Rationale

WHERE CHRIST IS, THERE IS THE CHURCH

The General Assembly Form of Government Task Force has done a highly commendable work in preparing its report and recommendations to the 218th General Assembly (2008). The work of the task force is a critically important step for the PC(USA) to take at this time.

The origins of Presbyterian polity and form of government lie in the Reformation marks of the true Church as spelled out in the majority of the confessions found in the The Book of Confessions (7 documents out of 11). In those documents, the marks of the true Church are participatory—where Christ is, there is the Church (ubi christus, ibi ecclesia). The marks are not instrumentalist—where the church is, there is Christ (ubi ecclesia, ibi christus).

This overture addresses this watershed issue of theology in the Presbyterian Form of Government, and seeks to bring the Revised Form of Government proposed by the General Assembly’s Form of Government Task Force more closely in line with the core theology of the PC(USA) confessions, while serving all sides of the church and the objectives of the proposed revision. A general rationale for this overture is followed by rationales for specific amendments to the text of the Foundations and the Revised Form of Government.

General Rationale

1. Church as Participation in the Mission of God

Mission is the focus of the overture as it is in the draft revision of the Form of Government (DRFOG). Participation in the mission of God is the watershed issue in revising the PC(USA) Form of Government. The issue presents itself in terms of the contrasting statements. “Where Christ is, there is the Church” and “Where the Church is, there is Christ.”

“Where Christ is, there is the Church” puts Christ first, defining the Church by its participation in Christ. Participation in Christ (Emmanuel, God with us) focuses attention on Who God is (Triune), where God is (presence, location), what God is doing (creating/re-creating, reconciling, redeeming, loving), and what structures of community fit the profile of a people in covenant relationship with the triune God. The structures have to be specific, but, because they are centered in God and not in themselves, they point to the Church as a dynamic moment whose very being emerges in the activity of worship, where Christ stands forth in his own self-definition and in Spirit engages the worshiping community directly. Such a moment cannot be domesticated, channeled, or rendered automatic.

“Where the Church is, there is Christ” starts with the Church and defines Christ by his connection with the Church which embodies him. The language of embodiment leads to a very close identity—potentially an over-identification—of God/Christ with the people and structures of the Church, as in “the Church is the people,” or “the Church is where the true believers (or leaders) are.” The organization, beliefs, behavior, and practices of the people thus come to demonstrate the reality of God and a new humanity both now and in the future. Such a view of the Church favors a congregational or Episcopal more than a Presbyterian form of church government.

This overture recommends that the PC(USA) Form of Government envision the Church as the gift of participation in the life and mission of the triune God. Central to this stance are the marks for the true Church, as stated in The Book of Confessions of the PC(USA).

2. The Marks of the True Church

The Form of Government needs to coordinate three different sets of marks for the true Church. They come from three different time periods, and all are represented in the The Book of Confessions of the PC(USA).

The historical basis of Presbyterian government is the Reformation era, 1500–1650, which identifies the marks of the true Church in this way:

a. The Church is the place where the Word is purely preached, the Sacraments are rightly administered, and ecclesiastical discipline is exercised (The Scots Confession, The Second Helvetic Confession, The Heidelberg Catechism, The Westminster Confession of Faith, The Westminster Larger and Shorter Catechisms, plus The Theological Declaration of Barmen, which builds on the Reformation marks of the Church).

All three Reformation marks set forth Jesus Christ at the center of the Church's life, her worship. The Word preached and the Sacraments administered redefine the lives of the worshipers in terms of the presence and activity of Christ (Emmanuel, God with us). With the hearing of faith, a gift of the Spirit, Christians will follow wherever Christ leads. There, at the center of the worshiping community, Christ himself stands, gathers people together, governs them directly, scatters them in their daily lives, and goes before them at every step of the way. Gathered or scattered, the Church participates in the presence and activity of Jesus Christ. "Where Christ is, there is the Church (ubi christus, ibi ecclesia)" ably describes the dynamics of this foundation for polity. Every Presbyterian Book of Order to date begins with a strong affirmation of Jesus Christ as the only Lord, Savior, and Head of the Church. Presbyterian polity from the Reformation until now is built around this core.

Mission is the primary mark of the true Church for the Modernist/Pietist era, from 1650 to 1950/the present.<sup>1</sup>

b. The true Church exists when it is engaged in mission (The Confession of 1967 and A Brief Statement of Faith).

Mission here includes both evangelism/foreign missions and social action/peace with justice. Most Presbyterians regard evangelism and social action as companions, never one without the other. For The Confession of 1967, both aspects of mission fall under the heading of reconciliation, reflecting "God's reconciling work in Jesus Christ" (The Book of Confessions, 9.06). In the Reformed tradition as a whole, mission fits well as the Church's participation in what God is doing.

In the larger milieu of Modernism/Pietism today, however, mission is most often understood under the rubric, "where the Church is, there is Christ," as mentioned above. The understanding is often so close to us that we cannot see its negative side. For many contemporary Christians, the Church is the instrument of God's work in, to, and for the world. Because the instrument embodies God (God/Christ in us, or the Spirit dwelling in us), God works through Christians individually and collectively who then do God's work on God's behalf. Accordingly, the Church is measured by how well it serves as a useful means for delivering the Gospel and transforming the World as it transforms the lives of people. Attention falls heavily on human capacities, devices, accomplishments, results, and accountability for these assigned tasks. We are, as the saying goes, "the hands and feet of God," with the strong inference that, "if we don't do God's work (or mission), it won't get done."

The early Church, 100–600, also discerned several marks of the true Church, and these, too, are represented in the The Book of Confessions of the PC(USA).

c. The Church is one, holy, catholic, and apostolic (The Apostles' Creed and The Nicene Creed).

The most important of these marks historically is "apostolic." Since Cyprian (200–258), Bishop of Carthage, what the Early Church meant by apostolic is that the Christian Church is authentic only if the current bishops or leaders of the Church are direct descendents from the disciple-apostle Peter (the doctrine of apostolic succession). That is, embodied in the leaders of the Church, Christ acts definitively through them as authentic instruments of God. They are the bearers of the true Church. Taken together, these marks of the true Church led both the Eastern and Western branches of the Christian Church to adopt more-or-less centralized, Episcopal forms of government. Left un-interpreted, these marks are plainly at odds with the Presbyterian Form of Government, but close to the broader Modernist/Pietist accent on the instrument.

This overture recommends that the PC(USA) Form of Government retain not only the focus on mission from the Modernist/Pietist era, but also the distinctively participatory dynamics of the Reformation marks of the true Church, and interpret the Early Church marks accordingly. The changes proposed by this overture attempt to carry out this recommendation.

3. Participatory and Instrumentalist Approaches to Mission Considered

The Great Commission (Matt. 28:18–20) brings out the contrast between the instrumentalist and participatory approaches. For the participatory approach, verse 18b refers to Christ's exercise of his own divine authority and power throughout the universe, "in heaven and on earth." The conclusion, "I am with you always, to the end of the age" (20b), reinforces the point that Christ is the primary actor at all times. Presumably Christ keeps his own commandment. So, the actual commission (19–20a) instructs not only what the Church is to do but also what Christ himself is doing. For the Church and individual Christians to engage in mission is thus to commune with Jesus Christ, sharing in God's mission of making disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the triune God, and keeping the commandments that circumscribe the place where the living God abides. The aim of the Christian life, accordingly, is not to make humans good and righteous out of themselves, but to put them in fellowship with God, who is good and righteous altogether. The aim of mission is not to do God's work in place of God, but to share in that work and commune with God in the process, "glorifying and enjoying God forever."

For the instrumentalist approach, verse 18b says the authority and power of Jesus Christ have been delegated to the instrument. The Great Commission (19–20a), then, is Christ's directive to his followers in a sequence of "command and obey." Instrumentalists thus set themselves to do what is required, carry the Gospel to the nations, transform people into faithful disciples, baptize them on behalf of God, and teach them to do what the commandments require. The aim of the Christian life, accordingly, is to make humans good and righteous out of themselves, so that they can stand on their own two feet before a righteous God in the end. Christ accompanies and blesses these efforts (20b).

Can we combine the instrumentalist and participatory approaches to mission? The instrument can surely participate in what God is doing, and the participant can surely be an instrument of God if God wills it. But we probably cannot make ourselves instruments of God on our own, intentionally. As sinners, even forgiven sinners, we don't need God at all if we can make ourselves pure channels of goodness, grace, love, mercy, truth, or whatever. To be instruments of God's mission is God's singular gift to us, not our gift to ourselves. The fundamental gift is participation in what God is doing. That's why the Reformed tradition historically leans toward participation as the more appropriate approach to mission. Participation lets God be God and humans be human, without confusing the two. But participation still makes the Gospel indispensable and God always near us, while keeping God's mission and glory front and center.

The instrumentalist approach to mission in the Modernist/Pietist era raises some serious questions that Presbyterians in the Reformed tradition cannot avoid. To name a few:

a. The task of transforming the world and everyone/thing in it, sets the Church to ruling the world on behalf of God. (Is the Church really about ruling the World?) Such a reach for power threatens to subvert the Gospel and the Church from within.

b. Making the instrument an embodiment of God encourages a self-righteousness that overreaches itself (Doesn't God in me make me loving and good out of myself? Can I sin if God is embodied in me?) and sets up comparisons and finger-pointing that disrupt authentic Christian community (Who has more of God embodied within, who less? Who is better, who worse? Who is "better" qualified to rule?)

c. Doing God's work on behalf of God invites over-identifying God with the instrument (Where does God leave off and the instrument begin, and vice versa?), perhaps even an idolatry of the instrument (Isn't whatever I do really God doing it, if God is in me working through me?).

d. The instrumentalist approach to mission reduces everything Christian to a useful means of something else, for example: Jesus Christ the useful means of revelation and/or way of salvation, Scripture the useful means of revelation, our faith in Christ the useful means to our personal salvation, salvation the useful means to immortality, love and goodness the useful means to demonstrate our transformation by God, the Gospel the useful means for meeting human needs, worship the useful means for evangelism or motivating and indoctrinating God's people, Church the useful means for doing God's work in/to the World, etc. (Isn't God—and life with God—an end in itself and not a useful means to something else?).

e. The instrumentalist approach to mission is highly directive, not to say authoritarian. Having been delegated God's authority and power, the instrument assumes full responsibility for doing it, carrying out God's commands, bearing the Gospel wherever it needs to go, and enforcing God's will at every turn (Isn't that the obedient response God requires a faithful instrument to perform? But, then, can we avoid turning the Christian life into "works righteousness"?).

By contrast, the participatory approach to mission revolves around discerning God's mission activity at the present moment, articulating God's Word boldly, and living into God's activity faithfully. Front and center for the Church is the energetic vision of Christ present at the center of the Church's life, her worship, actively governing the mission of the Christian community, both gathered and scattered, and all of it in the context of the faith—the work of the Spirit—that unites us with Christ. For this reason, much of the Presbyterian Form of Government is going to deal with worship, membership and the ordering of the community, the cultivation and nurturing of a faith community, and the preparation, processing, and handling of ministers of Word and Sacrament for the conduct of worship.

A participatory approach to mission, however, has to avoid tunnel vision that does not see beyond itself. The Church has to look for the triune God alive and at work throughout the universe. To follow Christ, the Church has to discern Christ both at the center of the Church and at the center of the world. One thing is sure: the faith that unites us with Christ will drive us to ask what God is doing at every moment, situation, stage, and experience of life (fides quarens intellectum). The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at its best is not only a community where faith is awakened (by the Holy Spirit!) but also a community of engagement and discourse, where people of faith together seek, explore, discern (also by the Spirit!), and pursue, the presence and activity of Christ all around us. With such a radical focus on Christ beyond itself as well as within, Church takes on the character of an event instead of an institution. It's worth asking what additional polity structures might help secure an outward focus for the Church's mission.

These considerations reinforce the overture's recommendation that the PC(USA) Form of Government envision the Church as a participation in the mission of the triune God, combining the best insights of the Reformed tradition with the Modernist/Pietist accent on mission.

4. The Risks of an Instrumentalist Form of Government at This Time

The PC(USA) risks a great deal if it adopts an instrumentalist form of government at this time.

First, taking the instrumentalist option, the PC(USA) will turn away from most, if not all, of the confessions in its own Book of Confessions. The confessions talk mainly about the sovereign activity of the triune God, in Christ, creating, sustaining, redeeming, providing for, reconciling all creation, both in time and at the end of time. The confessions also talk about the Christian faith and life mainly as a participation in what God is doing. Turning away from our confessions sets up a crisis of identity and vision going forward, already evident in some quarters of the Church.

Second, taking the instrumentalist option, the PC(USA) will embrace the approach of the recent past, the era of Modernism/Pietism (1650–1950/present). By all accounts (both Church and non-church) we are entering a new era (Post-Modern?), and the old era is coming to an end as we change to the new one. If the PCUSA defines itself in instrumental terms going forward, it will face the future with God by locking itself into its own immediate past, fixed on its own instrumentality.

Therefore, the overture recommends amending the draft revision of the Form of Government (DRFOG) so as to blend the Modernist/Pietist commitment to mission with the Reformation accent on participation in Christ. The result, visible in the changes proposed, is both deeply mission-minded and distinctively Reformed. Above all, the combination positions the PC(USA) to enter the future looking forward instead of backward, with its eyes on Christ and God's mission in our time.

5. The Changes to the DRFOG Proposed by the Overture

The DRFOG does give prominence to all three sets of marks for the true Church, in both the Foundations and the Form of Government. However, as is, the DRFOG repeatedly misses the participatory dynamics of the Reformation marks (see F-1.0303) and renders them as mere useful instruments of mission (see G-3.0201a–c, G-3.0301a–c, G-3.0401a–c, G-3.0501a–c). Further, the DRFOG repeatedly uses obviously instrumentalist language (e.g., “the Church is the provisional demonstration of what God intends for all humanity”: see F-3.0301, F-1.0302a–c, F-3.0304, G-3.0201, G-3.0301, G-3.0401, and G-3.0501). These sections most often borrow their language from the current Book of Order, Chapter 3, The Mission of the Church. This chapter on mission was inserted into the Book of Order at the reunion of 1983 and has no precedent in the The Book of Order of the UPCUSA, The Book of Church Order of the PCUS, or any other literature concerning Presbyterian church government.

(1) F-1.01, God's Mission

- The word “one” is deleted (stricken) because “triune God” already includes oneness.
- The phrase “in the world” is deleted (stricken) because it isn't needed: Jesus Christ is Lord over all creation, which is bigger than “the world.” The language of Church and World belongs to the Modernist/Pietist concern for who's saved (the Church) and who isn't saved (the world) and the Church's mission to the world accordingly. This change will be proposed wherever Church-world language is found in the DRFOG.

- The italicized portion attempts to spell out the title, “God's Mission,” and the lead sentence, that God's mission gives substance and form to the Church, by developing what God's mission or activity is. The deleted (stricken) portion, on the other hand, speaks more about the Church's self-perceptions and response to God's call than about what God does to shape the Church. This is one of the differences between a participatory and an instrumentalist approach to the Church.

(2) F-1.03, The Marks of the True Church [~~The Calling of the Church~~]

- The title is changed to reflect what the section actually talks about, namely, the marks of the true Church (DRFOG F-1.0302–.0304).

- Much of the section (DRFOG F-1.0301, The Church Is the Body of Christ, and F-1.0302a, The Apostolicity of the Church) is verbatim from the current Book of Order, Chapter 3, The Mission of the Church. As is, the section builds on an embodiment notion of the Church and the Church's role as God's instrument for reaching and transforming the world. For that reason, the overture offers large substitutions to highlight what God is doing and our participation therein.

- The overture F-1.0301 simply makes transparent the obvious, that the different marks belong to different confessions and different time frames. The titles of overture F-1.0302–.0304 carry out that transparency. The overture deliberately considers the marks of the true Church in reverse historical order, beginning with the one that emphasizes mission (the Six Great Ends)—the intended accent of the DRFOG—then the Reformation marks restated to make them participatory, then the Early Church marks reinterpreted as participation in what God is doing.

- It should be said that much of DRFOG F-1.303 (The Notes of the Reformed Church) is a close quote from The Confession of 1967 (The Book of Confession, 9.31), which gives the Reformation marks of the true Church an instrumentalist spin. The Confession of 1967 vacillates on the issue before us (sometimes “Christ in us,” sometimes “us in Christ”) but overall presents itself in a Trinitarian framework as participation in what God is doing.

- At several points, the DRFOG presents the language of call-response, notably in F-1.3002c (The Holiness of the Church) and in G-1.0301–.0303. The call is from God. But if the response is presented as the human side of a transaction with God, it most often results in some form of works righteousness, i.e., the response is what we have to do in order to be good enough before God. The DRFOG tries to avoid that outcome under “holiness” by giving credit to the Spirit and the means of grace at work upon us. The bottom line—very close to the instrumentalist position of the Spirit within us working through us—is that we are “to strive for the purity, righteousness, and truth” God expects of us. The overture changes avoid the dilemma altogether by putting holiness—including repentance—as a participation in Christ's righteousness, a function of God's mercy and love drawing us into Christ.

- The overture adds a section, F-1.0305 (Commitment to the Marks of the Church), which seems appropriate, both to acknowledge their value for shaping the PC(USA) Form of Government and to blend the three sets.

b. Foundations, Chapter 2, The Church and Its Confessions

- Chapter 2 of the DRFOG is essentially the same as Chapter 2 of the current Book of Order (BO). As stated, this chapter has three major deficiencies, which the overture proposal attempts to remedy:

—The chapter needs a transparent section on the historical origin, enduring truth value, and on-going role of the confessions for a confessional church (PC(USA)) laboring in a basically non-confessional church culture today, namely, the late Modernist-Pietist era of the Church.

—The chapter subordinates the truth value of the Reformation and Reformed confessions to the ecumenical creeds so completely, that it turns the majority of PC(USA) confessions—everything other than The Nicene Creed and The Apostles' Creed—into more-or-less sectarian documents.

—The current way of utilizing the confessions, to reduce them to a list of essential doctrines, apply them to contemporary Church realities, and insist on agreement more-or-less, has become highly problematic. The list of essential doctrines looks and sounds like a separate confession among the confessions. The essential doctrines will always be applied selectively, based on what is relevant to the contemporary Church. The insistence on agreement imposes a non-confessional standard of uniformity that belies the personal joy of confessing the core truth of the Gospel along with the unity such acts if confession bring. Agreement sets up a comparison of more-or-less that divides instead of unifying. What is needed is a way to elevate the meaning of a shared confession and make the historical dimensions of each confession work for instead of against the Church.

- How do the confessions of the PC(USA) help us participate in the mission of the triune God? The overture proposal takes seriously what God has already done in leading our forebears to confess the core truth of the Gospel when the Gospel was at risk in particular times and places of history. Participating in God's mission thus entails our sharing the truth of the Gospel together with the Christians who were beset, in their own historical context. The aim here is more than mere agreement moving toward a cookie-cutter uniformity, or a cut-and-paste list of essential doctrines that trigger endless disagreements and wooden applications. The aim is an authentic unity and a fellowship in the Gospel that arises when we make a common confession of its truth with other people at another time and place. This approach to the confessions stills relies upon the specific formulations of each confession, which makes them a vital part of a constitution. The approach also takes seriously how the confessions shape us personally within the Reformed tradition. They are part of a living enterprise of engaging (confessing) the Gospel at its core, hence an on-going participation in the mission of the triune God. Therefore, the antidote proposed by the overture is —add a new section (F-2-01) at the beginning on the origin of confessional statements; —modify and reverse the order of the last three sections without either becoming sectarian or diminishing our ecumenical commitments; and —make some other refinements as seem appropriate.

- The focus on confessing the Gospel in historical context changes the purpose of confessional statements somewhat (Overture F-2.02, DRFOG F-2.01). Even taken all together, the confessions do not in fact comprise a comprehensive study of systematic theology. They relate to the specific points of the Gospel that were at risk in particular historical moments. The choice of confessions to include gives the church its identity and shapes its character over time. That gives the confessions a stronger, functional role in the life of the church than to “summarize the essence of Reformed Christian tradition.” The confessions can and should assist in worshipping God, join Christians together in a unity of the Gospel centered in Jesus Christ, help the Church clarify its doctrine when needed (“guiding the church to sound doctrines”), and help interpret Scripture.

- The overture does not propose major changes to the section on confessions as subordinate standards (Overture F-2.03, DRFOG F-2.02).

- For the next three sections, the Overture F-2.04-.06 (DRFOG F-2.03-.05) uses a common pattern of statement, focused on the central affirmations of the Gospel. At least in the Reformed tradition, a confession is concerned about the universal truth of the Gospel centered in Jesus Christ, not sectarian nuances. To render the confessions otherwise misrepresents them. Furthermore, the truth claims of the Reformed tradition do not contradict those of the Protestant Reformation or of the Church Catholic. Why make it seem as though they do? To make these matters clearer, the overture deals with the Reformed tradition first (F-2.04), the Protestant Reformation second (F-2.05), then the Early Church (F-2.06). The content of the Reformed tradition remains close to the DRFOG statement (and the current BO). The content of primary affirmation for the Reformation and the Early Church confessions has been restated for greater accuracy.

- Specifically (Overture F-2.05, DRFOG F-2.04), the Reformation recovered the biblical accent on Jesus Christ as the basis for our salvation and the true head of the Church. The distinctive Protestant doctrine of justification by grace through faith is part of the reform of the Church at this time. The Reformation marks of the true Church were shared by the Anglicans (Thirty-Nine Articles), the Lutherans (Augsburg Confession), and the Reformed (Calvin, et al). For the heart of the Reformation there is no salvation apart from the Christian community, the Church. So the watchwords need to be five, not three, adding Christ alone and Church alone.

- Similarly (Overture F-2.06, DRFOG F-2.03), with the Early Church confessions, what makes them “ecumenical” is the Trinitarian affirmation of the incarnation of God as the human Jesus Christ, which defines Christianity both then and now. While they are biblical, The Nicene Creed and The Apostles’ Creed do not assert the authority of the Scriptures. And Protestants have to reinterpret the marks of the true Church (one, holy, catholic, apostolic) to avoid the Episcopal forms of Church they produced historically (see Overture F-1.0304a–d, DRFOG F-1.0302a–d, and overture rationale). The overture proposal attempts to clarify these matters.

c. Foundations, Chapter 3, Principles of Order and Government

- The overture proposes to change only Section 3.03 (Openness to the Guidance of the Holy Spirit). The Historic Principles of Church Order (3.01), Principles of Presbyterian Government (3.02), and The Constitution of the PC(USA) (3.04) remain as the DRFOG (and the current Book of Order) have them. The DRFOG 3.03, however, leans heavily on the instrumentalist Chapter 3 of the current Book of Order (BO): DRFOG 3.0304 is a direct quote from BO G-3.0401. Furthermore, the titles of this section of the DRFOG (3.03) don’t always match the contents of the subsections: DRFOG 3.0301 is not really about “heritage and renewal.” The DRFOG 3.0302 is not really about “ecumenicity.” The DRFOG 3.0303 omits unity when it speaks of “diversity and inclusiveness.” And DRFOG 3.0304 is not really about “openness” so much as inclusiveness (again) and a laundry list of factors (God, the world, being better Christians, the denomination’s own institutional limits, the ecumenical Church) to which the PC(USA) needs to pay attention. Openness, however, is more than a calling or human opportunity; it is a gift of the Holy Spirit. So, the overture proposes major changes to this chapter, beginning with the title, “Continuity and Change.” The changes aim to be specific about where to look for innovation and newness amid habit and where to look for continuity and abiding identity amid change.

- The overture re-titles F-3.0301 as “Humility Before the Lord of the Church” and actually incorporates what the DRFOG F-3.0302 intends, namely, that the Presbyterian Form of Government is not essential to the existence of the Christian Church. It’s not enough for the Presbyterian Form of Government to be faithful to the Bible and proven viable over time. The forms of the Church are submissive ultimately to the Lord of the Church. The humble task of the Church in any age is to discern the will of God as the basis of its participation in God’s mission. Neither the task nor the participation is automatic.

They are themselves the gifts of God, who unites us with Christ and grants us to walk in the Spirit. Emphasizing “transformation by the renewal of our minds” (DRFOG) puts the burden of both the transforming and the discerning on us as instruments.

- The overture re-titles F-3.0302 as “Looking to the Future,” emphasizing the freedom involved when Christians see Christ going before them into the future or even coming from the future to meet them. Looking to the future is a key ingredient of openness to change. With Christ in front of us, we can look forward to the future with enthusiasm, expectation, imagination, etc., certainly without fear.

- The overture modifies the title of F-3.0303 to include unity as well as diversity and inclusiveness. “Inclusiveness” is a flag word for many Christians today, because the Church has at times excluded those who live at the margins of society—the poor, the weak, the sick, the disabled, the uneducated, the homeless, different racial and ethnic groups, etc. Including such Christians in the Church is part and parcel of the Church’s mission (Matt. 25:31–46). However, can a truly diverse community be driven to include those different from themselves without being clear about what they all have in common? What unites Christians is that they belong to Jesus Christ, regardless of any other points of diversity. Our unity in Jesus Christ gives fundamental religious grounds for bridging whatever diversity exists within the Church and making it productive for the mission of God. The overture proposal expands the value of diversity and fully retains the DRFOG concern for inclusiveness. At the same time the overture highlights the vital role of our unity together in Christ.

- The Overture F-3.0304 (“Unity with All Humanity”) replaces the DRFOG section entitled “Openness,” one of the most instrument-laden sections in the DRFOG (taken directly from current BO G-3.0401). Focusing on the Church’s unity with all humanity in Christ, the replacement section broadens the Church’s horizon to embrace humans everywhere, the environment, the universe, indeed the whole creation. God’s mission surely has the same, expansive scope. That’s not universalism, but a biblical openness to God, other people, and creation.

7. Rationale for Proposed Changes to the Form of Government

a. Form of Government, Chapter 1, Congregations

- The overture proposes some verbal changes to DRFOG G-1.0101 (The Mission of the Congregation) and DRFOG G-1.0102 (The Fellowship of the Congregation). The changes make explicit the connection of congregations with the mission of God and their participation together in Christ. Taken out are words and phrases that emphasize the language of instrumentality (through, equipped for, Church and world, call and response).

- The overture proposes a change to DRFOG G-1.02 (The Organizing of a Congregation) to include dissolving as well as organizing by the presbytery.

- The overture proposes changes to DRFOG G-1.03 (The Membership of a Congregation), three of the four sections, along the lines indicated above. But, further, the overture of these sections places a heavy emphasis on demand obedience, obligation, responsibility, accountability, and “must” responses. The Christian faith and life are gifts of joyful participation in the life and mission of the triune God. Gift language calls for a more gracious tone and more explicit connections with God in one’s Church membership. The verbal changes also match this shift to participation.

- The overture proposes further changes to DRFOG G-1.0304 (The Ministry of Ministry of Members), notably, the list of expectations for faithful members. These changes fill out the items in the list and add several items pertaining to mutual prayer, concern, and support among members; engagement with the issues of faith and life; discerning and communing with the triune God at every point in life. Dropped are the instrumentalist duties of “demonstrating a new quality of life” and “responding to God’s activity in the world.”

b. Form of Government, Chapter 3, Councils of the Church

- The overture proposes to change DRFOG G-3.0107 (Administration in Mission), to remove and replace, as needed, the instrumentalist phrase, “should enable the Church to give effective witness in the world to the new reality of God in Jesus Christ.”

- The overture proposes similar changes to DRFOG G-3.02, 3.03, 3.04, and 3.05:

—The overture removes the instrumentalist language and equivalents in each of these sections: “guiding its witness to the sovereign activity of God in the world, so that the congregation [session, presbytery, synod, General Assembly] is and becomes the sign in and for the world of the new reality God has made available to people in Jesus Christ.”

—The overture recasts the duties/powers of session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly. In the DRFOG they are distributed according to the Reformation marks of the true Church—proclamation of the Word, administration of the Sacraments, exercise of ecclesiastical discipline. The basic idea is sound and makes these marks operational in a highly visible way. But the distribution of various powers/duties of the higher councils to these marks, especially the Sacraments, seems artificial and wooden at times. So, the overture suggests two divisions, worship (including both proclamation and sacraments) and discipleship (the follow-through of hearing/seeing/ discerning Christ at the center of worship).

—The foregoing leads to additional and alternative items for the duties and powers of the several councils. For example, the higher councils also need to make provisions for worship at their meetings; they need to establish and oversee committee and administrative structures; they need to develop mission statements of their own; and other refinements to the duties and powers.

Endnote

1. Modernism/Pietism refers to a historical period that dates from 1650, widely regarded as the end of the Reformation era, to 1950, extending perhaps to the present. For many people today, the current era is an era of transition or dramatic change called “Post-Modernism.” The era of Modernism thus includes the Enlightenment of the 18th Century with its deliberate emphasis on human reason and capabilities, and, since then, the dramatic developments in science and technology, political and economic institutions, and historical thinking. The term “Pietism” refers more specifically to the focus of the Christian Church during “Modernism.” The issues of Pietism still dominate the Church today. “Pietism” focuses on the inner self and experiences of the self in relationships with God, other people, and nature. Its main concerns are for salvation or reconciliation, namely, who is (saved), who is not, and by what means humans can become so, hence the accent on the Church’s mission to the World.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-13

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) to disapprove Item 06-13.

Rationale

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution wishes to express appreciation to the Presbytery of Foothills for its exhaustive and painstaking analysis of the proposed Foundations of Presbyterian Polity and Form of Government. It commends this sort of study to all presbyteries in the belief that a more careful understanding of our polity will lead to wiser and better decisions on the part of the whole church. The ACC advises the assembly to disapprove the overture, however, for two reasons.

1. The overture departs from the charge given to the task force to preserve the foundations of our polity.

The original charge to the Form of Government Task Force issued by the 217th General Assembly (2006) states, as its first point, “The new Form of Government shall preserve our foundational polity (perhaps most concisely laid out in the first four chapters of the current Form of Government)” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 366). While there is no constitutional bar to overtures that may seek to change substantively the principles put forth in these chapters, to do so as part of an amendment to a report that itself is bound by such a charge moves the debate outside of the parameters set forth by the originating action of the assembly, and should properly be submitted as a separate overture. The ACC finds the seismic shift in our foundational affirmations proposed by the overture to be unwarranted and unwise at this time.

The ACC also believes that changes to the foundations of our polity of the scope and magnitude proposed by the overture ought to be studied and considered by the whole church over a longer period of time. It was the intent of the originating action of the assembly that any revised Form of Government would be consistent with our current foundations so as not to erode the trust of the church in the work of the assembly. Should the assembly find sufficient warrant to consider the changes envisioned, the ACC advises the committee to refer the overture for further study. This may require amendment to section G-6.0501 of the proposed revised Form of Government so as to consider the overture in a timely manner.

The ACC bases its determination that the overture fails to preserve the foundations of our polity on the finding that the overture seeks to replace or substantively alter several foundations of our polity.

- Section G-2.0000, “The Church and Its Confessions” (F-2.0000) has additions and alterations that change the purpose of our confessions.
- Section G-3.0200, “The Church as the Body of Christ” (F-1.0301) has been omitted.
- Section G-3.0300, “The Church’s Calling” (F-1.0302) has been omitted.

- G-3.0400, “Called to Openness” (F-3.0304) has been omitted.
- G-4.0203, “Visible Oneness” (F-1.0302d) has been omitted.
- G-5.0102f–g portions of “The Meaning of Membership” have been omitted.

The rationale of the overture acknowledges that the purpose of these and other changes is to alter the foundational principles of our polity. The overture makes no mention of the material found in Chapters 4–6 of the proposed revised Form of Government; this advice assumes that these have been retained without amendment by the overture.

2. The overture proposes a Form of Government that departs from the theological foundations of our polity.

The omissions and alterations listed above, and others like them, have the effect of substantively changing the theological foundations of our polity. At the core of Item 06-13 is a distinction between two types of ecclesiology, or ways of understanding what the church is called to be and to do. The overture labels these ways of understanding the church “instrumentalist” and “participatory.”

According to the instrumentalist understanding of the church, those who are saved by God’s grace in Christ are called into a unique community that exhibits, in a limited and imperfect way, the kind of life God intends for the future of all creation, and is an instrument of God for sharing that life with the world. By contrast, according to the participatory understanding, the church is the community of those who, called by God’s grace, participate in the mission of God in the world. Unlike the instrumentalist understanding, in which what the church does emerges from what it is, in the participatory understanding, what the church is emerges from what it does. Put another way, from an instrumental perspective, “Where the Church is, there is Christ,” but from a participatory perspective, “Where Christ is, there is the Church.” The overture proposes that an instrumentalist understanding of the church is ultimately less faithful to our Reformed beliefs because it elevates the church inappropriately and does not take the sinfulness of the church with sufficient seriousness.

The Book of Order—particularly the foundational chapters—gives voice to both instrumentalist and participatory dimensions of the church’s identity and mission. These two are not mutually exclusive; rather, they complement and correct each other in both our polity and our confessions. This is affirmed in the Reformed conviction that the mission of the church is our grateful response to God’s prior act of grace. As the Confession of 1967 puts it, “To be reconciled to God is to be sent into the world as [God’s] reconciling community” (9.31, cf. 2 Cor. 5:17–20).

The Book of Confessions repeatedly affirms that the mission of God in Jesus Christ creates a new social reality, a new community of those whose lives are transformed by the grace of God and who now seek to lead lives which reflect that transformation. The confessions regularly connect God’s creation of the church and the call to the church to bear witness to God’s transforming grace (e.g., The Book of Confessions 5.125, 6.142, 8.17, 9.20). Our most recent confession expresses it clearly:

The Spirit justifies us by grace through faith, sets us free to accept ourselves and to love God and neighbor, and binds us together with all believers in the one body of Christ, the Church.

The same Spirit who inspired the prophets and apostles rules our faith and life in Christ through Scripture, engages us through the Word proclaimed, claims us in the waters of baptism, feeds us with the bread of life and the cup of salvation, and calls women and men to all ministries of the Church.

In a broken and fearful world the Spirit gives us courage to pray without ceasing, to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior, to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace. [The Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, 54–71, 10.4]

The “missional ecclesiology” presented in the proposed revised “Foundations of Presbyterian Polity” preserves this clear and consistent connection in our confessions between instrumentalist and participatory understandings of the church. For example:

- It begins with the declaration that “the sovereign mission of the one triune God—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—gives substance and form to the Church’s activity in the world,” and adds, “As the Church responds to God’s gracious call, it participates in the divine mission...” (F-1.0101).

- It affirms that Jesus Christ, as Lord and as Head of the Church, both calls the Church into being, and gives it all that is necessary for its mission to the world. Christ gives to the Church both its faith and its life, its unity and its mission, its order and its discipline (F-1.0201ff.).

- It describes the church as “the Body of Christ,” and as such, the church is called both to exhibit the new reality revealed in Jesus Christ in which “sin is forgiven ... reconciliation is accomplished ... [and] the dividing walls of hostility are torn down” and to undertake its mission as Christ did, “even at the risk of losing its life, trusting in God alone as the author and giver of life, sharing the gospel, and doing those deeds in the world that point beyond themselves to the new reality in Christ” (F-1.0301).

This last connection between God’s creation of the Church and God’s call to new life expressed in F-1.0301 has, notably, been omitted from the overture, along with the whole of the present G-3.0200.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the approach to Presbyterian government and polity taken by the task force proposal is both consistent with this confessional tradition of the church and reflects the foundational principles of our polity. The present overture, by advancing a participatory ecclesiology to the exclusion of those foundational elements that reflect an instrumentalist ecclesiology, departs from that tradition and those principles.

The rationale for the overture readily acknowledges that the overture intentionally omits instrumentalist elements from the Form of Government. It claims, however, that such a shift is more faithful to the confessional heritage of the church. The ACC notes, however, that the balance between instrumentalist and participatory views of the church in The Book of Confessions informs the language of the current chapter two of the Form of Government. This chapter is preserved nearly verbatim in the proposed revised Form of Government, but would be radically changed by the overture.

3. Other concerns

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution is also concerned by the tendency, present in the overture, to redefine the presence of the “true church” in a congregation in terms of the church’s faithfulness to the mission of the church apart from its organic connection to the larger church. In G-1.0101, for example, the overture changes the objective description found in the task force proposal that the congregation is “the church,” into a conditional, prescriptive statement of how a congregation could be “the church.” We believe this could embolden factions in congregations to assert, based on our own Form of Government, that they should be recognized as the “true church” on their claim that they more faithfully participate in God’s mission.

We are grateful to the Presbytery of Foothills for holding up for the church the importance of a participatory ecclesiology. However, that is only one part of our Presbyterian and Reformed understanding of what it means to be a missional church. Because the overture departs both from the charge to preserve the foundational principles of our polity and from important elements of our theology of the church as found in those principles, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly disapprove the overture.

Item 06-14

[The assembly disapproved Item 06-14. See pp. 21, 22.]

On Allowing Provisional Amendments to the Book of Order—From the Presbytery of Detroit.

The Presbytery of Detroit overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the Stated Clerk to send the following proposed amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Amend the Chapter XVIII of the Form of Government by inserting a new section, “G-18.0302,” and renumbering “G-18.0302” as “G-18.0303,” so that the text shall read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“Provisional Amendments

“a. The General Assembly may, by a 2/3 vote, appoint up to six volunteer presbyteries, with their congregations, to operate under a proposed amendment to the Book of Order for the purposes of experiment, field-testing, evaluation, and review. These presbyteries shall report their experience and make recommendations to the next biennial General Assembly.

“b. The authorization to operate under such provisional amendments shall expire at the next biennial General Assembly, unless that General Assembly sends the same or substantially the same amendment to the presbyteries for their approval. In such case, the volunteer presbyteries shall be authorized to operate under the new proposed amendment until it becomes clear that the presbyteries have not approved the amendment.

“Provisions Not to Be Amended [Rest of text remains unchanged.]”

Rationale

Many proposed amendments to the Book of Order are very complex and contain potential unforeseen consequences. This is certainly true with the Proposed Form of Government that will be proposed to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

Partly because of the sheer complexity of the New Form of Government, many are seeking to postpone it for some number of years so that the church can better study it.

If it is postponed, it is very possible that there will be little new hard data for the next General Assembly to use in evaluation.

Some have suggested letting a presbytery or two operate under the proposed Form of Government for an interim period, to allow for evaluation. The difficulty is that there is no provision authorizing the General Assembly to allow a governing body to operate under rules not approved by the presbyteries. This amendment will give that authority to the General Assembly by a 2/3 vote.

The effect of this amendment will be:

- Those presbyteries that have operated under the proposal will be able to report to the next General Assembly on what has and has not worked, and to make recommendations for amendments that will improve the proposal or that the proposal be abandoned.
- The rest of the church will be able to observe how well the proposed amendment does or does not work, and the next General Assembly will have better information on which to base its decision.
- In the event the General Assembly does later send the amendment to the presbyteries for their approval, the volunteer presbyteries will be available to the rest of the church for their advice on how it works. The advocacy for the proposed amendment can come from those who have worked with it rather than those who have written it, giving a different kind of credibility. The volunteer presbyteries will be able to respond to questions from experience with it, making it far more likely that the proposed amendment will be approved.

- The overall effect will be to improve the ability of the General Assembly and the presbyteries to discern the will of God in these kinds of complex matters.

This provision is designed to allow consideration of amendments that will affect how governing bodies are organized and conduct their business. It is not designed to test changes that merely allow things not currently allowed or that are prohibited.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 06-14

Advice on Item 06-14—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly to disapprove Item 06-14.

Rationale

Although the proposed constitutional amendment in this overture does not mention the report and recommendations of the Form of Government Task Force, the rationale does make reference to them. Because the impetus for this proposal seems to be an attempt to find a way to use well any time gained by delaying the FOG recommendations, the ACC advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) to answer this overture with the answer given to all of the overtures seeking a delay in approving the recommendations of the Form of Government Task Force.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) that the proposed amendment raises constitutional issues that affect how the Constitution would function as a foundational document of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The amendment proposed in this overture would allow the General Assembly to waive, for the purpose of experimentation, the application of explicit constitutional provisions in certain presbyteries before submitting an amendment to change those provisions to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes.

Second, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) that the approval of this proposed amendment would insert provisions into our Form of Government that would remain if the recommendations of the Form of Government Task Force are not ultimately adopted by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). An additional vote would be needed to remove these provisions.

Third, the text of the overture is unclear as to which functions of the presbytery would be subject to experimentation, what data would be gathered, who would gather the data, and how it would be used. The rationale for the overture states:

This provision is designed to allow consideration of amendments that will affect how governing bodies are organized and conduct their business. It is not designed to test changes that merely allow things not currently allowed or that are prohibited.

The practical implications of this distinction are not clear. The ACC advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) that the overture should be clarified by identifying with specificity the areas of presbytery or session responsibility that affect how governing bodies are organized and conduct their business and that should accordingly be open to experimentation, as well as by identifying with specificity the areas of presbytery or session responsibility that merely involve things that are not currently allowed or that are prohibited, as not open to experimentation.

Fourth, the overture does not take into account the role and responsibility of synods with respect to presbyteries in areas that some might include in the category of the organization, structure, or operation of the presbyteries. See, for example:

- a. G-9.0404b (consultation with governing bodies above and below),
- b. G-9.0405 (consultation to develop manual of operations),
- c. G-9.0407d(2) (general administrative review),
- d. G-9.0408 (special administrative review),
- e. G-9.0700b (election of executives), G-9.0702 (filling other administrative staff positions), G-11.0303 (presbytery consultation with synod),
- f. G-11.0103c (initiating mission in light of synod's strategy),
- g. G-11.0201 (synod directing presbytery to hold special meeting),

- h. G-11.0304 (budget recommendations from synod),
- i. G-11.0504 (presbytery COMs coordinated by synods), G-12.0102g (synod coordinating presbytery COMs, assisting in calls),
- j. G-12.0102c (synod developing joint plans and objectives with presbyteries),
- k. G-12.0102e (synod facilitating mission of presbyteries, criteria for evaluation),
- l. G-12.0102f (synod consultation with presbyteries), and
- m. G-12.0102n (synod review records of presbyteries).

Moreover, in some areas where presbyteries need to take extraordinary actions, the synod already has an accepted role in concurring with or approving the extraordinary course of action. See, for example, G-14.0472 (extraordinary circumstances for examination of candidates or inquirers) and G-17.0101 (authorizing union presbytery).

Fifth, the overture does not take into account the rights of a minority that does not wish to participate in experimentation within the presbytery. The rights of this minority to expect that their presbytery will organize itself and conduct its business according to the existing provisions of the Book of Order should not be infringed in advance of a legitimately adopted amendment.

As an alternative, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) that a procedure allowing the whole church to live provisionally under an amendment to the Book of Order would be more in keeping with our historic use of our Constitution than a provision that allowed for extraordinary waivers for local experimentation. If the 218th General Assembly (2008) concurs with this overture that the best way to ascertain the workability of the new Form of Government is to put it to work and see whether it meets the needs of the changing circumstances facing the church, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the assembly that the following action would accomplish that intent.

a. That the General Assembly submit to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote, the new proposed Form of Government as approved by the General Assembly as the provisional Form of Government for a period to conclude not later than the close of the 221st General Assembly (2014).

b. That, should a majority of the presbyteries vote in favor of the proposed new Form of Government, the ACC in consultation with the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) be directed to prepare a full evaluation of practice under the new Form of Government for each of the 219th (2010), 220th (2012), and 221st (2014) General Assemblies. The purpose of this evaluation would be to ascertain the impact of practice under the new Form of Government on the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in terms of its impact on ministry and mission and the governance of the church. Such evaluation would consider overtures sent to subsequent General Assemblies, and the use of judicial process and ways of dealing with conflictual issues, and shall ascertain how they have been impacted by adoption of a new Form of Government and shall bring a report to the 221st General Assembly (2014).

c. That the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, in consultation with the Office of the General Assembly, be directed to maintain a draft of Chapters V–XVIII of the 2008 Form of Government making such editorial changes as may be necessitated by amendments to the new Form of Government during this trial period.

d. That the 218th General Assembly (2008) refer to the 220th General Assembly (2012) a request to appoint a committee to review the biennial evaluations of practice and other available information, and bring a recommendation to the 221st General Assembly (2014) as to whether the new Form of Government shall be retained, or whether the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) should return to the 2007–2009 text.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-14

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-14—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 06-14 regards allowing provisional amendments to the Book of Order.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that this item be answered by the action taken on Item 06-02.

Item 06-15

[The assembly answered Item 06-05 by the action taken on Item 06-01. See pp. 21, 22.]

On Revising the FOG Report's G-2.0303b Regarding Temporary Pastoral Relationships—From the Presbytery of Philadelphia.

The Presbytery of Philadelphia overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to replace the language the Form of Government Task Force proposed in the second paragraph of their new G-2.0303b with the language proposed in Additional Recommendation #2 of the Form of Government Task Force's Additional Recommendations and offer the presbyteries the opportunity to vote on the task force's original proposal for the second paragraph of G-2.0303b as the Additional Recommendation. The proposed text for the second paragraph of G-2.0303b, as shown in the Additional Recommendations, is as follows:

“Titles and terms of service for temporary relationships shall be determined by the presbytery. A minister of the Word and Sacrament serving in a temporary pastoral relationship is invited for a specified period not to exceed twelve months in length, which is renewable with approval of the presbytery. ~~In no circumstance is a minister employed in a temporary pastoral relationship eligible to serve as the next installed pastor, co-pastor, or associate pastor except by a three-fourths vote of the presbytery.~~ A minister employed in a temporary pastoral relationship other than that of interim pastor may, with the approval of a three-fourths vote of the presbytery, be declared eligible to succeed as the next installed pastor, co-pastor, or associate pastor of the congregation served in a temporary capacity. Presbyteries may determine that the mission strategy of the presbytery necessitates a further limit on eligibility of temporary pastors to serve as the next installed pastor of a congregation served in a temporary capacity.”

Rationale

The lessons of the past are hard learned: that the role of the interim to address the critical issues of a congregation is severely curtailed when the interim seeks or is lobbied to seek the position for which they are the interim. The interim can no longer stand above the issues if they are seeking to please or otherwise be placed in a light to become the person filling the permanent position. A presbytery will be hard put to say no to a congregation that wants to consider their interim as the person to fill the permanent position. Being known gives the interim an unfair advantage in seeking the position and, if rejected, creates division in the congregation. Neither a presbytery nor its committee on ministry needs to be placed in that light.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-15

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-15—From the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC).

Item 06-15 urges revising the Form of Government (FOG) Task Force report's G-2.0303b regarding the temporary pastoral relationships.

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) advises that this item be answered by the action taken on Item 06-02.

Item 06-16

[The assembly answered Item 06-05 by the action taken on Item 06-01. See pp. 21, 22.]

On Amending the FOG Report by Retaining All References to the Committee on Representation—From the Presbytery of Philadelphia.

The Presbytery of Philadelphia overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to retain in the Form of Government all references to the Committee on Representation, specifically including but not limited to any sections in the proposed Form of Government that correspond to the current sections G-9.0105; G-9.0106; G-9.0801; G-11.0302; G-12.0301; and G-13.0108.

Rationale

At this time, the proposed Form of Government has no mechanism to assure equal representation of people from various, different ethnic groups and people of various abilities. While the proposed Form of Government does insist that there be equal representation, it is entirely too optimistic that presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly will seek equal representation. Racism is not dead in America or in the church. While we may sometimes think that racism is a thing of the past, it is not. Often it is unconscious. We need a group that will hold us to the task of making sure that all people have equal voice in our denomination.

Advice on Item 06-16—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) that Item 06-16 is not clear and consistent with its intent, and advises that the General Assembly answer this overture by its action on Item 06-01, Additional Recommendation C.4., in the report of the Form of Government Task Force.

Rationale

Item 06-16 purports to be a request to amend the text of the proposed Form of Government. The ACC has the responsibility to advise the General Assembly on proposed amendments to the Book of Order such as the proposal coming from the Form of Government Task Force. Item 06-16 does not propose any specific language to be added to or deleted from the recommendation of the task force. This silence prevents the ACC from fulfilling its responsibility to “examine the proposed amendment for clarity and consistency of language” (G-18.0301b).

As submitted the language of the overture is ambiguous in that it makes reference to provisions in the current Form of Government that have no corresponding provisions in the proposed Form of Government.

The ACC advises the assembly that Item 06-01, Additional Recommendation C.4., provides a way to address the need for structures that would advocate for representation, diversity, and inclusiveness consistent with the intention of the drafters of the proposed Form of Government not to mandate specific structures.

Without explaining what it does want the presbytery has made clear that the language of Item 06-01, Additional Recommendation C.4., is not what it seeks. It is possible that what the presbytery is requesting is for there to be a committee on representation mandated for every council of the church beyond the session.

The ACC notes that the Form of Government Task Force was specifically charged to “provide flexibility at all levels, granting authority while permitting governing bodies to develop the structures to carry out their respective missions” (Charge #4 by the 217th General Assembly (2006) to the task force). In service of this charge, the task force has regularly mandated functions but left to the discretion of particular councils the structures by which those functions are to be accomplished. In so doing, the proposed Form of Government anticipates the possibility that, while all councils shall be committed to principles of diversity and inclusiveness stated in F-3.0303, particular councils may and should find varying ways to live out those principles. Approval of the proposals contemplated in this overture would move our polity in the opposite direction from that contemplated in both the 217th General Assembly (2006)’s charge to the task force and the work of the task force itself.

If the General Assembly feels that provisions as detailed as those in the current G-9.0105, G-9.0106, G-9.0801c, G-11.0302, G-12.0301, and G-13.0108 should be drafted for inclusion in the proposed Form of Government, the ACC advises the assembly that the language in those provisions of the current Form of Government could be amended by replacing every instance of “governing body” with “council,” “governing bodies” with “councils,” “governing or electing body” with “council,” and “governing, electing, or appointing body” with “council,” and the phrase “fair representation of the categories of persons listed in G-4.0403” with the phrase “implementing the principles of diversity and inclusiveness found in F-3.0303”; by replacing “participation and representation (G-4.0403)” with “diversity and inclusiveness (F-3.0303)”; by striking the phrase “as required by G-9.0105” throughout; by striking the phrase “and in conformity with a churchwide plan for equal employment opportunity. (G-13.0201b)” in G-9.0105e; and by updating the references to G-9.0105a and G-9.0106a in the current G-9.0106.

The second paragraph of the proposed G-3.0104 would be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

~~“[Each council shall develop procedures and mechanisms for promoting and reviewing that body’s implementation of the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and representation.]”~~

“[a. Each council above the session shall elect a committee on representation, whose membership shall consist of equal numbers of men and women. A majority of the members shall be selected from the racial ethnic groups (such as Presbyterians of African, Hispanic, and Asian descent and Native Americans) within the council, and the total membership shall include persons from each of the following categories:

“(1) majority male membership

“(2) majority female membership

“(3) racial ethnic male membership

“(4) racial ethnic female membership

“(5) youth male and female membership

“[b. Its main function shall be to advise the councils with respect to their membership and to that of their committees, boards, agencies, and other units in implementing the principles of diversity and inclusiveness to ensure fair and effective representation in the decision making of the church.

“[c. The committee on representation shall serve both as an advocate for the representation of racial ethnic members, women, different age groups, and persons with disabilities, and as a continuing resource to the particular council in these areas. The committee on representation shall review the performance of its own council in these matters and shall report annually to it and to the next higher council with recommendations for any needed corrective action. The committee on representation shall consult with the nominating committee of its own council.

“[d. Prior to nomination or appointment of racial ethnic members to committees, boards, agencies, or other units, the committee on representation shall consult with the appropriate racial ethnic membership through a person or persons designated by that racial ethnic membership. In situations where racial ethnic membership is low, the committee on representation of each council shall consult with racial ethnic members, sessions, nominating committees, and persons designated by national racial ethnic membership to discover potential racial ethnic members of such body and to determine achievable representation. Prior to nomination or appointment of women to the above agencies, the committee on representation shall consult with the appropriate constituencies of women through a person or persons designated by those constituencies.

“[e. The committee on representation shall advise the council on the employment of personnel, in accordance with the principles of diversity and inclusiveness (F-3.0303).

“[f. The committee on representation shall not, in any council, be merged with any other committee or designated as a subcommittee of any other committee.

“[g. Exceptions to the provisions of G-3.0104a requiring a majority of the members to be selected from racial ethnic groups shall be allowed by a council only if it is unable to secure the participation or representation of the necessary persons, and this fact shall be made a part of the official record of the council. No exception is permitted to the requirement that each council above the session elect a committee on representation.

“[h. An exception under G-3.0104g may be allowed for up to one year by council action at a meeting. The approval of such exception shall be promptly reported by the stated clerk to the next higher council through its stated clerk and committee on representation, which committee shall monitor the lower council and its committee on representation during the period of the exception.

“[i. The nominating committee shall consult, at least annually, with the committee on representation of its own council. If the committee on representation of that council has been granted an exception under the provisions of G-3.0104g, the committee on representation of the next higher council shall be invited to participate in that consultation.]”

“[The presbytery’s committee on representation shall advise presbytery’s nominating committee of any need for nominations in particular categories needing increased representation and shall regularly inform the presbytery of its progress toward implementing the principles of diversity and inclusiveness found in F-3.0303.]”

“Each synod shall establish a committee on representation, which shall advise synod’s nominating committee of any need for nominations in particular categories needing increased representation. The committee on representation shall report at least biennially to synod progress toward implementing the principles of diversity and inclusiveness found in F-3.0303.]””

“The General Assembly shall establish a permanent Committee on Representation, which shall advise the General Assembly Nominating Committee of any need for nominations in particular categories needing increased representation. The Committee on Representation shall report to each meeting of the General Assembly (other than special or adjourned meetings) regarding progress toward implementing the principles of diversity and inclusiveness found in F-3.0303.]””

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 06-16

Advice and Counsel on Item 06-16—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 06-16 urges revising the Form of Government (FOG) Task Force report’s G-3.0104 regarding committees to advocate for diversity.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that this item be answered by the action taken on Item 06-02.

Appendix A

Unedited Comments from Subcommittees

1. Foundations of Presbyterian Polity

Some consider the current 1-4 chapters as being so well respected in broad areas of reformed faith. Some consider the theology and polity as especially well stated in these four chapters and would not want to set up a new section called “Foundations of Presbyterian Polity.”

2. F-1.0302b

Delete “all genders and ages “ and use “both genders and all ages” Seems reasonable

3. F-1.01

Author’s comment: “In the foundation F-101 God’ Mission should be expanded to include what is in G 30101a. The absence of the theological perspective of the Book of Order reference is concerning and would improve the focus on mission that nFOG proposes.

4. 1.0302c

Replace “work with witness; replace “through scripture” with “in scripture”

5. F-1.01

Strike the first sentence of the first paragraph of F 1.01. Thought is that the doctrine of creation needs to precede starting with mission. Thought is that second sentence is the better starting place.

6. F-1.01.02

Replace “Word” with “in the Word of scripture”

7. F-1.02.03

Remove “in so far as” in the second sentence which is directly quoted from the Book of Order

8. F-1.0302b

Replace “for” and insert “to”

9. F-1.0302c

Replace “suffering” with “suffering and redemptive love”

10. F-1.0302c

After “Sin of the World” and “Forgiveness is...” add “a gift to be received through faith

11. F-1.01

Title seems presumptive to say “God’s mission” instead of “the Church and its mission” Seems more Reformed to not claim absolutely to know God’s mission.

12. F-101

Take out “...the sovereign mission of the...” to allow that we do not know exactly what God’s mission is. Strike “impoverished.” and just use “poor.”

13. F-1.0201

Strike “authority” and use “power.” Add “who raised Christ from the dead and set him above all rule and authority, all power and dominion, and every name that is named.”

14. F-1.0202

Add, “exercising his authority by the ministry of women and men for the establishment and extension of his kingdom.” Leaving this statement out reduces Christ’s mission.

15. F-1.0203

Use “his” instead of “the” in reference to the Church. Focus on the possessive. Use “officers,” to apply to order and discipline.

16. F-1.0205

Add whole paragraph, “Jesus came to seek and to save the lost; in his life and death for others, God’s redeeming love for all people was made visible and in the resurrection of Jesus Christ there is the assurance of God’s victory over sin and earth and the promise of God’s continuing presence in the world.” Restore G- 3.0102”. Section needs a clearer Title to reflect the content of the section on the foundation of the church.

17. F-1.0205

Strike from “reconciliation....another” and add life and death to redeem all people. In the resurrection of Jesus Christ there is the assurance of God’s victory over sin and death and the promise of god’s continuing presence in the world.”

18. F-1.0302a

Add to start second paragraph: The church is called to tell the good news of salvation a the grace of God through faith in Jesus Christ as the only Savior and Lord.” which is taken from G-3.0300a add “and” at end of paragraph starting “demonstrating...”

19. F-1.0302

20. F-1.0302c

After “sin of the world” add, “Forgiveness is a gift to be received through faith.”

21. F-1.0301

The Church “as” the Body of Christ.

Sin is forgiven”;

Reconciliation is accomplished”; and”

22. F-1.0302

Two places keep BOO language G-30300c3b and c: do not take out “and the powerless”

23. F-1.030203c

Do not take out “Fear” nor “hunger, and injustice”

Key:“(...)” – proposed language to delete

“.....” – proposed language to add

The election of the people of God for service as well as for salvation;

Covenant life marked by a disciplined concern for order in the church according to the Word of God;

A faithful stewardship that shuns ostentation and seeks proper use of the gifts of God’s creation; and

Motion 38 – F-3.01 Historic principles of Church Order

The Presbyterian system of government calls for continuity with and faithfulness to the heritage that lies behind the contemporary church. In setting . . .

-Do not concur with this recommendation. This suggests that “continuity with and faithfulness” is not consistent with a church that is reforming. The proposals set forth in the nFOG does not deviate from the Book of Order

Motion 39 – F-3.0102 Right of Self Determination

Change Right of Self-determination to Corporate Judgment

-Note the change in title but suggest a third title be considered to better reflect the content of the paragraph.

Motion 40 - F-3.0105 Mutual Forbearance

To restore the original title

Motion 41 – F 3.0106 Right of Election of Officers

Motion 44 – F-3.0203 Gathered in Councils

-Do not concur with this recommendation. Historic information is not needed in the new Form of Government.

Motion 45 – F-3.0209 General Authority of Councils

Add: at the end: The jurisdiction of each council is limited . . . with powers not mentioned for either it or a higher -level council . . .

-Do not concur because that would change our present polity. Power does not devolve to the lowest council.

Motion 46 – F-3.0302

Several changes suggested that would change this section back to the former Book of Order

-Do not concur. This group prefers the newer language.

3. Would an absence of definitions of rights & responsibilities lead to abuse of power?
4. How would a new Form of Government affect the culture of the Church?
5. Concern regarding the separation of the Foundations part for independent approval.

7. If the new FoG is approved, what happens to the "Annotated" Book of Order?
8. Concern that the new FoG might move us away from the essential elements of faith? (Does "flexibility" mean that God and scripture are no longer guiding authorities?)
9. Concern about becoming "congregational" in polity.
10. Concern about the section on validated ministry (G-2.03)
11. Issues of trust: will this ultimately reflect trust or do we use it to build trust?

Item 07-01

[The assembly approved Item 07-01 as amended. See pp. 14, 15.]

On Calling for Tolerance and Peaceful Relations Between the Christian and Muslim Communities—From the Presbytery of Newton.

The Presbytery of Newton overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Commend to the church for study the actions of previous General Assemblies calling for tolerance, mutual respect, and peaceful relations between the Christian and Muslim communities.

2. State that ~~[the PC(USA) affirms that Jews, Christians, and Muslims worship a common God, <sup>1</sup>although each understands that God differently; and] [though we hold differing understandings of how God has been revealed to humankind, the PC(USA) affirms]~~ that, as children of this loving God, we share the commandments of love for God and neighbor<sup>2</sup>, the requirement to care for the poor~~]; and acknowledge Abraham as an expression of our common commitment to one God].~~

3. Build on this understanding by calling for further dialogue among Jews, Christians, and Muslims, viewing each other as equals, and learning from one another to

- promote peace, resolve conflict;
- ensure human rights, prevent discrimination;
- develop dialogue, emphasize commonality;
- recognize differences, celebrate diversity;
- advocate justice, oppose bias.

4. Commend the First Presbyterian Church of Rockaway and other Presbyterian congregations that have initiated dialogue with Muslim and Jewish communities, and to encourage other congregations to initiate three-way dialogues among Jews, Christians, and Muslims consistent with the Presbyterian Principles for Interfaith Dialogue<sup>3</sup>.

- To encourage congregations of these faiths to celebrate religious holidays together, setting aside days of worship during which there can be congregational suppers, and dialogue groups.<sup>4</sup>

- To encourage sustained activities that will promote understanding, respect, and good will, using worship resources and promotional materials prepared by the Offices of Interfaith Relations and Theology and Worship, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, and other General Assembly Council (GAC) and Office of the General Assembly (OGA) offices as appropriate.

5. Commission a study on Islam and Christian-Muslim relations that would have the same scope and authority as the 1987 study on Christian-Jewish relations<sup>5</sup>, to be carried out by the Interfaith Relations and Theology and Worship Offices of the General Assembly Council.

6. Call for identification of violations of the civil rights of Christians, Jews, and Muslims in the United States and other areas of the world, along with other incidents of violation of religious freedoms, as part of the regular human rights report to the General Assembly.<sup>6</sup>

[Financial Implications: (2008): $190; (2009): $6,390; (2010): $6,376 (Mission)]

Rationale

Actions of the General Assemblies in 1987<sup>7</sup>, 1993<sup>8</sup>, 1999<sup>9</sup>, 2002<sup>10</sup>, 2004<sup>11</sup>, and 2006<sup>12</sup> encourage dialogue among Christianity, Islam, and Judaism to promote working together for peace, justice, and righteousness.

A denominational pamphlet, Christians and Muslims in Dialog: Facets of Relationships<sup>13</sup>, urges support in the search to promote understanding by getting to know and become friends with Muslim neighbors, identifying and counteracting prejudicial and abusive behavior, and being sensitive to stereotypical characterizations of Islam and Muslims.

Prejudice, discrimination, and injustice continue to be pervasive in our society toward our Muslim brothers and sisters, where individuals are judged in stereotypical ways, where jobs are threatened, where apprehensions remain about the threats of detention, and where unfair characterizations of individual Muslims are often made.

Little dialogue has actually taken place between the Christian and Muslim communities.

In this chaotic world, there is an urgency to be proactive in the search for peace and understanding, building bridges of harmony among other faith traditions, and striving to bring peace to the world.

That while affirming these actions, they have not always worked as intended because they do not recognize a common theological basis for shared dialogue and while the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)) has already affirmed that Jews and Christians worship the same God, we have not given our Muslim brothers and sisters the same recognition<sup>14</sup>, and where dialogue between the religions has begun at local levels, it has often broken down because of lack of a clear statement by the PC(USA) that establishes areas of theological agreement.

All human beings are created in the image of God (Gen. 1:27) and we who follow Jesus are called to love one another as he loves us (John 15:13–17).

“In sovereign love God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community” (The Book of Confessions, 10.3, lines 29–32).

The prior affirmation between the PC(USA) and Jews was deemed acceptable while maintaining our firm belief in the triune nature of God as revealed throughout the New Testament<sup>15</sup>. So, too, are the affirmations extended to Muslims in this overture. The Qur’anic message taught by Muhammad is that of a special regard for Christians and Christianity and the Qur’an is the only Holy Book other than the New Testament that describes the miraculous birth of Jesus.<sup>16</sup>

Therefore, in this chaotic world, we see this as an essential foundation on which to become proactive in overcoming stereotyping, discrimination, bias, and misunderstandings; building bridges of harmony among other faith traditions; and striving to bring peace to the world.

As an example, people from diverse faith traditions formed a group which participates in interfaith dialogue and has gained a better understanding of Christianity, Islam, and Judaism, and is working for better harmony among them. The success of this group resulted in development of this overture, which has been adopted by the Session of First Presbyterian Church of Rockaway, New Jersey.

The Presbytery of Newton embraces this peacemaking approach espoused by one of its congregations and wishes to promote it throughout the denomination.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)

Item 07-01 calls for tolerance and peaceful relations between the Christian and Muslim communities.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that this item be approved.

Rationale

Historically, General Assemblies have encouraged interfaith dialogue, especially among Christians, Jews, and Muslims.

Muslims in the U.S. are often identified with terrorism, calling for working together with our neighbors for peace, justice, and righteousness.

The prejudice towards Muslims in the U.S. reflects a growing conflation of religion and racial and ethnic identity. Examples of this bias are seen in the extremes of arrests and detention to everyday mistreatment at work and in neighborhoods, seemingly based on their religious identity. The ACREC believes this kind of dialogue can help combat growing racial stereotypes.

We are able to fight anti-Semitism on a local level because, as a denomination, we affirm that Jews and Christians worship the same God. For the same reason, we need to affirm this theological basis that we share with Islam, which is one of the three Abrahamic Faiths.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 07-01

Comment on Item 07-01—From the General Assembly Council.

This overture builds on earlier actions of the General Assembly, and identifies work already being done by the church to build relations of understanding, respect, and mutual witness between Presbyterians and Muslims in the United States and other areas of the world. Most of the documents regarding interfaith relations cited in the overture are available for reference at <http://www.pcusa.org/interfaith/tools.htm>.

The overture does not detail the many efforts underway to build relations. It is not possible to include all that is being done internationally. Note work such as that of Presbyterian-founded institutions, including the Christian Study Center, Rawalpindi, Pakistan; the Henry Martyn Institute, Hyderabad, India; or the Institute for the Study of Religion and Culture at Payap University, Chiang Mai, Thailand. Presbyterians participate in and support activities of Middle Eastern partners building a culture of understanding and reconciliation between Christians and Muslims: the Arab Group on Christian-Muslim Relations; the Forum for Development, Culture and Dialogue; the Coptic Evangelical Organization for Social Services Department of Communications and Forum for Intercultural Dialogue (Egypt); the Middle East Council of Churches' Christian-Muslim Program; and the Near East School of Theology Annual Interfaith Lecture Series (Lebanon). The PC(USA) contributes toward the appointment of an Islamic professor at NEST.

Presbyterians support the work of the Programme for Christian-Muslim Relations in Africa and the Interfaith Resource and Research Center of Ghana. Through the Indonesian Consortium for Religious Studies in Yogyakarta, Indonesia, secular, Muslim, and Christian universities are cosponsoring a new approach in doctoral education, in which sincere believers of Islam and Christianity study their religions together, with professors from three universities teaching in pairs. Presbyterians are also engaged with church partners in interfaith efforts for peace and justice in conflict situations such as the work of the United Church of Christ of the Philippines in Mindanao, and in addressing interreligious situations in which the religious liberties and lives of Christians have been endangered.

In the U.S., the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has established relationships with seven national Muslim organizations (see <http://www.pcusa.org/interfaith/initiative.htm>), and is engaged in efforts of dialogue, social policy advocacy, and education in particular with the Islamic Society of North America, the Muslim Public Affairs Council, and the mosques affiliated with Imam Warith Deen Mohammed.

In regard to the proposed study, the Offices of Interfaith Relations and Theology and Worship advise that this work will require at least two small consultations with Muslim colleagues, and call on the gifts of a small group of Presbyterians from a variety of perspectives and pursuits in the church. Such a study will have financial implications that have been separately identified, and will require funds development. Such a study may require time and commitment beyond the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Item 07-02

On Response to an Invitation to Interfaith Dialogue—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to support A Common Word Between Us and You, an invitation to dialogue and cooperation from 138 Muslim clerics, and to commend this document to our congregations, governing bodies, and seminaries for study and consideration as a primary source for engaging in substantive interfaith dialogue with the goal of greater understanding and cooperation among members of the Abrahamic faith traditions as the pathway to a new era of global peace and justice.

Rationale

On 11 October 2007, 138 leaders and scholars of the global Muslim community issued the document, A Common Word Between Us and You. The document is historic in that it is the first time in the history of Islam that its leadership has asked Christians, as the document puts it, "... to come together with us on the common essentials of our two religions ... that we shall worship none but God, and that we shall ascribe no partner unto Him, and that none of us shall take others for lords beside God ..." [page 15, italics in the original, the word lords is lowercase], and that "the basis of all future interfaith dialogue between us, for our common ground is that on which hangs all the Law and the Prophets (Matthew 22:37–40), referring to our duty to love God and neighbor."

The invitation to dialogue acknowledges that “Finding common ground between Muslims and Christians is not simply a matter for polite ecumenical dialogue between selected religious leaders ... our common future is at stake. The very survival of the world itself is perhaps at stake.”

It is now the responsibility of Christians to respond to this invitation in the recognition that, as the statement, A Common Word Between Us and You points out: “together Christians and Muslims make up 55% of the world’s population” and, “If Muslims and Christians are not at peace, the world cannot be at peace.”

A Common Word Between Us and You [Summary and Abridgement]

Muslims and Christians together make up well over half of the world’s population. Without peace and justice between these two religious communities, there can be no meaningful peace in the world. The future of the world depends on peace between Muslims and Christians.

The basis for this peace and understanding already exists. It is part of the very foundational principles of both faiths: love of the One God, and love of the neighbour. These principles are found over and over again in the sacred texts of Islam and Christianity. The Unity of God, the necessity of love for Him, and the necessity of love of the neighbour is thus the common ground between Islam and Christianity. The following are only a few examples:

Of God’s Unity, God says in the Holy Qur’an: Say: He is God, the One! / God, the Self-Sufficient Besought of all! (Al-Ikhlās, 112:1-2). Of the necessity of love for God, God says in the Holy Qur’an: So invoke the Name of thy Lord and devote thyself to Him with a complete devotion (Al-Muzzammil, 73:8). Of the necessity of love for the neighbour, the Prophet Muhammad r said: “None of you has faith until you love for your neighbour what you love for yourself.”

In the New Testament, Jesus Christ u said: ‘Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is One. / And you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your mind, and with all your strength.’ This is the first commandment. / And the second, like it, is this: ‘You shall love your neighbour as yourself.’ There is no other commandment greater than these.” (Mark 12:29-31)

In the Holy Qur’an, God Most High enjoins Muslims to issue the following call to Christians (and Jews—the People of the Scripture):

Say: O People of the Scripture! Come to a common word between us and you: that we shall worship none but God, and that we shall ascribe no partner unto Him, and that none of us shall take others for lords beside God. And if they turn away, then say: Bear witness that we are they who have surrendered (unto Him). (Aal ‘Imrān 3:64)

The words: we shall ascribe no partner unto Him relate to the Unity of God, and the words: worship none but God, relate to being totally devoted to God. Hence they all relate to the First and Greatest Commandment. According to one of the oldest and most authoritative commentaries on the Holy Qur’an the words: that none of us shall take others for lords beside God, mean ‘that none of us should obey the other in disobedience to what God has commanded’. This relates to the Second Commandment because justice and freedom of religion are a crucial part of love of the neighbour.

Thus in obedience to the Holy Qur’an, we as Muslims invite Christians to come together with us on the basis of what is common to us, which is also what is most essential to our faith and practice: the Two Commandments of love.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 07-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 07-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 07-02 calls for the 218th General Assembly (2008) to support A Common Word Between Us and You for study and use as a primary source for engaging in interfaith dialogue.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) the 218th General Assembly advises Item 07-02 be approved.

Rationale

In keeping with previous statements of the General Assembly, an acceptance of this invitation for dialogue and an encouragement to various entities within the PC(USA) demonstrates our words are being actualized.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 07-02

Comment on Item 07-02—From the General Assembly Council.

The action that the overture recommends to the assembly is both consistent with General Assembly policy, and part of a stream of significant Christian responses to the invitation made in A Common Word.

In adopting the Study on Islam in 1987, the 199th General Assembly (1987) urged “the dissemination and use by local congregations and other groups of ... materials in Islam and interfaith relations, which present a wide theological approach and viewpoint concerning Christian and Muslim relations” and recommended “coordinating the development and distribution of additional resources for study and reflection as they become available.” That assembly also called on seminaries and church-related colleges and campus ministries to promote programs on Islam and Christian-Muslim relations, and suggested that “Presbyterians ... take every opportunity to come to know and become friends with their Muslim neighbors” (Minutes, 1987, Part I, paragraph 31.327). The Office of Interfaith Relations, created in part in response to the recommendations included in this study, has worked consistently since 1988 to provide resource materials and support such efforts.

“A Common Word Between Us and You” is an invitation to such understanding from a remarkably diverse group of Muslims worldwide, including sixteen notable Muslim leaders in the United States. In welcoming the document, Stated Clerk Clifton Kilpatrick said, “I urge Presbyterians to read this letter from the Muslim community, to continue to build honest, searching, and respectful relations with Muslims in our local communities and in our nation, and to seek opportunities for common action where compatible means and ends exist.” Responses to it have also been made by a wide variety of Christian leaders and institutions (see <http://www.acommonword.com/index.php?lang=en&page=responses>). The Presbyterian Church (USA) is actively involved in the process of crafting an ecumenical theological response to “A Common Word” through the Interfaith Relations and Faith and Order Commissions of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. This response, after appropriate review by the churches, will be issued by the NCCC at its fall meeting in 2008, and will then be available for study along with “A Common Word.” The Office of Interfaith Relations will ensure that a guide for use of the two documents will also be ready by that time.

[The assembly referred Item 07-03 to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations. See pp. 14, 15.]

On Investigating the Actions and Conduct of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church—From the Presbytery of Peace River.

The Presbytery of Peace River respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to request the Executive Office of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches to investigate the actions and conduct of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church, as described below, and to take appropriate action.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is in correspondence with the Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC) because both denominations are members of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC).

The Evangelical Presbyterian Church is actively pursuing a strategy to persuade Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) churches to disaffiliate with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and be dismissed to the Evangelical Presbyterian Church.

The Evangelical Presbyterian Church has created a transitional Evangelical Presbyterian Church Presbytery to facilitate the process.

GACER COMMENT ON ITEM 07-03

Comment on Item 07-03—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER).

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) to refer Item 07-03 to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations.

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations is charged with the responsibilities to act on and process recommendations and proposals addressing ecclesiastical ecumenical work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and to give guidance to the nurturing of unity among Presbyterian and Reformed churches in the U.S.A., with one another and with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In addition, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations seeks to work with our ecumenical agencies in addressing issues of mutual concern.

Item 07-03 raises significant issues about our ecclesiastical relationships with another Reformed Church and implications for our ecumenical relationships. Referral of Item 07-03 to the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations would allow them to carry out their responsibilities both with another Reformed church and the World Alliance of Reformed Churches.

2. Give the following directions in implementing the covenant:
  - a. Direct the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations to appoint members to serve on a joint implementation committee.
  - b. Direct the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council to convene tables to develop processes and procedures for the orderly exchange of ministers and the orderly transfer of churches.
  - c. Direct that the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council report these processes and procedures to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Comment:* The value of the covenant within these two denominations will depend in great measure on agreement about implementation, which will take place across all governing bodies of both denominations. Therefore, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations, the Office of the General Assembly, and the General Assembly Council are urged to consult with presbyteries and synods that have direct experience of working with the Korean Presbyterian Church in America.

Rationale

The Joint Committee on Cooperation Between the Korean Presbyterian Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was established by the 204th General Assembly (1992) of the PC(USA) and the 17th General Assembly of the Korean Presbyterian Church in America (KPCA). Believing that their work over the past fifteen years has brought them to a point of being able move into a deeper relationship between the two churches, the joint committee is recommending to our respective General Assemblies that covenant relationship be established.

Constitutionally, for the PC(USA), this covenant agreement is based upon G-13.0103s (establish and maintain ecumenical relationships that will enlarge the life and mission of the church); G-11.0405 (receiving ministers from churches with which we are in correspondence and full communion); G-15.0200 (Relations with Other Denominations); and G-16.0000 (Union Churches). It is the intent that covenant is to provide the same authority for our presbyteries as was given them under the Formula of Agreement and accompanying constitutional amendments.

COVENANT RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE KOREAN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN AMERICA AND
THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)

“I therefore, the prisoner in the Lord, beg you to lead a life worthy of the calling to which you have been called, with all humility and gentleness, with patience, bearing with one another in love, making every effort to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body and one Spirit, just as you were called to the one hope of your calling, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all and through all and in all.” Ephesians 4:1–6 (NRSV)

I. History of Relationship

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [PC(USA)] and the Korean Presbyterian Church in America (KPCA) are denominations with common roots and commitments in the Reformed tradition. The emotional ties are the legacy of their mission history. Protestant Christianity in Korea began through the sending of U.S. Presbyterian missionaries to Korea in 1885. Over the past century, Presbyterians in Korea have demonstrated phenomenal growth despite their difficult experiences of suffering. They have become genuine partners in mission and ecumenical engagement not only in Korea and Asia, but also throughout the world.

