distribution to a participant who is either an ordained minister or a commissioned lay pastor to purchase a primary residence. Under the Benefits Plan, an amendment to an optional plan, such as the Retirement Savings Plan, is to be reported to the next General Assembly. The effective date of the amendment is January 1, 2004.

Sec. 2.1 Definitions.

- (u) MEDICAL PARTICIPATION BASIS. The greater of (i) Effective Salary or (ii) ~~forty-six~~ sixty-five percent (~~56~~65%) of the Pastors' Median. For Members employed on less than a full-time basis, the Medical Participation Basis shall be based on the greater of the equivalent full-time Effective Salary or Minimum Participation Basis. For purposes of determining annual deductible and maxi-imum copayment amounts, the Board may in its sole discretion establish bands of Medical Participation Basis on which to apply the applicable percentage, provided that the Member shall not be placed in a band that exceeds his or her actual Medical Participation Basis.

Sec. 4.4 Minimum Salary Basis Option. With the exception of a Member enrolled for coverage under the Affiliated Benefits Program, an otherwise eligible Member who is, in the sole determination of the Board, temporarily unemployed or on an approved leave of absence, shall have the option of continuing the same coverage under the Pension Plan, Death and Disability Plan, Medical Plan and Optional Benefits Plans, for such period as may be determined by the Board by paying the required dues (a) for Pension and Death and Disability Coverage, on the basis of such Member's most recent Effective Salary or twenty-five percent (25%) of the Pastors' Median, if less; (b) for coverage under the Medical Plan, on the basis of such Member's most recent Effective Salary or ~~forty-six~~ forty-five percent (~~46~~ 45%) of the Pastors' Median; and (c) for coverage under the Optional Benefits Plans, by paying the required dues for the appropriate coverage or coverages. Optional Benefits Plans coverage may only be continued in conjunction with Pension Coverage or coverage under the Medical Plan.

The Board may, from time to time, establish separate rules for the Mental Health/Substance Abuse Program, relating to coverage or reimbursement based upon the types of providers, the types of service and their utilization, copay limits, deductibles or copayment maximums and other related requirements, as it, in its sole discretion, deems necessary and appropriate to administer the Mental Health/Substance Abuse Program of the Medical Plan.

Sec. 13.4 Medical Plan Cost Reimbursement. Subject to the managed care provisions set forth in Secs. 13.6 and 13.7, and the limitations set forth in Sec. 13.9, and upon satisfaction by the Member and Eligible Family members of any applicable deductible and/or copayment amounts required by the Medical Plan, the Medical Plan shall reimburse the Member or his or her assignee as follows:

Item 14-Info*A. New Covenant Trust Company, N.A. and New Covenant Annuity Insurance Company Reports1. New Covenant Trust Company, N.A.

New Covenant Trust Company, N.A. (NCTC) was chartered January 2, 1998 as the first Nationally Chartered Trust Company owned by a not-for-profit Foundation. The NCTC serves as back-office service provider for the Foundation and the endowment funds it holds as fiduciary for the benefit of the General Assembly, local congregations, and other Presbyterian-affiliated organizations. The company also serves as investment advisor to New Covenant Funds and trustee of various types of trust instruments in which there is a Presbyterian or Presbyterian-related beneficial interest. The NCTC's Board has enacted policies and procedures to ensure compliance with banking and securities law and provides oversight of the delivery of Trust Services to the Presbyterian community.

In 2003, the Trust Company elected a new president and COO, William Precious, a white, male, lay, under 50, who is an elder in the Synod of Living Waters. Precious came to NCTC with a strong background in banking and personal trust. Robert E. Leech remains CEO and has been appointed vice-chair of the board.

Also this year, the NCF Investment Department of NCTC was instrumental in the selection and hiring of a new record-keeper and transfer agent for the New Covenant Funds in order to assist the Funds to accomplish its goal to provide excellent customer service.

The Foundation and its subsidiary consistently strive to deliver superior service to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and seek to enhance the vehicles available to Presbyterians to express their Christian faith and generous stewardship. We are also exploring ways to partner with Presbyterian and related organizations in the delivery of enhanced trust services, such as Personal Trusts, Wholly Charitable Trusts, and Charitable Remainder Trusts. These estate-planning devices provide an opportunity to care for loved ones while providing for planned giving opportunities.

The following individuals have been confirmed by former General Assemblies and continue in their service as directors of New Covenant Trust Company, N.A.

a. Foundation Trustees

Karen C. Anderson, CPA, white, female, married, lay, under 50, Synod of the Pacific; D. Fort Flowers Jr., banker, white, male, married, lay, under 50, Synod of the Sun; George J. b. Former Foundation Trustees

Georgette L. Huie, elder, Asian, female, single, lay, over 50, Synod of the Pacific; Richard J. Seiwell (former adjunct trustee), investment advisor, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of the Trinity; Ray U. Tanner, retired banker, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters.

c. GAC Designee

Nagy L. Tawfik, GAC staff, Middle Eastern, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters.

2. New Covenant Annuity Insurance Company

The 211th General Assembly (1999) authorized the creation of New Covenant Annuity Insurance Company (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 500–2). Due to intervening events, including the establishment of New Covenant Funds in July 1999 and continued work on New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., the Foundation has delayed the creation of the insurance company.

B. *The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) 2003 Report

Marking the 286th Anniversary of the Beginning of the Work Now Carried on by this Board, and Presented to the 216th General Assembly (2004) Meeting in Richmond, Virginia, June 2004

This introduction paraphrases the subtitles of the reports made by the Board of Pensions to the General Assemblies in the 1940s. In its echo, the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) presents a year of continuity in service to the servants of the church when we are all in the midst of great change.

The responsibilities assigned to the Board of Pensions by the General Assembly are:

- The design and administration of a comprehensive program of retirement, death, disability, medical, and optional benefits for ministers, missionaries, and other church workers.
- The design and administration of a program of financial assistance to help meet needs that are beyond the scope of the pension and benefits program.
- The establishment and operation of a retirement housing program for eligible retirees and their spouses.
- The receipt, investment, and disbursement of the funds required to support these plans and programs for the sole and exclusive benefit of members and beneficiaries of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and other beneficiaries of the assistance and retirement housing programs.

This report summarizes the basic design of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and key statistics regarding the administration of the Benefits Plan and the programs of assistance and retirement housing. And, again, this is a report “of the work now carried on by” the Board of Pensions.

I. Narrative

A. The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s benefits program is contained in the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Benefits Plan provides pension, death and disability benefits, medical benefits, optional benefits (additional death benefits, optional supplemental disability, dental coverage, long-term care insurance, and retirement savings), and a retirement and financial planning program. Participation in this program is mandated for all ministers of the Word and Sacrament in installed positions. A church may also enroll other church employees. The same benefits, excluding the pension, are now offered to employing organizations for certain non-mandated employees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or affiliated organizations through the Affiliated Benefits Program. Moreover, these employees may participate in the Retirement Savings Plan.

The 215th General Assembly (2003) approved changes to the Benefits Plan amendment process to accommodate the change to biennial meetings of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The right to amend the Benefits Plan is reserved solely to the Board of Pensions. Amendments to the Plan that constitute a reduction in Pension Plan benefits or an increase in Pension Plan dues are effective only upon approval by the General Assembly. The Bylaws of the Board of Pensions require approval of a two-thirds majority of directors present at a duly constituted meeting to amend the Pension Plan, other than a benefit reduction or a dues increase (which amendments require the approval in advance of the General Assembly). The Board of Pensions must provide sixty-days notice to the General Assembly, Plan members, local churches, and Presbyteries of any amendment requiring General Assembly approval and reasonable notice of any other amendment to the Benefits Plan.

The component parts of the Plan have unique liabilities and cash flow requirements, with separate investment portfolios and actuarial valuations. This report provides tables showing financial reports on the component parts of the Plan and programs.

B. The Community Nature of the Benefits Plan

The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), administered by the Board of Pensions, is designed to care for and protect the community of Benefits Plan members as a whole.

The employing organization's cost of providing benefits to its employees who are enrolled for pension, medical, and death and disability benefits is not based on the family configuration, sex, or age of its employees. The dues contributed by an employing organization are based on a percentage of its employees' salaries and represent that employer's share of the cost of protecting the entire community. The salary bases used to determine the dues for the Pension Plan, the Death and Disability Plan, and the Medical Plan reflect minimum and maximum amounts.

In the same way, the benefits are "leveled" with minimum benefits accruing to employees paid under the median salary for their employee classification (ministers, exempt, nonexempt) and caps on medical deductibles and co-pay expenses for higher paid members.

C. Dues and Optional Benefits Funding, Including the Affiliated Benefits Program

In 2003, employing organizations continued to contribute to the Benefits Plan the same dues (28.5 percent of the members' effective salaries) as in 2002 through June 30, 2003; on July 1, 2003, medical benefits dues increased from 16.5 percent to 17.5 percent, raising the total dues responsibility to 29.5 percent. The total dues include 11 percent for pension benefits and 1 percent for death and disability benefits in addition to the dues for medical benefits.

For the Affiliated Benefits Program, the dues level for medical benefits increased 15 percent. This increase paralleled a similar increase for the traditional coverage of the Medical Plan and was necessary to sustain the sound financial status, protect reserves, and maintain the financial stability of the program. For medical coverage, the dues vary by level of coverage—single member, married, a single parent with a child or children, or a family. An employing organization can require that the member contribute for the coverage.

Optional death benefits, optional disability coverage, optional dental insurance, long-term care insurance, and the 403(b) Retirement Savings Plan are funded independently through voluntary employer and/or member contributions.

3. Pension Benefits Overview

The pension provided by the Benefits Plan is based on the credits accrued by a member during his or her career of service for the church. Under the Plan provisions, a member accrues credits annually at 1.25 percent of the member's effective salary. To the extent that a member's full-time salary is less than the median salary for that employment classification, the member's credits accrue at 1.25 percent of the median salary rather than his or her own lower salary.

Table VII shows, for various salary ranges, the percentage of final salary that has been replaced by the combination of the Plan's retirement benefit and Social Security. The Benefits Plan is designed to work together with Social Security benefits to provide adequate retirement income for members, without recognition of a spouse's Social Security benefits. The replacement percentage is higher for lower salary levels because the Social Security benefit formula is weighted heavily in favor of lower wage levels and because the median salary calculation enhances the benefits of members with lower salaries.

4. Pension Plan and Death and Disability Plan Amendments

a. Pension Experience Apportionment and Disability Benefit Increase.

The designs of the Pension Plan and the Death and Disability Plan provide for the granting of experience apportionments and disability benefit increases respectively when the Plans have favorable investment experience, favorable actuarial experience, and adequate contingency reserves.

In light of continuing stock market losses that effectively eroded all contingency reserves, no pension apportionment or disability increase was recommended for 2003.

(1) History of the Pension Apportionments and Disability Benefit Increases

A major function of the experience apportionments is to help the pension credits of active members and the retirement income of Plan members keep pace with inflation. The recent experience apportionments and disability benefit increases are shown in Table VIII compared to the Consumer Price Index (CPI), a measure of inflation in consumer goods and services.

(2) Impact of Pension Apportionments

For the years 1993 through 2003, Table IX shows the number of ordained minister Plan members (with at least fifteen years of service) retiring at or after age sixty-five and the average annual amount of their pension at the time of retirement. Based on the defined benefit plan and experience apportionment, the Benefits Plan has been able to provide significant increases in pension benefits during the last eleven years. The average pension with an inflationary increase based on the CPI is shown for comparison.

b. Administrative Changes to the Pension Plan and Death and Disability Plan

During 2003, the Pension Plan and the Death and Disability Plan were amended to ensure clarity and completeness. The Plan was amended to change the name of the Disability Experience Apportionment to Disability Benefit Increase. In addition, the Plan was amended to add Appendices B and C that show the schedule of past experience apportionments and disability increases. These amendments were reported to the 215th General Assembly (2003).

5. Death and Disability Plana. Death Benefits

The Benefits Plan pays death benefits to the dependent family members of a deceased active Plan member in the form of a lump sum death benefit, a survivor's pension, and educational benefits for eligible children. A salary continuation benefit is payable to any designated beneficiary as well as a lump sum benefit for a deceased active Plan member with no eligible dependents. Under the Living Needs provision, a portion of the death benefits may be paid prior to death to provide financial assistance to a terminally ill Plan member. The survivor's pension, educational benefits, and a reduced salary continuation benefit are payable to eligible survivors at a retired member's death.

b. Disability Benefits

If a Benefits Plan member becomes disabled, he or she receives an annual disability benefit of 60 percent of the greater of the effective salary (to a maximum of $70,000) or the applicable churchwide median salary, with the initial amount not to exceed 100 percent of effective salary. This benefit, payable on a monthly basis, is provided while the member remains disabled. The annual disability benefit payments cease at the earlier of a return to work, attainment of age sixty-five, or death, and are subject to certain minimum benefit periods for those persons who become disabled at age sixty-two and older. In addition to providing a monthly income, the Plan also provides (at no cost to the member or the employing organization) medical coverage, death benefits, and pension credit accrual up to age sixty-five. The Optional Death Benefits also continue without further cost for those members enrolled in the program prior to disability. The disability benefit is designed to supplement Social Security disability income coverage.

6. Medical Plana. Overview

The Medical Plan provides its benefits and services to Plan members subject to the same financial challenges and market forces affecting all medical benefits delivery systems that exist today. In this, the Board of Pensions is no different from any other employer benefit plan sponsor. The Board of Pensions tries to exercise good stewardship of the dollars entrusted to the Medical Fund, providing financial protection against medical expenses for Plan members and their families, while maintaining dues at affordable levels for churches. Members may choose among doctors and hospitals, but have economic incentives to select those providers that have agreed to negotiated, discounted pricing.

The Medical Plan provides coverage for almost all Plan members and their families through a preferred provider organization (PPO). A PPO provides coverage through networks of doctors and hospitals that have agreed to accept discounted fees in exchange for patient volume. The PPO plan design encourages members to use network providers by providing a higher benefit for network services. Members always have the option to use out-of-network doctors and hospitals and referrals are not required for specialist care. In areas where network doctors and hospitals are not available, the higher benefit level applies to eligible charges. Approximately 90% of Plan members covered under the PPO have access to network services. For most Plan members, the network access in 2003 was provided through Blue Cross Blue Shield networks (the BlueCard® program) administered for the Board of Pensions by Highmark (formerly Blue Cross of Western Pennsylvania and Blue Shield of Pennsylvania). Separate Blue Cross Blue Shield arrangements applied in the Louisville, Kentucky, area (a self-insured HMO [health maintenance organization] arrangement with benefit levels that closely parallel the value of the PPO) and Puerto Rico (a fully-insured contract).

In 2003, Plan member use of network doctors and hospitals resulted in approximately $90 million in gross savings for the Plan and its members (savings are shared between the Plan and its members; about 80 percent to the Plan and 20 percent to the members). These savings, and PPO savings in prior years, which have helped to fund the contingency reserves, allowed the Board of Pensions to maintain dues at 16.5 percent for the first half of 2003 although fairly significant changes to the prescription drug benefit had to be introduced at the beginning of the year. Continuing double-digit medical trends forced the Board of Pensions to further action and the decision was made in October 2002 that a mid-year increase in dues, to 17.5 percent, effective July 1, 2003, would be required.

Given the apparently unending upward spiral in cost, the Board of Pensions has had to take additional dues and benefits measures for 2004. Effective January 1, 2004, minimum dues for Medical Plan participation are now based on 65 percent of the churchwide median salary for pastors serving churches, up from 55 percent. Dues for part-time church workers are determined on the greater of the minimum participation basis or the equivalent full-time salary and the required dues percent increased to 18.5 percent for all participating positions. On the benefits side, the network office visit copay increased by $10, from $15 to $25 for a visit with a primary care practitioner and from $25 to $35 for a visit with a specialist. (The copay required for a network visit with a mental health professional remains at $25.) The Board of Pensions also made the decision to move responsibility for claims processing of all mental health/substance abuse claims from Highmark to ValueOptions, the organization that provides medical counsel to the Board of Pensions and its members on mental health/substance abuse treatment. By combining services, the Board of Pensions expects to reduce some of the administrative complexity generated by having both Highmark and ValueOptions involved. Lessening the administrative complexity with Highmark has resulted in a lower fee, making the change a financial positive for the Plan.

Separately, the Board of Pensions has continued its efforts to partner with other denominations through the Church Benefits Association (CBA) to negotiate more favorable financial arrangements through joint purchasing efforts. The first initiative focused on the contract with the pharmacy benefit manager (Express Scripts); by negotiating as part of a larger group, the Board of Pensions is saving $1 million or more in each year of the present three-year contract (2002–2004). In 2004, a number of denominations have joined us in obtaining PPO access and administration services from Highmark; we hope to take advantage of that coalition effort to improve both price and service over time.