In the middle of the 1960s, the U.S. immigration law changed, opening the doors for many Koreans to immigrate to the United States. This started a new page in the history of Korean Presbyterians. Unfortunately, the PC(USA) was unprepared to welcome and accept the large number of Korean Presbyterians into its life. While some Koreans joined the PC(USA), some felt the need to establish an independent Korean Presbyterian Church in the United States. Each of these organized groupings of Korean American Presbyterian churches has contributed to the growth and development of the Presbyterian witness in the United States through its unique gifts and calling.

After many years of informal cooperation between leadership of the two churches, the 204th General Assembly (1992) of the PC(USA) and the 17th General Assembly (1992) of the KPCA authorized the establishment of the Joint Committee on Presbyterian Cooperation Between the PC(USA) and the KPCA. Over the past thirty years, the joint committee has focused its work in the areas of ministries and education, global mission, peace, justice, reconciliation, and church polity. Of particular note, is the opportunity that Korean Americans born and raised in the United States present for our churches to move from immigrant-focused ministries to ministries directed toward future generations. The work of the joint committee has been important in shaping the relationship between the PC(USA) and the KPCA.

The joint committee believes that God is calling us to move to a deeper relationship between the KPCA and the PC(USA) and to request our General Assemblies to declare covenant relationship between the two churches. Covenant relationship establishes a formal mutual commitment in our ecclesial and missional life together. The nature of covenant relationship is a call to mutuality based upon core theological principles.

II. Mutual Recognition and Reconciliation

A. As churches within the Reformed tradition, each holding membership in the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, we recognize each other as churches in which the gospel is preached, sacraments are rightly administered according to the Word of God, and the mission of Jesus Christ is lived out.

B. Baptism marks us as belonging to Christ and Christ’s church. According to Scripture, there is “one Lord, one faith, one baptism” (Eph. 4:5). To that end, we recognize the baptism of each of our churches and welcome one another’s members as brothers and sisters in Christ. We recognize that it is Christ that has showed us the way of self-sacrificing love and given to us the Sacrament of the Lord’s Supper to remember this love and to be fed with the bread of life and the cup of salvation. We encourage the sharing in the Lord’s Supper together in all arenas of the church.

C. Christ has entrusted the ministry of the gospel to all of his disciples, calling us to follow him in the way of love, righteousness, peace, and justice. Ordination is the act by which men and women are set aside for particular ministries of the Church. We identify and name these ministries as deacon, elder, and minister of Word and Sacrament. We recognize that the calling and setting aside of persons for service in the church and the world is for the sake of the mission of Christ. We recognize the authenticity of one another's ordination of ministers, elders, and deacons.

D. The church lives to fulfill the mission of God in the world. The church does not live for its own sake, but seeks to witness to the saving work of Jesus Christ, the transformative power of the gospel, justice and reconciliation in all areas of its life and witness. God's gift of unity strengthens the witness of the church. While divisions within the church cannot destroy the mission of the church, they do serve as distractions to the message and the mission of the church. We recognize that the mission of our churches is strengthened by commitment to work cooperatively in the areas of congregational support, resource and leadership development, national and global mission.

III. Covenant Commitments

A. We covenant to support one another through prayer, dialogue, and continued cooperative work. Through mutual affirmation and admonition, we covenant to an honest relationship in which our joys are celebrated, our trials are shared, and disagreements are addressed with the goal of strengthening this covenant. We will seek to affirm the witness of our churches and when necessary speak loving words of correction for the edification of the body of Christ.

B. While we recognize each other's ministries as authentic, we covenant to develop a process of orderly exchange of ministers. This provision will be governed by the principle that the presbyteries decide who shall be members and approves calls for service in churches. This process will allow for ministers to share in the ministry of each other's churches, identify processes for transferring ministers, and the procedures for ministers to be dually affiliated. This process will only apply to ministers who are in good standing and include processes for discipline in accordance with our individual polities.

C. We recognize that we are one family and our congregations have common roots. Many Koreans within the PC(USA) and in the KPCA have shared roots in Korea. We covenant to develop a process of orderly transfer of congregations. This process will encourage, where feasible, congregations to share together in ministry and to be dually affiliated. We covenant to develop a process that seeks to strengthen the witness of our churches and not to contribute to divisions within the body of Christ. This process will be developed in a way that respects our individual polities.

D. We recognize that there is much we share in mission together. We covenant to continue to work together in the following areas of mission and pray that other areas may also emerge—curriculum development; second generation and youth and young adult ministry; congregational support and leadership development; women's leadership and resource development; global mission and justice and reconciliation in the world.

IV. Enabling Acts

A. This covenant will be forwarded to our General Assemblies through the appropriate channels in each of our churches for action by 2008.

B. Our assemblies will be asked to enter into covenant relationship, make the necessary constitutional amendments to enable this covenant, and to forward it to presbyteries for ratification.

C. Upon the ratification by presbyteries, covenant relationship will be established and a service of worship celebrating and formally entering into covenant relationship will be held by 2010.

D. A covenant implementation committee will be established to shape and support the covenanting process and to make recommendations that enable us to live fully into this covenant.

V. Prayer for the Future

We offer thanksgiving to you O God, Creator of the Universe, Lord of all peoples. You sent the gospel to Korea through the work of Presbyterian missionaries. Through the power of the Holy Spirit, you have nurtured the faith of Koreans in the midst of difficult sufferings and we witnessed the growth of the church in Korea and amongst Korean Presbyterians in the United States. We recognize that while there has been a separation because of human limitations, you have continued to work in and through each of our churches. You have taken our differences in culture, custom, and language and made us one family in Christ. We are grateful that you are bringing us to this time of deeper relationship and seek your guidance and blessing as we make this covenant between the Korean Presbyterian Church in America and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for now and generations to come.

“Now to him who by the power at work at within us is able to accomplish abundantly far more than all we can ask or imagine, to him be glory in the church and in Christ Jesus to all generations, forever and ever. Amen.”
(Eph. 3: 20–21 (NRSV))

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 07-04

Advice on Item 07-04—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve Item 07-04.

Rationale

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that this proposal comes under the provisions of G-13.0103s, giving the General Assembly the responsibility and power “to establish and maintain those ecumenical relationship that will enlarge the life and mission of the church[.]” It complies with the provisions of G-15.0201 and G-15.0302c. If it is approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008) and a majority of the presbyteries, it will be published as a Received Ecumenical Statement of Guidance. As such it will provide the same authority for the Korean Presbyterian Church in America and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to explore and carry out shared ministries that the “Formula of Agreement” provides for the four partner churches that that adopted it.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution further notes that the “Covenant Relationship” document provides for specific other steps listed in Section IV. Enabling Acts. The completion of these steps is critical to enable the full expression of the partnership that the covenant envisions.

Item 07-05

[The assembly approved Item 07-05 as amended. See pp. 14, 15.]

Ecumenical Policy Statement—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Approve “The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” as a policy statement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

2. Reaffirm the commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to work with other ecclesial and mission bodies through our historic conciliar relationships of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the National Council of Churches, and the World Council of Churches; and continue our support and participation in the governance and mission of these ecumenical agencies, while at the same time strengthening links and relationships among ecumenical efforts at all levels.

3. Direct the General Assembly Council and the Office of the General Assembly to develop materials based on the Ecumenical Stance of the PC(USA) for use with local congregations.

~~3.~~ 4. Direct the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations to monitor the implementation of the policy and the development of congregational materials within the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council, and report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church in the U.S. and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. both held consultations on the ecumenical work of the church in 1975 and 1981. Recognizing that much has changed both in the Presbyterian church and in the ecumenical movement over the last twenty-five years, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations called for a Consultation on the Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The mandate of the consultation was to “to review our ecumenical vision and construct an ecumenical stance and policy to guide the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) staff and elected bodies for the next ten years.”

The Ecumenical Stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

Introduction

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its antecedent churches have been at the forefront of local, regional, national, and global ecumenism for more than a century. Presbyterians have been ready to reflect on, pray for, and organize ecumenical initiatives in the life of the worldwide body of Christ and respond to the initiatives of others. From discussions of organic union to the formation of councils of churches, from common efforts in evangelism and mission to upholding concerns for justice and social service, Presbyterians have been deeply involved in the ecumenical work and witness of the church. The Presbyterian church has put considerable material, spiritual, and personnel resources into the ecumenical movement, working to “listen to what the Spirit is saying to the churches” and respond in creative ways to our ecumenical calling.

In 1975 and 1981, the Presbyterian Church in the United States and the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America held ecumenical consultations that were important milestones on this ecumenical journey. No such consultation had ever been held in the PC(USA). In 2006, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) decided it was time to call for a new churchwide consultation on the ecumenical stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Giving thoughtful and prayerful attention to new directions in ecumenism, as well as to the historic Presbyterian commitment to conciliar ecumenical organizations, the GACER believed the PC(USA) should go beyond the ecumenical vision statement approved by the 212th General Assembly (2000).

The mandate of the consultation was “to review our ecumenical vision and construct an ecumenical stance and policy to guide the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) staff and elected bodies for the next ten years.” To this end, the consultation of September 27–29, 2007, reviewed the biblical and confessional basis of Presbyterian ecumenical commitment, provided a historical overview of the ecumenical journey, surveyed the changing ecumenical landscape, assessed the PC(USA)’s ecumenical experience in the past decade, and explored the new challenges the church faces in this area. On the basis of the findings of the September 2007 consultation, recommendations were made to the GACER. (The list of participants may be found in Appendix A.) In this way, the consultation sought to renew our church’s commitment to ecumenical engagement in the 21st century and set a framework for its ecumenical endeavors, taking account of the new contextual challenges and opportunities present.

Because the purpose of the consultation was to create policy for the ecumenical stance of the PC(USA)—the relationship of the PC(USA) to other Christian churches—participants did not systematically address interfaith relations or the connection between ecumenical involvement and Christian mission. Yet, these two concerns pressed in upon the conversation repeatedly, since they are significant concerns closely related to ecumenism. There was particular energy in the conversation relating to interfaith relations and a strong sense that this topic will need to be addressed more fully in another forum.

Biblical and Confessional Basis of Our Ecumenical Stance

Many texts in Scripture guide and give shape to the ecumenical stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). One key text is John 17, where Jesus prays for the disciples, “that they may all be one. As you, Father, are in me and I am in you, may they also be in us, so that the world may believe that you have sent me” (v. 21). Thus, unity is understood as Christ’s intention for the church, essential to its nature and witness. Another text that has been decisive for the PC(USA)’s self-understanding is 2 Corinthians 5. It declares “... in Christ God was reconciling the world to himself ... and entrusting the message of reconciliation to us” (v.19). The divine purpose of reconciliation is illumined here, and the church must consider how our ministry of reconciliation is compromised if we are not reconciled among ourselves. In Ephesians 4:3–4, we are enjoined to make “... every effort to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body and one Spirit ... one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all ...” Paul’s image of the church as the body of Christ well conveys the nature of our unity: Though there are many members, diversities of gifts, and differences of ministry, there is one body. We belong to one another and are members of one another (Romans 12, 1 Corinthians 12).

The Book of Confessions undergirds the ecumenical work of the PC(USA) in its recurring references to the unity and catholicity of the church. It is a fundamental conviction that, in Jesus Christ, the church is already one. This forms the basis for ecumenical endeavors: to seek to make visible this Christ-given unity.

The confessions, in their reaffirmation of and dependence upon the liturgical traditions and ecumenical councils of the early church, implicitly and explicitly express the unity and catholicity of the church. The Book of Confessions begins with two ancient creeds, the Nicene Creed (1.1–3) and the Apostle’s Creed (2.1–3), which implicitly demonstrates this sensibility. Explicitly, too, these historic creeds name unity and catholicity as marks of Christ’s church. We thus understand ourselves to be in continuity with the ancient consensus of these broadly shared confessions, including the underlying Trinitarian theology and Christology that these early confessions proclaimed.

The unity and continuity is not only with apostolic witness in creedal statements, but also with apostolic mission. As the Confession of 1967 affirms,

... This community, the church universal, is entrusted with God's message of reconciliation and shares God's labor of healing the enmities which separate [human beings] from God and from each other. Christ has called the church to this mission and given it the gift of the Holy Spirit. The church maintains continuity with the apostles and with Israel by faithful obedience to his call." (The Book of Confessions, 9.31)

Other confessions make explicit reference to Presbyterian convictions about the unity and catholicity of the church. The Second Helvetic Confession, for example, argues that there is "only one church for all times." Since there is only one God, one Messiah, one Spirit, one salvation, one faith, one covenant, "it necessarily follows that there is only one Church, the Catholic Church. ... We, therefore, call this Church catholic because it is universal, scattered through all parts of the world, and extended unto all times, and is not limited to any times or places. ..." (The Book of Confessions, 5.126). This affirmation is accompanied by an explicit rejection of claims that would confine the church to any one group of believers.

A similar pattern can be seen in the Confession of 1967, which claims, "The unity of the church is compatible with a wide variety of forms, but it is hidden and distorted when variant forms are allowed to harden into sectarian divisions, exclusive denominations, and rival factions" (The Book of Confessions, 9.34). In this pattern, we see an embrace of difference alongside a rejection of division. For Christians of our tradition, a true church is established wherever the word is rightly preached and heard and the Sacraments rightly administered (The Book of Confessions: Second Helvetic Confession, 5.134–.137; Scots Confession, 3.18; Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.143).

Further basis for the PC(USA) ecumenical stance can be found in the confessions where the "communion of saints" is described. A Brief Statement of Faith says, "The Spirit ... binds us together with all believers in the one body of Christ, the Church" (The Book of Confessions, 10.4, Lines 54–57). So, Christians around the world and down the years all belong to one another, for this communion is to be extended "unto all those who, in every place, call upon the name of the Lord Jesus" (The Book of Confessions, Westminster Confession of Faith, 6.147). These references deepen and extend the pattern of difference without division and also serve to give a clearer shape to the nature of our unity, reflecting not a static uniformity, but a dynamic communion.

It is clear from these and other references in the confessions that the unity of the church is God's doing, a gift of God in Jesus Christ. It can neither be created nor destroyed by our efforts. The Heidelberg Catechism asks the question, "What do you believe concerning 'the Holy Catholic Church'?" The answer: "... that, from the beginning to the end of the world, and from among the whole human race, the Son of God, by his Spirit and his Word, gathers, protects, and preserves for himself, in the unity of the true faith, a congregation chosen for eternal life" (The Book of Confessions, 4.054). Our divisions, though they may obscure our unity, cannot destroy it. When we come together at ecumenical tables, we are seeking to make visible what, by the grace of God, is already the case. We are one in Christ.

Historical Overview of Presbyterian Ecumenical Involvement

From the earliest days of European settlement in North America, there has been a dynamic tension between the distinctively Reformed identity claimed by Presbyterians and our confession of "one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church" that embraces the larger community of believers and churches. This has played out over the years in varying degrees of emphasis on a Presbyterian "brand" in doctrine and polity, and a simultaneous commitment to unity in Christian ministry and mission.

The first presbyteries and synods were made up of disparate congregations, and subsequent, ecumenical challenges have often arisen within the Presbyterian communion itself. The New Side separated from the Old Side in the 1700s, only to be reunited later in that century. In the 1800s, Old School and New School parted ways, as did the churches of North and South. Some groups developed new ecclesiastical expressions, including the Cumberland Presbyterians and the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ). At the same time, many Presbyterians struggled against these divisions. American Presbyterians sought reunion among their own denominations, as well as closer relations—from local communities to mission fields—with Congregationalists, Associate and Reformed churches, Calvinistic Methodists, Episcopalians, the Reformed Church, and others. The Presbyterian Reunion of 1983 is the latest in a long line of historical efforts to bring visible unity among Presbyterians through institutional merger.

Presbyterians were enthusiastic supporters both of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions (an interdenominational body) and a succession of Presbyterian church agencies for global ministries. Combinations of ecumenical alliances in mission, along with Reformed confessionalism, are also to be found in the cases of the Sunday school movement, home missions, relief agencies, and public advocacy.

From the nineteenth century to today, American Presbyterians have been among the founders, leaders, and principal supporters of global and national ecumenical bodies, including the National Council of Churches of Christ (NCCC), the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC), and the World Council of Churches (WCC). In partnership with these groups and others, American Presbyterians have played a central role in world mission and evangelism, in pursuit of international peace and justice, in bilateral dialogues with Christian world communions, and other alliances of churches. Partnership with ecumenical bodies also provides churches of various traditions a means toward dialogue from a common Christian perspective with representatives of other religions of the world.

Representation of Presbyterian churches in international, inter-confessional dialogue is organized by the theology department of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. In the last fifteen years, dialogues have included: Adventist–Reformed; African Independent Churches–Reformed; Anglican–Reformed; Catholic–Reformed, with a PC(USA) member; Disciples–Reformed; Lutheran–Reformed, currently co-chaired by a PC(USA) member; Oriental Orthodox–Reformed, with a PC(USA) member; Orthodox–Reformed, with a PC(USA) member; and Pentecostal–Reformed, currently co-chaired by a PC(USA) member. The World Alliance of Reformed Churches is also concerned with fostering unity among members of the Reformed family. As the result of work by WARC and the Reformed Ecumenical Council, a plan has been made to unite the two bodies into the World Communion of Reformed Churches in 2010.

Working with churches of many cultures and nations has sensitized ecumenical bodies to issues of justice and contributed toward their adoption of strong positions on public policy, especially with relation to justice. This was demonstrated in the United States civil rights movement, the call for negotiation and understanding between East and West during the Cold War, the campaign for human rights and liberation in Latin America, the anti-apartheid struggle in southern Africa, and strategies for reconciliation in the Middle East. In 2004, the member churches of WARC at the General Council in Accra covenanted to work together for justice in the economy and creation, and the WCC and the Lutheran World Federation have taken up this challenge. Supporters of such actions believe that through the struggle together to find a path of faithful action in the face of injustice, Christians come to deeper understanding of the gospel and find the courage to witness to their faith. They believe that God requires work toward justice for all the human family and for creation.

Critics have often found this ecumenical approach to be too “political,” a distraction from the church’s work, and have [~~militated against~~] [opposed] continuing participation in the National and World Councils of Churches. In the 1980s and 1990s, these councils came under intense criticism, leading to lively debate about Presbyterian participation in them. The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations undertook careful, extensive reviews of the WCC (2003), the NCCC (2004), and WARC (2005), examining their work, their financing, and Presbyterian leadership in them. (Reports of the three reviews can be found in the Minutes of the General Assembly for those years.) The outcome of all three reviews was a strong expression of support for the PC(USA)’s participation in the ecumenical movement at the national and international levels. The September 2007 consultation strongly affirmed these commitments as a part of the ecumenical stance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for the future.

Today, Presbyterians continue to work cooperatively with other churches in the councils of the ecumenical movement by means of presbytery and synod partnerships, in local projects involving multiple congregations and agencies, through evangelical associations such as World Vision International and the Lausanne movement, as well as in emerging fellowships such as Christian Churches Together in the U.S.A. and exploratory meetings toward a broadly based Global Christian Forum. These last two fellowships represent a fresh attempt to find a way to gather both those who have traditionally participated in the ecumenical movement and those who have distanced themselves from it.

Central to this discussion is the Lund principle<sup>1</sup> that churches should do together all that is possible in good conscience, affirming the importance of this principle as part of the framework for ecumenical policy in the coming years.

Review of the Ecumenical Work of the General Assembly Over the Last Decade

The past ten years (1997–2007) of ecumenical work under the auspices of the General Assembly have been marked by new opportunities and continuing challenges. These have been a consequence both of changes in the ecumenical landscape and of changes within the PC(USA) and are reflected in our conciliar relationships, our bilateral and multilateral ecclesial relationships, and our partnerships and organizational structures to implement the ecumenical agenda of the PC(USA).

The 209th General Assembly (1997) approved A Formula of Agreement between the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Reformed Church in America, and the United Church of Christ. This was a historic agreement of Full Communion, the result of thirty-five years of dialogue among these churches. The Lutheran-Reformed Coordinating Committee has overseen the implementation of this agreement, and closer collaboration and cooperation have emerged in shared ministries between congregations.

Subsequently, the 211th General Assembly (1999), upon recommendation of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council, created the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER). This new committee replaced the Advisory Committee on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations and “Special Committees of the General Assembly” with ecumenical mandates.

At the conciliar level, the General Assembly holds membership as an ecclesial body in the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the Caribbean and North American Area Council of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the World Council of Churches, and the National Council of Churches of Christ, all of which have faced organizational and fiscal challenges. Elected representatives from the PC(USA) on these councils and staff members working with them have contributed to a sense of renewal in their mission and financial stability.

In January 2002, the Consultation on Church Union culminated its decades of work by being transformed into Churches Uniting in Christ (CUiC), with the goals of expressing unity in Christ and combating racism together. Through the coordinating council of CUiC and its task forces on ministry, racial justice, and local/regional work, the PC(USA) has been an active and energetic participant in CUiC.

In the area of bilateral ecclesial relationships, the sixth round of Reformed-Catholic dialogue (U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops) concluded in 2001, with a focus on pastoral issues in marriages between members of the Roman Catholic Church and Reformed churches. In response to the papal encyclical, Ut Unum Sint, a delegation from the PC(USA) entered into conversation with the Vatican in December 2000 and March 2001. The response of the PC(USA) was presented in the paper, "The Successor to Peter." Several recommendations from this conversation were implemented through the 213th General Assembly (2001).

The seventh round of Reformed-Catholic (U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops) dialogue, mandated by the 215th General Assembly (2003), began meeting that same year. This dialogue also includes the Christian Reformed Church in North America, the Reformed Church in America, and the United Church of Christ. The dialogue was charged to work on developing a means for the mutual recognition of baptism and to explore issues related to the Eucharist. Pending recommendations by the GACER, the proposal for mutual recognition of baptism will come to the 218th General Assembly (2008). The bilateral dialogue will then begin to explore issues related to the Eucharist.

"The seventh round of Reformed-Catholic (U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops) dialogue, mandated by the 215th General Assembly (2003), began meeting that same year. The bilateral dialogue will then begin to explore issues related to the Eucharist.

The Moravian-Reformed dialogue was mandated by the 212th General Assembly (2000). The dialogue began in April 2002 with the following goals: (1) to reach an understanding of each tradition's ministry of oversight; (2) to explore areas of cooperative work in global, national, and local settings so that our congregations may have greater knowledge of each other and our cooperative work; and (3) to seek common agreements that could lead to establishing Full Communion between the Moravian Church and one or all of the Reformed churches. Pending approval by the GACER, a recommendation that the PC(USA) enter a Covenant Relationship will go to the 218th General Assembly (2008) for action.

The Episcopal-Presbyterian bilateral dialogue was mandated by the 212th General Assembly (2000). The focus of the dialogue is the reconciliation of ministries between the two churches. This bilateral dialogue has worked closely with the Ministry Task Force of Churches Uniting in Christ. While unable to achieve full reconciliation of ministries, it is anticipated that we will be able to enter into a mutual recognition of our ministries within the next two years.

The Joint Committee on Presbyterian Cooperation Between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Korean Presbyterian Church in America was mandated by the 204th General Assembly (1992). It was charged to foster greater unity of witness between our two churches and to explore the possibility of eventual union between the two denominations. Pending recommendations by the GACER, a proposal to enter Covenant Relationship will come to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

The Joint Cooperative Committee with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in America and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church was mandated by the 212th General Assembly (2000) and was charged to enter church-to-church conversations searching for means to strengthen their mutual relationships. The work of this cooperative committee culminated in holding concurrent General Assemblies to commemorate the 300th anniversary of Presbyterian witness in the United States in 2006.

Throughout all its work, the General Assembly staff seeks to work ecumenically with counterparts in other denominations, ecumenical councils, and project-specific task groups that involve ecumenical partners. Significant areas of ecumenical cooperation are seen in the areas of disaster relief and development, national and international public witness and advocacy, national and international hunger concerns, theological engagement, youth and young-adult ministries, communications, and international mission partnerships. These partnerships are not only significant for shaping the mission of the PC(USA), but also for bringing PC(USA) resources and insight to the work of our ecumenical partners. A key component has been the understanding that we "do mission in partnership."

The Changing Ecumenical Landscape

To commit to an ecumenical vision in this time and place involves a study of the changing ecumenical landscape. It is well known that a demographic shift in the global church from the north to the south has reshaped the dynamics of the ecumenical movement in a number of ways. Most importantly, the flow of influence is no longer from north to south or even west to east, but from every part of the world to every other part of the world. This has meant that ecumenical conversation partners are shaped geographically as well as denominationally.

In this regard, contextualized realities have become as important as confessional considerations; thus, the PC(USA) needs to include new and different partners to address the needs of today. One such group is that of churches made up of new immigrants bringing their languages and traditions from home, churches that are now a part of the PC(USA) context. New immigrants bring different understandings of the church and the world, shaped by the cultures of the places they have left. Their visions and understandings can infuse and enrich our own and help the PC(USA) to see the world in ways not seen previously. A second group of partners is that of service and justice coalitions that are not denominationally circumscribed. Groups such as Habitat for Humanity, Bread for the World, and the Heifer Project respond to human suffering through emergency relief and development programs to help heal a divided world. Many Presbyterian congregations support these organizations. A third group of communities responding to a wounded world is that of people of other faiths and religious traditions. In a world where fear of the ‘other’ exacerbates violence and suffering, working in partnership with those whom we often call “other” is of central importance. [~~Taking the original meaning of “oikoumene” as the whole inhabited earth,~~] [We] are called to join with all those willing to work for the healing of the whole earth and the whole human family.

The purpose of the ecumenical movement is to help make manifest God’s intention for the [~~“oikoumene”~~] [the household of God]. In the past, churches have often limited that vision to a unified Church that would help bring about a unified world or even unify the world within it. The ecumenical vision that is part of God’s vision is actually much larger. John 10:10[b] describes the vision as God’s desire that the inhabitants of the [~~“oikoumene”~~] [the household of God] “may have life, and have it abundantly.” This is a vision of justice and peace that allows space for all of God’s creation to live life in its fullness. God is continually active in bringing loving wholeness to creation, where all can live in peace. God is especially attentive to those who have been excluded from abundant life and calls the church to cooperate in this process.

The Holy Spirit, the Advocate whom Jesus promised, invites us to this kind of work. Dialogue with churches of the Pentecostal movement is essential here, as well as attending to the often-surprising movements of the Spirit in our churches and ecumenical bodies. The discernment of God’s vision for the [~~“oikoumene”~~] [household of God] is a gift of the Spirit, since we understand the [~~“oikoumene”~~] [household of God] to cut across all human lines. Biblically speaking, Pentecost was a unique moment when the Holy Spirit acted in an amazing way, enabling the church to communicate across differences. At Pentecost, seekers from every nation were present, communicating with each other through the Spirit in their own languages. Living with this gift of the Spirit in our present moment in history encourages us to hear the voices of people long silenced. Enabled to read the signs of the time, the church becomes empowered by the Spirit to champion a theology of life by amplifying voices that contend with life-denying forces. In this way, the church may become a “blessing to the nations” and offer hope for healing, reconciliation, and justice in the earth and the economy.

Contours of a New Ecumenical Reality

Ecumenism in the 21st century holds varied and diverse nuances for Presbyterians:

- reconciliation in Jesus Christ;
- a spirit of generosity toward others;
- unity and diversity in the Holy Spirit;
- justice in the economy, and for the earth;
- the call of God to mission and evangelism;
- solidarity with the marginalized;
- common memory of a people on a journey;
- hope for the future of the world;
- a gift of God and a task for all human beings.

At the same time, many Presbyterians are confused about the meaning of ecumenism and question how it relates to their own lived realities in congregations and whether it has relevance to a post-modern church and world. There has been an erosion of understanding of some traditional ecumenical activities and loyalty to them. Nonetheless, lively ecumenical activity is taking place in many forms throughout the denomination at the national, regional, and local levels.

Opportunities and challenges clearly present themselves in the landscape of this new ecumenical reality. Membership loss, institutional downsizing, and financial decline in mainline churches have resulted in an atmosphere of crisis in ecumenical structures and their member-denominations. Flourishing post-denominational mega-churches, theological affinity groups, and para-church organizations pose both opportunities and challenges to our traditional ways of being and acting and to our ecumenical vision. Some churches that have previously hesitated to enter into ecumenical conversation are now finding their way to a newly shaped table.

Our faith in the grace of Jesus Christ is with us, “so we do not lose heart” (2 Cor. 4:16). In the face of these challenges and opportunities, God is calling us, in this moment, to reaffirm our commitment to the unity of the Church—of all Christian people—which is God’s gift in Christ. Essential to that calling is an attitude of humility and openness in all of our ecumenical relationships.

While we affirm our commitment to the unity of the Christian church, the ecumenical challenge for today moves beyond that initial vision to the healing and wholeness of the world. This broader goal of Christian ecumenism requires us to ask how we can be partners with others in building the human community that God intended from the very beginning. Where is there convergence between the Christian household and the larger household of God?

In exploring the contours of this new ecumenical reality, there are ten priorities that such a commitment presents:

1. [Reclaiming] [Growing] the Ecumenical Vision

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must renew its foundational ecumenical identity through recommitment to the search for the visible unity of Christ’s church in its many forms. Presbyterian identity is diminished when the church turns inward, away from an embrace of the whole church and the whole inhabited earth. Recovery of the church’s ecumenical vision must begin with confession and repentance—of our internal divisions, our expectation of a privileged position in ecumenical affairs, our imagined self-sufficiency, our presumption of cultural hegemony, and our neglect of ecumenical relationships.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to listen anew to what the Spirit is saying to all the churches, and to listen to what Christians from other churches are saying to us. The church’s sustained quest for concord in essential things—faith, sacraments, mission, and ministry—will lead it to new and renewed relationships within the one holy catholic and apostolic church.

2. Facing Obstacles to Christian Unity

Distinct traditions, communions, and denominations live in various degrees of estrangement from one another. In addition to the significant historical, theological, and ecclesiastical barriers that continue to separate churches from one another, there is an awareness of the ways in which race, gender, class, culture, wealth, and power reinforce divisions in the church and the human community. All of these divisions do not eradicate the church’s unity, but they obscure it, impairing witness to the gospel and weakening common mission.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to recognize the full range of obstacles to Christian unity, and to commit itself to breaking down all dividing walls in both church and world.

3. Bridging the Gaps Between the Local and the Global, Individual Congregations and the Denomination

The terms “ecumenical” and “ecumenism” are not restricted to councils of churches or to national and international relationships among denominations. Many congregations are engaged ecumenically in common worship, study, and dialogue, and in partnerships for witness, service, and mission. Theological and structural links between local and broader ecumenism are often weak, however. Contacts among local, regional, and global relationships are often neglected.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to new ecumenical awareness that deepens relationships among congregational, denominational, and conciliar ecumenism. Each must be enriched by the others, leading the whole church to deeper communion in Christ.

4. Enlarging the Table of Ecumenical Relationships

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) cannot be ecumenical by itself. We are linked to many others as we work for the unity of the body of Christ. The church is called to maintain valued relationships with long-standing partners in ecumenical councils, full communion accords, and other ecclesial agreements. At the same time, we are called to move beyond the limitations of the past to find our place at the ecumenical table. The table belongs to God, and must not be restricted by imagined privileges. All are invited guests of our one Lord, the Lord provides the space for all who are willing to come, and the Lord continues to invite all who are not yet willing.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to discover deeper forms of ecumenical commitment to the integrity of the gospel, embracing new partners whose different theologies, traditions, and structures can enrich our theology, traditions, and structures. All of our ecumenical relationships are for healing divisions and seeking reconciliation in the church and the world.

5. Covenanting for Justice in the Economy and the Earth

The unity of the church is not an end in itself, but an element in the reconciliation of the whole created order. The pursuit of God's justice is a response to the gospel that embraces the whole world, and that seeks God's abundant life for all people. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is committed to working with other churches, listening to the voices of brothers and sisters who call for human freedom, social justice, and the healing of the planet entrusted to human care. As Presbyterians hear and engage in the work of freedom and justice, we are transformed.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to sustained study and serious engagement with the Accra Confession of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, "Covenanting for Justice in the Economy and the Earth" as approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006) (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 575).

6. [Covenanting for] Peacemaking in a War-Torn World

God's intention for the world is shalom—peace and justice for all creation—yet the world is wounded by violence and broken by war. Forces of brutality and aggression are at work in all aspects of human life, even within the church. Christ came to break down dividing walls of hostility and establish God's new way of reconciliation in the world. All who follow Christ are called to live as peacemakers in a world that lacks the deep reality of God's concord and unity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to renew its commitment to peacemaking within families and communities, in the church, and among societies and nations. As we live in unity with brothers and sisters around the world, working ecumenically to overcome violence, we both embody and proclaim fullness of the Lord's peace.

7. Nurturing Interreligious Engagements

Commitment to peacemaking and to justice in the economy, for the earth and in the social order, is more than a Christian concern. God is at work in the whole world, within and beyond the bounds of the church. God's household is larger than the church, and all God's people are integral to each other's wholeness and the healing of the world.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to forge interreligious relationships with all who yearn and work for the healing of our wounded world, grounding interreligious engagements in our ecumenical commitments and practices.

8. Renewing a Commitment to Disciplines of Christian Spirituality

Jesus prayed that all may be one, so that the world may believe that the Lord was sent by the God who loves the world (cf. John 17:1–26). The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to pray with Jesus, deepening our relationship to the One who gathers us. Through the ecumenical movement, American Presbyterians have been enriched by the worship practices of other Reformed Christians and other Christian traditions, capturing our imaginations and giving voice to our yearnings.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to renew its commitment to disciplines of Christian spiritual formation, especially worship, regular reading of Scripture, prayer, fasting, and almsgiving. As we join with other Christians in praying with Jesus, we can better discern God's will, join God's mission, and nurture our life together.

9. Celebrating Gifts We Receive and Share

The church's engagements in ecumenical councils, its bilateral dialogues with other churches, its developing relationships with nontraditional partners, and its encounters with churches in the global community have brought gifts that enrich our understanding of Christian faith and life. We have also offered Reformed gifts such as commitment to scriptural authority and confessional integrity; the bond of grace and gratitude; the shared ministry of deacons, elders, and ministers; confessional declaration of the inclusion of women and men in all ministries of the church; and the indissoluble bond between faith and life, theology and ethics.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to receive gratefully the gifts God gives through others, and to share generously with others the gifts God has entrusted to us.

10. Revitalizing Practices of Ecumenical Formation

Ecumenical commitment and engagement was once central to Presbyterian identity. In the present time, when many Christians move easily from one denomination to another, confessional identity is ambiguous and the need for ecumenical dialogue is dimly recognized. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must revitalize practices of ecumenical formation so that a new generation, with all its diversity, can embrace a vision of Christian unity.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to encourage commitment to the unity of Christ's church through a range of educational, experiential, and missional opportunities. Study materials for children, youth, and adults; seminary engagement with ecumenical documents; national and international ecumenical encounters; and regular worship with congregations of ecumenical partners are some of the ecumenical formation possibilities that must become regular features of Presbyterian life.

An Affirmation of Our Ecumenical Commitment

We affirm the goal of unity that Jesus described in his high priestly prayer:

We seek to become fully one in Christ, so that the world may believe.

We believe in one God, known to us in three persons, eternally united in the bond of love.
In love we proclaim our faith in the Triune God and acknowledge one holy, catholic, and apostolic Church.

We are called to unity, but not uniformity, as people of God who, though many, are members one of another and who, together, constitute the body of Christ on earth.

We come as disciples bearing marks of diverse cultures and traditions, bringing unique insights, experiences, strengths, and vulnerabilities.
We are eager to learn from one another, to seek formation and transformation, knowing that each of us stands in need of correction and mutual upbuilding.

We confess that too often we have undertaken alone projects and ministries that could have been enriched by broader participation, and we recommit ourselves to the historic Lund principle that Christians should take united action whenever they find this possible.

Our vision of unity in Christ is universal, concerned for the whole of creation, as well as the rights and needs of humanity.
We are called to join with others in bold, prophetic [~~denunciation and resistance~~ ~~when confronting the power of empire~~] [witness when confronting the abuse of power] and threats to the planet, and in covenants for justice in the economy and the earth.

[As Christians,] [~~We~~] [we] remain open to the working of God's Spirit among people of other faiths, both in their individual and in their corporate religious lives and are prepared [as we are called by Jesus Christ,] to dialogue and cooperate everywhere with people of good will on behalf of justice, peace, and the common good. We pursue the journey of faith [with Christ] wherever we find ourselves, in whatever company, all in each place.

The tasks of Christian witness, service, justice, and peacemaking are addressed by councils, alliances, and national churches, but also in local encounters, congregational interaction, and common prayer across traditional religious boundaries.

Guided on our way by the Holy Spirit, we rejoice in the hope of perfect unity in Christ, a unity not of our making, but a gift designed and revealed by the Maker of us all.

Endnote

1. The third world conference on Faith and Order in Lund, Sweden (1952) issued this challenge, “should not our churches ask themselves whether they are showing sufficient eagerness to enter into conversation with other churches, and whether they should not act together in all matters except those in which deep differences of conviction compel them to act separately?" This principle has been adapted in many forms as the Lund Principle and often is formulated as "we should do together all things except those in which deep differences of conscience demand that we do separately."

Invitation to Churches to Send Ecumenical Advisory Delegates to the 219th General Assembly (2010)—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) invite the following churches to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the 219th General Assembly (2010):

Overseas: Presbyterian Church in Nicaragua, Reformed Church in Argentina, Episcopal Diocese of Haiti, Orthodox Church of Belarus, Korean Christian Federation (DRPK), Presbyterian Church of Pakistan, Evangelical Presbyterian Church of Ghana, Sudan Presbyterian Evangelical Church, Church of Central Africa Presbyterian Zimbabwe Synod.

Within the United States: Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, United Church of Christ, U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, Episcopal Church.

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations nominates to each General Assembly churches to be invited to send ecumenical advisory delegates to the subsequent assembly (Standing Rule B.2.g. and Section IV.C.7.d.(11) of the Organization for Mission). We recommend ten overseas churches and five churches from within the United States. Of the overseas churches, we recommend at least one church from each area staffed by the Worldwide Ministries Division. Of the churches within the United States, we recommend at least one church from the Formula of Agreement, at least two churches from Churches Uniting in Christ, and at least one church in our conciliar relationship.

On Peaceful Relations Between the Christian and Muslim Communities—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

- 1. Affirm the PC(USA)'s commitment to and call for understanding, mutual respect, and peaceful relations between the Christian and Muslim communities.
- 2. Instruct the Office of Theology & Worship and the Office of Interfaith Relations to undertake a study of current and evolving Presbyterian theological understanding of our relationship with our Muslim sisters and brothers. We strongly urge that such a study be done in a context of relationships and dialogue.
- 3. Work to improve good relations between Presbyterians and Muslims at the level of national and international dialogue in order to promote peace, enhance mutual understanding, counteract bias and discrimination, recognize commonality, and celebrate diversity.
- 4. Encourage and provide resources to presbyteries and local congregations to improve good relations and mutual understanding between Presbyterians and Muslims at the local level for the same reasons. Practices might include participation in sacred and holy observances in each other's traditions, shared meals, dialogue groups, and joint community projects, among others.
- 5. Encourage PC(USA) governing bodies at all levels to advocate for human rights and civil rights protections for Muslims; identify areas where the civil rights of Muslims may be violated and work to counteract such violation. Communicate Presbyterian solidarity and support for those who are targeted or whose rights are violated.

[Financial Implications: (2008): $190; (2009): $6,390; (2010): $6,376 (Mission)]

Rationale

Given current political and humanitarian crises in the world, there is an urgency to be proactive in the search for peace, building bridges of understanding between faith traditions, and protecting the inherent worth and dignity of all human beings.

Prejudice, discrimination, and injustice continue to be pervasive in our society toward our Muslim sisters and brothers, where individuals are judged in stereotypical ways, where jobs are threatened, where apprehensions remain about the threats of detention and deportation, and where unfair characterizations of Muslims are often made. We seek to challenge these injustices mindful of the fact that in predominantly Muslim countries Christians may also be misunderstood and suffer discrimination.

Based on a Christian understanding that all human beings are created in the image of God, and propelled by Jesus' reiteration of the commandment to love our neighbors as ourselves, we who follow Jesus are called to work for justice, to pursue understanding, and to extend love and kindness to all those created in the image of God.

Mutual Recognition of Baptism with the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

- 1. Receive the report on baptism from the Catholic Reformed Bilateral dialogue.
- 2. Approve the Common Agreement on Baptism as an ecumenical statement for guidance and send to the presbyteries for ratification.
- 3. Direct the General Assembly Council, through the Theology Worship and Education ministries area, to develop congregational study guides for the Pastoral Recommendations: Tangible Expressions of Mutual Recognition of Baptism and make readily available to congregations, pastors, and seminaries.

Rationale

As a follow up to the 2001 delegation visit to the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, the 213th General Assembly (2001) instructed the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations to invite the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops to join in a study that would enable us to mutually affirm one another's baptisms. The 215th General Assembly (2003) authorized the seventh round of dialogue with the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops and requested that a report be given to the 218th General Assembly (2008). As part of that round, the dialogue was asked to focus on the meaning and practice of baptism, the relationship of baptism to Eucharist, and the role of both sacraments in shaping our churches and drawing them toward fuller communion. The methodology of the dialogue was to be designed to address issues that are theological, ecclesiastical, and pastoral. The dialogue has completed the section on baptism and is forwarding this report and common statement to the churches. The dialogue will continue to work on issues related to the Eucharist.

A SEASON OF ENGAGEMENT

The 20th century was one of intense dialogue among churches throughout the world. In the mission field and in local communities, in regional ecumenical bodies and in bilateral discussions between churches, Christians made commitments to engage each other not only in cooperative activity but theological deliberation. The Roman Catholic Church and churches of the Reformed tradition have been no exceptions. This report on baptism is offered in the context of more than forty years of dialogue between the Reformed churches in the United States and the National Conference of Catholic Bishops (now the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops). The relationships in the United States form only a part of our context, however, and our dialogue has been enriched by encounter and relationships around the world.

OUR GLOBAL ROMAN CATHOLIC AND REFORMED CONTEXT

Important ecumenical events of the last forty years have influenced our theological perspectives as well as our maturing ability to understand each other. Liturgical renewals, encouraged by relationships with the Roman Catholic Church, have engendered in many Reformed Christians a deeper appreciation of our common roots. These renewals have heightened awareness of the richness of our common liturgical tradition. Roman Catholic seminaries have developed a renewed focus on the preaching of the word in the context of the sacramental liturgy, a strong emphasis in the Reformed tradition. In addition, in recent decades Roman Catholics have come to read Reformed theologians with new lenses. The discovery of new source material—both patristic and biblical—has greatly enhanced our collective ability to affirm a common heritage. More than ever before, ecumenical prayer services include a ritual for the reaffirmation of our baptismal vows, a reminder of that which binds us to each other as kindred in Christ, acknowledging our one calling through our one baptism, claimed by one God.

Earlier in our history, movements within our traditions sought to provide bridges between us. In the German Reformed community, for example, theologians of the Mercersburg liturgical movement made explicit commitments to rebuild relationship with the Roman Catholic Church as one element in manifesting the full visible unity of the church. Roman Catholic dioceses, in the aftermath of Vatican II, established diocesan ecumenical offices which nurtured the formation of “living room dialogues” in which many Reformed church members participated, enhancing relationships across the United States and the world. There are many examples of local and regional efforts in this area among the Roman Catholic and the Reformed churches.

Churches in relationship through the ecumenical movement have also sought to articulate specific beliefs about baptism. Our practices and our theologies have varied widely, but even without complete consensus there have emerged important experiences of convergence and deeper understanding. As a result of numerous bilateral dialogues, a growing familiarity with baptismal theology and practice among churches has made a profound contribution to the church’s ability to claim its vision of unity. As recently as 2002 the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity in the Vatican urged ongoing study and dialogue of many theological issues for the enhancement of Roman Catholic and Reformed church relationships, most especially urging a focus on baptism as a basic to our Christian identity.

Some landmark studies have offered us encouragement and guidance along the way. The 1982 World Council of Churches document Baptism, Eucharist and Ministry presented the churches with an important opportunity to engage in dialogue on these important matters. Through those studies, Christians came to appreciate more deeply their own and each other’s baptismal expressions and theology.

More recently, in the Eighth Report of the Joint Working Group between the Vatican and the World Council of Churches (2005), Protestants, Catholics and Orthodox Christians explored the meaning and the practice of this sacrament. While this important study was much broader in ecclesial scope than the one we offer here, it reflects many issues found in our own bilateral dialogue, and it urges, as we do, further study in those areas of ongoing difference. Finally, the Faith and Order Commission of the World Council of Churches is completing work on a document on our one Christian baptism, seeking mutual recognition, due to be released in 2008.

OUR REGIONAL AND LOCAL CONTEXT

The international arena is only one among many vital settings for dialogue and reflection between Reformed and Roman Catholic Christians. Official discussions in national church settings in the United States have been equally important in advancing mutual understanding. Topics in the last forty years have included theological, liturgical and ethical issues. These issues have been explored with a consistent expectation that they are in primary service to the pastoral settings of all of our churches. Sound pastoral practice, however, rests on solid theological foundations. The current report, succeeding one on Interchurch Families, grew from a recognition that our pastoral customs reflect our different theological and ecclesiological traditions – differences which must be understood if we are to relate to each other in healthy ways.

In the United States, members of our traditions also encounter each other in local settings through common service and community worship experiences. Learning in those settings has been both intentional (through the formation of discussion groups between congregations and parishes) as well as informal (as neighbors work together on projects for the common good). Common work and intentional dialogue, where it has occurred consistently, has enabled members of both of our traditions to respond to community concerns effectively and deepen appreciation for the different gifts each brings to common public life.

Finally, the family has been a vital setting for dialogue between Roman Catholic and Reformed Christians in the United States. Increasingly, marriage and the mobility of extended families have contributed to this intimate encounter between the traditions, an experience which can be both a joy and sometimes also confusing. Families are the settings where the gifts that each tradition brings can be most concretely received, but also the place where our differences can be most keenly felt, and where the pain of our divisions may have the most significant impact. It has been important, therefore, in official settings, to approach with utmost care those topics which affect the experience of our members and the pastoral leaders who serve them.

In all of these settings, both the Reformed and the Roman Catholic churches have affirmed the value of ecumenical engagement and increased mutual understanding. Through our ongoing encounter we have come to know each other's ecclesial characteristics, value each other's strengths, and make commitments to deeper relationships.

We hope this study will provide an occasion for ongoing dialogue among Roman Catholic and Reformed lay and ordained leaders, both in those places of longtime engagement, and in those settings where it will be entirely new. Such dialogue can contribute to the common witness of the church on the local level, and make ecumenical ideas a lived reality of Christian faith.

OUR HOPE

It is precisely the gift of our unity in the church of Jesus Christ through our baptisms which enables us to come to dialogue tables not just as acquaintances but as kindred—as members of one family in Christ—to consider in depth these matters of baptismal theology and practice.

The theological reflection in this report is intended to provide a sound basis on which our communions can express, in tangible ways, a mutual recognition of each other's baptisms. We have acknowledged areas of agreement and of difference. Through active engagement we have experienced our own faith tradition more clearly by seeing ourselves through the lenses of our partners. Through dialogue we have become reacquainted with our own tradition, the scriptures, and the sacraments. We have had the opportunity to examine, and, perhaps most important, to correct, past misunderstandings and caricatures. As our relationships have deepened we have celebrated those areas of theological consensus and we give thanks for the patient and careful dialogue which has brought our traditions closer together; we note those places where consensus has yet to be achieved but where ongoing dialogue holds promise for closer convergence; and we acknowledge those aspects of our theology and practice where there is no convergence but where the commitment to the eventual full, visible unity of the church will be well-served by enhanced mutual understanding.

Through an honest desire to understand each other, and therefore to acknowledge both the limits and the possibilities of what we can accomplish together, we believe we can make an enduring statement about what we hold in common.

We offer this report not simply as an academic study to be reviewed by those with a particular interest in the theology of baptism but to the entire constituency of all of our churches as a discernment of where the Holy Spirit is leading us together. We offer a prayer of hope that each encounter may move us to even deeper recognition and into a more faithful relationship with the Triune God. Ultimately our unity is not something we create but is a gift given us by God. Its visible manifestation is something for which our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ prayed (John 17), and we know that the earliest witnesses to the Christian faith proclaimed both the present reality and the eschatological hope of one Lord, one faith, and one baptism (Ephesians 4). Where we have fallen short of answering the call to that full visible unity, we confess our culpability and the enduring scandal of division within the body of Christ.

And so in celebration of what we hold in common, and in testimony to our desire to make God's gift of unity more visible, we offer our common witness.

COMMON AGREEMENT ON MUTUAL RECOGNITION OF BAPTISM Roman Catholic-Reformed Church dialogue

1. Together we affirm that, by the sacrament of Baptism, a person is truly incorporated into the body of Christ (I Corinthians 12:13 and 27; Ephesians 1:22–23), the church. Baptism establishes the bond of unity existing among all who are part of Christ's body and is therefore the sacramental basis for our efforts to move towards visible unity.
2. Together we affirm that Baptism is the sacramental gateway into the Christian life, directed toward the fullness of faith and discipleship in Christ.
3. Together we affirm that incorporation into the universal church by baptism is brought about by celebrating the sacrament within a particular Christian community.

4. Together we affirm that Baptism is to be conferred only once, because those who are baptized are decisively incorporated into the Body of Christ.
5. Together we affirm that baptism is a sacrament of the church, enacted in obedience to the mission confided to it by Christ's own word. For our baptisms to be mutually recognized, water and the scriptural Trinitarian formula "Father, Son, and Holy Spirit" (Matthew 28: 19–20) must be used in the baptismal rite.
6. Together we affirm that the validity of Baptism depends on its celebration according to the apostolic witness by the church and its authorized ministers.
7. Together we affirm, as a sign of our unity and as a witness to ecumenical commitment, the practice of inviting the presence and, where appropriate, the participation of members of our respective communions in the celebration of Baptism. At the same time, we affirm our responsibility to respect the integrity of the distinct baptismal practices of the communions in which the rite of Baptism is administered.
8. Given our mutual recognition of Baptism, we encourage using baptismal registers in the local church community and, when requested by another church for a pastoral need in the life of an individual, providing written attestations of Baptism, including the liturgical formula used. Such cooperation and mutual accountability honors the dignity of the sacrament of Baptism.

We rejoice at the common faith we share and affirm in this document. We understand that the journey toward full, visible unity depends on openness to the grace of God and humility before the initiatives of God's Spirit among us. Because of these convictions, we encourage Roman Catholic and Reformed pastoral leaders to continue their commitment to regular dialogue about theology and pastoral practice from local to international settings. Pastoral leaders engaged in such dialogue embody our hopes for unity, collaborative effort, and common witness. We believe that respectful dialogue can provide a strong witness to the wider church about our commitment to a relationship in Christ and can stand as a safeguard against the unreflective judgments that have, at certain times in our history, diminished and distorted our relations.

Pastoral Recommendations: Tangible Expressions of Mutual Recognition of Baptism
Reformed-Roman Catholic Dialogue

1. In our Agreement, we have given the grounds for formal mutual recognition of the validity of our baptisms. The following are recommended to the consideration of our communions on the basis of the ecumenical commitments that bring us to the dialogue table. It is understood that these recommendations should be implemented in accordance with existing regulations.
2. We recommend that our local communities maintain the custom of keeping baptismal records and providing baptismal certificates when requested at various times in the Christian life of our members. Compatibility in the form and content of these documents would be sign of ecumenical cooperation and a safeguard of the validity of what we celebrate together as Christians.
3. We recommend that prominence be given to the placement of the baptismal font and water near the worshipping assembly as a sign of continuity in faith.
4. We recommend the practice of inviting members of our respective communions to reaffirm their Baptism together at times of prayer for Christian unity.
5. We recommend, where the custom of baptismal sponsors, witnesses, or godparents has been maintained, that these be selected from our respective communities of faith as a sign that Christians belonging to our communions are truly members of the Body of Christ. This is particularly important when welcoming interchurch families and their congregations to a celebration of Baptism.
6. We recommend the active participation of the families of those to be baptized in the selection of readings, intercessory prayers, and music as a way of giving tangible evidence of the unity that we share in Christ.
7. Mindful that the active participation of clergy and laity of the respective communions of the spouses is at present allowed in interchurch weddings, we also recommend the practice of inviting clergy or lay guests to offer prayers, proclaim a Scripture reading, preach, and/or confer a blessing in the rite of Baptism, maintaining respect for the rites of each communion.
8. We recommend the participation of clergy in local ministerial associations in order to facilitate the pastoral dialogues that need to take place to foster ecumenical cooperation at Baptism and at other important times in the faith journeys of Christians. Ministerial associations can be a means for fostering life-long spiritual accompaniment in faith both for clergy and for the laity whom they serve. In addition, such associations may find other creative symbolic ways to foster ecumenical sharing in a town, neighborhood, or village.

9. At the funeral rites of members of our communions, including other Christians with whom we are in ecumenical dialogue, we recommend the use of a prayer or rite (e.g. sprinkling of the casket, the white pall, etc.) as a final commendation that calls to mind the enduring gift of grace received in Baptism.
10. We recommend the use of those liturgical options already available in our official ritual books for the celebration of Baptism that enhance ecumenical awareness on the local level.
11. Mindful that in many instances local congregations may not be able to implement all these recommendations at the present time, we recommend a patient and prudent process of discernment among laity and clergy. We recognize that the journey towards full, visible unity depends on openness to the grace of God and humility before the initiatives of God's Spirit among us, which are themselves based on Baptism. Let us above all work to promote the works of charity and service not only to those who are of the household of the faith, but also to all people and to all of creation.

AN INVITATION TO THE TABLE: A PROPOSAL FOR A MORAVIAN/REFORMED COVENANT PARTNERSHIP

*We're gonna sit at the welcome table,

—Traditional Spiritual adapted

As representatives of five different communions met for theological discussion, worship, and fellowship between 2002 and 2007, the image—and reality—of the table emerged as central in the group's understanding of its task. We have identified three ways (happily and conveniently Trinitarian) in which this image speaks to our past work and our future hopes.

First is the table of conversation. We recognize that each communion brings specific gifts to this table, and that all share a commitment to honest and far-ranging exploration of our differences and similarities. The table of conversation is graced by sincere questioning and respectful listening. We have discovered that miscommunication can result when shared terms carry different meanings, and have spent long and fruitful hours expanding our understanding of one another's polity and practice.

For example, both the Moravians and the Presbyterians include the office of elder, so at first glance it would appear that this is one instance of commonality. But as we discovered, the structure and functions of the office are quite different. Moravian elders are elected for a fixed term and installed to serve only the congregation, district, or province in which they are elected. They form a governing board and have oversight responsibility within the jurisdiction, which they serve. Presbyterian elders, on the other hand, are ordained for life and can function as elder within any Presbyterian congregation. They have ministerial duties, which in the Moravian church are reserved for the ordained clergy.

Another example is the office of bishop. One of the gifts that Moravians bring to the table of conversation is the concept of bishop as a pastor to pastors, one charged with providing spiritual leadership and praying for the welfare of the church. Considerable discussion centered on the function of the bishop within the Moravian Unity. Reformed partners in the Dialogue were surprised and intrigued to learn that Moravian bishops have no administrative duties by virtue of their office.

As Christians we are a people of story. In sharing the narrative of our faith journeys, as individuals and as denominations, we make of the table of conversation a place to gather in witness to the wonder and graciousness of God's work in the world.

The second table is the table of fellowship. The simple act of sitting together to share a common meal recalls the Agape meal of the early church, with its emphasis on hospitality to all who gather. While all of our denominations recognize the benefits to the community of church suppers and other opportunities for food and fellowship, the Moravians demonstrate with their practice of Lovefeast a way to integrate meal and liturgy in a service of worship engaging all the senses. The Lovefeast, precisely because it is not sacramental in nature, has the added advantage of being a liturgical meal in which all may participate freely.

The Psalmist invites us to “taste and see that the Lord is good” (Ps. 34:8). In the Lovefeast hymns, participants taste sweet words of praise and thanksgiving, and in the Lovefeast meal itself they taste the sweet buns and pungent coffee, filling mouths and hearts with gratefulness for the Lord’s bounty. The table of fellowship invites all to delight in God’s graciousness.

The third table is, of course, the Eucharistic table. It is the place where each of us encounters our crucified and risen Lord. It is the table of nourishment for our spirits, before which we stand or kneel in awe and wonder. The covenant partnership to which we aspire recognizes no barrier to full participation by any of our members in the celebration of Holy Communion in any one of our churches. The verse of a familiar Moravian hymn expresses it clearly and simply: “With one cup and with one bread thus one cov’nant way we tread.” In such manner we join to bear witness to God’s all-encompassing invitation. The feast is prepared. The banquet table is spread. Let us work together to gather in all who are hungry and thirsty, that all may be satisfied.

To this end we offer a proposal for Covenant Partnership.

A Brief Introduction and Background for This Proposal

The Moravian-Reformed Dialogue, and its proposal for “covenant partnership” among the Moravian Church,<sup>1</sup> the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Reformed Church in America, and the United Church of Christ, are products of earlier ecumenical work.<sup>2</sup> In 1998, A Formula of Agreement initiated a full communion relationship between the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA) and three Reformed partners: the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)), the Reformed Church in America (RCA), and the United Church of Christ (UCC). In 1999, the ELCA and the Moravian Church entered an agreement of full communion.

For almost fifty years, Churches Uniting in Christ (CUiC) and its predecessor body, the Consultation on Church Union (COCU), have searched for a meaningful and demonstrable expression of church unity that is “truly catholic, truly reformed and truly evangelical.” The PC(USA), the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), and the UCC have been full participants in this process from the beginning; more recently the Moravian Church-Northern Province has become a full participant. Among the stumbling blocks to progress have been questions and tensions regarding certain reformed and episcopal practices of the ministry of oversight. “Reformed” generally refers to oversight by representative bodies of both clergy and laity. “Episcopal” generally refers to oversight vested in an individual, especially a bishop whose authority derives from participation in the historic succession.<sup>3</sup>

Recognizing that the Moravian Church practices a ministry of oversight that is at once reformed and episcopal, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in 2000 invited the Moravian Church to enter into a formal dialogue. Because of earlier ecumenical commitments made through the Formula of Agreement, the United Church of Christ and the Reformed Church in America were also invited to join; the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) was included because of its participation in CUiC and its long-standing ecumenical partnership with the UCC.

The PC(USA) entered the dialogue with several goals: (1) to reach an understanding of the ministry of oversight in each tradition; (2) to explore areas of cooperative work in global, national, and local settings; (3) to enable PC(USA) and Moravian congregations to gain greater knowledge of one another and of the denominations’ cooperative work; and (4) to seek common agreements that could lead to establishing full communion between the Moravian Church and one or all of the Reformed churches.<sup>4</sup> The dialogue began formally in April 2002 in Winston-Salem, and representatives have met once or twice annually through May 2007, although changes in the Moravian Church occasioned a yearlong hiatus in 2003. Initial meetings focused on introducing and clarifying the several communions’ structures and the ordering of ministry within those structures. The group gave particular attention to identifying the divisive issues within each of the five churches, recognizing that many of these issues were common to all. Equally important, conversation about the theological principles held in common among all five communions made clear that no doctrinal or ecclesiological barriers stand in the way of closer relationships.

While the impetus for this dialogue, and the present proposal, was the relationship of “full communion” that both the Moravian Church and three of the four Reformed churches have with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, we have chosen to use the language of “covenant partnership” in our recommendation that a new relationship be established. There are two reasons for this linguistic choice. First, in both the Reformed and the Moravian traditions, we understand ourselves to be called into covenant relationship with the Divine. As a covenant people we are called to seek meaningful relationships with other Christian bodies as a reflection of our covenant with Christ. Covenant partnership indicates a commitment to gather at Table together—for dialogue, fellowship, and Eucharist; it also indicates commitment to rise from Table and to engage in mission together. Second, we believe that the language of “full communion” suggests a relationship accomplished, rather than—as we envision—a relationship emerging and ongoing. “Covenant partnership” points toward a shared journey, one that leads us together to greater faithfulness and witness to the ministry of Jesus Christ. It seeks to name relationships that already exist on many levels, and to open the door for growing relationships in the future.

Toward a Deeper Relationship: Past History and Ecumenical Commitments

Both the Moravian Church and the four Reformed bodies see no obstacles, present or past, to covenant partnership. Moreover, all five churches have histories of cooperative and ecumenical commitments.

The Moravian Church

The Moravian Church has a long history of ecumenism. In its first decade (1457–67) adherents managed with dissident Catholic priests before they sought an ordained ministry of their own. Count Nicholas Ludwig von Zinzendorf, the chief influence in the renewal of the church in the 1700s, saw the Moravian Church as an ecclesiola in ecclesia, a pietist “yeast” and mission society within larger state churches of Germany and Scandinavia. In the 18th and 19th centuries, many Moravian preaching places in America became congregations of other communions. More recently, Moravians have been active in ecumenical groups from local bodies to the World Council of Churches. In 1999, the Moravian Church concluded a full communion agreement with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and it is now involved in dialogue with the Episcopal Church, as well as with the four Reformed partners in this dialogue.

Because of their world mission heritage, identification with the global Moravian communion has always been important for American Moravians. However, with the end of political colonialism and the independence of former “mission fields,” this is less central than in the past. Also, Moravians are increasingly aware that denominationalism has sometimes distracted them from seeking relationships with other Christians and responding to social issues closer to home.

There appear to be no discernible barriers to deeper relationships between the Moravians and the communions engaged in this dialogue. The Moravian spirit toward traditional creeds and confessions is expressed in The Ground of the Unity, the official doctrinal statement of the denomination, adopted in 1957 and modified only slightly since then:

The Unitas Fratrum recognizes in the creeds of the Church the thankful acclaim of the Body of Christ. These creeds aid the Church in formulating a Scriptural confession, in marking the boundaries of heresies, and in exhorting believers to an obedient and fearless testimony in every age. The Unitas Fratrum maintains that all creeds formulated by the Christian Church stand in need of constant testing in the light of the Holy Scriptures.

It acknowledges as such true professions of faith the early Christian witness: “Jesus Christ is Lord!” and also especially the ancient Christian creeds and the fundamental creeds of the Reformation.<sup>5</sup>

The irenic spirit with which the Moravian Church approaches creeds also inform its approach toward potentially church-dividing issues such as baptism and human sexuality. Because of the understanding of prevenient grace, the normal practice of the Moravian church is children’s baptisms; however, parents have the right to postpone the baptism of their children. There are differing convictions among Moravians regarding sexual orientation, but the Unity Synod (the highest international Moravian body) has stated that the issue of human sexuality “does not rise to the level of the Lordship of Christ,” indicating that believers can in good faith disagree on some questions of sexuality.

There are, of course, differences of emphasis. Moravians, for example, have put more stress on devotional life and have been less likely than some Reformed bodies to see social and political advocacy as part of the total Christian witness. This is one of the many areas in which we can learn from one another.

The Four Reformed Churches—Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Reformed Church in America, Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), United Church of Christ

Although these four Reformed communions have different origins, structures of governance, and confessional emphases, all share historical commitments to, and participation in, ecumenical activities. Beginning in the mid-1790s, members of the Dutch Reformed Church (now the RCA) partnered with other denominations to send missionaries to the American Indians. In 1801, Presbyterians and Congregationalists<sup>6</sup> adopted a Plan of Agreement, often called the first formal ecumenical agreement in America, which for half a century committed the two bodies to work cooperatively in planting churches on the frontier. Roughly two decades later, the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) emerged as a movement committed to ending the unscriptural “party divisions” of both belief and practice that separated denominations.

All four bodies are presently active in numerous bilateral and conciliar ecumenical relationships. All are members of the National Council of Churches, the World Council of Churches, and the World Alliance of Reformed Churches; individually, each participates in other ecumenical alliances and conversations, including Christian Churches Together and Churches Unit-ing in Christ. Three of the four participants (the UCC, PC(USA), and RCA) were signatories to the Formula of Agreement with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America; the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) shares with the United Church of Christ an ecumenical partnership that enjoys full reconciliation of ministries.

None of the Reformed bodies perceives historic or present barriers, either of theology and practice or of governance, to fuller and deeper partnership with the Moravian Church.

Toward A Deeper Relationship: Current Cooperative Work

Moravians and Reformed bodies already work together in many ways, both formal and informal. All participant communions in this dialogue are members of the National Council of Churches of Christ. The Moravian Church—Northern Province and three Reformed bodies (UCC, CC/DC, and PC(USA)) are members of Churches Uniting in Christ (CUiC). Reformed bodies have at various times worked with Moravians in Nicaragua and Honduras. Sister bodies in the Caribbean work together at a seminary in Jamaica. Since the fall of the iron curtain, Moravians, Presbyterians, and others in Alaska have done church planting among people in nearby Siberia.

Theological seminaries of all the bodies welcome students from the other groups, and faculties serve across denominational lines as well. (This is a significant change from a not-too-distant past when pastors were educated almost exclusively at denominational seminaries.) Ordained ministers of Word and Sacrament serve across denominational lines, both as interim pastors and as installed pastors. A closer ecumenical agreement will only facilitate the ongoing exchange and eventual reconciliation of ministries.

Most of the communions in this dialogue are concentrated in some geographic areas and less represented in others. (For example, there are Moravian congregations in only seventeen states.<sup>7</sup>) This regional distribution has affected where congregations of the dialogue communions have worked together thus far. Nevertheless, there are many local instances of common effort, especially in social service—for example, homeless shelters, Habitat for Humanity projects, CROP Walks, food pantries, and racial justice work.

Covenant Partnership: A Proposal

The value of a covenant partnership between the Moravian Church and one or more Reformed bodies is evident. Such partnership reminds us, first of all, that our separate churches have missed many opportunities to share in ministry and mission, although God calls us to work together as one. Equally important, covenant partnership makes intentional witness to the churches' diversity in unity. Discussions in our five-year-long dialogue have highlighted a number of ways, both in practice and in polity, in which each communion brings unique and valuable gifts to the table. Rather than minimize denominational differences in favor of bland uniformity, a covenant partnership will recognize and celebrate the many different ways in which partners are able to worship the one Triune God and proclaim the Gospel of Christ to the world. Contemporary groups, both civil and religious, too often suggest, "my way is the only way." Partnership offers the opportunity to speak a prophetic word to those who disparage diversity.

Finally, covenant partnership will facilitate a process for joint—and thus more effective—mission. Ideally, the various mission boards will come to the point where a covenant partner or partners will automatically be invited to participate in any new mission efforts. (Indeed, if covenant partnership is to become real locally, joint mission is essential. Perhaps, for example, concrete goals—such as local partnerships to build Habitat for Humanity houses—could inaugurate the partnership and make it more meaningful.)

What is involved, specifically, in a covenant partnership between the Moravian Church and one or more of the Reformed communions?

- As Covenant partners, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Moravian Church Northern and Southern Provinces recognize each other as churches in which the gospel is rightly preached and the sacraments rightly administered according to the Word of God in the Scriptures.
- As Covenant partners, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Moravian Church Northern and Southern Provinces recognize each other's ordained ministries as valid and will seek to reconcile their ordained ministries. We will develop a process to provide for the orderly exchange and mutual oversight of ordained ministers of Word and Sacrament. When possible, partners will regularly consult regarding the preparation of candidates for ordination, and the processes necessary for preparing them to serve both within their tradition and ecumenically.
- We covenant to work cooperatively—locally, regionally, and nationally—in mission. Such efforts may include sharing models of existing cooperation, as well as creating new opportunities for common witness and mission.
- We covenant to invite mutual participation in governance and other activities. We will invite each other regularly to participate in church-wide assemblies, synods, and councils; and where appropriate, to give advice and counsel regarding the ongoing work and decision-making in the churches. We will also encourage and invite mutual representation in various causes, conferences, and other gatherings, with particular attention to youth/young adult and racial/ethnic caucuses.

- We covenant to develop joint resources, as appropriate. Such resources may include but not be limited to Christian education curriculum, mission education resources, and liturgical resources that could be used jointly and may facilitate mutual understanding and commitment throughout the wider church.
- We covenant to seek regular opportunity to sit at Table together for conversation, fellowship, and sacramental celebration. In this intimate sharing, partners will deepen their knowledge of one another, their faith in God's abundant presence, and their commitment to being Christ's body together in a world that needs both help and hope.

We find this language, adapted from A Formula of Agreement, to be an appropriate way to conclude:

In affirming covenant partnership, each participating communion acknowledges that it is undertaking a serious commitment, one that involves actions as well as words. Covenant partnership cannot be achieved without awareness of existing differences and similarities among the partners; it will demand dedication to walking and working together in ways that may, at times, represent a break with the past. Walking together involves not only the likelihood, but also the certainty of mutual challenge and change; because of this commitment, each body will eventually be different in ways that presently cannot be seen. The partner churches commit themselves to this new relationship with seriousness of intent, and full assurance that the One who calls us to greater visible unity is faithful and worthy of trust.

Five Communion Have Participated in the Moravian-Reformed Dialogue

The Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) is a faith community of some 700,000 members across the United States and Canada. From its founding along the western frontier of the United States in the early 19th century, this church began as a movement proclaiming the unity of the church and oneness among all Christians gathered at a common Table of the Lord's Supper. Initially the vision of unity was based upon the restoration of New Testament practices; today, the denomination's efforts in seeking unity focus upon covenantal agreements and shared mission.

The church is structured in three expressions: congregational, regional, and general. Each expression has its own particular responsibilities and authority, but always in covenant and ministry with the other expressions to fulfill the whole church's mission. The congregations are divided into thirty-three geographic regions that bear responsibility for oversight and nurture. Eleven general ministries and the Office of General minister and president link the denomination with the wider church, world missions and support services to expand the church's ministry to fulfill the mission of being "a faithful, growing church, that demonstrates true community, deep Christian spirituality and a passion for justice."

The Moravian Church (Unitas Fratrum) is a worldwide body consisting of nearly 800,000 members in nineteen provinces. In the United States and Canada, the Northern and Southern Provinces together include, respectively, roughly 25,000 and 18,000 members. Alaska and Labrador are separate provinces. Governance is representative: quadrennial synods plan the work of provinces, while provincial elders' conferences, with both lay and clergy members, exercise ministries of oversight (including ministerial ordination and discipline) between synods. There are three orders of ministry: deacon, presbyter, and bishop; all three orders may preside over the rites of the church, including baptism and Holy Communion. Bishops, elected for life, exercise no special ministries of administrative oversight; rather, they serve as theological resources, servants at the request of the provincial elders' conferences, intercessors for the church and "pastor to pastors."

The Moravian Church recognizes a variety of historic creeds and confessions; it steadfastly maintains, however, that the Bible contains no single system of doctrine, and it refuses to use any one creed as a litmus test of faith. (Indeed, the best picture of Moravian doctrine may be found in the group's hymns and liturgies.) Moravians are eager to recognize and partner with all Christians and Christian denominations that recognize the Lordship of Jesus Christ. Two mottos guide members' life and work: "Our Lamb has conquered; let us follow him"; and "In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, love."

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)) traces its ancestry back to Scotland and England by way of reformers John Calvin and John Knox. In the United States, the Presbyterian church has split and united several times. The PC(USA), formed in 1983, is the result of reunion between northern and southern branches of the church. With roughly 2.5 million members, it is the largest Presbyterian denomination in the United States.

The Constitution of the PC(USA) consists of two volumes, The Book of Confessions,<sup>8</sup> which includes ancient and contemporary creeds and confessions, and the Book of Order, which enumerates governmental, worship, and disciplinary standards. The latter volume makes clear that "the nature of Presbyterian order is such that it shares power and responsibility. The system of governing bodies,<sup>9</sup> whether they have authority over one or many churches, sustains such mutual relationships within the structures as to express the unity of the church."<sup>10</sup>

The PC(USA) understands itself to be only one part of the Body of Christ. It is committed to seeking the full visible unity of the church and is active in conciliar, cooperative, missional, and bilateral dialogues and partnerships, including membership in the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is committed to living its faith both in creedal affirmation and in faithful public witness and social action.

The Reformed Church in America (RCA) was founded in 1628 as the established church of the Dutch Colony of New Netherland. Strongest in the mid-Atlantic region and the upper Midwest, it consists of roughly 300,000 members. Governance is presbyterian and conciliar. Ordained ministers, elders, and deacons meet in deliberative assemblies at four levels: local consistories, classes (analogous to presbyteries, with the power of ordination and discipline), regional synods, and a general synod.

The denomination's heritage is Calvinist; today the RCA is theologically conservative but irenic and nonjudgmental. Traditionally it has stressed doctrine over lifestyle. Pastors must hold to several historic creeds and Reformed confessions, including the Belgic Confession, the Heidelberg Catechism, and the Canons of Dort. From the 19th century, foreign missions were ecumenical, and the RCA has historically been a strong participant in ecumenical activities. This commitment is expressed both in a pattern of partnership globally with indigenous bodies, and in conciliar and full communion relationships with other denominations, including the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the United Church of Christ.

The United Church of Christ (UCC) was formed in 1957, the union of two previously merged bodies in the United States. The Congregational and the Christian churches (joined in 1931) have their origins in the English reformation and post-Revolutionary America, respectively; the Evangelical Synod and the Reformed Church (joined in 1934) were churches of German heritage with roots in the continental reformation. Current membership is roughly 1.2 million. The UCC polity is both congregational (the rights of local churches are inalienable) and connectional (ministerial standing and discipline are handled regionally, by Associations). The concept of "covenant"—mutual accountability and respect among individuals in, and settings of, the church—binds together otherwise autonomous Associations, Conferences, and a biennial General Synod. The latter representative body, which coordinates the work and witness of the denomination, speaks "to, not for" the local churches.

Theologically, the UCC "looks to the word of God in the Scriptures," and "claims as its own" historic creeds and confessions, while insisting that Christians in each generation must re-examine and re-interpret these authoritative sources.<sup>11</sup> From its founding in what has been called "an ecumenical crucible," the UCC has engaged in numerous bi- and multilateral conversations and partnerships. Its members are active nationally and globally in direct action for social and economic justice and peace.

Endnotes

1. For the purposes of this document and the relationships it establishes, reference to the Moravian Church is exclusive to the congregations who are organized under the authority of the Northern and Southern Provinces.

2. Descriptions of each of the participating communions are at the end of this document.
3. In practice, denominations mix and vary these elements of collective and individual oversight. Moravian bishops, while standing in historic succession, do not exercise judicial oversight; rather such oversight is exercised by the Provincial Elders Conference, a representative body of clergy and laity. The PC(USA) and RCA, on the other hand, vest oversight exclusively in representative bodies (presbyteries and classes) of clergy and laity.
4. It should be noted that the three other Reformed partners (RCA, UCC, CC/DC) entered the dialogue primarily with the first three goals in mind. As the dialogue proceeded, however, representatives of all three communions perceived the appropriateness and usefulness of seeking deeper formal relationships with the Moravian Church. If pursued, such relationships would be effected bilaterally, rather than (as with the Formula of Agreement) by the Reformed bodies acting together. It is further understood that the Moravian Church will proceed in each case only if both the Northern and Southern Provinces agree to pursue a closer relationship with a given denomination.
5. In the various Provinces of the Renewed Unitas Fratrum the following documents gained special importance, because in them the main doctrines of the Christian faith find clear and simple expression: The Apostles', Athanasian, and Nicene Creeds, The Confession of the Unity of the Bohemian Brethren of 1535, the Twenty-one Articles of the unaltered Augsburg Confession, Martin Luther's Shorter Catechism, the Synod of Berne of 1532, the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, the Barmen Declaration, the Heidelberg Confession.
6. Congregationalists are the largest constituent body within the United Church of Christ.
7. North Carolina, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Wisconsin, Maryland, Minnesota, District of Columbia, Florida, Virginia, California, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, North Dakota, Michigan.
8. Included are the Nicene and Apostles' Creeds; the Scots, Heidelberg, Second Helvetic, and Westminster Confessions; the Shorter and Larger Catechisms; the Barmen Declaration; the Confession of 1967, and A Brief Statement of Faith.
9. The governing bodies are sessions (local congregations), presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly.

OGA COMMENT ON ITEM 07-10

Comment on Item 07-10—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

On Item 07-10, the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly would like to inform the 218th General Assembly (2008) that the document, "An Invitation to the Table: A Proposal for a Moravian/Reformed Covenant Partnership," will need to be approved as "a received ecumenical statement" by our General Assembly, the majority of our presbyteries, and the Northern and Southern Provinces of the Moravian Church.

Because of our deep commitment to this move toward visible unity, it is our common understanding that if any of these bodies are not able to approved the document, the dialogue would be reconstituted to continue working toward the goal of covenant relationship.

Item 07-11

[The assembly approved Item 07-11 with comment. See pp. 14, 15.]

Episcopal Presbyterian Agreement—From the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Receive the report of the Episcopal/Presbyterian bilateral dialogue.
2. Receive the Episcopal/Presbyterian Agreement as an ecumenical statement (G-15.0302b) and send it to the presbyteries for their ratification.
3. Give the following directions in implementing this ecumenical agreement:

a. Authorize the next round of dialogue with the Episcopal Church for purposes of further study and dialogue in the areas of diaconal ministries, historic episcopate, the office of elder, and other related subjects as a continued effort toward the full reconciliation of our ministries and interchangeability of our ministers.

b. Direct the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council to work with presbyteries in understanding this agreement and facilitating their partnership with Episcopal dioceses.

c. Direct the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations to give oversight to this agreement and report to the 220th General Assembly (2012) progress that has been made and any additional recommendations to support this agreement.

Comment: In recognizing the spirit of cooperation already present in the agreement, the 218th General Assembly (2008) suggests that further dialogue between the PC(USA) and the Episcopal Church give special attention to mutuality in language regarding both church governance and worship practice.

Rationale

The 212th General Assembly (2000) mandated a bilateral dialogue with the Episcopal Church for the purposes of moving toward mutual reconciliation of ministries within the Consultation on Church Union (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 107). The bilateral dialogue began meeting in June 2002 and worked closely with the Ministry Task Force of Churches Uniting in Christ. It became clear through the CUiC process that we are not yet able to reconcile our ministries. However, the dialogue team is prepared to recommend actions that will allow our churches to recognize each other's ministries as authentic and valid with the prayer that we will one day be able to fully reconcile our ministries.

Constitutionally, for the PC(USA) this agreement is based upon G-13.0103s (establish and maintain ecumenical relationships that will enlarge the life and mission of the church); G-11.0405 (permission for ministers of other denominations to serve in temporary pastoral relationships); G-15.0200 (Relations with Other Denominations). This agreement does not require amendments to the Book of Order.

PRESBYTERIAN/EPISCOPAL BI-LATERAL DIALOGUE

I. Background

It has been nearly fifty years since the Reverend Eugene Carson Blake, Stated Clerk of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., proposed in a sermon at Grace Episcopal Cathedral, San Francisco, the establishment of a dialogue between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., in the hope that this would result in a united church that would be "truly catholic, truly reformed, and truly evangelical." This would later be expanded to include the United Methodist Church and, subsequently, seven other denominations, including three historically black Methodist denominations. This would give rise to the Consultation on Church Union, which would subsequently be succeeded in this vision in 2001 by Churches Uniting in Christ, with ten denominations from the Reformed, Anglican, Methodist, and Moravian traditions.

Historically, Anglicanism and Presbyterianism grew up as cousins, if not siblings, in England, Scotland, and later in Ireland and Wales, and these traditions were transplanted into the American context during the colonial period. Having had common roots in Britain, as well as in the colonies, and being generally of similar socioeconomic and educational levels, Presbyterians and Episcopalians have over the years engaged in conversations towards unity on and off since the 1890s.

The definitive statement of the basis for church union in the Episcopal Church, indeed in Anglicanism as a whole, is the Chicago-Lambeth Quadrilateral. Originally an invitation by the American Episcopal Bishops to discussions of union with various other church bodies, churches from the Presbyterian tradition alone responded. There were no permanent results of these discussions, although these conversations were background to subsequent and serious proposals towards merger in the 1940s.

II. The Dialogue

The current Presbyterian-Episcopal dialogue is a direct outgrowth of our common participation on the Consultation on Church Union. At the 1999 plenary of COCU, the PC(USA) and The Episcopal Church were asked to consider engaging in a bilateral discussion in an attempt to address questions of ministry and polity that would need to be resolved if COCU was to go forward. The 2000 General Convention of the Episcopal Church authorized a bilateral dialogue with the PC(USA). At their initial meeting, held concurrently with the inauguration of CUiC in January 2002, it was decided that the dialogue's conversations would take place within the larger context of CUiC's Ministry Task Force, which was to drafting a proposal for the recognition and reconciliation of ministries.

Members:

For PC(USA): Elder Freda Gardner, co-convener; Dr. Dale Gruder; Elder Moon Lee; Elder Janice Sperry; the Reverend Dr. George Telford; and the Reverend Dr. Philip Wickeri. Staff support has been provided by the Reverend Robina Winbush and the Reverend Carlos Malave. The Reverend Dr. Lewis Mudge and the Reverend Dr. Joseph Small, Office of Theology have consulted.

For The Episcopal Church: James Foster; the Reverend Dan Krutz; the Reverend Dirk Reinken; the Reverend Sandra Richardson; the Rt. Reverend Douglas Theuner, co-convener; and Dr. Fredrica Harris Thompsett. Staff support has been provided by the Rt. Reverend Christopher C. Epting and Dr. Thomas Ferguson. The Reverend Canon J. Robert Wright has consulted.

The dialogue has met twice annually since its first meeting in January 2001 in a variety of venues, including seminaries, diocesan/presbytery offices, and at two Presbyterian-Episcopal congregations, Indian Hill Church in Cincinnati and St. Matthew's Episcopal/Wilton Presbyterian Church in Wilton, Connecticut. The dialogue team was also in conversation with the concurrent work of the Ministry Task Force of CUiC.

The dialogue has extensively examined relevant documents and deliberations from the past and present both in the United States and abroad, including the Formula of Agreement between the PC(USA) and the ELCA, United Church of Christ, and the Reformed Church in America; Call to Common Mission agreement between the Episcopal Church and the ELCA; and the Mutual Recognition and Mutual Reconciliation of Ministries draft document of the CUiC Ministry Task Force. At every meeting of the dialogue, members have worshipped together using rites approved by either denomination or according to the authorized CUiC liturgy, with ordained ministers of each denomination officiating.

Among the most significant achievements of the dialogue was the co-sponsorship with CUiC of a Consultation on Episcopate held in St. Louis in October 2006. In addition to opening and closing remarks by representatives of the Disciples of Christ and the Methodist tradition, there were five scholarly papers presented: one by an Episcopalian, two from the Reformed Tradition (PC(USA) and UCC), and one each by a member of the ELCA and the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church. These papers, together with three Bible studies by the Reverend John Ford (Roman Catholic) and other related presentations have been published in Call to Unity: Resourcing the Church for Ecumenical Ministry, generously published by the Council on Christianity Unity of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ).

III. Conclusion

At its initial meeting in Memphis in January 2002, members of the dialogue present all agreed that both churches were within the "apostolic succession" as defined by the Baptism, Eucharist, and Ministry statement: to stand in the succession of the apostolic faith. However the dialogue was still unable to agree on a basis for full mutual recognition and reconciliation of ministry. Disagreements centered on the concepts of "personal" and "corporate" episcopate. Episcopalians hold that in order to be in full communion there must be a sharing in the sign of the historic succession of bishops. Presbyterians believe that episcopate has been passed on corporately from apostolic times through the laying-on-of-hands within the presbyterate and speak of a threefold office of ministry (deacon, presbyter, and bishop) within the local congregation as a reflection of the ordering of ministry within the apostolic period. Of concern to Presbyterians was the feeling that the CUiC Ministry Task Force proposal failed to recognize the significance of the presbyterate, which Episcopalians felt that they had done in the United States through the requirement of lay involvement and approval at virtually every level of ecclesiastical governance, albeit their lay people are not ordained as elders.

Mutual recognition and reconciliation seems to rest upon mutual acceptance of the concepts of "personal" and "corporate" episcopate. Until this matter is mutually resolved it will be difficult to move into full altar and pulpit fellowship, the place where mutual ministry between the denominations seems most likely to have an effect at the parish level. Because of that the dialogue has met with collaborating congregations of each denomination and seeks to encourage church leaders to initiate and nourish additional relationships of that type. Although full mutual recognition and reconciliation of ministry still eludes us, we believe we have found a way in which to encourage preliminary altar and pulpit fellowship and, hence, to allow our congregations of both denominations to commonly pursue the mission and ministry of Christ's One, Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church, a reality which we believe already exists in the Mind of God.

To that end, the Presbyterian/Episcopal Dialogue requests our respective authorizing bodies to consider the following agreement; to reconstitute the dialogue for future deliberations; and that both of our Heads of Communion commit themselves publicly to this effort and to consider a public celebration of our progress to date and our hope for the future.

Agreement Between The Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

1. We acknowledge one another's churches as churches belonging to the one, holy, catholic, and apostolic Church.
2. We acknowledge that in our churches the Word of God is authentically preached and the sacraments of Baptism and Eucharist are duly administered.
3. We acknowledge one another's ordained ministries as given by God and instruments of grace, and look forward to the time when the reconciliation of our churches makes possible the full interchangeability of ministers.
4. We acknowledge that personal and collegial oversight (episcopate) is embodied and exercised in our churches in a variety of forms, episcopal and non-episcopal, as a visible sign of the Church's unity and continuity in apostolic life, mission and ministry.
5. We agree that authorized ministers of our churches may, subject to the regulations of the churches and within the limits of their competence,<sup>1</sup> carry out the tasks of their own office in congregations of the other churches when requested and approved by the diocesan bishop and local presbytery.
6. We agree that The Episcopal Church will invite members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to receive Holy Communion in their churches and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will invite members of The Episcopal Church to receive Holy Communion in their churches. We encourage the members of our churches to accept this Eucharistic hospitality and thus express their unity with each other in the one Body of Christ.
7. We agree to continue to dialogue in the areas such as diaconal ministries, historic episcopate, the office of elder, etc., that would lead to full reconciliation of our ministries and interchangeability of our ministers.
8. We encourage diocesan bishops and presbyteries to provide regular occasion for planning, discussing, resourcing for missional, educational, and liturgical life together. In addition, to explore possibilities for new church development and redevelopment together.
9. We agree to develop a process to support and implement the above recommendations.<sup>2</sup>
10. We affirm these proposals mark an important step in moving toward the full, visible unity of the Church. We know that beyond this commitment lies a move from the recognition to the reconciliation of churches and ministries within the wider fellowship of the universal Church.

Endnotes

1. Because we do not yet have reconciliation and full interchangeability of ordained ministries, all authorization for these special opportunities must confirm to the Book of Worship and the Book of Order of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the Book of Common Prayer and the Constitution and Canons of The Episcopal Church.
2. Guidelines will be developed by each of the communions.

World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) Gender, Leadership, and Power Consultation.

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Receive the WARC report from the Gender Leadership and Power Consultation.
2. Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC) that it provide leadership and participation in the North American region with our partner WARC communions and include a strategy for a study process for gender, leadership, and power in the PC(USA).
3. Recommend to the GAC ministry areas to include this work in the 2009–2010 work plans.
4. Request the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) to monitor this process and report its findings to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Rationale

Churches continue to struggle with sexism and other structural and systemic ways of being that diminish God's children and the community of believers. Sexism harms men and women. Ecumenically, there was a consultation held in Limuru, Kenya, on Gender, Leadership, and Power to begin a new conversation about these concerns. The consultation was held on June 29 to July 4, 2007, and brought together forty-eight persons (39 women and 9 men) from Africa, Asia, the Caribbean, Europe, Latin America, and North America. This historic event was organized by the World Alliance of Reformed Churches.

A report from the event was received in the fall of 2007, and the committee discussed next steps on ecumenical relations (the report is attached). The WARC will begin, in 2008, a two-year, action-oriented research and documentation process that will reflect the diverse perspective and locations of woman as leaders in the church with a comparative focus from different regions/cultures. The complimentary nature of several movements within the PC(USA) as well as the ecumenical world was noted. Participating in the study was seen as advantageous for the PC(USA) and was encouraged by the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations.

Complimentary actions by both the Women of Color Consultation Task Force and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) are coming to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

Limuru, Kenya, June 29 to July 4, 2007

BRIEF REPORT

The Office for Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches organized a Consultation on Gender, Leadership and Power in collaboration with St Paul's United Theological College, Limuru, Kenya. The consultation was held on June 29 to July 4, 2007, and brought together forty-eight persons (39 women and 9 men) from Africa, Asia, the Caribbean, Europe, Latin America, and North America. Participants included eleven students from St Paul's United Theological College. Participants explored possibilities for a radical shift in leadership and power and discussed ways to encourage churches to re-examine current models of leadership and their limitations as well as to share models of leadership and power that affirm partnership.

The key objectives of the consultation were to - examine power and leadership within local, regional, and global geopolitical contexts;

- analyze and reflect on power and leadership in the church from a theological perspective;
- challenge patriarchal aspects of ministry and identify negative impacts;
- envision new models of leadership by drawing on feminist theology, principles, and practice within various cultures and traditions;
- offer alternative models of leadership that address the gender gap in church leadership.

The first day of the consultation set the pace with the opening event and panel discussion on Women and Leadership—in Politics, the Ecumenical Movement, Theological Institutions, and the Church. Participants examined critically models of leadership, structures of power in church and society; androcentric formulations of language and curricula in theological institutions; inadequate exposure to feminist theology; and the need to redefine gender in the context of equity and equal opportunity for both women and men.

A panel discussion on Women and Leadership: Threats and Challenges was brought into context by case presentations from Zambia, the United States, Korea, Argentina, Hungary, and Taiwan. These studies brought to the fore the crosscutting threats and challenges to transformative leadership, and provided a backdrop against which regional experiences were shared. Participants worked in small groups to identify barriers and possibilities for transformation cutting across cultural, theological, socioeconomic, and political boundaries.

Sessions on Masculinity, Race and the Empire followed by an Exploration of Leadership Models Which Embrace Feminist Principles were logical links between critical analysis, reflection, and envisioning a process of transformation as a key outcome of the consultation. The Bible studies on the story of the widow and the judge (Luke 18.1–7) and Queen Esther (Esther 1–3) were essential grounding for analysis and reflection.

To ensure a high level of participation and interaction, the process included plenary sessions and workgroups, drama and table conversations. On Sunday, participants worshipped in various local churches where they preached, shared testimonies, presented songs, and had conversations and meetings over lunch with pastors, elders/deacons, and other members of the congregations.

Participants discussed strategies for moving forward and decided on two, concrete follow-up projects: A publication, which draws out the main themes of the consultation and a two-year process of action-oriented research and documentation. Participants developed draft outlines for the following five themes through which transformation of gender and power constructions would be facilitated:

1. Racial and Ethnic Identity

- To develop and promote leadership models that facilitate healing brokenness in church, community, and the world.
- To deconstruct models of leadership that secure and maintain imperial systems of patriarchy; to unmask fears that undergird the status quo—xenophobia, racism, ethnic/caste.
- To reconstruct models of leadership that resist and liberate.

2. Cultural Identity

- To create an all-inclusive society with the aim of empowering women and men.
- To dig deep into culture and its role in perpetuating injustice to understanding of gender, which informs society in terms of power (relations).

3. Use of the Bible and Theology in Church

- To transform our interpretations and our applications using approaches to Bible studies and theological explorations that are analytical, critical, and liberative.

4. Globalization

- To engender the Covenanting for Justice process by designing an approach that enables women and men to talk about their experiences of “globalization” and how it could be transformed.

5. Leadership

- To make visible the leadership of women in the church.
- To empower women leaders in the church.

The study will be multidimensional in form, reflecting the diverse perspective and locations of women as leaders in the church and with a comparative focus from different regions/cultures. The methodology will include techniques and approaches such as stories, narratives, interviews, interdisciplinary analysis, systems approach, peer mentorship, workshops, drama, and networking. It will also include case studies, for example, focus on a specific community. It was proposed that a small international group, including feminist theologians, pastors, economists, and environmentalists should design and test the process, drawing on existing resources.

Item 07-13

Transfer of Ministers and Congregations to Transitional Presbyteries—From the General Presbyter/Stated Clerk, Presbytery of Charlotte.

[The assembly approved Item 07-13, Recommendation 1. See pp. 14, 15.]

1. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) answer Item 07-13 with the following recommendation:

With respect to the first question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question presents a matter in which interpretation of G-11.0103i and G-15.0203a and b is advisable. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) respond to the question with the following interpretation:

“Presbyteries may dismiss congregations to other ecclesiastical bodies of this denomination, and to denominations whose organization is conformed to the doctrines and order of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). No congregation may be dismissed to independent status, or to the status of a nondenominational congregation. It is the responsibility of the dismissing presbytery to determine whether the receiving body meets these standards, and this responsibility cannot be delegated to any other entity within the presbytery (such as an administrative commission). Thus the General Assembly may not determine in advance whether a particular denomination or its constituent bodies qualify under these standards.

“The provisions of G-15.0203 a and b do, however, require that the General Assembly, as the highest governing body of this denomination, advise its presbyteries in this matter. The 218th General Assembly (2008) therefore advises the presbyteries that they must satisfy themselves concerning the conformity with this denomination of a transitional presbytery of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC) in matters of doctrines and order. Presbyteries may facilitate the exploration of conformity by means of an administrative commission, although such commissions may not be empowered to approve the dismissal of the congregation. In exploring this matter, presbyteries should consider such questions as whether the receiving EPC presbytery is

- “• doctrinally consistent with the essentials of Reformed theology as understood by the presbytery;
- “• governed by a polity that is consistent in form and structure with that of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A);
- “• of sufficient permanence to offer reasonable assurance that the congregation is not being dismissed to de facto independence.

“Failure on the part of the presbytery thoroughly to explore and adequately to document its satisfaction in these matters may thus violate, however unintentionally, the spirit of the polity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)”

Rationale

The Book of Order grants to the presbytery the power to “divide, dismiss, or dissolve churches, in consultation with their members” (G-11.0103i). While the language of this provision is quite broad, there are important limitations imposed by two judicial cases from the polity of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and by the provisions of G-15.0203a and b.

Anderson v. Synod of Florida (Minutes, PCUS, 1973, Part I, pp. 119–21):

In 1973, the Presbytery of Florida (Presbyterian Church in the United States) dismissed three congregations from its membership without specifying the ecclesiastical body to whose membership they were transferred. A remedial complaint was filed against the presbytery with the Synod of Florida, which ruled that the presbytery had acted in violation of the Book of Church Order, 16-7(8). The case was appealed to the Permanent Judicial Commission of the PCUS, which sustained the synod’s ruling. In its finding, the PCUS Permanent Judicial Commission stated:

The language of BCO § 16-7(8) is unspecific and does not expressly spell out the limitations on the powers of presbytery in dismissing a church. Nevertheless we feel that the authority of presbytery is not an absolute and unqualified one.

We further hold that a presbytery can dismiss a church to the ecclesiastical bodies with which union is permitted. These bodies include churches within our own denomination, the United Presbyterian Church of the United States, the Reformed Church in America, (BCO § 31-1) or any other ecclesiastical body “whose organization is conformed to the doctrines and order of this church.” BCO § 18-6(13), (17). Although presbytery has great latitude in the exercise of its dismissal jurisdiction, it does not have an absolute and unlimited power.

Anderson is usually interpreted to mean that a presbytery may not dismiss a congregation to “independency.” In fact, Anderson also limits the denominations to which a Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregation as those “whose organization is conformed to the doctrines and order of this church.” It is thus incumbent on the dismissing PC(USA) presbytery to determine whether the denomination to which the congregation proposes dismissal meets this standard.

Furthermore, Anderson imposes on the presbytery the obligation to inquire fully into the circumstances under which the request for dismissal is made. The commission’s reasoning speaks as eloquently to the present question as it did to the circumstances of 1973:

An ecclesiastical court is no more required than is a civil court “to fail to know what the whole world knows.” It may take judicial notice of facts not a formal part of the record before it which lie within the common stock of knowledge. We know that this case arises out of the tragic dissidence that exists within some parts of the church. One of the tactics of the dissident elements is to seek to have churches in which they are members dismissed as entities. They perceive certain benefits in this which might not be realized by orderly individual withdrawals followed by reassociation in other ecclesiastical bodies. This judgment says that this course is not constitutionally possible under the procedures of this church.

Strong and Bagby v. Synod of the Mid-South (Minutes, PCUS, 1976, Part I, pp. 92–96)

Three years later, the PCUS Permanent Judicial Commission rendered a second decision regarding the limitations on a presbytery’s right to dismiss congregations. The Bagby decision overturned the action of East Alabama Presbytery to form an administrative commission to which it then delegated broad powers to dismiss congregations to the Continuing Presbyterian Church (later the Presbyterian Church in America). Bagby underscored the decision of Anderson, and then went on:

This case remains the law of the Church, and it would clearly prohibit the delegation by presbytery (even were delegation generally permissible) of carte blanche power to an administrative commission to dismiss ecclesiastical bodies not falling within the stated category. Whether another ecclesiastical body does fall within the general classification mentioned is itself a matter of judgment which must be determined by the dismissing authority as a precondition to dismissal.

We hold, therefore, that BCO § 16-7(8) restricts a presbytery in dismissing a church to the necessity of doing so to another ecclesiastical jurisdiction and forbids dismissal to independency.

In its supporting rationale, the commission grounded this finding in the connectional nature of the church:

In this denomination the different courts in their regular order of gradation “are not separate and independent tribunals” but “have a mutual relation” which is designed to “express the unity of the church.” This mutual relation is exactly ordered by the specific constitutional allocations of original and appellate jurisdiction. ... It is critical to the maintenance of this form that the various courts exercise the specific jurisdiction conferred upon them, neither usurping that not given them nor declining to exercise that given, whether by default or by attempted delegation. This connectional form of government is imbedded in our Constitution and can only be altered, generally or specifically, by formal amendment of that Constitution. ... Within this constitutional system exclusive original jurisdiction to dismiss churches, BCO 16-7(8), and to dismiss ministers, BCO 16-7(13), is vested in presbytery.

The thrust of the Bagby decision is twofold: (1) it upholds Anderson in prohibiting a presbytery from dismissing a congregation to autonomy, and (2) it requires that the decision to dismiss be reserved to the presbytery itself, and not delegated to a commission or other entity of the presbytery.

The Bagby decision can be distilled into four areas of concern that presbyteries should consider in determining whether to dismiss a congregation to another denomination. The four areas are:

- a. The nature of the ecclesiastical body to which the congregation is dismissed,
- b. The disposition of the property of the dismissed congregation,
- c. The status of any pastors or associate pastors of the dismissed congregation, and
- d. The transfer and status of members of the congregation, including both those who wish to be transferred and those who wish to retain membership in the PC(USA).

G-15.0203 a and b

The provisions of G-15.0203a define the procedures by which a PC(USA) presbytery may receive a congregation from a presbytery or similar governing body of another Christian denomination. Those procedures include (1) verification that the congregation has been regularly dismissed by the governing body of jurisdiction, and (2) receipt of “the advice of the highest governing body of that denomination dealing with relations between denominations.”

By requiring that “similar procedures shall be followed in dismissing a particular church from this denomination to another,” G-15.0203b mandates that presbyteries receive and consider the advice of the General Assembly concerning relations between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the denomination to which the congregation proposes to be dismissed.

Transitional Presbyteries

By action of its 27th General Assembly (June 2007), the Evangelical Presbyterian Church created “transitional presbyteries,” which exist for a limited time (June 2007 to June 2012), and which are empowered to receive congregations from other denominations. The action leaves a great many questions unanswered regarding the future of congregations received into such entities.

Does the theology of the EPC “conform to the doctrines ... of this denomination?” The EPC General Assembly action requires that

All churches and pastors entering the EPC on a transitional basis must affirm “Essentials of our Faith” without any reservations.<sup>1</sup>

In both our polity and in the theology on which it is founded, we have long recognized that “reservations” and points of disagreement in some matters of faith are not only inevitable but ultimately nourishing for the health of the church. Moreover, we have resisted listing the “essential tenets of the Reformed faith” (W-4.4003c), precisely because such lists tend to confine the theology of the church within the narrow strictures of the historical moment in which the list was created, robbing it of its life and liveliness. For this reason, we have deemed it wise to have not one confessional statement but a Book of Confessions (Part I of this denomination’s constitution), in which are registered multiple statements of faith that stand in both mutual support and occasional tension. Can such theological suppleness be said to characterize the doctrines of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church?

Does a polity that contains such presbyteries “conform to the ... order of this denomination?” At the very least, the presbyteries so created appear to be operating under an understanding of presbytery membership that does not visibly conform to that of the PC(USA). According to the statement approved by the 27th General Assembly of the EPC, the purpose of transitional presbyteries is not to receive congregations into full membership in the EPC, but to provide a means by which congregations or associations and groups of congregations from other denominations and their pastors within the Reformed family of churches may become members of the EPC on a transitional basis toward the goal of full membership.<sup>2</sup>

Membership in such presbyteries is designed to allow existing presbyteries and transitional member churches and pastors the time and opportunity to fully assess the mutual expectations doctrinally, missionally, legislatively and financially before committing to full membership.<sup>3</sup>

The meaning of “transitional membership” and its differentiation from “full membership” is not fully clarified, leaving open the question of whether there are limits on the nature of congregational participation in the life of the EPC during the transitional period.

What happens to congregations in transitional presbyteries that elect not to be received into full EPC membership? When the five-year sunset date for the provisions is reached, all congregations and ministers not received into full membership shall be dismissed. Transitional congregations and ministers may request dismissal from transitional membership at any time according to and following the provisions of the Book of Government including 5-6.<sup>4</sup>

Neither the EPC Book of Government or the enabling actions of the 27th General Assembly contain any property trust provisions; indeed, both maintain absolute congregational ownership of church property. This appears to mean that congregations dismissed from membership in EPC transitional presbyteries at or before the sunset date for transitional presbyteries may thereby attain independent status. It thus appears quite possible that a congregation seeking membership in an EPC transitional presbytery may be, in effect if not in actual intent, seeking dismissal to independent status. Such an eventuality would result in the loss of the investment of the time, money, energy, and faithfulness of generations of Presbyterians to the witness of the Reformed faith. It would certainly violate the spirit, if not the letter, of the Anderson and Bagby decisions.

2. With respect to the second question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question presents a matter in which interpretation of G-11.0416 and G-15.0202 is advisable.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) respond to the question with the following interpretation:

“Presbyteries may dismiss minister members to transitional presbyteries of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC) under the provisions of G-15.0202, provided that they have determined that such transitional presbyteries properly have jurisdiction over the work to which the dismissed minister is called. In making this determination, presbyteries should consider the advice of the General Assembly concerning such transitional presbyteries found in response #1 above. In addition, presbyteries should honor their pastoral obligation to the minister requesting dismissal by informing him or her of the General Assembly’s grave concerns over the uncertainty and impermanence of the transitional presbyteries of the EPC, and of the consequences of the dismissal for any future relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)”

Rationale

The decision to receive ministers from or dismiss ministers to other Christian denominations belongs to the presbytery, and is made on the basis of the presentation of particular credentials and certifications by the minister from the dismissing presbytery or other appropriate ecclesiastical body. In the case of the receipt of a minister from another Christian church by a presbytery of the PC(USA), G-15.0202 specifies certain procedures that shall be followed:

- a. the minister shall have a call “to a work properly under the jurisdiction of the presbytery”;
- b. the constitutional conditions of G-11.0404 and G-11.0405 shall be met, including presentation of required credentials, examination by the receiving presbytery, receipt of a call to an appropriate work, and provision of evidence of removal from the roll of all previous denominations of which the minister has been a member; and
- c. that, having been satisfied regarding a and b, the receiving presbytery shall recognize the minister’s previous ordination.

A presbytery of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) dismissing a minister to other Christian denominations, including to a geographical presbytery of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church, should be prepared to provide certification of good standing and educational qualifications of the minister seeking dismissal and such other documentation as may be required by the receiving denomination. It shall remove the name of the minister from the roll of ministers in active service and shall furnish evidence of the removal to the receiving presbytery or governing body.

The issue posed by the request for interpretation is whether dismissal of a minister to a ‘transitional presbytery’ created by the action of the 27th General Assembly of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church qualifies as “dismissal from this denomination to another” (G-15.0202).

Unlike the requirements of G-15.0203 for dismissing a congregation to another denomination, G-15.0202 does not require that the presbytery considering the dismissal receive the advice of the General Assembly concerning relations with the receiving denomination. Thus, the dismissing presbytery is responsible to determine whether a “transitional presbytery” constitutes a body that properly be said to have jurisdiction over the work to which the minister is called. In light of concerns raised in the previous discussion about the uncertain and impermanent character of the transitional presbytery/ies of the EPC, dismissing presbyteries would be within their rights to determine that such transitional entities do not meet the standard of jurisdiction implied in G-15.0202.

Even if the dismissing presbytery determines that the EPC transitional presbytery does have proper jurisdiction over the work to which the minister is called, it would be remiss in its pastoral responsibility to its minister member if it did not make clear the transitional and uncertain character of the entity to which he or she requests dismissal. Once dismissed by the PC(USA) presbytery of membership, his or her continued standing as a minister of the Word and Sacrament will be dependent on the disposition by the EPC General Assembly of the transitional presbytery when the sunset date for such presbyteries is reached in 2012. Dismissal from this denomination to the EPC requires forfeiture of ordination in the PC(USA). Should the minister so dismissed desire to return to the PC(USA), restoration to ordained ministry is at the discretion of the PC(USA) presbytery that proposes to receive the minister under the provisions of G-15.0202 and G-11.0404 and .0405.

In the event that a minister of this denomination unilaterally accepts membership in a transitional presbytery of the EPC without having been dismissed by the presbytery of current membership (except under the provisions of G-11.0411), the presbytery of membership shall record this fact and remove the minister’s name from the roll (G-11.0416). The effect of this action is the same as renunciation of the jurisdiction of the church (see G-6.0702; also Minutes 1990, Part I, p. 239, paragraph 21.121, Request 90-4). Should the minister who has renounced jurisdiction desire to return to the PC(USA), resumption of ordained ministry requires that the minister reenter through the full candidacy process as defined in G-14.0400 (see Minutes, 1989, Part I, p. 238).

Questions Received

Item 07-13 from the Presbytery of Charlotte presents the following questions upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

1. Can a presbytery dismiss a congregation to a transitional presbytery in the Evangelical Presbyterian Church?
2. Can a presbytery dismiss a minister of the Word and Sacrament to a transitional presbytery of the Evangelical Presbyterian Church?

*Item 07-14

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) elect the following persons to be delegates and alternate delegates to the 25th General Council of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches meeting in June 2010.

Delegates: Stated Clerk, by virtue of office; Associate Stated Clerk, with primary ecumenical responsibilities, by virtue of office; director of Presbyterian World Mission, by virtue office, or designee; Carol Adcock; Claudia Carvalhaes; Arlene Gordon; Cliff Kirkpatrick; Neil Presa; Marsha Snulligan-Haney; Aaron Stauffer; Rick Ufford-Chase.

Alternates: member of GACER Class of 2010; member of GACER Class of 2012; Scott Anderson; Alice L. Hageman; Jeffrey Jaynes; Rachel Medema.

Rationale

The World Alliance of Reformed Churches will hold its 25th General Council, June 18–28, 2010, in Grand Rapids, Michigan. This General Council will be the Uniting General Council with the Reformed Ecumenical Council, out of which will emerge the World Communion of Reformed Churches. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has been asked to name eleven delegates to the 25th General Council. The GACER sought to nominate persons who represented a cross-section with particular connections to global mission, middle governing bodies, and local congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Item 07-1NB

[The assembly approved Item 07-1NB. See pp. 14, 15.]

That the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), meeting in San Jose, California, gives thanks to God for Clifton Kirkpatrick, celebrates his years of ministry in this church and the worldwide church of Christ, and asks God's blessing on him in the days to come for the good of the wider ecumenical family and to the glory of God.

Item 07-Info

A. General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations Agency Summary

A. Purpose

The purpose of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations is to give a high profile to the vision of the ecumenical involvement and work as central to the gospel and key to the life of the church; plan and coordinate, in consultation with the agencies and governing bodies of the church, the involvement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in ecumenical relations and work; connect the ecumenical efforts of all governing body levels of the church; provide a common point for all ecumenical efforts connecting us with those outside our church; keep a unity of vision that includes the ecclesiastical, programmatic, ecumenical, and denominational parts of our ministries and commitments; articulate the Reformed and Presbyterian identity in the midst of our ecumenical commitments; promote awareness of the role of the unity of all humankind in the search for the unity of the church; and promote the unity of the church as an exhibition of the kingdom of God to the world.

The committee is composed of sixteen members, elected by the General Assembly, ecumenical members, the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council, and other ex-officio members.

B. Ministry and Accomplishments (2006)

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations held its fall regular meetings on October 12–14, 2006, at the Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary. The meeting was called to order with prayer and brief introductions. The following are highlights of the meeting:

1. Fall 2006 Meeting

On the first day, Lemuel Garcia-Arroyo led the committee in Bible study with Scripture reading from Acts 15:1–21. The committee divided into small groups to reflect on the text. After small group discussion, the committee reconvened and shared their thoughts and vision. The second day of the meeting Frances Adeney, professor of Evangelism and Global Mission at the Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary, led the committee in Bible study on the topic of unity and read from Ephesians 1:3–10 and 3:14–21.

Lemuel Arroyo-Garcia and Carlos Malave conducted a PowerPoint overview of our churches' ecumenical mandate and involvement. The purpose of the presentation was to remind and reclaim the committee's responsibilities and to orientate the new members.

The committee approved that the spring meeting of 2007 would focus on reviewing the PC(USA) ecumenical work, which included planning and coordinating the involvement of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in ecumenical work, connecting with governing bodies, and giving guidance to General Assembly Council.

The committee entered into conversation with the various General Assembly agencies, which included the new program directors of GAC, to learn what the agencies were doing ecumenically and to have an impact and provide guidance in their efforts. These conversations lead up to the ecumenical consultation in the fall of 2007. The spring meeting of 2008 focused on the review of the consultation and preparations for the General Assembly.

Gary Cook, Pat Chapman, and Sara Lisherness, members of the General Assembly Council (GAC) transition team, gave background information on how and why the team was established and updated the committee on where things stand now. The GAC moved from three ministries divisions to six work areas: Peace and Justice; Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries/Presbyterian Women; Relief and Development; Worldwide Mission and Partnership; Evangelism and Church Growth (including Vocation and Leadership); and Theology, Worship, and Education (including Stewardship). The General Assembly Council has made a commitment to use an ecumenical filter in the process of moving forward.

Leading up to the ecumenical consultation, the committee looked at the breadth, growth, and depth of ecumenical work in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Over the next year, the committee will build a map of what the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s ecumenical engagement will look like. To begin the mapping process, the committee was led in activities, which explored each member's ecumenical journey.

The committee had a conversation with the new Executive Director of the General Assembly Council (GAC), Linda Valentine. After her presentation, the floor was opened for comments and questions from the committee.

The committee was introduced to the new working configuration in specific focus groups (agencies/conciliar relationships; ecumenical formation and educational strategy; connecting local and national ecumenical work; and interfaith). Each member was asked to self-select a group they would like to put energy in for the next couple of years.

The evening of October 13, the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) participated in a joint meeting with all the permanent committees of the Office of the General Assembly, at the Presbyterian Center. After guided small groups conversations, the floor was open for dialogue with the Moderator, Joan Gray, and Stated Clerk Clifton Kirkpatrick.

The Stated Clerk reported on his work with World Alliance of Reformed Churches, National Council of Churches in Christ in the U.S.A., and the World Council of Churches. In his report he shared that he views the fundamental problems facing the PC(USA) as an ecumenical problem. We can be a church that honors a deep sense of diversity and difference and yet be in community with one another and find the power of the gospel to overcome and become a unity in Christ that the world might believe. There is urgency about the renewal of our ecumenical sensitivity, vision, commitment, and connection in the PC(USA) that is also for the salvation of our own church. He hoped that the GACER would be able to seriously address these issues.

In the fall of 2005, the GACER began discussing the possibility of holding a consultation on the ecumenical stance of the PC(USA). They identified goals and issues to be addressed as well as the spectrum of persons who might be invited to participate. At its January 2006 meeting, the GACER approved a proposal for the consultation and authorized the executive committee to appoint a committee of three persons to plan the consultation. The outgoing executive committee appointed Philip Wickeri and Kathleen Owens and the incoming executive committee appointed Arlene Gordan. J. Oscar McCloud agreed to serve as a consultant/facilitator with the consultation and will be working closely with the planning committee. It is expected that the GACER will fully participate in the consultation.

2. Other GACER Related Activities, Reports and Actions

- a. Appointment of Nancy Keehan to serve on the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America Church Council.
- b. Give the Executive Committee of GACER full authority to select a person with General Assembly Council and/or wider church experience to serve on United Church of Christ Executive Council.
- c. Give the Executive Committee full authority to select two persons, one to serve a four-year term and the other to serve a two-year term on the Lutheran/Reform Coordinating Council. One should be a seminarian (preferably president or dean) and the other a middle governing body person, both with General Assembly Council and/or wider church experience.
- d. Voted to appoint Barbara Wheeler as the PC(USA) representative to the Church of Scotland General Assembly May 19–25, 2007.

C. Ministry and Accomplishments (2007)

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations held two regular meetings in 2007: the winter meeting on April 19–20, and the fall meeting on September 27 and 29.

1. Winter 2007 Meeting

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations met at the Holiday Inn Hurstbourne, in Louisville, Kentucky. The meeting was called to order with prayer and brief introductions.

At the October 2006 meeting of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations it was agreed that the Agency Conversation Team would engage in conversation with the Office of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, the Foundation, the Board of Pensions, and the Presbyterian Historical Society prior to its next meeting. Since the last meeting of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations, it became apparent the actual impact the restructure has had on the agencies. Rather than focus on the outside agencies at this point, the team decided to focus on what was currently occurring in GACER.

The Agency Conversation Team recommended that the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations meet with the General Assembly Council and the Office of the General Assembly at its spring meeting to raise awareness, offer education, and explore ways in which they are currently involved in ecumenical work.

The committee heard from a panel of individuals from different faith groups exploring the question “What does it mean to be a good neighbor in an interfaith context?” The panel participants were Imam Muhammad Siddeeq (Muslim) of Indianapolis, representing Imam Warith Deen Mohammed and his ministry; Jan Arnow (Jewish/Quaker), executive director of the Center for Interfaith Relations in Louisville, Kentucky; and Dr. Anantanand Rambachan (Hindu), professor of Religion at St. Olaf College in Northfield, Minnesota. Following the presentation, the floor was opened for comments and questions.

Because of the new configuration of the General Assembly Council, the GACER felt the need to have a conversation with Tom Taylor, executive director of Mission, General Assembly Council. Most of the conversation geared around the advisory functions of the GACER and Tom Taylor's expectations of the September 2007 Ecumenical Consultation. Members of the committee were glad that the conversation took place because it helped to clarify mutual expectations. The committee agreed that there was still a need to have further conversations with the General Assembly Council to give them a better understanding of the work of the committee.

The committee reviewed the plans of the ecumenical consultation that would take place September 27–29, 2007, in Louisville, Kentucky. The purpose of the consultation was to review the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations' ecumenical vision statement and construct an ecumenical stance and policy to guide the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), staff, and elected bodies for the next ten years. The objectives of the consultation were the following:

- Review the "Ecumenical Vision Statement" of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and survey our historic ecumenical stance and commitment.
- Discern the implications of religious pluralism, secularization, global injustice, and our nation's international role for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ecumenical stance.
- Envision and redefine the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ecumenical commitments and relationships in light of the changing ecumenical landscape.
- Affirm and renew the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) commitment to ecumenism and ecumenical formation.
- Construct an ecumenical stance and policy statement to guide the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

a. Bilateral Dialogues and Joint Committees Reports

(1) Episcopal Presbyterian Bilateral: In their report, the members of the Episcopal/Presbyterian Bi-Lateral Dialogue acknowledged, with appreciation, the work of Churches Uniting in Christ (CUiC) and its Ministry Task Force and pledged to continue in collaboration with them as they further the efforts of CUiC. The dialogue participants were thankful for CUiC's implementation of their suggestion for a consultation on episcopate. This was held in St. Louis in October of 2006. The meditations, presentations, and group discussions were published in Call to Unity and have been of significant help to us in our conversations. They also stand to be an ongoing resource for future study of the nature of episcopate. In the dialogue, they have recognized and acknowledged authentic forms of ministry and oversight that are already present in our churches. Presbyterians have come to a deeper understanding and appreciation of personal expressions of episcopate. Episcopalians have recognized a need for greater lay involvement in the collegial episcopate of the church. We see our dialogue as a step toward the full reconciliation of our ministries. The bilateral dialogue has reached a point where they are able (as stated in the Meissen Agreement of 1988 between Anglican, Reformed, and Lutheran traditions in Europe) to "acknowledge that personal and collegial oversight (episcopate) is embodied and exercised in our churches in a variety of forms, Episcopal and non-Episcopal, as a visible sign of the Church's unity and continuity in apostolic life, mission and ministry" (17.A.iv) with the expectation that "authorized ministers of our churches may, subject to the regulations of the churches and within the limits of their competence, carry out the tasks of their own office in congregations of the other churches when requested" (17.A.iv). The dialogue participants pledged to encourage and empower local Episcopal and Presbyterian initiatives in mission and ministry. To that end, they are examining existing relationships between Anglican and Reformed traditions around the world with the view towards working with the Episcopal Church Standing Commission on Ecumenical and Interfaith Relations and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations in developing guidelines to facilitate our own local efforts and relationships as the next step in moving toward the ultimate goal of full communion between our churches, which is the gift and mandate given to us by our shared life in Christ. The GACER voted to affirm the direction of the Presbyterian/Episcopal Bilateral dialogue; encouraged the bilateral to include definition of recognition in any proposal and how it differs from reconciliation at this time and affirms this direction; and that a letter be sent by the chair with this request.

(2) Moravian/Reformed Dialogue: The dialogue group has decided to recommend that both churches enter into a covenant relationship. They met on April 30–May 1, 2007, to complete the final proposal. If finally approved by GACER, this proposal will go to the 218th General Assembly (2008) for action. The committee received the Moravian/Reformed Dialogue report, and requested that staff further explore what covenant partnership/relationship means as in comparison with full communion.

(3) Reformed/U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops Dialogue: The seventh round of Reformed/Catholic dialogue began meeting in 2003. The dialogue was charged to work on developing a means for the mutual recognition of baptism and to explore issues related to the Eucharist. A penultimate draft came to the churches for response in June (2007), and the final proposal was sent to the churches for action in the fall of 2007. Pending recommendation by GACER, it will go to the 218th General Assembly (2008). The bilateral dialogue is exploring issues related to the Eucharist. The U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops has asked that this round of dialogue be completed by 2010.

(4) Korean Presbyterian Church in America (KPCA)/PC(USA) Joint Committee: The KPCA/PC(USA) joint committee on cooperation has been meeting since 1992. There has been a brief break in our relationship because of tensions evolving out of a split in the First Presbyterian Church in Torrence, California, involving the KPCA. However, a meeting of the leadership of KPCA and PC(USA) was held this February and it was agreed to move forward with the development of a proposal for covenant relationship between both churches. Pending recommendations by GACER, this proposal will go to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

(5) World Council of Churches: The GACER approved to encourage its members to review the documents Call to One Church and The Nature and Mission of the Church, and requested that the General Assembly Council, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and three theologians (Paul Hooker, Cynthia Campbell, and Rebecca Todd-Peters) provide written feedback to the GACER by the fall of 2008, in order to develop a formal response.

b. Other GACER Related Activities, Reports and Actions

(1) National Workshop on Christian Unity Report (NWCUR): A report was given on the National Workshop on Christian Unity held January 29–February 1, 2007, in Washington, DC. It was a great opportunity to share with twenty-five different denominations. Robina Winbush, Carlos Malave, and Jay Rock were present, along with sixteen other Presbyterians. Along with the workshop, the PC(USA) Ecumenical and Interfaith Network held its meeting. The next meeting of NWCUR will be April 14–17, 2008, at the Chicago O'Hare Marriott. The Ecumenical and Interfaith Network will meet on April 13, 2008.

(2) The committee voted to recommend that the General Assembly Council, as they approach the 2009–2010 mission work plan, give particular attention to nurturing and equipping people in ecumenical engagements, including providing financial resources and scholarships to accomplish this.

(3) In regard to interfaith, the GACER approved to recommend the General Assembly establish a formal conversation between the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Reformed, Conservative, and Re-constructionist religious movements of the United States on issues of common concerns. It was also approved to invite the Jewish, Islamic, and Buddhist religious organizations to send a representative to attend our 218th General Assembly (2008). The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly was instructed to invite the National Council of Synagogues, the Islamic Society of North America, and the American Buddhist Church to send a representative to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

(4) The GACER received as information the report of the strategic plan of the National Council of Churches of Christ (NCCC). It was acknowledged that concerns were addressed and that a letter of appreciation and affirmation of the strategic plan be sent to the NCCC (attached).

(5) The World Alliance of Reformed Churches & Reformed Ecumenical Council proposal to merge was reviewed (attached).

(6) The committee made appointments to Caribbean and North America Area Council (WARC) Youth Assembly and the National Council of Churches delegation.

2. Fall 2007 Meeting

The meeting of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations was convened on Thursday, September 27, 2007, at the Hampton Inn, Louisville, Kentucky. The meeting was called to order with prayer and introductions. This was an abbreviated meeting celebrated before and after the ecumenical consultation.

a. Dialogues and Conversations

(1) Update on Churches Uniting in Christ (CUiC): Robina Winbush presented an update on the Churches Uniting in Christ (CUiC) for information and discussion. In her report she shared that as of July of 2007, both the African American Episcopal and the African American Episcopal Zion Churches have formally suspended their participation in Churches Uniting in Christ because they questioned the seriousness of CUiC's commitment to the struggle of racism. She also reported that the GACER Executive Committee had appointed Sarah McCaslin, George Telford, and Oommen Thomas to review the issues, interview some of the parties involved, and bring a report to the January 2008 meeting of GACER with their recommendations.

(2) The committee voted to confirm and support a four-year series of conversations between the PC(USA) and the African American Muslim Wallace D. Mohammed community, for the purposes of:

- (a) Learning from each other about each other's faith and experience as American religious communities;
- (b) Reflecting together on the responsibilities of faith communities in the U.S. today;
- (c) Articulating our values in each other's presence in order to identify shared values;
- (d) Exploring possible ways to cooperate in calling people to a different way of living, based on our understandings of what God/Allah wants for the transformation of the world; and
- (e) Identifying ways to work together in common service to all humankind.

(3) The GACER also approved to participate with the National Muslim-Christian Consultative Group. The National Muslim-Christian Consultative Group is a new consultative group between several of the Muslim communities within the United States and Christian churches within the United States.

(4) World Alliance of Reformed Churches: The GACER received a report on World Alliance of Reformed Churches—Gender, Leadership and Power Consultation for information. In relation to this report, it was approved to:

- (a) Endorse a design for global study process and actively participate in the study;
- (b) Express appreciation to the Reverend Dr. Unzu Lee for attending the consultation on behalf of Presbyterian Women and encourage and support her ongoing work in this area;
- (c) Recommend to the General Assembly Council that it include a strategy for a study process for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as well as leadership and participation in the North America region, and that this work be considered for the General Assembly Council's Mission Work Plan 2009–2010;
- (d) Encourage our ecumenical partners to participate in the study; and
- (e) Request to the 218th General Assembly (2008) that this work be considered in the General Assembly Council's Mission Work Plan 2009–2010.

b. Other GACER Related Activities, Reports and Actions

Debriefing on the Ecumenical Consultation: The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations engaged in a period of debriefing regarding the Ecumenical Consultation and reached a consensus around several broad themes, as follows:

- (a) Reclaim the historic ecumenical commitment that we are called to do all things together except those things that, in conscience, we need to do separately;
- (b) Call upon the church to engage a new dialogue between our core ecumenical commitments and emerging forms of church life;
- (c) Call the whole church to a commitment to justice in the economy and the earth.
- (d) Call to the church to be peacemakers between building bridges of dialogue and common work for peace and justice with people of other faiths;
- (e) Celebrate ecumenism at the local level;
- (f) Continue the work of peacemaking in a war-torn world.

D. Ministry and Accomplishments (Winter 2008)

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) met in Louisville, Kentucky, on January 17–19, 2008, for its winter meeting.

At the heart of its work for this meeting was the discussions and preparation of the final report of the Ecumenical Consultation celebrated back in September of 2007. The different subcommittees of the GACER worked on different areas of the report, seeking to faithfully reflect on the deliberation of the consultation, and at the same time drafting a document that could be useful to the church in general as we look into our ecumenical work during the next decade. The GACER decided to propose for approval by the 218th General Assembly (2008) as policy the document “Our Ecumenical Stance.”

Another important item addressed at the meeting was a report on the current situation of the Churches Uniting in Christ (CUiC). The CUiC celebrated a meeting during the second week of January 2008, primarily to address their commitment to “combat racism.” One of the big issues addressed at this meeting was the retreat of two African American churches from CUiC. The GACER approved the following:

1. To request that the ecumenical staff monitor the progress being made on issues within CUiC and report these findings back to GACER.
2. In addition to and support of the efforts of reconciliation of ministries within CUiC, GACER also is to engage in and consider new efforts to reconcile ministries through bilateral dialogue and other ecumenical conversations.
3. To recommend bilateral conversations with those churches in CUiC with which the PC(USA) do not already have bilateral agreements, with first commitment being given to the African Methodist Episcopal Church (AME), African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church (AMEZ), and Christian Methodist Episcopal Church (CME) churches.
4. To recommend to staff and committees charged to lead the PC(USA) in its commitment to combat racism that efforts be made to collaborate and partner with CUiC member churches in their own efforts to combat racism through advocacy, public witness, and education, both within the church and society.
5. To report to the 218th General Assembly (2008) the current situation within CUiC and invite the assembly’s prayerful support of CUiC and its future.

The GACER also agreed to revisit the situation in CUiC in their next scheduled meeting. As part of this effort, they will engage in a discernment of approaches and methodologies to encourage the relationship between the historic African American churches (especially those to which the PC(USA) has been historically related through ecumenical instruments) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), including the possibility of bilateral dialogues or multilateral consultations.

E. Other GACER Reports, Actions, and Related Activities

The GACER approved its new leadership for the next two years: George Telford (chair); Krystin Granberg (vice-chair); Kathleen Owens (chair of United and Relations Subcommittee); Sarah McCaslin (chair of Ministry and Formation Subcommittee); Damayanthi Niles (chair of Interfaith Subcommittee).

The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations approved several recommendations to the 218th General Assembly (2008):

- That the assembly approve the “Covenant Relationship Between the Korean Presbyterian Church of America and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” as an ecumenical statement and send it to the presbyteries for their ratification.
- That the report on baptism from the Catholic Reformed Bilateral dialogue be received; and that the Common Agreement on Baptism be approved as an ecumenical statement for guidance and sent to the presbyteries for ratification.
- That the report of the Episcopal/Presbyterian bilateral dialogue be received; and that the Episcopal/Presbyterian Agreement be approved as an ecumenical statement and sent it to the presbyteries for their ratification.

The GACER received a report from the Christian Churches Together (CCT) Study Group. The CCT Study Group will continue its work, and will bring its next report, with recommendation for the General Assembly, to the GACER winter meeting in 2010.

The GACER took the initial steps to celebrate a consultation on interfaith relations in the near future. The staff was asked to bring a fuller plan to this effect.

B. Delegation Report of 2006 NCCC General Assembly

The General Assembly of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. (NCCC) and Church World Service took on the issues of the world in the name of the gospel of Jesus Christ at its annual meeting held in Orlando, Florida.

Among the work of the 248 delegates from thirty-five member Christian denominations was passage of a pastoral message on the war, a new policy on human biotechnology, and resolutions banning human reproductive cloning, bio-warfare oversight, and combating global warming.

The three-day gathering also heard from several speakers each issuing unique challenges to the oldest Christian ecumenical organization in America. “America is back,” said the Reverend Dr. James Forbes in the closing keynote conversation with delegates. “The people’s voice will speak the truth and the government will hear,” said Forbes, who recently announced his retirement as the senior minister of The Riverside Church, New York City. He thanked the Reverend Bob Edgar, general secretary of the NCCC, for calling him in 2004 to help start the Let Justice Roll Living Wage Campaign to address the needs of the poor.

A statement of the general assembly on the election acknowledged the NCCC’s “strong support for raising the minimum wage.” The statement expressed a “real sense of joy and thanksgiving” at the six states voting to help raise workers out of poverty “acknowledging that such public policy is good for business as well as workers.”

The theme of the general assembly meeting was “For the Healing of the Nations” based on Revelation 22:1–2. Healing was on the minds of many speakers as well the NCCC general secretary who reacted to Tuesday’s voting results by calling for a “season of healing” among our national elected officials.

The NCCC president, the Reverend Michael Livingston, urged the representatives of 45 million Protestant, Orthodox, Anglican, historic African American, and traditional “peace” churches to claim their leadership by asserting greater national influence.

“In a society that values volume over substance, so much greater is the need to be a ‘national’ council of churches,” said Livingston, a Presbyterian who is executive director of the International Council of Community Churches.

“Simple cooperation is not enough to bear the weight of the witness our times demand,” Livingston said. “Being a national council means that we bear witness together, stand and testify together, that we become the exclamation points—like the cross stabbed into the ground on Calvary.”

Women delegates to the annual assembly have been meeting in caucus sessions for twenty-five years. They heard from Helen LaKelly Hunt, Ph.D., author of “Faith and Feminism: A Holy Alliance.” Dr. Hunt said “every woman has a story” and urged her audience to tell theirs. She shared parts of her own story about being told “feminism was a bad word” and how she came to reconcile it in her own faith journey.

On the Iraq war, delegates voted overwhelmingly to approve a pastoral message that calls for “an immediate phased withdrawal of American and coalition forces from Iraq.” The withdrawal plan is linked to “benchmarks for rebuilding Iraqi society.” It will be sent to the Bush administration, members of Congress, and is also addressed to people of faith and all people of goodwill.

“As men and women of faith, we believe that freedom, along with genuine security, is based in God, and is served by the recognition of humanity’s interdependence,” said the message, “and by working with partners to bring about community, development, and reconciliation for all, and that such freedom and security is not served by this war in Iraq.” Of the nearly 250 delegates voting, only two abstentions and one “no” vote were heard.

The assembly also adopted a new policy on human biotechnologies entitled, “Fearfully and Wonderfully Made.” The policy proclaims the sanctity of all human life as God’s creation and condemns human reproductive cloning. But it acknowledges differences exist among the thirty-five different member communions regarding stem cell research. The policy was presented to the delegates by Clare Chapman, chair of the drafting committee.

The new policy was the basis for two resolutions based on the biotechnologies policy. One calls for a worldwide ban on human reproductive cloning. A second, “Biotechnology and National Security,” calls for more oversight of government and private sector laboratories developing bio-warfare weapons. The resolution calls for creation of a National Science Advisory Board for Bio-defense within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. It would have “powers of regulation and oversight” of government and private bio-defense projects. Both passed unanimously.

The 2007 general assembly meeting was held in the New York City area.

The delegation of the PC(USA) was composed of the following: the Reverend Fahed Abu-Hakel, Elder Janice Burgrabe, the Reverend José Luis Casal, the Reverend Robina Winbush, Elder Elsie L. Dursi, the Reverend Dr. Leslie R. Hyder, the Reverend Dr. Clifton Kirkpatrick, Elder Jean M. Livingston, Aimee Moiso, the Reverend J. Herbert Nelson II, the

Delegation Report of 2007 NCCC General Assembly

The Evangelical Lutheran Church lead the assembly in worship, providing the delegates with the right spirit to do the work of the assembly. Following worship, the Reverend Dr. Randall Bailey guided the assembly on a thought-provoking bible study. His two main points were the use of women to advance men's purposes and desires, and the disguised ways in which the church many times gets involved with the empires.

On the first afternoon, the assembly heard a report from the president, the Church World Service (CWS) executive director, and the acting general secretary.

The Membership and Ecclesial Relation Committee presented a proposal for a comprehensive plan of visitation of all the member communions of the council. This was in response to the desire of the council to strengthen the relationship between the member communions. The goal is to develop a stronger relationship of the communions with each other, instead of a relationship with an organization, in this case the National Council of Churches of Christ.

The director of Church World Service and the board of directors presented their report to the assembly. They gave at glance a review of CWS work. One of the major items reported was the implementation of the recently finished strategic plan. Concern was expressed about the need to include in the delegations to the general assembly people who are involved with CWS. At the same time it was reported that there had been good progress in the relationship between CWS and NCCC.

Representing the Special Commission for the Just Rebuilding of the Gulf Coast, Bishop Hoyt presented an insightful report. The commission is in need of more financial resources to pay for consulting work. The commission released a report card, "Triumphs and Struggles and the Just Rebuilding of the Gulf Coast, which examines the response and progress being made toward rebuilding efforts in the city of New Orleans, as well as in Louisiana and Mississippi. The report card grades federal, state, and local government agencies in areas such as transportation, healthcare, housing, schools, insurance, and environmental justice. They reported that very slow progress is happening. Some communions have been actively sending working groups to the region, including our own church.

The report from Faith & Order emphasized the recent celebration of the 50th anniversary of the Faith & Order (F & O) movement held at Oberlin. One of the successes of the celebration was the participation of more than fifty seminary students. These students are the hope of the F & O movement. The report included a DVD with highlights of the conference. A panel of several ecumenical leaders present at the conference shared their perspectives about the conference. A copy of the video will be sent to all the churches. We were encouraged to move the spirit of the conference forward to the church.

The general assembly received a "Social Creed for the 21st Century" that had been approved by the governing board in September. The NCCC and many of its member communions developed this social creed for the 21st century to address issues of globalization, poverty, and violence, among others.

Financial report: In 2007 the net assets decreased from $7.5 to $6.3. Of the $7.7 million spent in 2007, almost 74 percent of funds were spent on programs. Revenues were less than expected from member communions and foundations. The council was forced to cut staff to lower the budget. New job descriptions were created with a leaner staff for the council.

Acting NCCC General Secretary Clare Chapman announced the Claire Randall women's development fund at a celebratory luncheon for the NCCC's Women's Caucus. (Randall was the NCCC's first woman general secretary.) Randall is credited with overseeing turbulent times for the ecumenical movement, including the NCCC's backing of a much-contested plan to ship U.S. grain to Vietnam in the mid 1970s.

One of the exciting and important components of the general assembly is the Stewards Program. This year, ten young adults participated in this program. They serve in the logistics of the assembly, but more importantly they have their own reflection and discussion times. The assembly provided time for them to report on their reflection on the work and issues addressed in the assembly and their critique or perspective on these issues.

The general assembly urged the U.S. House of Representatives to pass legislation recognizing the slaughter of Armenians in 1915 as genocide.

On the final day of the assembly, His Eminence Archbishop Vicken Aykazian, a Turkish-born priest who represents the Diocese of the Armenian Church in America in Washington, was installed Thursday (November 9) as the president of the National Council of Churches in the U.S.A. The Reverend Peg Chamberlin, a Moravian clergywoman and executive director of the Minnesota Council of Churches, was installed as president elect of the National Council of Churches in the U.S.A. in annual meetings that week. Under the current NCCC constitution, her position means she will automatically assume the presidency in January 2010.

The Reverend Dr. Michael Kinnamon, a Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) clergyman and a long-time educator and ecumenical leader, was installed Thursday as the NCCC's ninth general secretary. Kinnamon was unanimously elected to the office by paper ballot.

A member of our delegation, the Reverend Jose L Casal, was elected secretary of the NCCC board. Other PC(USA) representatives in the executive board include: Jerry Van Marter, Gradye Parsons, and Robina Winbush.

C. World Alliance of Reformed Churches Report to the PC(USA), 2006–2007, Report of the General Secretary

A. Introduction

The most exciting news of this period is the journey that the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) and the Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC) have begun towards uniting. This is a step in faith in response to the desire of our Lord Jesus Christ expressed in the High Priestly Prayer recorded in John 17. In a world of so much fragmentation that pushes even churches to contemplate division, this development has been described as a breath of fresh air in the Reformed family. We ask that the entire Reformed family, including the PC(USA), prays along with us on this journey. More will be said about this in the body of this report.

In the last two years, we have focused on deepening our reflection on who we are as a communion of faith and our calling to foster justice especially as in 2007 we commemorated two hundred years after the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade. Presbyterians and Reformed people have often struggled with their sense of calling as a worldwide communion. In 2006 and 2007, we have been taking steps to engage in reflection on what it would mean if the quality of our relations was to be deepened beyond what it currently is. What would communion mean in the Reformed family? Our calling to be a communion is not an end in itself. An increase in the quality of relationships within the Reformed family worldwide is indeed a contribution to the unity of the Church of Jesus Christ for which our Lord Jesus prayed. Reformed communion therefore comes out of our commitment to ecumenical engagement and Christian unity. While this is in many ways an ecclesiological question, we also realized that it could have implications on how we relate to the global challenges we face together, including global insecurity and widespread economic difficulties in many nations. The WARC continues to take very seriously its calling to be a source of inspiration, strength, and accompaniment as member churches face and address these questions and challenges.

B. A Rearticulated Vision

The year 2006 began with our working with the vision rearticulated in our October 2005 executive committee meeting as follows: "We are the World Alliance of Reformed Churches consisting of Reformed, Congregational, Presbyterian, Waldensian, United and Uniting churches. We are called to be a communion of churches joined together in Christ, to promote the renewal and the unity of the church, and to participate in God's transformation of the world."

The structure that became effective in January 2006 took this as the main inspiration of how we are to fulfil our callings. We now work on our seven core callings through networks facilitated by staff. The Geneva Secretariat began this process in 2006 with the executive staff for the Theology and Ecumenical Engagement Office, the Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership Office, the Mission Project, the Covenanting for Justice Project, the Finance and Fundraising Office, and the Communications Office and able administrative assistants. The Youth Project was covered within the Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership Office. Later in the year 2006, the Covenanting for Justice Project was also redesigned with its oversight lodged in the Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership Office. We have begun appointing consultants for each region to facilitate the work. The North American consultant is the Reverend Gretchen van Wieren.

In addition the vision strengthened the effectiveness of our participation in the World Council of Churches' 9th General Assembly in Porto Allegre, as we all joined in praying, "God in your grace, transform the world." God has been transforming the world (cf: John 10:10, Luke 4: 18–21, Romans 12, 1–3, etc). In the last clause of our vision statement we acknowledge that we are called to participate in God's transformation of the world.

This document highlights some of the work we have done through our Geneva offices and networks.

C. Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership

The Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership Office is under the able leadership of Patricia Sheerattan-Bisnauth. The office has worked mainly with the Gender Justice, Covenanting for Justice in the Economy and the Earth, and Youth Networks.

D. Covenanting for Justice Project

The network developed a program that had as a focus bringing the work of the Covenanting for Justice Project closer to the constituency through regional consultants. The regional consultants have been working with the area councils to develop a more engaging process with churches and partners in studies, reflection, mission, and spiritual renewal based on the Accra Confession.

Through this, the Covenanting for Justice Project, building on the spirit of Accra and the Accra Confession, has been able to press ahead with its important task of enabling Reformed churches to relate their faith with economic justice and ecological concerns. In January 2007, the Covenanting for Justice staff team was strengthened with two consultants (Roberto Jordan for Latin America and Gretel van Wieren for North America). In June 2007, the staff team was further enhanced with Puleng LenkaBula as the Africa consultant.

The WARC and the Council for World Mission (CWM) joined hands to hold a consultation (May 15–19 2006) that challenged churches to elevate the level of their engagement in economic justice from one of social engagement to that of mission—placing it at the very heart of the mission of the Church. The Kuala Lumpur meeting decided to launch a five-year Covenanting for Justice movement.

Following up on the Kuala Lumpur invitation, WARC, CWM, and World Council of Churches (WCC) began the process of working together to build a Covenanting for Justice movement. The movement will carry forward the hopes expressed in the Covenanting for Justice process before and after Accra. It was agreed that the AGAPE process be brought on board in what is seen as a Covenanting for Justice/AGAPE movement.

A small workshop on global empire took place from 13–15 July 2006, in Antipolo City, near Manila, the Philippines. Seventeen theologians who have been working on this issue gathered together and issued a document on global empire under the title, An Ecumenical Faith Stance against Global Empire for a Liberated Earth Community. This document is meant to stimulate debate and study not only for Reformed churches, but also for ecumenical organizations in their theological reflection and discernment in their responses to global empire.

A major focus of the Covenanting for Justice Project is “living out the Accra Confession.” Building platforms for critical reflection and dialogue, the executive staff and consultants are developing strategies to engage churches and partners in a process of living out the Accra Confession.

In North America, Gretel van Wieren, our consultant, is working very closely with all our churches, the Caribbean and North American Area Council (CANAAC), and North American Executive Committee members. A meeting of church representatives was held in Louisville, Kentucky, in April 2007. The participants agreed to form a North American Covenanting for Justice Working Group that will convene three times a year from now until 2011. Gretel van Wieren is serving as the coordinator of the group. Participants agreed to work together on the following key steps:

- publishing an Accra Confession educational pamphlet to be widely distributed among North American churches (in English, French, Korean, and Spanish);
- ensuring that the Accra Confession is introduced to the appropriate church bodies within each denomination;
- incorporating the Accra Confession at several upcoming seminary and theological/academic events;
- organizing scholarly events around the 200th year celebration of the abolition of the transatlantic slave trade to look at the ways in which the consequences of slavery affect the current global political economy;
- developing a model for regional community-based hearings regarding “signs of the times” and transformative actions related to economic and environmental injustices (to be organized by WARC member churches in collaboration with local Diaspora communities and community-based organizations).

Gretel van Wieren has also developed a study guide for the Accra Confession. It was published in September 2007.

The other regional consultants are also developing similar processes.

An international ecumenical conference—Abolished, But Not Destroyed: Remembering the Slave Trade in the 21st Century—has been organized by WARC, the WCC, and CWM. The conference was hosted by the United Church of Jamaica and the Cayman Islands, from December 10–15, 2007. The main purpose of the conference is to gather Africans from Africa and the Diaspora in collective sharing of memories, critical reflection, analysis, and consequences/impact of the legacy of slavery and the continued injustices based on race. The conference also celebrated resistance to slavery and oppression, African cultures and spiritualities from various places, the struggles of the Dalits and indigenous peoples.

E. Gender Justice

The Gender Justice Network responds to the core calling, “promoting inclusivity and partnership in church and society,” by working together with churches and partners to provide a platform for dialogue between women and men, drawing attention to women’s inequalities and gender injustices, as well as promoting action towards gender justice. The location of Gender Justice within the Office for Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership provides more scope for strengthening the voices and visions of women in core programmes of the alliance and to mainstream gender perspectives, methodology, and strategy into its work for justice and peace.

In 2006 and 2007, twenty-nine women from eighteen countries were awarded scholarships to study theology in preparation for the ordained ministry within our Theological Education Scholarship Fund for Women in the South. This fund has had a significant impact on WARC’s member churches, especially in the recognition of women’s ministry and in the acceptance of women in the ordained ministry.

In June 2007, a team of five coordinated by the executive secretary visited the Reformed Church in East Africa (RCEA) to follow up on discussions between WARC and the RCEA regarding women’s ordination and to offer support and accompaniment to the church in its struggle towards the acceptance of women in the ordained ministry.

In February 2006, the Reformed Church in Carpatho-Ukraine announced a decision of its synod, stating that “it did not wish to employ female ministers” and further stating that the “decision takes effect retroactively,” thus debarring all women ministers from performing their duties as ordained ministers. Nine women ministers were affected by this decision. The WARC Network coordinated a worldwide discussion and show of solidarity and concern. Actions included a small team within the Gender Justice Network to address these concerns, a solidarity letter sent to the church and to all the women affected, and an invitation to one of the women affected to the Reformed Church in Austria. The 2007 synod “retracted” the 2006 decision but the status and situation of women in the church has not changed in any significant way. The synod agreed that women would not be allowed to be leaders in congregations. The appalling injustices against women sanctioned by the Ukrainian church and other WARC member churches in the 21st century need to be addressed in a more proactive way with support of partners/member churches who are in a position to help.

From June 29 to July 4, WARC, in collaboration with St Paul’s United Theological College, Limuru, Kenya, held a Consultation on Gender, Leadership and Power, in Limuru, Kenya. Forty-eight participants from seventeen countries, including eleven students from St Paul’s and ecumenical partners from the WCC and CWM participated in the consultation. The main purpose of the consultation was to challenge leadership based on a domination/subjugation model of power and to explore liberating, empowering, and participatory models of leadership as well as addressing the gap between women and men in leadership positions.

The Reformed Church of the Canton Argovia in Switzerland has established a prize to support and encourage women in church leadership, and has invited WARC to be a partner in the implementation and management of the prize. The prize of USD5,000 will be awarded every two years by the Reformed Cantonal Church of Argovia in cooperation with the Office for Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership (CRJP).

The Pacific Workshop on Gender Awareness and Leadership Development was held at the Jovili Meo Mission Centre, Pacific Theological College, Suva, from November 21–25, 2006. This workshop was a follow-up to the Gender Awareness and Leadership Development Workshop for the Pacific Region, which was carried out by WARC in November 2000. The WARC took the opportunity to include a one-day meeting with Pacific church leaders on their role in the Pacific and within the worldwide family of Reformed churches. There were two sessions on the Pacific member churches and the Accra Confession. Participants indicated that the opportunity of such a gathering was very enriching as they learned so much from each other and that together they can find a way to move jointly forward.

The WARC continues to receive positive feedback on its gender manual, Created in God’s Image: From Hierarchy to Partnership. Partners we have worked with in promotion and distribution include Mission 21 in Basel, Switzerland. The demand for the books has increased significantly—even beyond the borders of the Reformed family and there have been many requests to WARC for free copies. From information received, the manual is being translated into Burmese with support from CWM and into Mandarin by the Presbyterian Church of Taiwan.

Papers presented at the August 2005 consultation on Women and the Accra Confession: Covenanting for Life in Jamaica were published in the March 2006 issue of Reformed World, edited by the executive secretary for CRJP. It is also on the CRJP web page of WARC.

F. Youth

One of the tools for youth mobilization is the Reformed Youth Forum (RYF), which was established following the WARC 23rd General Council, 1997, as a vibrant global network of young people. It is a network of friends who continue to share events of their lives, churches, and countries. The forum also provides space for sharing positive and exciting news of experiences of young people in Reformed churches.

The European Youth Executive Committee member, Jitka Krausová, has been instrumental in organizing and coordinating a European Reformed Youth Forum (ERYF).

The CANAAC Steering Committee organized a youth gathering as a youth pre-executive committee event as well as a CANAAC pre-assembly youth event in Trinidad and Tobago in October 2007. The event brought together young people from CANAAC/CANACOM member churches for engagement, dialogue, and discussions through the medium of presentations on current issues affecting them. Participants had the opportunity to learn about the Trinidadian context and participate in a Mission Project. This event helped to challenge and affirm our young people and the vital contributions they make for praxis towards transformation and liberation within their communities and their personal lives.

In April 2007, a questionnaire was sent out to all member churches and youth contacts in order to update the youth database. So far thirty member churches have responded and have named new youth contacts. In addition twenty-two persons on the database have also responded positively affirming their interest in WARC's work and indicating their interest in being in the database.

An annual Reformed Youth Newsletter has been initiated. The first newsletter came out in January 2008. The network is looking for a volunteer coordinator/editor for this project.

A questionnaire was developed to find out the effects of technology on relationships among young people. It will also encourage young people to share three priority issues for young people in their communities and regional contexts. The questionnaire was sent out in August 2007.

In July-August 2006, Krysta Bisnauth, a final year undergraduate student served as an intern. She contributed much in the areas of justice and mission as she learned from the WARC staff team.

G. Theology and Ecumenical Engagement

The Office of Theology and Ecumenical Engagement works primarily with the Theology and Communion networks. To get the networks started, the office sent out two newsletters to the membership of each network in the first half of 2006. Meetings were held with the moderators at different times to review the different aspects of the life and work of the alliance to which the Communion Network or the Theology Network is called to contribute.

In order to facilitate the initial reflections on the significance and implications of the WARC vision, the then executive secretary, Odair Pedroso Mateus, prepared a short paper—Called to Be a Communion of Churches. The main topics of that paper are: I. The Vision. From an Alliance of Churches to a Communion of Churches; II. "Alliance" Means Federation; III. Koinonia, Communion; IV. Towards a Discussion on Communion; V. Communion and Compassion. The paper was circulated among the members of the two Networks and executive staff. Network members organized discussion groups and executive staff had a workshop to discuss these issues.

The third phase of the Catholic-Reformed International Theological Dialogue started in 1998 and ended in 2004. In 2006 and 2007, a small group worked on drafting and editing the final report, The Church as Community of Common Witness to the Kingdom of God. The report was submitted to all members of the joint commission for final approval in September 2006. It has been published in the June-September 2007 issue of Reformed World.

The 10th biennial session of the Orthodox-Reformed Dialogue took place in Volos, Greece. The dialogue series aims at deepening mutual understanding of the Christian faith through the joint study of the Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed. In May 2006 Archbishop Christodoulos, the head of the Church of Greece, visited the WARC offices and held discussions with the executive secretary and the general secretary. In January 2007, a delegation led by the president visited the Ecumenical Patriarch in Constantinople. These visits went a long way in enhancing the relations between Reformed and Orthodox.

The Pentecostal-Reformed Dialogue held a dialogue session in the Louisville Presbyterian Seminary in Kentucky, USA, in May 17–23, 2006. The overarching theme of this dialogue was “Experience in Christian faith and life.” The 2006 theme was “How Pentecostals and Reformed understand and experience communion (koinonia) in the local congregation, with other congregations, and between Christian churches at the national and international level.” The 2007 session was held in Cape Town, South Africa, 19–26 May 2007.

The first meeting of the newly established Lutheran-Reformed Joint Commission took place at the headquarters of the Protestant Church in the Netherlands, Utrecht, July 1–7, 2006. The joint commission decided that in the two years to come it will focus on the theological and practical tasks related to the challenge of making more visible the fellowship that already exists among Lutheran and Reformed churches. This will include matters of mutual responsibility, understanding of confessing and confessions, church order and worship, oversight and mission. The second session took place in August 11–16, 2006, in Windhoek, Namibia, hosted by the Lutheran World Federation (LWF).

Through Reformed World, WARC has developed a good forum for reflections on “church and theology today.” It has offered space for theological reflections on issues that are related to the life of WARC member churches, high on the agenda of the alliance, and also related to our commitment to ecumenical engagement.

For the last two years, a group of different Reformed-related organizations, including WARC, the Federation of Swiss Protestant Churches (FAP), the Theological Faculty of the University of Geneva, The Protestant Church of Geneva, and the John Knox International Reformed Center have worked hard to build an international platform of coordination and information on the upcoming Calvin Jubilee (2009). From April 15 to 19 2007, fifty-five people, representing Reformed churches on different continents, gathered in the John Knox Center for a consultation on the theme, “Why and how do we celebrate the legacy of John Calvin?” The consultation identified the aspects of the life and teaching of Calvin that are relevant for the life and witness of Reformed churches today and offered space for a broad exchange on ongoing preparations for the Calvin Jubilee in 2009.

The theme of the 2006 edition of the Georges Lombard Prize was “Water, source of life: socioeconomic, theological, and interreligious perspectives.” Fourteen theological students/young pastors from eleven countries submitted essays for this contest that honours the memory of Georges Lombard, WARC treasurer from 1948 through 1970. An international jury examined the submissions. The Reverend Anderson Jeremiah of India won the first prize. The second prize went to the Reverend Clifford Rawlins from Trinidad and Tobago, and the third prize went to the Reverend Carola Ruth Tron of Argentina. Their essays were published in the March 2007 edition of Reformed World.

Currently, twenty-four institutions participate in the WARC Scholarship Programme. In 2006, the office processed a total of six applications. The majority of the scholarships went to candidates from Africa, followed by Asia and Europe. Seventy-four requests, again mainly from Africa, were received from candidates who were not eligible to benefit from a WARC scholarship.