The Affiliated Benefits Program (ABP), introduced in August 2000, allows eligible employing organizations to offer medical or medical, death, and disability benefits to non-mandated employees on slightly different terms from those applicable to the Benefits Plan. By January 1, 2003, approximately 2,200 members were enrolled for the ABP, from more than 380 different employing organizations, including Prairie Village Retirement Center, Nebraska, Presbyterian Children's Home of the Highlands, Virginia, and the Presbyterian Home in the Presbytery of Huntington, Pennsylvania. As of January 1, 2004, the number of church workers enrolled approximates 2,600. With the present rate of growth in healthcare costs, the Board of Pensions is particularly aware of the difficulty smaller employing organizations encounter in trying to continue to provide comprehensive medical coverage for their employees; we know that we have helped a number of Presbyterian-affiliated employers confronted by cost increases they could not absorb. While the Board of Pensions hopes to offer a meaningful alternative for the long-term, the Board of Pensions is also mindful of the need to carefully monitor the financial performance of these new groups in conjunction with the overall performance of the Medical Fund and is interested in measured rather than rapid growth.

In addition to maintaining benefit plans to provide assistance with medical expenses, the Board of Pensions is actively engaged in encouraging Plan members and their families to adopt healthy lifestyles and use appropriate preventive care services. When fewer than half of the participants are responsible for 97 percent of the claims, there are opportunities to improve both professional and self-care, leading to improved health status and, longer term, to reduced expense. One response is a new, more proactive program targeted to chronic conditions, specifically diabetes and cardiac conditions, introduced July 1, 2003; through it we hope to help more than 1,500 patients with these health problems. The Plan also continues to provide education about and coverage for the right kinds of preventive care and access to resource services such as a twenty-four-hour nurse line and an employee assistance plan. Other initiatives include support for clergy in their first calls, subsidies to encourage the establishment of local clergy colleague groups, and educational efforts built around such themes as Breast Cancer Awareness Month and Nutrition Month. The Board of Pensions also sponsors a 5K walk, run, or roll event at the General Assembly.

Concerned about issues of quality in healthcare and patient safety for a number of years, the Board of Pensions has tried to find ways in which to encourage change in the provider community and provide education for Plan members and their families. In 2002, the Board of Pensions produced a member education video built on the theme of “How to Protect Yourself Against Preventable Medical Mistakes,” accompanied by a print piece, Health S.E.N.S.E. For 2003, the Board of Pensions stayed with this theme, sending out a series of five postcards, reminding members and their families of the key messages in the video. As a member of the Leapfrog Group, a national organization of large medical plans focused on promoting patient safety changes within the healthcare system, the Board of Pensions has led efforts by local employers in the Philadelphia and Louisville areas to encourage hospital participation in surveys that collect data about their adherence to certain patient safety protocols.

The 213th General Assembly (2001) asked the Board of Pensions to comment in its future reports about the parity of mental health benefits provided through the Benefits Plan by, “Urge[ing] the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to evaluate, on an annual basis, issues of parity between coverage for mental health and medical and surgical benefits under plans offered by the Board of Pensions and include their evaluation in their annual reports to future General Assemblies” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 48–49). In 2003, although the Medical Plan contained specific limits on coverage for mental health services, those limits were routinely waived if medical necessity for additional services was established. This waiver option gave Plan members and their families access to the same benefits for mental health treatment as for any other illness, as long as the medical necessity criterion was met. In 2004, to facilitate the separate processing of claims, mental health/substance abuse claims now have their own deductible and copay provisions. These requirements will be coordinated with those for the balance of the Plan, excluding drugs, to make sure that the administrative change does not increase the total amount any family has to pay. The various internal limits or review points within the facility-based covered expense list have been removed, but medical necessity for the services must still be approved. The Board of Pensions believes that the parity standard is satisfied.

b. Medical Continuation

Under the Medical Continuation coverage, members who terminate active Plan participation may elect to continue coverage on a subscription basis. A retiring member not yet eligible for Medicare (or a terminated vested member who elects to defer receipt of pension income), whose age and service status meet certain criteria, may continue coverage until Medicare eligibility. (Those retiring prior to January 1, 1995, did not have to meet the same requirements.) Retiring members whose age and service do not satisfy these criteria, surviving or divorced spouses, children who have attained the Plan’s limiting age, and members whose coverage has terminated for other reasons, also are eligible to continue coverage. The period for medical continuation coverage varies.

Table X and associated technical explanation provide information about historical financial experience, projected experience for 2004, and the accounting requirements with which the Board of Pensions now conforms. (The Plan is required to recognize significant liabilities as a result of accounting rules set forth by the Financial Accounting Standards Board. These Financial Accounting Standards address two benefit commitments: post-retirement benefits and post-employment benefits as reported in Table X.)

<sup>1</sup> Since 1994, participants have had up to twelve calendar months after the date on which the service occurred to submit a medical claim. Incurred claims costs are revised each year as additional claims are submitted. Therefore, the claims costs reported above are different from those reported in the financial statements prepared on a Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP) basis.

<sup>2</sup> Dues are 16.5 percent for January–June 2003, and 17.5 percent for July–December 2003.

<sup>3</sup> The Board approved dues credits and benefit improvements for several years, ending in 2001, to gradually adjust the medical contingency reserve down to the target range.

<sup>4</sup> Changes in accounting standards require the Board to recognize the financial liabilities created by the Benefits Plan's post-retirement and post-employment provisions.

For post-retirement benefits, these liabilities represent the present value of the active Plan subsidy provided to those retired members, their spouses and surviving spouses participating in the Medical Continuation coverage as well as an accrual for active members who will become eligible for the subsidy if they retire prior to Medicare eligibility. The free coverage period now associated with retirement generates an additional liability.

For post-employment benefits, these liabilities represent the present value of the Plan's commitment to maintain medical coverage for disabled members and their families. The liabilities are created to the extent that the income received from the Death and Disability Plan for these members fails to fully cover the claims and administrative costs being incurred by them and their families. Additional liability is created for terminated Plan participants continuing in the Medical Continuation coverage (divorced spouses, ex-dependent children, and members terminating for reasons other than retirement) to the extent of the active dues subsidy and for members who enjoy the protection of the free coverage period.

Milliman USA, the Board of Pensions' Medical Actuarial Counsel, prepared Table X and notes.

Annual claim and administrative expense experience for 1999 through 2003 (estimated) and projected experience for 2004 are displayed in the table above. To be conservative, estimated final experience for 2003, when all outstanding claims have been processed, and projected experience for 2004, are based on unfavorable assumptions.

Table X above analyzes claims experience assuming unfavorable trends. On the unfavorable basis, estimated incurred claim and administrative expenses in Table X total $132,499,000 for 2003, including managed-care fees. This is 98.9 percent of total income for the medical portion of the Benefits Plan (dues at an average of 17.0 percent of effective salary, subscription income, and investment income). (Using more favorable assumptions, the estimated expenses total $129,918,000, 96.9 percent of the total income for the medical portion of the Plan.) Outstanding liabilities for the Medical Continuation coverage, the free coverage period and continued coverage for disabled members and their families total an estimated $39,500,000.

c. Medicare Supplement

The Board of Pensions offers the Medical Plan to retirees not yet eligible for Medicare and a Medicare Supplement to those who are sixty-five years of age and older. While the retiree pays most of the cost, the Medical Plan provides some subsidy for early retirees and Vacancy and Post-retirement Service Dues are used to subsidize the Medicare Supplement. The Medicare Supplement also has benefited from $6,000,000 transferred from the Board of Pensions' general assistance funds between 1998 and 2001.

Annual claim and administrative expense experience for 1999 through 2003 (estimated) and projected experience for 2004, are displayed in Table XI below. To be conservative, estimated final experience for 2003, when all outstanding claims have been processed, and projected experience for 2004 are based on unfavorable assumptions.

On the unfavorable basis, estimated incurred claim and administrative expenses total $25,642,000 for 2003. This is 106.4 percent of total income for the Medicare Supplement portion of the Benefits Plan (vacancy dues, post-retirement service dues, subscription income, and investment income). Using more favorable assumptions, the estimated expenses total $25,261,000, 104.8 percent of total income for the Medicare Supplement portion of the Plan. Plan reserves for the Medicare Supplement then stand at $6,416,000 (estimated).

7. Optional Benefits

a. Retirement Savings Plan

The Retirement Savings Plan, a 403(b) defined contribution plan administered by the Board of Pensions, offers members of the Benefits Plan an opportunity to supplement retirement income through a tax-deferred savings plan. Participation in the Retirement Savings Plan is also open to any person employed in eligible service who works at least twenty hours per week, regardless of whether or not the employer is enrolled in the full Benefits Plan program.

As of December 31, 2003, there were 4,687 members making contributions through salary reductions and/or receiving contributions from their employers and 8,200 total participants. The total value of all accounts was $142 million at the end of calendar year 2003.

Record-keeping services for the Retirement Savings Plan are provided by Fidelity Investments. Participants can access their accounts through the Internet or a telephone system. Investment transfers and valuations are done daily and there is no administrative fee for the Plan. Participants may choose from ten investment options with different risk and return profiles. The fund choices include seven Fidelity mutual funds, Ariel Fund, and two socially responsible investment options based on the guidelines of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for investments in companies involved in military-related activities, hand-guns, landmines, gaming, alcohol, and tobacco.

b. Optional Death Benefits

The Optional Death Benefits Plan offers members the opportunity to apply for additional death benefits coverage in the amounts of $25,000, $50,000, $75,000, $100,000, $150,000, or $200,000. Benefits are payable to the member's named beneficiary. Members also may purchase coverage in the amount of $25,000 or $50,000 for spouses, and $5,000 or $10,000 for each child. The member is the beneficiary for these benefits. All coverage, other than for dependent children and up to $50,000 for a member at first eligibility for this program, is subject to medical underwriting. As of December 31, 2003, there are 6,032 participants, including spouses and children, enrolled in the program.

Based on favorable portfolio and actuarial experience, the Board of Pensions reduced the required subscription rate structure in 1999 and added temporary benefit improvements for 2000 and 2001. A subscription rate holiday also was granted for the first quarter of 2001 for those enrolled on January 1, 2000, and earlier.

In 2002, the subscription rate structure was modified to reflect tobacco use. Tobacco users whose participation began before 2002 and who had not increased their benefit levels in 2002 or 2003 were granted a two-year period during which the former blended rates continued to apply. Starting January 1, 2004, if they continue to use tobacco products, the higher tobacco user rate structure applies.

c. Optional Supplemental Disability Benefits

The maximum protected effective salary for disability benefits under the Benefits Plan is limited to $70,000. A review of Plan member information in 2000 showed that the limit affected approximately 430 members with salaries of $80,000 or more who then were not fully protected in the event of disability. Given the likelihood that one's obligations are linked to one's income, becoming disabled could cause additional financial hardship for those without adequate coverage. The new program introduced October 1, 2000, offers the option of purchasing additional protection in amounts of $10,000 of covered salary up to the maximum Pension Participation Basis (currently $205,000); the benefit level is still 60 percent. Of the members eligible, 176 had elected to participate as of December 2003. Dues are determined by age and amount of coverage and may be paid by the member or by the employing organization on behalf of the member.

d. Optional Dental Benefits

The Dental Plan, a group program, offers comprehensive coverage and is available to all active Plan members except seminarians. For underwriting reasons, retired members are unable to participate in the program. Financed totally by voluntary member or employing organization contributions, the coverage is provided through a fully insured contract underwritten by Aetna. Members are offered a choice between a DMO (dental maintenance organization) and a PPO (preferred provider organization), a PPO only, or out-of-area indemnity coverage, depending on their access to network providers. A passive PPO has been added in 2004 so that members with limited network access are not penalized for use of out-of-network services and indemnity members receive the advantage of discounts if they happen to use a participating provider.

As of December 31, 2003, there were 6,873 members enrolled with participation distributed among the options as follows: DMO, 1,060; PPO, 5,213; and indemnity, 600.

e. Optional Long-Term Care Insurance

A new optional benefit was added effective April 1, 1999, in response to many requests from Plan members. Plan members, including retirees and spouses, have the opportunity to purchase long-term care insurance. Continental Casualty Company, a unit of CNA, underwrites this benefit on a level premium basis. Coverage without underwriting is available to members who are in active employment with an employing organization that participates in the Plan administered by the Board of Pensions if they apply when first eligible; all other coverage is subject to medical underwriting. In 2002, participants were given the opportunity to update their fixed dollar coverage levels to recognize the impact of inflation since 1999, without medical underwriting, and 372 people did so.

There were 1,127 participants on December 31, 2003, and there have been eleven approved claims since the program was introduced. Three claimants have died, two no longer qualify for benefits, and one has discontinued the use of covered services. Five claimants are now receiving benefits.

f. Vision and Hearing Discount Programs

To provide assistance with the cost of purchasing vision and hearing services, the Board of Pensions offers two programs. Through Vision One, members have access to eye examination services, glasses, and contact lenses at discounts ranging from 25 percent to 50 percent. Through Beltone, members have access to audiology services and hearing aids at discounts of 15 percent.

8. Assistance Program

a. Overview

The Assistance Program of the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) values the commitment and sacrifice of the men and women who are called to serve the church. Through our efforts, we seek to provide a system of programs that act as a safety net to meet the urgent and emergency financial needs of church workers and their families consistent with the Board of Pensions' mission in support of the ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The Assistance Program is designed to meet the financial needs of employees and retirees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that are beyond the scope of the Benefits Plan. No Benefits Plan dues are used for the Assistance Program. The Assistance Program consists of three parts: the Financial Assistance Programs, the General Assistance Programs, and the Retirement Housing Programs.

b. The Financial Assistance Programs

The Financial Assistance programs consist of Income Supplements, Shared Grants, and Emergency Assistance Grants. These programs are supported by the Christmas Joy Offering, gifts, legacies directed to the Board of Pensions, and endowment income. In addition, there are several programs established many years ago to meet special needs of specific groups of the church.

(1) Income Supplements

The Board of Pensions provides income supplements to those retirees whose income from all sources is below target levels established by the Board of Pensions. The Board of Pensions reviews the levels for eligibility to try to keep pace with inflation. The target levels for 2003 were $21,600 for a single person and $26,100 for a couple.

The Board of Pensions approved a Christmas Gift of $200 for each individual and spouse receiving an Income Supplement as of November 1, 2003. This gift was sent to 210 individuals and 72 married couples at a cost of $71,000.

(2) Shared Grants

Shared Grants are provided for financial emergencies or special needs of active and retired employees of the church and their families. A church worker need not be a member of the Benefits Plan to participate in the Shared Grants program. These grants are normally shared equally by the Board of Pensions and either the employing organization or the presbytery. Shared Grants must be initiated at the local level (that is, by the congregation, employing organization, or governing body).

In 2003, approximately 174 Shared Grants were given to individuals or families. The Board of Pensions contributed $390,000 in 2003 compared to $449,000 in 2002.

(3) Emergency Assistance Grants

Emergency Assistance Grants are provided to church workers, active or retired, when financial resources for a Shared Grant are not available from a governing body or employing organization. They may also be available when home care or skilled nursing care is needed and no other financial resources, including Medicaid/MediCal and community resources, are available. Medical or mental healthcare expenses which may be deemed necessary, but beyond the scope of the Benefits Plan, are also the focus of this program. In 2003, Emergency Assistance Grants totaling $49,000 were given to eleven individuals and families.

(4) West Virginia Project

Using the income from the Annie Gebhardt Fund and the Frances Littlepage Irwin Fund, the Board of Pensions initiated a new grant program in 1999 for ministers of the Word and Sacrament who reside in the state of West Virginia, as the donors designated. Administered by the Board of Pensions in cooperation with the Presbyteries of West Virginia, Shenandoah, and Upper Ohio Valley, the grants are matched as part of the Shared Grants program.

(5) Nursing Home Care Assistance Program

This program was closed to new entrants beginning in 1998. The Board of Pensions completed a major redesign of its Financial Assistance Programs in 1997 to meet the extraordinary needs of retirees and their spouses who may need nursing home care, while continuing to have the flexibility to react to emergency needs. Beginning in 1998, applicants who need financial assistance for skilled nursing care must first apply to Medicaid (MediCal in California) before seeking funds from the Board of Pensions. Funds have been set aside to continue coverage for those recipients who were receiving Nursing Home Care Assistance prior to 1998.