H. Mission Project

In the first months of 2006, the mission project worked hard to secure the necessary funds and build the necessary linkages to get the project going.

Under Mission Study, Reinterpretation and Empowerment, the project’s main program is the Making a Difference Project 2006–2008. This was made possible because of a Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) and United Church of Canada (UCC) funding arrangement. The program is based in three WARC member churches—the Uniting Reformed Church in Southern Africa, the Presbyterian Church in Rwanda, and the United Protestant Church of Belgium. The Making a Difference Project or MADIP focuses on peace, reconciliation, and justice action with special reference to dealing constructively with ethnic and race differences. Missiological reflection is an integral part of the MADIP programs.

Under the programme priority International Mission Relations, we note a renewed interest in how the vision of partnership in mission, which in the 1970s became the guiding principle to reshape mission relations between North and South, might be given shape and content today, at a time of diminishing financial resources in the North. The consultative processes recently initiated by, for example, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Protestant Church in the Netherlands, and the UCC helped to shape the study on Partnership in Mission presently under design in the Mission Project.

Another focus of the project is New expressions of Reformed unity. The project began a new initiative in Cameroon in which several churches are engaged in a mission action/reflection process in four pilot groups that takes between six weeks and six months. Meanwhile the Lutheran World Federation has joined WARC in the facilitation of these pilot groups, with the idea that cross-fertilization will also take place between the participating countries, and that this intercultural learning process be documented as one of our joint contributions to the Towards the 2010 (Edinburgh) Process.

Between March and August 2007, an evaluation was made of the Mission in Unity initiative carried out in the Ukraine and Belarus since the year 2000. In June 2006, a reflection process was launched by the United Church in Jamaica and the Cayman Islands to develop a case study on the church's union processes since the 1950s and the significance of these for UCJCI's mission. A further planning and research meeting will take place in Kingston in November 2007. The Mission Project facilitates the process at various planning moments and also facilitates the publication of the study.

The WARC as a whole, and the Mission Project in particular, has followed with much interest the study on "Peace, Unity, and Purity" (PUP) of PC(USA) and has agreed to develop the PUP study into a case study and learning tool for the wider Reformed family. The PUP findings offer insight into ways of dealing with conflict and disagreement that do not lead to division and splits, something that is of great importance for the Reformed family. The case study will be made available in 2008–2009.

Under Relations and cooperation of historic and immigrant churches in the North, networking between different groups in Europe and North America working on these issues has continued. The MADIP I has dimensions of this program focus, especially in the MADIP programs carried out by the United Protestant Church in Belgium, which is increasingly multicultural.

The project continues to document and share widely samples of mission renewal and cooperation that are undertaken by WARC member churches, and to highlight some of the issues at stake as churches and groups seek to develop as interdependent missional churches. It also facilitates networking between resource people in different countries working on the same issues. Some of the ways in which this was achieved during the period under review are listed below.

The year 2010 will be the centenary of the 1910 Edinburgh Mission Conference out of which the modern missionary movement grew. The Scottish churches, the WCC's Commission on World Mission and Evangelism (CWME) and other international organizations have put in place a process of study and events that reflects on the hopes and issues of 1910 but also and especially seeks to identify the mission frontiers for today and tomorrow. Our mission project executive secretary represents WARC on the International Planning Council, anchoring WARC inputs into the process. The WARC contributions will include a study on Reformed mission statements, the study on Partnership in Mission, and the Cameroon and British Pilot Projects on Mission Today.

I. Church and Spiritual Renewal

This core calling has not had as much attention in the two years under review. While the work we have done in justice, mission, theology, and ecumenical engagement has contributed to church renewal, we have only just begun working on worship and spiritual renewal in response to the Accra mandates. Together with the leadership of the Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC), we have approached the Calvin Institute of Worship in Grand Rapids, Michigan, U.S.A., to help us put together a group of worship experts gathered from the different regions in a consultation that will contribute to worship renewal. Such a consultation can also be the foundation for planning the worship life of the next general council. We sent out a worship renewal questionnaire in late 2007, hoping this will document where our churches are in order to inform WARC in our next steps.

J. Communications Office

The task, the ministry, and the joy of WARC's Communications Office is to help let the light of WARC be seen, to use our limited resources to find the best lampstands to show the Reformed community and the world beyond what we are up to as followers of Jesus Christ.

For most of the past two years, the job of reshaping, updating, and maintaining the WARC Website (www.warc.ch) has been a major challenge that has been bravely tackled by the Communications Office in spite of the limited financing. For most of that time, the Johannes A Lasco Library in Emden, Germany, functioned as our technical Webmasters, making design and structural changes and helping staff in Geneva work with a content management system that allowed them to make changes. We are now doing most of the updating of the Website in-house in the Communications office. In the past two years, many changes have been accomplished with much work from the particular offices, as well as the Communications Office. The changes affect the following Web pages: Theology, Covenanting for Justice, Finance and Fundraising, Communications, Member Churches, What We Do, and Youth. We have also created pages such as the WARC Forum, Donate, Member Fees, Publications, Subscriptions, Reformation Sunday, and Opportunities to Serve. We are now far more consistently able to put up Web versions of Update in all four languages in a more timely fashion and use the site better to promote resources such as Water—God's Gift for Life, Reformation Sunday materials, and Reformed World.

Another area where significant progress has been made is in media and constituency relations. Our regular news releases have reached WARC member churches, leaders, formal and informal networks, as well as both the secular and religious media around the world on a wide variety of issues that are being tackled by the secretariat and WARC as a whole. A number of staff have been interviewed by the media and the general secretary has appeared on radio programs, including the World Service of the BBC. The best coverage WARC has received in the past two years was around our response to the Vatican's reiteration of its thinking on what constitutes a church. It is an ongoing regret that we do not have the financial or staff resources to issue releases in all four languages. It is usually only in English.

The WARC's quarterly newsletter, Update, has been regularly published and continues to be well received.

A book, Water—God's Gift for Life, was published by the Communications Office in the early part of 2006. In addition, new WARC leaflets were created in the early part of 2006. Since first publication, the leaflets have been re-printed in German and English. Another, more modest, effort was the production of nine impact sheets on the major programming efforts of WARC that were produced, in English only, as another publicity/fund raising tool.

The Communications Office has been giving some thought to the challenge of communicating well before, during, and following any union between WARC and Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC). This could involve a total re-branding of all our communications and will require new resources, identification, and strategies. The office has already secured a temporary domain name.

K. Finance and Fundraising Office

1. Audited Accounts

The final accounts results in both 2005 and 2006 were deficit situations. In 2005 the deficit was CHF8,640. In 2006 the final deficit was CHF4,167. We desperately need new sources of fund development in order to address this situation. The 2007 accounts are yet to be audited at the time of writing this report.

2. Expenditure

Our executive secretary for finance and fundraising, Maureen O'Brien, has modified the format of the accounts to enable a better overview of our financial situation. Program expenditure changes from year to year, depending on what programs are carried out. Programs are normally only carried out if there are sufficient funds available to do so. The income for programs comes from special fundraising.

We are grateful to the member churches that grant us special funding designated for core expenditure. It has helped us very much in the last three years with the financial challenges we have been facing.

While at the time of writing this report, we have not completed the accounts for 2007, we do know that the CHF120,000 expenditure connected with the executive committee has increased our end of 2007 deficit greatly.

3. Fundraising

Our short-term goals include building awareness among WARC member churches that their financial contributions are critical for WARC's existence. Therefore, there is need for all churches to be paying full membership fees. Those churches that can should try to pay more than that attributed to them.

We have been currently looking for sponsorship of our two publications, Update and Reformed World. The annual costs for producing these is CHF130,000. If we find sponsorship for them, this will reduce our core expenditure considerably.

We need additional help with determining within the churches whom to address concerning the possibilities of extra funding that may exist beyond their ecumenical funds. In addition we are negotiating with partners who give designated program funding to include a percentage for the coordination work carried out by the executive staff member.

The executive secretary for finance and fundraising worked together with the executive secretary for communications to implement the payment facility on our Website. We received our first transaction in May 2006. The majority of payments have been for subscriptions to Reformed World and Update and for the purchase of other publications.

For the long-term, we need to address the issue of how to raise funds for the 21st Century Reformation Fund and the WARC Endowment Fund that were established by the executive committee in October 2007. This includes establishing a marketing strategy for WARC, identifying potential donors from within and outside the Reformed family, and finding ways to include congregations which are able to help. We are coordinating with the Presbyterian Foundation in the U.S., which will be managing the endowment fund.

L. Partnership Fund

The Partnership Fund is a small development fund run by the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. Beneficiaries of this fund are member churches and area councils of WARC, which are located in the Southern Hemisphere and Eastern Europe.

The WARC works in close collaboration with the Fondation pour l'Aide au Protestantisme Réformé (FAP). The WARC receives many applications, both from member churches and churches. We can only respond to the applications from WARC member churches.

Twenty-seven projects were approved in 2006. Eight projects were approved in 2007. We have also responded to a number of our churches that faced major disasters in 2006 and 2007. The donations that we send, especially to churches in the global south facing such disasters, is a small part of our expression of solidarity.

The WARC is very grateful for the support it receives from funding agencies, churches, and individuals for the Partnership Fund.

M. Reformation Sunday Resources

The first of these resources came out in May 2006 and was distributed four months before the 2006 Reformation Day. It was developed by the Church Renewal, Justice and Partnership Office under the leadership of Pat Sheerattan-Bisnauth. The title is: Renewing the Church—Resources for Celebrating Reformation Sunday. By popular request we did not do a new one for 2007 because many requested that they use the 2006 publication again. There has been great appreciation for this resource book and after some reflection it was decided that the same book be used for Reformation Day 2007. It is available on the CRJP Web page on the WARC Website.

N. WARC-Reformed Ecumenical Council (REC) Relations

A joint commission appointed by both WARC and REC to look at relationships between the two organizations met in Grand Rapids, Michigan, from January 30 to February 2, 2006. After in-depth deliberations, the result of this meeting was a proposal for the two organizations to unite. This was communicated to WARC member churches. The response was an overwhelming acceptance of the proposal. In 2007, both REC and WARC Executive Committees affirmed the proposal and put in place a process towards unity in 2010.

In August 2006, we jointly organized a meeting of all WARC and REC member churches in Nigeria. It was a meeting to which each of the six churches brought seven of their top leaders (including women and youth leaders). In addition to discussing the proposed uniting of the two bodies, we had in-depth workshops on Covenanting for Justice in the Economy and the Earth, Mission in a Pluralistic Society, HIV/AIDS, and Youth and Christian Education.

O. WARC-DECC Relations

The WARC and the Disciples Ecumenical Consultative Council (DECC) continue to enjoy good relations. We have begun to plan another meeting for July 2008. For more than a decade, the DECC is always represented at WARC Executive Committee. Dr. Newell Williams, is the current representative.

P. United Nations Office

We are very grateful to God for the recent appointment of Joel Hanisek to coordinate the PC(USA) United Nations Office. For several years, WARC has also used this office to strengthen its engagement in the United Nations. Joel Hanisek is committed to playing this role for WARC as well.

Q. Area Councils

We value the work that our area councils are engaged in. We continue to see new ways of working closer together. The oldest two of our areas have gone through some major changes.

THE CANAAC has been through a process of re-envisioning, which has brought into being a more focused area council with three meetings in-between WARC general councils. The CANAAC is organizing an assembly for February 2008.

The European Area Council went through a similar re-envisioning process in the last four years, and in September last year they held an assembly in which a new, more focused WARC Europe was born.

The Alliance of Reformed and Presbyterian Churches in Latin America (AIPRAL) seems to have the award for the best functioning area council in this era. It held its latest general assembly in Colombia in August 2006. It has done much good work in promoting the Accra Confession as well as other mandates of WARC. The 2006 general assembly also coincided with the 50th anniversary of AIPRAL.

The Northeast Asia Area Council (NEAAC) meetings in 2006 and 2007 provided space for theological discussions on current WARC themes relevant to the Northeast Asia.

The Alliance of Reformed Churches in Africa (ARCA) held a workshop on the Accra Confession for Central and West African member churches in Accra in May 2006. The ARCA continues to struggle financially.

R. Calvin Jubilee

The year 2009 marks 500 years after Calvin's birth (10 July 1509–10 July 2009). The WARC is working with the Federation of Swiss Protestant Churches, the Protestant Church in Geneva, the Faculty of Theology in Geneva, the John Knox Center, and the Reformation Museum to commemorate this jubilee. A consultation was held in April this year at the John Knox Center in Geneva to map out how the jubilee could create possibilities for learning from the legacy of Calvin in dialogue with current challenges. At that consultation, the Patronage Committee was launched to oversee the process of commemoration over the next two years. Our president, Clifton Kirkpatrick, is one of the three co-presidents of this committee. The WARC named several members of the committee. The Website for the jubilee is www.calvin09.org. A sermon competition and a theme song competition have been launched. In addition to the things we are planning to do in common, WARC will also be bringing together two study tours in connection with the jubilee in 2008 and 2009. The 2009 executive committee meeting has been brought forward to May in order for it to coincide with the main celebration in Geneva.

S. Senior Pastors' Consultation

In April 2007, thirty-four senior pastors of Reformed churches in different parts of the world gathered at Bossey, Ecumenical Centre, for a four-day consultation. This was an opportunity for them to learn from one another and to learn about WARC and some of the historic sites in Geneva. The discussions were very good. The feedback we received from the participants was very positive. A few have also indicated that they would like to do this again in the future bringing in some key lay leaders. It is hoped that as we develop this we will continue to build up friends of WARC in a manner that will also be a catalyst in our fundraising.

T. Consultation of Heads of Theological Institutes

Princeton Theological Seminary in the U.S.A. worked with us to host a Consultation for Heads of Theological Institutions Related to Reformed Churches. This was held in June 2007. We had about fifty-four in attendance. Participants felt this was long overdue. Among other things, participants looked at issues of relevance in the 21st century, curriculum development, cooperation between/among institutions, etc. They resolved to set up a small committee to look at follow-up activities—including the planning of another such consultation.

U. Visits to Member Churches

My colleagues and I visited a number of member churches during the years 2006 and 2007. Some of these visits coincided with general assemblies. These are opportunities to meet with leaders and cross sections of congregations, to preach in services, and hold discussions on WARC programs as related to the churches.

Since this is a report to the PC(USA), we note here that WARC's general secretary was the preacher at the ecumenical service during the 218th General Assembly (2006) in Birmingham, Alabama. This was the assembly shared with the Cumberland churches. The general secretary also visited the PC(USA) head office in September 2007, and met with several senior staff of both the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC) offices. He also addressed the middle governing bodies of the PC(USA) and the Witherspoon Society.

V. Relations with the World Council of Churches (WCC)

We participated in the WCC 9th General Assembly in various ways. The church leaders from WARC member churches, several officers and executive committee members (including the president) were there as delegates. I was there and so were Odair Pedroso Mateus, Pat Sheerattan-Bisnauth, and Seong-Won Park. In addition to the different roles we held in the assembly, we also organized a very successful gathering of Reformed participants.

We welcome the suggestion coming from the WCC to work towards an ecumenical assembly next time around. This is in part a response to what WARC has been advocating for since the mid 1990s. We will continue to follow that process through the joint WCC-CWC commission that was recently set up. This joint commission had its first meeting in Geneva in May 2007. At this meeting, the language that the WCC presented the ecumenical assembly in is “a WCC Assembly with expanded space for Christian World Communions and other ecumenical partners.” We continue to monitor how the WCC Central Committee deliberates on this proposal.

W. Relations with the Vatican

The WARC’s visit to Pope Benedict XVI in January 2006, led by the president, contributed significantly to the improvement of Catholic-Reformed relations at the international level. In addition to visiting the Pope, we also held discussions with Cardinal Kasper and the Pontifical Council for Promoting Christian Unity, as well as with the Pontifical Council for Justice and Peace.

While the timing and contents of the document issued by the Vatican in July 2007 were unhelpful, to say the least, WARC remains committed to staying faithful to the achievements of our dialogues.

X. South Africa

In June 2006, a team visited South Africa in connection with the request by the Nederduitsch Hervormde Kerk van Afrika (NHKA) for readmission. The team had several sessions with the leadership of the NHKA and also held discussions at their seminary and with some of their pastors. In addition, we also held discussions with the leaders of our other member churches. We came up with a document that provides some guidelines on what is left to be done in order to fulfil the conditions for readmission. Unfortunately the NHKA synod in September 2007 failed to take the necessary decisions that would have facilitated readmission. We continue to work with the NHKA and look forward to the day when such a readmission will be possible.

Since 2001 we have been working to bring healing to the Evangelical Presbyterian Church, which was divided in 1991. The process is facing major challenges that we continue to monitor. In this process we have worked in collaboration with the Department Missionnaire (DM) in Lausanne, Switzerland.

We rejoice that the Uniting Reformed Church in Southern Africa and the Dutch Reformed Church came to an agreement to move forward together in the reunification process.

Y. Vision and Core Callings

Everything we have done in these two years has sought to respond to the vision and core callings of the alliance. Our programs, visits and relationship building, team work, embracing new possibilities, and others, were aimed at facilitating how the member churches of the alliance express themselves as one family “called to be a communion of churches joined together in Christ, to promote the renewal and the unity of the church, and to participate in God’s transformation of the world.”

Z. Staff Changes

The years 2006 and 2007 saw a number of changes in the staff serving the alliance. The term of service of our colleague, Seong-Won Park, who has served the Cooperation and Witness Department faithfully for ten years and laid a good foundation for the Covenanting for Justice Project, came to an end in August 2006. Karin Wisniewski and Sally Redondo, two of our longest serving administrative assistants retired in January and March 2007, respectively. They both were faithful, efficient, and meticulous in carrying out their commitments in WARC.

Our colleague, Odair Pedroso Mateus, of the Office of Theology and Ecumenical Engagement, received a call to join the World Council of Churches’ Bossey Ecumenical Institute and Faith and Order. He therefore finished his work with the alliance on the 31st of May 2007. Odair Pedroso Mateus has embodied a deep understanding of Reformed theology and how it relates to life issues facing the human community today, a wonderful ecumenical memory, and a commitment to Christian unity that has really made a difference for WARC. We will miss him. We are glad to welcome Adolfo Ham of Cuba as interim executive secretary in this office. He will be with us until May 2008. Douwe Visser of the Protestant Church of the Netherlands has been appointed to take office on June 1, 2008.

Together, the new and not so new members of the staff team have begun building a new, strong community to serve the alliance better.

As a result of the staff changes and the possibilities created by the new structure, we have had to reorganize how we engage in what one could say is the most critical calling of the alliance today—covenanting for justice in the economy and the earth. We now have consultants in different regions as noted above.

AA. Uniting General Council to be hosted by North American Churches

In view of the decision to unite WARC and REC, we have begun preparing for a uniting general council under the theme “Unity of the Spirit in the Bond of Peace” (Eph. 4:3). It will be held in Grand Rapids, Michigan, hosted by our North American churches. The dates are June 18 to 28, 2010. This is the opportunity for all congregations of our North American churches to get involved. Therefore, we are requesting the appropriate decision making bodies to facilitate this. Those congregations in and near Michigan can contribute very directly in making hosting the assembly possible. In addition to hosting, all U.S. congregations are being requested to contribute financially to the endowment fund and Reformation fund that will secure the birth of this united Reformed body financially.

BB. Concluding Remarks

President Clifton Kirkpatrick’s vision for the alliance, his knowledge and experience as an ecumenical leader, his understanding of the difference the alliance can make in the broken world of today, and his dedication to effective leadership are gifts we have benefited from tremendously over the past couple of years. We thank God for Cliff’s leadership and for the leadership of all our vice presidents who have spent much time working on various aspects of the vision, purpose, and structure that are before the executive committee. We are very grateful for the leadership provided by our officers. We are very grateful for the many ways in which all executive committee members have been working for the alliance.

I am very grateful to God for all WARC staff and their dedication to the work. Although we are so few, we are a good team together.

We are very grateful for the dedication of member churches to the alliance. While some have not contributed, there are indeed many member churches that have not only contributed financially but have also engaged in our common commitments at the general council in ways that have begun positioning their churches to be stronger agents of mediating life in fullness for all. For all these concentric cycles of teams, I am indeed very grateful.

Responding to the Lord Jesus who came so that we may have life in fullness and who invites us to drink of the water of life, let us rededicate ourselves and this alliance to the work of mediating fullness of life for all, so that out of our hearts as believers others will see rivers of living water flowing. Let our dedication to bringing about a more just world portray our response to God’s calling on us to, “let justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream.”

D. *World Council of Churches (WCC) Annual Review 2006–2007*A. Introduction: Living Out God’s Grace in the World—From the Reverend Dr Samuel Kobia, General Secretary, World Council of Churches*

The World Council of Churches’ 9th Assembly (February 2006), its first in the 21st century, was a time to mark how far churches have come over the past 100 years not just in ecumenical dialogue and action but in their impact on society at national and international levels.

The ecumenical movement has transformed relationships between churches in the north and south in development and diakonia. Groundbreaking work in theology and ecclesiology has brought greater recognition of each other’s baptism and sharing of the Eucharist. The international solidarity and practical nonviolent action coordinated in response to violence in the Middle East demonstrate new unity of purpose and practice for peace. When we look at the history of the ecumenical movement and the WCC, we see these and many other transformations in how churches understand each other and act together to make a difference in the world.

This transformative power continues to be needed by the world today. And the WCC, as the broadest and most inclusive Christian voice and catalyst for international action, works at the heart of such efforts for peace, justice, and life in all its fullness. Indeed, 2006 demonstrated to us the strength of ecumenical witness today and the opportunities for positive change in the future.

The year of the assembly is always one of major transition for the World Council of Churches. Preparations for the assembly and carrying out this inspiring event demanded much of us in early 2006. The months following were intensive times as existing work was completed, the reflection and guidance from the assembly was interpreted, and new work begun.

A number of important shifts occurred that point to new directions and learnings for ecumenism in the 21st century: At the assembly, the WCC member churches adopted a consensus style of decision-making, a recommendation of the Special Commission on Orthodox Participation in the WCC. That such a global, diverse fellowship of churches can visibly demonstrate its unity, commitment to equal participation, and respect is itself an important witness by this fellowship of churches to a divided world.

Our partnerships are widening. The consultative process engaged in to interpret the mandate of the 9th Assembly was the broadest ever. In addition to WCC member churches and governing bodies, there was participation by specialized ministries for relief and development, regional and national councils of churches, and Christian World Communions. New rules and processes adopted by the assembly strengthen their participation in the WCC for greater cooperation and coherence.

Discussions that have led to the formation of “ACT Development” exemplify the role of the WCC and the new partnerships that are now possible. The common desire for greater ecumenical coordination in development had reached a contentious stage in defining how such cooperation could be possible. The WCC was able to be the facilitator that brought parties together and created new opportunities for ecumenical collaboration.

The escalating violence in the Middle East, particularly the conflict in Lebanon and northern Israel, triggered new thinking in the WCC and a refocusing of ecumenical work in the region. The Ecumenical Accompaniment Programme in Palestine and Israel and other initiatives have prepared the ground, but we are going a step further with the Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum as a more concerted effort to find new ways to express solidarity and work for peace in a conflict that now has global dimensions.

The reflection process on “reconfiguring the ecumenical movement” has taught us to assess carefully the purpose and style of the structures we create for maximum effectiveness. While the changes in the program framework since the assembly have necessitated more discussion about staff structures and organizational relationships, we remain focused on the content of the ecumenical movement and the work ahead.

We are equipping the WCC for a dynamic, integrated, and deliberate engagement with the major challenges facing member churches and the world at the start of the 21st century. Six program areas were affirmed by the central committee in September, and the new structure was put into place in January 2007. The implementation of these programs will be carried out in an integrated and interactive manner, this being our new way of working.

Our reporting on 2006–2007 covers this shift in program. The following pages carry highlights of the work in 2006, and more detail is available on request.

The greatest challenge lies before us. Youth, in interpreting the mandate of the assembly, have asked, “What does it mean in my community to be part of the ecumenical movement?” The ecumenical movement in the 21st century must be characterized by “experiential ecumenism”—living out the ecumenical reality in each time and place.

Now as in the past our fellowship has transformed, in ways great and small, the societies in which we live as churches and as global citizens. With new energy, partnerships, and insights, we are moving into the future, empowered by our faith in God, following the ministry of Jesus Christ, and guided by the Holy Spirit.

B. Profile of the World Council of Churches

The World Council of Churches promotes Christian unity in faith, witness, and service for a more just and peaceful world.

In a world increasingly torn by economic and social inequality, political conflict, religious tension, violence, and environmental destruction, the World Council of Churches commits itself in discipleship to Christ, heeding his call “that they may all be one” by serving as a voice and catalyst for unity in the church and for life in all its fullness in the world.

The WCC is a unique global “fellowship of churches”—347 churches representing some 580 million Christians in more than 140 countries. Member churches come from the Anglican, Reformed, Baptist, Orthodox, Old Catholic, Pentecostal, Uniting, and other church traditions. The WCC works cooperatively with the Roman Catholic Church.

Through the WCC, member churches work together on a broad range of issues, from theological dialogue, education, and interfaith relations, to action for justice and peace. As members of the WCC, churches commit themselves to pray, to act, and to journey together in faith and witness.

The World Council of Churches was officially formed in 1948 by representatives of 147 churches gathered in its 1st Assembly in Amsterdam. In its formation and early history, the WCC brought together four pioneering movements, some dating back to the 19th century, in which churches had begun to cooperate across denominational boundaries in education, mission, faith and order, and international affairs and social ethics.

The assembly, which is held every seven or eight years, is the highest legislative body of the WCC, and elects a central committee that governs the WCC between assemblies. The central committee moderator, elected at the assembly in 2006, is the Reverend Dr. Walter Altmann of the Evangelical Church of the Lutheran Confession in Brazil.

The WCC general secretary is the Reverend Dr. Samuel Kobia, from the Methodist Church in Kenya. The central offices are in Geneva, Switzerland, with staff also based in regional locations.

C. 2006–2007 Highlights

1. Advocacy Week Focuses on UN Reform

Theologians, church representatives, social scientists, and political thinkers gave input into the United Nations reform debate in January 2006 and in October 2006, and again in October 2007 the WCC's third and fourth advocacy weeks were organized in New York. Participants developed a statement on UN reform later adopted by the WCC's 9th Assembly at Porto Alegre, and also debated policies related to terrorism, counterterrorism and human rights, responsibility to protect, elimination of nuclear arms, and building interreligious harmony.

2. Assembly Meets in a Spirit of Consensus

More than 4,000 people from churches throughout the world gathered in February in Porto Alegre, Brazil, for the 9th Assembly of the World Council of Churches in February 2006. Inspired by the theme, "God in your grace, transform the world," the delegates approved a substantial change in WCC priorities and working style, bringing increased attention to spirituality, ecumenical formation, global justice, and prophetic witness. Demonstrating the unity that is possible in the midst of diverse traditions and cultures, decisions were reached by consensus.

3. Dialogue Begins on Code of Conduct on Conversion

The WCC and the Roman Catholic Church organized two interreligious consultations as the first phase in developing a common code of conduct on conversion. Many differences remained at the end of the consultation, yet the report lays out common ground on religious freedom and the need to address conversion with candid dialogue between Christians and people of other faiths.

4. New Faith and Order Commission Outlines Future

At its first meeting in June, the WCC's Standing Commission on Faith and Order outlined the major areas of study for the next period including ecclesiology, baptism and worship, ethical decision making, and questions of authority. The commission also called for continued work on the distinctive witness of united and uniting churches, inter-confessional dialogues, and cooperation and reflection on Christian self-understanding in a religiously pluralistic world.

5. Ecumenical Institute at Bossey Turns Sixty

Founded in 1946 as a place of healing in war-torn Europe, the first courses at the Ecumenical Institute at Bossey brought together concentration camp survivors, former soldiers, and members of resistance movements. From this focus on reconciliation, Bossey developed into a recognized academic institution with ties to the University of Geneva, attracting students from around the world. Among the long list of alumni are university professors, ecumenical officers, bishops, pastors, and priests, as well as political and civil society leaders from all continents—even a patriarch. More than 25,000 people from virtually all church families and regions of the world have participated in courses at Bossey over the past sixty years.

The first meeting of the newly constituted Commission on Education and Ecumenical Formation convened at the Ecumenical Institute in Bossey, Switzerland, 27–30 June 2007. The new commission brought together the concerns and mandates of the former EEF commission and of the former Bossey Board. All but six of the thirty commission members were present, together with consultants and staff. The commission was given clear direction on its role, which included focus on integrating what had been separate strands, ensuring that the work of ecumenical formation happens in a coherent manner, within a single strategic plan. It was to also see itself as providing advice on developing the educational and formative potential of all the programmes of the WCC, not only those in the six areas of work under its purview.

6. Delegation Visits Beirut and Jerusalem

In response to the month-long war in Lebanon and northern Israel, the WCC collaborated with partners to organize an ecumenical delegation in August at short notice. The delegation visited Beirut to learn firsthand of the suffering, death, and destruction, and to show solidarity with the people, communities, and churches of Lebanon. In Jerusalem, the delegation also investigated the impact of the boycott of much of the elected Palestinian leadership by Western powers.

7. Central Committee Streamlines Programs

The new central committee began its first full meeting at the end of August in Geneva. It established a Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum to coordinate and energize church advocacy efforts for peace and justice that serve all peoples in the Middle East. The committee adopted a streamlined WCC program strategy for the next seven years, and spoke out on issues of Just Trade; a compassionate response to HIV and AIDS; the conflicts in Lebanon and northern Israel, Philippines, Sri Lanka, Sudan, and Kosovo; and children in conflicts. A twenty-five-member youth body was established to foster greater participation by and support for young ecumenical leaders in the WCC.

8. A Presence for Peace in Israel and Palestine

In October, twenty-five ecumenical companions from eight countries began working with the Ecumenical Accompaniment Programme in Palestine and Israel (EAPPI). This 19th group of companions included the first Hindu and the second Muslim to participate in the program. Ecumenical companions serve a minimum of three months. They work in various capacities with local churches, Palestinian and Israeli nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), as well as Palestinian communities, to try to reduce the brutality of the occupation and to improve the daily lives of both peoples.

9. Delegation Visits China and Taiwan

The WCC general secretary, the Reverend Dr. Samuel Kobia, led an ecumenical delegation to the People's Republic of China and Taiwan in November. In China, the delegation learned of the phenomenal growth of churches and other religious groups in China, the ministries and services provided through the China Christian Council (CCC) and the pressures placed on the CCC as a "post-denominational" church by the influx of foreign missions setting up denominational churches. The delegation's visit to Taiwan was an opportunity to develop a better understanding of the Presbyterian Church in Taiwan and its rural and urban ministries among indigenous people.

10. New Water Rights Network

The aid agency Brot für die Welt gave a ship's wheel, symbol of its water campaign, to the WCC in December, thus handing responsibility for this concern to the WCC and a newly formed Ecumenical Water Network (EWN). The German campaign, launched in 2003, focused on the human right to water. A statement issued by the WCC's 9th Assembly committed the council to "foster cooperation of churches and ecumenical partners on water concerns."

D. A New Ecumenical Mandate for the 21st Century

Many of the issues addressed by the WCC over the last seven years—and rising new concerns—were the focus of pre-meetings, ecumenical conversations, and Mutirão sessions at the assembly. Youth, women, indigenous peoples, and persons with disabilities had successful and energizing conferences before the assembly began. Ecumenical conversations were organized for sustained dialogue on different aspects of religious, cultural, and socioeconomic issues to inform the deliberations of delegates on the future programme of the WCC. Daily workshops offered through the Mutirão brought all assembly participants together to hear from people directly affected and involved in the critical issues of the day.

Assemblies of the World Council of Churches are major milestones in the ecumenical journey. Gathering thousands of Christians from churches all over the world, assemblies are times of joy, debate, and unity in prayer and action that express the strengths and needs churches bring from their communities and nations. Individuals and churches are in turn strengthened in their commitment to work and witness together in their local context.

Held every seven or eight years, WCC assemblies gather representatives of member churches to review the work and activities of the WCC since its last assembly and to set directions and priorities for the council's future programmatic work. The 9th Assembly was held in Porto Alegre, Brazil, in February—the first assembly to take place in Latin America. More than 4,000 participants, including 691 delegates from the WCC member churches and representatives from other churches, ecumenical organizations, and movements, followed the thematic plenaries, explored the Mutirão—workshops, seminars, exhibits, and demonstrations highlighting critical issues—and prayed together daily, all under the theme, "God, in your grace, transform the world."

During the first week, delegates adopted a substantially revised constitution and rules that move the WCC to decision making based on consensus and that amend the criteria for membership. The revisions emerged from the Special Commission on Orthodox Participation in the WCC and aim to strengthen participation of churches from diverse cultures and traditions.

1. Church Unity

A key text adopted by the assembly, “Called to Be the One Church,” urges the WCC and its member churches to give priority to questions of unity, catholicity, baptism, and prayer. The delegates called for renewed efforts to manifest a visible unity that would allow the ecumenical movement to offer to the world the “coherent, grace-filled spiritual message of Christianity.”

The assembly pointed to ways in which collaboration with the Roman Catholic Church and with Pentecostal churches could be reinforced in the coming years, and emphasized the need to improve “cooperation and coherence of message” among the various ecumenical bodies and organizations. The WCC will also explore the feasibility of linking future assemblies with the global meetings of other church bodies.

2. Youth

Bringing energy, vision, and enthusiasm, young adults appointed by the churches participated in all assembly committee work. Delegates urged the churches to strengthen the involvement of youth in the life and work of the council. The assembly endorsed proposals to create a special body to represent young adults in the decision-making and leadership of the council.

Ecumenical formation of young people and facilitation of their contribution to the ecumenical movement has been at the heart of the activities in 2007: an ecumenical youth delegation to the World Social Forum in January in Nairobi/Kenya; cooperation with the World Student Christian Federation in a seminar on migration with some of the participants also attending the global platform on theology meeting; facilitation of the World Youth Programme and a meeting of REO youth representatives/staff together with those responsible for the work on women in cooperation with P106; a successful group of three interns; the accompaniment of ECHOS, the youth body that met in conjunction with the Ecumenical Officers Network; and participation in organizing the Taizé youth gathering in Geneva with 30,000 young people from all over Europe; World Youth Programme that continues to be an excellent platform for intentional co-operation between REOs and WCC.

3. Program Priorities

Rapidly evolving church and social contexts, effective use of financial resources, and establishing a clearer public profile motivated the assembly to focus WCC work on core issues.

“The WCC should do less, do it well, in an integrated, collaborative and interactive approach,” said the Reverend Dr. Walter Altmann, moderator of the programme guidelines committee that formulated the proposals. Calling for a strengthened theological basis for all areas of activity, the delegates also pointed to the need for comprehensive planning and communication strategies “to build engagement and ownership by the churches.”

The programme priorities fall within four areas of engagement: unity, spirituality, and mission; ecumenical formation focusing on youth in particular; global justice; and bringing a credible voice and prophetic witness to the world. The assembly affirmed that the WCC should expand its work on alternatives to economic globalization, deepening the theological and analytical grounding of this work, and sharing “practical, positive approaches from the churches” in this area.

4. Public Issues

The assembly took action on several issues of international concern. Delegates approved statements on the humanitarian protection of vulnerable populations; terrorism, counterterrorism, and human rights; nuclear disarmament; the Latin American region; water for life; the humanitarian crisis in northern Uganda; and the reform of the UN. The assembly voiced its concern for mutual respect, responsibility, and dialogue with people of other faiths. The executive committee and the central committee have continued to speak out on situations of conflict and on issues for global advocacy (on the Horn of Africa, on the International Criminal Court, on Climate Change, on Sri Lanka etc.).

E. Strengthening the Ecumenical Movement

Churches in the ecumenical movement are inspired by the gospel mandate to be unified in Christ. The ecumenical movement itself is manifested and supported by structures that bring together churches and ecumenical organizations for sharing and analysis, focusing collective action, and ensuring good stewardship of the human and financial resources entrusted to ecumenical work.

The World Council of Churches is the unique international body that connects and coordinates these networks and organizations, within and beyond the WCC fellowship of churches.

1. Deepening the Ecumenical Movement

Relationships with member churches are nurtured most personally through visits by the WCC general secretary. The Reverend Dr. Samuel Kobia made official visits to churches and partners in Switzerland, China, and Taiwan in 2006, spoke at the World Methodist Conference in Korea, and met with other member churches there. Such visits enable the general secretary and representatives of other churches accompanying him to understand the opportunities and challenges faced by churches in their own contexts, express international ecumenical solidarity, and, at times, enable new dialogue to begin among churches, interfaith partners, or governments on matters of particular concern.

The WCC receives many requests for membership, which the WCC screens based on the new criteria adopted by the assembly, visits applicants, and prepares recommendations to the governing bodies. Following this process, two churches were received at the central committee meeting and can become members in 2008.

Meetings of governing bodies are opportunities for wide interaction with ecumenical partners that help assess ongoing and new concerns, ensure collaboration, and avoid duplication. The WCC organized meetings of the secretaries of national councils of churches (NCCs) during the assembly, and the secretaries of regional and national councils of churches met during the central committee meeting. A small NCC liaison group has been established to monitor programmatic and relational aspects of cooperation. According to the new rules on membership, NCCs can become associate councils—currently there are sixty-four associate councils in the WCC. The WCC facilitates a network of ecumenical officers from member churches. More than eighty officers are now linked electronically; in addition, they gather at central committee meetings to share information with each other and consult on major ecumenical issues.

The Common Heritage Fund encourages the participation of Orthodox clergy and laity, particularly women and youth, in ecumenical learning. Through the fund, key ecumenical texts and reflections, particularly from Orthodox theologians, are translated and disseminated, and young Orthodox theologians and laity are supported to study at the Graduate School of Bossey or receive other training.

2. Widening the Ecumenical Movement

The WCC builds intentional relationships with churches outside of the WCC. In addition to informal contacts, long-term consultative processes are set up to ensure growth in trust and understanding, such as the Joint Consultative Group between the WCC and Pentecostal churches. In 2006, these formal consultative bodies reported to the assembly, and new members were appointed by the central committee in September.

The Joint Working Group (JWG) between the Roman Catholic Church and the WCC has more than forty years of experience in building relationships and participation in different facets of the work between the two bodies. The JWG is setting the agenda for its next phase based on the assembly and the JWG's eighth report.

The assembly endorsed a recommendation to strengthen the relationship between the WCC and Christian World Communions (CWCs)—international organizations of the same tradition or confession, such as the Anglican Communion, the Baptist World Alliance, and the Salvation Army. A Joint Consultative Commission between Christian World Communions and the WCC has been formed and met in October 2006 to begin discussions about the role of CWCs in relation to the council. The broadest consultative process is the Global Christian Forum, which was conceived by the WCC to help churches outside the WCC and the ecumenical movement understand and engage ecumenism. The WCC supports this process through a WCC representative on the continuation committee, which held a major meeting in Nairobi in 2007 that brought together some 200 representatives from a wide range of church families. A regional consultation was held in Europe in June, attended by more than fifty participants from diverse Christian traditions including diaspora and migrant communities.

As an international platform bringing together churches and organizations within and outside the ecumenical movement, the WCC has special responsibility for the coherence and effectiveness of the ecumenical movement. United Christian work and vision is challenged by the proliferation of new churches and ecumenical bodies, and there is concern over diminishing financial resources at the international level. In response, the WCC initiated a process for “reconfiguring the ecumenical movement,” which has engaged the full range of churches and related organizations. The process is continuing with a stronger theological emphasis through the Continuation Committee on “Ecumenism in the 21st Century.”

In 2006–2007, the WCC secretariat hosted more than 3,000 visitors from across the world at the Ecumenical Centre in Geneva. The number of young people—confirmation classes, university students, and young school children—continues to increase, leading one staff member to observe that “the ecumenical movement is alive, and also will be in the future.”

F. Unity, Mission, and Evangelism

Dialogue and theological reflection on Christian beliefs and practices aid the cause of church unity by helping participants from diverse traditions overcome obstacles preventing them from finding in one another the marks of the One Church.

Part of that commitment to unity is expressed in mission and evangelism, in which the WCC promotes a common witness to Jesus Christ in all realms of life.

Two new, complementary tools for tackling fundamental issues in church unity are the WCC's study document, "The Nature and Mission of the Church", and "Called to Be the One Church," a text adopted by the 9th Assembly as a basis for renewed ecumenical commitment and further dialogue. The WCC member churches have committed themselves to respond to these texts.

A series of regional meetings on the two documents began in 2006–2007 with gatherings in Cairo organized with the Middle East Council of Churches, and in North America (Dallas and Boston) with ecumenical seminary federations. Other groups are broadening the process dramatically, including the ecclesiological study group of the American Academy of Religion and a study group from the International Council of Christians and Jews.

The Week of Prayer for Christian Unity, probably the most widely observed annual ecumenical event, was again prepared jointly with the Roman Catholic Church. Preparations for the 100th anniversary in 2008 are underway.

Convened by the WCC, representatives of Christian World Communions, Pentecostal networks, mission societies and ecumenical organizations are preparing for another important anniversary—the centennial of the Edinburgh 1910 world mission conference in 2010. In 2007, a secretariat has been set up in Edinburgh, initiated by the WCC with participation of mission partners. A study on mission—one hundred years after Edinburgh 1910—is being coordinated by the WCC.

The WCC's Commission for World Mission and Evangelism helped to organize and gave leadership to the third conference of European missiological associations held in Paris in August and to a study that has been initiated by the French language association for mission studies. More than 100 participants from all parts of Western, Central, and Eastern Europe addressed the challenge of mission in a post-Enlightenment European context.

The WCC's Urban and Rural Mission (URM) organized, together with Frontier Internship in Mission, a consultation in Cuba entitled "Empire and Kingdom of God: Challenges to Christian Mission" in December 2006. The consultation provided further understanding of mission in solidarity with the poor and reflected on the necessary reconfiguration of the URM network as it becomes autonomous.

A seminar on "Mission as Proclamation of the Gospel—Towards a New Ecumenical Agenda for Evangelism in the 21st Century" was held at the Ecumenical Institute of Bossey in June 2006. More than thirty participants from WCC member and nonmember churches re-emphasized the need for ecumenical cooperation in evangelism and developed several dynamic proposals for future WCC mission and evangelism events.

Ecumenical HIV/AIDS Initiative in Africa

The early leadership of mission societies in providing "medical missions" and holistic health care for those without access to institutional medical care has made health and healing one of the most tangible missions of the church. In many countries in Africa, for example, the majority of health care services are provided by Christian organizations.

The churches' work in this field, especially with the poor and marginalized, emphasizes the need not only to provide the best medical facilities possible in often dire situations, but also to address the root causes that make people vulnerable to illness and prevent spiritual, mental, and physical healing.

Because of such concerns, the World Council of Churches has led efforts for a compassionate response to the AIDS pandemic since the 1980s, and now is engaged in making churches "HIV competent" through the Ecumenical HIV/AIDS Initiative in Africa (EHAIA). The EHAIA was set up in 2002 as a joint undertaking of African and northern churches and agencies and the World Council of Churches. The EHAIA enables churches in Africa to gain access to the information, training, networks, and funding they need to help deal with HIV and AIDS in their communities.

Facilitated through five regional offices, EHAIA in 2006 and 2007 had major involvement in approximately 100 workshops, meetings, and conferences to help church leaders and their congregations speak honestly and accurately about HIV and AIDS, formulate relevant liturgy and theology, and act practically in response.

In March 2006, a workshop in the Central African Republic brought together fifty-five chaplains who work in state and church schools, colleges, and universities to develop a better understanding of the complexity of HIV and AIDS in the country, identify the root causes of stigma and discrimination in the school environment, and recognize the factors making young people—especially women and girls—vulnerable. A Zimbabwean pastor, from EHAIA's "training the trainer" program, led a September workshop that brought together twenty-eight pastors, women and youth leaders, home-based care workers, and village leaders. The discussion focused on sensitizing local church leadership to appropriate, accurate, up-to-date information from a holistic Christian perspective in order to challenge and counter stigma. Participants followed up with seminars for youth at secondary schools, meetings with local chiefs, as well as women-to-women and men-to-men meetings.

Through efforts such as these, the church is seen as the source of strength, hope, and leadership to communities ravaged by this disease.

G. The Church's Public Voice

In situations of intense conflict and severe human rights violations, which have global implications for international peace and security, the WCC speaks out and coordinates the response of the international fellowship of churches.

Advocacy in 2006 and 2007 included intense efforts on global security issues and international conflict resolution mechanisms.

A five-year deadlock in disarmament was weakened at the United Nations when more than 150 states voted to begin work on an arms trade treaty for conventional arms. The breakthrough was supported by active lobbying from the civil society sector, including the WCC, the Holy See (Roman Catholic Church), and members of the International Action Network on Small Arms, which the WCC helped to found. The Ecumenical Network on Small Arms, which the WCC convenes, continued to expand, drawing interest from Muslim and Buddhist-related organizations as well as Christians.

A major achievement of advocacy work over several years was the adoption, by the recently created Human Rights Council, of the International Convention on Enforced Disappearance. The WCC staff participated in the Working Group that drafted the convention and supported the participation of affected persons at the sessions of the Working Group, Commission and Human Rights Council. As part of the process, a WCC paper on "Enhancing Victims' Rights" gave a theological reflection on the momentum of victims' rights on the international agenda.

The WCC also assisted development of a manual addressed to African faith-based communities on "Advancing Justice and Reconciliation in Relation to the International Criminal Court".

The WCC closely monitored country and regional situations. Deteriorating conditions in the Horn of Africa were a particular concern in 2006 and 2007. While international attention focused on Darfur, churches were also concerned about the implementation of the Comprehensive Peace Agreement between North and South Sudan. The WCC, together with the Sudan Ecumenical Forum, organized meetings to ensure the implementation of the agreement.

Staff and ecumenical delegations were also engaged in consultations and visits to Eritrea and Ethiopia to follow up earlier work between the representatives of the religious communities to promote peace and harmony between the two countries. As a result of a sudden eruption of conflict in Somalia, the WCC, together with the All Africa Conference of Churches and other ecumenical partners, organized a major consultation on the Somali Peace Process. The consultation determined ways and means to defuse tension and conflict in the country.

The situations in Colombia and Haiti, the focus of a WCC statement adopted by the 9th Assembly, were followed closely during the year. The WCC organized activities both in Geneva and New York to raise the concern of the churches in these countries and request further UN actions. A pilot initiative held in March 2006, the International Church Action for Peace in Palestine and Israel, coordinated advocacy and awareness-raising events in thirteen countries. Churches and church-related organizations, plus two international networks, took part in vigils, worship services, lobbying, planting of olive trees, and public and university seminars using a common ecumenical identity and message. Several events had interfaith participation. The initiative was anchored by partners in the Ecumenical Accompaniment Programme in Palestine and Israel.

The four organizations that sponsored an ecumenical delegation to Beirut and Jerusalem in August 2006—the World Council of Churches, the Conference of European Churches, the Lutheran World Federation, and the World Alliance of Reformed Churches—issued a statement calling for an end to violence in the Middle East.

The delegation's findings also set the stage for the call to establish a Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum to help galvanize and coordinate international church efforts to end forty years of occupation and escalating conflict. A strategic framework has been prepared, and the forum will be launched at an international conference on the Middle East that was held in 2007.

1. Decade to Overcome Violence—Churches Seeking Reconciliation and Peace (2001–2010)

The annual focus of the Decade to Overcome Violence (DOV) in 2006 was on Latin America. Under the theme "And still we are searching for peace," Latin American churches and networks engaged in a significant range of activities from the campaign "Homes of Peace" to addressing small arms, juvenile crime, and theological issues. The WCC staff contributed to the organization of the First Ecumenical Conference for Peace in Guatemala in August 2006, which analyzed the ten-year-old peace process there.

The DOV focus for 2007 was Europe under the theme, “Make me an instrument of your peace.” Several national or regional churches used the DOV to highlight issues they work on, such as peace education, domestic violence, or racism. The International Day of Prayer for Peace (IDPP) carried the Europe theme and found considerable observation around the world. The brochure was downloaded more than 4,000 times and on 21 September alone about 500 visitors from 44 countries looked for information on the DOV web site. The IDPP moves alongside of the International Day of Peace and the International Day of Peace Vigil. Networking efforts were undertaken in the conjunction with the WHO’s Violence Prevention Alliance, the Global Priorities Campaign, and TakingITGlobal, a Web-based youth network addressing global issues.

International Ecumenical Peace Convocation (IEPC): A leaflet and Web page were developed over the year to promote the IEPC and its themes: Peace Theology, Peace at Heart, Peace at Home, Peace in the Virtual World, Peace to the Streets, Peace with the Earth, Peace in the Market Places, Make Peace, Not War.

Three mutually reinforcing activities facilitate the consultative process towards the Peace Convocation:

Expert Consultations: Five consultations in Europe and Africa, addressing several of the eight proposed thematic areas of the IEPC.

Peace Declarations: Some 300 letters in various languages were sent to seminaries, Bible study centers, and universities, inviting students together with their professors to write their peace declarations. The invitation is also posted on the Web site, encouraging groups and individuals at the local level to write their peace declaration. The aim is to provoke a wide process of conscientiousness raising around the issues of peace at all levels of the churches’ life.

Living Letters: Two pilot team visits went to Sri Lanka and the U.S. Fifteen such visits are envisioned for each year up to 2010. They are Living Letters, facilitating exchange between the WCC’s peace agenda and the peace experiences of the churches, thus giving a human face to peace making.

2. Ecumenical Accompaniment Programme in Palestine and Israel

The Ecumenical Accompaniment Programme in Palestine and Israel (EAPPI) provides a tangible sign of ecumenical solidarity for peace and justice for all the peoples in Israel and Palestine. Since EAPPI was established in 2002, 346 ecumenical accompaniers have participated from more than 30 churches and ecumenical partners in 15 countries: Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, Kenya, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, South Africa, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, and the United States.

In 2006, the EAPPI hosted six groups of accompaniers, who stay for a minimum of three months. Through their presence in villages and refugee camps, at checkpoints and agricultural gates in the separation barrier, and by accompanying school children and mobile clinics, they reduced incidences of violence and abuse and supported nonviolent action against the occupation.

Accompaniers worked with local churches and Palestinian and Israeli peace and human rights groups in Yanoun, Hebron, Bethlehem, Ramallah, Jayyous, Tulkarem, and Jerusalem. Support for the nonviolent, antiwar movement within Israeli society became increasingly important after the outbreak of new violence between Israel and Hezbollah and the ongoing military operations in Gaza. These conflicts, plus the Danish cartoon crisis and the Jericho prison raid, placed special demands on the program to ensure the security of accompaniers and assist in reducing tensions between communities.

Accompaniers provided data for pending court cases and for organizations, including the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and the International Committee of the Red Cross, who submitted reports to the Israeli authorities based on this data.

The EAPPI engaged heavily in advocacy and awareness-raising events with church and interfaith groups visiting the region, through presentations at meetings and conferences outside of the region, and by the reports and publications produced by the accompaniers and the coordinating office. Accompaniers are encouraged and equipped to interpret their experiences when they return home.

H. Interreligious Dialogue and Action

For thirty-five years, the World Council of Churches has been engaged in interreligious dialogue and cooperation, and its efforts and experience now make the WCC one of the most respected and experienced partners in international interfaith initiatives. Religious faith and practice in many parts of the world constitute a major force in society and politics. Recognizing this makes efforts at dialogue and cooperation all the more critical to promote understanding and tolerance and provide effective alternatives to tension and conflict.

The issue of religious identity has become so critical that for the first time, a plenary at the WCC Assembly was devoted to identity and religious plurality, and a number of ecumenical conversations and workshops focused on interreligious relations. The interest shown by the participants underlined the growing importance of deepening the discourse among religions on key dividing issues and promoting practical actions to enhance tolerance and cooperation.

The interreligious think-tank, “Thinking Together,” convened by the WCC and active since 1997 met in October 2006 in Coimbatore, India. The group, composed of people of the major world religions, has addressed issues that may be a challenge for religion and pose a particular problem in the interrelationship of modernity and religion. All are in need of rethinking religion in our time. Thinking together has addressed issues such as “religion in a religiously plural world,” “violence and religion,” or “the role of the other.” The theme chosen this time as a topic for the group was “conversion.” Conversion is sought by some and feared by others. To be able to convert someone is high up on the priority list for some; for others it is a day of grief when someone converts. The thrust of the meeting suggested a focus on an interfaith commentary on the Declaration of Human Rights, an exploration of sharing faith in a religiously plural world, and an attempt to put into words some interreligious considerations on conversion. The Thinking Together group met again at Bossey Institute in June 2007 on the theme of conversion. The three areas of interest stated above were penetrated in-depth. The group divided among themselves chapters to be written for a publication towards a final meeting on the topic, in 2008.

Young adults and interreligious relations and dialogue: Taking seriously the yearning for spirituality among many young people, sometimes disconnected from institutionalized religion and dogmas, rites, and religious practices, the project organized together with the Fireflies Ashram in Bangalore and the Charles Léopold Mayer Foundation for Human Progress (FPH) a subcontinental, multifaith youth meeting at the Fireflies Ashram, June–July 2007. The project provided the space for young adults from different countries, religions, and cultures to discuss religious identity, and its meaning in pluralist societies. It was a two-part activity, with one week of exposure to the activities of the ashram on sustainable development in relation to children’s rights, women’s empowerment, Dalit human rights, and environmental issues. The second week focussed on ways to understand religious traditions towards a relevant religious life in the various contexts represented at the meeting. There were fifteen participants from India and ten participants from Bangladesh, Pakistan, Nepal, and Sri Lanka. A Web-posting of the material used in this meeting is underway.

An interfaith Youth Live-in seminar in Bossey, 2–29 July 2007, organized by the Bossey, Ecumenical Institute with the participation of staff from Interreligious Dialogue and Cooperation, brought together some twenty-five young Muslims, Jews, and Christians. During the month the young adults from the U.S., Holland, Israel, Palestine, Tanzania, Peru, Romania, Russia, and Iran had the opportunity to become acquainted with one another, with each others’ religious traditions as well as discussing particular challenges young Muslims, Christians, and Jews face today. Local Jewish, Muslim, and Christian communities enabled participants to get to know the local scene and facilitated encounters with the different communities. This was the first venture of this kind, planned and organised together with the Bossey Institute.

Women and interreligious relations and dialogue: Women have often challenged the ways religion is used to legitimize violence against them, and have been able to step over religious divides to work for peace, particularly in conflict situations. The project “Moving towards peace through religion: Muslim and Christian women in Dialogue” was organized in November 2007 in Tehran. This meeting was organized in collaboration with the Institute for Inter-religious Dialogue in Tehran. The participants were Muslim and Christian women from Iran and other parts of the world from professions including education, health, journalism, media, and politics. Discussions focussed on these areas and on how women could influence peace-making through religion and in their own professions. Plans were developed to make a documentary video about the group’s experience in dialogue and cooperation and about Muslim and Christian women’s stories in making peace. There is a plan to link global initiatives with local experiences. Plans were formulated for the next event to be held in Sweden.

The WCC response to the letter of 138 Muslim scholars and leaders: In October 2007 the World Council of Churches received a copy of an Open Letter addressed to Christian leaders, including the WCC general secretary. The letter was signed by 138 Muslim scholars, clerics, and leaders, entitled “A Common Word Between Us and You” (drawing upon an invitation to conversation in common between Christians and Muslims that appears in the Qur’an). The letter sets out key dimensions of belief and action that followers of the two faiths hold in common, and invites them to a common action for peace in the world. Since then the WCC established a multistranded process of coordinated response on behalf of the fellowship of the member churches.

After referring the letter to member churches for consideration and response, and based on initial responses of member churches, the program on interreligious dialogue and cooperation invited a selected group of fourteen scholars, experts in Christian-Muslim relations together with representatives of member churches to a meeting in Geneva, 17–19 January 2008, in order to explore and discuss the process for a common response.

The outcome of the discussion is presented in a document entitled “Learning to Explore Love Together” to be sent to the churches as a proper, scholarly Christian response that communicates with the Muslim letter in substance. This document clarifies some of the theological key issues in the letter concerning the love of God and the love of neighbour from Christian perspective and encourages the churches to consider this new opportunity for dialogue and cooperation with their Muslim fellows.

Steps toward a common response will also include (a) establishing a process of reflection on the contents of the letter and the implications contained in it by Christian and Muslim scholars and interreligious specialists, with the purpose of framing theological and ethical recommendations, and (b) exploring jointly with Muslim partners the feasibility of together organizing a conference of Muslim and Christian leaders, practitioners, and specialists, which will reflect on points of mutual understanding that emerge from the consideration by the churches and reflection by scholars, and will establish means of exploring further in both matters of faith and life.

Jewish-Christian explorations for intra-Christian theology: Many attempts have been made to capitalize on fifty years of Jewish-Christian dialogue for an intra-Christian theological reflection. An encounter co-hosted with the International Council of Christians and Jews (ICCJ) took place at the Evangelical Academy in Boldern, Switzerland, in December 2006. Here Jewish resource persons and Christian participants engage in the work of Jewish-Christian dialogue as well as in the work of Faith and Order ways in which Jewish-Christian dialogue has a bearing on intra-Christian theological explorations. The meeting responded to the question: are the learnings from the Jewish-Christian dialogue possible stepping stones in an ecumenical effort to articulate “The Nature and Mission of the Church”? The meeting was received well by both the Jewish participants and the representatives of the Faith and Order constituency. In spite of the regular contacts with Jewish bodies and with organizations for Jewish-Christian understanding, the perceived bias of the WCC against Israel, has strained relations with some of these partners.

There is a growing interest today in multifaith approaches to issues of common concern, e.g. to support the work of the UN from an interreligious perspective. There are attempts to establish institutions, similar to the UN, where representatives of world religions address conflicts where religious sentiments are involved.

In April 2007, a preparatory meeting was held between the WCC and the Conference of NGOs in consultative relationship with the United Nations (CONGO) through its Committee on Spirituality, Values, and Global Concerns (CSVGC-Geneva) on the possibility to promote the declaration of a United Nation’s “Decade of Inter-religious Dialogue and Cooperation for Peace.” A consultation that included several UN member states, UN agencies, international interfaith organizations, and religious communities was co-hosted by the WCC from 8–11 January 2008, at the Bossey Institute. A working committee was formed to finalize a draft proposal for presentation to a member state, which will agree to take this proposal to the UN General Assembly this September 2008.

Conversion and intra-Christian considerations: A theological consultation entitled: “Towards an ethical approach to conversion—Christian witness to a multi-religious world” took place at the Institut de Science et de Théologie des Religions in Toulouse, France, in August 2007. This was the second consultation in a three-phase project with the Pontifical Council for Inter-religious Dialogue (PCID) and the program on Inter-religious Dialogue and Cooperation in collaboration with the program on Unity and Mission. The first consultation in 2006 brought participants from different faiths to a hearing on conversion. At this consultation, PCID invited Roman Catholics and the WCC invited from its network Evangelicals, Pentecostals as well as Christians from the WCC constituency. A preparation meeting for this consultation took place in January in Geneva with Evangelicals and Pentecostals. The edited group reports are to be compiled into a report to be used for the last phase of the project. Some particular headings to be spelled out for the final Code of Conduct on Conversion were defined:

- Family and Community
- Respect, Transparency and Honesty
- Economy, Marketing and Competition
- Violence, Politics, Coercion and Manipulation

Christian self-understanding and religious plurality: A document, the result of a unique collaboration among WCC’s staff on Inter-religious Dialogue and Cooperation, Mission and Evangelism, and Faith and Order, and their respective commissions or advisory bodies, was produced in 2002 addressing difficult and controversial issues related to Christian self-understanding in a religiously plural world. The document featured as a background paper for the Ninth Assembly and was again picked up in August 2006 in Toulouse to find a way to continue an intra-Christian reflection on religious plurality for the life and mission of the Church. The meeting brainstormed on the way ahead for this project and the document. A preliminary report has been produced and staff from Unity and Mission together with Inter-religious Dialogue and Cooperation will continue to work on it.

A new WCC initiative on “Accompanying Churches in Situations of Conflict” was launched in December 2007. A brainstorming meeting took place in Geneva from 8–10 December and brought together twenty-five church leaders from areas of conflict, experts in interreligious relations and faith-based diplomacy, together with ecumenical partners and agencies representatives. The group included archbishops of Baghdad and Tehran, as well as bishops from Pakistan and church leaders from Sudan, Indonesia, and Malaysia. The aim was to listen to church leaders describing the reality of conflict in their contexts, analyze common themes, and identify priorities. The participants explored political and economic causes of conflict that are often attributed to religion, but also affirmed that sometimes religion itself instigates conflict. They explored theological bases for accompaniment, underscoring several important themes such as the meaning of solidarity, reconciliation, and consolation. Sharing stories of conflict and reconciliation from Pakistan, Indonesia, and Sudan as well from Iraq, Iran, and Palestine led to deeper reflection on the theological and political/economic questions, and acknowledged that the meeting itself was the first act of accompaniment.

While noting the complexity of the questions, the participants identified themes to be explored in terms of the purpose, process, and action, steps that will lead to effective action and that will be put into the future work of the WCC.

Current Dialogue, published in June and December each year, explores the interreligious issues undertaken by the WCC and is available on-line through the WCC Website.

I. Globalization, Environment, and Solidarity

Through the WCC, churches act together against injustice as part of their faithful response to the Gospel. Yet the WCC is also a platform where Christians themselves are challenged for their own complicity in perpetuating inequality and violence and called to be self-critical in the stewardship of wealth.

The WCC's work on alternatives to globalization exemplifies this tension. Responses to the AGAPE (Alternative Globalization Addressing People and Earth) call at the assembly highlighted the unity of the churches in challenging economic globalization as the source of the growing gap between rich and poor within and among nations. Yet it also raised differences in approach to the complex factors that support globalization and emphasized the need to continue to bring diverse people together for reflection and action.

The widely read AGAPE background document and the AGAPE call have been distributed to stimulate further discussion and response. In September 2006, a consultation on the AGAPE process was held to assess the reactions and guidance from the assembly and suggest new programmatic directions for the WCC in this area. Churches and ecumenical organizations are encouraged to contribute their reflection on the AGAPE process to further inform and guide the WCC fellowship.

When the 2006 central committee commemorated the 1966 WCC World Conference on Church and Society, it was clear that differences over the AGAPE process have had a long history in the WCC and that participation in debates on social and economic issues remains as relevant and necessary in the 21st century as it was forty years ago.

Work on "ecological debt" demonstrates the link the WCC makes between economics and the environment. A publication with four case studies, "Ecological Debt: The Peoples of the South Are the Creditors," is raising awareness and encouraging churches to connect their advocacy on Third World debt, trade, and the environment in preparation for a global campaign.

The WCC represented civil society at the UN Financing for Development General Assembly review meeting in New York, 22–25 October 2007, where they were asked to speak on the issue of trade in financing for development. The meeting's purposes were to review the Monterrey Consensus commitments on financing for development and to prepare the road to Doha for a review conference.

Organized by the WCC in cooperation with ecumenical partners from 5–9 November 2007 in Dar Es Salaam, the African AGAPE consultation on "Linking Poverty, Wealth and Ecology (PWE): African Ecumenical Perspectives" was attended by sixty-five church representatives; youth, women, men, and theologians predominantly from the continent of Africa although with participation also from Asia, Latin America, Europe, and North America. The aim of the consultation was to share experiences from churches, women, youth, and theologians on PWE and also to discuss the research findings of the PWE study in Africa (the framework paper on Poverty, Wealth and Ecology has since been completed and sent for publication). Statements and a network in Africa were prepared.

P306 attended the review conference on The Helsinki Process on Globalization and Democracy—initiated by the governments of Finland and Tanzania in 2003 to find and improve common rules regarding the governance of globalization and to promote democracy in its governance—was held in Dar es Salaam, 27–29 November 2007. The conference was attended by more than 168 participants from all over the world. It was composed of an opening panel and five substantial sessions on: Peace and Security, Poverty and Development, Human Rights, Governance, and Environment.

Key contributions of women in addressing economic injustice were published in 2006 through the Journal of the Asia Women's Resource Centre. Case studies exploring the links between trafficking in women and economic globalization in Asia and Latin America were also published through Migrante International and the Latin America Gender and Trade Network.

Although the Ecumenical Decade of the Churches in Solidarity with Women ended more than eight years ago, its impact continues to be felt. Some of the fruits of the decade are reflected in statistics at the 9th Assembly: 36 percent of official church delegations and more than 50 percent of all leadership and resource persons were women. In the central committee elected at the assembly, 45 percent of the members and three of the eight presidents were women—the highest number ever.

The WCC ensures that women's leadership and participation are integrated throughout its programs. Small travel grants or scholarships for participation in meetings or training workshops were offered to build the capacity for women's leadership and strengthen women's initiatives in the churches.

The WCC has challenged churches to address violence against women, and the publication, Streams of Grace, brought together some of the "good practices" of churches and other ecumenical networks around the world in dealing with and overcoming violence against women in recent years.

A WCC collection of more than 1,600 resource materials relating to overcoming violence against women is now available through the WCC library.

Youth have been able to contribute their skills and energy, and learn about the ecumenical movement, through serving as stewards at the WCC Assembly and central committee. An internship program also brings a select number of young ecumenical leaders to the WCC for a year's intensive work experience. But the assembly called for more dynamic integration of youth—defined by the WCC as those under thirty—in the leadership and work of the ecumenical movement. The central committee established a special youth body to increase the presence and support for young ecumenical leaders in the life and work of the WCC.

The Ecumenical Disability Advocates Network (EDAN) was very active in United Nations processes that led, in December 2006, to the adoption of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and an optional protocol that is now open for signature by all states.

The WCC's work on climate change was given renewed emphasis by the assembly, which supported the creation of the Ecumenical Water Network and called for continuing work on faith, science, and technology by the WCC. Increasing involvement of specialized ministries, evangelical churches, ecumenical partners, and member churches in these areas is partly due to five years of WCC work on solidarity with victims of climate change and water scarcity.

These new partners were involved in the Conference of Parties of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change in November and participation at the World Social Forum held in January 2007 in Nairobi.

A new platform has been formed with churches and ecumenical partners for work on faith, science and technology. A preparatory meeting for a Global Consultation in 2007 was hosted in Toronto by the Canadian Council of Churches and the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. in May. In December 2007, an international consultation was held in South Africa on the topic bringing together the concerns of the churches globally on the challenges of new technologies.

Serving Human Need

Diakonia—serving human need—is central to the mission of the church. The WCC's unique contribution is its emphasis on building relationships through diaconal work, hosting multilateral platforms for analysis and resource sharing, and building the capacity of churches and ecumenical organizations so that they can better fulfil their service.

Efforts are carried out on a regional basis, with a number of WCC offices—in Eastern Europe, Middle East, Pacific, and the United States—based in the regions themselves.

The WCC works with more than fifty roundtables and other forums in all the regions that bring together national, regional, and international church and ecumenical partners to agree on needs, activities, and resources. Roundtables, regional groups, and other networks have also contributed national and regional church perspectives on international ecumenical issues, such as the formation of ACT Development, collaboration with regional ecumenical organizations, and engagement with the assembly.

Through organizing and supporting training, the WCC strengthened the capacities of churches and ecumenical partners to use up-to-date, comprehensive, and long-term methodologies in management and finance. This included training and implementation of a holistic approach to development that integrates relief, rehabilitation, development, and reconciliation.

The WCC's work with uprooted people engaged the United Nations high commissioner for refugees and other international bodies. The Global Ecumenical Network on Uprooted People met before the UNHCR annual meeting to bring a common ecumenical voice to the table.

The practical administration of diaconal projects involved preparing and receiving proposals for funding, preparing, and circulating a listing of projects to potential funders, monitoring and transferring funds, and reporting, as well as responding to specific requests for more information.

J. Developing New Ecumenical Leadership

Ecumenical formation broadens thinking beyond particular cultures and traditions. The WCC is in a unique position to encourage and enable global reflection and practical experience among the churches.

The assembly typified a concentrated experience of ecumenical formation, with specific opportunities for Mutirão participants to attend ecumenical education sessions. A Mission and Ecumenical Congress was held alongside the assembly for theological students from Latin America and other continents. The WCC journals addressing ecumenical education and theological training, EEFNET, and Ministerial Formation, carried reflections on the learning experiences from the assembly.

The WCC also concentrates on activities that enable ecumenical education within people's own contexts, whether as members of churches, in theological education, as staff of ecumenical bodies or agencies, or as participants in ecumenical networks.

Through the Ecumenical Theological Education (ETE) programme, an HIV and AIDS theological curriculum was introduced to theological colleges in India and Southeast Asia. The ETE, in collaboration with EDAN, organized workshops in India and the Pacific introducing disability studies to help prepare ministers for work with persons with disabilities and facilitate the inclusion of persons with disabilities in theological training. The ETE also worked on incorporating peace concerns into theological curriculum in South Asia.

In Africa, Theological Education by Extension (TEE) curriculum modules on HIV and AIDS were introduced and tested at the formation of an All Africa TEE association. Churches in Nairobi were part of an international campaign against gender violence through organizing various activities and biblical reflection.

The ETE engaged in critical discourse on contextual ecumenical education in Colombia and Peru as well as the evaluation of teaching methodologies in the Latin American region. In Central and Eastern Europe, ETE worked on introducing ecumenical theology. The ETE also provided small grants—fifty projects in 2006—for theological institutions and associations.

The WCC Interfaith Education Project, based in Hartford Seminary in the United States, documented practices in interfaith education in forty-five countries. Most programs were created to introduce or strengthen interreligious understanding and conflict transformation. Resource material and training for facilitators were identified as needs.

The WCC scholarships program helps churches and related organizations equip their staff and members to fulfil their roles and mission. Churches or ecumenical organizations are encouraged to assess the need for new knowledge and skills to improve their work, and then identify an individual or group to nominate for a scholarship. The scholarships program then provides an opportunity for ecumenical learning through exposure to other cultures and faith traditions, in addition to appropriate academic study and practical experience.

In 2006, eighty-four scholarships were awarded for theological and non-theological training, seventy-four to individuals and ten to groups.

Groundwork was done for a new integration of programs on education and ecumenical formation in 2007, incorporating the Ecumenical Institute at Bossey, Ecumenical Theological Education, lay formation and faith nurture, scholarships, the library and archives.

Bossey: Laboratory for Ecumenical Learning

For six decades the Ecumenical Institute of Bossey has prepared ecumenical leaders for service in parishes, classrooms, and ecumenical centers around the world. Through study in residential programs, participation in seminars, and involvement in common worship, Bossey provides a safe space and an academic platform where some of the most acute and contemporary challenges confronting the churches today, often considered taboo topics even by society at large, are debated and analyzed in an attempt to find common responses, actions, and witness.

For its academic programs, the Ecumenical Institute carefully selects students from a large pool of applicants and aims to train scholars—lay and ordained, women and men, from all regions of the world and Christian confessions—to the highest academic standards.

Bossey's Graduate School of Ecumenical Studies facilitates research, enhances knowledge, contributes new ideas to ecumenical dialogue, and offers theological and scientific knowledge to lay and ordained students. The 57th session of the Graduate School, which ran from October 2005 through February 2006, explored the themes of grace, healing, and transformation in parallel to the preparations and deliberations of the WCC Assembly. Twenty-four students attended from twenty countries and twenty denominations. The 58th session began in October 2006. In it, twenty-one international students from nineteen denominations focused on ecumenical spirituality.

A number of students are also pursuing a master's degree or Ph.D. in Ecumenical Studies through the Ecumenical Institute.

A new program of visiting professors brought five experienced ecumenists during 2006 who taught social ethics, ecumenical theology, and missiology.

The Ecumenical Institute at Bossey is academically attached to the University of Geneva.

The picturesque Château de Bossey, overlooking Lake Geneva, also has become an ideal setting for conferences and meetings—even weddings—for a wide range of organizations and people in the Geneva area.

Item 08-01

[The assembly disapproved Item 08-01. See pp. 22, 23.]

On Reinstating the Annual Mission Season Offering—From the Presbytery of Shenandoah.

The Presbytery of Shenandoah overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to reinstate the annual Missions Season Offering during mission season as a continuing offering to support salaries and expenses for our mission personnel, both American and worldwide, all funds to be used to subsidize general mission shortfalls in missionary support and to stem the tide of a shrinking missionary force around the world.

Rationale

While Presbyterians have a long and proud history of involvement in worldwide mission, the reorganization of our General Assembly due to budget shortfalls is hindering our Presbyterian global outreach. Despite this trend, new mission endeavors such as Presbytery Partnerships and Church-to-Church Partnerships are expanding our mission outreach. This new day in missions involves expanding the involvement of members, churches, presbyteries, and the General Assembly in international mission to spread the good news of Jesus Christ and his love to all the world. It is an age for seeing world mission outreach as a way of expanding and not contracting our world mission outreach. (It is not an either/or proposition but a both/and process.)

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 08-01

Comment on Item 08-01—From the General Assembly Council (GAC).

The General Assembly Council recognizes a new movement in the church—one that calls on all Presbyterians to become involved in the renewal of our denomination as a mission-sending church. Specifically, the General Assembly Council affirms the care and support that this overture demonstrates to our mission personnel and thanks the Presbytery of Shenandoah and the Presbytery of Abingdon for their commitment.

The General Assembly Council, along with the other participants in the Dallas Consultation on World Mission, has committed “to expand Presbyterian funding for mission personnel,” and is bringing a budget to the 218th General Assembly (2008), which addresses this call by reversing a fifty-year trend of declining numbers of mission personnel.

With respect to special offerings, the General Assembly provides for review and evaluation of the causes supported by churchwide special offerings on a four-year cycle, and considers new causes in light of established criteria. The General Assembly Council appointed a task force to conduct this review in September of 2006. The task force examined the issues and sought feedback for seventeen months, before bringing their recommendations to the General Assembly Council for approval in February 2008. These recommendations are being presented to the 218th General Assembly (2008) for approval.

The General Assembly Council advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) to consider Item 08-01 in the context of the report of the Special Offerings Task Force.

[The assembly approved Item 08-02. See p. 22, 23.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following Institutional Standards for Participating in the Christmas Joy Offering:

“Institutional Standards for Participating in the Christmas Joy Offering

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessors have a long history of support for minority education. That support continues through the distribution of funds collected annually through the Christmas Joy Offering, one-half of which is designated for support of Historic Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPREI).<sup>1</sup> In order to be a good steward of these funds and accountable to those who contribute to the offering, the church establishes the following formula for the dissemination monies from the Christmas Joy Offering designated for racial ethnic education.

“I. BASE GRANTS

“One half of the funds distributed shall be earmarked for Base Grants to institutions that meet the following criteria:

“A. Mission. An institution must show evidence of commitment to the stated mission of its governing board and to the mission goals of the General Assembly Council (GAC) of the PC(USA). Those goals include:

- “1. Leadership and Vocation
- “2. Spirituality and Discipleship
- “3. Justice and Compassion
- “4. Evangelism and Witness

“The evidence must demonstrate that an institution’s mission is understood and supported by all of its constituent groups and must include a covenant between the institution and one or more church governing bodies and published statements in the institution’s catalogue, promotional materials, and other public documents.

“B. Audit. By November 1 each year, an institution must provide to the church an independent audit by a certified public accountant of the institution’s financial condition during the previous fiscal year.

“C. Strategic Plan. An institution must provide a current three- to five-year strategic plan for the institution’s continued operation.

“D. Accreditation.

- “1. Degree granting institutions must be accredited by a U.S. Department of Education-approved accrediting association. Institutions that are not accredited will have a three-year period in which to achieve accreditation.
- “2. Non-degree granting institutions must have an alternative educational model that is consistent with their mission to educate racial ethnic students and has been approved by the General Assembly Council in lieu of accreditation.
- “3. Institutions must demonstrate how they provide financial support for students.

“E. Racial Ethnic Student Enrollment. Enrollment of racial ethnic students must be demonstrated by an institution’s mission and substantiated by the demographics of its student body.

“II. PERFORMANCE INDICATORS

Of funds not earmarked for Base Grants:

“A. Mission Validity.

“Twenty percent (20%) will be available to institutions that demonstrate mission validity by meeting the following criteria. For each criteria that is met, an institution will receive one-sixth (1/6) of the total amount for which it is eligible based on mission validity.