Detailed descriptions of the Financial Assistance programs are available from the Board of Pensions.

c. The General Assistance Programs(1) Special Groups

The Special Groups Assistance grants consist of various financial programs (for example, Coemar Supplements, Missionary Pensions, Emma B. Kennedy Fund) established to meet special needs of specific groups in the church. These were usually created through an arrangement with another church entity. These forms of assistance are closed to new applicants and will cease at the death of the last recipient. Funds for these programs were usually transferred to the Board of Pensions to manage and disburse to the eligible persons. In some of the cases, the funds given to the Board of Pensions have been depleted. Rather than terminate the assistance when the particular funds ran out, the Board of Pensions has assumed the responsibility to continue to carry out the arrangement.

(2) Relief of Conscience Grants

Relief of Conscience Grants are distributed to members of the Benefits Plan who are parents of an infant (defined as being twelve months old or younger) adopted on or after July 1, 1992. One grant of $500 is given for each eligible adopted child to assist in the payment of medical expenses incurred by the child at the time of adoption that were not reimbursed by the Benefits Plan. The moneys for these grants come from the Relief of Conscience Fund, recipient of the offset of dues that occurs when an employing organization formally declares it does not wish any of its dues to be used to pay for abortions. In 2003, eleven Relief of Conscience grants totaling $5,500 were made to individuals or families who had adopted infants any time from July 1, 1992, through December 31, 2003.

(3) Seminary Debt Assistance Program

The Seminary Debt Assistance Program is an initiative of the Board of Pensions developed in cooperation with the church's national offices, presbyteries, and Presbyterian seminaries. This program will provide grants of up to $2,500 a year for up to four years to repay education debt of ministers of the Word and Sacrament who have graduated from a Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seminary and who are serving in a full-time first call to a church of fewer than 150 members with a budget of less than $150,000. The maximum amount given to one individual over four years will not exceed $10,000. A limited number of grants will be awarded in any one calendar year. The presbytery of call must have a policy on student/clergy indebtedness and the applicant must attend a financial planning seminar offered by the Board of Pensions. The guidelines for this program seek to address the need of smaller churches for pastoral leadership by alleviating a portion of their pastor's burden of educational debt.

This program was initiated in May of 2001. For the year 2003, seventy grants totaling $172,500 were awarded to ministers of the Word and Sacrament serving in sixty-one different presbyteries.

d. Retirement Housing Program

The Retirement Housing Program was initiated in 1883 to provide housing for eligible ministers. This program consists of the Homes Program, which offers affordable housing in properties owned by the Board of Pensions, and the Housing Supplement Program, which gives financial assistance to help retirees maintain their own homes or move to a retirement community.

(1) Homes Program

The Board of Pensions owns two individual homes and fifty-eight houses or apartments in four clusters. Homes related to various governing bodies of the church also provide services under contract with the Board of Pensions.

Persons who have served in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for twenty years or more are eligible for this housing. The program is structured so that residents pay according to their ability, contributing for independent living 30 percent of their total annual income, excluding post-retirement earned income, or an appraised fair rental value of the home, whichever is less.

In recent years, the Board of Pensions strategic direction has been to move away from Board of Pensions-owned homes and to provide financial assistance to those individuals who need housing assistance.

The Board of Pensions requested permission from the 200th General Assembly (1988) to change the Homes Program from one based solely on Board-owned homes to one based on housing assistance supplements. The General Assembly approved this strategic direction for the Homes Program and authorized the sale of properties then owned and received thereafter, with the proceeds going to the Housing Supplement Program. The General Assembly withheld approval for the sale of two housing communities operated by the Board of Pensions and instructed it to continue its "ownership and management of the clusters at Morganwood (Swarthmore, Pennsylvania) and El Sombroso Oaks (Los Gatos, California) with no further sale of these clusters without General Assembly Approval" (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 97.)

(2) Morganwood

The 214th General Assembly (2002) approved, in principle, the sale of Morganwood, a cluster of twenty-nine housing units in Swarthmore, Pennsylvania.

During the year 2003, the Board of Pensions was approached by representatives of Swarthmore College, a Quaker-affiliated institution adjacent to the Morganwood property, regarding their interest in purchasing the Morganwood property.

Discussions with Swarthmore College have proceeded and an Agreement of Sale has been negotiated. The closing of the agreement is scheduled for January 14, 2004. (As of the writing of this report, the closing has occurred.)

Under the Agreement of Sale, the current residents will be entitled to continue living in their units until they vacate the unit or the expiration of twenty years from the Closing Date, whichever is earlier.

The Board of Pensions will provide a subsidy to the current residents of Morganwood to cover the differential between current rental rates and the new rates established by Swarthmore College for the year 2004. This subsidy is projected to be approximately $200,000 for the year 2004. The Board of Pensions will review this subsidy with the residents during the year to determine future needs.

The proceeds from the sale will be used to support the Assistance Program of the Board of Pensions and the subsidies to current residents.

(3) Westminster Gardens

Westminster Gardens, Duarte, California, was established in 1949, by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., to care for retired missionaries. The denomination assigned responsibility for the oversight of the affairs of Westminster Gardens to the Board of Pensions in 1972. Since its founding, this retirement community has been available to retired church workers and their spouses.

In 2001, the Board of Trustees of Westminster Gardens entered into a management agreement with Southern California Presbyterian Homes that is providing certain management services, including the services of the executive director of Westminster Gardens. This relationship proved advantageous to Westminster Gardens in improving management and services, and in reducing costs.

During 2002, the Board of Trustees of Westminster Gardens undertook a strategic study to consider the mission, management relationship and the long-term financial health of Westminster Gardens. As a result of that study, Westminster Gardens, Southern California Presbyterian Homes, and the Board of Pensions negotiated an agreement whereby the Southern California Presbyterian Homes would assume the control and operation of Westminster Gardens.

The 215th General Assembly (2003) approved the Affiliation Agreement between Southern California Presbyterian Homes and Westminster Gardens. The agreement has been signed by all the parties and has been submitted, with all required documentation, to the Department of Social Services in California for approval, which is expected in 2004.

As part of the Affiliation Agreement, the Board of Pensions will guarantee a Line of Credit, obtained by Westminster Gardens, up to a maximum of $3,500,000 for up to a maximum of five years. The Line of Credit will be used for the initial phase of rehabilitation work on the Westminster Gardens' property and will be secured by a Promissory Note and Deed of Trust in favor of the Board of Pensions.

Also under the terms of the Affiliation Agreement, the Board of Pensions is providing rent subsidies to residents who are related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Board of Pensions. The total amount of the subsidy for the year 2003 is $293,000. This subsidy was in addition to the assistance provided to qualifying residents under the Board of Pensions' Income and Housing Supplements programs.

(4) Housing Supplements

Housing Supplements are financial grants to eligible retirees who cannot, for financial or physical reasons, provide appropriate and adequate housing for themselves in retirement. Funds may be requested to help pay for the costs associated with entering a retirement home, maintaining a current home, and/or moving expenses.

Normally, an applicant must have served the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for at least twenty years and have a commensurate number of years' participation in the pension portion of the Benefits Plan. However, partial grants may be provided for persons who have served the church for more than ten, but fewer than twenty, years.

In 2003, the Board of Pensions provided approximately 191 members with $1,911,000 through the Housing Supplements Program.

e. Assistance and Retirement Housing Funds

The Assistance and Retirement Housing funds are identified as to purpose and invested to meet the program goals of the Assistance and Retirement Housing Programs. Gifts and legacies are managed in strict accordance with the purpose of the donor.

Tables XII, XIII, and XIV show the sources and uses of funds for the Assistance and Retirement Housing Programs, as well as the operating expenses for the Retirement Housing Program, and a comparison of distributions made under the Assistance and Retirement Housing Programs for 2002 and 2003.

f. Funds Development Efforts

In response to the continuing and emerging needs of ministry and the challenges facing those who serve the church, the Board of Pensions is restarting its funds development effort.

Currently, gifts, legacies, and one half of the Christmas Joy Offering fund the assistance programs. These funds are limited and currently support the short- and long-term obligations of our programs. (No Benefits Plan dues are used for the Assistance Program.)

To meet the increasing demands of our current programs and to fund new programs to meet emerging needs, the Board of Pensions will be seeking additional funds in the coming years. These funds will be used in keeping with the long-standing tradition of the Assistance Program: to support ministers, missionaries, and church workers with unexpected and special needs in ministry.

During 2003, the Board of Pensions held four focus groups to assess interest in our programs, established preliminary strategies, and hired a director of Funds Development. The Board of Pensions is expanding these activities mindful of the other national entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that are also engaged in funds development efforts. In cooperation with the other national church entities, we have developed protocols for funds development activities to assist us in our efforts.

9. Investments

The Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio includes assets of the Benefits Plans and non-plan accounts. The Benefits Plans include the Pension Plan, Death and Disability Plan, Optional Death Benefits Plan and Medical Plan Long-Term Reserve. The non-plan accounts are the Endowment Fund, Benefit Supplement Fund, Retirement Housing Fund, General Assistance Fund, West Virginia Fund, Chaplains Deposit Fund, GAC Special Cuban Fund, and Restricted Gifts Fund. Non-plan assets are commingled for investment purposes with the assets of the Benefit Plans.

The strategic asset allocation of the Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio provides the asset allocation range for each asset class of the portfolio, as shown in Table XV below. The Investment Committee of the Board of Directors of the Board of Pensions reviews and approves the portfolio asset allocation at each meeting. The long-term strategic allocation is based on projected liabilities, including current and future benefit payments to Plan participants, as calculated by Towers Perrin, the Board of Pensions' actuary.

TABLE XV
The Balanced Investment Portfolio Asset Allocation
The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

Asset Class	Market Value ($ in Millions)	Actual Percent	Asset Allocation Range

International Equity	1,036	17.4	10–25
Fixed Income	1,918	32.1	25–45
Other Investments	114	1.9	0–10
Total	$5,974	100.0%

The assets of the Investment Portfolio at Mellon Trust are unitized, so that each participating Plan and non-plan account owns units of the Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio rather than individual securities. This reduces costs for all plans and programs. The valuation of units is done monthly by Mellon Trust, using an accounting process similar to that used to develop the net asset value of a mutual fund. Each plan, with the exception of the Medical Plan Long-Term Reserve, owns only units of the Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio. These plans will have the same asset allocation and investment performance as the Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio. The assets of the Medical Plan Long-Term Reserve, as well as non-plan accounts, own U.S. government securities and Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio units, resulting in an allocation with lower equity exposure than the Balanced Investment Portfolio itself. Participation in the Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio is shown in Table XVI.

TABLE XVI

Total returns shown on Table XVII include interest and dividend income, as well as realized and unrealized gains or losses on the Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio assets. Portfolio returns are net of all investment and custodial fees.

TABLE XVII
Annualized Portfolio Returns, Balanced Investment Portfolio

Consumer Price Index (Measure of Inflation)	1.9	1.9	2.4	2.4
Consumer Price Index Plus 5% Annually	6.9	6.9	7.4	7.4

The assets of the Pension Plan and Death and Disability Plan represent 98.4 percent of the assets of the Board of Pensions Balanced Investment Portfolio. The investment objective of the portfolio is to provide a long-term total return that can sustain and increase the promised pension, death, and disability benefits, as calculated by the Plan actuary, Towers Perrin. This objective must be achieved while maintaining a stable dues level and adequate contingency reserves. The investment portfolio must provide a long-term return of 5 percent above the inflation rate, or the Consumer Price Index plus 5 percent annually, to achieve this long-term objective.

C. Board of Pensions—Working for the Good of All—Agency Summary

“... Whenever we have an opportunity, let us work for the good of all, and especially for those of the family of faith” (Gal. 6:10).

1. Letter from the President and Board Chair

The long-stated mission of the Board of Pensions is to design and administer benefits, assistance, and related programs for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) workers and their families. This includes receiving, investing, and disbursing funds for these programs. In 2003, the Board of Pensions strengthened its ability to fulfill its mission:

- To help us better serve our members, we replaced our seven-year-old benefits administration system with a more comprehensive and efficient new system, which we call MemberNet.
- Following a formal operating risk assessment, we took significant steps to improve our business continuity planning. We added depth to our mid-level management and increased our focus on data security.
- Our diversified and balanced investment portfolio grew by 27.5 percent in 2003. After three consecutive years of negative returns, this helped us make significant progress in rebuilding the contingency reserves of both our pension plan and death and disability plan.
- To support existing assistance programs and fund new initiatives that help strengthen pastoral leadership, we consulted with clergy and lay leaders on reinstituting a formal funds development process.

We plan to build further upon our successes in the coming year. We will complete the implementation of our new benefits administration system and strengthen our funds development capability. We will conduct a formal study of our death and disability plan to assess the adequacy of dues and reserves. We will implement a plan for expanded education to better prepare our members for active ministry and retirement.

We anticipate many challenges in the coming year, as well. The cost of healthcare continues to rise at double-digit rates. Because our healthcare benefit is funded on a “pay as you go” basis and not subsidized by investment returns, these cost increases continue to put pressure on dues. We are studying alternative ways to allocate costs among dues payers to relieve serious pressures on parts of the church. We are also pursuing ways to reduce our utilization of medical services by encouraging members to adopt healthy lifestyles and live “Life in all its Fullness.”

Earldean V. S. Robbins, Chair, Board of Directors

2. Pension Plan Helps Minister Who Devoted His Life to Small Churches

“All through my career, I was on minimum salary,” recalls the Reverend Wilbur Brandli. “I deliberately went to congregations that were having problems and one of their problems was the inability to pay a really good salary.” Now 86 and retired, Rev. Brandli lives modestly with his wife in White Pigeon, Michigan. He still does occasional pulpit preaching and works with the seriously ill.

His many years at small churches left Rev. Brandli with little in savings. “We’re very careful about how we spend,” he explains. “We don’t have all the things that most people think they need, such as e-mail and all that kind of stuff. We feel we don’t need it and we really can’t afford it.”

What comforts he does enjoy are made possible by a combination of Social Security and his pension from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). “Our support is the Board of Pensions and Social Security,” he says. “I’m very glad for that because, if that were not the case, we’d be pinching.”

3. The Community Nature of the Plan

The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is designed to care for and protect the community of Benefits Plan members as a whole. The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as the plan administrator, is the corporate embodiment of the church’s sense of community in caring for church workers. In this biblically based sense of community, members’ needs are a shared responsibility and are met based on the abilities and resources of all members and churches.

For just as the body is one and has many members, and all the members of the body, though many, are one body.... But God has so arranged the body...that there may be no dissension within the body, but the members may have the same care for one another. If one member suffers, all suffer together with it; if one member is honored, all rejoice together with it. (1 Cor. 12:12, 24–26)

4. Two Hundred, Eighty-Six Years of Support for Servants of the Church

The Presbyterian church has always looked after those who devote their lives to its mission, starting with the Fund for Pious Uses, founded in 1717 with £18 from offerings and donations. This fund supported frontier missionaries and provided for their widows and children.

In 1876, the Ministerial Relief Fund was incorporated. It broadened its scope in 1883 to manage homes for retired ministers. In the early 1900s, the church incorporated a Board of Sustentation to develop a pension-type program. By the early 1950s, the Board’s responsibilities had expanded to include medical benefits for Plan members and their families.

Comprehensive Benefits include the following: Retirement pension; Death benefits; Disability benefits; Healthcare coverage (Hospital, Doctor and other provider care, Home health care, Psychiatric treatment, Substance dependency treatment, Prescription drugs).

Other programs or options include the following: Affiliated Benefits Program; 403(b) Retirement Savings Plan; Long-term Care Insurance; Medicare Supplement; Medical Continuation; Dental Insurance; Optional Death Benefits; Supplemental Disability Benefits.

Financed by employing organization dues and investment fund earnings, the Benefits Plan provides comprehensive protection for ministers of the Word and Sacrament, as well as for eligible lay employees. Learn more about the Board of Pensions at www.pensions.org.

5. Strong Investment Performance Helps Rebuild Our Reserves

The Board’s pension, death, and disability benefits are funded by dues from employing organizations and by earnings from our Balanced Investment Portfolio. The investment objective of this portfolio is to provide a long-term total return that can sustain the promised benefits, while maintaining a stable dues level and adequate contingency reserves.

In the period between 2000 and 2002, negative investment returns eroded our contingency reserves, although the losses were less severe than those of the general market. In 2003, thanks primarily to the strong rebound in U.S. and international stocks, the Balanced Investment Portfolio experienced a total return of 27.5 percent.

While that gain has not fully made up for the losses of 2000 through 2002, it is an important step toward rebuilding our reserves. Our policy of balanced investing for the long term continues to mitigate against expected periodic market turbulence.