“1. Evidence of Racial Ethnic Mission

- “a. An institution must demonstrate a racial ethnic composition within its student enrollment of at least fifty percent (50%).
- “b. An institution must demonstrate that at least seventy-five percent (75%) of its students are financial disadvantaged and eligible for need-based aid.

“2. Evidence of Successful Educational Program

- “a. An institution must show evidence of having a qualified faculty to serve the enrolled student body.
- “b. An institution must demonstrate a retention rate of at least seventy percent (70%) of its students from the first to the second year for colleges or from year to year for secondary schools.

“3. Evidence of Achievement

- “a. An institution must demonstrate a six-year persistence to graduation rate of at least forty percent (40%).
- “b. An institution must have in place a systematic outcomes assessment program.

“B. Institutional Viability.

“Twenty percent (20%) will be available to institutions that demonstrate institutional viability by meeting the following criteria. Accreditation without sanction by the appropriate regional accrediting association is a prerequisite to receiving Institutional Viability funds. For each of the other criteria met, an institution shall receive one-seventh (1/7) of the amount for which it is eligible.

“1. Evidence of Financial Integrity

- “a. An institution must show evidence of a balanced budget within constraints approved by its governing board.
- “b. An institution must be able to produce an unqualified independent audit of financial operations for the previous fiscal year.

“2. Evidence of Long-Range Strength

- “a. An institution must show evidence of a systematic plan for raising funds to support the institution beyond what is received through tuition and financial aid.
- “b. An institution must show a debt-to-net-worth ratio within the recommended limits of the National Association of College and University Business Officers (NACUBO).

“3. Strength of Governing Board

- “a. An institution’s governing board must broadly represent constituencies served by the institution and the public.
- “b. An institution’s governing board must demonstrate through financial support an active participation in the work of the board.
- “c. An institution’s governing board must demonstrate its responsibility for policy determination, oversight of the institution, and respect for the boundaries of its responsibility.

“C. Contingency Funds.

“Ten percent (10%) will be available for institutions faced with emergency costs that have no other means of covering those costs.

“III. SITE VISITS

“In order to ensure compliance with these standards, educational institutions that receive money from the Christmas Joy Offering will be reviewed every four years by a team that includes:

- “1. The president of a comparable institution
- “2. A person knowledgeable about the higher education evaluation process
- “3. A member of the General Assembly Council
- “4. The GAC associate for Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges (ex officio)”

Rationale

This recommendation is in response to the 2006 Referral: Item 12-13. Report: Racial Ethnic Education Support Work Group. That the 217th General Assembly (2006) Reaffirm the Church’s Mission of Racial Ethnic Educational Support and Its Commitment to the Historically Presbyterian Racial Ethnic Institutions (HPRI); That a Special Group Be Formed to Develop Educational Guidelines and Standards and a Method of Applying Them in Order to Ensure That the Christmas Joy Offering Supports Institutions That Can Most Effectively Serve Populations for Whom Access to Educational Opportunities Would Be Difficult and That the Educational Guidelines, Standards, and the Method for Applying Them Should Be Completed, Enacted, and Reported to the 218th General Assembly (2008); That Until Guidelines and Standards Are Established, the Christmas Joy Offering Continue to Be Used Exclusively for the HPREI’s with Whom the GAC Has Traditionally Covenanted; and that the GAC Consider Establishing a Special Fund and Case Statement to Help Meet the Unique Needs of the HPREI’s—From the General Assembly Council (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 14–15, 1081–82).

The referral asked that a special group be formed to develop educational guidelines and standards and a method of applying them in order to ensure that the Christmas Joy Offering supports institutions that can most effectively serve populations for whom access to educational opportunities would be difficult and that the educational guidelines, standards, and the method for applying them should be completed, enacted, and reported to the 218th General Assembly (2008); that until guidelines and standards are established, the Christmas Joy Offering continue to be used exclusively for the HPREI’s with whom the GAC has traditionally covenanted; and that the GAC consider establishing a special fund and case statement to help meet the unique needs of the HPREI’s.

Endnote

1. These institutions include Barber Scotia College, Cook School for Christian Leadership, Johnson C. Smith University, Knoxville College, Sheldon Jackson College, Stillman College, Menaul School, and Presbyterian Pan American School.

Item 08-03

The General Assembly Council, upon recommendation of the Special Offerings Task Force, recommends that the 208th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Approve the following pattern for churchwide special offerings for 2010–2013: (Please note that the lodgment of all programs given is prescribed relative to the structure as it now stands.)

a. CHRISTMAS JOY OFFERING, interpreted and received during the Advent season in gratitude for God's gift of Jesus Christ. Causes:

(1) Assistance programs to meet identified and emerging needs for professional church workers and spouses through the Board of Pensions, 50 percent;

(2) Racial ethnic education through Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries, 50 percent.

b. ONE GREAT HOUR OF SHARING, interpreted and received during Lent and on Easter Sunday in response to Christ's call to us to feed the hungry, house the homeless, minister to the suffering, and empower the poor and oppressed. Causes administered through the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministry. Causes:

(1) Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, 32 percent;

(2) Presbyterian Hunger Program, 36 percent;

(3) Self-Development of People, 32 percent.

c. PENTECOST OFFERING, interpreted and received in relation to Pentecost Sunday in support of ministry with youth and young adults and in response to the needs of children-at-risk. Causes:

(1) Fifty percent will be used for Youth and Young Adult Ministries and divided as follows:

(a) Theology, Worship, and Education, 25 percent (for youth & young adult ministries);

(b) World Mission, 12.5 percent (for national volunteers in shared ministry);

(c) World Mission, 12.5 percent (for international volunteers in shared ministry).

(2) Ten percent will be used for its Children-at-Risk programs through the Child Advocacy Office in the Peace and Justice Ministry.

(3) Retained by Congregations, 40 percent. Congregations are encouraged to use this 40 percent for campus ministry and/or camps and conference centers in their region in addition to Children-at-Risk ministries. Such purposes are in keeping with the goal of keeping youth and young adult ministries at camps and college campus settings supported and vibrant.

d. PEACEMAKING OFFERING, interpreted and received in relation to World Communion Sunday, recognizing the call to bring Christ's peace to all creation. Causes:

Holistic peacemaking programs sensitive to the restoration of God's creation and including peacemaking in individuals, families, congregations, communities, the international arena, and the environment through:

(1) General Assembly Council, [~~Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministry~~] [Presbyterian Peacemaking], 50 percent.

(2) Synods and Presbyteries, 25 percent;

(3) Congregations, 25 percent;

2. Divide the current Criteria for Participation in Special Offerings into two sections, the first section to maintain the title Criteria for Participation in Special Offerings and the second to be called Operating Guidelines for Special Offerings. [See Appendix A.]

3. Because of the untapped hope and promise of special offerings, we recommend that the traditional practice of naming a Special Offerings Review Task Force be refashioned into an Advisory Task Force for Special Offerings that will be commissioned immediately by the General Assembly Council, pending action of the 218th General Assembly (2008), to serve for the next four years, to review the possible role and functions of special offerings. This group will make an annual report to the General Assembly Council, an interim report to the 219th General Assembly (2010), and final recommendations to the 220th General Assembly (2012) that takes place four years after its creation. Its functions will include:

- examining the role of Special Offerings within the larger communication and funds development contexts of the denomination,
- encouraging and expanding the role of the Special Offerings as a connective tissue of the church,
- identifying what Special Offerings can do best and what steps need to be taken in order to enable them to do that well,
- clarifying and simplifying the process for considering programs and causes to be included in Special Offerings and,
- working with Mission Interpretation staff on an ongoing basis in promotion and implementation of the findings of this group.

Ideally the task force should comprise [~~nine~~] [seven] individuals representing a diversity of age, racial/ethnic origin, and geography, with a balance of elders and pastors. It should include at least one General Assembly Council member as well as representation from middle governing bodies and congregations, with a majority of the members being new to special offerings discussions.

4. Mission Interpretation staff charged with managing each special offering should be encouraged to entertain a variety of new modes of strengthening the interpretation of that offering. This involves recognizing and highlighting the offerings' strengths, some of which may be taken for granted while others may be less evident. It should be clear that the special offerings offer a chance to participate in mission that goes well beyond ourselves, and permit us to accomplish things as a larger church that may be beyond the reach of smaller entities. They give us a chance to do something together with other members of the church with whom we may disagree about many other things. They allow us to feel proud of our identity as Presbyterians. They help us learn and teach one another about mission, about stewardship, and about discipleship.

Other examples of ways to strengthen the interpretive resources of the offerings include:

- a. Studying the demographic groups most likely to respond to different aspects of each offering and designing the interpretive materials both to appeal to these groups and to engage them actively in interpreting the offering themselves.
- b. Emphasizing the Five for Five program as a mode of engaging congregations in participation in all four churchwide special offerings as well as basic mission support.
- c. Organizing Special Offerings Days at PC(USA)-related seminaries to give potential pastors training in how special offerings can help them in their call.

[Financial Implications: (2008): $220; (2009): $21,715; (2010): $6,715; (2011): $48,110; (2012): $13,110 (Per Capita-GAC)]

Rationale

Overview

In the summer of 2006, the present task force was named and began its quadrennial review of the Special Offerings. As in previous reviews, this task force considered the organization, timing, content, and appropriations related to each Special Offering. In Recommendation 1, the task force has recommended an organizational plan for these four offerings for the 2010–2013 quadrennium.

In the course of our work we discovered that the often-redacted “Criteria for Special Offerings” had grown into a rather unruly set of criteria, operating procedures, and observations concerning the practices associated with administering Special Offerings. In the interest of clarity, as Recommendation 2, we have rewritten some portion of these materials and reorganized them into “Criteria” and “Operating Guidelines.” As two independent documents, we believe these insights will better assist those who administer and evaluate the Special Offerings.

In the course of our work, we found ourselves confounded by some of the complications related to the Special Offerings. It is not clear how and by what standards new programs can be considered for inclusion in the Special Offerings; nor is it clear how successfully congregational and middle governing levels make use of the opportunity to use a portion of the offering; In the changing structures of the GAC, it is not always clear how best to apportion the funds, in part because there is currently no clear means of reporting. At the same time, we found ourselves newly energized about the place Special Offerings might come to play in the life of the church. As a task force, we gave free rein to this process of discernment, and several of our recommendations grew out of these reflections.

In examining Special Offerings closely, we came to recognize within this form of stewardship several attractive characteristics well suited to our post-modern, post-denominational era. These characteristics include:

1. Special Offerings constitute a form of designated giving from the perspective of the donor and therefore, ought to be an attractive form of giving within today’s patterns of benevolent contributions.
2. Special Offerings are clearly focused on missional goals and programs rather than institutional maintenance issues and structures, and therefore have greater donor appeal.
3. Special Offerings respectively appeal to specific subsets of Presbyterians. These demographic groups can variously be identified, such as youth and young adults with Pentecost, those concerned with aid and development with One Great Hour of Sharing, etc. As such, each offering has a capacity to serve as a rallying point for these respective interest groups within the church.
4. Special Offerings can be a means of the GAC placing a financial development tool in the hands of middle governing bodies to enable joint development of financial resources. Both Peacemaking and the Pentecost offerings leave a portion of the funds with congregations and/or middle governing bodies. This capacity of sharing financial development tools with middle governing bodies should be further encouraged and developed.

Despite these four rather outstanding characteristics, the Special Offerings seem to some degree to be languishing. We came to believe that these offerings could come to fill their bright promise with some updating and re-envisioning. Special Offerings, we believe, are more than stewardship opportunities or tools for financial development. With their contemporary user-friendly characteristics, we think Special Offerings could indeed provide some of the important sinew or connective tissue within the fabric of our church. They might well provide sources of energy, interpretation, opportunities for stewardship activity while engaging Presbyterians in scattered presbyteries and congregations in focused, unifying mission. In short, we believe they have an important role to play in defining what it means to be a Presbyterian in the 21st century.

To enable Special Offerings to come to play such a significant role will require considerable adjustment in how the offerings are organized, interpreted, promoted, and perceived throughout the church. For this reason, while Recommendations 1 and 2 discharge the traditional work of this task force, Recommendations 3 and 4 are offered here in order to enable the special offerings to fulfill the broader role we foresee for them in providing not only a means of stewardship but some of the connective tissue of our church.

The Charge and Process section outlines the process and procedures we utilized in carrying out our review, and the various ways in which we consulted with constituency and staff. Appendix A lists the criteria and guidelines for special offerings referred to in Recommendation 2. Appendix B shows the pattern of giving to special offerings since 2000, while Appendix C looks at the pattern of designation to the Christmas Joy Offering during that time. Appendices D, E, and F are summaries of the research executed for the task force by Research Services.

We have been honored by the opportunity to serve the church through this review. Our own excitement about the way Special Offerings might bear both financial and spiritual fruit leads us to commend this report and recommendations with both gratitude and enthusiasm.

Rationale for Recommendation 1:

1.a.: The task force is concerned that the Christmas Joy Offering is not living up to its potential but affirms its confidence that it can be strengthened. At the same time, given the danger of undermining current support for the offering, the task force has decided to refrain from making any changes without further study and instead commends the offering to the attention of the Advisory Task Force for Special Offerings.

1.b.: No change is seen as necessary at this time.

The task force affirms the strength of the offering and the work of the three programs it supports. All three programs are finding creative ways to meet their challenges. Self-Development of People has been able to spend down its reserves while still living within its funding criteria, the Presbyterian Hunger Program's Joining Hands against Hunger is a creative way of partnering with presbyteries and international partners to help engage them in addressing some of the justice issues that underlie hunger and poverty, and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance has increasingly blazed new trails in ways to communicate with and engage the membership of the denomination.

1.c.: In its ten years of existence, the Pentecost Offering has grown every year, both in total receipts and in numbers of congregations participating.

1.d.: No change is seen as necessary at this time.

Rationale for Recommendation 2:

The current list of criteria was divided into two separate lists because the task force perceived that many of the items currently called "criteria" are better described as operating guidelines or practices. While these guidelines are not considered criteria for receiving special offerings, failure to comply with them may be considered a reason for discontinuing a program's participation in special offering funding.

The word "churchwide" was added wherever special offerings were not so described in order to be clear that the special offerings referred to here are only the four churchwide special offerings. The phrase "overall funds development and communications strategy of the whole church" was added to Criterion 1 to emphasize the need for integration of the special offerings into an overall funds development and communications strategy.

The last two sentences of Operating Guideline 1 were added in order to lodge responsibility for accountability. While previous task force reports had invoked the need for accountability, the lack of specific lodgment of responsibility for it meant that the need was never fulfilled.

The words "within the comprehensive mission funding strategy" were deleted from Guideline 2, as they tended to obscure the central focus of that guideline; as mentioned before, similar language was added to Criterion 1.

The phrase in Guideline 8 concerning reports from congregations and middle governing bodies was added to ensure that responsibility for accountability was extended to all bodies receiving funds from churchwide special offerings.

Guideline 9 was added because the task force believes it is the responsibility of any program benefiting from special offering funding to do all it can to enable the success of the special offerings.

Guideline 10 was added because the task force believes that special offerings, as a nexus for communications, funds development, Christian education, mission interpretation, and stewardship and discipleship training, must bring integrity and creativity to all these aspects of congregational life.

Former Criterion P was deleted, as the task force believes it to be violated to some degree by all programs currently receiving funds from churchwide special offerings.

Rationale for Recommendation 3:

This task force believes that a review of this sort is beyond its own purview or timelines and is urgently needed to undergird the work of its successor in order to give it a wider breadth of possible responses to ensure that special offerings can develop so as best to play the role to which they are best suited to in tomorrow's church.

Rationale for Recommendation 4:

For the special offerings to fulfill their potential and to meet the emerging challenges of a changing church, they need to be constantly looking for creative new ways to connect with givers.

*Charge and Process*1. Charge

In affirming the report of the previous Special Offering Review Task Force, the 216th General Assembly (2004) decided that “On a four-year cycle, the General Assembly will provide for review and evaluation of the causes supported by church-wide special offerings, and will consider new causes in light of established criteria.” This task force was consequently appointed by the General Assembly Council in September of 2006, and charged to bring a report to the General Assembly Council in February 2008.

2. Membership of the Special Offerings Review Task Force

The Reverend Dr. Eileen W. Lindner, chair, Tenafly, New Jersey; Elder Barbara Campbell Davis, Rocky Mount, North Carolina; the Reverend Warner R. Durnell, Huntsville, Alabama; Elder Patricia Massey, Laurinburg, North Carolina; the Reverend Mary Robinson-Mohr, Bellingham, Washington; Elder Conrad M. Rocha, Albuquerque, New Mexico, GAC member, and chair of its Mission Funding Task Force; and the Reverend Allison K. Seed, Independence, Missouri, and GAC chair; Staff support was provided by Alan Krome (Mission Interpretation), Margaret Hall Boone (recorder, Mission Interpretation), Keith Wulff (Research Services) and Jack Marcum (Research Services).

3. Process

In developing recommendations for the special offerings of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for years 2006–2009, the Special Offerings Review Task Force (SORTF) completed the following process:

- Approached the task with intentional time for prayer and Bible study, seeking to discern God’s will.
- Held face-to-face meetings in October 2006 (Louisville), February 2007 (Louisville), April 2007 (Louisville), September 2007 (Seattle), and January 2008 (Louisville), held conference calls in November 2006 and November 2007 and conducted work through electronic means.
- Publicized the work of the SORTF through the Presbyterian News Service and banners and features on the PC(USA) Web site, inviting the input of presbyteries and Presbyterians through an e-mail address.
- Received correspondence from individuals with a wide variety of perspectives on the special offerings in general and on specific offerings, programs, and causes.
- Utilized the Presbyterian Panel to explore attitudes about and interest in special offerings and reviewed results with Research Services staff.
- Utilized the Research Services staff to conduct a survey of 800 Presbyterian congregations during the spring and summer of 2007.
- Conferred with members of the Mission Funding Task Force and the Study Committee on an Independent Entity as they were developing their reports regarding issues of mutual concern
- Corresponded with the planning team for the Mission Challenge 2007 as they planned their communications and funds development strategy to assess potential synergies or conflicts between special offerings and this new kind of funds development initiative.
- Reviewed reports and met with the staff representing programs currently funded by special offerings in February and April 2007.
- Developed and presented the report and recommendations to the General Assembly Council Executive Committee and to the General Assembly Council in February 2008.

Appendix A:*Criteria and Guidelines for Special Offerings*Criteria for Participation in Special Offerings

The special offerings operate within the PC(USA) as a distinct but integrated part of the church’s overall, coordinated funds development and communication strategy. As they provide important sinew for the connectional church, they are too valuable a resource to be squandered on emphases of passing interest to church members. The following criteria attempt to outline ways of discerning whether a particular focus is eligible to be considered for funding by one of these special offerings.

1. Churchwide special offerings will provide valuable mission interpretation opportunities within the overall funds development and communications strategy of the whole church.
2. Churchwide special offerings will enable the church to meet historical and ongoing needs in relationship to the total mission priorities of the church, always proclaiming the name of Jesus.
3. Causes included in a churchwide special offering will have demonstrated potential for churchwide donor support.
4. Causes included in a churchwide special offering will specifically define the needs to be met; plans will be provided for funds' allocation, program implementation, and accountability.
5. Causes grouped within the same churchwide special offering will have a focused, coherent mission purpose.

Operating Guidelines for Special Offerings

In order to fulfill the promise of special offerings, the following principles and practices are necessary to guide the churchwide special offerings of the PC(USA):

1. On a four-year cycle, the General Assembly will provide for review and evaluation of the causes supported by churchwide special offerings, and will consider new causes in light of established criteria. Between reviews, the task force created for this evaluation will continue to review performance, accountability, and accumulation of reserves on an annual basis and will forward its findings to the GAC. Finally, this task force will send its findings and active questions to the successor task force.
2. Churchwide special offering promotions will occur in a central promotions office rather than within programmatic entities.
3. Costs of promoting and receiving each churchwide special offering will be paid from receipts of the offering. After deducting each offering's costs from total receipts, restricted and unrestricted, of that offering, all receipts will then be considered permanently restricted, and will be used only for the purposes for which they were given. Each offering's costs will be determined by the GAC through its regular budgeting process.
4. Start-up costs for new or significantly revised churchwide special offerings will be advanced from existing GAC funds and amortized over the succeeding five years.
5. Promotion materials for a churchwide special offering will relate to the liturgical season in which the offering is received.
6. Any change in the pattern of distribution of a churchwide special offering will require an eighteen-month time period before becoming effective to allow adequate time for development and distribution of promotion materials.
7. There will be no more than four churchwide special offerings in any calendar year. The General Assembly will identify times for the promotion and receipt of offerings.
8. The agencies receiving churchwide special offering funds will prepare an annual report concerning the receipt and distribution of those special offering funds for review by the General Assembly Council. This report, which shall include a compilation of reports from congregations and middle-governing bodies where portions of the offering have remained summarizing their use, will be made available to churches and other governing bodies. All programs receiving funds from churchwide special offerings will work with mission interpretation staff to identify and develop networks of potential interpreters throughout the church.
9. All programs receiving funds from churchwide special offerings will work with mission interpretation staff to identify and develop networks of potential interpreters throughout the church.
10. All churchwide special offerings will develop interpretive materials that are well grounded in Reformed theology and appropriate to the offering's recommended liturgical season.

* This 50% share includes half the undesignated funds remaining after the administrative and promotional expenses have been taken out.

** In 2003, the Christmas Joy Offering received a bequest identified for ministerial relief in the amount of $165,854. The first line includes this amount; the second, in parentheses, includes only the amounts given to the offering by live offering givers.

In most years, the difference that designation made to the amounts received by the different offering beneficiaries was plus or minus one percent or less. That is, the Board of Pensions received approximately one percent more via designation than they would have if the same total offering amount had been split 50/50, while the Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges received about one percent less than they would have.

Comment on Item 08-03—From the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

Due to financial implications (not considered in the report), the Office of the General Assembly advises that the number of members be amended from nine to seven and the meeting schedule be amended as follows:

- 2008: administrative costs and two conference calls
- 2009: one meeting, two conference calls
- 2010: one meeting, two conference calls
- 2011: two meetings, three conference calls, research undertaken
- 2012: two meetings, three conference calls

Item 08-04

On Adding to the General Assembly Council a Representative from the National Council of Presbyterian Men, Inc.—From the Presbytery of Eastern Virginia.

The Presbytery of Eastern Virginia overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to follow the requirements of “Full Participation and Representation” as listed in the Book of Order and approve this overture that guarantees the men of the church full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church by adding to the General Assembly Council a representative from the National Council of Presbyterian Men, Inc., with voice and vote.

Rationale

The Book of Order, under G-4.0403, Full Participation, states “... Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities ... shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church. (G-9.0104a)”

The Book of Order, under G-9.0104a, Participation and Representation, states “Governing bodies of the church shall be responsible for implementing the church’s commitment to inclusiveness and participation as stated in G-4.0403. ...”

There are approximately one million male members of the church without representation on the General Assembly Council.

The reorganization of the General Assembly Council presented, and approved, at the 217th General Assembly (2006), meeting in Birmingham, Alabama, failed to include a representative of Presbyterian Men.

The present General Assembly Council does not include a representative of Presbyterian Men.

This overture is submitted in keeping with the Book of Order requirements for equal representation on all committees. The General Assembly Council does not have a representative for the approximately one million Presbyterian Men. In this regard, The National Council of Presbyterian Men, Inc., feels so strongly that the needs of men in the church be addressed as they cope with persistent life situations, that they are willing to pay the cost for its representative to attend two meetings a year. The Presbyterian Men have assisted and will continue to assist pastors, especially women pastors, who seek assistance in ministering to the needs of the men in their congregations. A representative of the Presbyterian Men on the council would enhance this much needed effort. Over the years the Presbyterian Men’s ministry has been heavily involved in working with both men and women pastors with the goal of bringing men, women, and children to Jesus Christ by getting more men involved in the church as deacons, elders, teachers, mentors, and other activities involved in keeping the more than 11,000 churches open each week for Sunday worship and other activities.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 08-04

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) answer Item 08-04 with the following comment:

Provisions governing the membership and composition of the General Assembly Council were removed from G-13.0202a–c by amendment at the 217th General Assembly (2006) and placed in the General Assembly Council Manual of Operations. At the same assembly, a similar proposal from the Presbytery of Eastern Virginia was defeated, on the grounds that inclusion in the Constitution of a specific requirement for GAC membership would be inconsistent with the proposed removal of such requirements (see Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp.36–37, Item 08-03). If the 218th General Assembly (2008) believes that the intent of this item is appropriate, it may instruct the General Assembly Council for potential inclusion in their Manual of Operations or it may refer this matter to the General Assembly Council for its consideration.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 08-04

Comment on Item 08-04—From the General Assembly Council.

While the General Assembly Council appreciates and is thankful for the ministry of Presbyterian Men, it nevertheless recommends disapproval of Item 08-40, an overture from the Presbytery of Eastern Virginia, which asks that representative from the National Council of Presbyterian Men, Inc., be added to the General Assembly Council, with voice and vote. This change would require a change in the Manual of Operations of the General Assembly Council, a change that would need approval by a vote of the General Assembly (G-13.0203).

The rationale for this action cites the Book of Order requirements for equal representation on all committees and notes that the General Assembly Council does not have a designated representative for male members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The General Assembly Council asks commissioners to note that the makeup of the General Assembly Council is mandated by G-13.0202b: “In the nominating process, the General Assembly Nominating Committee shall consult with the General Assembly Council to identify needed skills and shall provide for diversity and inclusiveness in accordance with G-4.0403. It will maintain a goal of at least twenty percent racial ethnic membership for the General Assembly Council. It will also follow the provisions of G-9.0104, G-9.0105, and G-13.0111 and shall ensure that, exclusive of the Moderator and predecessor Moderator(s), one third of the members are ministers of the Word and Sacrament (both women and men), one third laymen, and one third laywomen.”

Thus there is no need to add a representative of Presbyterian Men in order to guarantee the men of the church full access and representation in the decision-making of the church as they are already present, making up more than half the current council.

Further, Presbyterian Men, like a number of organizations, has a covenant relationship with the General Assembly Council and volunteers with Presbyterian Men work out of office space in the Presbyterian Center.

GACOR COMMENT ON ITEM 08-04

Comment on Item 08-04—From the General Assembly Committee on Representation.

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) reviewed Item 08-04 during its meeting in March 2008. The GACOR advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) to approve the overture.

Rationale

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) desires to recognize the diversity and representation and believes that providing adequate opportunities for women and men as well as diversity of age, race, and disability in accordance with G-4.0403 is both crucial and beneficial to the work of the church.

While we recognize that historically the leadership of our governing bodies have been composed of male members, and that bringing women’s voices to the table is of great importance, we feel it equally important to encourage men to have their voices heard and provide this opportunity when necessary.

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve a name change for the General Assembly Council and the enabling changes to the Book of Order, Organization for Mission, and the GAC Manual of Operations, contingent upon approval by the presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), so that the new name will be “General Assembly Mission Council.”

Rationale

In March of 2007, following a General Assembly Council (GAC) meeting, members of the GAC began a conversation regarding the identity of the General Assembly Council. The key question from that conversation was, “Shouldn’t our name be a better indicator of what we are about?” The conversation was productive and rich.

The email began a time of discernment among General Assembly Council members. Discernment was followed by work on a General Assembly Council communication strategy, and the beginnings of the work of the General Assembly Committee on Review of the General Assembly Council. These activities confirmed a common discernment regarding a potential name change.

In July of 2007, the General Assembly Council Executive Committee voted to request the General Assembly Council to change its name. In September of 2007, the General Assembly Council concurred with this request, and initiated a process to select the appropriate name.

The General Assembly Committee on Review of the General Assembly Council, in its report, strongly encourages the General Assembly Council to change its name to clearly identify the role of the GAC in coordinating the mission work of the General Assembly, using the following rationale:

Names of organizations are important in conveying a clear and unambiguous sense to others of the organization's primary purpose. While the GAC engages in activities that support other church agencies and middle governing bodies, its primary purpose is to coordinate the church's mission programs. With this in mind we felt that the present name does not clearly communicate the primary role of the GAC within the church.

Based on this advice, in February 2008, the General Assembly Council voted to change its name to a clear statement of its role within the church: General Assembly Mission Council.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 08-05

Advice on Item 08-05—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) that if it agrees with the goal of Item 08-05, there is no constitutional impediment. The language is clear and consistent with the stated intent of the proposal.

Item 08-06

Members of the council are elected by the General Assembly and are representatives of synods, presbyteries, and the church at-large. [See Book of Order, G-13.0201, and Organization for Mission, Section I., History of the Structure for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the revised Organization for Mission as attached.

Rationale

The Organization for Mission has been revised to reflect the new General Assembly Council Governance Structure approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006) (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 636ff). Following is an overview of major changes.

- Overall Organization for Mission—Deleted all references to the old GAC division structure.
- I. History of Structure for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A)—Added language to bring the history up-to-date with the new structure approved in 2006.
- II. Statement of Vision and Goals for Mission—Deleted the second paragraph and in its place, added the Mission Statement of the 2009–2012 GAC Mission Work Plan. Also, deleted the specific goals and added a statement, that “Goals give shape and direction to our mission as a denomination.
- V. The General Assembly Council, Narrative section—deleted references to congregational, national, and worldwide in the first paragraph. In the first bullet, changed the words “permeable boundaries between Ministries Divisions and among areas” to “coordination among the Ministries.” In the third bullet, deleted the word “priority” in front of “goals.”

The Book of Order quotation has been changed to reflect the changes approved by the General Assembly and presbyteries.

- V.F. Elected Leadership—Amended section F.1. to delete old structure language and replace with language for the new structure.

Replaced section F.2.Membership, F.3. Term of Service, and F.4. Officers, with a new F.2: “The membership, terms of office, and officers of the General Assembly Council shall be approved by the General Assembly as provided for in the Manual of Operations of the General Assembly Council. (Book of Order, G.13.0202 Membership).”

- V.G. Staff Leadership, 1. Executive Director—several changes here to change the term “Ministries Divisions” to “Ministries.”

- V.G. Staff Leadership, 2. Ministries Division Directors—Changed heading from “Ministries Division Directors” to “Deputy Executive Directors”; deleted most verbiage in this section and replaced it with new language, so that it reads:

“Deputy Executive Directors are hired by the General Assembly Council Executive Director subject to confirmation by the General Assembly Council.

“Responsibilities—The Deputy Executive Directors are responsible for the healthy functioning of their Ministries in the fulfillment of their responsibilities, as well as for the support of the wider organizational health of the General Assembly Council and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

“For detailed staff organization, refer to the GAC Manual of Operations.”

- VI. General Assembly Council and Its Ministries Divisions—This title has been changed to “General Assembly Council Relationships.” Most of section VI. has been deleted as it defined the old structure. The first two paragraphs in the narrative section referring to Ministries Divisions have been deleted.

General Assembly Council relationships to other committees are included here (1) Advocacy and Advisory Committees and (2) Committee on Theological Education.

Old structure descriptions for Mission Support Services, Congregational Ministries Division, National Ministries Division, Worldwide Ministries Division, Sections C. Planning and Budget Responsibilities, D. Personnel Responsibilities of the Ministries Divisions, have been deleted.

- Appendices B–J—These appendices (regarding various agency deliverances and relationships) have been removed and a list of them have been provided with a reference to the GAC website.

ORGANIZATION FOR MISSION

Introduction

The gifts he gave were that some would be apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers, to equip the saints for the work of ministry, for building up the body of Christ, until all of us come to the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to maturity, to the measure of the full stature of Christ. We must no longer be children, tossed to and fro and blown about by every wind of doctrine, by people’s trickery, by their craftiness in deceitful scheming. But speaking the truth in love, we must grow up in every way into him who is the head, into Christ, from whom the whole body, joined and knit together by every ligament with which it is equipped, as each part is working properly, promotes the body’s growth in building itself up in love. (Eph. 4:11–16<sup>1</sup>)

The nature of Presbyterian order is such that it shares power and responsibility. The system of governing bodies, whether they have authority over one or many churches, sustains such mutual relationships within the structures as to express the unity of the church. (Book of Order, G-4.0302)

I. History of the Structure for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The two denominations that came together in 1983 had similar ecclesiastical polity and theological beliefs. They were leaders in the ecumenical movement and in commitment to the unity of the church. Each had been faithful in ministering in Christ’s name. Each had been intentional in revising mission policy and program in response to the leading of the Holy Spirit and a changing world context. Within the previous two decades, each had a major reorganization of General Assembly agencies as it attempted to be more effective in mission.

These two denominations also had developed some differences in their styles, structures, and expectations of the various governing bodies. Though they were engaged in similar mission programs, the agency structures they formed did not easily fit together.

The uniting General Assembly in 1983 directed that consultations be held to discern the church's understanding of mission before preparing a mission design. "Today Into Tomorrow: A Year of Consultations" was the process followed, and it challenged all parts of the church to examine their understanding of what God required of the church. The result of this process was the "Life and Mission Statement," which was adopted by the 197th General Assembly (1985).

The biblical image of the church as the body of Christ was a major theme in the "Life and Mission Statement" and provided the pattern for the church's life and work. This pattern was marked by interdependence and sensitivity to the needs, experiences, and gifts others brought; by honest communication and courage to risk, and by a global vision of both the church and the world. It called for working in partnerships characterized by enduring commitment, equality, humility, openness, sensitivity, flexibility, and love.

A number of basic principles were significant in the drafting of the Structural Design for Mission, which was approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986), and prescribed the organization for mission from 1986–93. These principles are based on the Reformed interpretation of Scripture represented in The Book of Confessions.

The year 1992–93 was devoted to the theme: "Discerning the Spirit, Envisioning Our Future." A convocation on this theme manifested a deep sense of the Spirit's stirring among us, creating an excitement and passion for the future ministry of the church. One theme was the resounding emphasis on the importance of the ministries of congregations as they are resources for mission. Another was the yearning for church wide organizational forms that are flexible and innovative, with the ability to let agreed-upon priorities lead our work and so restore confidence in our connectedness. The convocation contributed to a continuing process of discernment and envisioning that reflected a sense of the future mission direction of the denomination.

A new organizational structure for mission was approved by the 205th General Assembly (1993). Several of the specific elements of the new structure derive from the Report of the General Assembly Committee on Review, which reported to the 204th General Assembly (1992). A simpler design called for fewer ministry units and related bodies, fewer priority goals, and a balanced budget that reflects the mission priorities.

Beginning in the year 2002, the General Assembly Council (GAC) engaged in a Strategic Planning process including a comprehensive self-assessment. The self-assessment used instruments developed by BoardSource, Incorporated and a BoardSource consultant guided GAC in the process completed in January 2003.

The self-assessment revealed the need for GAC to be closer to congregations, presbyteries and synods and to find ways to better communicate with them. The self-assessment also indicated the large size of GAC was a concern and that GAC needed to look at its size and the relationship between GAC-elected and GAC-staff roles and relationships.

As a result of the learnings from the self-assessment, the GAC appointed a 2005–2006 Mission Work Plan Task Force. The 2005–2006 Mission Work Plan was approved by GAC in February 2004 and by the 216th General Assembly (2004). Following the 216th General Assembly (2004), the GAC turned its attention to a specific objective under the 2005–2006 Mission Work Plan's GAC Role/Identify Goal which was: "Evaluate, develop and propose a structure of the GAC (elected and national staff) that will strengthen connectedness with presbyteries and synods." (Refer to 2004 General Assembly Minutes, Item 07-03, General Assembly Council 2005–2006 Mission Work Plan, B.5.c.; p. 479.)

In the summer of 2004 the GAC appointed a Governance Task Force to carry out the objective above involving the structure of GAC. The Governance Task Force submitted a proposal for a new GAC-Elected Structure to the 2006 spring meeting of the GAC. The GAC elected structure was approved by the GAC and subsequently by the 217th General Assembly (2006). Following the 217th General Assembly (2006), the GAC appointed an Implementation Work Group to work with the GAC Executive Director to smoothly and efficiently transition the GAC into the new structure.

The new structure is reflected in the General Assembly Council Manual of Operations and throughout this document.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is committed to working in partnership with other churches in this nation and around the world. Such a mutual ministry is consistent with the denomination's self-image as one part of the body of Christ, as a servant community willing to be poured out on behalf of all people.

The church's mission finds its center in the gospel of Jesus Christ and in witnessing to that gospel. Beneath the variety and complexity of its forms of witness, the church's mission is one—from the congregation to the General Assembly. To share fully in that mission is the task of every Presbyterian and every governing body. As the most inclusive governing body, the General Assembly represents the unity of the synods, presbyteries, sessions, and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Among its other responsibilities, the General Assembly has the power to set policies, objectives, and priorities for mission, to provide the agencies appropriate for that mission, and to superintend their work (Book of Order, G-13.0103).

According to the Book of Order (G-13.0201), the General Assembly Council, as agent of the General Assembly, implements policies established by the General Assembly; coordinates the work of the divisions and other General Assembly agencies in light of General Assembly mission directions, goals, objectives, and priorities; works in partnership with synods and presbyteries; and develops and proposes a comprehensive budget to the General Assembly. Members of the General Assembly Council are elected by the General Assembly and are representative of synods, presbyteries, and the church at large.

The General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, the synods, the presbyteries, and the sessions work together in partnership on behalf of the mission of the church. The Organization for Mission places emphasis on the congregation as an instrument of mission and on the governing bodies working together to provide resources and services to the congregations.

A. The Unity of the Church

The unity of the church, with Christ as the Head of the body, is a fundamental principle that affirms the church is called to demonstrate unity, both within a given denomination as well as ecumenically and internationally. Perhaps the strongest image of this unity is the apostolic vision of the body of Christ, in which the many members, though different, work together for mutual health and upbuilding. Recognition of the unity of the whole church carries with it a series of implications for the internal structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and for the denomination's ecumenical commitment.

Clear communication is needed among the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. These relationships and coordination of program, policy implementation, and support functions give visible expression to unity within the denomination.

While the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to be the church in and of itself, there is an important sense in which this denomination recognizes that it is one part of the church of Christ. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) undertakes its ministry with a full awareness of the global and ecumenical dimensions of Christ's call, and provides a means to share mutual mission, decision making, and resources with partner churches in this nation and around the world.

B. Commitment to Mission

The church, as the body of Christ, exists to share the love of Christ with the world. The Book of Order states the great ends of the church in terms of the call to mission through proclamation, nurture, worship, preservation of truth, promotion of social righteousness, and exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world (Book of Order, G-1.0200). The vitality of the life and mission of the congregation is central to the calling of the church as a whole. As has been noted, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is called to be the church, yet is itself a member of the worldwide body of Christ. Each congregation, too, is called to be the church of Jesus Christ in its own time and place. Furthermore, the responsibilities of the session include: "to lead the congregation in participation in the mission of the whole church in the world, in accordance with G-3.0000" (Book of Order, G-10.0102b).

C. Diversity and Inclusiveness

Within the denomination, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has affirmed the strength of a unity characterized by mutual interdependence in which diversity contributes to wholeness. Various members of this body enrich the whole through the particular qualities they bring

- as racial ethnic people of multicultural constituencies that make visible our rich diversity and offer varied histories and traditions;
- as persons with a variety of physical and mental abilities and disabilities;
- from diverse geographical areas and socio-economic backgrounds;
- as male and female of all ages;
- with a variety of theological perspectives within our Reformed tradition;
- with many differing gifts;
- with a long history and tradition within the Reformed family of churches.

Patterns are established to ensure that elected bodies represent the wealth of diverse gifts found in the church and to provide a means to share power and decision making. Similarly, churchwide personnel procedures promote equal employment opportunity.

D. Tradition and Flexibility

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) professes a Reformed theology that is solidly grounded in Scripture as the rule of faith and practice. The Book of Order affirms: “The Protestant watchwords—grace alone, faith alone, Scripture alone—embody principles of understanding which continue to guide and motivate the people of God in the life of faith” (Book of Order, G-2.0400). The church has also inherited and continues to affirm a Reformed polity that is representative in nature.

Openness to renewal by God entails a flexibility of structure and openness to growth and change. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes the need for growth and is open to it under the power of the Holy Spirit.

The Reformed tradition’s awareness of the fallen nature of humanity and human institutions has led to the development of church government made up of a system of checks and balances. In recent years, these checks have included limited terms and rotation for elected officers, and plans to ensure fair representation of the diverse elements of the church on governing bodies.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shares with all Reformed churches a belief in the priesthood of all believers. For this reason, persons called to leadership positions in the denomination are envisioned by this organizational plan as enabling the whole church to do the work of mission.

E. Partnership

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to develop a system of relationships among governing bodies functioning through collaboration rather than competition. Partnership is characterized by enduring commitment, equality, humility, openness, sensitivity, flexibility, and love. More than an end to be attained, partnership is a process or journey that can be undertaken only under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Consultation is highly valued as part of the process of decision making.

Each governing body is a primary agent in mission and has two foci:

- its appropriate role in assisting congregations and other governing bodies in the mission of the whole church; and
- the performance of its own mission as a governing body in consultation with other governing bodies.

F. Personnel and Compensation

The General Assembly has approved a personnel, equal employment opportunity and affirmative action, and compensation system that is used by the General Assembly Council. This system provides guidance regarding overseas personnel, and for General Assembly level entities, synods, presbyteries, sessions, congregations, and church-related institutions in their employment practices. In order to develop consistency and equity across the whole church, these governing bodies and institutions are urged to approve and implement these policies with such adaptations as may be necessary.

G. Additional Factors

Additional factors to guide the structure and style of mission are:

- the need to affirm the centrality of the mission of congregations, and their need and desire for resources from General Assembly entities, as well as from presbyteries and synods;
- the need to recognize demographic realities that bear on the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);
- the need to be responsive to persons who identify themselves as Presbyterian without actually taking part in a particular congregation’s life and ministry;
- the need for styles that support and enable the momentum of movements rather than styles that create or lead to institutional inertia;
- the need to reverse the trend toward reducing the church’s function and style to that of a regulatory agency, creating instead a more responsive, less bureaucratic reality;

- the need to be more simple yet holistic;
- the need to build hope and trust within the denomination, while maintaining commitments to and safeguards for those historically ignored, excluded, or silenced; and
- the need for an evolutionary design that can be responsive to unfolding changes in the structure and work of the General Assembly, synods and presbyteries.

II. Statement of Vision and Priority Goals for Mission

A statement of vision and goals that articulate the mission emphasis for the next phase of our life are identified.

A. Statement of Vision

At the heart of our vision for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is its congregations, dedicated to Jesus Christ and scattered

- from rural Alabama to Sitka, Alaska;
- from suburban Pittsburgh to South-Central Los Angeles;
- from the bustling city of San Juan, Puerto Rico, to the small towns of the upper peninsula of Michigan;
- from congregations with a handful of members and those where thousands gather.

Called by God and empowered by the Holy Spirit the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian church (U.S.A.) offers the world a viable witness to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. With congregations, governing bodies, and other mission partners, we serve the church in mission.

B. Goals

Goals give shape and direction to our mission as a denomination and are reflected in the GAC Manual of Operations and can be found in the current Mission Work Plan (www.pcusa.org/gac )

C. How Our Vision Unfolds

Embedded in our understanding of what it means to be Presbyterian is the conviction that the church is always being reformed under the judgment of God's reign. Our vision includes congregations and governing bodies so aware of belonging to God in Jesus Christ that each day and each challenge are received as gifts from our Lord, who is the same yesterday and today and forever. In life and in death, we belong to God. Therefore, we look to the future with hope and confidence.

III. Mission of the General Assembly

(Book of Order, G-13.0103)

The General Assembly constitutes the bond of union, community, and mission among all its congregations and governing bodies. It therefore has the responsibility and power

- a. to set priorities for the work of the church in keeping with the church's mission under Christ as described in G-3.0000;
- b. to develop overall objectives for mission and a comprehensive strategy to guide the church at every level of its life;
- c. to provide the essential program functions that are appropriate for overall balance and diversity within the mission of the church;
- d. to establish and administer national and worldwide ministries of witness, service, growth, and development;
- e. to provide a system of administrative services to fulfill its objectives and program;
- f. to provide services for the whole church that can be performed more effectively from a national base;

- g. to establish and maintain an office of the General Assembly;
- h. to establish and superintend the agencies and task forces necessary for its work, including a General Assembly Council, providing for the regular review of the functional relationship between the General Assembly's structure and its mission;

- j. to provide for communication within the church;
- k. to oversee the work of the synods and to facilitate their participation in the mission of the church;
- l. to review the records of the synods and to take care that they observe the Constitution of the church;
- m. to organize new synods and to divide, unite, or otherwise combine synods or portions of synods previously existing;
- n. to approve the organization, division, uniting, or combining of presbyteries or portions of presbyteries by synods;
- o. to serve in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline;
- p. to warn or bear witness against error in doctrine or immorality in practice in or outside the church;
- q. to decide controversies brought before it and to give advice and instruction in cases submitted to it, in conformity with the Constitution;
- r. to provide authoritative interpretation of the Book of Order which shall be binding on the governing bodies of the church when rendered in accord with G-13.0112 or through a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission in a remedial or disciplinary case. The most recent interpretation of a provision of the Book of Order shall be binding;
- s. to establish and maintain those ecumenical relationships that will enlarge the life and mission of the church;
- t. to correspond with other churches;
- u. to receive under its jurisdiction, with the consent of two thirds of the presbyteries, other ecclesiastical bodies whose life is consistent with the faith and order of this church;
- v. to authorize synods to exercise similar power in receiving ecclesiastical bodies suited to become constituents of those governing bodies and lying within their geographic bounds;
- w. to unite with other churches in accordance with the procedures set forth in this Constitution (G-15.0300)

Furthermore, the General Assembly is responsible to review the work of the Office of the General Assembly in consultation with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

IV. General Assembly Officers and Committees and the Office of the General Assembly

A. Moderator of the General Assembly

The Moderator of the General Assembly is an ecclesiastical officer, along with the Stated Clerk, of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The ministry of the Moderator is grounded in the ministry of baptized persons and in the particular ordained ministry of elders and ministers of the Word and Sacrament.

1. The title of the Moderator is "The Moderator of the (number) General Assembly (year) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)."

2. The Moderator of the General Assembly is a commissioner of the General Assembly. When the Moderator presides at the assembly, it is to be a sign of the bond of unity, community, and mission in the life of the church. During the period between assemblies, the Moderator serves as an ambassador of the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, telling the story of the church's life and upholding the people of God through prayer.

When the Moderator travels throughout the church, it is for the purpose of strengthening the mission of congregations and governing bodies, encouraging officers and members, and their work. The Moderator listens for the joys and concerns of the church and ascertains the needs of the world and the gifts of the church's mission program.

When the Moderator serves as an ecumenical representative, s/he expresses the concern of Reformed churches for the visible unity of Christ's body and fuller communion among churches.

When the Moderator visits national and international mission sites, s/he encourages mission personnel, brings the prayerful concern of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to sister churches, and helps to proclaim the gospel of Christ to the world.

When the Moderator addresses the church and the society, s/he speaks pastorally and prophetically from within the standards of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), preserving the rights and responsibilities outlined in G-6.0108.

a. The Moderator shall preside over the General Assembly that elects him or her, and over the meetings of the next General Assembly until a successor is elected. "The Moderator possesses the authority necessary for preserving order and for conducting efficiently the business of the governing body" (Book of Order, G-9.0202).

b. The Moderator of the General Assembly is a voting member of the General Assembly Council and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The Moderator of the General Assembly may attend and participate without vote in the meetings of all other entities of the General Assembly.

c. The Moderator shall be the official representative of the church at gatherings and functions, both civic and ecclesiastical, at which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is invited or expected to be represented, unless otherwise provided by the General Assembly. In the event that the Moderator is unable to attend, the Vice Moderator, or some other person designated by the Moderator in consultation with the Stated Clerk, may represent the church.

d. The Moderator and the Vice Moderator shall submit a written report of their work to the session of the General Assembly at which their successors are installed.

3. Enabling the Moderator and Vice Moderator to Serve

a. It is incumbent upon the church to understand, respect, and remain accountable for the balance of the stewardship of time between the ministry of the Moderator and Vice Moderator and the larger vocation of the ones serving in these roles. That balance includes a commitment to respect the need for Sabbath by the Moderator and Vice Moderator of the General Assembly.

The church should expect the Moderator to ordinarily spend no more than half of her/his work time responding to invitations in attending meetings of General Assembly entities, in participating in other opportunities, and attending to constitutional functions. In assisting the Moderator in these activities, the church should expect the Vice Moderator to ordinarily spend no more than a third of her/his work time.

b. The Moderator, the Vice Moderator, and the Office of the General Assembly shall jointly develop a comprehensive plan for their travel based upon the mission of the church and the needs of agencies, governing bodies, institutions, ecumenical partners, and other constituencies.

Each synod, in consultation with its presbyteries, will be invited to develop a plan for itineration of the Moderator or Vice Moderator. Ordinarily, a single invitation for a visit within a presbytery will be accepted during each term.

c. The Stated Clerk shall request the congregation or employer of the Moderator and Vice Moderator to grant a leave of absence for time appropriate to their commitments to permit the Moderator and Vice Moderator to fulfill the functions of their offices.

No later than three months following the election, the Stated Clerk, in consultation with the Moderator and Vice Moderator and representatives of the congregation or employer they serve, shall conduct an appropriate service of dedication and covenant between these leaders and their faith and/or vocational community, recognizing the unique demands and responsibilities placed upon these officers.

d. To prevent financial sacrifice to these leaders personally, or undue adverse effect upon the work in which they are engaged, the Stated Clerk, in consultation with the Moderator and Vice Moderator, shall propose appropriate financial arrangements to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

e. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall budget for the official travel of the Moderator and Vice Moderator and their spouses, and other expenses incurred in the performance of official duties.

f. An office for the use of the Moderator and Vice Moderator shall be provided within the office suite of the Office of the General Assembly.

4. Vice Moderator

a. The Vice Moderator represents the assembly at the request of the Moderator. When the Vice Moderator serves in this capacity, all those duties incumbent on the Moderator shall be expected of him/her.

b. The Vice Moderator shall serve as a corresponding member without vote on the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council.

c. Should there be a Moderator's Conference, the Vice Moderator participates with the Moderator in planning the Moderator's Conference.

d. The Vice Moderator is expected to itinerate at the request of the Moderator.

e. The Vice Moderator shall consult with the Moderator and the Office of the General Assembly about the special emphasis for the Vice Moderator's itineration.

f. The Moderator may request the Vice Moderator to preside and to assist in the performance of other functions of the Moderator during and following the General Assembly.

5. Regular Reporting: Accountability of the Moderator and Vice Moderator

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC) shall assist the General Assembly in ensuring the accountability of the Moderator and Vice Moderator of the General Assembly by receiving and reviewing, at each of their stated meetings, a written report from the Moderator and Vice Moderator.

B. Stated Clerk of the General Assembly

1. The title of the Stated Clerk is "The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);" and may be used by the incumbent until a successor is elected and takes office.

The Stated Clerk shall give advisory opinions concerning the meaning of the provisions of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and shall give advisory opinions on the meaning of the actions of the General Assembly. When the Stated Clerk deems it necessary, after consulting with appropriate persons or bodies, the Stated Clerk may retain legal counsel and institute or participate in legal proceedings in civil and criminal courts.

c. The Stated Clerk shall publish the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and other materials as may be necessary to help the church understand and be guided by the Constitution. The Stated Clerk shall prepare editorial changes in the Book of Order, which should be reviewed by the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, provided the changes do not alter the substance of the text approved by vote of the presbyteries. The Stated Clerk shall be a member ex officio of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, without vote.

d. On receipt of the certified record and final decision in a case of judicial process from the clerk of the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall report the decision to the General Assembly if it is in session, or to its first session thereafter if it is not. When a decision of the Permanent Judicial Commission contains an order directed to another governing body, the Stated Clerk shall obtain from the governing body a statement of its compliance and make a full report to the next General Assembly.

e. The Stated Clerk shall provide staff services to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and any other committees established to draft, consider, or amend The Book of Confessions or any of the documents it includes.

He or she shall be a member of any other body responsible for coordinating, formulating, or implementing the ecumenical and interfaith policies and programs of the General Assembly.

i. The Stated Clerk is the chief executive officer of the Office of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall have available personnel to assist in performing the assigned functions.

Staff vacancies within the Office of the General Assembly (other than the appointment of Assistant Stated Clerks) may be filled by the appropriate supervisor (with the concurrence of the Stated Clerk).

b. All equal employment opportunity and other uniform policies relating to employment and compensation of the personnel of General Assembly agencies shall apply also to personnel of the Office of the General Assembly and all bodies related thereto. ### C. Committees of the General Assembly

1. Serving on Assembly Entities

a. b. A person may serve as a member-at-large of only one General Assembly entity at a time. Ordinarily, no more than one member-at-large from any one presbytery may serve on the same General Assembly entity at the same time. Members serving by virtue of office, or elected to membership on a second entity to fulfill the requirements of the Organization for Mission or other General Assembly actions, are not affected by this provision.

c. Persons nominated for election by the General Assembly shall ordinarily be eligible to serve a four-year term, and be eligible for election to one additional term. No person may serve more than two terms, full or partial. After serving as a member of a General Assembly entity for two terms, full or partial, a person shall not be eligible for nomination or renomination to a General Assembly entity until two years have elapsed.

d. Consideration shall be given to the full requirements of full participation expressed in Book of Order, G-4.0403, in considering nomination and election to entity service, and also to the nomination of one-third ministers of the Word and Sacrament, one-third laymen, and one-third laywomen (see Book of Order, G-9.0801b).

e. A member of a General Assembly entity who finds it necessary to resign shall send his or her resignation to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, who shall notify the entity and the nominating committee or other body that originated the person's nomination or election. f. When any member of the board of an entity of the General Assembly, a council, commission, unit, division, committee, task force, or any other body authorized by the General Assembly does not attend two successive sessions of that body and such absence is unexcused, the membership of that person shall be automatically vacated, and that person shall be notified by the Stated Clerk. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall be notified of the vacancy by the chairperson of the entity, and the Stated Clerk shall announce the vacancy and shall notify the General Assembly Nominating Committee or other body that originated the nomination or election of the person who has been absent without excuse, in order that the vacancy may be filled in the manner by which the same position had been filled originally.

g. Foundation (the Foundation) is a corporate entity that acts as a "fiduciary" for the General Assembly, providing investment services, holding title on behalf of the church to the investment assets of the church, providing a deferred giving and wills emphasis program, and otherwise assuring that there is strict adherence to the wishes and restrictions of donors and others who have entrusted funds to its care. The Foundation holds title to property in accordance with the 1986 Deliverance. In addition to its work on behalf of the General Assembly, the Foundation offers similar services to churches and church organizations as well as to individuals who wish to use such programs as an expression of their Christian faith and stewardship. The board of the Foundation is elected by the General Assembly through the normal nominating processes. It reports to the General Assembly with a definitive copy to the General Assembly Council, which may comment on the report. The Foundation provides information about its work to the General Assembly Council on a regular basis. The total budget of the Foundation is made available for review by the General Assembly Council. The Foundation reports directly to the General Assembly.

In view of the close relationship between stewardship, mission funding, and deferred giving, there is need for a close continuing relationship between the General Assembly Council and the Foundation. A future appendix will define such a relationship. The joint report of the General Assembly Council and the Foundation, as reported to the 208th General Assembly (1996), provides agreements and understandings regarding restricted funds and is can be seen at www.pcusa.org/gac. The chairperson of the General Assembly Council (or designee) sits with the trustees of the Foundation with voice and without vote, for purposes of coordination. This person also represents the General Assembly Council in regard to churchwide personnel and compensation policies. The board of the Foundation appoints one member to serve on the General Assembly Council as a corresponding member.

At the staff level, the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council is a trustee of the Foundation; the Foundation's president has the privilege of the floor at General Assembly Council meetings, but without vote. In addition, the Foundation's president is included as part of the Expanded Staff Leadership Team through the Office of the Executive Director.

C. Presbyterian Publishing Corporation

The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation is a legally independent, self-supporting corporation dedicated to the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It is responsible for publishing books and educational materials for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and for a broad ecumenical audience around the world. The publishing program strives to extend the mission of the church to the widest possible audience, representing a wide range of religious, social, and cultural points of view.

In view of the dynamic interrelationship between the printed word and the mission of our church, there is need for a close continuing relationship between the General Assembly Council and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. The corporation is governed by its board of directors, one of whom is the corporation's president and publisher, and one of whom is the Executive Director. The remaining directors are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly for four-year terms and shall be eligible for reelection to one additional term. No member may serve more than two terms, full or partial. The board of directors elects officers of the corporation in accordance with its corporate bylaws.

The chairperson (or designee) of the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation is a corresponding member of the General Assembly General Assembly Council with voice and without vote. One member of the General Assembly Council serves as a corresponding member of the board of the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation with voice and without vote. At the staff level, the president and publisher of the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation has the privilege of the floor at the General Assembly Council meetings but without vote, and is included as part of the Expanded Staff Leadership Team through the Office of the Executive Director. The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation reports directly to the General Assembly.

D. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a great commission community. It tells and retells the story of salvation in Jesus Christ to successive generations. It does so in buildings that are shaped to meet the needs of worshipping, witnessing, serving congregations. Generating capital to build and rebuild church buildings is the work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., (the Program) is incorporated in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The Program offers unsecured, interest bearing investments in various states, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia. In general, any individual and any organization related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) may invest. The funds generated by investments become mortgage loans that are used by congregations, governing bodies, and related entities for building church buildings and rebuilding existing facilities.

Close relationships of cooperation exist among the Program, Foundation, and General Assembly Council. Both the Foundation and Council have significant investments commitments with the Program.

The Board of Directors consist of fifteen (15) members. All members are elected by the General Assembly Council, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. The General Assembly Council elects four members from among its membership. The General Assembly Nominating Committee nominates six at-large members, one member from among the synods and one member from among the presbyteries. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation nominates two members and the General Assembly Council National Ministries Division Committee nominates one member. The Program reports to the General Assembly through the General Assembly Council.

[Note: The above section relating to the membership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc Board of Directors will change upon action of the 218th General Assembly (2008) on recommendation from Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc.]

The Chair of the Program's Board of Directors and its President and Chief Executive Officer have privilege of the floor without vote at General Assembly Council meetings. They are corresponding members of the General Assembly. In addition, the President participates in the Expanded Staff Leadership Team plus Synod Executives Forum.

VALUES STATEMENT

The funding of the mission and ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) rests on the following principles:

Faithfulness to Jesus Christ—because God loves the world and Christ gave his life, we are called, as individuals and groups, to respond with our lives and resources.

Flexibility—because we believe that the Holy Spirit informs the missional instincts of all God’s people honoring the promises of the past and preparing the promise of the future, we will accommodate regional differences, historical practices, and changing realities.

Respect—because we seek to have the same mind in us that was in Christ Jesus, who looked not to his own interests but to the interest of others (Phil. 2:4–5), we will acknowledge the passion of donors through accountable systems and transparently open, informed and inclusive decision-making, acknowledging the many views of mission designed and enacted in every part of the church. We recognize the tension that exists between respecting the passions of donors and encouraging support of our connectional nature, but confess that “the earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it” (Ps. 24:1–2).

Communication—because we are servants of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God (1 Cor. 4:1); we will commit ourselves to frequent interaction with governing bodies and individuals, for the purpose of mutual clarification and unity of experience and hope across diverse boundaries.

Therefore, a design for funding Christ’s work throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will be consistent with the following core values:

1. A design for funding Christ’s work will recognize stewardship as integral to Christian discipleship:
  - promoting the biblical concept of tithing,
  - encouraging stewardship education that is understood as the faithful response of discipleship to God’s gifts in all of life,
  - requiring the development of stewardship education materials that are creative, attractive, clear, and affordable.
2. A design for funding Christ’s work will appeal to the passions and values of members, pastors, governing bodies, and benefactors:
  - communicating to the head and heart of the people of God
  - engaging the donor in the mission of the church
  - recognizing that everyone is a beneficiary of God’s grace, and everyone benefits from joyful stewardship.
3. A design for funding Christ’s work will be transparent and accountable:
  - honoring donor intent,
  - offering easily understood opportunities for giving,
  - meeting clear standards of accountability for pastors, sessions, and potential donors.
4. A design for funding Christ’s work will utilize our connectionalism, recognize our interdependence, and demonstrate our partnership in mission:
  - emphasizing the value of interpersonal relationships,
  - encouraging the more inclusive governing body to facilitate the mission of its constituent members,
  - encouraging the less inclusive governing body to participate in the mission of the church beyond its bounds,
  - encouraging mutual investment of time and resources among governing bodies and constituent members recognizing that Presbyterians are the primary base of support for Presbyterian missions, and affirming the importance and priority of funding Presbyterian validated mission.
5. A design for funding Christ’s work will emphasize information sharing between governing bodies leading to a dynamic mission and vision:
  - placing governing bodies in structural and interactive relationships,
  - valuing the wisdom of other governing bodies,

- recognizing the need for consultation prior to engaging in ministries beyond one's bounds.
6. A design for funding Christ's work will encourage two-way communications:
- welcoming and encouraging a flow of information and feedback,
  - recognizing that information sharing benefits the whole church,
  - encouraging face-to-face communication when possible.
7. A design for funding Christ's work will honor historic relationships:
- recognizing that previous funding systems had value and may continue to inform the development of new funding systems,
  - requiring careful investigation of current funding partnerships before altering or eliminating those partnerships.

CHURCHWIDE MISSION SUPPORT

A. Forms of Giving in Churchwide Mission Support

Churchwide Mission Support is the funding system used by all governing bodies to plan and implement the mission of the whole church. Churchwide Mission Support has three overall forms of giving.

1. Basic Mission Support—There are two components of mission support:

a. Funding for General Mission—gifts, with no restrictions, for the overall support of the adopted budgets of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly.

b. Funding for Specific Mission—gifts, with restrictions, for use within the adopted budgets of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly.

2. Churchwide Special Offerings—gifts, with restrictions, for General Assembly planned, organized, and approved offerings for specified purposes that may be included in approved budgets.

3. Other Specific Appeals—gifts, with restrictions, for specific use in support of validated mission that ordinarily are not included in the budget of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly. Such appeals may be ongoing, time-limited, or responsive to emergency needs.

There are additional forms of giving that are distinct from Churchwide Mission Support. These include giving through Presbyterian Women, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Validated Mission Support Groups, and other organizations. Some of these gifts may be applied to adopted budgets. These gifts are and may be increasingly important to support the work of the church.

B. Roles and Responsibilities of Governing Bodies

To encourage openness and accountability in all financial matters, the following roles and responsibilities will be observed.

1. Roles Held in Common by All Governing Bodies

a. Select representatives who will participate in inter-governing body consultations on mission support goals and the division of Mission Support Commitments.

b. Share mission priorities, budget projections, funding needs, and mission support goals.

c. Provide information for, support of, and participation in an annual season of interpretation

d. Consider other governing bodies' mission priorities and funding needs.

- e. Adopt mission support commitments and honor these commitments in budgets for which the governing body is directly responsible.
- f. When changes in mission support commitment are contemplated, promptly communicate with other affected governing bodies.
- g. Thank leaders and donors.
- h. Hold receiving sites accountable to accepted churchwide standards.
- i. Provide full financial reports annually to other governing bodies and congregations on the receipt and expenditure of funds and of a governing bodies' assets, and liabilities.
- j. Collect and transmit mission support from donors, congregations, and organizations within 60 calendar days from the date of receipt.
- k. Provide General Assembly, and as appropriate, synods and constituent presbyteries, a regular accounting of church-by-church giving and any relevant data requested by a governing body, while maintaining the right to privacy by individual donors.

2. Role of the General Assembly

- a. Assist the development of mission support goals at every governing body level.
- b. Adopt a mission budget and a per capita budget.
- c. Annually provide full financial reports and program assessments to sessions, presbyteries, and synods.
- d. Disseminate industry standards in accordance with Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP), and in compliance with applicable accounting pronouncements and regulations specific to the not-for-profit industry as best practices for governing body treasurers and financial officers.
- e. Approve the purposes and beneficiaries of the four churchwide special offerings, upon recommendation of the General Assembly Council.

C. Special Offerings and Other Specific Appeals

1. Churchwide Special Offerings

- a. Churchwide special offerings will provide valuable mission interpretation opportunities.
- b. Churchwide special offerings will enable the church to meet traditional and ongoing needs in relationship to the total mission priorities of the church, always proclaiming the name of Jesus.
- c. Causes included in special offerings will have demonstrated potential for churchwide donor support.
- d. Causes included in a special offering will specifically define the needs to be met; plans will be provided for funds' allocation, program implementation, and accountability.
- e. Causes grouped within the same churchwide special offering will have a focussed mission purpose.
- f. Special offering promotions within the comprehensive mission funding strategy will occur in a central promotion office rather than within programmatic entities.
- g. Costs of promoting and receiving each churchwide special offering will be paid from receipts of the offering. After deducting each offering's costs from total receipts, restricted and unrestricted, of that offering, all receipts will then be considered permanently restricted, and will be used only for the purposes for which they were given. Each offering's costs will be determined by the GAC through its regular budget process.
- h. Start-up costs for new or significantly revised special offerings will be expensed as incurred."
- i. Promotion materials for a special offering will relate to the liturgical season in which the offering is received.
- j. Any change in the pattern of distribution of a special offering will require an eighteen-month time period before becoming effective to allow adequate time for development and distribution of promotion materials.

k. There will be no more than ~~four~~ [five] churchwide special offerings in any given calendar year. The General Assembly will identify times for the promotion and receipt of offerings.

l. On a six-year cycle, the General Assembly Council will provide for review and evaluation of the causes supported by churchwide special offerings and will consider new causes in light of established criteria and current mission priorities. Between reviews, if an offering lacks support, the GAC will provide a process for review.

m. It is important for the continuity of operations that some programs funded by churchwide special offerings maintain operation reserves. However, it is not the purpose of special offerings to develop or augment reserves. Beginning in 2001, each General Assembly will assign one of its committees to review the appropriateness of reserves accumulated from special offerings.

n. The agencies receiving churchwide special offering funds will prepare annual reports on the uses of those funds for the General Assembly.

o. Special offerings will not be used to supplement funding for programs included in ongoing basic mission support.

p. Special offerings will not be used to create funding for a cause when a similar program already exists.

2. Other Specific Appeals

a. Other specific appeals include the Theological Education Fund, special campaigns or gifts (national, regional, or local), Emergency Relief Alerts (national, regional, or local), and additional giving opportunities.

(1) The Theological Education Fund is a unique type of an annual specific appeal to sessions through the 1% Plan as approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986).

(2) Special time-limited campaigns approved by one or more governing bodies are essential for meeting capital needs and achieving other mission purposes. These require governing body approval and may include needs across governing body lines with advance concurrence of other appropriate governing bodies. In the case of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council may approve time-limited campaigns between sessions of the General Assembly.

(3) Emergency Relief Alerts enable persons to respond compassionately to emergency needs, such as natural disasters of large proportion or other crises. The General Assembly Council will authorize a process for issuing national Emergency Relief Alerts, providing timely information indicating how church funds are being used to meet the emergency and how individuals and sessions may contribute additional funds to meet such needs. There may be occasions when sessions, presbyteries, or synods will issue Emergency Relief Alerts in response to more localized emergencies.

(4) Additional giving opportunities provide a way for contributors or donors to support mission not funded by adopted budgets.

(a) A validation process that maintains the integrity of the church's mission will be used to identify such opportunities. Whenever possible, such opportunities will be promoted jointly by governing bodies beyond the session through a program of additional giving opportunities.

(b) Contributors or donors desiring to support validated mission beyond established budgets may do so through additional giving opportunities up to whatever limits have been set by a more inclusive governing body. Concurrence in the purpose of the gift by the receiving governing body or agency is required.

(c) An effective additional giving program depends on significant sharing of information about adopted budgets and additional giving opportunities.

b. All campaigns for other specific appeals shall identify in advance the anticipated administrative costs that may be charged to receipts. A governing body that designates an other specific appeal may apply a charge, not to exceed an agreed upon percentage, against other specific appeals receipts to cover actual costs of promoting, receiving, and disbursing funds. Contributors and donors will be informed of the actual percentage. The General Assembly Council shall determine the cost of communicating national Emergency Relief Alerts and may authorize a charge against receipts with this charge being reported for each specific appeal.

c. Acknowledgment of receipt of gifts to all validated projects or agencies will be made to the contributor or donor by the receiving governing body or validating agency in a timely manner, including concurrence in the purpose of the gift (see further at Appendix A, Churchwide Mission Support, Item G.2.).

d. All recipients of validated mission funds are responsible for reporting all gifts received directly from Presbyterian contributors or donors to the validating governing body.

D. Validation of Mission

1. Validated mission is any project or program within the bounds of and approved by formal action of a session, presbytery, synod, or General Assembly that is consistent with the responsibilities assigned by the Form of Government, whether or not it is funded from the adopted budget of the governing body. Validated mission should cohere with the great ends of the Church (Book of Order, G-1.0200) and is determined in accord with the following provisions of the Book of Order:

- a. G-3.0000 The Church and Its Mission
- b. G-9.0404b The Nature of Presbyterian Polity
- c. G-10.0102 Session Responsibilities
- d. G-11.0304 Presbytery Budget
- e. G-12.0102 Synod Responsibilities
- f. G-13.0103 General Assembly Responsibilities.

2. Each and all governing bodies serve the mission of the whole church and thereby appropriately validate mission. Such validated mission may be commended to others but does not require their concurrence or support.

3. Validated mission may be within or beyond governing body budgets.

a. Validated Within Budget—projects or programs included in the adopted budget of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly, including projects that will be funded with Funding for General Mission and Funding for Specific Mission.

b. Validated Beyond Budget—projects or programs not included in adopted budgets, but validated by action of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly. The validating governing body may specify dollar and/or time limitations.

E. Accounting Definitions and Standards: Designated, Restricted, and Unrestricted Giving

1. For accounting purposes, the following definitions of designators, contributors, and donors are observed.

a. Designations may be made only by governing bodies. A designator has received funds from a contributor or donor and applies such funds to designated categories or items. A designator must be a governing body.

b. Contributors can be donors, governing bodies, or other sources of income. Contributors may make unrestricted or restricted gifts.

c. The term donor applies to persons or entities whose gifts are eligible for a tax deduction. Donors may make restricted gifts consistent with IRS regulations and acceptable to the receiving entity. Restrictions must be agreed to prior to the completion of the gift.

2. For accounting purposes, unrestricted giving and restricted giving are defined as follows:

Restricted giving refers to gifts with restrictions by a contributor or donor for use in support of a particular project, budget category, or appeal. The processing of restricted gifts will comply with the standards established by the Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP) and Internal Revenue Service regulations. Unrestricted giving refers to gifts made without restriction and subject to the use and discretion of the receiving governing body.

a. Unrestricted giving remains foundational in the System of Giving. Through unrestricted giving, individuals and governing bodies share in support of the whole mission and ministry in which the church engages.

b. Restricted giving, such as churchwide special offerings and other specific appeals, is a valuable and important method of adding to unrestricted giving. Contributors wishing to use restricted giving are encouraged first to choose projects or categories within adopted budgets. Special offerings and other specific appeals are always restricted by their stated purpose.

(1) Each governing body must handle funds according to the donor's intention in giving the gift. If the intent cannot be honored, the gift must be returned.

(2) Clarity in this regard may on occasion require conversation and/or negotiation with donors even beyond the governing body where the gift is first received.

c. Restrictions on the use of gifts may come from a donor or a governing body making the gift but always require concurrence by the governing body or validated not-for-profit agency receiving the gift.

(1) A donor must relinquish control of a gift or it does not qualify for tax preference treatment and the receiving organization jeopardizes its tax-exempt status.

(2) When restricted gifts are accepted, they will always be used for the restricted purpose within designations approved by the governing body.

3. The obligations of designators are to:

a. honor restrictions that have been accepted or to consider permitting additional support of a project beyond its approved budget;

b. ensure conformity with all applicable civil law;

c. report back to all donors and contributors;

d. disburse money received within 60 days;

e. contact all donors or contributors if restricted giving cannot be used according to its restrictions—if restrictions cannot be met and the donors or contributors do not agree to the use of funds for other purposes, the gifts are to be returned to the donor.

4. Budgeting and Equalization

a. Funding of approved budgets is accomplished as follows:

(1) First, restricted funds are applied to the appropriate budget items.

(2) Then, unrestricted funds are applied toward fulfillment of all budget items.

(3) This use of unrestricted funds provides for equalization within a governing body's budget. This process supports the orderly planning and budgeting decisions of governing bodies while honoring appropriate restrictions and designations.

b. Sessions are encouraged to follow the division of mission support commitments adopted by their presbyteries. If a session does not follow these division agreements, a presbytery may seek to fulfill agreements through use of unrestricted funds—provided that such a policy is communicated to its sessions. This use of unrestricted funds provides for equalization among governing bodies. Churchwide special offerings and other specific appeals shall not be used to fulfill mission support commitments and are not subject to equalization.

F. Collection, Reporting, and Audits

1. Collection and Transmittal of Funds

a. The General Assembly will maintain financial records in accordance with Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP), and in compliance with all applicable accounting pronouncements and regulations specific to the not-for-profit industry. Software and systems will be appropriate to support compliance with the requirements stated above.

b. The General Assembly will observe the following minimum standards for its operations. It is expected that presbyteries and synods will also adopt and adhere to these same standards:

(1) Provide a detailed receipt to a contributor or congregation for all money received.

(2) Close monthly and remit funds within sixty days of receipt.

(3) Utilize the Federal Reserve system to expedite the transfer of funds whenever and wherever possible.

(4) Use a standardized, detailed transmittal format for transmitting data and funds electronically between presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly.

(5) Establish and follow cash management policies and procedures that are designed to maximize cash management earnings.

2. Reporting

The General Assembly will provide financial information quarterly for receipt of funds from all sources, and this information will be posted to the PC(USA) Web site on the financial page.

a. Each presbytery and synod will be responsible for obtaining with remittances the detailed information required for disbursement.

b. Each presbytery and synod will report all giving on an approved information transmittal form to the General Assembly site no later than sixty days after receipt of funds.

c. The General Assembly will furnish to every presbytery and synod an annual information report on a church-by-church basis. This annual report will provide information for churches within a synod or presbytery bounds on all funds received by it for presbytery, synod, and General Assembly.

d. The General Assembly will furnish, in cooperation with the presbyteries, at least quarterly and not more often than monthly, an information report to every presbytery showing the agreed upon distribution of dollars (including the presbytery's mission support commitments) between the presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly as compared to the actual funds received. Should discrepancies exist, the General Assembly site will work with the reporting site to clarify and to effect the necessary changes and/or corrections.

3. Internal Audit

The General Assembly Council will establish an internal audit function involving a broad variety of audit services. Included among these are:

a. reviewing the reliability and integrity of financial information and how that information is identified, measured, classified, and reported;

b. reviewing the effectiveness and efficiency of particular financial management functions;

c. reviewing established internal control systems for efficiency and compliance;

d. reviewing compliance with internal policies and procedures;

e. reviewing financial statements contained in the annual report with management and the independent auditors to determine that the independent auditors are satisfied with the disclosure and content of the financial statements;

f. reviewing and recommending to the General Assembly Council Audit Committee, the independent auditors to be selected to audit the financial statements of the corporation; and

g. reporting of the Internal Audit Committee directly to the General Assembly Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY BUDGET DEVELOPMENT

A. Mission Budget Cycle

The Mission Budget will be developed in budget cycles. Each budget cycle will consist of two consecutive calendar years, where the first year is the year following a biennial General Assembly meeting (e.g., 2008 General Assembly, 2009/2010 budget cycle). A separate budget will be developed for each year within the cycle.

B. Basic Mission Direction

1. The Mission Work Plan is adopted by the General Assembly Council and provides the framework for the two-year budget cycle.

2. The ministry areas will develop proposals that will advance the Mission Work Plan.

3. The General Assembly Council will recommend a budget to the General Assembly that will provide the funding to fulfill the goals in the Mission Work Plan for the budget cycle.

C. The Proposed Budget

1. At the second General Assembly Council meeting of the year prior to the budget cycle, (e.g., May of 2008 for the 2009/2010 budget cycle), the General Assembly Council will review the budget presented by the Deputy Executive Director for Shared Services and recommend to the General Assembly a proposed budget for the budget cycle that embodies the Mission Work Plan and describing the work to be added or deleted as part of the recommendation. The Executive Committee will recommend a budget if, for any reason, the General Assembly Council does not make a recommendation.