6. Pension Plan Remains on a Solid Footing

The pension plan, together with personal savings and Social Security retirement benefits, supports our members in their retirement. Since 1987, the pension benefit for full-time members who earned low salaries is calculated using the churchwide median salary for their employment classification. The resulting subsidized benefit is in keeping with the community nature of the Benefits Plan.

“... Whenever we have an opportunity, let us work for the good of all, and especially for those of the family of faith (Gal. 6:10).

In 2003, the pension plan served more than 16,000 retirees and disabled workers and their dependents. It paid out $245 million in pension benefits, while taking in $69 million in dues. This is not unusual for a mature plan like ours. Each year, our payouts exceed our revenues, and investment earnings make up the difference. At the close of 2003, thanks to the market recovery, our pension plan's assets once again exceeded its actuarial liabilities. The same was true for our death and disability plan.

7. Managing the Challenge of Continuing Cost Increases

Healthcare costs rose roughly 10 percent in 2003. Meanwhile, the dues that fund healthcare benefits are based on member salaries, which rose just 2 to 3 percent, on average. This shortfall, together with the increased use of healthcare services by our covered population, presents an ongoing challenge for the Benefits Plan and its members.

In July of 2003, we had no choice but to raise dues from 16.5 percent of salary to 17.5 percent. Dues increased again to 18.5 percent at the beginning of 2004. We also adjusted our minimum dues requirements, the formula for calculating dues for part-time workers, and the required copays for office visits.

8. Better Management of Chronic Health Problems

As with most medical plans, patients with chronic conditions generate a disproportionate amount of the cost. Given that many of these expenses are preventable, we have increased our focus on the Benefits Plan participants with chronic health problems related to diabetes and heart disease.

The idea is to work proactively with them and their physicians to help them better manage their health, thereby avoiding costly emergency room visits and hospitalizations. An educational outreach program, launched in July of 2003, targets more than 1,500 of these patients. We are also funding pilot programs that encourage both new and experienced ministers to take care of their emotional and physical health.

In 2004, we will pursue other ways to encourage members and their families to live healthy lifestyles. We will promote the values of personal stewardship laid forth in the report to the 200th General Assembly (1988), Life Abundant: Values, Choices, and Health Care. We will also continue to manage our resources responsibly, trying to maximize the benefit from the dollars entrusted to our oversight, while minimizing any negative impact on those who need care the most.

9. A Safety Net for Church Workers and Their Families

The Assistance Program provides an important safety net for church workers and their families whose needs exceed the bounds of the Benefits Plan and personal resources. It also advances our mission to strengthen future parish leadership by providing strategic assistance and support to pastors.

In 2003, the Assistance Program provided more than 700 grants through a combination of shared and emergency assistance grants; income supplements for retirees; housing supplements for retirees; seminary debt assistance.

We are blessed to receive one half of the churchwide Christmas Joy Offering. The Board also receives several hundred thousand dollars a year from people who wish to support church workers through the assistance programs. Unfortunately, the level of need in the church far exceeds the reach of our resources. If we are to meet the challenges of the twenty-first century, we must focus more deliberately on the natural generosity of Presbyterians to support their ministers.

Managing chronic healthcare problems such as high blood pressure is both preventive and cost-effective. The Board of Pensions offers programs that educate members about ways to take better care of themselves.

Staff members at the Board work every day to provide the best services to members of the Benefits Plan.

10. Shared Grant Program Helps Family Cope with Daughter's Cancer

The Reverend Howell Martin's daughter, Laura, was just 19 when she was diagnosed with breast cancer. Because her treatments began in the fall of 2002 and continued into 2003, the family had to meet its medical deductible for both years. Frequent medical visits to Dallas and Houston meant additional (but not covered) expenses. "I've served small churches for most of my ministry and we've been largely a month-to-month kind of a household where we make it from paycheck to paycheck," Rev. Martin explains. "We really didn't have much in our savings to deal with this." When Rev. Martin's Palo Duro Presbytery learned of the situation, it volunteered $500 of assistance. His congregation in Sweetwater, Texas, raised another $1,000. "Then the executive presbyter told me of the Assistance Program that the Board of Pensions had," Rev. Martin recalls. Through the Board's Shared Grant Program, he received a much-needed additional $1,500. "We were really struggling," Rev. Martin says. "When the financial aspect was helped in so many ways, it gave us the freedom to deal with the issues of cancer."

Having undergone a mastectomy and reconstructive surgery, Laura has now been cancer-free for more than a year. She is active in the American Cancer Society and engaged to be married at the end of 2004. "We feel that people all over the United States are a part of our family and our support," Rev. Martin says. "This is a testimony to Presbyterianism at its best."

11. Raising Funds to Help Cultivate Our Future Leadership

It is most often the pastor who attracts people to our churches. So in addition to providing financial assistance to individuals in need, the Assistance Program is exploring programs that will strengthen future church leadership.

A task force of minister directors identified key factors that contribute to pastor retention problems. They include too little support, stress, inadequate management training, and insufficient tools for managing church operations. To help raise the funds that will enable us to address these concerns, we have hired a full-time director of funds development. We invite you to learn how you can lend your support to these initiatives. Please contact Robert Harting at (800) 773-7752 (800-PRESPLAN), ext. 7244. Robert Harting reviews funds development materials with the Reverend Peter Sime, director, Assistance and Retirement Housing.

D. Presbyterian Foundation—Bringing People and Mission Together

“... Future generations will be told about the Lord. [They will] proclaim his [righteousness] to a people yet unborn ...” (Ps. 22:30–31).

The Presbyterian Foundation manages the financial resources of individuals and institutions in support of the PC (U.S.A.)’s mission and the gospel of Jesus Christ. The Foundation is a faith-based organization offering Presbyterians an opportunity to give and to invest that is distinctly different. Unlike commercial organizations, the Foundation’s focus is on mission. Its aim at all times is to make the most of the donors’ financial resources while satisfying their charitable desires. Donors can give directly to the Foundation to benefit foreign and national mission programs, or they can direct their gifts to specific churches, institutions, or other Presbyterian causes.

For more than two centuries, the Foundation has advanced Presbyterian mission and exercised good stewardship by cultivating and managing gifts to the church from individuals and for the endowments of churches, governing bodies, and church-related institutions. During 2003, the Foundation distributed $69.1 million to mission.

There are many ways to give to the benefit of a Presbyterian charitable beneficiary, from outright gifts of cash, stocks, bonds or other property to permanent funds—gifts that distribute income to the charitable beneficiary forever. A wide array of options, such as charitable gift annuities, charitable trusts and pooled income funds, are available for people looking to assist the church while, in many cases, also benefiting themselves or their families.

A skilled network of development officers and support staff with highly trained specialists in gift compliance, investment management, accounting, and gift administration exist to serve, fulfilling donors’ instructions. The Foundation’s subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., provides the resources to assist individuals and institutional clients needing trust and investment services. A Foundation-sponsored family of mutual funds, New Covenant Funds®, offers a variety of investment approaches in an effort to assist individuals and churches in addressing long-term financial goals using socially responsible investment options. Using New Covenant Funds, the First Fruits® program allows shareholders to direct capital gains or dividends to a New Covenant Funds account of a local church, the General Assembly, or the Presbyterian Foundation.

An investor should consider the fund’s investment objectives, risks, and charges and expenses carefully before investing or sending money. ##### 1. Mission Statement

A vital part of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Foundation attracts, cultivates, and manages financial resources of individuals and institutions to serve Christ’s mission.

Distribution to mission

2003	$69.1 million
2002	$78.2 million
2001	$72.7 million
2000	$79.8 million

This table represents the total amount distributed to mission.

2. Seeds Of Generosity Now Bearing Fruit with $6.8 Million Gift

The Presbyterian Foundation received a $6.84 million bequest made by a Pennsylvania grocery heir a half-century ago. George Dunlap Jr., a lifelong Presbyterian and member of Marple Presbyterian Church in Broomall, Pa., near Philadelphia, specified that his gift be used to finance church construction projects. The trust was created in 1953, but the remaining funds didn’t become available until the death last year of the last beneficiary of the family trust Dunlap created. Dunlap’s father, George M. Dunlap Sr., founded a grocery chain that became the American Stores Co., now part of the Albertson's chain. George Dunlap died in 1961. He and his wife, Phoebe, had no children. The generosity and legacy created by George Dunlap will impact churches and congregations around the country.

3. An Emphasis on Wills and Estate Planning

A will is the cornerstone of a well-organized estate plan, but a majority of all Americans die without completing one. Not only does the lack of a will add to the grief of surviving family members; it may also mean charitable desires are unrealized. The Wills Emphasis Program is an ideal way to introduce the concept of estate planning and making a statement of faith. For many churches, an annual effort built around Wills Emphasis Sunday can be an effective stewardship initiative. The Foundation receives its revenue from funds under management and as a beneficiary of endowment funds. We receive no dues or offering, and no fees are received for our development services. In essence, the Foundation is a self-funded organization.

4. An Emphasis on Wills and Estate Planning

A will is the cornerstone of a well-organized estate plan, but a majority of all Americans die without completing one. Not only does the lack of a will add to the grief of surviving family members; it may also mean charitable desires are unrealized. The Wills Emphasis Program is an ideal way to introduce the concept of estate planning and making a statement of faith. For many churches, an annual effort built around Wills Emphasis Sunday can be an effective stewardship initiative.

Creating a Christian will is a personal, powerful, and rewarding experience, and it provides peace of mind that one's wishes will be fulfilled. Take the case of Ruth Evans Stewart, a member of La Mesa Presbyterian Church in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Mrs. Stewart died recently, but the love she felt for her church lives on. Stewart knew she wanted to make her mark on the church she loved and enlisted the aid of a Foundation development officer in creating the Ruth Evans Stewart Memorial Fund to which the proceeds from a portion of her estate—more than $880,000—would be directed. She specified that the fund be used “where the needs are greatest” for her church and new church development for the Presbytery of Santa Fe. Her generosity enabled the creation of a new position for Urban and Native American Ministry at La Mesa Presbyterian Church and a lasting mission for previously underserved communities.

Stories like these span the nation, but there is always more need. The Foundation can assist many more people like Ruth Evans Stewart who wish to support the church and its many missions with a variety of giving vehicles. To find out more about giving options, please contact Pat Ohlmann at (800) 858-6127, ext. 5957. Resources for conducting a Wills Emphasis Program in your congregation are available at www.presbyterianfoundation.org.

1. Building Paths That Connect

“God is able to provide you with every blessing in abundance, so that by always having enough of everything, you may share abundantly in every good work” (2 Cor.9:8).

Most Presbyterians are passionate about church growth, but many are not in growing congregations. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. enables all Presbyterians to become part of the growth of the church. Presbyterian congregations are discovering new and creative ways to reach out in their communities. At times this requires new or remodeled facilities. The growing congregation may not be able to raise all the funds required to expand and reshape their ministry space.

Concerned individuals and expanding churches are not always known to each other. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., builds paths to connect them. These paths may bring together people from urban and suburban congregations, new immigrant fellowships and established congregations, and Presbyterians from different presbyteries and synods. Our investors participate in church growth by purchasing interest-bearing Term Notes from the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program. The funds they provide are used to create low-cost mortgages for Presbyterian churches, governing bodies, and entities that are building, expanding, or renovating their facilities. The PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., creates the paths to deliver mission as well as a return on investment. Every dollar invested in this program builds the church! It is an investment that enables and encourages the church to grow.

2. Who Are These Presbyterian Investors?

Our investors are clergy and church members from all walks of life and financial means. Our investors are churches, large and small. Our investors include presbyteries and synods, investing in support of expanding congregations. Our investors share a desire to see the ministry of Jesus Christ expand and a willingness to help other Presbyterian congregations make Christ more visible in their community. The General Assembly Council and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation are major investors, providing much-needed loan funds. The investments of these two partners are used to lower the financing costs for new church developments.

3. When Our Connectional Paths Cross, Mission Happens

Presbyterians value connections with other Presbyterians. Sometimes those connections are revealed in surprising ways. At a recent meeting of the Presbytery of New Covenant (Southeastern Texas), the PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., presented a rebate check to Westminster Presbyterian of Houston, Texas. The meeting was held at First Presbyterian of Sugar Land, Texas. The theme for this particular meeting was celebrating our theological institutions.

At first, these facts seemed unrelated. Soon the picture came into focus and an unanticipated connection appeared. The hosts of the meeting, First of Sugar Land, had just constructed a new sanctuary with the aid of a low-cost loan through the PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. And, following the theme of theological education, the presbytery had invited the Reverend Dr. David L. Wallace, dean of Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary in Atlanta, Georgia, as a guest speaker.

So what's the common path? Westminster Presbyterian was one of the PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program's earliest loan customers. Many of Westminster members became investors in the Program providing additional funds for loans to other Presbyterian congregations. Some of those funds were used to help expand and renovate Radcliffe Presbyterian Church in Atlanta, Georgia, the home church of Dr. Wallace. When members of the Radcliffe Church, including Dr. Wallace, became investors, a portion of their funds helped build the new sanctuary for the host church, First of Sugar Land. Each church was connected through the generous actions of the other.

4. Low-Cost Loans Make Mission Expansion Possible

Low-cost loans are available to existing congregations, new churches, and related entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for building, expanding, and renovating their facilities. Funds are also available for refinancing existing loans as well as site purchases for future development. Loans from the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program have grown steadily during the past five years. Last year, the total outstanding loan balance grew by 16.2 percent. More than $40.2 million is at work in Presbyterian congregations, and the demand for new loans has never been greater.

With the recent improvement in the economy, demand for our low-cost mortgages continues to grow. According to a recent survey, more than one out of every three Presbyterian congregations (37 percent) is considering a project that would require some financing. We estimate that Presbyterian congregations will seek to borrow more than $300 million in the next twelve months.

5. Investors Can Help Particular Churches Earn Rebates

Investors have the opportunity to support a particular borrower when they invest. Although this selection is a symbolic act of support, which does not affect the risk or interest rate for the investor, it can lower the cost of funds for the borrower. As the amount of investment support rises, the borrower can earn rebates based on the interest paid on their loan—from a quarter-percent up to a full 1 percent. More and more investors are opting to support specific borrowers. Every year more presbyteries and synods put a portion of their investment portfolio with the PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. These investments directly benefit borrowing congregations in their area.

Our rebates hit another record in 2003. Through the support of our investors, the Program returned more than $142,000 in interest paid by borrowers. That is $142,000 sent back into the mission and ministry of congregations rather than to pay interest.

We encourage you to let the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., help you put a portion of your investment portfolio on a mission of church growth. Investment information including an Offering Circular may be obtained by calling the Program's office at (800) 903-7457 or by visiting our Web site at www.pcusa.org/pilp.

7. Moving Existing Savings and Investments onto a Mission Path

Most of our investors are strong supporters of the mission and ministry of their own congregations and the whole church. The PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., is not seeking gifts—but investments. We hope that Presbyterians will include us in their total investment strategy. Many investors simply move money, currently invested in certificates of deposit, savings, and money market accounts, into Term Notes. Others use the Term Notes as part of their IRA investment portfolio. At the end of the investment term chosen, participants may reinvest the money for another term or withdraw their funds. In seven short years, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. has connected more than 1,800 investors to congregations expanding facilities for mission and ministry. By the end of 2003, investments in the Program reached $40.8 million.

8. Low-Cost Loans Make Mission Expansion Possible

Low-cost loans are available to existing congregations, new churches, and related entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for building, expanding, and renovating their facilities. Funds are also available for refinancing existing loans as well as site purchases for future development. Loans from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) We estimate that Presbyterian congregations will seek to borrow more than $300 million in the next twelve months.

9. PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., Expands Lending Capacity Through Banking Partners

Your congregation may need a large loan to complete a particular project. To assist us in responding to large loan requests, we have built partnerships with established banks and savings and loan institutions. With our largest loans, we invite outside financial partners to participate in funding the mortgage. By borrowing through the Program, your church will avoid most of the up-front fees and points typically charged on large bank loans. These partnerships allow financial institutions to participate in loans that build the community, while having the loan underwritten and serviced by an organization with relationships and expertise in church lending. Through these win-win participations, the PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., has obtained more than $8 million in participation funds to help congregations grow.

10. Coordinated Loan Services of the General Assembly

The 211th General Assembly (1999) asked the PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., to create a seamless loan program for congregations and governing bodies. Now, the loan services of the General Assembly's Church Loan Program and the Presbyterian Church (USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. are streamlined into a coordinated loan service.<sup>1</sup>

Presbyterians can support the borrowing needs of our congregations through gifts and investments. The endowment loan funds of the Church Loan Program bring more than $170 million to support church growth. Today $101 million is disbursed and benefiting congregations. When combined with the support of investors in the PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., the dollars at work in low-cost loans tops $142 million. That's an increase in funds supporting growing churches of 36 percent in five years. The Coordinated Loan Program makes low-interest loans (up to $50,000) for special projects: improving accessibility to church buildings (both physical and auditory accessibility), removing or abating asbestos and lead paint, or improvements in energy conservation and technology. When your congregation needs to borrow, you have a single source ready to handle your needs—one number to call, one application, and one loan review process. The coordinated loan team draws available funds from the Church Loan Program's endowment funds and the Investment and Loan Program's investor funds to create the best package for each congregation.

Endnote

1. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., coordinates the loan services of the Church Loan Program for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation. The endowment funds used by the Church Loan Program are held by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation.

1. Commissioners*Election of Commissioners

a. Each presbytery shall elect commissioners to the General Assembly in accordance with Book of Order, G-13.0102. The number of commissioners attending General Assembly will be based on the number of active members, including resident clergy members of presbytery. The figures for active members will be taken from the information recorded in Minutes of the General Assembly, Part II, Statistics of the year in which per capita apportionment is assessed for the year in which General Assembly meets. Presbyteries shall elect commissioners in sufficient time to permit the list of commissioners to be delivered to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 120 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are commissioned. Ministers and elders considered for election as commissioners must be able to be in attendance for the duration of the General Assembly. Commissioners shall be entitled to speak under the rules, and to vote and present motions in meetings of the General Assembly and of assembly committees to which they are assigned. Commissioners shall be reimbursed for approved expenses. (See Standing Rule D.4.)

In the case of a newly created presbytery, the presbytery shall be entitled to elect commissioners to the General Assembly if the qualifying enrollment of ministers and congregations in that presbytery shall have been completed by December 31 of the year preceding the assembly meeting (see Book of Order, G-13.0102).

Commissioners with Disabilities

b. A commissioner certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance shall be entitled to designate a person to function as an assistant without vote during all proceedings of the General Assembly, including executive sessions and committee meetings, in order that the commissioner may fully participate in those proceedings. The expenses of the assistant shall be paid for by the General Assembly on the same basis as expenses of commissioners. (See Standing Rule D.4.)

c. Presbyteries may elect alternates in number up to, but not exceeding, the number of commissioners to which the presbytery may be entitled. Such alternates shall be seated with other visitors to the assembly. When a principal commissioner is replaced by an alternate prior to or during the course of an assembly session, whether for the remainder of the session or for a period of time during the session, the alternate shall assume that assembly committee position and seat assignment. The Office of the General Assembly shall reimburse that person for cost of meals (as specified in the per diem expenses for the particular session of the assembly to which the person is commissioned) during the period in which the alternate is actually seated as a commissioner. The total of the payments to the two persons shall not be larger than payment to a single commissioner attending the full assembly. The Office of the General Assembly shall reimburse either the original commissioner or the alternate who replaced the original commissioner for the costs of transportation and other approved expenses, but not both. It shall be the responsibility of the two individuals, with the assistance of the presbytery that elected them, to determine an appropriate division of the costs, whether reimbursement was in cash or a prepaid ticket was provided. Both persons shall be listed in the Journal as commissioners, with an indication of the period during which they served.

d. Upon request, the Stated Clerk shall make available the list of participants registered for a session of the General Assembly to entities of the General Assembly, governing bodies of the denomination, educational institutions, ministers of the Word and Sacrament, elders, and independent organizations composed primarily of members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). A fee will be charged for lists or mailing labels to cover the costs incurred for printing, postage, and handling.

2. Advisory Delegates

Definition

a. Advisory delegates are persons who are active members in one of the constituent churches or governing bodies of the General Assembly (or, in the case of ecumenical advisory delegates, of a denomination of Christians designated by the General Assembly) who are selected to attend the meeting of the General Assembly in an advisory role so that the assembly may be assured of hearing and taking cognizance of their special viewpoints. There shall be four categories of advisory delegates: Youth, Theological Student, Missionary, and Ecumenical. The expenses of each advisory delegate shall be paid by the General Assembly (see Standing Rule D.4.) on the same basis as the expenses of commissioners (see Standing Rule A.2.e. for exception).

Voting Privileges

b. Advisory delegates shall be assigned to assembly committees as voting members and shall have the privilege of the floor of the General Assembly without vote. Only voting members shall have the privilege of proposing or seconding a motion. When certain issues come before a plenary session of the General Assembly, the advisory delegates may be polled prior to the vote of commissioners to determine their advice.

Youth Advisory

c. Each presbytery shall appoint an active member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), who shall be between the ages of seventeen and twenty-three years on the date the General Assembly convenes, to be a youth advisory delegate.

Each presbytery will request each candidate for youth advisory delegate to submit an application/questionnaire and be interviewed by an appropriate presbytery committee in order to ensure the selection of the best qualified person to serve as youth advisory delegate. The youth ministries staff shall prepare and distribute to each presbytery a sample/suggested questionnaire for use in reviewing candidates for election as youth advisory delegates.

Theological Student Advisory

d. There shall be a delegation of theological student advisory delegates each year: two from each of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); one from each of the theological institutions in a covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and one each from three selected other theological seminaries. The selection process for these delegates is as follows:

(1) Each theological institution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall nominate three students who, at the time of the General Assembly, will have at least one year of study remaining in their degree program. Two of these students shall be designated by the institution as delegates and the other student shall be designated as the alternate. Such a student must be either an inquirer or a candidate in preparation for ministry under care of a presbytery, or a student nominated by the Presbyterian School of Christian Education. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, who shall transmit the names of the two students to be delegates to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed.

(2) Each theological institution in covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall nominate two students who, at the time of the General Assembly, will have at least one year of study remaining in their degree program. One of these students shall be designated by the institution as the delegate and the other student as the alternate. Such a student must be either an inquirer or a candidate in preparation for ministry under care of a presbytery. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, who shall transmit the name of the delegate to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed.

(3) All non-Presbyterian theological school represented by corresponding members on the Committee on Theological Education and one additional non-Presbyterian theological seminary shall be asked to nominate one theological student advisory delegate and one alternate. The additional non-Presbyterian seminary shall be chosen on a rotating basis, descending alphabetically, from those that have at least twelve Presbyterian enrollees (either inquirers or candidates under the care of a presbytery) as of October 1 in the year preceding the assembly.

Nominated students shall have at least one more year of study following the assembly remaining in their degree program. The Stated Clerk shall forward the name of the nominated students to the presbyteries of jurisdiction for election and confirmation.

Missionary Advisory
Delegates

e. There shall be eight missionary advisory delegates who shall be chosen by the Worldwide Ministries Division from persons who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and mission personnel assigned by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in another country in which this church is engaged in mission. To the degree possible, the selection shall provide a global geographical representation with no two delegates representing the same country or geographical area and rotating the geographical representation. The division shall notify the Stated Clerk at the time these persons are named. The expenses to the General Assembly of each missionary advisory delegate shall include transportation only from the point of entry or domicile of the delegate in the United States and return.

Ecumenical

f. There shall be up to fifteen ecumenical advisory delegates. Ten of these delegates shall be from churches outside of the United States. No more than five shall be from member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. Ecumenical advisory delegates shall be selected by the highest ecclesiastical authorities of their churches, in response to the invitation of a previous General Assembly. The assembly shall extend such invitations at the recommendation of the General Assembly Council upon nomination by the Committee on Ecumenical Relations (see Standing Rule E.8.).

3. Corresponding Members

The following persons shall be corresponding members: Moderators of earlier General Assemblies; the Stated Clerk, Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks, and other members of the staff of the Office of the General Assembly as designated by the Stated Clerk; the members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly; the members of the GAC Executive Committee and staff of the General Assembly Council, and of the divisions and related entities designated by the council; all members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution; the executives of synods; one person designated by each entity reporting directly to the General Assembly, including permanent, special, and advisory committees (additional persons may be designated by such bodies if authorized by the Moderator of the preceding General Assembly in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly); and the presidents (or their designee) of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and seminaries related by covenant agreement.

Corresponding members shall be entitled to speak, under the rules, in meetings of the General Assembly and of assembly committees on matters related to the work of the body represented, but they may neither vote nor present motions.

4. Other Participants*Special Guests

a. The assembly, out of honor, courtesy, recognition, and the need for information and resource material, may recognize other persons as guests or observers. As such, they may be invited by the General Assembly to speak to the assembly for the purpose of conveying greetings or messages, or bringing enlightenment or information germane to the decision-making process. An assembly committee may extend a similar invitation at its own meeting.

Ecumenical Representatives

b. Ecumenical representatives are individuals sent at the initiative of another church to be the official representative of that church. The Stated Clerk shall announce to member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches the date and place of the next meeting of the General Assembly. When officially certified through appropriate ecclesiastical channels at least forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, these persons shall be welcomed as guests of the General Assembly and introduced to the governing body through the report of the assembly committee addressing ecumenism. The assembly shall assume the expense and housing of such guests on the same basis as the expense of commissioners, but shall not reimburse any travel expenses to the assembly site.

Resource Persons

c. The assembly may welcome persons invited by the General Assembly Council or another entity of the General Assembly for the purpose of establishing or affirming particular ecumenical, mission, or program relationships, or assisting the entity in the presentation of particular items of business. Any expense reimbursement shall be the responsibility of the inviting entity.

Presbytery Staff

d. The presbytery's executive staff person (or designee) and the presbytery's stated clerk shall be supplied with all reports and materials related to the General Assembly, but shall not be entitled to speak in plenary meetings or in meetings of assembly committees unless called upon by a moderator to provide information. (See also Standing Rule A.5.)

Ecumenical Visitors

e. Ecumenical visitors are individuals attending a session of the General Assembly at their own initiative. These persons are welcomed to the assembly as unofficial visitors. The assembly shall assume no expenses for these ecumenical visitors.

5. Registration and Seating

The Stated Clerk shall enroll commissioners and delegates on the opening day of the General Assembly and at such other times as may be necessary. The Stated Clerk shall determine any question that may arise regarding registration of commissioners and delegates. Any complaints regarding such decision shall be received by the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures. The Stated Clerk shall also enroll assistants to commissioners who have been certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance.

The Stated Clerk shall assign each commissioner, advisory delegate, and corresponding member to a seat in advance of the meeting. They shall occupy the assigned seats during each meeting of the General Assembly at which business may be transacted. An assistant to commissioner who has been certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance shall be assigned a seat adjacent to the commissioner. The Stated Clerk shall assign seats to commissioners and delegates in a manner that shall assure that the most favorable seats, with regard to the platform, will be assigned to delegations from the various presbyteries in turn through an annual rotation of space assignments.

Ecumenical representatives (see Standing Rule A.4.b.) shall be seated on the floor of the assembly in a section clearly designated for such guests.

The presbytery's executive staff person (or designee) and the presbytery's stated clerk shall be provided assigned seating in proximity to the area that corresponding members are seated (see Standing Rule A.4.d.).

The only persons who shall be permitted access to the commissioner and advisory delegate seating area during plenary sessions are commissioners, advisory delegates, assistants enrolled by the Stated Clerk to assist commissioners having a disability warranting assistance, the Stated Clerk,

STANDING RULES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks and other staff and assembly assistants who are assigned responsibilities that require access to this area, including assisting at the floor microphones, delivery of official messages to commissioner and advisory delegates, and locating commissioners who are needed on the platform. The Stated Clerk will provide special credentials for the particular staff and assembly assistants who are authorized to enter the commissioner/advisory delegate seating area.

Use of cellular telephones is prohibited during meetings of the General Assembly and meetings of the assembly committees. During these meetings, pagers may be used only in the silent mode.

Emergency messages will be relayed to a commissioner or advisory delegate during plenary meetings by way of a written message delivered by one of the Stated Clerk's designated staff or assembly assistants.

1. Docket

The Stated Clerk shall submit to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly a tentative docket. After making any necessary adjustments, this committee shall present a proposed docket to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral so that it may recommend the docket to the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business.

The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures may, at any time, recommend limits on debates or changes in the docket to facilitate the handling of business. The reports of the committee shall take precedence over any other business, including orders of the day.

When the Head of Communion of a member church of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the World Council of Churches, or the National Council of Churches is in attendance at a session of the General Assembly as an ecumenical advisory delegate or as an ecumenical representative, and proper notice is provided, the assembly shall provide up to five minutes of docket time to each such Head of Communion to present a greeting to the assembly. The placing of this greeting on the docket will be assigned by the Stated Clerk.

At the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business following the meetings of assembly committees, the assembly shall hear a report on the per capita budget from the committee that has reviewed that budget. On the final day of the assembly, an amended per capita budget that incorporates the financial implications of actions taken by the assembly shall be presented to the assembly for adoption.

2. Quorum

At the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business, the Stated Clerk shall recommend to the General Assembly that the roll call of commissioners be established by registration. Alternately, the Stated Clerk may call the roll of commissioners and advisory delegates by calling the names of absentees as they appear on the roll. After any needed corrections have been made, the Stated Clerk shall announce whether or not a quorum is present (see Book of Order, G-13.0105). When commissioners and advisory delegates subsequently register, they shall be seated by the General Assembly. A commissioner who has not registered may not be seated and may not vote.

3. Amending or Suspending the Standing Rules

Recommending Amendments to the Standing Rules

a. In consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall recommend to the next session of the General Assembly any changes in the standing rules of the General Assembly deemed necessary. The Stated Clerk shall consult with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly before proposing to the General Assembly any amendment to the standing rules.

Amending the Standing Rules

b. The Standing Rules of the General Assembly may be amended by a two-thirds vote of the total enrollment of the commissioners. A motion to amend the rules is debatable.

Suspending the Standing Rules

c. A motion to suspend the rules is not debatable and shall require a two-thirds vote of the total enrollment of the commissioners.

4. Debating and Voting

Debate Limits

a. In debate on any pending matter, no commissioner or delegate shall be allowed to speak more than three minutes until all other commissioners or delegates who desire to speak on the pending matter have been heard.

Executive Session

b. Any person permitted to remain during any executive session is expected to agree to be bound by the confidentiality required of commissioners.

Methods of Voting

c. The General Assembly shall ordinarily decide questions by electronic voting. The Moderator may also call for unanimous consent by voice vote or show of hands. Assembly committees may recommend the use of a consent agenda for portions of their reports. In all cases, the right of any commissioner to call for one of the other forms of voting or to remove any item from the consent agenda shall be preserved.

5. Assembly Business, Communications, and Resource Material

Papers to Be Considered

a. The General Assembly shall consider only those papers delivered to the Stated Clerk in compliance with Standing Rule B.5. and any other papers whatsoever that have been delivered to the Stated Clerk. Ordinarily, such papers shall have been forwarded to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly.

All papers intended for consideration by the General Assembly that are forwarded to the Stated Clerk and postmarked less than sixty days, but no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be reviewed by the Stated Clerk, who shall determine whether or not to refer them to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. The Stated Clerk shall report to the committee regarding those papers not referred.

Reports of Entities,
Commissions, and Committees

b. All reports from entities, commissions, and committees of the General Assembly shall be delivered to the Stated Clerk on or before 120 days prior to the convening of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall publish these reports (print or electronic) and distribute them so that they shall reach the commissioners thirty days before the convening of the General Assembly.

All reports shall be limited to ten thousand words except the report of the General Assembly Council, the length of which shall be determined by the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council. A request for an exception to the length of a report shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk no later than forty-five days prior to the deadline for the submission of the report and shall include the anticipated length of the report. The Stated Clerk may assess a fee of the entity or committee whose report exceeds ten thousand words for the costs incurred in printing and distributing the excess pages. Payment of the fee shall be submitted to the treasurer of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation. If the Stated Clerk and the representatives of any body are unable to agree, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall determine the length of the report.

An entity, commission, or committee submitting a report with a recommendation that affects the work or budget of another entity(ies) shall submit evidence that a consultation has been held with the affected entity(ies).

Committees, agencies, or corporations presenting reports shall provide the appropriate background information necessary to interpret or understand the recommendations or responses to referrals to the members of the General Assembly committees to which the business is referred. Any and all documents or publications referred to in these reports which require approval by the assembly for publication and distribution to the church, including but not limited to curriculum, study papers/guides, position papers, and program resources, shall be made available to commissioners at the time the reports are published.

c. Overtures are items of business that must have been approved by a presbytery or a synod and shall request the General Assembly to take a particular action, or approve or endorse a particular statement or resolution. (See Book of Order, G-11.0103t(3).)