2. At the General Assembly during the year before the budget cycle (e.g., 2008 General Assembly for the 2009/2010 budget cycle), the appropriate assembly committee of the General Assembly will receive the report of the Mission Work Plan and the proposed budget for approval and recommendation to the full assembly.

3. The appropriate assembly committee of the General Assembly will recommend a balanced budget for each year in the budget cycle, incorporating work from the proposed budget and overtures, commissioners' resolutions, and other actions of the General Assembly, for approval as the outline of work for the budget cycle. The General Assembly may make decisions to add or subtract any element to or from proposed budgets. The General Assembly Council will then make appropriate adjustments.

D. The Detailed Budget

1. Detailed Budget Development

a. Following the General Assembly and under the leadership of the Executive Committee, detailed implementation of the Mission Work Plan as approved by the General Assembly will be outlined, and work responsibility assigned.

b. Under the management of Shared Services and with specific involvement by the Ministry Areas, a detailed budget proposal that encompasses the work approved by the General Assembly will be developed for each year in the budget cycle.

2. Approval of the Detailed Budget

At its third meeting of the year prior to each budget cycle (e.g., September 2008 for the 2009/2010 budget cycle), the General Assembly Council will review both the detailed budget for the following year and the most up-to-date financial information. The General Assembly Council will review the adequacy of the Executive Committee's response to the General Assembly directives in the adopted budget and, after any necessary changes, approve the detailed budget for the following year with particular expenditures by organizational entity displaying both budget of-fices and relatedness to the basic Mission Work Plan.

E. Budget Monitoring

1. The General Assembly Council will monitor the accomplishment of the Mission Work Plan and the appropriate expenditure of funds throughout the budget cycle.

2. The General Assembly Council will report to each biennial General Assembly on the results of the work undertaken during the previous two budget years (e.g., 2008 General Assembly for budget years 2006 and 2007), including full disclosure of the financial results of each year and other information related to the financial condition of the church. These two budget years will not be within the same budget cycle.

F. Roles and Responsibilities in Developing Budgets

1. The General Assembly does the following:

- a. Determines churchwide mission goals upon which budget development will be based.
- b. Has the authority to institute and terminate programmatic emphases and activity.
- c. Upon recommendation from the General Assembly Council, approves both the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and the Per Capita Budget.

2. The General Assembly Council does the following:

- a. Implements General Assembly decisions regarding (1) Mission Work Plan goals and objectives and (2) programmatic activity.
- b. Recommends a Mission Work Plan for each budget year to the General Assembly, after appropriate consultation.
- c. Presents the budget to the General Assembly.
- d. Approves detailed budgets based upon General Assembly action.
- e. Oversees programmatic activity funded through the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and General Assembly Council related work from the Per Capita Budget.

3. The Deputy Executive Director for Shared Services is responsible for the following:

- a. Manages the process for budget development.
- b. Prepares budget presentations for both the General Assembly Council and the General Assembly.

4. The Deputy Executive Director for Mission is responsible for the following:

- a. Prepare descriptions of programmatic activities in appropriate form for budget consideration, reflecting the adopted Mission Work Plan goals.
- b. Develop detailed budgets based on budget allocations made by the General Assembly and as instructed by the General Assembly Council.

G. Per Capita Budget

The General Assembly Council and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) jointly have responsibility for developing a per capita budget and apportionment for recommendation to the General Assembly. The per capita budget will be prepared using timelines similar to those for the General Assembly mission budget.

SHARED SERVICES

Shared Services is accountable to the Executive Director and carries out the following responsibilities.

A. To provide accounting and reporting services for

1. the General Assembly Council, its Ministry Areas, and certain related bodies and committees;
2. the Office of the General Assembly;

3. other entities as requested on a fee-for-service basis; and
4. synod, presbytery, and session finance officers, as appropriate.

B. To perform and establish policies and procedures for the following functions of

1. controller/financial accounting controls, general ledger maintenance, general accounting, financial reporting, accounts payable, accounts receivable, church and student loans, payroll, budgeting, fixed asset management, overseas accounting, inventory control, and project accounting;
2. treasury/central receiving service, bank relations and services, overseas treasury service (as appropriate), foreign exchange, short-term investments, working capital/cash management, and endowment and revenue accounting;
3. financial planning, capital planning and economic forecasting, and financial modeling;
4. property maintenance and management including acquisitions, gifts, leases, and dispositions, purchasing and print services, and mail services;
5. establishing standards for receiving sites throughout the church in consultation with other parts of the church;
6. distribution management services, including order processing, customer services, warehousing, and shipping.

C. To ensure that no payment of any expenditure is made in excess of the total budget approved by the General Assembly Council. Ultimately, it is the responsibility of each Deputy Executive Director to ensure that expenditures for their respective areas are within the approved budget before commitments are made.

D. To maintain all financial records and prepare monthly reports to the General Assembly Council and the General Assembly Council Executive Staff Leadership.

E. To prepare and present the annual report of the Statement of Financial Position, Statement of Activities and Changes in Net Assets, and Statement of Cash Flows of the General Assembly that will be audited by a certified public accountant and presented to the General Assembly.

Rationale

As noted previously, Appendix A (of the Organization for Mission) is a document that outlines a collection and distribution process for mission funding. What we have learned is that though the process outlined and envisioned in that document was a good one, it was never successfully implemented. This was in part due to the length of the document, and an unintentional failure to make its contents known and enforceable. In any event, it is apparent that there remains a need for such a document that is more enforceable, shorter and clearer.

Further, we note that noncompliance with some portions of Appendix A risks the federal tax-exempt status of the PC(USA), therefore it is important that the document state accurately the mission funding and accounting policies of the church.

Item 08-10

On Reinstating the Office of Environmental Justice as an Integral Part of the Mission of the Church—From the Presbytery of Heartland.

The Presbytery of Heartland overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council to reinstate the Office of Environmental Justice in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a vital and integral part of the ministry and mission of the church to help protect and save God's creation.

Rationale

Reaffirmation of the statements of the 183rd, 187th, 192nd, 193rd, 195th, 196th, 199th, 201st, 202nd, 204th, 205th, 206th, 208th, 210th, 211th, 213th, 215th, and 216th General Assemblies (1971, 1975, 1980, 1981, 1983, 1984, 1987, 1989, 1990, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1996, 1998, 1999, 2001, 2003, 2006) will reflect the determination of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that protection of the environment is an essential part of the Christian faith.

The Office of Environmental Justice has served as a vital link between the General Assembly office and the local church, providing essential leadership and resources. The office/staff have served to interpret environmental issues, stewardship of creation issues, and to help put into action the other resolutions the church has already put into place. The office was removed at a time critical to sustaining the planet and life on earth as we know it.

Scripture proclaims, "... 'You are the Lord, you alone; you have made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host, the earth and all that is on it, the seas and all that is in them. To all of them you give life, and the host of heaven worships you'" (Neh. 9:6, NRSV). Ours is a God concerned not only with humanity but all of creation, a God whose spirit is the breath of all life and whose glory is manifest in the creation we share.

The Book of Order (W-7.5001a) states that "God calls the Church in the power of the Holy Spirit to participate in God's work of creation and preservation." In (W-7.5003), it reminds us that we are "... stewards of God's creation who hold the earth in trust..."

Justice, peace, and the environment are interrelated. Whenever we humans abuse the environment, whenever we engage in non-sustainable consumption of our earth's finite resources, we are not only endangering the future of life on our planet, but we are committing acts of violence and injustice against other life—both present and future. Protecting and restoring creation is central to our own survival.

Caring for the environment is another way to care for people. We care about people who are hungry and impoverished as well as people who are the victims of pollution and resource depletion; we care about people who share the planet with us today as well as future generations. When we think of loving and caring for our neighbor as Jesus taught us, let us realize that we all live upwind and upstream from someone else—both in time and space. Ecosystems and people systems are intricately interwoven and interconnected, forming the tapestry of life.

We in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have a rich tradition of justice and reverence for life. Included in our mission is responsible and faithful stewardship of God's earth. We have been commanded to tend the garden.

Historical References

In 1954, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America stated:

We call upon the Christian conscience to recognize that our stewardship of the earth and water involves both a land-use program that recognizes the interdependence of soil, water and man and the development of a responsible public policy which will resist the exploitation of land, water, and other natural resources, including forests, for selfish purposes and maintain intelligent conservation for the sustenance of all living creatures through future generations (Minutes, PCUSA, 1954, p. 198).

This stewardship commitment has been repeated and reaffirmed by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessors, as follows:

1967     The Confession of 1967 stresses the justice of sharing resources and the interdependence of resources and living creatures.

1971     The 183rd General Assembly (1971) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America accepts the Christian Responsibility for Environmental Renewal statement that calls for a new order of values based on an "eco-ethic" and a Statement on Environmental Renewal (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1971, Part I, pp. 578–83).

1975     A recommendation is made to the 187th General Assembly to affirm advocacy of the protection of wildlife areas and parklands (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1975, Part I, p. 59).

1980     The 192nd General Assembly votes to (1) develop educational resources on the adverse impact that careless technology has on the environment and health of the unborn; (2) instruct the Board of Investment Committee to review corporate responsibility regarding manufacture of dioxins (Minutes, PCUS, 1980, Part I, p. 56).

1981 The 193rd General Assembly (1981) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA) pledges support of the United Nations Drinking Water and Sanitation Decade, 1981–1990, calling upon Presbyterians to develop lifestyles that are consistent with the necessity to conserve water (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1981, Part I, p. 254).

1983 The 195th General Assembly (1983) urges the session of each congregation in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to consider making a “commitment to peacemaking” that included making peace with the earth—involve the congregation in efforts to protect and restore the environment (Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp. 438–39).

1984 The 196th General Assembly (1984) calls upon Congress of the United States to reduce the emissions of sulphur dioxide and the oxides of nitrogen to a level that will protect the most sensitive environment and states that human stewardship is not a dominion of mastery and calls us to exercise respect for the integrity of natural systems and for the limits that nature places on economic growth and material consumption (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 348–49).

1987 The 199th General Assembly (1987) votes to urge the United States government to assure acceptable disposal sites for high-level nuclear waste (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 865–66). It also votes to urge each presbytery and local church to encourage and support alternatives to pesticides and support the victims of pesticide poisoning (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 796).

1988 The Environmental Justice Office is created to study past environmental policies of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the Presbyterian Church in the United States to create a combined report of environmental concerns for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Environmental Justice Office is a ministry of the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), lodged in the National Ministries Division, Social Justice Program Area, and is now actively involved in creation care and environmental justice issues (Minutes, 1988, Part I, pp. 671–72).

1989 The 201st General Assembly (1989) calls for governments to strengthen regulations and enforcement regarding transportation of oil and hazardous substances, in response to the Exxon-Valdez tanker spill in 1989 (Minutes, 1989, Part I, p. 642).

1990 The 202nd General Assembly (1990) passes “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” affirming “creation cries out in this time of ecological crises,” calling the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to respond to this cry and “engage in an effort to make the 1990s the ‘turnaround decade,’” providing the foundation for the work of the Environmental Justice Office. Also, the 202nd General Assembly (1990) calls attention to the problem of global warming and encourages the United States government to take steps toward incorporating environmental damage and depletion into “full-cost pricing” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 646–70).

The Affirmation of Faith from that General Assembly notes that “Restoring Creation is God’s own work in our time,” and that “The love of neighbor, particularly ‘the least’ of Christ’s brothers and sisters, requires action to stop the poisoning, the erosion, the wastefulness that are causing suffering and death. ... The future of our children and their children and all who come after is at stake. ... In this critical time of transition to a new era, God’s new doing may be discerned as a call to earth-keeping, to justice, and to community” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 647).

1992 The 204th General Assembly (1992) directs all future General Assemblies to “print all official reports on recycled and recyclable paper ... and ... direct all related bodies ... to use recycled and recyclable paper [for] all reports and publications ....” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 846).

1993 The 205th General Assembly (1993) reaffirms the “Call to Restore the Creation,” receives the document “World Scientists’ Warning to Humanity” as a prophetic word to the church, urges President Clinton to follow new policies from the Earth Summit, and directs the Social Justice and Peacemaking Unit to advocate for policies that will reduce carbon dioxide emissions (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp. 896–97).

1994 The 206th General Assembly (1994), within the context of its “Resolution on the United States and Its Asia-Pacific Relations,” listed five basic principles by which past General Assemblies have been guided related to international affairs. One of the principles, and the resolution that follow it, relates specifically to the environment. The General Assembly “has advocated new understanding of the relationship [among] human life, institutions,” and the total stewardship and care for the planet, which is the common heritage of all peoples (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 310).

1996 The 208th General Assembly adopts the paper “Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development” as policy for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Just and sustainable human development is the comprehensive enhancement of the quality of life for all, present and future; it necessarily involves the integration of economic, social, political, cultural, ecological, and spiritual dimensions of being (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 524ff).

1998 The 210th General Assembly (1998) calls upon the United States to ratify the protocol negotiated in Kyoto and urges Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations and institutions to pursue energy efficiency and conservation in their buildings and property.

1999 The 211th General Assembly (1999) again calls upon the U.S. to ratify the Kyoto Protocol; urges the United States to go beyond Kyoto targets for carbon dioxide emission reductions; directs the Presbyterian Center in Louisville and all other properties of the General Assembly to minimize fossil fuel energy (along with urging local congregations to do the same); and directs the General Assembly to promote education regarding global warming and other environmental concerns (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 669–70).

2001 The 213th General Assembly (2001) calls to issue and disseminate the “Call to Halt Mass Extinction.” The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) calls Presbyterians, other citizens, governments, and societal institutions to face the severity of this threat and to take steps to prevent mass extinction and preserve the biodiversity essential to the flourishing of life (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 473–75).

2003 The 215th General Assembly (2003) calls on the United States government to join the world effort to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and to develop and enact a national emergency response, underwritten by law, with adequate financial support, and economic enforcement mechanism, to be fully functioning by 2005, with targeted reductions by that time (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 617).

2006 The 217th General Assembly (2006) asked that the church ask its members to make a bold witness by aspiring to carbon neutral lives (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 896–97). It was noted that “without significant changes in public policy and corporate behavior to complement actions of personal discipleship, massive and irreversible climate changes will only accelerate over the next century” (PC(USA) Memorandum; Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, December 4, 2006)

This overture was drafted by Earthkeepers, a mission unit of MOSJ and Heartland Presbytery’s chapter of the national group, Presbyterians for Restoring Creation.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 08-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 08-10, from the Presbytery of Heartland, overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to reaffirm environmental policies and reinstate the Office of Environmental Justice as an integral part of the mission of the church.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of Item 08-10, as amended below, and advises that this action answer Item 08-11 as well: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

[1. Commend the statements of the 183rd, 187th, 192nd, 193rd, 195th, 196th, 199th, 201st, 202nd, 204th, 205th, 206th, 208th, 210th, 211th, 213th, 215th, and 217th General Assemblies (1971, 1975, 1980, 1981, 1983, 1984, 1987, 1989, 1990, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1996, 1998, 1999, 2001, 2003, 2006) reflecting the determination of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that protection of the environment is an essential part of the Christian faith, and providing guidance to environmental education and advocacy efforts of all councils and offices of the church.]

“[2.] Direct the [~~Executive Director of the~~] General Assembly Council to reinstate [~~the~~] [an] Office of Environmental Justice in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a vital and integral part of the ministry and mission of the church to help protect and save God’s creation.”

Rationale

The reestablishment of a clearly identified Environmental Justice Office could provide central coordination and support, as well as a point of contact, for many care of creation and environmental ministries at all levels of the church, including resource sharing, education, public witness, advocacy, and fundraising. Commissioners may wish to lift up particular functions as denominational offices can have a range of emphases. The General Assembly Council's comment on the programs involved is properly comprehensive and signals about the availability of resources for the office are very hopeful. This office could play a key role in implementing both environmental and energy policies, such as "The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming," being considered this year by the 218th General Assembly (2008). While necessarily requiring valuable funds, guidance on energy retrofitting and new technologies from such an office could also be a source of great cost savings by the church. Acknowledging that program funds are limited, ecumenical experience also shows that environmental programs can attract joint funding from within and beyond the church.

Item 08-10 asks that previous General Assembly policy (which both overtures list carefully but not exhaustively) be reaffirmed. This is significant for it indicates that the church has been at the forefront of environmental witness and education and has been correct in its estimation of the danger of global warming for at least fifteen years. The office has also been influential in developing respected, voluntary corporate codes of conduct as well as developing support for environmental protection legislation. It could be noted as well that Presbyterians such as Holmes Rolston III, William Gibson, and Dieter Hessel have been leaders in environmental theology, as reflected in the inclusion of environmental concerns in "A Brief Statement of Faith" (1990, The Book of Confessions).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 08-10 asks the 218th General Assembly (2008) to reinstate the Office of Environmental Justice in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a vital, integral part of the ministry and mission of the church.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 08-10 be approved.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns would like for the assembly to be aware of the following policy statement: The Hazardous Waste, Race, and the Environment. This mandate was approved by the 207th General Assembly (1995).

Rationale

The ACREC believes environmental racism must be part of the duties of the Office of Environmental Justice.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-10

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-10—From the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC).

Item 08-10 asks for reaffirmation of the past statements on protection of the environment and for the reinstatement of the Office of Environmental Justice as a vital part of our church's ministry.

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) advises that Item 08-10 be disapproved.

Rationale

The ACWC supports and encourages the reaffirmation of all past statements on protection of the environment. We support the reinstatement of the office when resources are available (Item 08-11) and it does not negatively impact existing justice ministries.

At this time, we do not support Item 08-10, which asks for the reinstatement of the Office of Environmental Justice without regard to cost. Because of limited resources, we would suggest the linking with the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. (NCCC-USA), which has a team of twelve persons working on environmental justice resources, which may be approved for our use in the PC(USA). The General Assembly Council (GAC) mission work plan for 2009 and 2010 will have resources persons to track this and distribute this material to our churches and middle governing bodies.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 08-10

Comment on Item 08-10—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council (GAC) agrees with the concerns addressed in Item 08-10 and Item 08-11, and reaffirms the intention of the 202nd General Assembly (1990) policy statement “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” that called for a dual focused strategy that would embody the church’s commitment to caring for God’s creation. This strategy recommended that the GAC develop new creative ministry initiatives for healing the environment and called upon the GAC to incorporate caring for God’s creation into existing GAC ministries.

Recognizing that God’s good creation is suffering from the impact of environmental degradation, climate change, and significant loss of biodiversity, the General Assembly Council has determined that the 2009 and 2010 Mission Work Plan and budget includes significant emphasis, support, and staffing for caring for God’s creation as a vital part of the mission of the church.

This revitalized ministry will focus on equipping the whole church to care for creation and will serve as an entry point for church members, congregations, and middle governing bodies seeking advice, resources, and networking to nurture their faith and witness on behalf of God’s creation. It will work with a reenergized network of stewardship of creation enablers to foster networking, communication of effective ideas for congregational practices, and leadership development.

In addition, it will coordinate environmental ministries already underway in the General Assembly Council, including but not limited to environmental work being done by the Hunger Program; Presbyterian World Mission area coordinators; Racial Justice ministries; Presbyterian Women; Peacemaking; Presbyterian United Nations Office; Washington Office; Self-Development of People; Office of Theology, Worship, and Education; and Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI).

A staff project team will develop and implement a focused strategy to infuse environmental stewardship into “theological work, evangelism, education, justice and peacemaking, worship and liturgy, public witness, global mission and congregational service and action at the local community level” (1990 policy).

The General Assembly Council advises that the General Assembly prayerfully support this commitment to environmental stewardship and encourages the whole church to engage in ministry that heals and restores God’s creation.

On Reinstating an Office for Environmental Justice as a Priority as Resources Allow—From the Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky.

The Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to request the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council to reinstate an office for environmental justice in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a priority as soon as resources may allow.

Rationale

Reaffirmation of the statements of the 183rd, 187th, 192nd, 193rd, 195th, 196th, 199th, 201st, 202nd, 204th, 205th, 206th, 208th, 210th, 211th, 213th, 215, and 216th General Assemblies (1971, 1975, 1980, 1981, 1983, 1984, 1987, 1989, 1990, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1996, 1998, 1999, 2001, 2003, 2006) will reflect the determination of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that protection of the environment is an essential part of the Christian Faith.

In 1954, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America stated:

We call upon the Christian conscience to recognize that our stewardship of the earth and water involves both a land-use program that recognizes the interdependence of soil, water and man and the development of a responsible public policy which will resist the exploitation of land, water, and other natural resources, including forests, for selfish purposes and maintain intelligent conservation for the sustenance of all living creatures through future generations (Minutes, PCUSA, 1954, p. 198).

This stewardship commitment has been repeated and reaffirmed by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessors, as follows:

1967 The Confession of 1967 stresses the justice of sharing resources and the interdependence of resources and living creatures.

1971 The 183rd General Assembly (1971) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America accepts the Christian Responsibility for Environmental Renewal statement that calls for a new order of values based on an “eco-ethic” and a Statement on Environmental Renewal (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1971, Part I, pp. 578–83).

1975 A recommendation is made to the 187th General Assembly to affirm advocacy of the protection of wildlife areas and parklands (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1975, Part I, p. 59).

1980 The 192nd General Assembly votes to (1) develop educational resources on the adverse impact that careless technology has on the environment and health of the unborn; (2) instruct the Board of Investment Committee to review corporate responsibility regarding manufacture of dioxins (Minutes, PCUS, 1980, Part I, p. 56).

1981 The 193rd General Assembly (1981) of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (UPCUSA) pledges support of the United Nations Drinking Water and Sanitation Decade, 1981–1990, calling upon Presbyterians to develop lifestyles that are consistent with the necessity to conserve water (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1981, Part I, p. 254).

1983 The 195th General Assembly (1983) urges the session of each congregation in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to consider making a “commitment to peacemaking” that included making peace with the earth—involve the congregation in efforts to protect and restore the environment (Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp. 438–39).

1984 The 196th General Assembly (1984) calls upon Congress of the United States to reduce the emissions of sulphur dioxide and the oxides of nitrogen to a level that will protect the most sensitive environment and states that human stewardship is not a dominion of mastery and calls us to exercise respect for the integrity of natural systems and for the limits that nature places on economic growth and material consumption (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 348–49).

1987 The 199th General Assembly (1987) votes to urge the United States government to assure acceptable disposal sites for high-level nuclear waste (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 865–66). It also votes to urge each presbytery and local church to encourage and support alternatives to pesticides and support the victims of pesticide poisoning (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 796).

1988 The Environmental Justice Office is created to study past environmental policies of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. and the Presbyterian Church in the United States to create a combined report of environmental concerns for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Environmental Justice Office is a ministry of the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), lodged in the National Ministries Division, Social Justice Program Area, and is now actively involved in creation care and environmental justice issues (Minutes, 1988, Part I, pp. 671–72).

1989 The 201st General Assembly (1989) calls for governments to strengthen regulations and enforcement regarding transportation of oil and hazardous substances, in response to the Exxon-Valdez tanker spill in 1989 (Minutes, 1989, Part I, p. 642).

1990 The 202nd General Assembly (1990) passes “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” affirming “creation cries out in this time of ecological crises,” calling the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to respond to this cry and “engage in an effort to make the 1990s the ‘turnaround decade,’” providing the foundation for the work of the Environmental Justice Office. Also, the 202nd General Assembly (1990) calls attention to the problem of global warming and encourages the United States government to take steps toward incorporating environmental damage and depletion into “full-cost pricing” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 646–70).

The Affirmation of Faith from that General Assembly notes that “Restoring Creation is God’s own work in our time,” and that “The love of neighbor, particularly ‘the least’ of Christ’s brothers and sisters, requires action to stop the poisoning, the erosion, the wastefulness that are causing suffering and death. . . . The future of our children and their children and all who come after is at stake. . . . In this critical time of transition to a new era, God’s new doing may be discerned as a call to earth-keeping, to justice, and to community” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 647).

1992 The 204th General Assembly (1992) directs all future General Assemblies to “print all official reports on recycled and recyclable paper . . . and . . . direct all related bodies . . . to use recycled and recyclable paper [for] all reports and publications . . .” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 846).

1993 The 205th General Assembly (1993) reaffirms the “Call to Restore the Creation,” receives the document “World Scientists’ Warning to Humanity” as a prophetic word to the church, urges President Clinton to follow new policies from the Earth Summit, and directs the Social Justice and Peacemaking Unit to advocate for policies that will reduce carbon dioxide emissions (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp. 896–97).

1994 The 206th General Assembly (1994), within the context of its “Resolution on the United States and Its Asia-Pacific Relations,” listed five basic principles by which past General Assemblies have been guided related to international affairs. One of the principles, and the resolution that follow it, relates specifically to the environment. The General Assembly “has advocated new understanding of the relationship [among] human life, institutions,” and the total stewardship and care for the planet, which is the common heritage of all peoples (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 310).

1996 The 208th General Assembly adopts the paper “Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development” as policy for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Just and sustainable human development is the comprehensive enhancement of the quality of life for all, present and future; it necessarily involves the integration of economic, social, political, cultural, ecological, and spiritual dimensions of being (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 524ff).

1998 The 210th General Assembly (1998) calls upon the United States to ratify the protocol negotiated in Kyoto and urges Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations and institutions to pursue energy efficiency and conservation in their buildings and property.

1999 The 211th General Assembly (1999) again calls upon the U.S. to ratify the Kyoto Protocol; urges the United States to go beyond Kyoto targets for carbon dioxide emission reductions; directs the Presbyterian Center in Louisville and all other properties of the General Assembly to minimize fossil fuel energy (along with urging local congregations to do the same); and directs the General Assembly to promote education regarding global warming and other environmental concerns (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 669–70).

2001 The 213th General Assembly (2001) calls to issue and disseminate the “Call to Halt Mass Extinction.” The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) calls Presbyterians, other citizens, governments, and societal institutions to face the severity of this threat and to take steps to prevent mass extinction and preserve the biodiversity essential to the flourishing of life (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 473–75).

2003 The 215th General Assembly (2003) calls on the United States government to join the world effort to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and to develop and enact a national emergency response, underwritten by law, with adequate financial support, and economic enforcement mechanism, to be fully functioning by 2005, with targeted reductions by that time (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 617).

2006 The 217th General Assembly (2006) asked that the church ask its members to make a bold witness by aspiring to carbon neutral lives (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 896–97). It was noted that “without significant changes in public policy and corporate behavior to complement actions of personal discipleship, massive and irreversible climate changes will only accelerate over the next century” (PC(USA) Memorandum; Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, December 4, 2006)

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 08-11 be answered by the action taken on Item 08-10.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 08-11 asks for the reinstatement of the Office of Environmental Justice as resources allow.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that Item 08-11 be approved.

Rationale

The ACWC supports and encourages the reaffirmation of all past statements on protection of the environment and support the reinstatement of the office when resources are available. Those who have the least power and resources are always the ones most affected by environmental destruction. Typically women and children are those who suffer the most and have the least resources to move or change their environment. The ACWC counsels increased attention to dimensions of race, class, and gender in all environmental and climate study and policy development. Too often, our zeal to do ecological justice ignores effects on people without resources and power. Justice work requires balancing both human and environmental concerns.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 08-11

Comment on Item 08-11—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council (GAC) agrees with the concerns addressed in Item 08-10 and Item 08-11, and reaffirms the intention of the 202nd General Assembly (1990) policy statement “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” that called for a dual focused strategy that would embody the church’s commitment to caring for God’s creation. This strategy recommended that the GAC develop new creative ministry initiatives for healing the environment and called upon the GAC to incorporate caring for God’s creation into existing GAC ministries.

Recognizing that God’s good creation is suffering from the impact of environmental degradation, climate change, and significant loss of biodiversity, the General Assembly Council has determined that the 2009 and 2010 Mission Work Plan and budget includes significant emphasis, support, and staffing for caring for God’s creation as a vital part of the mission of the church.

This revitalized ministry will focus on equipping the whole church to care for creation and will serve as an entry point for church members, congregations, and middle governing bodies seeking advice, resources, and networking to nurture their faith and witness on behalf of God’s creation. It will work with a reenergized network of stewardship of creation enablers to foster networking, communication of effective ideas for congregational practices, and leadership development.

In addition, it will coordinate environmental ministries already underway in the General Assembly Council, including but not limited to environmental work being done by the Hunger Program; Presbyterian World Mission area coordinators; Racial Justice ministries; Presbyterian Women; Peacemaking; Presbyterian United Nations Office; Washington Office; Self-Development of People; Office of Theology, Worship, and Education; and Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI).

A staff project team will develop and implement a focused strategy to infuse environmental stewardship into “theological work, evangelism, education, justice and peacemaking, worship and liturgy, public witness, global mission and congregational service and action at the local community level” (1990 policy).

The General Assembly Council advises that the General Assembly prayerfully support this commitment to environmental stewardship and encourages the whole church to engage in ministry that heals and restores God’s creation.

[The assembly approved Item 08-12 as amended. See pp. 22, 24.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve “Funding Christ’s Mission Throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (see Attachment 1) as its mission funding strategy, and that this report supersede and replace the “Comprehensive Mission Funding Strategy Report” as approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998) (Minutes, 1998, Part I, pp. 209ff).

Rationale

Developing mission funding strategies is a focus for General Assembly Council work about once a decade. The previous mission funding strategy, “Comprehensive Mission Funding Strategy Report” was approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998). In order to eliminate potential confusion between multiple mandates, the task force recommends that upon the approval of this report, previous strategies set forth in the 1998 report no longer function as policy.

Funding Christ’s Work Throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)
Report of the Mission Funding Task Force to GAC

A. A SYSTEM OF GIVING

1. We propose that the General Assembly Council develop a system of giving which preserves the equal [~~worth~~] [importance] of both shared and designated mission giving as faithful ways to support Christ’s mission. There are two components of mission support:

Funding for General Mission (Shared Mission Giving)—gifts with no restrictions, for the overall support of the adopted budgets of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly.

Funding for Specific Mission (Designated Mission Giving)—gifts, with restrictions, for use within the adopted budgets of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly.

Background

As the task force members examined the current giving patterns of individual Presbyterians and governing bodies (excluding the General Assembly), we recognized that the current funding system is composed of two basic, yet interdependent, components, each of which is fundamental to the life of the church. The mission of the PC(USA) is most fully alive when each Presbyterian and each governing body is involved with and supports both components.

Funding for General Mission (Shared Mission Giving)—This component demonstrates our ecclesiastical, organic interdependence, expressed through common mission relationships among the governing bodies, as well as providing resources for the PC(USA) to be a prophetic voice of God. This funding supports mission work in line with the Mission Work Plan of the PC(USA); as well as providing support for mission partnership funding, stewardship education, and mission interpretation.

Funding for Specific Mission (Designated Mission Giving)—This component demonstrates the Spirit at work in specific ways, and celebrates the particular passionate and theologically grounded commitments to mission made by our members and governing bodies. This funding stream currently provides designated or restricted funding to validated mission of the PC(USA) as well as special offerings, designated mission support, extra commitment opportunities and, of course, per capita.

A system of giving which preserves the equal [worth] [importance] of both forms of giving will provide every governing body and individual Presbyterian an opportunity to “select” the mission work they wish to support. We hope each governing body will engage in all forms of giving as a sign of their Presbyterian connection and their discernment of God’s spirit.

Aware that providing donors with a “shopping” list might tend to undercut shared mission giving, one of the primary options available and the first one presented in all communications would be “Funding for General Mission.” Funding for General Mission, under the stewardship of the General Assembly Council would fund mission and ministry not otherwise financially supported, to begin new initiatives or to “top off” and adequately fund work that is supported, but not to the extent necessary to make it completely effective or even viable.

~~[Likewise, where a particular ministry through designated giving is oversubscribed, an understanding would be communicated as part of the process of seeking support that funding received in excess of the amount requested would be channeled to a similar ministry, where possible. And, further, such excess subscription would stay within the particular mission area as the ministry identified for support.] [Excess subscription would stay within the particular ministry identified for support. If the particular ministry is no longer in existence or ceases to be designated, any excess would stay within the particular mission area as the ministry identified for support.]~~

Such a system would need a form/format that would be given to every governing body in the church for their completion and would be available to individual Presbyterians and non-governing body groups so that they might have an opportunity to provide their own direct support to General Mission or Specific Mission.

2. We propose that the General Assembly Council gradually transition the two current forms of designated mission giving, Direct Mission Support and Extra Commitment Opportunities, into “Funding for Specific Mission” over a five-year period beginning in 2009.

Background

One of the most commonly heard responses to the current mission funding system is that its complexity prevents ease of use by donors. Many Presbyterians are finding it easier to give to other causes instead of Presbyterian mission. As part of our emphasis on improved communication, the task force seeks to streamline the number of mission giving options, so that it is easier to fund Christ’s mission through the PC(USA).

Changes with this level of complexity also affect the accounting systems that support Presbyterian mission, therefore we recognize that the transition will be gradual.

B. A SEASON OF INTERPRETATION

1. We propose that the General Assembly Council recommend that the General Assembly set aside a period of time each year, beginning in 2009, for the church to covenant to interpret and promote its work in the context of the mission programs of the local, regional, and national governing bodies of the PC(USA). During this season of interpretation, the stories of our participation in the Realm (Kingdom) of God would be presented as an integrated whole with international, national, regional, and local missions all working together to the glory of God.

Background

A quick analysis of current giving trends reveals that the areas most consistently demonstrating growth are those successfully engaging the giver. The traditional system of Presbyterian mission support relies primarily on appealing to the giver’s loyalty to the institution. It says, “Give because you are a Presbyterian!” rather than, “Give because your gifts can change lives and further the Realm (Kingdom) of God here on earth.” A new approach would require the church to interpret the mission program of the church for potential givers. This approach would not discount traditional stewardship but would highlight and promote the concept of giving as a form of Christian discipleship. Presbyterians would be reminded of their participation in the eschatological reality of God at work in their lives and in God’s world through stories that demonstrate the advance of Christ’s mission.

This churchwide period of interpretation and celebration would be a collaborative effort wherein governing bodies would partner across all levels of the church. Each governing body would help promote and interpret not only its particular mission emphasis, but also that of its related governing body partners. For example, during this season, a particular presbytery would not only be promoting its work and mission to its congregations it would participate in facilitating the promotion and celebration of the work and mission of its synod and of the General Assembly.

This season of interpretation should not be confused with earlier patterns of mission interpretation and promotion within the church, such as the Witness Season or the Witness Offering. The Witness Season was an annual period of mission education observed in many congregations, with a different geographical focus on international mission each year. In many congregations this was accompanied by a Witness Offering, a special offering which received funds for international mission, evangelism and new church development, and educational materials for racial ethnic congregations.

The season of interpretation called for in this recommendation will not be part of a special offering, and will not be focused on one specific understanding of mission. Instead, it will focus on the broad sense of mission, defined earlier in this paper: “proclaiming the Gospel in word and deed, locally, regionally, nationally, and internationally.”

C. COMMUNICATIONS AND FUNDS DEVELOPMENT

1. We propose that General Assembly Council direct the Communications and Funds Development ministry area to be the lead office in implementing the season of interpretation, and that the General Assembly Council allocate sufficient personnel and budget resources to:

- Develop, produce, and distribute promotional materials
- Coordinate the sharing of mission stories with governing bodies and support their efforts at promotion and celebration.
- Coordinate the dates for the season of interpretation, paying special attention to the flow of the Christian calendar and the needs of the denomination.

Background

Leadership from the Communications and Funds Development ministry area will be critical for a successful implementation of a season of interpretation. A variety of resources will be needed by congregations and governing bodies. The task force expects that the work of the staff team will be guided by an analysis of the Mission Challenge '07 project currently underway, and that materials will be tested for effectiveness before they are distributed to congregations.

2. We propose that the General Assembly Council adopt these priorities for funds development work within the Communications and Funds Development ministry area, in its role as a coordinating center for providing promotion, support, training, interpretation, communication and evaluation functions; and that implementation of these priorities be reviewed by the appropriate General Assembly Council committee.

- a. Create and coordinate mission interpretation and stewardship resources for congregations and presbyteries to use in:
  - (1) Cultivating mission development and funding.
  - (2) Learning how to ask for mission funding support.
  - (3) Encouraging giving to mission by individuals and congregations.
- b. Establish processes to coordinate promotion and interpretation for mission programs in partnership with governing bodies and other programs of the PC(USA).
- c. Promote funds development efforts and opportunities for mission in governing bodies, through means such as specific appeals, major campaigns, large gifts, planned/deferred gifts, and for both designated and undesignated giving.
- d. Encourage and assist middle governing bodies and sessions in interpreting the work and mission of the PC(USA), through its General Assembly Council, by putting a “face” on mission and helping to share the stories of Presbyterian mission throughout the whole church through related networks.
- e. Encourage work with national and international network partners, such as the Validated Mission Support Groups and others.
- f. Develop, using national and ecumenical research, and disseminate proven techniques and guidelines for effective mission funds support.
- g. Design, implement, and monitor effective processes of funds transfer, thanking donors and coordinating donor data at the General Assembly level.
- h. Create materials that interpret mission both through the General Assembly Council, and across the denomination.
- i. Integrate lessons learned from the recent Joining Hearts and Hands Campaign into an ongoing and effective long-term funds development effort throughout the church.
- j. Publish resource materials, easily accessible to donors and governing bodies, and ensure that such materials are sensitive to a variety of cultures that are part of our church and are available in a variety of languages.
- k. Maintain close working relationship with staff from the Theology Worship and Education program area, on a daily basis (possibly through an embedded staff person), so that programs demonstrate sound theological principles.
- l. Coordinate, schedule, and evaluate special offerings, capital campaigns, and other forms of designated giving, in partnership with other agencies and entities of the church, including affiliated organizations with historical ties to mission and mission funding in the PC(USA).
- m. Provide constituency services related to stewardship and mission funding, as necessary, in partnership with middle governing bodies.

Background

We celebrate that the new structure of the General Assembly Council has included an office for communications and funds development. We also celebrate the consolidation of mission interpretation and stewardship functions at the General Assembly Council level into a single body. As the task force listened to individuals representing a broad constituency of stakeholders in mission programs and governing bodies across the PC(USA), we heard the need for coordinated and accountable approaches to mission funding resources and funds development. A review of the PCUSA's Organization for Mission, Appendix A—Financial Issues (2000) ("Appendix A"), wherein the previous churchwide funding plan was articulated, led the task force members to conclude that while the document outlined a collection and distribution process for mission funding, it lacked a foundational process for the continuing interpretation of, and funds development for, wider mission giving, a practice which is no longer the norm with individuals and congregations. (See section G.2, a. & b. of Appendix A.) As mission funds are directed towards mission programs both in and outside of governing bodies in designated ways, a mission funding system for the whole church needs the support of coordinated administration, educational resources, current and creative funds development approaches, transparency and accountability which reflect the emerging shape of the PC(USA).

The task force has learned that advocacy for mission programs consistent with Reformed theology and values are a high priority. We have heard repeatedly that communication and education for mission, in formats that reflect the diversity of the PC(USA), are lacking. Many congregations and individuals are unable to use the interpretive and stewardship materials that are available. The task force believes that the General Assembly Council must do a better job of making materials available in a variety of formats, so that they can be used by the diverse constituencies of the PC(USA).

Members, pastors, and congregations are bewildered by the variety of major campaigns, offerings, and funds development programs within PC(USA) entities. The complex array of mission funding options has stymied the desire of many Presbyterians to participate in funding Christ's mission as manifested in the work and mission of the PC(USA).

In addition, the task force has recognized that "givers" give generously to organizations that they know and trust. An identity is important. Of equal importance is the need for an organization to operate with integrity to its purpose and with transparency toward its "givers" regarding the source and use of funds.

While we acknowledge the tension between encouraging the freedom to promote mission support for programs at all governing body levels and coordinating the asking of such support at a time when many congregations and presbyteries are experiencing financial restrictions to their own mission, we do not endorse a theology of scarcity. We believe that communication has been one of our obstacles, not a scarcity of resources.

By focusing on these priorities, the task force believes that the General Assembly Council can improve communication regarding mission funding, and make it easier for Presbyterians to participate joyfully in Christ's mission at all levels of the church.

3. We propose that the General Assembly Council direct the Communications and Funds Development ministry area to create, promote, and protect a consistent brand identity for the mission agency of the General Assembly with implementation to begin in 2009, reducing redundancy and addressing the needs of various targeted audiences, and to report back to the appropriate General Assembly Council committee.

Background

The Mission Funding Task Force has not worked in a vacuum. As we completed our assignment, we were aware of other activities, such as the staff-led, Communication Strategy Project Team. Our mission funding activities are not possible in an isolated environment. The completion and implementation of a brand identity strategy is an important ingredient for all future funds development work by the General Assembly Council.

D. A SHARED SYSTEM OF ADMINISTRATION &amp; ACCOUNTABILITY

1. We propose that the General Assembly Council direct the Communications and Funds Development ministry area, in collaboration and consultation with the Shared Services ministry area, to ensuring that the principles of accountability, accessibility, and information management (including processes and avenues for the free exchange of information) be incorporated into the administration and oversight of the mission funding system of the church.

Background

Scripture clearly tells us that accountability is an important part of Christian stewardship as we endeavor to live as faithful disciples of Christ. In 2001, the General Assembly adopted "Living Grateful Lives: Stewardship Theology in Our Time," as a framework for responsible stewardship of all the resources that God provides. The task force, therefore, acknowledges the need for accountability as responsible stewards. On this subject, however, the task force notes that budgets, timeliness, and accessibility to information vary greatly across the breadth of the church, and these factors impede accountability. There are frustrations with the reporting of contribution data for the numerous giving opportunities within the church. The task force has heard that the church needs to leverage existing channels of funding mission more effectively and provide for timely transfer of funds. The system of giving needs to be more transparent and accountable to donor intent.

2. We propose that the General Assembly Council request the Office of the General Assembly to collect statistical data of synods and presbyteries in the same manner that they collect data from sessions, and that it, too, be published.

Background

Every effort needs to be made to ensure that accountability and the free exchange of information are encouraged at all levels of the church regardless of the funding systems that are in place.

3. We propose that the system of giving developed by the General Assembly Council fairly and accurately allocate all costs associated with individual projects in the General Assembly mission budget, including the costs associated with the systems necessary for the support, promotion, and accountability of each item; and that the results of this system be communicated to the church as part of the General Assembly Council's mission interpretation. This transition will be gradually phased in over a five-year period, beginning in 2009.

Background

The task force believes that our system of giving needs to be more transparent and accountable to donor intent.

Previous mission funding strategies have used designated mission giving opportunities as a means to fund direct mission, and undesignated mission giving as a means of funding the administrative expenses associated with mission. The task force views this as an artificial division, which fails to communicate clearly to donors the costs of doing mission. Allocating the full cost of mission activities in each item enables the church to communicate more clearly both the need for funding, and accountability for how the funds have been used.

For example, a governing body or individual choosing to support racial-ethnic education would be aware that included in the cost of that ministry would be direct expenses such as salaries, benefits, and promotional costs AND pro rata overhead expenses such as its share of financial systems, administrative support personnel, paper, utilities, the salary of the particular area director, etc. This would mean that the costs of doing mission would be spread more evenly among all the ministries that are supported by, carried out through or passed on to, the ultimate user by the national offices.

4. We propose that the General Assembly Council recommend the amendment of Appendix A of the Organization for Mission as set forth in Attachment H to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

Background

As noted previously, Appendix A (of the Organization for Mission) is a document that outlines a collection and distribution process for mission funding. What we have learned is that though the process outlined and envisioned in that document was a good one, it was never successfully implemented. This was in part due to the length of the document, and an unintentional failure to make its contents known and enforceable. In any event, it is apparent that there remains a need for such a document that is more enforceable, shorter and clearer.

Further, we note that non-compliance with some portions of Appendix A risks the federal tax-exempt status of the PC(USA), therefore it is important that the document state accurately the mission funding and accounting policies of the church.

E. STEWARDSHIP

1. We propose that the General Assembly Council broaden its focus on stewardship by changing the name and orientation of the Shared Support Committee to become the Council's fifth goal area committee, "Stewardship and Shared Support." All matters of stewardship relating to the General Assembly Council will be coordinated by this goal area committee.

Background

Any faithful funding system to support the mission and ministry of the PC(USA) must be embedded in our theology of stewardship. We affirm that stewardship is not merely one part of Christian discipleship, but involves every aspect of life as we respond gratefully to God's grace and goodness. Stewardship is the prayerful exercise of discernment of God's will, followed by careful choices that show Christ is the cornerstone of our lives. Stewardship requires us to be good caretakers of the world God has entrusted to us, and to seek to do for others as Jesus would do. According to the Book of Order, one of the central affirmations of faith in the Reformed Tradition is "faithful stewardship" that "shuns ostentation and seeks proper use of the gifts of God's creation" (G-2.0500a). Practicing stewardship is far more than raising funds; it is nothing less than our exercise of discipleship as followers of Jesus Christ.

Currently there are four goal area committees within the General Assembly Council: Evangelism and Witness, Justice and Compassion, Spirituality and Discipleship, and Leadership and Vocation. In addition, a fifth committee is charged with matters of shared support (including shared services, communication, and funds development.) This change seeks recognition, among our most visible goals, that stewardship is central to our calling as Christians and to our organizational life as the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

This change would not require any additional elected members, or a reduction in the number of members currently assigned to each goal area committee. Instead, it would move the Council from a four goal area committee plus one support committee to a five goal area committee structure.

In the Mission Work Plan, work would be designed to support all give of the goal areas, giving the church a broader focus on the centrality of stewardship in all we do.

F. PER CAPITA

1. We propose that the General Assembly Council reactivate the General Assembly Council/Committee on the Office of the General Assembly per capita table for the purpose of reviewing and evaluating the mission and work covered by the per capita budget and the general mission budget to determine what work and ministry would best be accomplished in which budget.

Background

The task force gave consideration to per capita matters as we progressed through our charge to “develop a multi-dimensional funding design for the mission, program, and administration of the whole church, built upon relationships among sessions, presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly.”

The task force learned that per capita, though flawed, remains a working part of the current funding system, and therefore it should be left intact and outside the design set forth in our other recommendations.

Nonetheless, we have learned that there are perhaps ministries and work currently included in the General Assembly mission budget that might better be included in the per capita budget and vice versa. Previously, the mechanism for reviewing the allocation of per capita funds was the General Assembly Council/Committee on the Office of the General Assembly Joint Per Capita table. The task force believes that reactivating this joint table would improve our accountability and communication regarding the per capita budgets.

G. CONCLUDING MATTERS

1. We propose that the General Assembly Council adopt “Funding Christ’s Mission Throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” as its mission funding strategy, and recommend to the 218th General Assembly (2008) that this report supersede and replace the “Comprehensive Mission Funding Strategy Report” as approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998).

Background

Developing mission funding strategies is a focus for General Assembly Council work about once a decade. The previous mission funding strategy, “Comprehensive Mission Funding Strategy Report” was approved by the 210th General Assembly (1998). In order to eliminate potential confusion between multiple mandates, the task force recommends that upon the approval of this report, previous strategies set forth in the 1998 report no longer function as policy.

Overall Background

The Work of the Mission Funding Task Force

A. THE ASSIGNMENT

As part of the 2005–2006 General Assembly Council Mission Work Plan, approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004), the General Assembly Council was instructed to “develop and propose a conceptual framework for a new mission funding system for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 479).

The Special Offerings Task Force that also reported to the 216th General Assembly (2004) concurred with this action, saying, “changes that have taken place in mission giving and funding make the present system unable to meet current and future mission needs. For example, several worthy requests were directed to the Special Offering Review Task Force for which no appropriate funding was available through Special Offerings. This calls for a more comprehensive review of mission funding than is in the charge of any one existing task force or committee” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 494).

As the task force began its work and solicited feedback from the many partners involved in the churchwide mission funding system, the task force developed a charge for its work that has reminded it of the full scope of the task: “To develop a multi-dimensional funding design for the mission, program, and administration of the whole church, built upon relationships among sessions, presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly.”

The 217th General Assembly (2006) sent further instructions to the General Assembly Council and its Mission Funding Task Force regarding the allocation of administrative costs in the mission funding system:

That the 217th General Assembly:

1. instruct the General Assembly Council (GAC) to assist congregations in communicating to their membership the reality of changed patterns in unrestricted giving and the resulting cost implications of administering restricted funds, and
2. implore the GAC and the Mission Funding Task Force earnestly to seek alternative ways of budgeting in order to deal with this changing reality. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 649)

B. MEMBERS OF THE TASK FORCE

In September of 2004, the General Assembly Council ratified the appointment of the following council members to serve on the task force: Charles Easley, Presbytery of Greater Atlanta; Carol Hylkema, Synod of the Covenant; Linda Knieriemen, Presbytery of Lake Michigan; Reg Kuhn, Homestead Presbytery; Paul Masquelier, Presbytery of San Jose; Conrad Rocha, Synod of the Southwest; Dan Schomer, Eastminster Presbytery.

After an initial meeting, the task force was expanded to include representation from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, given the integral nature of the per capita funding to the mission funding systems of the church: Katherine Cunningham, Ridge-wood, N.J.; Jim Collie, Albuquerque, N.Mex.

Paul Masquelier served as task force chair from September 2004 until March 2005. Conrad Rocha has been chair of the task force for the remainder of its work.

The terms of service on the task force for Paul Masquelier and Katherine Cunningham came to an end in 2006. At this time, additional members were added to fill vacancies in representation and provide additional expertise: Dennis Hughes, Edmonds, WA (Committee on the Office of the General Assembly member); Linda Toth, Presbytery of Eastern Oregon (General Assembly Council member).

The task force has been ably supported by a diverse group of staff representing both different phases of General Assembly Council leadership and particular expertise in aspects of the church's funding system, including: Joey Bailey, Beth Basham, Barry Creech, John Detterick, Debbie Gardiner, Ann Gillies, Claude Godwin, Curtis Kearns, Marian McClure, Gradye Parsons, Sherri Pettway, Karen Schmidt, Alejandra Sherman, Gary Torrens, Linda Valentine, and Keith Wulff.

C. MEETINGS

Since its formation in September 2004, the task force has met eighteen times, through face-to-face meetings and conference calls.

D. DATA GATHERING

The task force has undertaken active information gathering as to the real and perceived strengths and weakness of the current mission funding system. The task force has conducted extensive research into the current system, sponsored focus groups, commissioned a survey by the Presbyterian Panel focusing on mission funding issues and participated in other research. See Attachment A. In addition, the task force has been in conversation with other denominations as to their mission funding systems. For a full list of the groups consulted by the task force, see Attachment B.

The initial round of data gathering led the task force to adopt a Statement of Values to guide its work. See Attachment C. These values provide the 'big picture' context that kept the task force grounded in the feedback received from across the church.

E. REVIEW AND CRITIQUE

The task force recognizes and affirms that mission funding is ultimately determined and guided by local sessions and presbyteries. Thus, the task force is committed to the principle that any change in the mission funding system of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the "PC(USA)") can only come about as a result of the active participation and affirmation of these bodies. The task force members believe that it is imperative that if the church is to remain relevant to its constituent parts and to be actively engaged in the work and ministry to which we are all called, the church must broaden its vision to include opportunities for partnering with, and encouraging, its people in the work and ministry to which they are involved.

While the task force has been in active dialogue with the church during its work, and anticipates such dialogue to continue (particularly with middle governing bodies) after it has concluded its work, its members have come to the realization that the issue is not one of creating a design, but of proposing a process by which that dialogue may continue and evolve. Finally, we note that though we will use the work and ministries either supported or carried out by the national offices of PC(USA) in modeling this system, we hope it will be adopted for use by all governing bodies of the PC(USA).

The task force has shared its working documents widely as part of its effort to work collegially with each of the stakeholders in the mission funding system. In 2005, synod executives, the Association of Executive Presbyters, and the General Assembly Council received copies of the "Proposed Framework for a Churchwide Funding System" and the "Values Statement" developed by the task force. This feedback was used to refine the developing conclusions of the task force.

A basic draft of the task force report was prepared in 2006, and shared with the General Assembly Council at its February 2007 meeting, and then distributed to middle governing body executives for their review and comment, prior to this final version of the report.

The task force is grateful for the thoughtful and challenging comments that it has received from reviewers across the church. Such strong feedback demonstrates the connectional nature of the PC(USA) and the common stake that all parties share in Funding Christ's Mission.

Executive Summary

Any attempt to design a successful funding system that supports the ministry and mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) must be embedded in the theology of stewardship. Stewardship is not just one part of Christian discipleship but involves every aspect of life as we respond gratefully to God's grace and goodness.

God's Spirit alone enables faithfulness to Jesus Christ: Because God loves the world and Christ gave his life for it, God's Spirit calls us as individuals and as the Church to respond with our lives and resources.

The Mission Funding challenge facing the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is not a problem of resources, as Presbyterians are a people with abundant resources.

The primary challenges for the mission funding system of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are low awareness of Presbyterian mission, a preference for designated gifts, and a complicated funding system which is difficult to understand.

Therefore the task force recommends:

- a raised priority for the communications and funds development activities of the General Assembly Council,
- a revision of the funding system to broaden the availability of designated mission funding opportunities, and
- a new emphasis on simplified giving and accountable processes so that all Presbyterians might more clearly understand the need for funding and accountability for how the funds have been used.

Narrative Report

PREFACE

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “PC(USA)”) struggles to find the best ways to address issues related to funding for the churchwide ministry and mission of our church, as it attempts to respond to the programmatic and leadership needs of congregations, their sessions and other governing bodies.

The task force listened to leaders from across the church through several rounds of focus groups, dialogue sessions, and feedback forums, so that its work would reflect the concerns of the PC(USA) at all levels.

In response to these conversations, the task force developed a statement of values to guide its work as foundational principles. Perceived and actual practices in the present mission funding system have tended to impinge and interrupt our ability to implement a funding design consistent with these values, therefore the task force is proposing changes to the processes that serve as the framework to any mission funding design.

The task force’s statement of values can be found in Attachment C. These values are being recommended for approval as part of our revision to Appendix A of the Organization for Mission.

Any attempt to design a successful funding system that supports the ministry and mission of the PC(USA) must be embedded in the theology of stewardship. In 2001, the 213th General Assembly approved the paper “Living Grateful Lives: Stewardship Theology in Our Time,” which sets forth our scripturally informed, historically rich understanding with a depth we could not attempt to duplicate here. We commend that document for further reading even as we affirm its insistence that stewardship is not merely one part of Christian discipleship, but involves every aspect of life as we respond gratefully to God’s grace and goodness. Stewardship requires us to prayerfully make choices that show Christ is the cornerstone of our very lives. Stewardship requires us to be good caretakers of the created world and to do for others as Jesus would have done. Practicing good stewardship is how we can best serve God as disciples of Christ.

A. THEOLOGY: THE SPIRIT OF GIVING

God’s Spirit alone enables faithfulness to Jesus Christ: Because God loves the world and Christ gave his life for it, God’s Spirit calls us as individuals and as the Church to respond with our lives and resources.

God’s Grace

God’s graciousness to us in Jesus Christ is beyond measure and is not earned. The Holy Spirit invites our response to such grace: the offering of our whole being. Our generosity and our practices as stewards in all of life witness to God’s love.

God’s Mission

God’s intent is to bring all of creation back into right relationship with God through Jesus Christ. From the tree of knowledge in Genesis to the tree in Revelation whose leaves are for the healing of the nations, all of Scripture tells us about God’s comprehensive plan for salvation, God’s mission, and our role in it.

God’s World

Because God is sovereign over all, the good news of Jesus Christ is good news for all of life. The calling of every Christian is to demonstrate this fact in every sphere of life. God’s world is teeming with variety and richness. For this reason, the church’s organization for mission is, and must be, extremely diverse.

God’s Church

The church has a unique place in the constellation of organized mission endeavors. Through no merit of our own, God has given Christ’s church a special role in mission. Sometimes this role expresses itself in encouraging all believers in their various mission endeavors. It always expresses itself in the discernment processes and common enterprise of the visible body of Christ, organized in denominations and traditions. The ecumenical (“worldwide”) Christian church has a vast heritage of learning how to be faithful to God in mission, and members of the particular churches engage that heritage as part of their discipleship.

Presbyterians in God's Mission, Church, and World

The larger body of Christ values many of the characteristic gifts Presbyterians offer because of our mission heritage. Indeed, one of those characteristic gifts is the extent to which we also value and respect other Christians' roles in mission. We are ecumenically minded and we do mission in partnership. We do a great deal to develop leadership for the church and society through education and training. We share both people and resources. We understand the holistic call of mission and of the Gospel to involve us in both evangelism and justice ministries, always with joy and in Jesus Christ's ways. In addition, we seek to have integrity in our commitments, both in distant places and in our own communities.

B. ENABLING DENOMINATIONAL MISSION

A vision for the work and ministry of the Church as it is designed, validated and enacted through its members, congregations and governing bodies (collectively and individually).

Description/Definition

Presbyterians believe they can do more in mission, and do mission more effectively, when they do it together. In 1706, the first presbytery was organized in this country "to consult the most proper measures for advancing religion and propagating Christianity." Within a few years, they were encouraging offerings from individual congregations to support pious uses. From these simple beginnings, we see two prevailing actions to promote mission: One is to discern together the best way to conduct the mission of the church, and the other is to join together to support the mission of the whole church. Both of these are based on the original belief that when our resources are pooled together, we can do more in mission.

Christ's Great Commission defines our mission as a church and as individuals: "Go ... and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them to [observe all that Christ has] commanded" (Mt. 28: 19, 20 RSV). For the purposes of this paper, "mission" is understood in its broadest sense: proclaiming the Gospel in word and deed, locally, regionally, nationally, and internationally. Presbyterians understand the Great Commission in the context of our own denominational proclamation that the "mission of the Church is given form by God's activity in the world as told in the Bible and understood by faith" (Book of Order, G-3.0100). To that end, this church, and, therefore, its people are called to participate in God's activity in the world through their life for others by: "(a) healing and reconciling and binding up wounds, (b) ministering to the needs of the poor, the sick, the lonely, and the powerless, (c) engaging in the struggle to free people from sin, fear, oppression, hunger, and injustice, (d) giving [of themselves and their] substance to the service of those who suffer, (e) sharing with Christ in [establishment] of [a] just, peaceable, and loving rule in the world" (Book of Order, G-3-0200(c)(3)).

The church in this new century resides and "does" mission within this Christian and denominational context. However, how that work and ministry are accomplished have changed dramatically from the post-World War II decades when Christians looked largely to the national denomination both to define and implement mission on their behalf. Today, congregations are once again much more directly involved in mission. The "people in the pews" are designing, validating and actively participating in ways wherein they personally engage as partners in God's activity in the world.

Opportunities

These facts reveal the Spirit's intention that we continually are guided to recapture the biblical self-understanding of the church as the organically united, flexibly organized, and diversely gifted Body of Christ. In this new century, it is imperative that the church and its members remain centered on the Spirit's call to be actively engaged in Christ's work and ministry, ever deepening and broadening our vision as we seek opportunities for partnering with and encouraging God's people in the work and ministry to which they are called.

This will require that the church, including individual members, congregations, and governing bodies, strive to become more actively engaged in listening to and affirming each other's sense of the Spirit's call to faithfulness in mission. In addition, all will need to reach a more comprehensive understanding of the value of engaging with various secular, ecumenical and interfaith networks, para-church organizations, social service agencies, humanitarian and rescue relief projects and other objects of their various mission emphases. This will include not only where they are directing their dollars, but also where they are committing their time and talent.

This unique moment in the church's history offers opportunities for the constituent parts of the church to rediscover the value of common vision and coordinated and disciplined action in mission. Guided by God's Spirit, we are called to seek a new consensus about the roles we need our national church structures to play in support of local, regional, national and international mission, both in supporting the involvement of all disciples and in acting at times on their behalf.

Challenges

The challenge to the church at all levels in being a listener, partner and encourager is to put aside the tendency quickly to judge, undervalue and dismiss mission emphases dear to others. The challenge to the more inclusive governing bodies will necessarily involve relinquishing varying levels of control over what is to be emphasized, designed, validated and carried out. The challenge to the less inclusive bodies will involve empowering others to play needed roles of leadership, coordination or collective witness.

CONCLUSION

Our guiding principle and direction must be to honor Christ's Great Commission and to recognize that partnership with God in God's activity in the world is as mysterious and multi-faceted an undertaking as is the face of God, but we profess our faith in the Spirit's leading, and we must not fear what we do not always understand.

C. WHAT WE HAVE LEARNED

The task force gathered input from across the church, through focus groups, specific survey research, and trend data through comparative statistics, using the denomination's Research Services. The results guided the task force to focus on a specific set of challenges.

- From 2004 to 2005, average per member giving increased nearly $50 per member to $984.41. In 2006, per member giving was even higher at $1,040.43. (See Attachment D).
- From 2004 to 2005, contributions to congregations increased by more than $68 million. In 2006, the figure was almost $56 million higher than 2005. (See Attachment D).
- From 2004 to 2005, total receipts by congregations were up by more almost $147 million. In 2006, the figure was $132 million higher. (See Attachment D).
- In 2004, the difference between total congregational receipts and total congregational expenses produced a surplus of more than $65 million. In 2005, that figure grew to $128 million, and by 2006, it was $251 million. (See Attachment E).

The task force found that resources were not the most pressing problem facing the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Presbyterians are a people with abundant resources.

Instead, the feedback received by the task force suggested a different problem:

- In 2006, all forms of congregational giving to mission were down from the previous year (See Attachment D):
  - Local Mission—down $1.6 million from $155 million in 2005
  - Validated Mission—down $25 million from $136 million in 2005
  - Other Mission—down $11 million from $96 million in 2005.

Validated mission expenditures include all monies given to presbytery, synod, and General Assembly agencies, including payments toward mission budgets of these entities, special offerings, payments to the Theological Education Fund (1% Plan), and funds donated to all other PC(USA)-sponsored programs. Other mission refers to all mission causes outside of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) relationships.

- Over the past five years, there has been a gradual trend away from validated mission and toward other mission. Over that period, Validated mission giving has decreased by $31 million, while other mission has increased by $16 million.
- In 2001, the gap between validated mission and other mission was $73 million, but in 2006, that figure is down to $26 million. (See Attachment F).

The task force examined why Presbyterian giving would be collectively higher in all categories, but Presbyterian mission would be declining. The May 2005 Presbyterian Panel report shows some of the factors (See Attachment A):

- 84% of Presbyterian laity are either "little informed" or "not informed" about "the range and scope of Presbyterian mission," leaving only 16% who described themselves as "very informed" or "generally informed."
- Few pastors (only 16%) report being "very informed" about the range and scope of Presbyterian mission, but a majority (64%) is "generally informed."
- Relatively few (12%) members report very often or often wanting to know more about Presbyterian mission. Most (66%) want to know more occasionally or rarely.
- Only 27% of members place much importance on an agency's connection to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) when deciding to make a gift.
- Majorities of members (53%) and elders (58%) favor their congregation designating the gifts that it gives to Presbyterian mission.
- More than one-third of members, elders, pastors, and specialized clergy would give more of their charitable contributions to fund Presbyterian mission, if they knew how to do it.

These themes: low awareness of Presbyterian mission, a preference for designated gifts, and difficulty understanding the church's mission funding system are also reflected in the responses from focus groups conducted by Research Services (See Attachment G for the full report):

- What is covered by per capita is almost unknown.
- There is a need for a better way of communicating with members and clergy.
- We need to put a face on mission.
- Designated giving has to be part of the funding plan, but program areas should not have to raise their own money – therefore we should not go to a system based entirely on designated giving.
- The problem for many is the presbytery—as a receiving site, as mission interpreters, and in terms of congregational contact.
- Giving to the national level needs to be easier.
- Many pastors—like many people in our society today—have an anti-institutional bias, and this makes communication very important.
- Theological conflict or the theological positions of the General Assembly/General Assembly Council were rarely mentioned overtly (in relation to mission funding issues).

D. IMPACT OF THE TASK FORCE

As the research demonstrates, many of the answers to the current mission funding problem lay in better communication. The ongoing work of the task force has created synergy around these topics and resulted in solutions beyond the original scope of its mandate.

Communication and Funds Development Ministry Area Created

In part due to the work of the task force, the General Assembly Council has created a Communications and Funds Development ministry area, as one of three primary components of the staff structure. Led by a deputy executive director, this area will give the Council the means of integrating better communication with its funds development efforts. The task force has worked in close cooperation with the Council’s executive director during the formation of the ministry area, and has had the opportunity over the past six months to work with members of the staff of this new area. It is the feeling of the task force that this new area will be effective at bringing new solutions to these reported problems, and that with better communication will come additional resources for Presbyterian mission.

MGB/GAC Annual Meeting Established

Another area of improved communication for which the task force is proud to have played a part is the annual meeting of the General Assembly Council with middle governing body executives. The task force had several meetings with middle governing body executives and found that the conversation always brought us to a new understanding as we worked with each other. By working more diligently to be in conversation, the task force believes unity of mission will result, as well as improved communication within the church.

A Yes to Simplified Giving But No “Magic Pill”

While there are multiple recommendations, the task force, acknowledges the disappointment that some readers of this report will experience when they find that the changes are not a ‘magic pill’ that will quickly generate additional funds for mission. There is no quick magic solution to the funding issues facing the PC(USA). The task force has noted trends and seeks to be responsive to them by recommending changes that will accommodate new Presbyterian patterns of giving. The task force has also sought simplicity in the mission funding system, both through fewer giving options, and through increased accountability with donors at all levels of the church structure.

Appendix A Streamlined

The task force has also sought to simplify the complex mission funding system that has evolved since reunion. Appendix A of the Organization for Mission is the official policy document that governs the church’s funding system. In the recommendations of the task force, Appendix A has been streamlined by eliminating redundant citations from the Book of Order (while ensuring that the document is in compliance with the Book of Order). Sections of Appendix A for use by sessions, presbyteries, and synods have also been streamlined, since in practice these governing bodies are guided by the Book of Order and not Appendix A.

Collaboration and Partnering Among All Levels of PC(USA) Necessary

The success of this plan will be based on collaboration and partnering between all governing levels of our church. By stating this fact clearly, the task force acknowledges that many of the mission funding issues are relationship issues...issues of trust between members of the PC(USA). No member, nor any agency or governing body of the church alone can solve the relational issues that are affecting the PC(USA). Our calling, however, is not to solve trust issues, but to be engaged as faithful partners in Christ’s mission. Each of us is called to do our part to be faithful, if we are faithful, trust within our body will be built.

Q11. Presbyterians believe we discern best what God is calling us to do when we gather as governing bodies seeking together to find and represent the will of Christ. “Per capita apportionment” is how we mutually share the costs of coming together to discern the Spirit’s leading for the future. The General Assembly, synods and (most, but not all) presbyteries create a per capita apportionment that they ask congregations to pay annually.

Have you previously heard of per capita apportionment?

Yes, probably.....	9%	5%	1%	1%
No, probably not.....	11%	4%	1%	1%

Q12. Beyond per capita apportionment, sessions of PC(USA) congregations are encouraged to contribute a portion of their mission budget to fund PC(USA)-, presbytery-, and synod-related mission. Does your congregation donate funds to presbytery-, synod-, or PC(USA)-related mission?

[If “Yes, ”] Think about the efforts your session has made to interpret, to the congregation, all of the presbytery, synod, or PC(USA) mission(s) that it supports.

Q12b. Has the interpretation the session has done made you want the congregation to give more money, less money, or about the same amount of money to presbytery, synod, or PC(USA) mission?

Q13. In the past 20 years, the amount of financial gifts for PC(USA) mission received as “undesigned” (the session or individual donor leaves the decision on how to spend the money to the PC(USA)) has declined and the amount received as “designated” (the session/donor indicates how the money is to be spent) has increased, so that now only about 20% of receipts are received as “undesigned.” This shift has enhanced the ability of individuals and sessions to support specific programs, but it has lessened the ability of the PC(USA) to respond to requests for assistance from international partners and national ministries.

PRINCIPLES AND VALUES STATEMENT

PRINCIPLES

The Mission Funding Task Force offers a design for funding Christ's work that promotes a generosity of spirit in response to the God who has dealt generously with us.

The funding of the mission and ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) rests on the following principles:

Faithfulness to Jesus Christ—because God loves the world and Christ gave his life, we are called, as individuals and groups, to respond with our lives and resources;

Flexibility—because we believe that the Holy Spirit informs the missional instincts of all God's people honoring the promises of the past and preparing the promise of the future, we will accommodate regional differences, historical practices, and changing realities;

Respect—because we seek to have the same mind in us that was in Christ Jesus, who looked not to his own interests but to the interest of others (Phil. 2:4–5), we will acknowledge the passion of donors through accountable systems and transparently open, informed and inclusive decision-making, acknowledging the many views of mission designed and enacted in every part of the church. We recognize the tension that exists between respecting the passions of donors and encouraging support of our connectional nature, but confess that “the earth is the Lord's and all that is in it.” (Ps. 24:1–2).

Communication—because we are servants of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God (1 Cor. 4:1); we will commit ourselves to frequent interaction with governing bodies and individuals, for the purpose of mutual clarification and unity of experience and hope across diverse boundaries.

VALUES STATEMENT

Therefore, a design for funding Christ's work throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will be consistent with the following core values:

1. A design for funding Christ's work will recognize stewardship as integral to Christian discipleship
  - promoting the Biblical concept of tithing
  - encouraging stewardship education that is understood as the faithful response of discipleship to God's gifts in all of life
  - requiring the development of stewardship education materials that are creative, attractive, clear, and affordable
2. A design for funding Christ's work will appeal to the passions and values of members, pastors, governing bodies, and benefactors
  - communicating to the head and heart of the people of God
  - engaging the donor in the mission of the church
  - recognizing that everyone is a beneficiary of God's grace, and everyone benefits from joyful stewardship
3. A design for funding Christ's work will be transparent and accountable
  - honoring donor intent
  - offering easily understood opportunities for giving
  - meeting clear standards of accountability for pastors, sessions, and potential donors
4. A design for funding Christ's work will utilize our connectionalism, recognize our interdependence, and demonstrate our partnership in mission
  - emphasizing the value of interpersonal relationships
  - encouraging the more inclusive governing body to facilitate the mission of its constituent members
  - encouraging the less inclusive governing body to participate in the mission of the church beyond its bounds
  - encouraging mutual investment of time and resources among governing bodies and constituent members

08 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON MISSION COORDINATION AND BUDGETS

- recognizing that Presbyterians are the primary base of support for Presbyterian missions, and affirming the importance and priority of funding Presbyterian validated mission

5. A design for funding Christ’s work will emphasize information sharing between governing bodies leading to a dynamic mission and vision

- placing governing bodies in structural and interactive relationships
- valuing the wisdom of other governing bodies
- recognizing the need for consultation prior to engaging in ministries beyond one’s bounds

6. A design for funding Christ’s work will encourage two-way communications

- welcoming and encouraging a flow of information and feedback
- recognizing that information sharing benefits the whole church.
- encouraging face-to-face communication when possible

7. A design for funding Christ’s work will honor historic relationships

- recognizing that previous funding systems had value and may continue to inform the development of new funding systems
- requiring careful investigation of current funding partnerships before altering or eliminating those partnerships

ATTACHMENT G
REPORT ON FOCUS GROUPS CONDUCTED BY RESEARCH SERVICES

Focus group participants agreed on several things:

1. What is covered by per capita is almost unknown. Some pastors knew what per capita covers, but the vast majority either did not know or had an incorrect understanding of what it covers. Some focus group participants believe the term itself turns givers off. Some believe per capita helps giving. Opinions on per capita varied widely. Attitudes toward per capita are complicated. For some it appears that their attitude toward the presbytery seems to determine their attitude toward per capita. What is done at the presbytery, synod, and GA level is basically unknown.

2. There is a need for a better way of communicating with members and clergy. Many participants acknowledged that they do not have much knowledge of what the PC(USA) does and others showed a lack of knowledge in the answers they gave. A letter from a pastor (who appears to be theologically toward the conservative end of the spectrum) is included at the end of this report. It is a good example of how the lack of knowledge of members was expressed.

A couple of presbytery executives also commented on this lack of knowledge. One presbytery executive pointed out that pastors know little about the mission of the PC(USA) and acknowledged that it is the presbytery executive's job to provide that knowledge. Another presbytery executive said: "Another element that needs to be lifted up is the role that pastors have in leadership and the role that presbytery executives play in leadership. Observation of pastors is that they are up to their eyeballs in their own structures and their own work. They focus all their attention inwardly and are not able to connect with the larger systems in the church. That will be tough to break but they are the key to unlock that."

3. We need to put a face on mission. This is related to the lack of knowledge, but is somewhat different. Simple knowledge of mission is not enough. Participants suggest that people have to be able to identify with the mission. There is little agreement on how to do this. The three most common ways mentioned were:

- a. GA staff need to get out in the field more.
- b. Presbyteries need to do a better job of educating clergy.
- c. Better communication is needed.

4. Designated giving has to be part of the funding plan, but program areas should not have to raise their own money. Focus group participants acknowledged that some areas would never be able to raise their own money, and so we cannot go to a system based entirely on designated giving. People on the extreme ends of the continuum—from those who favor all designated giving to those who favor no designated giving—were few. The vast majority fall somewhere in between.

5. The problem for many is the presbytery. Some participants believe that many presbyteries are doing the same old thing—much of which could be better done by individual congregations. Such comments were made by a pastor serving a large congregation that gives money to the presbytery and expects the presbytery to forward an appropriate sum to the General Assembly. Yet the pastor reported the presbytery is not doing that. Another participant sees the presbytery as responsible for explaining the mission of the PC(USA), but believes presbyteries are not doing that. Another complained that it is not easy to get someone from the presbytery to come out and talk with the congregation.

6. Giving to the national level needs to be easier. Some made such comments as complaints about the presbytery. They believe there is too much red tape to give through the presbytery. One example concerned a congregation that wanted to give to a disaster relief fund, but found the presbytery wouldn't pass the check directly on to the disaster relief fund. The congregation wanted their money to make a difference there now. Some suggested that congregations be allowed to give directly to programs at the national level, with the national office notifying the presbytery of the money a church has given. The denomination should not impede giving, but should make it easier.

7. Many pastors—like many people in our society today—have an anti-institutional bias, and this makes communication very important. This is the response of one person, but summarizes what many respondents seem to suggest. The extent of this bias is not clear. Yet many participants believe that pastors do not look to the GA/GAC for information or guidance. This does not mean that pastors are not loyal to the PC(USA), but rather that for some reason they have little knowledge of the institution.

8. Surprisingly, theological conflict or the theological positions of the GA/GAC were rarely mentioned overtly. The letter at the end of this report is a good example of how some mentioned the conflict. There was an exception to this—business managers of some congregations said clearly that no funds would be sent to Louisville until support for gay and lesbian pastors was stopped and the position on Israel changed.

Conclusion:

All of the focus groups point to a general lack of knowledge of the mission of the PC(USA). Few comments directly answered the question about what the future mission-funding plan should look like. Many do not know what the present plan is. Theological conflict was seldom mentioned as a factor hindering the mission funding of the PC(USA).

Letter from a pastor (shown here as received):

Dear Keith:

I am of the opinion that we are in a very precarious position in regards to funding for the G.A. There is a lot of money available to be given away but folks are very particular about where or to whom they will give it. The fact that our G.A. does not have people actively in the field raising funds is a dead give away that there is less interest on their part than with some other groups. If you came to ----- Presbyterian Church to make a pitch for a worthy cause you would find support. That the G.A. does not is one reason that our money goes elsewhere.

Another reason that there is less than eager support is the result of some years of bad publicity and/or bad decisions and/or difficult situations. It is hard to encourage giving when there is a perception that the rug will be pulled from under the feet of our more conservative core values. As an example there is a general belief that the deck is sort of stacked to move toward the ordination of gays and lesbians. I can tell them that this is not the position of our church but they do not believe me. That is a matter of their perception but it feels like a reality in their minds. There is a perception that we at our center do not believe in Evangelism. Even if there is a difference in our practice we should be in agreement that proclamation of the Gospel is a major thrust for the Church.

Institutions of the Church are in a constant fund raising mode, there is no barrier to their contacting the members whose names they have, members believe that their contributions to an institution is the equivalent to a gift to the church, these institutions are very good at telling their story. The G.A. is less skilled and less inclined to follow the same practices.

I can assure you of this one fact if we did a better job of informing our payers of the positive work of the assembly and its mission we would have better advocacy. I am of the opinion that this advocacy would be enhanced by personal contact with pastors and especially those in larger congregations.