Writing Overtures

(1) The stated clerk of a presbytery or synod considering an overture to the General Assembly shall:

- Examine the most recently published Minutes of the General Assembly to determine if a similar overture has already been passed.
- Consult with the Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to determine whether the desired action has been voted by any previous General Assembly.
- Consult with the Office of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to determine whether a similar overture has already been proposed in order that the presbytery or synod may concur with the existing overture.
- Draft the overture in the following form:

The Presbytery of _____ overtures the General Assembly of the PC(USA) to [state the specific action the General Assembly is asked to take].

To this shall be appended a rationale, stating the reasons for submitting the overture.

Submitting of Overtures

(2) All overtures intended for consideration by the General Assembly shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly. Overtures proposing an amendment to the Constitution or requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order (see Book of Order, G-18.0301a and G-13.0112c) must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, and shall be promptly referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (see Book of Order, G-13.0112d and G-18.0300). Overtures not received within the designated time limits shall not be considered, but shall be returned to the originating governing body for reconsideration.

Presbyteries or synods submitting overtures with a recommendation(s) that affects the work or budget of a General Assembly entity(ies) shall submit evidence that the affected entity(ies) has (have) been consulted. If such evidence is not submitted, the Stated Clerk shall recommend that the overture be received and referred to a future session of the General Assembly so that consultation may take place.

All overtures that have financial implications for current or future years' budgets must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than 60 days prior to the convening of the General Assembly. Overtures with financial implications not received within the designated time limit shall not be considered, but shall be returned to the originating governing body.

In the event that the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly receives an overture similar to one already proposed (excluding the rationale), she or he shall inquire of the presbytery or synod in question whether it would be willing to concur with that existing overture or desires to withdraw the overture. A presbytery or synod concurring with an overture may submit additional rationale for its action, provided that it does not duplicate the rationale provided by the overturing body. The concurrence and any additional rationale will be printed with the original overture in the Reports to the General Assembly.

Distributing Overtures

(3) Overtures that do not propose constitutional amendment or interpretation, and that are postmarked at least sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be published (print or electronic) in the reports distributed by the Stated Clerk. Overtures received in the same manner, postmarked no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be distributed to the commissioners before the convening of the General Assembly.

Overture Advocate

(4) Each presbytery or synod that submits an overture shall notify the Stated Clerk of the name of a commissioner or some other person in attendance at the General Assembly who has been designated as the advocate for the overture. The overture advocate shall be available to provide information on the background and intent of the overture to any assembly committee to which the overture may be referred. (See Standing Rule C.4.d.)

In the event that the assembly refers an overture to a General Assembly entity for further consideration (and not simply for implementation), the presbytery or synod submitting the overture shall be invited by the Stated Clerk to designate an overture advocate for the assembly meeting at which the entity's response to the overture is presented. The overture advocate shall be available to provide information on the background and intent of the overture to any assembly committee to which the overture may be referred. (See Standing Rule C.4.d.)

Referring Overtures to Committees

(5) The Stated Clerk shall present such items of business to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, along with a recommendation for their referral. In the event that the presbytery or synod disagrees with the referral recommendation, this procedure shall be followed: The presbytery or synod shall be entitled to submit a written statement regarding the background and intent of the overture at the time the overture is initially being considered for referral by the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. If, after that committee makes its recommendation, the presbytery or synod still disagrees with the referral recommendation, the presbytery or synod shall notify the Stated Clerk, in writing, of its disagreement. The overture advocate will then be entitled to speak to the background and intent of the overture at a special meeting of the Assembly Committee on Business Referral that shall be held no more than twenty-four (24) hours prior to the convening of the assembly.

Communications and Resource Material

d. Communications and resource material provide comment or advice on business already under consideration by the assembly and shall neither contain nor constitute business to be considered by the assembly. Communications may be directed to the General Assembly

(1) by entities of the General Assembly that desire to comment on a single item of business coming before the General Assembly from any source other than their own entity, but which do not introduce new business,

(2) by organizations in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds membership, and

(3) by other denominations in correspondence with the General Assembly.

All communications intended for consideration by the General Assembly shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly.

Advice and counsel memoranda are resources prepared by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns for the purpose of providing information about existing policy, current work on specific topics, recent developments, and other factors useful to commissioners as they consider issues before the assembly.

Resource material (except for previously published books), including advice and counsel memoranda from advocacy and advisory committees (see above), shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred. This material shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the assembly meeting, who shall then publish (print or electronic) and distribute the material to all commissioners prior to the assembly.

Resource material (except for previously published books or interpretive brochures), including advice and counsel memoranda, that provides background or advice on items of new business, including commissioners' resolutions, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred. This material shall be submitted to the assembly committee leadership team prior to presentation to the assembly committee to which the business has been referred (see Standing Rule C.4.c.). A hard copy of this resource material, accompanied by a disk copy, shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall consider any request that is made to distribute this resource material to the full assembly in accordance with Standing Rule C.6.d.

Commissioners' Resolutions

e. Any two commissioners may propose an item of new business, known as a commissioners' resolution, for assembly consideration by delivering it in writing to the Stated Clerk or the Stated Clerk's designee. Commissioners' resolutions shall not contain business that requires an amendment to or interpretation of the Constitution (see Book of Order, G-18.0301(a)). No commissioner may sign more than two resolutions.

The Stated Clerk shall determine and announce at the first meeting at which business is conducted the deadline for receipt of commissioners' resolutions. The deadline shall not be earlier than twenty-four hours after the assembly has convened.

In the preparation of a resolution, commissioners are urged to be aware of existing General Assembly policies relevant to their proposal and, where appropriate, to make reference to these policies. The Stated Clerk shall not transmit as new business any resolution that deals with matters of business already before the General Assembly, nor transmit any resolution whose purpose can be achieved by the regular process of amendment and debate.

Should the commissioners' resolution deal with substantially the same issue considered by one of the two previous sessions of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall recommend that the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures take one of the following actions on the commissioners' resolutions: "refer to a subsequent assembly," "decline for consideration," or "take no action." If the proposed resolution does deal with new business, the Stated Clerk shall transmit it to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures with a recommendation for its referral. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures may decline to refer proposed items of new business if it decides that the matters proposed are already before the assembly or that the purpose of the proposals can be reached by the process of amendment and debate. Proposed items of business not referred, whether declined by the Stated Clerk or the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, shall be identified in the first report of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures distributed to commissioners after the period docketed for committee meetings, with a brief description of the content and a statement of the reasons for declining the proposed business. Twenty-five percent of commissioners present and voting is required to overturn action of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures to decline, take no action, or refer a commissioners' resolution to a subsequent assembly. If a commissioners' resolution affects a substantial change in an existing social witness policy, the Stated Clerk should recommend to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures that it be referred to the next General Assembly.

Synod and Entity Minutes

f. Entities and synods required to submit minutes for review by the General Assembly shall submit such minutes on a calendar year basis so as to present minutes of all meetings for the calendar year (from January 1 through December 31) preceding the year in which is held the session of the General Assembly to which such minutes are submitted. The minutes shall contain the attestation that they have been approved by the entity or synod submitting them in the manner regularly in use within that body.

Minutes of General Assembly entities will be reviewed in accordance with the “Guidelines for Preparation of Minutes of Agencies” as printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Minutes of the synods will be reviewed in accordance with “Guidelines for Reviewing Synod Records” as printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. In addition, the provisions of Book of Order, G-9.0409, shall apply, including whether:

- (1) The proceedings have been correctly recorded;
- (2) The proceedings have been regular and in accordance with the Constitution;
- (3) The proceedings have been prudent and equitable;
- (4) The proceedings have been faithful to the mission of the whole church;
- (5) The lawful injunctions of the General Assembly have been obeyed. (Book of Order, G-9.0409)

Responses of

g. Each presbytery shall act upon all papers sent to the presbytery to be voted upon in ample time to permit the stated clerk of the presbytery to mail the results to the Stated Clerk so that they are received no later than two weeks before the convening of the General Assembly. The response of the presbytery shall be mailed to the Stated Clerk by certified mail.

6. Referring Business

Items of business to be considered by the General Assembly shall be referred in one of the following ways: (1) for consideration by an assembly committee and recommendation for action by the General Assembly; (2) for consideration and action by an assembly committee with a report of the action to the General Assembly; (3) for consideration by the General Assembly through its inclusion in a consent agenda; (4) for consideration by the General Assembly in a plenary business session. Each item of business referred to a committee shall ordinarily be considered by only one assembly committee, but in no case should there be more than one committee making a recommendation on an item of business. Business of a related nature shall be assigned to a single committee insofar as possible.

The Stated Clerk shall submit to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (see Standing Rule E.2.d.(11)) a recommendation for the referral of all items of business coming before the General Assembly. After making any necessary changes, this committee shall present the prepared referrals to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral so that it may recommend referrals to the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business. Ordinarily, this committee shall recommend referrals to the General Assembly for its action. When the General Assembly is not scheduled to meet in time to act on its recommendation, the committee may refer business. Such referrals shall be reported to the General Assembly at its next business meeting.

In view of the relative ease in which studies and programs may be approved, commissioners and other assembly committee members are cautioned to be mindful of the effort required of staff and elected members to carry out the General Assembly’s instructions.

When the General Assembly is in plenary session, questions that touch upon constitutional matters, including rulings on questions of order involving constitutional matters requested by the Moderator, shall be handled in accordance with Book of Order, G-13.0112e. These questions shall be referred in writing by the Moderator to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall consider each matter referred and make recommendations directly to the General Assembly through the Moderator.

7. Reports of Assembly Committees*Distribution

a. Copies of the reports of assembly committees (print or electronic) shall ordinarily be distributed to commissioners no later than the close of the meeting prior to the one at which they are to be considered. The Stated Clerk shall arrange for the reproduction and distribution of reports.

Procedures

b. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in consultation with the Stated Clerk (see Standing Rules B.1. and E.2.d.(10)), shall docket adequate time for the reports of committees, including ample time for debate and action. If a report requires more time than docketed, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures (see Standing Rule C.6.a.) shall consult with the committee for additional time to complete consideration of the report.

Committee moderators should move the adoption of recommendations with minimum comment, and material in the commissioners' printed resources shall not be read.

The financial effect of each recommendation on budgets previously adopted or under consideration shall be clearly presented at the time that the recommendation is considered by the assembly.

Minority Reports

c. In order to be considered by the assembly, a minority report shall not only set aside the majority report but also be able to stand as a full and complete substitution for the majority report recommendations. A minority report shall be moved as a substitute only after the majority report has first been moved. When this happens, the assembly shall first consider (and may amend) the majority report. When consideration of the majority report is completed, the assembly may then consider (and may amend) the minority report. Further efforts to perfect each report shall be held to a minimum in order that the assembly can concentrate instead on the issue of whether to make the proposed substitution.

The moderator of the committee, or another member of the committee, shall present reasons supporting the committee's recommendation. They may be presented before any minority report is moved or presented during the narrative report of the committee, or presented during debate on the question of whether or not the substitution shall become the main motion. (See also Standing Rule C.5.d.)

8. Creating Commissions or Special Committees*Authorizing and Appointing

a. Unless otherwise specified in the assembly's action, any body or group established by the General Assembly to carry out decisions of the assembly, or instructed to report to the assembly, or make recommendations to the assembly, or both, shall be known as a commission or special committee (see Book of Order, G-9.0500). The purposes of a special committee must be ones that cannot be undertaken by the work of an existing corporation or entity under its assigned responsibilities. Due to the financial and staffing implications, before authorizing the establishment of a special committee, the assembly shall hear a report from the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, which shall have consulted with the most closely related entity and a member designated from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, as to whether the work to be assigned to the special committee could more effectively and economically be assigned to that entity.

The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall be notified by any assembly committee whenever there is discussion about the creation of a special committee. In discussing the possible creation of a special committee, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall hear from related corporation or entity representatives as well as representatives from the assembly committee considering the proposal. Financial implications of special committees should accompany any recommendation for action by the assembly. The written comment of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures must be incorporated as background in the report of the assembly committee containing a recommendation to create a special committee.

Any commission or special committee authorized by the General Assembly, unless otherwise designated, shall be appointed by the Moderator. The Moderator is also authorized to fill by appointment any vacancies that may occur in any of such commissions or committees. No minister, elder, or other person shall be appointed to serve on more than one such commission or committee except by consent of the General Assembly.

Time Limit

b. Special committees shall complete their work within two years unless the General Assembly that authorized its establishment specifies a different period. Special committees shall submit a written report to the General Assembly that shall include a recommendation to extend its existence (if beyond the period authorized), or, at the conclusion of its work, a recommendation for dismissal. Special committees shall also publish interim reports, no less than annually, by electronic or print means. Such interim reports shall indicate the progress made by the special committee on its assigned tasks and offer a timeline and process for completing its work. When a special committee requests an extension of its existence, the request shall be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. After consultation with the most closely related assembly entity, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly will recommend to the assembly whether the project shall be reassigned to the entity, remain with the special committee, or be terminated. Any extension to its existence shall require a two-thirds vote of the commissioners. (See also Standing Rule E.9.)

c. The General Assembly has authority to undertake special administrative review of synods (Book of Order, G-13.0103k). There are three ways the General Assembly could be requested to consider such review:

(1) by an overture from a presbytery or synod (G-11.0103t(3); G-12.0102o(2); Standing Rule B.5.c.);

(2) by request from one of the General Assembly entities (Standing Rule B.5.a.–b.); or

(3) By a commissioners' resolution (Standing Rule B.5.e). If such overture, request, or resolution is acted on favorably by the General Assembly, the General Assembly could undertake Special Administrative Review (G-9.0408–.0410) through commission or special committee as provided for in Standing Rule B.8 and G-9.0501–.0503.]

Special administrative review of an alleged synod irregularity or delinquency may occur when a written request for such review is received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly from another synod or a presbytery within the synod of the alleged irregularity or delinquency. If the request relates to an alleged delinquency, the request can only be filed with the Stated Clerk after the failure or refusal of the synod to cure the alleged delinquency at its next meeting, having been requested to do so in writing prior to the meeting. When the request for special administrative review is received, the Stated Clerk shall convene a meeting of the Moderator of the General Assembly, the moderator of the General Assembly Council, and the moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. If the request is in order and all the moderators agree that for the good of the church the special administrative review needs to be undertaken before the next meeting of the General Assembly (when the request could be considered by the whole General Assembly), the Moderator of the General Assembly shall appoint a special committee (Standing Rule B.8.) to conduct a special administrative review in accordance with G-9.0408–.0410 and report its findings and recommendations to the next General Assembly.

9. Nominating from the Floor

a. When any nomination for service on a General Assembly committee, council, or board comes from the floor of the assembly, the commissioner making the nomination will provide the General Assembly Nominating Committee, at least twenty-four hours in advance of the nomination being made from the floor, with pertinent information about the person whose name is being presented, as well as the name of the particular person nominated by the nominating committee whose nomination is being challenged. Such information shall be provided on the "Nomination by Commissioner Form" provided for use at the assembly and available from the Stated Clerk.

b. In the event that there are nominations from the floor, the election shall proceed as follows:

(1) The General Assembly will deal with one challenged position at a time.

(2) The name of the General Assembly Nominating Committee's nominee shall be placed in nomination by its moderator. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall call upon the commissioner who is placing a nomination from the floor to put that name in nomination.

(3) Once the names are placed in nomination, the order of speaking shall be first, the commissioner or a designee speaking on behalf of the floor nominee and second, the General Assembly Nominating Committee member or a designee speaking to its nominee. Both the commissioner (or designee) and the General Assembly Nominating Committee member (or designee) shall speak from the platform. Such speech shall not exceed three minutes in length. There shall be no other speeches seconding the nomination of any nominee.

(4) Without further discussion or debate, the General Assembly will move to vote.

10. Announcements and Nonofficial Printed Materials

Only announcements connected directly with the business of the General Assembly shall be read from the platform and all notices shall be submitted either to the Moderator or the Stated Clerk for approval. Telegrams and special letters shall be reported to the General Assembly only at times to be designated by the Moderator. Printed materials that are not official business before the General Assembly may be distributed at authorized booths in the General Assembly Exhibit Hall. Other distribution is permitted in the mailboxes provided for commissioners and advisory delegates, and also can be handed out twenty-five feet or more from entrances to the building in which the General Assembly meets. (See Standing Rule C.6.d. regarding the authorization of distribution of materials to commissioners by the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.)