If there is serious interest in the issues discussed then I believe we will see a concerted follow-up to these conference calls.

I would be willing to be of any service to my denomination.

Sincerely,

VALUES STATEMENT

The funding of the mission and ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) rests on the following principles:

Faithfulness to Jesus Christ—because God loves the world and Christ gave his life, we are called, as individuals and groups, to respond with our lives and resources.

Flexibility—because we believe that the Holy Spirit informs the missional instincts of all God’s people honoring the promises of the past and preparing the promise of the future, we will accommodate regional differences, historical practices, and changing realities.

Respect—because we seek to have the same mind in us that was in Christ Jesus, who looked not to his own interests but to the interest of others (Philippians 2:4–5), we will acknowledge the passion of donors through accountable systems and transparently open, informed and inclusive decision-making, acknowledging the many views of mission designed and enacted in every part of the church. We recognize the tension that exists between respecting the passions of donors and encouraging support of our connective nature, but confess that “the earth is the Lord’s and all that is in it.” (Psalm 24:1–2).

Communication—because we are servants of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God (1 Corinthians 4:1); we will commit ourselves to frequent interaction with governing bodies and individuals, for the purpose of mutual clarification and unity of experience and hope across diverse boundaries.

Therefore, a design for funding Christ's work throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will be consistent with the following core values:

1. A design for funding Christ's work will recognize stewardship as integral to Christian discipleship:
  - promoting the Biblical concept of tithing
  - encouraging stewardship education that is understood as the faithful response of discipleship to God's gifts in all of life
  - requiring the development of stewardship education materials that are creative, attractive, clear, and affordable
2. A design for funding Christ's work will appeal to the passions and values of members, pastors, governing bodies, and benefactors:
  - communicating to the head and heart of the people of God
  - engaging the donor in the mission of the church
  - recognizing that everyone is a beneficiary of God's grace, and everyone benefits from joyful stewardship
3. A design for funding Christ's work will be transparent and accountable:
  - honoring donor intent
  - offering easily understood opportunities for giving
  - meeting clear standards of accountability for pastors, sessions, and potential donors
4. A design for funding Christ's work will utilize our connectionalism, recognize our interdependence, and demonstrate our partnership in mission:
  - emphasizing the value of interpersonal relationships
  - encouraging the more inclusive governing body to facilitate the mission of its constituent members
  - encouraging the less inclusive governing body to participate in the mission of the church beyond its bounds
  - encouraging mutual investment of time and resources among governing bodies and constituent members
  - recognizing that Presbyterians are the primary base of support for Presbyterian missions, and affirming the importance and priority of funding Presbyterian validated mission.
5. A design for funding Christ's work will emphasize information sharing between governing bodies leading to a dynamic mission and vision:
  - placing governing bodies in structural and interactive relationships
  - valuing the wisdom of other governing bodies
  - recognizing the need for consultation prior to engaging in ministries beyond one's bounds
6. A design for funding Christ's work will encourage two-way communications:
  - welcoming and encouraging a flow of information and feedback
  - recognizing that information sharing benefits the whole church
  - encouraging face-to-face communication when possible
7. A design for funding Christ's work will honor historic relationships:
  - recognizing that previous funding systems had value and may continue to inform the development of new funding systems
  - requiring careful investigation of current funding partnerships before altering or eliminating those partnerships

CHURCHWIDE MISSION SUPPORT

A. Forms of Giving in Churchwide Mission Support

Churchwide Mission Support is the funding system used by all governing bodies to plan and implement the mission of the whole church. Churchwide Mission Support has three overall forms of giving.

1. Basic Mission Support—There are two components of mission support:
  - a. Funding for General Mission—gifts, with no restrictions, for the overall support of the adopted budgets of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly.
  - b. Funding for Specific Mission—gifts, with restrictions, for use within the adopted budgets of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly.
2. Churchwide Special Offerings—gifts, with restrictions, for General Assembly planned, organized, and approved offerings for specified purposes that may be included in approved budgets.

3. Other Specific Appeals—gifts, with restrictions, for specific use in support of validated mission that ordinarily are not included in the budget of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly. Such appeals may be ongoing, time-limited, or responsive to emergency needs.

There are additional forms of giving that are distinct from Churchwide Mission Support. These include giving through Presbyterian Women, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Validated Mission Support Groups, and other organizations. Some of these gifts may be applied to adopted budgets. These gifts are and may be increasingly important to support the work of the church.

B. Roles and Responsibilities of Governing Bodies

To encourage openness and accountability in all financial matters, the following roles and responsibilities will be observed.

1. Roles Held in Common by All Governing Bodies

- a. Select representatives who will participate in inter-governing body consultations on mission support goals and the division of Mission Support Commitments.
- b. Share mission priorities, budget projections, funding needs, and mission support goals.
- c. Provide information for, support of, and participation in an annual season of interpretation.
- d. Consider other governing bodies' mission priorities and funding needs.
- e. Adopt mission support commitments and honor these commitments in budgets for which the governing body is directly responsible.
- f. When changes in mission support commitment are contemplated, promptly communicate with other affected governing bodies.
- g. Thank leaders and donors.
- h. Hold receiving sites accountable to accepted churchwide standards.
- i. Provide full financial reports annually to other governing bodies and congregations on the receipt and expenditure of funds and of a governing bodies' assets, and liabilities.
- j. Collect and transmit mission support from donors, congregations, and organizations within 60 calendar days from the date of receipt.
- k. Provide General Assembly, and as appropriate, synods and constituent presbyteries, a regular accounting of church-by-church giving and any relevant data requested by a governing body, while maintaining the right to privacy by individual donors.

2. Role of the General Assembly

- a. Assist the development of mission support goals at every governing body level.
- b. Adopt a mission budget and a per capita budget.
- c. Annually provide full financial reports and program assessments to sessions, presbyteries, and synods.
- d. Disseminate industry standards in accordance with Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP), and in compliance with applicable accounting pronouncements and regulations specific to the not-for-profit industry as best practices for governing body treasurers and financial officers.
- e. Approve the purposes and beneficiaries of the four churchwide special offerings, upon recommendation of the General Assembly Council.

C. Special Offerings and Other Specific Appeals

1. Churchwide Special Offerings

- a. Churchwide special offerings will provide valuable mission interpretation opportunities.
- b. Churchwide special offerings will enable the church to meet traditional and ongoing needs in relationship to the total mission priorities of the church, always proclaiming the name of Jesus.
- c. Causes included in special offerings will have demonstrated potential for churchwide donor support.

- d. Causes included in a special offering will specifically define the needs to be met; plans will be provided for funds' allocation, program implementation, and accountability.
- e. Causes grouped within the same churchwide special offering will have a focussed mission purpose.
- f. Special offering promotions within the comprehensive mission funding strategy will occur in a central promotion office rather than within programmatic entities.
- g. Costs of promoting and receiving each churchwide special offering will be paid from receipts of the offering. After deducting each offering's costs from total receipts, restricted and unrestricted, of that offering, all receipts will then be considered permanently restricted, and will be used only for the purposes for which they were given. Each offering's costs will be determined by the GAC through its regular budget process.
- h. Start-up costs for new or significantly revised special offerings will be expensed as incurred.
- i. Promotion materials for a special offering will relate to the liturgical season in which the offering is received.
- j. Any change in the pattern of distribution of a special offering will require an eighteen-month time period before becoming effective to allow adequate time for development and distribution of promotion materials.
- k. There will be no more than four churchwide special offerings in any given calendar year. The General Assembly will identify times for the promotion and receipt of offerings.
- l. On a six-year cycle, the General Assembly Council will provide for review and evaluation of the causes supported by churchwide special offerings and will consider new causes in light of established criteria and current mission priorities. Between reviews, if an offering lacks support, the GAC will provide a process for review.
- m. It is important for the continuity of operations that some programs funded by churchwide special offerings maintain operation reserves. However, it is not the purpose of special offerings to develop or augment reserves. Beginning in 2001, each General Assembly will assign one of its committees to review the appropriateness of reserves accumulated from special offerings.
- n. The agencies receiving churchwide special offering funds will prepare annual reports on the uses of those funds for the General Assembly.
- o. Special offerings will not be used to supplement funding for programs included in ongoing basic mission support.
- p. Special offerings will not be used to create funding for a cause when a similar program already exists.

2. Other Specific Appeals

a. Other specific appeals include the Theological Education Fund, special campaigns or gifts (national, regional, or local), Emergency Relief Alerts (national, regional, or local), and additional giving opportunities.

(1) The Theological Education Fund is a unique type of an annual specific appeal to sessions through the 1% Plan as approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986).

(2) Special time-limited campaigns approved by one or more governing bodies are essential for meeting capital needs and achieving other mission purposes. These require governing body approval and may include needs across governing body lines with advance concurrence of other appropriate governing bodies. In the case of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council may approve time-limited campaigns between sessions of the General Assembly.

(3) Emergency Relief Alerts enable persons to respond compassionately to emergency needs, such as natural disasters of large proportion or other crises. The General Assembly Council will authorize a process for issuing national Emergency Relief Alerts, providing timely information indicating how church funds are being used to meet the emergency and how individuals and sessions may contribute additional funds to meet such needs. There may be occasions when sessions, presbyteries, or synods will issue Emergency Relief Alerts in response to more localized emergencies.

(4) Additional giving opportunities provide a way for contributors or donors to support mission not funded by adopted budgets.

(a) A validation process that maintains the integrity of the church's mission will be used to identify such opportunities. Whenever possible, such opportunities will be promoted jointly by governing bodies beyond the session through a program of additional giving opportunities.

(b) Contributors or donors desiring to support validated mission beyond established budgets may do so through additional giving opportunities up to whatever limits have been set by a more inclusive governing body. Concurrence in the purpose of the gift by the receiving governing body or agency is required.

(c) An effective additional giving program depends on significant sharing of information about adopted budgets and additional giving opportunities.

b. All campaigns for other specific appeals shall identify in advance the anticipated administrative costs that may be charged to receipts. A governing body that designates an other specific appeal may apply a charge, not to exceed an agreed upon percentage, against other specific appeals receipts to cover actual costs of promoting, receiving, and disbursing funds. Contributors and donors will be informed of the actual percentage. The General Assembly Council shall determine the cost of communicating national Emergency Relief Alerts and may authorize a charge against receipts with this charge being reported for each specific appeal.

c. Acknowledgment of receipt of gifts to all validated projects or agencies will be made to the contributor or donor by the receiving governing body or validating agency in a timely manner, including concurrence in the purpose of the gift (see further at Appendix A, Churchwide Mission Support, Item G.2.).

d. All recipients of validated mission funds are responsible for reporting all gifts received directly from Presbyterian contributors or donors to the validating governing body.

D. Validation of Mission

1. Validated mission is any project or program within the bounds of and approved by formal action of a session, presbytery, synod, or General Assembly that is consistent with the responsibilities assigned by the Form of Government, whether or not it is funded from the adopted budget of the governing body. Validated mission should cohere with the great ends of the Church (Book of Order, G-1.0200) and is determined in accord with the following provisions of the Book of Order:

- a. G-3.0000 The Church and Its Mission
- b. G-9.0404b The Nature of Presbyterian Polity
- c. G-10.0102 Session Responsibilities
- d. G-11.0304 Presbytery Budget
- e. G-12.0102 Synod Responsibilities
- f. G-13.0103 General Assembly Responsibilities.

2. Each and all governing bodies serve the mission of the whole church and thereby appropriately validate mission. Such validated mission may be commended to others but does not require their concurrence or support.

3. Validated mission may be within or beyond governing body budgets.

a. Validated Within Budget—projects or programs included in the adopted budget of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly, including projects that will be funded with Funding for General Mission and Funding for Specific Mission.

b. Validated Beyond Budget—projects or programs not included in adopted budgets, but validated by action of a session, presbytery, synod, or the General Assembly. The validating governing body may specify dollar and/or time limitations.

E. Accounting Definitions and Standards: Designated, Restricted, and Unrestricted Giving

1. For accounting purposes, the following definitions of designators, contributors, and donors are observed.

a. Designations may be made only by governing bodies. A designator has received funds from a contributor or donor and applies such funds to designated categories or items. A designator must be a governing body.

b. Contributors can be donors, governing bodies, or other sources of income. Contributors may make unrestricted or restricted gifts.

c. The term donor applies to persons or entities whose gifts are eligible for a tax deduction. Donors may make restricted gifts consistent with IRS regulations and acceptable to the receiving entity. Restrictions must be agreed to prior to the completion of the gift.

2. For accounting purposes, unrestricted giving and restricted giving are defined as follows:

Restricted giving refers to gifts with restrictions by a contributor or donor for use in support of a particular project, budget category, or appeal. The processing of restricted gifts will comply with the standards established by the processing of restricted and unrestricted gifts will comply with Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP) and Internal Revenue Service regulations. Unrestricted giving refers to gifts made without restriction and subject to the use and discretion of the receiving governing body.

a. Unrestricted giving remains foundational in the System of Giving. Through unrestricted giving, individuals and governing bodies share in support of the whole mission and ministry in which the church engages.

b. Restricted giving, such as churchwide special offerings and other specific appeals, is a valuable and important method of adding to unrestricted giving. Contributors wishing to use restricted giving are encouraged first to choose projects or categories within adopted budgets. Special offerings and other specific appeals are always restricted by their stated purpose.

(1) Each governing body must handle funds according to the donor's intention in giving the gift. If the intent cannot be honored, the gift must be returned.

(2) Clarity in this regard may on occasion require conversation and/or negotiation with donors even beyond the governing body where the gift is first received.

c. Restrictions on the use of gifts may come from a donor or a governing body making the gift but always require concurrence by the governing body or validated not-for-profit agency receiving the gift.

(1) A donor must relinquish control of a gift or it does not qualify for tax preference treatment and the receiving organization jeopardizes its tax-exempt status.

(2) When restricted gifts are accepted, they will always be used for the restricted purpose within designations approved by the governing body.

3. The obligations of designators are to:

a. honor restrictions that have been accepted or to consider permitting additional support of a project beyond its approved budget;

b. ensure conformity with all applicable civil law;

c. report back to all donors and contributors;

d. disburse money received within 60 days;

e. contact all donors or contributors if restricted giving cannot be used according to its restrictions—if restrictions cannot be met and the donors or contributors do not agree to the use of funds for other purposes, the gifts are to be returned to the donor.

4. Budgeting and Equalization

a. Funding of approved budgets is accomplished as follows:

(1) First, restricted funds are applied to the appropriate budget items.

(2) Then, unrestricted funds are applied toward fulfillment of all budget items.

(3) This use of unrestricted funds provides for equalization within a governing body's budget. This process supports the orderly planning and budgeting decisions of governing bodies while honoring appropriate restrictions and designations.

b. Sessions are encouraged to follow the division of mission support commitments adopted by their presbyteries. If a session does not follow these division agreements, a presbytery may seek to fulfill agreements through use of unrestricted funds—provided that such a policy is communicated to its sessions. This use of unrestricted funds provides for equalization among governing bodies. Churchwide special offerings and other specific appeals shall not be used to fulfill mission support commitments and are not subject to equalization.

F. Collection, Reporting, and Audits

1. Collection and Transmittal of Funds

a. The General Assembly will maintain financial records in accordance with Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP), and in compliance with all applicable accounting pronouncements and regulations specific to the not-for-profit industry. Software and systems will be appropriate to support compliance with the requirements stated above.

b. The General Assembly will observe the following minimum standards for its operations. It is expected that presbyteries and synods will also adopt and adhere to these same standards:

(1) Provide a detailed receipt to a contributor or congregation for all money received.

(2) Close monthly and remit funds within sixty days of receipt.

(3) Utilize the Federal Reserve system to expedite the transfer of funds whenever and wherever possible.

(4) Use a standardized, detailed transmittal format for transmitting data and funds electronically between presbyteries, synods, and the General Assembly.

(5) Establish and follow cash management policies and procedures that are designed to maximize cash management earnings.

2. Reporting

The General Assembly will provide financial information quarterly for receipt of funds from all sources, and this information will be posted to the PC(USA) Web site on the financial page.

a. Each presbytery and synod will be responsible for obtaining with remittances the detailed information required for disbursement.

b. Each presbytery and synod will report all giving on an approved information transmittal form to the General Assembly site no later than sixty days after receipt of funds.

c. The General Assembly will furnish to every presbytery and synod an annual information report on a church-by-church basis. This annual report will provide information for churches within a synod or presbytery bounds on all funds received by it for presbytery, synod, and General Assembly.

d. The General Assembly will furnish, in cooperation with the presbyteries, at least quarterly and not more often than monthly, an information report to every presbytery showing the agreed upon distribution of dollars (including the presbytery's mission support commitments) between the presbytery, synod, and the General Assembly as compared to the actual funds received. Should discrepancies exist, the General Assembly site will work with the reporting site to clarify and to effect the necessary changes and/or corrections.

3. Internal Audit

The General Assembly Council will establish an internal audit function involving a broad variety of audit services. Included among these are:

a. reviewing the reliability and integrity of financial information and how that information is identified, measured, classified, and reported;

b. reviewing the effectiveness and efficiency of particular financial management functions;

c. reviewing established internal control systems for efficiency and compliance;

d. reviewing compliance with internal policies and procedures;

e. reviewing financial statements contained in the annual report with management and the independent auditors to determine that the independent auditors are satisfied with the disclosure and content of the financial statements;

f. reviewing and recommending to the General Assembly Council Audit Committee, the independent auditors to be selected to audit the financial statements of the corporation; and

g. reporting of the Internal Audit Committee directly to the General Assembly Council.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY BUDGET DEVELOPMENT

A. Mission Budget Cycle

The Mission Budget will be developed in budget cycles. Each budget cycle will consist of two consecutive calendar years, where the first year is the year following a biennial General Assembly meeting (e.g., 2008 General Assembly, 2009/2010 budget cycle). A separate budget will be developed for each year within the cycle.

B. Basic Mission Direction

1. The Mission Work Plan is adopted by the General Assembly Council and provides the framework for the two-year budget cycle.

2. The ministry areas will develop proposals that will advance the Mission Work Plan.

3. The General Assembly Council will recommend a budget to the General Assembly that will provide the funding to fulfill the goals in the Mission Work Plan for the budget cycle.

C. The Proposed Budget

1. At the second General Assembly Council meeting of the year prior to the budget cycle, (e.g., May of 2008 for the 2009/2010 budget cycle), the General Assembly Council will review the budget presented by the Deputy Executive Director for Shared Services and recommend to the General Assembly a proposed budget for the budget cycle that embodies the Mission Work Plan and describing the work to be added or deleted as part of the recommendation. The Executive Committee will recommend a budget if, for any reason, the General Assembly Council does not make a recommendation.

2. At the General Assembly during the year before the budget cycle (e.g., 2008 General Assembly for the 2009/2010 budget cycle), the appropriate assembly committee of the General Assembly will receive the report of the Mission Work Plan and the proposed budget for approval and recommendation to the full assembly.

3. The appropriate assembly committee of the General Assembly will recommend a balanced budget for each year in the budget cycle, incorporating work from the proposed budget and overtures, commissioners' resolutions, and other actions of the General Assembly, for approval as the outline of work for the budget cycle. The General Assembly may make decisions to add or subtract any element to or from proposed budgets. The General Assembly Council will then make appropriate adjustments.

D. The Detailed Budget

1. Detailed Budget Development

a. Following the General Assembly and under the leadership of the Executive Committee, detailed implementation of the Mission Work Plan as approved by the General Assembly will be outlined, and work responsibility assigned.

b. Under the management of Shared Services and with specific involvement by the Ministry Areas, a detailed budget proposal that encompasses the work approved by the General Assembly will be developed for each year in the budget cycle.

2. Approval of the Detailed Budget

At its third meeting of the year prior to each budget cycle (e.g., September 2008 for the 2009/2010 budget cycle), the General Assembly Council will review both the detailed budget for the following year and the most up-to-date financial information. The General Assembly Council will review the adequacy of the Executive Committee's response to the General Assembly directives in the adopted budget and, after any necessary changes, approve the detailed budget for the following year with particular expenditures by organizational entity displaying both budget offices and relatedness to the basic Mission Work Plan.

E. Budget Monitoring

1. The General Assembly Council will monitor the accomplishment of the Mission Work Plan and the appropriate expenditure of funds throughout the budget cycle.

2. The General Assembly Council will report to each biennial General Assembly on the results of the work undertaken during the previous two budget years (e.g., 2008 General Assembly for budget years 2006 and 2007), including full disclosure of the financial results of each year and other information related to the financial condition of the church. These two budget years will not be within the same budget cycle.

F. Roles and Responsibilities in Developing Budgets

1. The General Assembly does the following:

- a. Determines churchwide mission goals upon which budget development will be based.
- b. Has the authority to institute and terminate programmatic emphases and activity.
- c. Upon recommendation from the General Assembly Council, approves both the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and the Per Capita Budget.

2. The General Assembly Council does the following:

- a. Implements General Assembly decisions regarding (1) Mission Work Plan goals and objectives and (2) programmatic activity.
- b. Recommends a Mission Work Plan for each budget year to the General Assembly, after appropriate consultation.
- c. Presents the budget to the General Assembly.
- d. Approves detailed budgets based upon General Assembly action.
- e. Oversees programmatic activity funded through the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and General Assembly Council related work from the Per Capita Budget.

3. The Deputy Executive Director for Shared Services is responsible for the following:
  - a. Manages the process for budget development.
  - b. Prepares budget presentations for both the General Assembly Council and the General Assembly.
4. The Deputy Executive Director for Mission is responsible for the following:
  - a. Prepare descriptions of programmatic activities in appropriate form for budget consideration, reflecting the adopted Mission Work Plan goals.
  - b. Develop detailed budgets based on budget allocations made by the General Assembly and as instructed by the General Assembly Council.

G. Per Capita Budget

The General Assembly Council and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) jointly have responsibility for developing a per capita budget and apportionment for recommendation to the General Assembly. The per capita budget will be prepared using timelines similar to those for the General Assembly mission budget.

SHARED SERVICES

Shared Services is accountable to the Executive Director and carries out the following responsibilities.

- A. To provide accounting and reporting services for
  1. the General Assembly Council, its Ministry Areas, and certain related bodies and committees;
  2. the Office of the General Assembly;
  3. other entities as requested on a fee-for-service basis; and
  4. synod, presbytery, and session finance officers, as appropriate.
- B. To perform and establish policies and procedures for the following functions of
  1. controller/financial accounting controls, general ledger maintenance, general accounting, financial reporting, accounts payable, accounts receivable, church and student loans, payroll, budgeting, fixed asset management, overseas accounting, inventory control, and project accounting;

- E. To prepare and present the annual report of the Statement of Financial Position, Statement of Activities and Changes in Net Assets, and Statement of Cash Flows of the General Assembly that will be audited by a certified public accountant and presented to the General Assembly.

Item 08-13

[The assembly approved Item 08-13 as amended. See pp. 22, 24.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) set aside a Season of [Mission] Interpretation—a period of time each year, beginning in 2009—for the church to covenant to interpret and promote its work in the context of the mission programs of the local, regional, and national governing bodies of the PC(USA). During this season of interpretation, the stories of our ~~participation in~~ [furthering] the Realm (Kingdom) of God would be presented as an integrated whole with international, national, regional, and local missions all working together to the glory of God.

Rationale

A quick analysis of current giving trends reveals that the areas most consistently demonstrating growth are those successfully engaging the giver. The traditional system of Presbyterian mission support relies primarily on appealing to the giver's loyalty to the institution. It says, "Give because you are a Presbyterian!" rather than, "Give because your gifts can change lives and further the Realm (Kingdom) of God here on earth." A new approach would require the church to interpret the mission program of the church for potential givers. This approach would not discount traditional stewardship but would highlight and promote the concept of giving as a form of Christian discipleship. Presbyterians would be reminded of their participation in the eschatological reality of God at work in their lives and in God's world through stories that demonstrate the advance of Christ's mission.

This churchwide period of interpretation and celebration would be a collaborative effort wherein governing bodies would partner across all levels of the church. Each governing body would help promote and interpret not only its particular mission emphasis, but also that of its related governing body partners. For example, during this season, a particular presbytery would not only be promoting its work and mission to its congregations it would participate in facilitating the promotion and celebration of the work and mission of its synod and of the General Assembly.

This season of interpretation should not be confused with earlier patterns of mission interpretation and promotion within the church, such as the Witness Season or the Witness Offering. The Witness Season was an annual period of mission education observed in many congregations, with a different geographical focus on international mission each year. In many congregations this was accompanied by a Witness Offering, a special offering that received funds for international mission, evangelism and new church development, and educational materials for racial ethnic congregations.

The season of interpretation called for in this recommendation will not be part of a special offering, and will not be focused on one specific understanding of mission. Instead, it will focus on the broad sense of mission, defined earlier in this paper: "proclaiming the Gospel in word and deed, locally, regionally, nationally, and internationally."

Item 08-14

[The assembly approved Item 08-14. See pp. 22, 24.]

Item 08-15

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) ratify the following recommendation regarding the Church Extension Fund:

That the Executive Committee of the General Assembly Council (hereinafter “GAC”) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) act for the General Assembly between the biennial meetings of the General Assembly to direct the Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (hereinafter the “Board or BNM”), a constituent corporation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (hereinafter the “Foundation”), to modify the restriction on a fund of the Board known as the Church Extension Fund, fund number 201330, (hereinafter the “Fund”) to change the restriction for the use of the fund as follows:

FROM:

“For grants for new church development or church extension situations involving an expanded community development, to be used for sites, manse, or church aid, with first or second mortgage security, and other terms, comparable to the original terms for which these funds were raised.”

TO:

“For church extension purposes which are defined as loans to particular churches and presbyteries for site purchase, building, or renovation purposes and grants to particular churches and presbyteries for projects associated with organizing new congregations, transforming existing congregations, or developing congregational-based ministries that reflect the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to inclusiveness, diversity, and ecumenicity. Salaries of staff at presbyteries and particular churches are included in the definition of church extension to the extent and proportion such staff members are performing this mission. Salaries of staff administering the church extension program at the General Assembly level via the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation in proportion to such staff’s activities to support church extension programs are considered to be operating expenses payable from the Fund.”

Rationale

This recommendation was approved by the General Assembly Council Executive Committee during its July 2007 retreat meeting and ratified by the General Assembly Council during its meeting of September 2007.

Item 08-16

[The assembly approved Item 08-16 with amendment. See pp. 23, 24.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) direct the General Assembly Council to create a review committee, with each agency reviewed having a voice on the review committee, to review the service of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its permanent, advocacy, and advisory committees as related to the General Assembly Council, by

1. examining the interaction, cooperation between such committees and commissions, as well as their scope and authority;
2. the collective role each contribute complementing and implementing the General Assembly’s total mission program or directives; and
3. report findings and recommendations to 219th General Assembly (2010).

[Original Financial Implications: (2008): $220; (2009): $13,980; (2010): $8,715 (Per Capita-GAC)] [Committee Action Financial Implications: (2008): $290; (2009): $18,430; (2010): $10,960 (Per Capita-GAC)]

Rationale

The Organization for Mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) sets forth that the permanent, advocacy, and advisory committees and commissions will be reviewed based on a six-year cycle by a review committee of the General Assembly using the Standards for Review of General Assembly Permanent, Advocacy, and Advisory Committees and Commissions in the Guidelines and Policies of the General Assembly (Section IV.D.2). Such reviews focus on the particular mission and responsibilities of the entity under review in each particular year. There is no mechanism in the current system of review that is charged with the responsibility to periodically examine, evaluate, and effect recommendations for overall coordination and effectiveness such entities portray as one part in the whole body of the church in its total mission program.

Such a review should focus broadly on the mission and role of these entities to the whole of the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and determine the degree to which these entities work cooperatively and identify where duplication, gaps, or overlap of responsibilities reside. Upon completion of the review, findings and recommendations shall be reported to a subsequent General Assembly for consideration and approval of remedies.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-16

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-16—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 08-16 on proposing that the 218th General Assembly (2008) direct the GAC to create a review committee to review GAC's Advisory and Advocacy Committees—From the General Assembly Council.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) respectfully offers its concerned comments as follows:

1. The 205th General Assembly (1993) approved creation of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC). Subsequently, the 206th General Assembly (1994), took confirming and clarifying action regarding the advocacy/advisory committees, which actions provided the basis for ACREC's purpose statement: "To ensure advocacy and monitoring functions in the areas of Racial Ethnic Ministries and Women's Ministries the General Assembly provides for the ACREC and ACWC. These two advocacy committees work in close cooperation with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. All three groups have direct access in the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council." Further, with regard to this direct access to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council (GAC), various editions (including the current form) of the GAC Manual of Operations clearly acknowledge: "Access shall be in the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, racial involvement reports, a yearly narrative report, Advice and Counsel Memoranda, and other appropriate correspondence. Advice and Counsel Memoranda shall be developed in conversation with the other advisory and advocacy committees as appropriate. The Committee (ACREC) shall submit its General Assembly report to the GAC Executive Committee's Procedures Committee for review and possible comments by the GAC."

2. Item 08-16 erroneously seems to assume that the General Assembly's advocacy and advisory committees (including ACREC) are entities of the GAC, and are directly and fully accountable to the GAC. However, such suggestions and assumptions are neither historically nor constitutionally correct, unless or until or if at all the General Assembly should decide to the contrary. Rather than accountability of ACREC to the GAC, what is clear, in ongoing editions of the GAC and ACREC Manuals of Operation, is the mutual understanding that these two separate entities should maintain open, two-way lines of connection, communication, coordination, and cooperation. This defines a partnership relation between ACREC and GAC rather than an accountability relationship of ACREC to GAC.

3. The realities of history, constitution, and form and function run counter to and make it inappropriate for a GAC review committee to review the mission and ministries of ACREC or the other advocacy and advisory committees and then to submit to a subsequent General Assembly its findings and recommendations about these mandated committees of the General Assembly. Further, by way of the six-year cycle of reviews conducted by the General Assembly itself, ACREC has submitted its required self-study report, together with its required agency summary, to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

4. The ACREC, ACWC, and ACSWP are each entitled to one, non-voting—with voice—corresponding member at the GAC table. That current arrangement would ultimately restrict ACREC's direct access to and partnership with GAC in the work of the proposed review committee, unless the advocacy and advisory committees were assured of having one member from each entity appointed as participants with full voice and vote on such a review committee.

5. Altogether, Item 08-16 has the potential to contravene and squelch ACREC's General Assembly mandated responsibilities with and for the whole church, namely, to monitor and provide advice and counsel on all racial ethnic matters in the whole life of the whole church. Further, most potentially endangered is ACREC's General Assembly assigned responsibility:

“Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing issues of racial ethnic concerns.” In its wisdom, the General Assembly created ACREC with enough freedom to maintain a strong prophetic witness by being directly and fully accountable to the assembly itself rather than to the GAC or any other agency of the church.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-16

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-16—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) concurs in the advice of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) on Item 08-16, with the following suggestion for a recommendation:

Recommendation: That the 218th General Assembly (2008) authorize the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to combine its self-review with participation in the proposed overall review, if approved, as has been recommended for two other bodies of the General Assembly (the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation and the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc.).

Rationale

Formative understandings of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy’s (ACSWP) role, which would be part of its 2010 review process, go back to the 1936 General Assembly that established a group of “consecrated” advocates for justice from two of the then-multiple boards of the church, the Board of National Missions and the Board of Christian Education, to be elected as a committee on “Social Education and Action.” Later versions of this committee included the Advisory Council on Church & Society; staff have served at different levels in the church’s administrative structure. Thus ACSWP recognizes the wisdom of reviewing periodically the overall work of policy and program-related bodies in the church, acknowledging that a strong component of theological and ethical analysis is needed to evaluate any part of the church’s mission structure. The Presbyterian church’s tradition of social teaching long antedates 1936, of course, but our commitment to be a church that both studies issues carefully and then takes bold action should not be taken for granted.

The General Assembly Council (GAC) recommendation wisely places the General Assembly-related entities in relationship to the whole church, which is properly related to the General Assembly. In practice, over the years, the agencies of the General Assembly have complemented, not duplicated, the work of congregations and other councils of the church. The role of prophetic witness has been institutionalized in most Protestant as well as Roman Catholic and Orthodox Churches; what is important in Presbyterian tradition is the independence of voice of the “prophetic” bodies in their relation to our primary representative body, the General Assembly. The mandates of ACSWP and the advocacy committees have also been to work on a collegial basis rather than as an on-staff body of experts, so that there is debate and outreach within the formation of policy by elected members. The 1993 renewed charter, Why and How the Church Makes a Social Witness, is in fact based on the concept of discernment and the work of the Holy Spirit. At the same time, it looks at the place of the prophetic in all parts of the church, including the inclusion of prophetic elements in almost all primarily pastoral ministries.

The GAC’s own recent reorganization was aided by secular resources such as the book, From Good to Great: The Social Sectors, which recommends that everything done by organizations be measured by appropriate criteria. These criteria or categories for assessment are necessarily theological and ethical when it comes to the church. Yet it is also the calling of the church to apply the teachings of Christ to the larger society; we pray that ACSWP and the advocacy committees may always serve that call.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 08-16

Advice and Counsel on Item 08-16—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 08-16 asks the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the General Assembly Council to create a review committee that will review the service of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the General Assembly permanent, advocacy, and advisory committees and commissions.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) concurs with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic (ACREC)’s comments.

Item 08-17

[The assembly approved Item 08-17. See pp. 22, 24.]

On Responsible Purchasing—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Affirm the work of the PC(USA) and Presbyterian Women in their efforts to become responsible consumers in the global economy by occasional procurement of sweatshop-free (sweatfree) and fair trade products, despite the lack of a PC(USA) purchasing policy related to sweatshops.
2. Affirm the existing PC(USA) ethical purchasing policies that prioritize procurement from racial ethnic minority and women-led vendors and suppliers.
3. Request that the General Assembly Council formally endorse the formation of the State and Local Government Sweatfree Consortium ending taxpayer support for sweatshops.
4. Request that the General Assembly Council encourage congregations and presbyteries to actively lobby their respective state and local governments to join the Sweatfree Consortium.
5. Direct the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council to make a good faith effort to purchase products sourced from vendors and manufacturers that observe internationally accepted labor standards, respect internationally established health and safety standards, and provide benefits in accordance with local law or the industry standard (whichever is higher), and a non-poverty wage. Apparel will be the initial focus since it is known for child labor and sweatshop conditions, and accordingly it is a closely studied industry, and should be extended to other products as non-sweatshop sources become available. The Sweatfree Consortium once formed, will generate resources that will help PC(USA) implement and enforce its sweatfree policy.
6. When information assuring compliance with these standards is not readily available from the supplier or independent monitor, request that the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council not contract for goods and services unless the provider is able to demonstrate active pursuit of compliance with the above practices. SweatFree Communities and the Sweatfree Consortium will maintain a list of noncompliant suppliers that fail to meet the criteria. Termination of relationships with vendors or manufacturers should be used only as a final option after thorough efforts to correct violations have failed. At the same time, brands or manufacturers who are unwilling to work towards compliance with such standards should not continue to supply goods to affiliates. Therefore, the consortium will assist affiliates in identifying brands and manufacturers that repeatedly refuse to take appropriate corrective action in response to consortium recommendations. Affiliates may require that bidders for applicable contracts not use companies or facilities on this list to supply goods.
7. Direct the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council to, whenever possible, purchase from factories and vendors whose production adheres to U.S. or country-of-origin environmental standards. The National Green Pages and the Responsible Purchasing Network's purchasing guide provide lists of screened and approved 'green' suppliers.
8. Request that the General Assembly Council encourage congregations, presbyteries, camps, conferences, and other entities of the PC(USA) to adopt the responsible purchasing policy or design one of their own that upholds these principles.
9. Request that all Presbyterians practice responsible consumerism, beginning with simplicity and non-acquisition whenever possible and responsible purchasing, including sweatfree and ecologically sound products where purchase is necessary. This would include a preference for locally produced products and food.

Rationale

Our biblical tradition tells story after story of the ethical imperative to stand on behalf of those who are voiceless and who find themselves on the economic margins of society. International partners of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in different parts of the world have expressed concern that multinational corporations move production facilities to areas where labor is cheapest and environmental safeguards are weakest. Production facilities may not stay for long as industry competition and higher profits compel them to shift to other countries. While primarily young women may find temporary employment, local communities often experience negative influences, such as child labor, insufficient or un-enforced worker protections, forced overtime labor, lack of freedom of association, and short- and long-term environmental degradation and health impacts.

In response, as far back as the 192nd General Assembly 1980, the Presbyterian church has been developing practices that support a safe and just working environment for the workers of the global factory, as evidenced in Theological Affirmations on Labor Relations from Biblical Perspectives, The Principles of Vocation and Work that are a part of “God’s Work in Our Hands” affirmed by the 207th General Assembly (1995), and the Call for a Workplace Code of Conduct by the 209th General Assembly (1997).

The General Assembly also has been a consistent and strong voice for protecting creation. This resolution is in line with that history, as evidenced by documents like the “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” of the 202nd General Assembly (1990), and “Hope for a Global Future: Toward a Just and Sustainable Human Development” of the 208th General Assembly (1996).

During the last decade, many U.S.- and European-based multinational corporations have worked to implement codes of conduct as an expression of their ethical commitment as corporate citizens. They have done this in response to increasing concerns from their customers and shareholders that their products and services represent humane and environmentally sound production processes throughout the supply chain.

Many Presbyterians work within and have leadership positions in multinational corporations, offering the PC(USA) a unique opportunity to encourage the use of standards of conduct that can offer clear guidance to companies desiring to be good corporate citizens in the global community.

Additionally, the PC(USA) and its membership are significant customers of the goods and services of the global economy. The church has already established an effective program called “Enough for Everyone” that encourages Presbyterian entities to be conscientious consumers of responsibly produced products. The Presbyterian Hunger Program of the PC(USA) has worked with Enough for Everyone to develop a public disclosure and code of conduct for the Sweat-Free T component of Enough for Everyone, and this resolution calls on the expansion of this work. This resolution would also support the work already being done by the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to encourage independent monitoring of compliance with business codes of conduct. Good work is already being carried out in this area by many faith communities. For good counsel, refer to Cherokee Presbytery, which has passed a similar sweatfree resolution, or to several Catholic dioceses across the country and in Canada that have already or are developing similar standards to inform their purchasing of school uniforms.

In short, this resolution translates our words and beliefs into actions that demonstrate our Christian values and our individual and corporate attempts to live the Gospel in our everyday lives.

Independent Monitoring

There are excellent, truly independent monitoring organizations, such as COVERCO in Guatemala, which PC(USA) missionary Dennis Smith has been intimately involved. The formation of the SweatFree Consortium, in particular, by Sweat-Free Communities will advance work in this regard. The Presbyterian Hunger Program has been active on the SweatFree Communities (SFC) board of directors since its establishment in 2003. The SFC is widely respected in the United States and around the world among those working on improving conditions in export processing zones and assembly factories. The Sweatfree Consortium is an important next step in creating greater demand for sweatfree products and ensuring that conditions for workers improve in identified factories.

The SweatFree Consortium will identify and screen potential SweatFree supplier factories using the Designated Suppliers Program as the model. More than thirty public and private universities have issued official policy statements in support of the Designated Suppliers Program. According to the rules of this program, university logo apparel must be sourced from a set of designated supplier factories that have demonstrated full and consistent respect for the rights of their employees.

In addition to respect for the standards currently included in university codes of conduct, these factories are required to meet two additional standards: payment of a living wage—once they receive prices sufficient to make this feasible—and demonstrable respect for the right of association. The latter can be evidenced by the presence of a legitimate, representative union or other representative employee body, or by proactive steps to create an environment in which workers can make a genuinely free choice about unionization. University licensees must pay these factories sufficient prices to allow them to pay living wages to workers and achieve other fair labor standards; licensees are also expected to maintain long-term relationships with these factories in order to create a reasonable degree of financial stability and job security. The factories will produce primarily or exclusively for the university logo goods market. For more information: <http://www.workersrights.org/dsp.asp>

Comment on Item 08-17—From the General Assembly Council (GAC).

The General Assembly Council appreciates the concerns about responsible purchasing expressed in this overture. While the PC(USA) has not had a sweatshop-free purchasing policy, it has been the practice of PC(USA) Purchasing Services to purchase sweatshop-free items whenever possible. In 2007, Purchasing Services processed purchases of apparel totaling $258,804. Of that total $183,079 was purchased from the Fair Trade Zone (a sweatshop-free women's sewing cooperative) in Nicaragua that partners with Enough for Everyone, a ministry of the Presbyterian Hunger Program, comprising a total of 70 percent of apparel purchases. Purchasing Services will continue its practice of increasing the percentage of sweatshop-free purchases as an annual goal.

Purchasing Services will utilize the resources suggested in this overture to source suppliers that provide sweat free and ecologically sound products. Purchasing Services will also work with Enough for Everyone to provide preferred supplier information to staff at the Presbyterian Center that meet ethical, minority vendor policy, sweat free, and ecologically sound products.

The ministries of the General Assembly Council will continue to encourage Presbyterians to practice responsible consumerism and Enough for Everyone will provide access to sweat free, ecologically sound, and fairly traded products.

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in concurrence with the GAC Executive Committee, recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) make the following amendments to Section IV. of the Organization for Mission:

1. Amend Section IV.A.5., Regular Reporting: Accountability of the Moderator and Vice Moderator, as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC) shall assist the General Assembly in ensuring the accountability of the Moderator and Vice Moderator of the General Assembly by receiving and reviewing, at each of their stated meetings, a written report from the Moderator and Vice Moderator. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall also report at each stated meeting of the General Assembly Council.”

Rationale

This revision reflects the current reality of how the Moderator and the Vice Moderator relate to COGA and GAC. The Vice Moderator of the General Assembly is not a member of the General Assembly Council.

2. Amend Section IV.B.2.h., Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“h. The Stated Clerk shall be a corresponding member of the General Assembly Council, and a nonvoting member of its Worldwide Ministries Division. He or she shall be a member of any other body responsible for coordinating, formulating, or implementing the ecumenical and interfaith policies and programs of the General Assembly.”

Rationale

The Worldwide Ministries Division no longer exists under the new structure. Corresponding members of the General Assembly Council are able to attend any committee meeting that is of interest to them.

3. Amend Section IV.C.7.b., Committee on Ecumenical Relations, as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“b. The Committee on Ecumenical Relations shall be composed of twenty members. Twelve shall be members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) nominated for at-large positions by the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) and elected by the General Assembly in as nearly equal classes as possible. Four shall be members of four churches invited by the Stated Clerk to appoint one member each from their communion to serve as voting members of the committee. One of the four churches shall be one of our ecumenical church partners. The other three shall be our full communion partners. One member shall be appointed by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. One member shall be appointed by the General Assembly Council. The other members of the committee shall be the Stated Clerk or the Associate Stated Clerk for Ecumenical Relations and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council or ~~the Associate Director of Ecumenical Partnerships of the Worldwide Ministries Division, both serving ex officio with vote designee.~~

~~“In addition, the directors of the three divisions of the General Assembly Council shall be corresponding members without vote. In addition, the following GAC persons may be corresponding members: the Deputy Executive Director for Mission and up to three ministry directors appointed by the Deputy Executive Director for Mission.”~~

Rationale

The positions listed in these paragraphs no longer exist under the new GAC structure. New wording brings the membership up-to-date with the new structure.

Overall Rationale

Section IV.E. of the Organization for Mission states:

“E. Proposed amendments to this Section IV of the Organization for Mission from related bodies or from within the Office of the General Assembly, shall be submitted to the Committee on the General Assembly (COGA). The COGA shall review these proposed changes and forward those it approves as part of its report to the General Assembly.”

Item 08-20

[The assembly approved Item 08-20. See pp. 22, 24.]

As a result of the Worldwide Mission Consultation, “Renewed Call to Presbyterian Mission in the World! Dialogue for Our Shared Future” that was held January 16–18, 2008, in Dallas, Texas, the Moderator, together with the Stated Clerk and the General Assembly Council, recommend that the 218th General Assembly (2008) invite the sessions, middle governing bodies, seminaries, General Assembly Council ministries areas, and all PC(USA)-related mission organizations to affirm and adopt the following invitation:

An Invitation to Expanding Partnership in God’s Mission

As members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) committed to God’s mission, accompanied by global partners, we gathered together January 16–18, 2008, in Dallas, Texas. We acknowledge the rich Presbyterian heritage in world mission and reaffirm the Presbyterian understanding of God’s mission as it is expressed in “Gathering for God’s Future,”

The Good News of Jesus Christ is to be shared with the whole world. As disciples of Jesus Christ, each of us in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is sent into the world to join God’s mission. As individuals and as a church, we are called to be faithful in this discipleship. Our mission is centered in the triune God. Our mission is God-called, Christ-centered, and Spirit-led. Our mission is both proclamation and service; it is the reason the church exists. ...

Our renewed call from God is to face the challenges of witnessing and evangelizing worldwide, equipping the church for transforming mission, engaging in ministries of reconciliation, justice, healing and grace, and living the Good News of Jesus Christ in community with people who are poor, [persecuted, and living in the midst of violence]...

The church is part of God’s plan. We are called into the community of the church, and we call new disciples into that community. With Christ as our head, the church community exists for the sake of God’s mission. We learn to serve in mission in a way that is faithful to the triune God. We are to model the kind of community God intends for all humanity. To be the church is to be one large mission society. [PC(USA), “Gathering for God’s Future: Witness, Discipleship, Community: A Renewed Call to Worldwide Mission,” 2003, pp. 1, 16. Text in brackets is added.]

Grounded in this theological foundation we realize that God is calling us to new patterns of mission. The world has changed, and the majority of the world’s Christians are now in Latin America, Africa, and Asia. The great growth and mission faithfulness of the Church outside the West invite us into a new posture. We must listen and learn to receive. We must also be open to new patterns of collaboration. These new patterns involve new cooperation and partnerships within the PC(USA).

I. We recognize that God calls us to mission that is grounded in confession of our sins, grows out of a life of prayer and is sustained in worship. Therefore, we covenant to live and serve together in God's mission according to the following values:

1. Trusting in the Holy Spirit and trusting in one another as each discerns how God is moving us in mission. (Acts 10)
2. Doing mission in the way of Jesus who humbled himself, showing the way of self-giving and self-emptying. (Philippians 2)
3. Seeking to be faithful to God as we live and proclaim the fullness of Jesus Christ's good news; personal witness to those outside the church, justice for the oppressed, and compassion for those in need. We accompany others in their efforts to be faithful. (Luke 4)
4. Affirming the complementary nature of God's gifts to all in the one body of Christ and encouraging one another in living out those gifts. (1 Corinthians 12)
5. Recognizing our responsibility to each other by communicating openly, acting transparently, and speaking and hearing the truth in love. (Ephesians 4)
6. Striving in our mission to be aware of the context out of which we come, to respect the persons with whom we labor, and to honor the context in which they live. In an era of massive global inequalities we commit ourselves to be sensitive to and address the issues of power that result from our differences. (Philippians 2)
7. Valuing long-term relationships, partnerships characterized by perseverance and long-term commitments, which support and encourage global partners. (1 Thessalonians 2)

II. We seek to live out these mission values with humility, integrity, and steadfastness. Recognizing that God invites us all to be full participants in God's mission, we commit ourselves to work cooperatively with one another in the following ways:

1. We will affirm and encourage World Mission as it continues to move from a regulatory role to a more enabling and equipping role.
2. We will celebrate and encourage diverse Presbyterian approaches and structures for mission while maintaining the unity of our participation in God's mission.
3. We will share responsibility for the education and preparation of all Presbyterians for mission.
4. We commit ourselves to seeking more mission personnel who will serve long-term in cross-cultural contexts through the PC(USA), and to supporting them fully.
5. We commit ourselves to enabling and supporting our global partners as they send their mission personnel in cross-cultural service.
6. We recognize and affirm the growing opportunity for cross-cultural mission in our own increasingly pluralistic and multicultural society, and we receive the global community from near and far as mission partners and God's gift to us. We seek increased integration between local and global mission.

III. As we move forward together in God's mission, we commit ourselves to calling the church to ongoing intercessory prayer for God's mission and to the following tasks:

1. We will form a coordinating committee to ensure that we will meet together to share and cooperate on a regular basis.
2. During the coming year we will work to address two immediate priorities:
  - a. to coordinate and collaborate in the sending of mission personnel;

b. to expand Presbyterian funding for mission personnel.

3. During the next three months we will share this document and invitation with our constituencies.

IV. With bold humility we invite those who would covenant with us to join in this new collaborative model of Presbyterian mission, and we ask for encouragement, for guidance and for prayer, remembering Jesus' own prayer:

The glory that you have given me I have given them, so that they may be one, as we are one, I in them and you in me, that they may become completely one, so that the world may know that you have sent me and have loved them even as you have loved me. (John 17:22-23)

Rationale

This recommendation is in response to the 2006 Referral: Commissioners' Resolution 08-17 On the Moderator Convening a Meeting Regarding the Worldwide Mission work of the PC (USA)—(Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 36-37, 746-47). The Moderator, together with the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council, convened a consultation at the Preston Hollow Presbyterian Church in Dallas, Texas, from 16-18 January. The invitations resulted from that consultation. The consultation brought together sixty-four mission leaders from the Outreach Foundation, the Presbyterian Frontier Fellowship, the Medical Benevolence Foundation, other Presbyterian-related mission organizations, global partners, and World Mission, Racial Ethnic, Women and Presbyterian Women, and Relief and Development staff to consider the common values that should characterize Presbyterian mission work around the world and to propose new ways to work together in ways that are more effective and faithful.

The undersigned, as individuals, joined in the covenant, and encouraged the organizations they serve to affirm it as well. Signed January 18, 2008.

Item 08-21

[In response to Item 08-21, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 22, 24–25.]

Inquiry from the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

[The advisory opinion of the Stated Clerk is attached hereto, as Appendix A.]

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) answer Item 08-21 with the following response:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends to the 218th General Assembly (2008) that the advisory opinion issued by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, July 2, 2007, Re. Modification of Restrictions of Funds is in accordance with the general principles set forth in the above Findings and correctly details the responsibilities and authority of the General Assembly Council (GAC) and the Foundation with respect to the handling of restricted funds of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and disbursements from those funds. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution further recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) should:

1. Approve the advisory opinion of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, dated July 2, 2007, titled “Re: Modifications of Restrictions on Funds.”

“39.019

“C. Once the documentation is complete, the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council and the president/chief executive officer of the Foundation will review the situation, bringing in appropriate staff and elected persons as required. It is expected that this review process will lead to a joint determination as to whether or not a proper expenditure has been made. If this process does not result in a joint determination, the ~~Foundation board~~ General Assembly or its designee will make the final determination.”

3. Designate the General Assembly Council to make the “final determination” on its behalf in the interim between meetings of the General Assembly.

Alternate Resolution Approved

“Introduction

“The purpose of the General Assembly Council (the “GAC”), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) A Corporation, and the Presbyterian Foundation (the “Foundation”) is to serve our Lord by strengthening the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

“The GAC and the Foundation have presented to this General Assembly their disagreement on issues concerning the appropriate expenditure of restricted funds for the mission of the church. The GAC and the Foundation have come to the General Assembly seeking direction and the hope for reconciliation.

“The Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination and Budgets, with the concurrence of the General Assembly Council and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, recommends that General Assembly answer Item 08-21 by providing a mechanism to resolve disputes and enhance collaboration between the two agencies as follows:

“A. The Foundation and the GAC

“1. The Foundation and the GAC covenant to work together in good faith to continue to resolve disputes with respect to the restricted nature of particular funds or other disputes pertaining to intended or planned use and expenditures of restricted funds in compliance with the procedures set forth in Section 39.019 of the 1996 Joint Report. The final sentence of Section C of 39.019 shall not apply. If the process set forth in Section 39.019 does not result in resolution, then the issue shall be promptly referred by the Foundation president or the Executive Director of the GAC to the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) as defined below. Both agencies will be afforded the opportunity to present information in support of their respective positions to the Restricted Funds Resolution Committee for its consideration. The RFRC will analyze the issue raised and will have the ability to seek the input of outside resources. The Foundation and the GAC shall each bear their own expenses associated with the RFRC process and shall equally share the expenses of the committee's work.

"2. It is essential for the agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to model Christ-like behavior for the church. Requiring the General Assembly to make broad policy decisions to manage discrete and particular issues is not healthy or appropriate. We instruct both boards to thoroughly explore ways to improve collegiality and require that the staff of both agencies honor the jointly agreed business processes.

"B. *The Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC)

"1. The Moderator of the 218th General Assembly (2008) shall appoint a Restricted Funds Resolution Committee (RFRC) comprised of:

- "• two representatives designated by the Foundation Board;
- "• two representatives designated by the General Assembly Council; and,
- "• three persons appointed by the Moderator who are not involved in either agency, and have an understanding of the applicable principles in both Reformed theology and civil law.

"2. Guiding Principles: In conducting its review, the Restricted Fund Resolution Committee will be guided by the following principles. Pursuant to the 1986 Deliverances, the missional responsibility and the fiduciary responsibility under civil law rests with the General Assembly. Thus, all the agencies of the General Assembly (GA) are bound to follow the directives and priorities of the GA. The GA vests the responsibility for implementation of program-related mission with the GAC, and the Foundation pledges to respect that role. The GA vests the responsibility for fiduciary review in the Foundation, and the GAC pledges to respect that role. Both the Foundation and the GAC must comply with applicable laws.

"3. The Foundation and the GAC recognize and celebrate that the substantial majority of funds which they together disburse to beneficiaries for the mission of the church are handled cooperatively, collegially, and efficiently and without disagreement.

"4. The RFRC shall create a process to be used should an issue not be resolved in accordance with the 1996 agreement. The RFRC shall specifically recognize and address the fiduciary responsibilities by which the Foundation and the GAC are required to operate under civil law, and where issues remain disputed, the Foundation and the GAC shall file a cy pres or other equivalent action in the appropriate court.

"C. The need for the RFRC to continue, the resolution of the respective roles and responsibilities of the Foundation and the GAC, as well as the manner in which they are carried out shall be included as items of business for the Six Agency Review Committee (see Item 08-22) to handle.

"D. The Foundation and GAC, with the RFRC, shall jointly report their progress in reconciling these issues to the 219th General Assembly (2010)."

Question Received

To: Advisory Committee on the Constitution
From: Linda Valentine
Date: February 22, 2008
RE: Question _____

Over the course of my time as Executive Director of the General Assembly Council, my office has regularly corresponded with the Presbyterian Foundation regarding the appropriate use of a number of types of restricted funds. One of those conversations resulted in both entities requesting an opinion from the Stated Clerk. I would appreciate the Advisory Committee reviewing the Clerk's Advisory Opinion (attached) and either confirming his determinations or propose what the Committee determines to be the roles each of the entities plays in making decisions regarding appropriate uses of the various types of restricted funds. While the question posed to the Stated Clerk referred to one particular fund, the Church Extension Fund, I ask that the Advisory Committee give its guidance as the general principles that the Stated Clerk applies to the three categories of funds he names: restrictions imposed by the original donor, restrictions imposed by the General Assembly itself, and restrictions imposed by an entity of the General Assembly.

If you need further clarification or have any questions, please do not hesitate to call me.

Attachment (Advisory Opinion) [See Appendix A.]

Rationale

The General Assembly (GA) is ultimately responsible for determining and directing the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (G-13.0103a). The Presbyterian Foundation (Foundation) and the General Assembly Council (GAC) are entities of the GA, subject to its direction, oversight, and control (G-13.0103h). The members of the Foundation and the GAC are elected by the GA. The GA sets policy for church mission and determines how mission funds should be spent (G-13.0103b). The authority for making such decisions may be delegated by the GA to a GA entity (G-9.0403). The authority to determine mission policy and direction carries with it ultimate authority over mission funds.

The role of the Foundation is to manage funds of the GA entrusted to the Foundation. Those funds are to be used to support the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Foundation has the fiduciary responsibility to see that the funds entrusted to it are protected and productive. The responsibility for managing funds does not by itself grant authority to determine how or for what purposes those funds are dispersed. The Foundation may be likened to the treasurer of an organization who can tell the directors of that organization how much money they have to spend. The treasurer can write checks upon orders from the directors but has no authority to spend the funds of the organization without such orders. Another analogy may be that of a separate board of trustees and a session. It is the obligation of the board of trustees to manage the church's money, but the session has the authority to determine the mission of the congregation and to direct how the money of the church shall be spent in support of that mission. The trustees can only disburse funds placed in their care at the direction of the session.

Some funds held by the Foundation are restricted, others are not. Funds may have been restricted by the donor, by the GA, or by an entity of the GA. Restrictions by the donor may be accomplished by the directive of the donor or by the terms of the solicitation of the funds. When funds are restricted, they may be spent only for the purposes stated in the restriction. Funds may be donated or solicited for general purposes, in which case they may be spent for any purpose that fulfills the mission of the church. Restrictions may be determined by the GA or by an entity of the GA upon delegation of authority.

The Stated Clerk obtained legal advice from counsel, which is set forth, in part, as follows: Both the Foundation and the GAC are incorporated as Pennsylvania Nonprofit Corporations and as such are governed by the Pennsylvania Nonprofit Corporation Law. All charitable funds of the corporations are also governed by Pennsylvania law, not by the law of the state where they happen to be administered. The Pennsylvania Uniform Trust Act provides that “property committed to charitable purposes shall not, by any proceeding under Chapter 59 (relating to fundamental changes) or otherwise, be diverted from the objects to which it was donated, granted or devised, unless and until the board of directors or other body obtains from the court an order under 20 Pa. C.S.A. Ch. 61 (relating to estates) specifying the disposition of the property” [15 Pa. C.S.A. Sec. 5547(b)]. Additionally, as a general rule, “if a particular charitable purpose becomes unlawful, impracticable or wasteful: (1) the trust does not fail, in whole or in part; (2) the trust property does not revert to the settlor or the settlor's successors in interest; and (3) the court shall apply cy pres<sup>1</sup> to fulfill as nearly as possible the settlor's charitable intention, whether it be general or specific” (20 Pa. C.S.A. Sec. 7740.3).

Therefore, any funds that are restricted by the donor, either by the donor's directive or by the terms of the solicitation, must be applied only to the purposes of the restriction. They may not be spent for any other purpose, even if the funds on hand may exceed the needs of the stated purpose or if the stated purpose for any reason ceases or disappears. In order to apply such funds to other purposes, permission to do so must be obtained from the court.

On the other hand, funds that are received or obtained without restriction may be spent for general purposes unless they have been subsequently restricted. When funds are restricted by the recipient, rather than the donor, the restriction may be lifted or altered by such recipient at any time, but such restrictions may not be lifted or altered by anyone other than the recipient. The fact that a particular party may have the responsibility for managing a fund does not by itself give that party the authority to lift or alter the restriction. The recipient who has the authority to lift or alter the restriction may delegate such authority to another party of its choice.

In 1996, the GAC and the Foundation made a joint report (sometimes referred to as a Deliverance) to the 208th General Assembly (1996), setting forth an agreement between the parties as to their responsibilities and authority with respect to restricted funds. The General Assembly's response to that Deliverance was that it “recognizes, endorses, and celebrates that understanding” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 72, paragraphs 21.090–.091). Whether that language is the equivalent of adoption, the GA's response clearly indicates agreement with the Deliverance, which sets forth the principles upon which the Foundation would manage and the GAC oversee restricted funds held by the Foundation.

There is one part of the Deliverance that has caused some tension between the Foundation and the GAC. That is the sentence at the end of 39.019. The paragraph calls for a consultation between the Executive Director of GAC and the president of the Foundation about whether a proper expenditure has been made. The final sentence says, “if this process does not result in a joint determination, the Foundation board will make the final determination.” The second recommendation addresses this tension and proposes resolving it in a way that is consistent with the General Assembly’s responsibility for mission.

The Advisory Opinion of the Stated Clerk sets forth in more detail the issues raised by this request. The first recommendation is that this advisory opinion be approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008).

Endnote

1. “As nearly as possible”—a legal doctrine for the interpretation of documents having specific terms that cannot be carried out literally, whereby the court attempts to reform the instrument in accordance with the general intent of the settlor rather than have it fail.

Appendix A

ADVISORY OPINION OF THE STATED CLERK Re: MODIFICATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON FUNDS

July 2, 2007

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly has been asked to render an opinion on the following question submitted by the General Counsels’ Offices of the Presbyterian Foundation and General Assembly Council. I am offering this opinion and understand it to constitute an advisory opinion given under the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, section M.2.b. (2)

Does the GAC have the authority to act for the General Assembly between the biannual meetings of the General Assembly regarding the modification of restrictions on a permanent endowment fund of the Board of National Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) known as the Church Extension Fund?

The Foundation holds at least three types of restricted funds: restrictions imposed by the original donor, restrictions imposed by the General Assembly (GA) itself, and restrictions imposed by an entity of the General Assembly.

The type of restriction that requires the Foundation to take part in changing the restrictions on a fund are those cases where the restrictions are donor imposed; otherwise it is the General Assembly Council (GAC) that has that responsibilities between meetings of the General Assembly.

For Donor restricted funds, the only way to modify restrictions on a fund would be for the Board of National Missions (constituent corporation of the Foundation) to file a secular cy pre action. In such situations, it will usually be necessary for the GAC to join the Foundation (Board of National Missions) in filing such actions.

For restrictions imposed by the Board of National Missions (a GA entity) that did not originate from an external donor, my research and understanding of the history, structure, polity, and theology of the PCUSA, leads me to believe that the GA has effectively delegated the GAC the responsibility and authority to modify criteria and definitions for use in making determinations of how to administer the Board of National Mission Funds. This delegation is consistent with historic practice.

For restrictions imposed by action of a General Assembly, the GAC is the entity responsible for making “mission allocation decisions”. The GAC is the “mission decision maker.”

While the Foundation and the GAC will need to ascertain the exact sources of restrictions in the Church Extension Fund, it is my understanding that they are primarily restrictions that have been made by the Board of National Missions or other General Assembly agencies or by that General Assembly itself. If that is the case, the General Assembly Council has the authority to modify these restrictions.

I begin my analysis with the following observations:

Presbyterian Theology and Polity presume checks and balances and dispersion of power.

G-4:0302 notes: “The nature of Presbyterian order is such that it shares power and responsibility.”

We give Moderators the most power, but limit their term of office. We give Clerks multiple terms, but we limit their power (G-9.020 1, SR H. 1 .a (5), H.2.b (1))

In local congregations (presbyteries) one person(s) collects the money, another is responsible for dispersing it.

The “normal” practice of General Assemblies is to issue general directives and grant general responsibilities to agencies and GA corporations. It rarely, but occasionally, gives specific instructions.

G-13.0103a sets the criteria for the GAC as “keeping with the church’s mission under Christ”

Historically the General Assembly Council, and its predecessor organizations, has been the body that acts between Assemblies in making interim decisions.

The GAC remains the omnibus recipient of GA authority, even after its most recent reorganization and accompanying Form of Government Amendments.

The Foundation has responsibility regarding the compliance of the use of restricted funds with donor imposed restrictions. The GAC has the corresponding responsibility for GA entity or GA restricted funds.

Analysis

In both of the last two major reunions (1958, 1983) the reunion Assemblies adopted implementing agreements that merged the structures of the two denominations in broad strokes

-“to make recommendations to the reconstitution and consolidation of the several boards and entities belonging to the two General Assemblies into such boards and entities as may be required to administer the interests and work of missions...”(1958 Concurrent Declarations 7. d)

-“The General Assembly Council shall develop and propose to subsequent General Assemblies a design for the work of the General Assembly which will effectively relate the functions, divisions, agencies, councils, commissions and institutions of the General Assemblies of the two Churches...” (explicitly excluded BOP from this instead provided separate article [#11] sec 5-4 of Articles of Agreement (1983)

The GAC did provide such recommendations in the Organization for Mission proposed to the 1986 GA and subsequently modified (as in Appendix B below)

The 1986 Deliverance (Appendix “B” to the Design for Mission) notes that the 1972 Deliverance is “inconsistent with the policy and structure recommended by the GAC” to the 1986 GA.

At section 2.d of that deliverance notes at “functions”:

“Subject to any inconsistent provisions of the Articles of Agreement or the Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and subject to the lawful directions from time to time of the General Assembly or the General Assembly Council or any officer or agency thereof hereunto duly authorized, the Central Treasury Corporation shall from and after January 2, 1987:

(4) Act as disbursing agent for the funds and property held by the corporation or the Fiduciary Corporation as provided by Section 3 (d) (4) of this deliverance...”

The relevant section of Section 3 (d) (4) says: “Designate the Central Treasury Corporation as attorney-in-fact of the Fiduciary Corporation and each of the Foundation Constituent Corporations for the purpose of disbursing unrestricted income or unrestricted principal of invested funds (and restricted income or restricted principal to the extent authorized by the Board of Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation) pursuant to the appropriations made by the General Assembly or any officer or agency thereunto duly Authorized.”

The deliverance is silent on decisions regarding dispersal of income in regard to restricted funds, but the language is otherwise quite broad.

The 1996 adopted explanatory statements in relation to this topic:

“... the GAC is the responsible body for mission allocation decisions, while providing a framework and structure that will focus on agreed upon uses and eliminate the need for after-the-fact determinations..”

“... the Foundation has the non-delegable fiduciary responsibility regarding the compliance of the use of restricted funds with donor instructions ...” and states that [rm] mission funding disbursements from restricted funds will be made only after the mission decision maker has reviewed donor instructions on the fund. In areas where there is any question or uncertainty as to the proper scope, use, or nature of the restriction, consultation with the Foundation Gift Compliance staff will be held to specifically defined parameters. After consultation the appropriately adopted Foundation decision as to use restrictions will be effective. Before disbursements are made, the GAC financial staff will validate that the disbursements requested by mission decision makers are in compliance with the use restrictions.”

It is also consistent with the GA’s action in the 1972 Reorganization where it placed investment and fund management responsibilities with the Foundation (p. 642) and assigned disbursement responsibilities to the Support Agency (now GAC).

In 1969 the GA likewise followed its typical approach when it acted on guidelines suggested by the Board of National Missions. It deals with the substantive question asked below. It laid out General Principles. Interestingly those principles recognized the heart of the current questions, namely the Board’s modified criteria were accepted:

5. The changing nature of contemporary society renders predictions concerning the long-range future of particular congregations or institutions extremely difficult. Responsible administration of Building Aid funds therefore requires:

- A. Avoidance of rigid judgment (either positive or negative) concerning future prospects of congregations or institutions.
- B. A willingness to revise and renegotiate the terms of loans in accordance with changed conditions.

The above GA actions demonstrate the traditional approach taken by General Assemblies, namely giving broad authority and depending on entities and committees to determine specific criteria and policies. The GAC’s current approach is consistent with its historic role. The Foundation is the custodian of the Funds, but has no Church Authority to make interpretations or decisions regarding the mission criteria to be utilized in carrying out the General Assembly’s historic intent in new circumstances. The Book of Order, the Deliverances, and the GA minutes reviewed confirm that historic relationship.

The current G-13.0201 power says that the GAC has the following relevant responsibilities:

To act in those specific matters assigned to the General Assembly Council by the General Assembly, acting always according to previously enacted General Assembly policies, reporting fully to each subsequent General Assembly its actions;

Finally, our Polity distinguishes between donor-imposed restrictions and governing bodies imposing restrictions upon previously unrestricted funds. (PCUSA, 1954, pp. 170–175, Von Norman v. Synod of California). The Foundation has clear responsibility to be certain that donor imposed restrictions are honored but does not have responsibility for deciding mission priorities or restrictions on funds that did not originate from donors outside of the governing body of the General Assembly or one of the entities accountable to it. That is the responsibility of the General Assembly Council.

In reaching the forgoing conclusion I have reviewed the following documents:

The Executive Director of the General Assembly Council has requested that the Advisory Committee on the Constitution review an advisory opinion of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. Over time the General Assembly Council has had regular correspondence with the Presbyterian Foundation regarding the relationship of the two organizations to various restricted funds managed by the Foundation. The two have had differences of opinion on who has the authority to modify such funds. The Stated Clerk, on July 2, 2007, issued an advisory opinion on the matter. The General Assembly Council wants the Advisory Committee on the Constitution to review that opinion and to give advice regarding the roles of the two organizations.

The issue of authority relates two three types of funds managed by the Foundation, namely:

1. Funds with restrictions imposed by the donor,
2. Funds with restrictions imposed by the General Assembly, and
3. Funds with restrictions imposed by an entity of the General Assembly.

PC(USA) FOUNDATION COMMENT ON ITEM 08-21

Comment on Item 08-21—From the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) Foundation (the “Foundation”) expresses its deep concern about the Advisory Committee on the Constitution’s (“ACC”) recommendation and the advisory opinion of the Stated Clerk and respectfully opposes their approval.

If approved, the recommendation would fundamentally alter the systems of checks and balances within the denomination between the Foundation, as the agency charged with observing donor restrictions on funds, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (“A Corp.”), the agency charged with spending funds for mission. Also, the recommendation would jeopardize adherence to donor restrictions on any funds held by the Foundation for any beneficiary—General Assembly (“GA”) related or not. This is because while the language of the ACC findings and the advisory opinion of the Stated Clerk discusses honoring donor restrictions, Recommendation 2 of the ACC would permit the General Assembly Council (the “GAC”) to interpret all restrictions, whether donor created or board created, and whether the restricted fund pays to a GA entity or to a local congregation, college, or Presbyterian retirement home.

The system of checks and balances established within the denomination dates back to 1799 when the GA decided to separate the trustee functions from the commissioner functions and create the Foundation. Since that time, the Foundation has been charged by the denomination to act as a fiduciary and has had the responsibility to ensure that endowment funds were administered properly. The Foundation's basic duties have remained the same since its creation—through the reorganizations of 1923, 1958, 1972, and 1986 and should not be changed lightly.

The 198th General Assembly (1986) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) implemented a “Deliverance Implementing a Design for the Corporate Structure of Certain Agencies of the General Assembly” (the “Deliverance”). The Deliverance created the Foundation (the “Fiduciary Corporation”) and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (the “Central Treasury Corporation” or “CTC”), by virtue of a division of the Foundation and established the responsibilities of each entity relative to restricted funds. A division of responsibilities within agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is consistent with Presbyterian ecclesiology and theology in our recognition of different gifts manifested in different service, under the common call to serve and to love the one Lord Jesus Christ in mission and ministry (1 Cor. 12:4–31).

The Deliverance clearly established the Foundation's two primary functions as oversight of the medium- and long-term investments for the Denomination and the oversight of the disbursement of restricted funds. A Corp. has the responsibility to receive, hold, and maintain nonfiduciary property of the denomination, act as the disbursing agent for the Foundation for unrestricted GA funds, and may act as an agent for restricted funds as designated by the Foundation. A Corp. also has reporting responsibilities to the GAC. Over time, the Central Treasury Corporation/A Corp. came to be known as the General Assembly Council because of an overlapping board and officers between GAC and A Corp.

According to Section 3(d) of the Deliverance, the Foundation was charged to:

1) Receive and hold all monies and other intangible property, other personal property, real property and income thereon, as may be owned, given to or otherwise acquired or held by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or by either of the reuniting Churches for investment, whether restricted or unrestricted by trust, will or otherwise as to use or disposition, except such as is held by or hereafter given to a particular church, a presbytery, a synod or another agency as contemplated by Chapter VIII and other provisions of the Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or by the Pension Corporation. See Section 4(b) of this deliverance which specifies the manner in which certain funds and other assets shall be characterized as investment assets for the purposes of this deliverance. ...

3) In every case where a donor has specified that the principal of the gift be invested and that only the income be expended, refrain from making any expenditure of principal, and in every case where a donor has specified the purposes for which principal or income may be expended, refrain from making any expenditure inconsistent with the terms of the gift.

4) Designate the Central Treasury Corporation as attorney-in-fact of the Fiduciary Corporation and of each of the Foundation Constituent Corporations for the purpose of disbursing unrestricted income or unrestricted principal of invested funds (and restricted income or restricted principal to the extent specifically authorized by the board of trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation) pursuant to appropriations made by the General Assembly or any officer or agency thereof thereunto duly authorized. In the case of disbursements of unrestricted income or unrestricted principal, the personnel of the Central Treasury Corporation, and not the board of trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation and the Foundation Constituent Corporations, shall be accountable and responsible for such disbursements. [Emphasis added]

The Foundation also has another source of fiduciary responsibility: civil law. The Foundation's charge from the denomination in the Deliverance is to follow the direction of the GA to the extent it is lawful in recognition of the Foundation's parallel responsibility as a trustee of endowment funds at civil law. The findings of the ACC and the advisory opinion of the Stated Clerk are in conflict with the Deliverance and its recognition that the Foundation must follow its civil law responsibilities.

In 1996, questions arose between A Corp/GAC and the Foundation as to who had the authority to interpret restricted funds. At that time, the ACC refused to hear the matter, holding that this was not a matter of constitutional interpretation over which the ACC had jurisdiction. (A conclusion that the Foundation submits should have been reached in this instance as well). As a result, the Foundation and A Corp/GAC engaged in dialogue between the agencies that was memorialized in the 1996 Joint Report of the GAC and the Foundation (“Joint Report”), addressing issues not unlike ones currently facing the Foundation and A Corp. The Joint Report was affirmed by the GA and is a statement of the “... understandings and agreements ...” reached between the Foundation and the GAC regarding each entities “... related but separate, responsibilities regarding restricted funds held by the Foundation for the benefit of the General Assembly's mission program...” confirming the fiduciary obligations of the Foundation in three sections.

The ACC recommends modification of one portion of that 1996 Joint Report. As agreed to by the GAC and the Foundation in 1996, Paragraph 39.019 (which was drafted to address questions regarding disputed expenditures from restricted funds made by the GAC) states that when a question is raised as to whether or not the GAC made an expenditure in accordance with donor restrictions, the Foundation and GAC shall conduct a review process to lead to “... a joint determination as to whether or not a proper expenditure has been made.” However, in preserving the fiduciary responsibility of the Foundation, Paragraph 39.019 goes on to state that “... [i]f this process does not result in a joint decision, the Foundation Board of Trustees will make the final determination.” The reason the Foundation's board is responsible for making the final decision is because of its non-delegable duties at law as a fiduciary.

The ACC recommends that Paragraph 39.019 of the Joint Report be amended to provide the GAC, as designee for the GA, the authority to finally interpret restrictions in circumstances where the Foundation and A Corp./GAC disagree as to expenditures made from restricted funds. It is difficult for the Foundation to understand how an agreement set forth in the Joint Report can be recommended for change by the ACC over the objection of one of the parties to that original agreement. Simply put, the Foundation has the fiduciary responsibility for funds entrusted to it and that fiduciary responsibility includes making sure the terms of trusts and endowments (including restrictions) are followed. The Foundation would be unable to fulfill that fiduciary responsibility should the GAC be given the authority to determine whether restricted funds have been or are being used in accordance with their restrictions.

Importantly, the ACC recommendation that Paragraph 39.019 of the Joint Report be amended to provide the GAC as designee the authority to finally interpret restrictions is expressly prohibited by the 1986 Deliverance. Section 5 of the Deliverance states that:

....The General Assembly Council may interpret with binding effect any provision of this deliverance except Section 3(d)(2) and 3. [Emphasis added.]

Section 3(d) 3 reads as follows:

In every case where a donor has specified that the principal of the gift be invested and that only the income be expended, refrain from making any expenditure of principal, and in every case where the donor has specified the purposes for which principal or income may be expended, refrain from making any expenditure inconsistent with the terms of the gift. [Emphasis added.]

Thus, the ACC's recommendation is clearly in conflict with the thoughtful and intentional structure of checks and balances set forth in the Deliverance, which prohibits the GAC from interpreting whether an expenditure is inconsistent with the terms of a gift (the restriction).

The ACC also recommends the approval of the advisory opinion of the Stated Clerk. Unfortunately, both the ACC recommendation and the advisory opinion of the Stated Clerk misunderstand the duties of a fiduciary, likening those duties to a "treasurer" or a "custodian" in conflict with settled Trust law on the matter; and also are not in alignment with process for modifying restrictions on funds or resolving choice of law questions under civil law.

For all these reasons, and most importantly because the Foundation does not wish to find itself in a position where a direction for the interpretation of a restricted fund from the GAC (should this recommendation be approved) is inconsistent with its duty under fiduciary law, the Foundation urgently requests this 218th General Assembly (2008) decline the advice of the ACC by answering the following:

That the General Assembly disapprove Item 08-21 from the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

Item 08-22

[The assembly approved Item 08-22 with amendment. See pp. 23, 25.]