11. Distributing Study Documents

Whenever the General Assembly itself shall require the distribution of a document for study (whether the proposal originates through the recommendation of an entity, the presentation of an overture or resolution, or arises during the conduct of the assembly's business) with a request for a response (whether the response is sought from individuals, congregations, governing bodies, organizations of any kind, or any combination of these), the study document shall be accompanied by resource materials, bibliography, and aids as set forth in the document "Forming Social Policy," Section 5, printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Along with a response instrument and the resource materials, bibliography, and aids, the document shall be distributed on a schedule that provides for the study guide and all accompanying material to be in the possession of the proposed respondents for a minimum of twelve months before the due date of the response. The entity to be responsible for receiving the responses and reporting to the General Assembly the summary of the responses shall be identified in the material. The report on the responses to the study may be presented no earlier than to the General Assembly that convenes in the second year after the session of the General Assembly that approves the study.

12. Forming Social Policy

The entities of the General Assembly, including its committees, commissions, and special committees, shall be governed by the document, "Forming Social Policy" printed in the Manual of the General Assembly, when that entity is considering making a social witness policy.

13. Peaceful Demonstrations

Peaceful demonstrations shall be allowed twenty-five or more feet outside of the entrances to the building in which General Assembly meets. Spontaneous or planned demonstrations by individuals or groups are prohibited inside the building where the General Assembly meets. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall declare all demonstrations that occur in plenary session out of order and, if demonstrators fail to immediately disband and desist, may recess the General Assembly to a fixed time and place. This rule does not prohibit the spontaneous or planned celebration of an action of the General Assembly or of any event in the life of the Church.

1. Assembly Committee Structure

The Stated Clerk shall propose the number and designation of assembly committees to the General Assembly. No later than thirty days before the convening of the assembly, commissioners shall receive the number and designation of committees (see Standing Rule C.2.a.). The Stated Clerk shall present the proposed committee structure to the General Assembly for consideration and ratification at the first assembly meeting at which business is transacted. In making these proposals, the Stated Clerk shall consult with the appropriate General Assembly entity or entities, and may consult with other persons.

2. Assigning Commissioners to Assembly Committees

Notification

- a. Forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall assign each commissioner and advisory delegate to one of the assembly committees by the random selection process described in this standing rule.

At the same time that the number and designation of committees is communicated (see Standing Rule C.1.), the Stated Clerk shall notify each person of the assignment, the time of their first meeting, and the necessity to confirm appropriate housing and travel arrangements. The Stated Clerk shall provide a list of the assignments to those who need it to facilitate the work of the General Assembly.

Random Selection Process

- b. Commissioners and advisory delegates shall be assigned to assembly committees by random selection as follows:

(1) The Stated Clerk shall divide the presbyteries into six regional districts. Each district shall be composed of one or more presbyteries so arranged that, insofar as possible, the presbyteries in the district have contiguous boundaries and the numbers of commissioners in the several districts are approximately equal. Within each district the presbyteries shall be arranged alphabetically. The commissioners from each presbytery shall be listed alphabetically in two parallel lists: the first containing the names of the ministers of the Word and Sacrament; the second, the elders. In those cases where the presbytery has not designated commissioners, the position shall be listed as vacant so that the name may be inserted later when the Stated Clerk is notified. The names of moderators and vice-moderators of assembly committees shall be removed from the list and the names below them shall be moved up to fill the vacated positions. The minister commissioners and vacant positions for minister commissioners shall be numbered in sequence. The list of elder commissioners in each district shall be rotated downward so that no elder commissioner is opposite a minister commissioner from the same presbytery. Separate lists of groups identified in Book of Order, G-4.0403, shall be prepared, insofar as it may be practical, to assure the most equitable distribution of such commissioners to the various committees in accordance with Book of Order, G-4.0402.

(2) The Stated Clerk shall list the Youth Advisory Delegates in one list arranged in the alphabetical order of the presbyteries that designated the delegates. In any case where the presbytery has not designated a Youth Advisory Delegate, the position shall be listed as vacant so that the name may be inserted later when the Stated Clerk is notified.

(3) The Moderator shall pick by lot a number from one to ten. This number shall identify the number of the name in the first column of names in each district in which the assignment will begin. It will also identify the number of the Youth Advisory Delegates in which assignment will begin.

(4) The Moderator shall then pick by lot a second number equal from one to the number equaling the total number of committees. This number shall identify the assembly committee in the order in which the committees are arranged in the standing rules to which the first assignment of members shall be made.

(5) The assignment of members of the assembly committees shall then proceed in sequence. When initial assignments have been made to all committees in sequence so that the committees with the fewest number of commissioners are full, additional assignment shall be made to the other committees in the same manner, until all commissioners and Youth Advisory Delegates have been assigned to committees.

(6) The Stated Clerk shall assign Missionary Advisory Delegates and Ecumenical Advisory Delegates to assembly committees in consultation with those delegates. Ordinarily not more than two persons in each of these categories shall be assigned to any one assembly committee.

(7) Theological Student Advisory Delegates will be assigned to committees at the same time and in the same way as are commissioners to ensure their full participation and attendance.

(8) Names of commissioners and advisory delegates received after these assignments have been made shall be inserted in the appropriate position in the original list and assigned to the committee to which that position was assigned.

3. Assembly Committee Leadership

Moderator and Vice-Moderator

a. The moderator shall preside over the committee's deliberations. The moderator may request the vice-moderator to preside and to assist in the work of the committee.

Selection

(1) The Moderator of the preceding General Assembly shall appoint a commissioner to be moderator and a second to be vice-moderator of each committee. Final appointment shall be made only after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and then also with representatives of the General Assembly Committee on Representation regarding the inclusivity mandated in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 and G-9.0104. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees, including any committees dealing with finance and budgets, shall be elders. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees should be women. No more than one person from any one presbytery may be appointed to serve as a moderator or vice-moderator. All synods shall be equitably represented.

Assembly Committee on Business Referral

(2) The moderators and vice moderators of the assembly committees, as a group, shall function as the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. The moderator and vice-moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall function as the moderator and vice-moderator of this committee as well. This committee shall report to the assembly for its action at the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business.

Orientation

(3) The Stated Clerk shall conduct an orientation for moderators, vice-moderators, and committee assistants of assembly committees no less than three weeks prior to the convening of the General Assembly. The orientation shall include information regarding business likely to be referred to each committee; suggested procedures for dealing with business referred to committees, especially the use of Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised; utilization of available resources, both persons and materials; and preparation and presentation of assembly committee reports. The Stated Clerk, following consultation with the General Assembly Council, may invite persons designated by the council as General Assembly resource coordinators to participate in the orientation. During this orientation, the Assembly Committee on Business Referral shall meet and carry out the duties given it by these rules. The Assembly Committee on Business Referral shall also meet, if necessary, just prior to the convening of the assembly and its function shall end at the convening of the assembly.

Recorder

b. Each committee shall have available to assist in its work a recorder appointed by the Stated Clerk. The recorder shall be appointed from a pool of individuals who will already be attending the General Assembly, including staff members, local volunteers, and others. The recorder shall keep an accurate record of the actions of the committee with the votes on each indicating the number of committee members voting in the affirmative, or negative, or those abstaining; and shall assist in drafting the committee report.

Committee

c. Each committee shall have available to assist in its work a committee assistant. The committee assistant may address the committee offering suggestions regarding procedure, but shall not participate in its deliberations on any issue before the committee as an advocate of one position or view regarding its action. The committee assistant shall assist the committee in securing desired resources.

The Stated Clerk shall propose to the General Assembly for appointment the names of persons to serve as committee assistants for the duration of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall consult with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly before recommending persons to serve as committee assistants. Persons proposed shall not be commissioners to the General Assembly or staff members of entities of the General Assembly or any person who is a member of the General Assembly Council or any person who is a member of any other entity of the General Assembly. A committee assistant shall be appointed to provide staff services to each assembly committee. The appointments shall be made in accordance with Book of Order, G-4.0403.

4. Procedures for Assembly Committee Meetings

Open Meetings

a. Meetings of assembly committees shall be open to the public (as space permits) provided, however, that the committee may go into executive session at any time in accordance with the Open Meeting Policy, printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Ordinarily, the committee assistant will be expected to remain with the committee in executive session.

Parliamentary Procedure

b. The deliberations of the committee shall be conducted in accordance with Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised.

Resources

c. Each committee shall determine the use to be made of the resource material or resource persons available to assembly committees. Each assembly committee shall determine whether or not to permit the distribution of particular materials to the committee members.

Privilege of the

d. During the deliberations of the committee, in contrast to public hearings, only the following persons may speak:

- (1) members of the committee;
- (2) committee assistant, when recognized by the committee moderator;

(3) persons with special expertise, including elected members or staff members of General Assembly entities;

(4) overture advocates and signers of commissioners' resolutions (see below in this standing rule) who shall be entitled to speak when the overture or resolution or response to the referral of an overture is first considered by the committee; and then shall have the same privilege of the floor as other persons with special expertise listed in rule (3) above;

(5) persons invited by the committee through a majority vote of the committee (see Standing Rule A.3. on corresponding members); and

(6) representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, who may speak to overtures, commissioners' resolutions, or other business on which the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has presented advice or recommendations, or matters that propose amendments to the Constitution, or that affect compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution.

The committee moderator shall provide that the total time allotted to persons, other than members of the committee, who speak for or against a recommendation be equal so far as possible.

Overture Advocates and one signer of each commissioners' resolution shall be responsible for being available at the time selected by any assembly committee considering the matter. The overture advocate or one of the signers of a commissioners' resolution shall be entitled to speak to the background and intent of the overture or resolution immediately after the motion is made and seconded, placing the overture or resolution on the floor of the committee or subcommittee, or immediately after any motion that might logically be expected to affect the overture or resolution is moved and seconded, and during debate of such motions to correct misunderstandings or to clarify.

Overture advocates (see Standing Rule B.5.c.(4)) who have been designated by their presbytery or synod to speak to the response from a General Assembly entity to a referral of an overture shall be responsible for being available at the time selected by the assembly committee considering the response. The overture advocate shall be entitled to speak to the background and intent of the overture immediately after the motion is made and seconded, placing the response to the referral of the overture on the floor of the committee or subcommittee, or immediately after any motion that might logically be expected to affect the response is moved and seconded, and during debate of such motions to correct misunderstandings or to clarify.

The Office of the Stated Clerk shall, on the first business day of the assembly, before committees meet to consider business, organize a forum where assembly committee moderators shall meet with overture advocates to discuss procedures for participation in committee discussion of business related to the overture that they are advocating.

New Business

e. Each assembly committee shall consider only matters referred to it by the General Assembly. No assembly committee may initiate new business except as it relates to the business of the particular assembly committee. New business initiated in an assembly committee proposing an amendment to the Constitution or requiring an interpretation of the Constitution by the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-18.0301b and G-13.0112c) shall be referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall report its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly. Any other new business initiated in an assembly committee that touches upon constitutional matters (Book of Order, G-13.0112e) shall be communicated in writing to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and the Stated Clerk. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall consider each matter so referred and report its findings and recommendations, which may include proposals for constitutional change, to the assembly committee and the Stated Clerk. The assembly committee shall vote on the recommendations and may amend or decline to approve them. The advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on these matters shall be transmitted to the General Assembly with the report of the assembly committee. Recommendations and reports to the assembly regarding such new business must be approved in assembly committees by three-fourths of the committee members voting on the matter. New business, other than that described in this standing rule, must be presented in accordance with Standing Rule B.5.e.

Organizational Meeting

f. Ordinarily, the initial meeting of each assembly committee shall be an organizational meeting in private session for up to one hour for the purpose of developing intergroup dynamics and determining procedural matters, such as adoption of the committee's agenda and consideration of the style in which the committee plans to operate. During this executive session, business items before the committee shall not be discussed or acted upon.

Public Hearings

g. Each committee, with the exception of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, shall schedule at its convenience one or more public hearings on matters before it. The committee may limit the time for the presentation by any person during a public hearing, including an elected member or staff member of an entity of the General Assembly. If the time allotted for the public hearing is not sufficient to accommodate all the persons wishing to speak, a method shall be approved by the assembly committee that ensures that an equal number of persons on each side of an issue have an opportunity to speak. Any person denied the right to speak at the hearing may appeal to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures on the basis that the method employed in selecting speakers was not fair.

Any person who wishes to be heard in a public hearing shall sign up on a hearing form, posted in a public place in the building in which the assembly is being held, no later than the close of business on the second day of the General Assembly or one hour after the subsequent referral of business to the committee by the General Assembly. The location of hearing forms shall be announced during the first session of the assembly. In the event that an issue is expected to be controversial, those wishing to speak shall be asked to indicate whether they wish to speak for or against the recommendation.

Constitutional Advice

h. In the event that business being considered by an assembly committee has been referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution for advice, representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall be entitled to speak.

5. Reports of Assembly Committees

Writing the Report

a. The moderator, vice-moderator, committee assistant, and recorder, together with such other persons as the moderator may designate, shall draft the report of the committee following the sample form provided by the Stated Clerk.

Content

b. The reports of assembly committees shall contain only (1) the recommendations to be submitted to the General Assembly, and, where necessary, a brief statement of the committee's reasons for such recommendations, and (2) the actions taken by the committee on items referred to the committee for action. Material necessary to identify the item of business and brief explanations may be included in the report. Extensive background information and detail contained in other documents in the hands of the commissioners shall not be included.

Each assembly committee shall include with each recommendation or action in its report statements advising the General Assembly whether or not the recommendation or action has fiscal implications affecting any budget under consideration by the assembly.

Recommendation for assembly action, or action taken by the committee, shall identify the entity that is directed to carry out and report back to the General Assembly regarding the matter dealt with by the recommendation or action. When the entity to which an assembly action is directed is a part of the General Assembly Council, such as a division or related entity, the Stated Clerk shall automatically amend the language so that the action is directed to the General Assembly Council. The council shall determine which entity shall carry out the responsibility and report to the assembly on the matter.

The votes recorded in the assembly committee on each recommendation or action shall be included in the report for the information of the commissioners, but shall be omitted from the Journal of the General Assembly.

Proposals Affecting General Assembly Entities or Governing Bodies

c. If the report of an assembly committee proposes or records an action affecting the interests of an entity of the General Assembly or of a governing body other than the General Assembly, it shall be the responsibility of that assembly committee to confer with the representative(s) designated by the entity or governing body concerned before proposing such action to the General Assembly or taking such an action.

Minority Reports

d. A minority of the members of an assembly committee, or an individual member of an assembly committee, may submit in writing views that differ from those in the committee report. If the moderator of the committee shall affirm in writing that the positions expressed as recommendations for action by the assembly in a written minority report were presented to the whole committee during its consideration of the matter, the Stated Clerk shall reproduce the minority report and distribute it with the report of the committee.

A minority report must be appropriate for consideration as a substitute motion (see Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised, 2000, p. 510). (See also Standing Rule B.7.c.)

6. Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures

Docket and Referrals

a. The reports and recommendations of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly regarding the initial docket of the General Assembly and referrals of business shall be referred to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, along with any items of business not included in them (see Standing Rules E.2.d.(10) and E.2.d.(11)). Following the convening of the assembly, such matters shall be directed to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall report at the beginning of each meeting, recommending any necessary changes in order of business and any referrals it may have considered since its last report.

This committee shall neither retain any items of business for its own consideration, nor suppress any matter that comes before it. However, business that substantially duplicates matters already before the assembly may be declined by this committee and reported to the assembly with a statement of the committee's action.

Coordination Between Committees

b. This committee shall keep itself informed of the subjects being considered by the other assembly committees, and, when any subject is taken up by more than one committee, this committee shall advise the moderators of those committees regarding ways to avoid redundant or inconsistent recommendations.

Review of General Assembly Minutes

c. This committee shall review the minutes of the General Assembly daily, report to the General Assembly any suggested corrections, and recommend approval of the minutes. The minutes shall be posted on the church's website and two printed copies of the minutes shall be posted in different places during the following day for examination by commissioners. The minutes of the meetings of the General Assembly during the last two days of its session shall be submitted for review and approval within ten days after the adjournment of the General Assembly to a subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

Distribution of Materials

d. This committee shall determine whether or not particular materials may be distributed to the commissioners and delegates to the General Assembly, and specify the time and manner of distribution of any authorized by it. Particular materials distributed in assembly committees (see Standing Rule C.4.c.) shall not be distributed to the full assembly without the approval of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, including the time and manner of distribution.

Requests for Presentations

e. Requests for the privilege of communicating with the General Assembly shall be referred to this committee, which shall confer with persons making such requests about the time and the manner in which their concerns may be brought to the attention of the General Assembly. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall recommend to the General Assembly a response regarding any possible presentation to the assembly. At the time any such recommendation is acted upon, any commissioner may request that an opposing view be heard, and the assembly shall consider and act upon the matter.

Requests to Schedule Events

f. The committee shall review requests from entities of the General Assembly, governing bodies, other entities related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in any way, or coalitions in which this denomination or any of its entities participate, to schedule meetings, briefings, hearings, or other events of any kind during those hours when the General Assembly or its committees are in session.

Protests

g. Protests expressing disagreement with an action or failure to act on the part of the General Assembly shall be referred to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, which shall decide whether or not the protest is decorous and respectful. Should the committee decide the protest is decorous and respectful, the protest shall be entered in the Minutes. The committee may prepare an answer to be printed with any protest so entered (see Book of Order, G-9.0304).

1. Date and Place of Meeting

Determining Date and Place

a. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall meet on the date and at the place fixed by the preceding General Assembly for a period, which shall be known as a session of the General Assembly, preferably between May 15 and July 31, subject to the possibility of change (see Standing Rule E.2.d.(17) and Book of Order, G-13.0104, for exceptions). The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall recommend to the General Assembly for its action the date and place of meeting six years hence and any necessary changes in dates and places of meetings previously set (see Standing Rule E.2.d.(17)). Should action regarding date or place of meeting become necessary at a time when the General Assembly is not in session, this committee is empowered to fix a new date or place of meeting.

Presbytery Invitations

b. The host body for any session of the General Assembly shall be a presbytery(s) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Any presbytery that desires to invite the General Assembly to meet within its bounds shall forward an invitation to the Stated Clerk no later than May 1 of the year that is seven years prior to the earliest effective date of the invitation.

Criteria

c. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall determine the criteria that render a place an eligible site for a meeting of the General Assembly, including the requirement that all meeting arrangements shall be made to facilitate full participation by persons with disabilities. These criteria may be obtained from the Office of the General Assembly.

Rotating the Place of the Meeting

d. In order to distribute the benefits experienced from hosting a General Assembly meeting throughout the church, the place of meeting shall be rotated among the following four areas (unless prevented by financial or other practical considerations):

- Area A: Synod of Alaska/Northwest, Synod of the Pacific, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii, Synod of the Rocky Mountains, Synod of the Southwest;
- Area B: Synod of the Sun, Synod of Lakes and Prairies, Synod of Mid-America;
- Area C: Synod of Living Waters, Synod of Lincoln Trails, Synod of the Covenant;
- Area D: Synod of South Atlantic, Synod of Puerto Rico, Synod of the Northeast, Synod of the Trinity, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic.

2. Meeting Arrangements

Arrangements and Housing

a. The Stated Clerk shall oversee all arrangements for the meeting and housing of the General Assembly, including: the assignment of time and place for all special events and public meetings connected with or scheduled at the time of the General Assembly; the assignment of time and place for exhibits at the General Assembly; and the assignment of commissioners, advisory delegates, and others to hotels and other accommodations.

Assembly Assistants

b. The Stated Clerk shall appoint persons to serve as assembly assistants for the duration of the General Assembly. Persons appointed shall not be commissioners to the General Assembly or staff members of entities of the General Assembly. Assembly assistants shall be assigned to particular tasks to facilitate the work of the General Assembly. The appointments shall be made in accordance with Book of Order, G-4.0403.

Simultaneous Interpretation

c. The Stated Clerk shall arrange for the simultaneous interpretation of proceedings into Spanish and Korean languages for any participant during plenary meetings of the General Assembly. This service shall also be provided during assembly committee meetings, services of worship, and other events during the assembly for commissioners, advisory delegates, ecumenical guests, and, when possible, for other participants.

Sponsorship of Events

d. An event scheduled before, during, or immediately following a session of the General Assembly and extending an invitation to any or all participants of the assembly shall clearly identify the sponsor or sponsoring organization(s) in any invitations, announcements, or other publicity about the event.

3. Services of Worship

Daily Worship and the Lord's Supper

a. The Moderator of the preceding General Assembly shall plan daily worship at the General Assembly, and a worship service including the celebration of the Lord's Supper; and shall provide, in advance, suitable leadership for these periods of worship. The Lord's Supper shall be celebrated at the first service of worship of the General Assembly session, and the Moderator shall preside on this occasion and preach a sermon or deliver an address. The Moderator shall seek advice to ensure inclusivity in the planning of appropriate daily worship periods. The Moderator shall assure adequate transmittal of information about the planning of worship periods to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (see Standing Rule E.2.d.(13)).

Ecumenical Worship

b. The Stated Clerk shall plan an ecumenical period of worship and provide, in advance, suitable leadership for this period of worship.

Guidelines

c. The various acts of worship planned for the session of the General Assembly shall be in conformity with the requirements of the Directory for Worship, and shall be developed and led according to the guidance of the document, "Presbyterians at Worship in Mass Assemblies." In the preparation and conduct of all worship services, care shall be taken that all language, sight, hearing, accessibility, and other barriers be eliminated so that there can be full participation of all attendees. [Example: That printed orders of service also be printed in braille and that signing be available.]

4. Reimbursing Commissioner Expenses

The approved reimbursement for the travel expenses, food, lodging, and other approved expenses of commissioners at the sessions of the General Assembly shall be paid by the treasurer or the treasurer's designee. The treasurer shall have the authority to deposit funds for such purposes in a bank or trust company where the General Assembly is to be in session. Commissioners shall be reimbursed by means of individual checks upon receipt of a voucher on a form provided by the treasurer. The Stated Clerk shall recommend to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly the amount of any per diem. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (see Standing Rule E.2.d.(18)) shall set the per diem, and the Stated Clerk shall publish such per diem in the materials (print or electronic) provided to the commissioners. The treasurer shall determine the manner in which such checks shall be distributed and shall announce the place or places where such checks may be cashed.

5. Special Meetings

a. The Book of Order permits the calling of special meetings of the General Assembly (G-13.0104). The method of calling a special meeting is the required number of commissioners submitting a petition with the full text of the resolution to the Moderator of the General Assembly.

(1) A special meeting may be called providing the petition's subject matter falls within the General Assembly's responsibilities. (G-13.0103).

(2) The urgent matter shall be brought in the form of a resolution or resolutions, stating the specific action proposed to be taken by the commissioners at the special meeting and shall include the reasons for proposing the decision to be made.

(3) A special meeting may not be called for the purpose of discussion only.

(4) The matters should be able to be resolved in a session of one or two days.

(5) The full text of the resolution shall appear on each page of the signed petitions.

(6) The Moderator may consult with the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures to determine any questions concerning whether the resolution meets the criteria for a called meeting or concerning the specific actions in the proposed resolution. This may take place by conference call.

(7) Resolutions requiring or proposing constitutional interpretation are subject to the 120-day requirement in G-13.0112c. The 120-day requirement begins upon receipt of the petition by the Moderator. The Moderator may consult with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) to determine any questions concerning whether the resolution requires a constitutional interpretation.

b. The Book of Order establishes the minimum number of signatures to require a called meeting. The Moderator, upon receipt of the petition, shall ask the Stated Clerk to complete the following within thirty days:

(1) Send each presbytery stated clerk or clerk of session a letter verifying the current Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) membership of the individual signatory to the petition.

(2) Send each signatory to the petition a letter of verification asking the commissioner to verify the signature on the petition and if the commissioner concurs with the purpose of the request as stated in the resolution.

(3) During the verification process, a commissioner may request removal of his or her name from the petition by notifying the Stated Clerk.

(4) After all reasonable efforts to establish contact have been made, the name of a commissioner failing to reply to the letter of verification shall be removed from the petition.

(5) The Stated Clerk shall report to the Moderator the results of the verification process.

c. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly has the responsibility to fix the date and place of a meeting of the General Assembly when the General Assembly is not in session.

(1) Upon receiving certification from the Stated Clerk that the petition has met the requirements of the Book of Order and the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, the Moderator shall report to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) the decision to call the meeting.

(2) The COGA shall set the date and place of a called meeting.

STANDING RULES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

(3) The COGA shall submit to the called meeting a plan to pay for its expenses. This plan shall be considered to be part of the business of the special meeting.

Eligibility for Election

1. Serving on Assembly Entities
  - a. Each person nominated shall be an active member of a congregation, or a continuing member of a presbytery, of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with the exception of nominees for election to the National Committee on the Fund for the Self-Development of People and the Women Employed by the Church Committee.

Members-at-Large

- b. A person may serve as a member-at-large of only one General Assembly entity at a time. Ordinarily, no more than one member-at-large from any one presbytery may serve on the same General Assembly entity at the same time. Members serving by virtue of office, or elected to membership on a second entity to fulfill the requirements of the Organization for Mission or other General Assembly actions, are not affected by this provision.

Terms c. Persons nominated for election by the General Assembly shall ordinarily be eligible to serve a four-year term, and be eligible for election to one additional term. No person may serve more than two terms, full or partial. After serving as a member of a General Assembly entity for two terms, full or partial, a person shall not be eligible for nomination or renomination to a General Assembly entity until two years have elapsed.

Full Participation d. Consideration shall be given to the full requirements of full participation expressed in Book of Order, G-4.0403, in considering nomination and election to entity service, and also to the nomination of one-third ministers of the Word and Sacrament, one-third laymen, and one-third laywomen (see Book of Order, G-9.0801b).

Resignation e. A member of a General Assembly entity who finds it necessary to resign shall send his or her resignation to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, who shall notify the entity and the nominating committee or other body that originated the person's nomination or election. When any member of an entity of the General Assembly (council, commission, unit, division, committee, task force, or any other body) shall resign, or becomes unable to serve because of chronic or permanent physical or mental illness or disability, the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall declare the position vacant.

Unexcused Absences f. When any member of the board of an entity of the General Assembly, a council, commission, unit, division, committee, task force, or any other body authorized by the General Assembly does not attend two successive sessions of that body and such absence is unexcused, the membership of that person shall be automatically vacated, and that person shall be notified by the Stated Clerk. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall be notified of the vacancy by the chairperson of the entity, and the Stated Clerk shall announce the vacancy and shall notify the General Assembly Nominating Committee or other body that originated the nomination or election of the person who has been absent without excuse, in order that the vacancy may be filled in the manner by which the same position had been filled originally.

Transfer of Membership g. If a minister of the Word and Sacrament serving as a member of a General Assembly entity representing a synod or presbytery shall transfer his or her presbytery membership and thereby cease to be under the jurisdiction of the presbytery or synod that nominated her or him to serve on the assembly entity, the position shall be declared vacant by the Stated Clerk. If a member of a particular church serving as a member of a General Assembly entity representing a presbytery or synod shall transfer her or his membership to a particular church that is not under jurisdiction of the presbytery or synod that nominated him or her, the position shall be declared vacant by the Stated Clerk.

Filling Vacancies h. The Stated Clerk shall also notify appropriate entities and governing bodies upon being advised of the death of any person holding membership on an assembly entity or who is unable to serve for any other reason. The Stated Clerk shall also declare vacant a position on any such entity held by a minister of the Word and Sacrament who ceases to be a minister member of a presbytery of this denomination, or a position held by a member of a particular church who ceases to be a member of a congregation of this denomination.

All such vacancies shall be filled by the same process under which the former incumbent was elected. If a vacancy shall occur during the first term of service of an incumbent, then the original source of the nomination shall propose a nominee for election to complete the unexpired term, and such nominee shall be eligible for renomination and election to an additional full term. If a vacancy shall occur during the second term of service of an incumbent, and the position vacated is one designated for a representative of a presbytery or synod, then the privilege of proposing a nominee for the unexpired term shall pass to the next appropriate presbytery or synod under any rotation system that may be in use, and the nominee so proposed shall be eligible for nomination and reelection to an additional full term. Any vacancy in a position for which the General Assembly Nominating Committee makes nominations may be filled until the next succeeding General Assembly by appointment of the Moderator of the General Assembly upon advice by the nominating committee that the committee has decided to present the name of the appointee to the next session of the General Assembly as its nominee for the position.

The order of speaking shall be determined by lot, the drawing conducted by the most recent Moderator attending the General Assembly.

(2) After nominations are closed, each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to address the General Assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the concerns that nominee feels to be the most important for the church. The nominees shall speak in the same order as the presentation of nominating speeches.

(3) At the conclusion of all the presentations by the nominees, they shall respond to questions from the floor. The first question shall be addressed to the nominee who spoke first in the original presentation, and the same question shall then be put to the other nominees in the same order in which they spoke earlier. The second question shall be directed to the second nominee in this order and then to each of the other nominees in sequence. Each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to answer each question. This process shall continue for a period not to exceed the number of nominees times fifteen minutes, or for one hour, whichever is shorter, unless terminated earlier by vote of the General Assembly.

If no nominee has received a majority of the whole vote, another vote shall be taken in the same manner. When one nominee shall have received a majority, the Moderator shall announce the result and declare the nominee to be elected.

If the assembly votes to use paper ballots, the Stated Clerk shall provide ballots and assign no fewer than ten commissioners to act as tellers, collecting and counting the ballots. The results shall be given to the Stated Clerk who shall report the totals to the Moderator who shall announce them to the assembly.

That balance includes a commitment to respect the need for Sabbath by the Moderator and Vice-Moderator of the General Assembly.

The church should expect the Moderator to ordinarily spend no more than half of their work time responding to invitations in attending meetings of General Assembly entities, in participating in other opportunities, and attending to constitutional functions. In assisting the Moderator in these activities, the church should expect the Vice-Moderator to ordinarily spend no more than a third of their work time.

Itineration of the Moderator and Vice-Moderator

b. The Moderator, the Vice Moderator, and the Office of the General Assembly shall jointly develop a comprehensive plan for their travel based upon the mission of the church and the needs of agencies, governing bodies, institutions, ecumenical partners, and other constituencies.

Each synod, in consultation with its presbyteries, will be invited to develop a plan for itineration of the Moderator or Vice-Moderator. Ordinarily, a single invitation for a visit within a presbytery will be accepted during each term.

Leave of Absence of the Moderator and Vice-Moderator

c. The Stated Clerk shall request the congregation or employer of the Moderator and Vice Moderator to grant a leave of absence for time appropriate to their commitments to permit the Moderator and Vice-Moderator to fulfill the functions of their offices.

No later than three months following the election, the Stated Clerk, in consultation with the Moderator and Vice-Moderator and representatives of the congregation or employer they serve, shall conduct an appropriate service of dedication and covenant between these leaders and their faith and/or vocational community, recognizing the unique demands and responsibilities placed upon these officers.

Financial Arrangements for the Moderator and Vice-Moderator

d. To prevent financial sacrifice to these leaders personally, or undue adverse effect upon the work in which they are engaged, the Stated Clerk, in consultation with the Moderator and Vice-Moderator, shall propose appropriate financial arrangements to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

Expenses

e. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall budget for the official travel of the Moderator and Vice Moderator and their spouses, and other expenses incurred in the performance of official duties.

erator, the Moderator shall propose to the assembly the name of the commissioner for Vice-Moderator. After a brief speech by the person selected, the assembly shall immediately proceed to vote on his or her confirmation. Should there be no confirmation, the Moderator shall bring another commissioner's name for confirmation to the next business session of the assembly. The Stated Clerk shall provide a service of installation for the newly elected Vice-Moderator.

b. The Vice-Moderator represents the assembly at the request of the Moderator. When the Vice Moderator serves in this capacity, all those duties incumbent on the Moderator shall be expected of him/her.

c. The Vice Moderator shall serve as a corresponding member without vote on the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council.

d. Should there be a Moderator's Conference, the Vice-Moderator participates with the Moderator in planning the Moderator's Conference.

e. The Vice Moderator is expected to itinerate at the request of the Moderator.

f. The Vice Moderator shall consult with the Moderator and the Office of the General Assembly about the special emphasis for the Vice Moderator's itineration.

g. The Moderator may request the Vice-Moderator to preside and to assist in the performance of other functions of the Moderator during and following the General Assembly.

6. Regular Reporting: Accountability of the Moderator and Vice-Moderator

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC) shall assist the General Assembly in ensuring the accountability of the Moderator and Vice-Moderator of the General Assembly by receiving and reviewing, at each of their stated meetings, a written report from the Moderator and Vice-Moderator.

7. Vacancy in the Office of the Moderator or Vice-Moderator

Should the office of the Moderator of the General Assembly become vacant, the Vice Moderator shall fulfill the functions of the Moderator. In such circumstance, all constitutional obligations and functions as prescribed by the Standing Rules of the General Assembly and the Book of Order shall be incumbent upon the Vice-Moderator of the General Assembly.

Should the office of the Vice-Moderator of the General Assembly also become vacant, the most recent living Moderator shall fulfill the functions of the Moderator as specified in the Constitution of the church.