The Committee on Review of the General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) create a review committee to review the service of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies in implementing the General Assembly's mission directives. This review committee should be nominated according to procedures articulated in the Organization for Mission at section IV.D.1. "Committees of the Assembly." [See Item 08-D, Report of the General Assembly Committee on Review of the General Assembly Council at Recommendation 10 under the section "Recommendations for Change or Further Consideration."] [This report shall be made to the 219th General Assembly (2010).]

Rationale

While the separate review of each of the six agencies is a helpful practice and has fostered improvements, this Review Committee observed that no one in the current system is charged with looking at the overall effectiveness of the whole. Coordination among the six agencies is voluntary and not always effective. Such a review should focus broadly on the effectiveness of the six agencies and other governing bodies in implementing the General Assembly's mission directives and should not duplicate the more detailed work of the individual agency review committees. Particular attention should be given to how or if these agencies work cooperatively and where or if there is duplication of services in the system. This review committee observed that some agencies are not working well together, but also that there are some beneficial cooperative efforts. These happen on a voluntary basis with no recommendation that this occur regularly throughout the system. This review committee also heard some people questioning the rationale of the separation of the GAC and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

BOP, FOUNDATION, GAC, OGA, PILP, AND PPC COMMENT ON ITEM 08-22

Comment on Item 08-22—From the Six Agencies [Board of Pensions (BOP), PC(USA) Foundation (Foundation), General Assembly Council (GAC), Office of the General Assembly (OGA), Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), and Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC)] of the PC(USA).

The six agencies of PC(USA) are working together to be the best stewards of the resources given to them and to fulfill the specific mandate given to them by the church. The agency executives and the agency board chairs are meeting regularly to facilitate coordination and cooperation. Collaboration tables among staff are working across the agencies. Specifically those collaborations center on funds development, communication, and church relations.

These efforts are producing much fruit and increasing efficiencies. An alternative to suspending the regular review process of the next two agencies would be to assign a higher priority to the evidence of cooperation among the agencies than already exist in the review standards.

Should the assembly desire to conduct such a review, we believe it would be wise to delay the review of PPC and PILP until 2010 and expedite the process if the assembly directed the agencies to conduct a joint self-review of their cooperation and that the basis of the review committee's work should be the agency self-studies and review reports completed over the past six years. We further advise that the review committee focus on:

- The effectiveness of the six agencies in implementing the overall mission directives of the General Assembly, with recommendations for possible changes in their respective mission directives in light of current financial and other issues of concern to the denomination;
- Identification of (a) possible ways to achieve operating synergies among the six agencies, (b) current areas of collaboration among the six agencies, (c) likely areas for future collaboration and synergy, and (d) identification of specific areas of duplication among or between the six agencies with a rationale for acceptable duplication or a recommendation for change with a view to avoidance of unnecessary duplication.

Having a specific focus helped the previous agencies reviews. The referral of additional recommendations to this committee may decrease the effectiveness of the proposed review process.

Item 08-23

Pending acceptance of the recommendation from the GAC Review Committee seeking a joint review of all the agencies, the Committee on Review of the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following:

- 1. That the review process of individual agencies be delayed until 2010 and that the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), in consultation with the agencies, evaluate the "Standards of Review" and the manual built on these standards before the next cycle of review commences.
  - 2. That the revised manual specify that each agency be required to complete its self-study and present it to its review committee within 120 days of the close of the General Assembly at which that committee is elected. [Our committee was not able to begin its work until more than nine months after it was elected.] [See in the Report of the Committee on Review on the Office of the General Assembly, Section V, Recommendations.]

Item 08-24

Recommendation Pertaining to Budgetary and Financial Concerns of the Church

A. *Relating to Budgets for General Assembly Mission Program

1. Presbyterian Mission Program—General Assembly Mission Program Receipts and Expenditures Actual Compared to Budget for 2006 and 2007.

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) incorporate into the Minutes the report of the General Assembly Mission Program Receipts and Expenditures Actual Compared to Budget for 2006 and 2007.

Rationale

The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted policy governing Mission Budgets at the General Assembly level. That policy provides that:

B. The General Assembly Council shall:

1. Report to each General Assembly:

a. Actual total financial resources used to support the General Assembly Mission Budget and Program and the expenditures during the most recently completed year. (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 375)

The display that is presented below is the report of actual revenue and expenditures for the years 2006 and 2007.

Recommendation Pertaining to Budgetary and Financial Concerns of the Church (continued)

B. *Relating to Reserved or Committed Funds

1. *Unrestricted and Committed Funds

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) receive the report of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, regarding unrestricted and committed funds as of December 31, 2007.

Rationale

The report of the unrestricted funds is divided between uncommitted and committed funds. The following display indicates those funds as well as the activity of those funds and the status of the total reserves as of closing December 31, 2007. The 202nd General Assembly (1990) adopted the following policy:

A. Presbyterian Mission Program Fund

1. A fund composed of all unrestricted and uncommitted receipts and assets intended for the support of the General Assembly mission program.
2. Sources to maintain this fund shall include all unified revenue available for the General Assembly Mission Program, including but not limited to:
  - a. unified income including receipts from congregations, presbyteries, or individuals;
  - b. unrestricted gifts, legacies, bequests
  - c. unrestricted investment income;
  - d. gift annuity excess reserves;
  - e. such nonrecurring income as the General Assembly Council shall direct by general or specific policy statement; and
  - f. under expenditure of the unified portion of the General Assembly Mission Budget.
3. The Uncommitted Funds portion of the Presbyterian Mission Program Fund at year end must be equal to at least 30% of the Unified portion and direct mission support of the General Assembly Mission Budget, which minimum provides for:
  - a. Cash flow needed for mission purposes;
  - b. Guarantee of the current unified budget.

*Recommendation Pertaining to Budgetary and Financial Concerns of the Church (continued)B. Relating to Reserved or Committed Funds (continued)*2. Report of Contingent Liabilities, December 31, 2007

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) incorporate into its Minutes the following list of contingent liabilities: Reserve funds are required to cover self-insurance for General Assembly owned property. A separate Self-Insurance Fund has been established, the balance of which was $6,251,062.02 as of December 31, 2007.

Rationale

The 190th General Assembly (1978) of the United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (UPCUSA) received from the General Assembly Mission Council a financial plan for supporting minority education during 1977–79 and a status report of minority education institutions (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1978, Part I, pp. 189–90).

C. Relating to Support for General Assembly Mission*1. John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) allocate the annual income realized in 2007 from the John C. Lord and Edmund P. Dwight Funds in support of the budget for the general mission work of the General Assembly.

Rationale

Current practice is to recommend to each General Assembly the allocation of annual income from these two funds in light of wording in the donors' wills, which requires this annual process.

Portion of the will of Edmund P. Dwight (May 23, 1903):

I will and bequeath to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of America, to be used for the establishment of the Christian Religion, that the light of the gospel may be made to join more perfectly ...

Portion of the will of John C. Lord (January 2, 1873):

... to the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., for religious and charitable uses, to be called the John C. Lord Fund, the annual interest of which is to be disposed of and distributed by the said General Assembly at each annual meeting for the furtherance of the Gospel of our Blessed Saviour, at home or abroad, as the Assembly may deem best. ...

The applicable provisions of the two wills facilitate the annual income realized from these funds to be used in the General Assembly's General Mission Budget.

It is projected that the income from these funds in 2008 is approximately $29,811.68.

2. Special Offerings 2007

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) incorporate into its Minutes the following summary of receipts from Special Offerings for the year 2007.

Rationale

Special Offerings enable an important part of the General Assembly Mission Program. In 2007, income from these offerings totaled approximately 21.3 percent of total income for the mission program of the church and 33.8 percent of the mission gifts from congregations.

On Investigating Opportunities for Group Wind and Hail Insurance Policies for Presbyteries Located on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts—From the Presbytery of South Louisiana.

The Presbytery of South Louisiana respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the appropriate agency (1) to investigate the opportunities for group wind and hail insurance policies and to report those opportunities to each presbytery situated on the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts, and (2) if possible to negotiate with an insurance provider the terms of such policies.

[Original Financial Implications: (2008): $0; (2009): $15,000; (2010): $0 (Per Capita-GAC)]

[Committee Action Financial Implications: (2008): $0; (2009): $0; (2010): $0 (Per Capita-GAC)]

Comment: Although the committee wished to respond with compassion to the needs expressed in the overture from the Presbytery of South Louisiana, the overture advocate asked us to defeat their overture because the presbyteries mentioned have agreed to work together and take the lead in discovering solutions for these problems and bringing these proposed resolutions to the next General Assembly. We appreciate their willingness to do this, and we continue to pray for all those affected by natural disasters and the resulting human and financial costs.

Rationale

The intense Atlantic storm activity of the last five years has caused unprecedented damage to churches in Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Association predicts that this cycle of intense storms will continue for another decade. The insurance industry has responded by making it difficult for churches to obtain property insurance and wind and hail insurance. Congregations situated “east of I 95” in Florida and “south of I 10” on the Gulf Coast find it almost impossible to obtain adequate coverage with affordable premiums. Many of the policies offered to these congregations include deductibles of up to $250,000 making them irrelevant. The premiums for such policies often are the equivalent of a pastor’s salary. Many congregations therefore have chosen to forgo wind and hail insurance as a reasonable but painful stewardship decision. Even though the decisions are reasonable, the congregations remain at serious risk for catastrophic loss. Such a loss would necessitate the closing of the congregation and result in significant loss to the presbytery.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 08-25

Comment on Item 08-25—From the General Assembly Council (GAC).

The GAC is sympathetic to the serious impact the hurricanes caused in this region and the affect this has had on those seeking affordable insurance coverage. Unfortunately, many areas of the country have experienced and will continue to experience an extensive number of hurricanes, tornadoes, and other disasters. The GAC suggests that, due to the specialized needs of areas affected by such disasters, affected presbyteries would be better served by a local consultant hired by these presbyteries to conduct the desired investigation of availability of group insurance and negotiate with an insurance provider the terms of coverage. This local consultant would be better situated to identify possible insurance providers and to obtain the necessary level of detailed knowledge about the value of properties to be insured than someone at the national level. The GAC staff will continue to provide resources and information to presbyteries as requested and to provide assistance to the local consultant should one be hired. Because this group hail and wind insurance need of the presbyteries situated in the Atlantic and Gulf Coasts can more effectively be addressed locally rather than at the national level, the GAC urges disapproval of this overture.

[The assembly approved Item 08-1NB. See p. 62.]

The Assembly Committee on Mission Coordination and Budgets recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) direct the General Assembly Council to make the adjustments necessary to incorporate into the General Assembly Mission budgets for 2009 and 2010 the items with financial implications that have been approved by the 218th General Assembly (2008). The necessary adjustments may include identifying additional sources of revenue, redirecting existing budget; or a combination of both.

Introduction

The General Assembly Committee on Review (Review Committee) presents to the 218th General Assembly (2008) this written review of the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for the years 2001–2006. In the balance of the report, the initials GAC will be used to refer to the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). This review process resulted from the action of the 213th General Assembly (2001) that put in place a regular review of agencies related to the General Assembly. The purpose of the review process is "to evaluate the relationship of their individual [agency] ministry with the mission of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)" (Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 67, addition of Standing Rule E.10, Agency Review). The instructions to the General Assembly Committee on Review were that the committee must conduct the process according to predetermined standards and present a written report to the next General Assembly (Manual of the General Assembly, pp. 71–72). In 2006, the General Assembly reformatted the Standing Rules and the section regarding committees of the assembly was taken out of the Standing Rules and put into the Organization for Mission at section IV.D.1.

Fundamental to the review process is that each agency of the General Assembly shall participate in a self-study review process with a Committee on Review (hereafter Review Committee) elected by the General Assembly. The Review Committee will then interact with the agency in a study and evaluation process to determine how the agency is related to and contributing to the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The review process is not an attempt to look for problems, but to evaluate current practices and offer affirmations and recommendations for improvement where appropriate.

In accordance with the Organization for Mission, individuals with broad experience and love for the church were elected by the 217th General Assembly (2006) to serve as the Review Committee. These individuals included elders, clergy, and lay persons; a banker, a presbytery stated clerk, a certified Christian educator, an engineer, a presbytery resource center coordinator, a clerk of session, a synod executive, and a presbytery executive and others; and former members of the boards of the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, the Board of Pensions, and the Presbyterian Foundation. Each member of the Review Committee approached the review process with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love. All of the members were united in a common faith and desire for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to advance the mission of Jesus Christ.

This report was prepared at the end of 2007 and does not reflect any developments beyond that date. We are pleased that the GAC agreed to all recommendations for change or further consideration that specifically pertained to it and concurred with Overarching Recommendation #10. During the course of the review, the GAC made significant progress in implementing many of the Review Committee's recommendations; however, specific areas of challenge remain.

Individual members included: the Reverend Judy R. Fletcher, who served as moderator; Elder Janis Alling Adams; the Reverend Mary Gene Boteler; the Reverend K. Edward Brandt; the Reverend Art Canada; the Reverend Clark Cowden; Elder Dietmar Fritsch; Elder Leah H. Johnson; Joseph M. Kinard; Elder William A. Longbrake; Stephanie Middleton; the Reverend Kevin Porter; the Reverend Richard A. Ray; and the Reverend Mary Robinson-Mohr.

This report is the result of numerous meetings of the Review Committee, onsite and telephone interviews with GAC staff and elected members of the GAC, an examination of the self-study conducted by the GAC as well as other written materials of the GAC, review of the results of survey research, interviews with General Assembly Council Executive Director Linda Valentine and the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly the Reverend Clifton Kirkpatrick, and the guidance of our resource people from the Office of the General Assembly: the Reverend Gradye Parsons and Kay Moore. We would like to express our deep appreciation to Gradye and Kay for orientating us to the task and providing us with timely help when we needed it.

The GAC prepared an instructive self-study that benefited this review. We especially wish to thank Executive Director Linda Valentine and the entire staff of the GAC and elected members of the GAC for their cooperation and help in the development of this report and for their ongoing service to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Executive Summary

This report includes the findings and recommendations of the General Assembly Committee on Review (Review Committee) for the General Assembly Council (GAC).

Significant change is underway within the GAC. With the approval of the 217th General Assembly (2006), the GAC has adopted a new mission strategy that focuses its work on achieving objectives (currently there are eight). In the past, the GAC organized its work around specific programs and its organizational and committee structure reinforced that focus. The intent of these changes is to improve the GAC's effectiveness in carrying out its mission as articulated in the Book of Order.

The extensiveness of the change underway, as well as many new faces in senior GAC positions, made the review process challenging.

Review criteria are described in the Agency Review Manual and include evaluation of "Church Relatedness," "Policies and Practice," and "Program Effectiveness." Given this guidance and the extent of the changes underway at the GAC, the Review Committee determined that the best way to conduct its review and assessment was to organize the report around the recently discontinued organizational structure of the GAC—Congregational, National, and Worldwide Ministries—recognizing that the GAC is pursuing a new mission strategy.

The review process began with a "self-study," which departed in some respects from a standard presentation format because of the changes underway. The Review Committee examined the self-study and other written materials, conducted survey research for eleven church constituencies, and interviewed numerous past and present GAC staff and elected members. The intent of the Review Committee's work was to evaluate current practices and offer affirmations and recommendations for improvement.

Based upon our review, we have several general observations:

- Staff appears to be committed enthusiastically to the new mission strategy and believes that its effective implementation will make a significant difference for the better for the church.
- While staff is searching for ways to carry out an imposing array of responsibilities with fewer resources, executives came to their positions, in some instances, with limited prior administrative experience in their particular areas of responsibility. Nevertheless, their commitment to place the Christian gospel at the core of their work is compelling.
- Staff members expressed an assuring spirit of cooperation, diligence, and calling for their work. The Review Committee observed that in as much as their learning curve could be steep, the church's patience and encouragement would be important.
- The staff expressed a promising interest in developing new ways of communicating with congregations as well as with synods and presbyteries.

It became clear to us that the GAC no longer has the resources to operate in the ways it has in the past. It became equally clear from interviews and the survey research that synods, presbyteries, and congregations feel that the GAC has often been ineffective and they expressed a desire for a different kind of relationship with the GAC. The new mission strategy and the reorganization of the GAC recognize both realities and appear to be responsive in concept. We came away from these interviews with a sense of hopefulness and cautious optimism realizing that there is much to be done and the challenge of successful implementation of the new mission strategy will be enormous.

The Review Committee made several recommendations for change or further consideration. We are pleased that the GAC agreed to all recommendations that specifically pertained to it and concurred with Overarching Recommendation #10 in which the Review Committee recommends that the General Assembly create a review committee to review the service of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies in implementing the General Assembly's mission directives.

Recommendations for Change or Further Consideration

Overarching Recommendations

1. We strongly encourage the General Assembly to rename the GAC to identify its primary purpose in coordinating the church's mission programs.

Comment: Names of organizations are important in conveying a clear and unambiguous sense to others of the organization's primary purpose. While the GAC engages in activities that support other church agencies and middle governing bodies, its primary purpose is to coordinate the church's mission programs. With this in mind we felt that the present name does not clearly communicate the primary role of the GAC within the church.

2. We recommend that the GAC communicate systematically the new mission strategy and organizational structure and introduce the new leadership team to the church.

Comment: Many in the church have only limited awareness of the new mission strategy the GAC is implementing and changes in its organizational structure. The GAC developed a new mission strategy, which is an objective-centered approach rather than a program-centered approach, to achieve more effectively its mission of offering to the world a visible witness of Jesus Christ through (1) the proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of humankind; (2) the shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God; (3) the maintenance of divine worship; (4) the preservation of the truth; (5) the promotion of social righteousness; and (6) the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world. With the approval of the 217th General Assembly (2006), the GAC implemented the new mission strategy by reorganizing its former three divisions—Congregational, National, and Worldwide Ministries—into seven ministry areas under a Deputy Executive Director for Mission and is focusing its work around four goal areas (evangelism & witness, justice & compassion, spirituality & discipleship, and leadership & vocation) currently spanning eight objectives. Many GAC executives, including the Executive Director Linda Valentine, are new to their positions of responsibility.

3. The GAC must assign a high priority to developing, adopting, and implementing promptly a comprehensive and disciplined program evaluation and prioritization process.

Comment: The GAC has been slow to develop a program evaluation process that would enable it to discern the movement of God's spirit and establish clear criteria for determining program priorities and for allocating resources to areas of greatest importance. Effective organizations regularly and routinely assess what they are doing to determine whether the various activities and programs remain relevant to needs and whether resources are being deployed in ways that achieve the greatest benefit. While the importance of this is recognized by the GAC, there has been failure to follow through on initial attempts to establish such a methodology. This is an urgent undertaking that needs to be pursued without further delay.

4. The GAC must integrate systematically the program evaluation and prioritization methodology (Recommendation #3) in allocating limited staff resources.

Comment: While staff appears to have been encouraged by new leadership and they are optimistic about the new mission strategy, staff workloads in many areas have not been adjusted systematically in response to staffing reductions. Work overload can lead to loss of effectiveness and frustration. The GAC leadership must move immediately to match program work requirements with resource availability. We heard repeatedly in virtually every area of the GAC that staff are often being asked to carry on former workloads with fewer resources. Of necessity, shrinking financial resources have forced staff reductions in recent years. However, it did not appear to us that the GAC leadership has given the same urgency to reducing staff workloads. Further delay in attending to this need will inhibit effective implementation of the GAC's new mission strategy. The Review Committee wishes to emphasize that urgent implementation of Recommendations #3 and #4 is essential to avoid a pattern of decay and delayed response and to ensure improvement of trust (see Recommendation #9).

5. We recommend that the GAC commit to be in conversations with synods and presbyteries with the intent to develop jointly specific initiatives as the GAC relates to and works with congregations.

Comment: This recommendation promotes constructive partnering. It was clear from interviews and from survey research responses that synods, presbyteries and congregations feel that the GAC has often been ineffective. For example, the GAC solicitation of direct funding of mission from congregations has occurred with little or no conversations with synods and presbyteries and has created confusion and led to anger. Synods, presbyteries, and congregations expressed a desire for a different kind of relationship with the GAC. That relationship needs to go beyond simply one of enhanced communication to one of joint action. Without action conversation only will lead to a decrease in trust and an increase in cynicism.

6. We endorse the value of developing new possibilities for comprehensive, churchwide plans for communication and stewardship and encourage the GAC to develop and implement such a plan expeditiously.

Comment: The GAC is developing a comprehensive communications plan that would establish a clear “Identity” for the GAC, which over the longer run might be applicable also for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and all of its constituencies. Such a plan would follow with an affirmative “Call” for support in ways that provide people choices to give of their time, talent, and treasure. The GAC recognizes that accomplishing this task will be difficult and will require intense collaborative effort. Because of the importance of this to the church, this undertaking needs to be pursued as expeditiously as possible.

7. We encourage the GAC to make the necessary infrastructure investments and to move forward as expeditiously as possible in developing a comprehensive stewardship plan that addresses program needs as well as mission giving in collaboration with other church agencies and middle governing bodies. We further encourage the GAC to employ theological language, such as stewardship development and mission giving, which supports and encourages the use of the church’s theology of stewardship.

Comment: GAC funds development [sic] historically has been reactive. The GAC recognizes that the church needs to develop a giving culture that reaches out and cultivates relationships. This will require investment in funds development infrastructure. Moreover, funds development will need to be integrated with a comprehensive communications plan (Recommendation #6). While members of the church expect to be asked to give of their time, talent, and treasure, it is important that a comprehensive stewardship plan for mission giving be developed and that the timing of multiple solicitations be coordinated.

8. We recommend that the GAC, in consultation with other church governing bodies, develop a funding methodology that supports the work of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission workers and communicate the methodology clearly in a way that eliminates the current confusion about whether or to what extent mission workers are expected to raise funding for their own support.

Comment: In our interviews, the Review Committee was told that newly appointed mission workers are expected to raise funding for their support. We were also told that, while crucial mission positions are being filled with qualified people, their deployment is being put on hold until funding is available. However, we were also advised that our mission workers are not expected to raise their own funds, but they are being asked to help the GAC raise funds for their own support and the support of other mission workers. This nuanced communication has created confusion. The confusion has been further reinforced by a decision not to recruit for positions that are not already fully funded. We recognize the reality of limited funding dictates hard decisions. However, decisions have been made and then revised without clear explanation. No broadly shared funding methodology has been developed, which serves only to exacerbate the level of mistrust (Recommendation #9).

9. We recommend the GAC seek ways to listen carefully to its constituencies and develop additional ways to increase trust throughout the church.

Comment: One of the most important intangibles in the life of the church is the issue of trust. We applaud the listening model that John Detterich, former GAC director, and Clifton Kirkpatrick, Stated Clerk, pursued in their visits to presbyteries and synods in recent years. While the Review Committee has been encouraged by some new developments, we realize many promising ideas might be quickly derailed by inadequate trust across the church. We believe it is important that the GAC exercise leadership to find ways to increase the level of trust in the church. This is not a technical problem to be fixed, but an adaptive challenge to be managed. We must work on this together, but someone must take the lead. We encourage the GAC and its staff, to take the lead. Creating trust throughout the church should be seen as a GAC and staff responsibility. With trust, there is a lot of ministry we can do together. Without trust, we will fragment and splinter. Trust will grow to the extent that the GAC says, “These are the limited things that we can do and we will do them well.” Trust is a boundary issue. The middle governing bodies have a clear idea of their needs, but have no easy way to communicate those to the GAC. Priorities for the GAC also come from General Assembly enactments. The GAC needs to exert action in the limited number of areas where it can do so well and do so effectively. The trust issue will be resolved in conjunction with executive action in priority setting (Recommendation #3) and resource management (Recommendation #4). Above all trust begins with active listening.

10. We recommend that the General Assembly create a review committee to review the service of the whole of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its six agencies in implementing the General Assembly’s mission directives. This review committee should be nominated according to procedures articulated in the Organization for Mission at Section IV.D.1. “Committees of the Assembly.”

Comment: While the separate review of each of the six agencies is a helpful practice and has fostered improvements, this Review Committee observed that no one in the current system is charged with looking at the overall effectiveness of the whole. Coordination among the six agencies is voluntary and not always effective. Such a review should focus broadly on the effectiveness of the six agencies and other governing bodies in implementing the General Assembly's mission directives and should not duplicate the more detailed work of the individual agency review committees. Particular attention should be given to how or if these agencies work cooperatively and where or if there is duplication of services in the system. This Review Committee observed that some agencies are not working well together, but also that there are some beneficial cooperative efforts. These happen on a voluntary basis with no recommendation that this occur regularly throughout the system. This Review Committee also heard some people questioning the rationale of the separation of the GAC and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

Congregational Ministries

1. Staff Workloads. The ministries of the former Congregational Ministries Division (CMD) are a clear example of a dynamic with which many of our congregations are also familiar: grappling with the dilemma of trying to meet the same or greater expectations with fewer human and other resources. The Review Committee heard the frustration of some staff who perceived that their attempts to articulate and solve the problem of limited resources were heard as complaints. We support a process by which the staff could identify and/or acknowledge the aspects of their work that are no longer feasible for them to accomplish. If this work were not able to be accomplished by others within the division or elsewhere in the national structure, this information needs to be explicitly communicated to the constituencies affected.

2. Publishing. In the area of production of published resources, we believe further consideration needs to be given to shared production across divisions (the term "ministries" has now replaced the term "divisions") and agencies.

3. Information Sharing. Although there has been increased conversation at the staff level within areas of the former CMD, greater effort needs to be devoted to sharing information and engaging in cooperative work at senior levels within the GAC and other agencies.

4. Principles Guiding Sale of Curriculum Materials. Because of the complexities involved in the sale and distribution of curriculum in particular, the GAC should evaluate whether this aspect of its work should reflect, as one interviewee described, "a corporation that functions like a Church or a Church that needs to apply some corporate principles in order to be a sound organization." Consideration needs to be given to a perceived tension between the relative profitability of curriculum and its fidelity to mission in its quality and content. We encourage further conversation within the GAC regarding the implications of decisions as the GAC seeks to manage this tension effectively.

5. Commitment to Publishing Curriculum. Similarly, further consideration needs to be given by the Presbyterian Church of its commitment to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) curriculum as an essential tool for the formation of denominational identity, particularly for youth and young adults.

National Ministries

1. Paradigm shift. It is time for a paradigm shift in much of what we do and how we function. A paradigm shift refers to the models, frameworks, and assumptions that help us understand our world and how we organize ourselves to engage in it. Previous models of ministry that were highly effective in an earlier era are not always appropriate or recommended for today. We want to make sure that we are offering training in the best, most recent, most cutting edge evangelism models, as well as what continues to be effective from historical methods. We do not want the strengths of our Presbyterian Women to miss being passed on to a new generation of women. We want to see effective ministry continue in ways that are meaningful to younger women. While the Washington Office has been around for a long time, we want to consider new ways of engaging government and politics. Ways of doing advocacy that are more appropriate to current times need to be explored. As a new church emerges, we need the national office to emerge not only with it, but also to lead us in expanded and different ways of being the church.

3. Prioritization. As funding levels and staff have been reduced, we simply cannot afford to keep putting the same level of work on the backs of fewer people. As much as we would like, we simply cannot keep doing everything we have done in the past. It is time for us to set some priorities for what the GAC will do. We must say what we will do and what we will no longer do. We must do the hard work of setting priorities. Even though this process will not make everyone happy, it is essential. We must prioritize both tasks and funding. As a denomination that has been losing members for over forty years, should not the funding of new church developments, evangelism, and church growth be at least one of our top priorities?

4. Communication and Technology. We discovered many good things happened through the former national ministries division (NMD) of the GAC that we did not know about. We need to find more and better ways of communicating with the church what we are actually doing. We are glad to see the hiring of a new Deputy Executive Director for Communication and Funds Development, and want to affirm that communication must be a high priority. While the staff has struggled to find ways to communicate with all the congregations in the denomination, are there not technologically savvy people who know how to set this up for us? In this day and age, with computer and Internet capabilities, we believe that regular communications with every church in the denomination could happen.

Worldwide Ministries

1. Supporting and Promoting Mission Work. We recommend that the General Assembly support the document “A Church-wide Design for Funding Christ’s Work Throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” which will establish a period of time called “A Season of Giving” to interpret and promote the mission work of the church.

2. Communicating Mission Stories. Establish a program for effectively communicating the mission stories of the church in a way that will ignite this church’s passion for and commitment to the missionary task of the church.

3. Reaffirm Commitment to Ecumenical Vision. We recommend that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) reaffirm its historic commitment to the ecumenical vision of the church and call on the GAC to evaluate yearly the way in which its programs reflect and promote that ecumenical vision.

Shared Services and Other GAC Responsibilities

1. Conference Centers. During the review period changing utilization patterns and GAC subsidies put both of the church’s conference centers—Stony Point and Ghost Ranch—under financial stress. The advisory board for Ghost Ranch has addressed the challenge and Ghost Ranch is currently operating at a small surplus and has no accumulated deficit. The advisory board for Stony Point has been slower to respond and, as a consequence, Stony Point is currently operating at a substantial annual deficit. The Stony Point advisory board is planning to address the situation with a plan to be presented to the GAC at the February 2008 GAC meeting. In addition, the advisory boards for both Ghost Ranch and Stony Point are considering other long-term alternatives, such as separate incorporation. The GAC should expedite the development of options to improve the financial viability of Stony Point and consider possible alternatives over a longer time horizon that make the most effective use of mission funds.

2. Unutilized Space. The GAC should consider how to utilize the excess space in the Presbyterian Center to support most effectively its new mission strategy.

3. Budget Preparation. We recommend that the GAC continue to be charged with the responsibilities of budget preparation that were formerly assigned to it by G-13.0201(f). While it was obvious that the GAC is continuing with this function, this responsibility needs to be included in the as yet to be released GAC manual of operations.

4. Transactions Involving the GAC and Presbyterian Foundation. The GAC and the Presbyterian Foundation should work together to resolve cash transactions reconciliation and other financial management issues involving both organizations.

5. GAC and Presbyterian Foundation Coordination. The Review Committee heard that the GAC and the Presbyterian Foundation had worked together in solving some but not all overlapping problems. Both agencies should continue seeking every opportunity for communication and collaboration, such as providing representation at board meetings, and should continue to work together on matters of mutual interest.

6. Cash Reserves Policy. The GAC should review its cash reserves policy and determine what constitutes a reasonable amount.

7. Compensation Policies and Administration. The GAC should completely implement the revised compensation system or consider revising it so that it is commensurate with financial limitations. The fully implemented system should include either effective merit and promotion compensation administration or controls to ensure fair administration of compensation for all GAC employees.

8. Order Fulfillment. The GAC should explore alternatives, including web-enabled methods, to streamline order fulfillment in a manner that contains or reduces costs.

9. Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Fund. The GAC should review the funds disbursement policy and address administrative issues.

10. Partnership with Middle Governing Bodies. Continue to develop the partnership role of the GAC with middle governing bodies and congregations.

11. Communications Plan. The GAC is on the right track in developing a comprehensive communications plan that establishes a clear “Identity” for the GAC, which over the longer run might be applicable also for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and all of its constituencies. Such a plan would follow with an affirmative “Call” for support in ways that provide people choices to give of their time, talent and treasure. The GAC recognizes that accomplishing this task will be difficult and will require intense collaborative effort. Because of the importance of this to the church, this undertaking needs to be pursued as expeditiously as possible.

12. Stewardship Development Plan. Stewardship development currently is reactive. The GAC recognizes that the church needs to develop a giving culture that reaches out and cultivates relationships. This will require investment in funds development infrastructure. Moreover, funds development will need to be integrated with a comprehensive communications plan. It is important that funds development initiatives be coordinated and that the risk of potentially counter-productive multiple solicitations be recognized and addressed. The Review Committee encourages the GAC to make the necessary infrastructure investments and to move forward as expeditiously as possible in developing a comprehensive stewardship development plan that addresses program needs as well as mission giving in collaboration with other church agencies and middle governing bodies.

13. Research Services. In recognition of the influential way in which Research Services serves the church, it should regularly consult with division (the term “ministry” has now replaced the term “division”) leaders concerning the ways in which surveys are prepared and reported to the church.

Chapter 1—General Assembly Council’s Self-Study
“Refining the Mission: Journey to a New Mission Strategy for the General Assembly Council”

The GAC’s self-study departed in some respects from a standard presentation format because at the time of its preparation the GAC was mid-course in establishing a new mission strategy and new organizational structure. In addition, many GAC executives, including the Executive Director Linda Valentine, are new to their positions of responsibility. In the letter transmitting the self-study to the Review Committee, Mary Lynn Walters, chair of the GAC Review Steering Committee, wrote: “The report ... is a historical document, one that chronicles the reflections, deliberations and actions of the Council in establishing a new mission strategy. The Council is proud of its achievements and confident it has made the right choices, but it is also aware that this is a work in progress. Indeed, there were times we were in a quandary about what tense to use since many of the things we were writing about were occurring as we were preparing the report. While it is accurate to say the ink is still wet on much of the information conveyed here, it is equally accurate to say that all of the changes that have been made benefited from extensive study and reflection.”

Fundamental to the new mission strategy is a shift from a program-centered to a goal and objective-centered focus in organizing the work of GAC elected members and staff.

Goal: Evangelism & Witness—The GAC is called to invite all people to faith, repentance, and the abundant life of God in Jesus Christ, to encourage congregations in joyfully sharing the Gospel, and through the power of the Holy Spirit to grow in membership and discipleship.

- Objective—Equip Presbyterians, governing bodies and others to witness locally and globally to the Gospel of Jesus Christ with an emphasis on those with no active church affiliation.
- Objective—Support presbyteries’ efforts to develop congregations and fellowships that will enable them to reflect on the multicultural makeup of our society.

Goal: Justice & Compassion—The GAC is called to address wrongs in every aspect of life and the whole of creation, intentionally working with and on behalf of the poor, oppressed, and disadvantaged people as did Jesus Christ, even at risk of our corporate and personal lives.

- Objective—Enable partnerships with governing bodies and others to actively address the causes and effects of poverty locally, nationally and globally.
- Objective—Encourage and support presbyteries and congregations to be active in seeking non-violent solutions to conflict in their own communities and in the communities of the world.

Goal: Spirituality & Discipleship—The GAC is called into deeper discipleship through Scripture, worship, prayer, study, stewardship, and service, and to rely on the Holy Spirit to mold our lives more and more into the likeness of Jesus Christ.

- Objective—Encourage and support presbyteries and congregations to further develop their member’s ability to appreciate and understand their Reformed identity and apply it in today’s world.
- Objective—Enable presbyteries and congregations to ground families, in all their manifestations, in Christian discipleship that helps them confront and resist the idolatries of society today.

Goal: Leadership & Vocation—The GAC is called to lead by Jesus Christ’s example, to identify spiritual gifts, and to equip and support people for faithful and effective servant leadership in all parts of the body of Christ.

- Objective—Equip presbyteries and congregations to help members discern that their vocation is a call from God to Christian witness in society and the church.
- Objective—Facilitate the exchange and development of alternative models for pastoral and mission leadership in small churches.

These eight objectives are anchored by a purpose statement, a vision statement, a mission statement and a set of core commitments (See Appendix A). The objectives are intended to be dynamic, not static and are reviewed and updated annually by the GAC.

To implement the new mission strategy and assure appropriate structural alignment, the GAC has reorganized its governance into five committees—one for each of the four goal areas and a fifth for Shared Support, which covers communication, finance, funds development and other services. In addition, the former Congregational, National and Worldwide Ministries Divisions were consolidated into a single division headed by Tom Taylor, Deputy Executive Director for Mission. Work of the Mission Division focuses on achievement of the eight objectives and is staffed by six directors: Joseph Small (Theology Worship and Education), Eric Hoey (Evangelism and Church Growth), Sara Lisherness (Peace and Justice), Sara Lisherness-interim (Relief and Development), Hunter Farrell (World Mission), and Rhashell Hunter (Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women). (Appendix B contains a chart of GAC’s current organization structure.)

Chapter 2—The Emergence of a New Approach—“A New Way for a New Day”

The Review Committee interviewed many former and current GAC employees, as well as elected members of the GAC. The former employees were consulted sometimes by telephone and sometimes in person. They consistently reported a sense of gratitude for their opportunities to serve the church and a cautiously optimistic view of the organizational changes. Such interviews were interesting but frequently quite limited in terms of detailed analysis.

Interviews with newly appointed staff, marked by similar limitations, were also brief. Nevertheless, they did lead to some preliminary observations:

- a. Staff appears to be enthusiastically committed to the new mission strategy and believes that its effective implementation will make a significant difference for the better for the church.
- b. While staff is searching for ways to carry out an imposing array of responsibilities with fewer resources, executives came to their positions, in some instances, with limited prior administrative experience in their particular areas of responsibility. Nevertheless, their commitment to place the Christian gospel at the core of their work is compelling.
- c. Staff members expressed an assuring spirit of cooperation, diligence, and calling for their work. The Review Committee observed that in as much as their learning curve could be steep, the church’s patience and encouragement would be important.
- d. The staff expressed a promising interest in developing new ways of communicating with congregations as well as with synods and presbyteries.

It is clear that the GAC no longer has the resources to operate in the ways it has in the past. It is equally clear from interviews and the survey research that synods, presbyteries, and congregations feel that the GAC has often been ineffective and they expressed a desire for a different kind of relationship with the GAC. The new mission strategy and the reorganization of the GAC recognize both realities and appear to be responsive in concept. We came away from these interviews with a sense of hopefulness and cautious optimism, realizing that there is much to be done and the challenge of successful implementation of the new mission strategy will be enormous.

Chapter 3—Organization of Review Committee Report

The new mission strategy with its change in focus from program-centered to objective-centered and reorganization of GAC governance and staff to align with the new mission strategy posed a challenge to the Review Committee as how best to conduct its responsibilities pursuant to the Organization for Mission. Reviews of other General Assembly entities—the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., the Presbyterian Foundation, and the Board of Pensions—each focused on evaluating the activities of these agencies over the previous six years. It was clear to the Review Committee that given the substantial change underway at the GAC, a backward looking assessment would have limited value. The GAC, in its self-study, suggested that the Review Committee “... assess the appropriateness of the changes being implemented.”

Review criteria are described in the Agency Review Manual and include evaluation of “Church Relatedness,” “Policies and Practice,” and “Program Effectiveness.” Given this guidance and the extent of the changes underway at the GAC, the Review Committee determined that the best way to conduct its review and assessment was to organize the report around the recently discontinued organizational structure of the GAC—Congregational, National, and Worldwide Ministries—recognizing that the GAC is pursuing a new mission strategy. The Review Committee’s assessment of GAC is divided into four sections—Congregational Ministries, National Ministries, Worldwide Ministries, and Shared Services and other GAC responsibilities. Each section that follows begins with an introduction that is followed by three sections—“Key Observations,” “Affirmations,” and “Recommendations for Change or Further Consideration.”

Chapter 4—Congregational Ministries

A. Introduction

“The primary purpose of the Congregational Ministries Division (CMD) is to resource and nurture the witness to Jesus Christ in local settings in cooperation with other governing bodies” (from the PC(USA) Planning Calendar). Prior to the reorganization of the GAC, this purpose was carried out through the following subdivisions:

1. Church Leader Support, including Youth and Young Adult Ministries, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, and the Presbyterian United Nations Office;
2. Theology Worship and Discipleship, including Theology and Worship, Spiritual Formation, the Presbyterian Association of Musicians, and Stewardship;
3. Congregational Ministries Publishing, including Curriculum Development, Mission Interpretation and Promotion, Production, and Marketing.

Theological Education and Conference Ministries were also part of the former CMD.

The financial pressures and a shortage of funds led to various restructurings during the 2001 to 2006 period. As with the rest of the GAC, the CMD reorganization was done with the goal of making the structure more responsive to input and energy from the congregations and middle governing bodies. In the current GAC structure, the majority of the ministries previously accomplished through the former CMD are now assigned to the Theology Worship and Education, Peace and Justice, and Communication and Funds Development.

B. Key Observations

1. Church Relatedness

The number and depth of structural changes involving the former CMD have created both stresses and opportunities in the division’s internal relatedness and its relatedness to the larger church. It is our view that the staff of the former CMD has exhibited an awareness of their servant role in the life of the church. As the lack of resources has forced cuts in staffing, it has become increasingly challenging for the staff to provide the level of service to their constituents that they have been accustomed to providing. Staff of the former CMD report receiving inquiries that suggest many of their former constituents are unaware that there are ministries for which there is no longer direct staff support.

One noteworthy response to this overall challenge has been the development of covenant partner groups (e.g. Presbyterian Older Adult Ministries Network, Presbyterian Association of Resource Centers) who carry out or help carry out the work that once was primarily the responsibility of former CMD staff.

While the leadership development undertaken by CMD in the past on behalf of these networks is commendable, the decrease in direct staff support currently raises questions about the potential loss of a sense of connection with the denomination these covenant group ministries may experience in the future. An example of a creative idea we heard in this regard explores how the denomination could initiate a mission travel program for “baby boomers” seeking meaningful engagement in a global context. The older participants could then have a greater understanding of (and hopefully a greater commitment to) the interpretation and stewardship of the mission of the PC(USA) as a result of interactions with those engaged in “hands on” mission.

While in the formation stage, the Mission Education and Promotion area of the former CMD (which is moving to the Communications and Funds Development Division) has been instrumental in the development of the Mission Challenge 2007 initiative that is already underway. Through Mission Challenge 2007, more than 140 presbyteries have invited international mission personnel to interpret GAC mission to them through sharing their own stories. We hope that this effort will be a vehicle to communicate to the church the transformational successes of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission, thereby garnering broader support for the whole mission of the church.

Particularly at the staff level, we heard many examples of healthy collaboration and communication among staff and between staff and constituents on behalf of furthering the mission of the church. Staff members, as well as others, thought that it would be helpful for the church’s two major publishing programs, the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) and the Office of Theology, Worship, and Education, to provide clear descriptions of their distinctive responsibilities. In past years, it was suggested that as PPC became a self-sufficient agency, the need for it to base decisions on financial considerations became more pressing. In contrast, curriculum in the former CMD was developed with a high value placed on its (1) affordability for small congregations, and (2) an editorial sensitivity to the mandates from the General Assembly to the GAC regarding curriculum content. As a result of these and other factors, the two publishing entities sometimes found themselves in competition with each other. This changed after PPC decided to cease publishing curriculum several years ago.

Many of those we interviewed expressed hope that the new GAC structure will provide an opportunity for there to be greater cooperation between PPC and the curriculum development area of the GAC. It also seemed evident that good opportunities for mutual cooperation and support in other activities, wherever possible, would continue to serve the church well.

2. Policies and Practices

Although the staff of the former CMD expressed an understanding that its responsibility is to manage its assets for the good of the whole Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), we also heard examples where the scarcity of funds over the review period led to behavior that may not have been in the best interest of the entire denomination. For example, it was reported to us, without substantiation, that former CMD staff was instructed not to promote anything at denominational gatherings that was not published by Congregational Ministries Publishing, even to the exclusion of other appropriate resources in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) family. Apparently there has been a shift in this dynamic over time and staff reports greater support for being able to help the former CMD’s constituents know about all resources that may be helpful to them. In fact, staff of the former CMD advises their constituents as to how non-Presbyterian resources can be modified to ensure they are consistent with Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) theology and values.

As access to denominational funding has decreased, the Theology and Worship area of the former CMD has secured funding from the Lilly Foundation to enable programs such as “Reforming Ministry,” which provides a forum for pastors, middle governing body staff, and seminary professors to examine the culture and communication between the three entities that share the teaching office in the Reformed tradition. Whereas this funding from outside the denomination enables this rich and dynamic conversation to exist, it raises questions about the program’s accountability to the denomination and its sustainability after the grant period.

As with other areas within GAC, CMD administrators expressed frustration at the inability to develop and implement long-range plans due to the constant organizational restructures during the review period. It is hoped that the new mission strategy and the change in the GAC’s organizational structure will support the new objectives-centered focus rather than the former programmatic focus and will facilitate more adequately long range planning.

Likewise, staff of the former CMD reported that the change to biennial General Assemblies has provided it more time to implement assembly mandates. But, given the longer time interval between assemblies, a question was raised whether accountability of staff performance should take primary direction from the General Assembly or from the GAC. A corollary question is whether the new GAC organizational structure, with its objectives-centered focus, rather than program-centered focus, might inadvertently lead to lack of clarity in direction for national staff vis-à-vis General Assembly guidance.

3. Program Effectiveness

The Mission Education and Promotion (MEP) area of the former CMD has been successful in promoting the Special Offerings of the denomination and is making use of newer technologies such as PowerPoint CDs to interpret these offerings with even greater effectiveness. Through the “bundling” of promotions for all four Special Offerings with basic mission support in the “five for five” campaign and the institution of “standing orders” for its promotional materials, MEP hopes to increase the effectiveness of its program. The favorable response to the development of Ideas! magazine from Congregational Ministries Publishing represents another example of enhanced program effectiveness as a byproduct of collaboration between previously distinct program areas within the division.

However, an example of how reductions in staff can threaten program effectiveness can also be seen in the former CMD as well. In a denomination that has articulated valuing multicultural ministries in general and Hispanic and Korean ministries in particular, it is significant that Hispanic and Korean staff of the former CMD find themselves not just writing, translating, and promoting resources, but also tracking orders through the Presbyterian Distribution System for Spanish-speaking constituents. This specific scenario is characteristic of a larger concern we heard among staff of the former CMD that personnel reductions without changes in organizational expectations will inevitably lead to unclear job responsibilities and/or burnout—both of which are bound to impact program effectiveness over time.

C. Affirmations

By all reports, it would seem that the commitment and sense of call of the staff of the former CMD remained high during the period under review, even in the midst of difficult reductions in force that were sometimes perceived as an indictment of the importance of their work from the larger church. Our interviews suggested that staff is generally hopeful about the “New Way for a New Day” ethos that is informing decisions regarding ongoing restructuring within the division.

Staff of the former CMD recognizes the importance of engaging middle governing bodies, congregations, seminaries, covenant ministry groups, and others in the church in two-way communication and collaboration/partnership. We were struck by the example of a curriculum development staff member who engaged a constituent in conversation who had contacted her to complain about an aspect of curriculum. That constituent now participates in curriculum development. Staff also provided numerous examples of intra-division communication that has led to the identification and reduction of duplication of services.

We are also heartened by the creativity and passion certain staff of the former CMD have brought to the task of promoting the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Speaking to the trend toward designated giving to mission causes outside the denomination, a staff member of the former CMD described “Mission Challenge 2007” as an opportunity to make the case to the church that its 170 years of experience in mission has value and is good stewardship in the cause of transforming lives in Christ.

D. Recommendations for Change or Further Consideration

1. Staff Workloads. The ministries of the former CMD are a clear example of a dynamic with which many of our congregations are also familiar: grappling with the dilemma of trying to meet the same or greater expectations with less human and other resources. The Review Committee heard the frustration of some staff who perceived that their attempts to articulate and solve the problem of limited resources were heard as complaints. We support a process by which the staff could identify and/or acknowledge the aspects of their work that are no longer feasible for them to accomplish. If this work were not able to be accomplished by others within the division or elsewhere in the national structure, this information needs to be explicitly communicated to the constituencies affected.

2. Publishing. In the area of production of published resources, we believe further consideration needs to be given to shared production across divisions (the term “ministries” has now replaced the term “divisions”) and agencies.

3. Information Sharing. Although there has been increased conversation at the staff level within areas of the former CMD, greater effort needs to be devoted to sharing information and engaging in cooperative work at senior levels within the GAC and other agencies.

4. Principles Guiding Sale of Curriculum Materials. Because of the complexities involved in the sale and distribution of curriculum in particular, the GAC should evaluate whether this aspect of its work should reflect, as one interviewee described, “a corporation that functions like a Church or a Church that needs to apply some corporate principles in order to be a sound organization.” Consideration needs to be given to a perceived tension between the relative profitability of curriculum and its fidelity to mission in its quality and content. We encourage further conversation within the GAC regarding the implications of decisions as the GAC seeks to manage this tension effectively.

5. Commitment to Publishing Curriculum. Similarly, further consideration needs to be given by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) of its commitment to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) curriculum as an essential tool for the formation of denominational identity, particularly for youth and young adults.

Chapter 5—National Ministries

A. Introduction

The former National Ministries Division (NMD), through the GAC, was charged with advising and responding to the General Assembly on priorities, programs, and strategies for addressing matters of national concern for ministry in church and society. The primary purpose of the former NMD was to develop and implement programs that are national in scope and expressive of the denomination's mission priorities, including:

- The challenge of evangelism and church development,
- The promise of racial ethnic and women's ministries,
- The summons of a compassionate search for social justice,
- The grounding of all its work in theological and ethical discernment,
- The responsibility to witness in and through educational institutions, and
- The cultivation and nurture of volunteer and professional leadership for the church.

The program areas in the former NMD included:

- Churchwide Personnel Services,
- Evangelism and Church Development,
- Higher Education,
- Racial Ethnic Ministries,
- Social Justice, and
- Women's Ministries.

The Washington Office also was supervised by the director of the former NMD.

B. Key Observations

What does the denomination as a whole need to understand about how the former National Ministries Division (NMD) of the GAC functioned from 2001-2006? Here are the key messages:

1. Budget constraints. The unrelenting reduction in financial resources was a constant factor that influenced the morale of the staff and the ability to do the work assigned. This contributed to a difficult and challenging work environment. Due to budget reductions staff was not sure what they could actually do and how much they actually had to spend, because the amount of funds kept decreasing.

2. Work environment. The ethos of the work environment was that of a corporate culture rather than that of an ecclesiastical culture. The prevailing mood seemed to be more about efficient business processes than effective ministry.

3. Workloads. Because of budget and staff reductions, workloads seemed to increase drastically for the remaining staff. Rather than reducing the workload along with the reduced number of staff people, employees were asked to do the same amount of work that had been handled by more workers previously. Because of this, staff could respond to requests from churches and individuals, but normally focused their contacts on presbyteries and synods, so that the tasks would not overwhelm the small number of staff.

4. Evaluations of program and staff did take place, although a more effective method of program evaluation is needed.

5. An unwillingness to work together—"silo effect"—seemed to exist between division directors as declining funds forced difficult decisions, but other staff managed to keep working together in positive and collegial ways.

6. Presbyterian Women continues to support the mission of the church through prayers, interest, and finances in very significant ways. Their financial donations are a tangible gift to our church.

C. Affirmations

As a result of our conversations with former and present staff, we offer several affirmations:

1. The staff that has served our denomination for the past six years has been a very dedicated and hard working group of people. Staff members have served very well during extraordinarily difficult times. In a period of uncertainty and instability, they continued to perform the tasks requested of them by the church, even when there was little feedback or encouragement. We want the church to know that we have had many persevering servants working for us behind the scenes.

2. A new, more hopeful environment appears to be emerging as a result of the new mission strategy and new leadership that was put in place in late 2006 and early 2007. The removal of uncertainties and the provision of greater clarity are helping to create a more positive culture in the workplace. While we sense that anxieties remain, staff appears to have new levels of hope and optimism about its work that has been missing in recent years. It was reported to us that people enjoy coming to work, they enjoy whom they work with, and they feel they are once again a part of a meaningful ministry. We came away with the sense that the ethos and culture is changing for the better. This is very constructive and it is our hope that these positive trends continue to develop.

D. Recommendations for Change or Further Consideration

As we met with staff and got a better picture of how the former NMD functioned, we began to see the need for change in how we function as a denomination. We were encouraged to see some changes already taking place, and want to encourage the church to consider the following:

1. Paradigm shift. It is time for a paradigm shift in much of what we do and how we function. A paradigm shift refers to the models, frameworks, and assumptions that help us understand our world and how we organize ourselves to engage in it. Previous models of ministry that were highly effective in an earlier era are not always appropriate or recommended for today. We want to make sure that we are offering training in the best, most recent, most cutting edge evangelism models, as well as what continues to be effective from historical methods. We do not want the strengths of our Presbyterian Women to miss being passed on to a new generation of women. We want to see effective ministry continue in ways that are meaningful to younger women. While the Washington Office has been around for a long time, we want to consider new ways of engaging government and politics. Ways of doing advocacy that are more appropriate to current times need to be explored. As a new church emerges we need the national office not only to emerge with it, but to lead us in expanded and different ways of being the church.

2. Prioritization. As funding levels and staff have been reduced, we simply cannot afford to keep putting the same level of work on the backs of fewer people. As much as we would like, we simply cannot keep doing everything we have done in the past. It is time for us to set some priorities for what the GAC will do. We must say what we will do and what we will no longer do. We must do the hard work of setting priorities. Even though this process will not make everyone happy, it is essential. We must prioritize both tasks and funding. As a denomination that has been losing members for more than forty years, should not the funding of new church developments, evangelism, and church growth be at least one of our top priorities?

3. Communication and Technology. We discovered many good things happened through the former National Ministries Division (NMD) of the GAC that we did not know about. We need to find more and better ways of communicating with the church what we are actually doing. We are glad to see the hiring of a new Deputy Executive Director for Communication and Funds Development, and want to affirm that communication must be a high priority. While the staff has struggled to find ways to communicate with all the congregations in the denomination, are there not technologically savvy people who know how to set this up for us? In this day and age, with computer and Internet capabilities, we believe that regular communications with every church in the denomination could happen.

Chapter 6—Worldwide Ministries

A. Introduction

The former Worldwide Ministries Division (WMD), during the years prior to the restructuring of the GAC, consisted of 100 tethered staff members, 50 deployed staff, as well as 350 mission workers. It worked with a budget of $45 million. The culture of the division was that every staff member understood herself or himself as a mission worker; that ethos continues today.

Although the work of the former WMD has been reorganized and the budget has been dispersed throughout the present structure, much remains to be done. We heard consistently in nearly all areas of the GAC that while staffing has been greatly reduced most of the original program work still remains. This is also true for programs and staff of the former WMD. This reflects the classic shortcoming of attempting to do “more with less,” which usually eventually leads to reduced effectiveness and frustration.

The 215th General Assembly (2003) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved Gathering for God's Future, which was a renewed call to worldwide mission. The opening paragraph states: “The Good News of Jesus Christ is to be shared with the whole world. As disciples of Jesus Christ, each of us in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is sent into the world to join God’s mission. As individuals and as a church, we are called to be faithful in this discipleship. Our mission is centered in the triune God. Our mission is God-called, Christ-centered, and Spirit-led. Our mission is both proclamation and service; it is the reason the church exists.”

The mission story of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is an amazing story that touches every corner of the world. It involves hundreds of networks, thousands of partners, and innumerable faithful workers both near and far. It includes diverse patterns of sending and receiving. The result is that the gospel of Jesus Christ has been proclaimed in ways that have been life-changing. Hospitals and schools have been built and churches have been planted. Relief has been provided in the midst of catastrophic destruction and hope has been restored to communities in despair. The daily reality of partners around the world has been lifted up and the church has been challenged to provide a prophetic witness.

Mission is at the very heart of who we are as Presbyterians. In the midst of unsettled times, it is often the mission mandate that reminds us that what holds us together is always stronger than that which would rend us asunder. While Presbyterians might deeply disagree in governing body debate, they will readily work together in projects that bring healing and hope.

Working together is essential in our understanding of how we do mission. Presbyterians have always understood that “they can do more in mission and do mission more effectively, when they do it together.”<sup>3</sup>

B. Key Observations

Through the review of written materials and reports from the former WMD and lengthy discussion with its staff, the committee developed a deep appreciation for the commitment and faithfulness of those serving in this area of the church’s work. Out of our conversations, we share these key insights:

1. The period covered by this review has been a challenging and difficult period both for our staff and our partners around the world. The restructuring of our denomination has been jarring to our ecumenical partners. It has not only been confusing and unsettling but, in some situations, it has been threatening to the well-being of those with whom we are in covenant relationship. With humility we need to recognize that the decisions we make in our denomination are far-reaching—calling us to be sensitive in times of change to the very real concerns of our brothers and sisters around the world.

2. We were surprised and chagrined to learn that newly appointed mission workers had been told that they must raise their own support. In addition, while crucial mission positions had been filled with qualified candidates, their deployment was put on hold until funding was available. Presbyterians can do better. There are several trends in mission support that exacerbated this situation (see 3. and 4. below). We have been told that this issue is being addressed and that changes are being implemented that will return us to a funding pattern that will take funding off the backs of mission workers and make that support the responsibility of the entire church.

3. The embrace of mission at the local level has been both a gift and a challenge. The commitment to local mission at the congregational level ideally should ignite a greater interest in worldwide mission carried out by our denomination. Sadly, this has not always been the case. Some congregations have adopted ambitious local projects and have funded multiple mission trips for members of their congregation while forgetting that our mission personnel need continued support.

We must not confuse “mission trips” with mission. The most valuable aspect of a mission trip is its ability to shape participants’ hearts for the greater mission of the church. Those who have received “new eyes” through participation in these short-term efforts should have deepened appreciation for the life, service, and witness of those who make longer-term commitments. These efforts should not replace sustained support of long-term mission commitments.

4. The loss of a specific period during the year when the mission stories of the church are lifted up, missionaries itinerate, and the church is called to sacrificial giving on behalf of our mission effort, has been detrimental to our understanding of and support for unified mission. In addition, while our mission stories are compelling, they are not being shared effectively with the whole church in a way that would deepen our members’ commitment to the mission of the church. It is imperative that the church place a high priority on effective communication.

5. While our Constitution (Book of Order, G-15.0100–.0105) clearly affirms that to be Presbyterian is to be ecumenical, there is a decreasing commitment to that ecumenical vision. People interpret cooperative efforts as ecumenical efforts. While the first may be a noble calling, the second is a high calling. There is not sufficient ecumenical formation taking place.

There is concern that in cutting the staff responsible for ecumenical programming and dispersing the responsibility for the nurturing of the ecumenical vision throughout the GAC, we will further dilute this historic commitment.

6. The funding system that allows us to carry out our mission is sometimes confusing to both staff and our members. It is widely believed that a more transparent funding system will result in greater revenues for mission personnel and projects. Another funding concern is that Interfaith Relations, which is especially critical in this ever-shrinking world, is funded through endowed funds that will soon be expended. There are a number of programs in World Mission that are facing the same challenge.

C. Affirmations

1. The former WMD had various program areas that now reside in the current World Mission unit: Ecumenical and Mission Partnerships, Interfaith Relations, Global Education and International Leadership Development, and International Evangelism programs. We were impressed with the talent and expertise of those who have worked in those areas and will continue the work in the new structure.

We received a response to submitted questions from the following: Iranian Ministry Planning Group, Northern Ireland Working Group, Sudan Working Group, and Czech Working Group. Three of these working groups have become Mission Networks. The Mission Networks have served as models for twenty-four additional Mission Networks that have been formed.

2. The former WMD had a number of programs that now reside in the new Relief and Development unit. Some of those programs have wide familiarity throughout the denomination; others are lesser known. In reviewing the programs it was important to us to discern if each program demonstrated fidelity to the mission of the church, if its practices and procedures were transparent and in line with its mandate, and if the program was effective.

We reviewed responses to submitted questions from the following programs:

a. Jinishian Memorial—which provides relief, development, and spiritual support for Armenians in seven countries. This program is administered through a $40 million endowment—the second largest endowment fund of the Presbyterian Foundation. It was created by a $9.2 million bequest from Vartan Jinishian, an Armenian who immigrated to New York from Turkey in 1905.

b. Presbyterian Hunger Fund—which supports programs to alleviate hunger. Specific programs reviewed were Enough for Everyone, Campaign for Fair Food, and PHF International. The PHF programs receive the largest part of their funding through the One Great Hour of Sharing offering. Of all of the programs reviewed, this program had the most effective system of communicating its story to the larger church through Hunger Action Enablers.

c. Self-Development of People—which works to provide opportunities for economically poor, oppressed and disadvantaged people. This program had a well-defined process of evaluation.

We found that all of these groups were working within the parameters of their official mandates. We were pleased to learn that all of the programs, from their inception, have worked cooperatively and/or ecumenically.

While there are numerous stories that attest to the success of their efforts, we believe that some of these programs lack an adequate process for measuring their effectiveness. We hasten to add that a process for evaluating and goal-setting with staff is in place, and turning attention to program evaluation is the logical next step.

3. The Review Committee was buoyed by the deep faith, renewed energy, and hopefulness expressed by the staff of the former WMD, now World Mission and Relief and Development. When asked what they might wish that the Review Committee would share with the larger church, one staff member responded: “God has called the church to be an agent of reconciliation in the world and reconciliation includes all of these programs in which we are involved. The promises of God stand, but we need to be proactive about it. Programmatically, that means we need to steady the course and keep doing what God is calling us to do every day. We need to live in to who we are. We are connectional. We must carry out the tasks together.”

D. Recommendations for Change or Further Consideration

1. Supporting and Promoting Mission Work. We recommend that the General Assembly support the document “A Church-wide Design for Funding Christ’s Work Throughout the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” which will establish a period of time called “A Season of Giving” to interpret and promote the mission work of the church.

2. Communicating Mission Stories. Establish a program for effectively communicating the mission stories of the church in a way that will ignite this church's passion for and commitment to the missionary task of the church.

3. Reaffirm Commitment to Ecumenical Vision. We recommend that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) reaffirm its historic commitment to the ecumenical vision of the church and call on the GAC to evaluate yearly the way in which its programs reflect and promote that ecumenical vision.

Chapter 7—Shared Services and Other GAC Responsibilities

A. Introduction

Shared services include information technology, distribution, human resources, finance and accounting, and facilities management under the direction of Joey Bailey, Deputy Executive Director for Shared Services and Chief Financial Officer. The executive administrator, the general counsel—who also serves several other church agencies and provides advice to middle governing bodies—and the internal auditor report directly to Linda Valentine, the Executive Director. In the restructured GAC, there is a new position of Deputy Executive Director for Communication and Funds Development, which is filled by Karen Schmidt. The elevation of communications to a Deputy Executive Director position and the addition of funds development responsibilities to that position reflect the importance of communicating with all constituencies what GAC is doing and helping bolster financial resources. Survey results (see Appendix D) clearly reflect the importance of both communications and funds development.

In addition there are two offices—the Middle Governing Body Coordinator, Gary Torrens, and the Vocation Office Director, Marcia Myers—that report jointly to the GAC and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA).

B. Key Observations

1. Staff Morale. We found morale and optimism to be high. Shared services and other professional staff feel valued and an important part of helping achieve the GAC's new mission strategy. Staff members appear to be well qualified for their respective areas of responsibility and most have been in their current positions for several years. In contrast to past experience there are now strong bonds among the agencies of the church on issues involving administration and financial management.

2. GAC and OGA Cooperation. We observed a spirit of cooperation between GAC and OGA to make communication with middle governing bodies and enhancement of church vocations more effective parts of the church's mission.

3. Financial Resources. A major challenge in maintaining program effectiveness has been steady shrinkage in available financial resources, which has diverted energy almost without interruption for several years and which has led to downsizing staff and shrinking mission programs.

4. Budgeting. Financial budgeting is now aligned with the eight mission objectives.

5. Human Resources Compliance. We found that GAC staff composition complies with the church's gender and diversity guidelines.

6. Compensation Policies and Administration. The GAC's compensation structure was revised in 2005 but has not been fully implemented due to financial constraints. We also learned that GAC does not have an effective merit pay system, which creates the possibility of uneven administration of the compensation program. We were also advised that Deputy Executive Directors have the final authority on administration of compensation. While this provides for flexibility it also introduces risk of inconsistent application of compensation practices.

7. Technology Systems. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) web site, www.pcusa.org received 3.6 million page views in June 2007 from 1.3 million visits. Besides the home page and the search pages, the most visited areas were daily lectionary readings, followed by the Presbyterian Marketplace, "Find a Church," online giving, and ministry and vocations.

8. Order Fulfillment. Order fulfillment is done primarily by telephone. The existing web service is not user-friendly. Reportedly, this deficiency could be resolved but would be expensive to implement.

9. Cash Reserves. The cash reserves policy may be too conservative.

10. Presbytery Finances. Presbyteries' responsibilities are more complicated in today's world because presbytery staff increasingly is connecting with pastors and congregations in relational ways, but resources are scarcer—budgets are down substantially from ten years ago. Pastors are hungry for support and connection.

11. Vocation Office. The Vocation Office has been restructured to focus on leadership development and discernment of Christian vocation involving preparation for ministry, Christian education, and committees on ministry. It is no longer responsible for national volunteers. Vocation is about both ministers of the Word and Sacrament and certified Christian educators. There is a focus to nurture continuing education and pastoral accountability to use in ways that benefit local churches. However, as in so many other cases with the GAC, financial, human and technological resources limit these worthy programs.

12. Communications and Funds Development Management. The Deputy Executive Director for Communications and Funds Development, Karen Schmidt, has twenty-five years of sales, marketing, and business experience. She is a Presbyterian elder and believes deeply that through Jesus Christ the world can be transformed.

13. Communications and Funds Development Plan. Multiple modes of communication are needed for effective fund raising. The GAC is in the process of developing a comprehensive communications and funds development plan that is intended to help develop a culture within the GAC and throughout the church that establishes a clear "Identity" and follows with a "Call" for support in ways that give people choices. Confusion about identity leads to lack of trust. We must learn to ask each other for our time, talent and treasure. This will require investment in web site design, on-line technology, and databases.

C. Affirmations

1. Human and Financial Resources. We heard from staff affirmation that the mission of GAC and the restructuring of the organization are on the right track. Also, staff was optimistic that available financial resources may have stabilized.

2. Unutilized Space. Because of significant staffing reductions, the Presbyterian Center has substantial unutilized space. A major challenge and opportunity is to lease the excess space and increase revenues.

3. Technology Systems. Significant progress has been made in upgrading technology systems. Systems conversions have been well-managed and completed on time with minimal interruption of critical services. The financial system conversion has been completed and a new donor management system has been installed. Importantly, the information technology architecture can support systems expansion that supports donor data base management and funds development.

4. Accounting and Treasury Functions. Accounting and treasury functions are well-managed. The GAC's external auditor had no concerns about the adequacy of internal controls. In fact, internal controls were effective in catching an internal embezzlement quickly and before much financial damage was incurred.

5. Internal Audit. Internal audit is effective and GAC oversight is appropriate. The 2006 external audit was delayed because of the implementation of a new software system. However, a conversation with external auditors indicated there were no issues of significance. The external auditors did issue a management letter with recommendations on investment reconciliations and certain information technology matters. None of the recommendations, however, was significant or material. The reconciliation of investments involves both the Foundation and GAC.

6. Human Resources. Human Resources has restructured its approach to be customer driven.

7. Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Fund. Some of the tsunami funds contributed to the Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Fund have not been distributed to recipients.

8. Partnering with Middle Governing Bodies. The national church is in the process of moving into a world in which presbyteries are partners rather than clients. This has been facilitated by establishing a middle governing bodies team that is developing ways to strengthen partnership. A web site, MGB Connect!, has been established to share "best practices" and an annual meeting between GAC/OGA and middle governing bodies was inaugurated in September 2006.

9. Office of Vocation. With dwindling numbers of new ordained pastors, the Office of Vocation is exploring alternative pastoral models. The office has established an on-line service for "Church Leadership Connections." The office is nurturing "leadership eco-systems," which encompass programs for systematic development of leadership. It takes all of us to develop leaders.

10. Seminaries. The GAC staff warmly expressed a desire to work more closely with theological seminaries.

11. Communications Plan. The GAC recognizes that tension within the church interferes with funding. Thus, it is critical to establish a clear identity that embraces diversity and all constituencies. Message points have to be created that cut across all church constituencies. This must be accomplished collaboratively. For the GAC the key message is "mission."

12. Funds Development Plan. In recognition that individuals and congregations will respond to the call for mission funding with enthusiasm as mission opportunities are whole heartedly shared and embraced, it is critical to develop a positive, exciting approach that lifts up specific responsibilities in the service of Christ's mission. This will be supported by development of databases and other relevant information tools.

D. Recommendations for Change or Further Consideration

1. Conference Centers. During the review period changing utilization patterns and GAC subsidies put both of the church's conference centers—Stony Point and Ghost Ranch—under financial stress. The advisory board for Ghost Ranch has addressed the challenge and Ghost Ranch is currently operating at a small surplus and has no accumulated deficit. The advisory board for Stony Point has been slower to respond and, as a consequence, Stony Point is currently operating at a substantial annual deficit. The Stony Point advisory board is planning to address the situation with a plan to be presented to the GAC at the February 2008 GAC meeting. In addition, the advisory boards for both Ghost Ranch and Stony Point are considering other long-term alternatives, such as separate incorporation. The GAC should expedite the development of options to improve the financial viability of Stony Point and consider possible alternatives over a longer time horizon that make the most effective use of mission funds.

2. Unutilized Space. The GAC should consider how to utilize the excess space in the Presbyterian Center to support most effectively its new mission strategy.

3. Budget Preparation. We recommend that the GAC continue to be charged with the responsibilities of budget preparation that were formerly assigned to it by G-13.0201(f). While it was obvious that the GAC is continuing with this function, this responsibility needs to be included in the as yet to be released GAC manual of operations.

4. Transactions Involving the GAC and Presbyterian Foundation. The GAC and the Presbyterian Foundation should work together to resolve cash transactions reconciliation and other financial management issues involving both organizations.

5. The GAC and Presbyterian Foundation Coordination. The Review Committee heard that the GAC and the Presbyterian Foundation had worked together in solving some overlapping problems. In light of such positive results, both agencies should continue seeking every opportunity for communication and collaboration, such as providing representation at board meetings, and should continue to work together on matters of mutual interest.

6. Cash Reserves Policy. The GAC should review its cash reserves policy and determine what constitutes a reasonable amount.

7. Compensation Policies and Administration. The GAC should completely implement the revised compensation system or consider revising it so that it is commensurate with financial limitations. The fully implemented system should include either effective merit and promotion compensation administration or controls to ensure fair administration of compensation for all GAC employees.

8. Order Fulfillment. The GAC should explore alternatives, including web-enabled methods, to streamline order fulfillment in a manner that contains or reduces costs.

9. Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Fund. The GAC should review the funds disbursement policy and address administrative issues.

10. Partnership with Middle Governing Bodies. Continue to develop the partnership role of the GAC with middle governing bodies and congregations.

11. Communications Plan. The GAC is on the right track in developing a comprehensive communications plan that establishes a clear "Identity" for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and all of its constituencies and follows with an affirmative "Call" for support in ways that provide people choices to give of their time, talent, and treasure. The GAC recognizes that accomplishing this task will be difficult and will require intense collaborative effort. Because of the importance of this to the church, this undertaking needs to be pursued as expeditiously as possible.

12. Stewardship Development Plan. Stewardship development currently is reactive. The GAC recognizes that the church needs to develop a giving culture that reaches out and cultivates relationships. This will require investment in funds development infrastructure. Moreover, funds development will need to be integrated with a comprehensive communications plan. It is important that funds development initiatives be coordinated and that the risk of potentially counter-productive multiple solicitations be recognized and addressed. The Review Committee encourages the GAC to make the necessary infrastructure investments and to move forward as expeditiously as possible in developing a comprehensive stewardship development plan that addresses program needs as well as mission giving in collaboration with other church agencies and middle governing bodies.

13. Research Services. In recognition of the influential way in which Research Services serves the church, it should regularly consult with division (the term “ministry” has now replaced the term “division”) leaders concerning the ways in which surveys are prepared and reported to the church.

Chapter 8—Referrals

The audit for 2005 for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, was not presented to the 217th General Assembly (2006) for approval as it normally would have been due to a delay in the completion of the financial statements as appropriate treatment of certain Presbyterian Foundation versus corporate funds was deliberated. The Presbyterian Foundation is the fiduciary for certain loan funds for which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, provides administration and disbursement services to congregations throughout the country. The delay in completion of the audit occurred while a determination was made about how these loan funds should be reported on each corporation’s financial statements. As a result, the General Assembly requested the Review Committee to review the 2005 audit.

Members of the Review Committee met with representatives of Crowe Chizek and Company (Crowe Chizek), external auditors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation’s, financial statements. Crowe Chizek reported that the issue had been resolved and approximately $160 million in assets had been removed from the books. These assets reside on the books of the Presbyterian Foundation. Crowe Chizek issued an unqualified audit opinion for the 2005 financial statements. The Review Committee has completed its review of the 2005 financial statements and found all to be in order.

APPENDIX A—GAC Purpose, Vision, Mission and Core Values

GAC Purpose Statement (Adapted from the Book of Order)

The General Assembly Council, led and empowered by the Triune God, provides visionary leadership in the development and implementation of the General Assembly’s mission directives, supports governing bodies in our common mission, and acts on behalf of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on policy matters when the General Assembly is not in session.

GAC Vision Statement (Adapted from the Organization for Mission)

The GAC envisions congregations, presbyteries, synods, General Assembly, and ecumenical partners, singly and together, being so inspired and nurtured by the gospel of Jesus Christ that ministries are vibrant and inviting. The GAC prays that all will be drawn irresistibly into ministries reflecting the love and justice of Jesus, with immediate neighborhoods and the whole of the world as arenas in which the gospel is to be proclaimed and lived.

GAC Mission Statement (Adapted from the Book of Order)

The mission of the General Assembly Council, with congregations and governing bodies, is to offer the world a visible witness of Jesus Christ through (1) the proclamation of the gospel for the salvation of humankind; (2) the shelter, nurture, and spiritual fellowship of the children of God; (3) the maintenance of divine worship; (4) the preservation of the truth; (5) the promotion of social righteousness; and (6) the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world.

GAC Core Values

The General Assembly Council is a community of believers centered in Jesus Christ and grounded in Scripture, prayer, and our confessional heritage. ## APPENDIX C—Survey Results

A. Survey Results

During the spring of 2007, Research Services contributed to a review of the work of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) GAC between 2001 and 2006 by surveying eleven different GAC constituencies: congregational leaders, synod and presbytery executives, Christian educators, congregational change activists, committee on preparation for ministry and committee on ministry moderators, international and ecumenical partners, mission activists, Presbyterian Women leaders, racial ethnic caucus participants, youth and young adults, and donors. Response rates ranged from 56 percent for Presbyterian Women leaders to 15 percent for international and ecumenical partners.

Analysis of responses revealed that:

- Two-thirds of synod and presbytery executives (69 percent) said they were very familiar or familiar with the GAC. Less than half of respondents from all other constituencies, including a quarter of congregational leaders (24 percent), were familiar with the GAC.
- Regardless of size, leaders of only 10 percent to 20 percent of congregations believed that the GAC was very effective or effective in serving congregations of their size (100 or fewer members, 8 percent; memberships between 101 and 350, 11 percent; memberships between 351 and 800, 17 percent; more than 800 members, 21 percent).
- More than 40 percent of congregational leaders and synod and presbytery executives said that the GAC was ineffective in serving elders on congregational sessions and serving members of congregations.
- Three in five congregations (62 percent) had given money to the GAC or one of its ministries (including Presbyterian Disaster Assistance) between 2001 and 2006. The typical congregation had donated once in 2006 and given $1,000 in its latest donation. Leaders of seven in eight (86 percent) congregations that had given were satisfied with the donation process.
- The typical individual or family that had given money to the GAC or one of its ministries (including Presbyterian Disaster Assistance) between 2001 and 2006 had given $100 in his or her most recent donation and donated once in 2006. Almost all donors (89 percent) were satisfied with the process.
- Less than 5 percent of congregations had applied for any of five different GAC grants, and less than 4 percent had received grants. Leaders of half or more of the congregations that had applied were satisfied with the application process, and leaders of three-quarters or more of congregations that had received grants were satisfied with that process.
- A third or more of presbyteries had applied for GAC grants between 2001 and 2006, and a quarter or more of all presbyteries had received these grants. Leaders of half of presbyteries that had applied for grants were satisfied with the application process. Leaders of at least two-thirds of presbyteries that had received grants were satisfied with that process.
- Of eight GAC-produced communications resources, larger proportions of Presbyterian leaders had examined the following four between 2001 and 2006: Presbyterian Planning Calendar, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Web site, Mission Yearbook for Prayer & Study, and Presbyterians Today magazine. Two-thirds or more of those who had examined these resources rates them as good.
- Asked how the GAC should respond to a shortfall of denominational funds available for its ministries, in most groups two strategies were strongly favored: focusing and improving the quality of its services and communicating to Presbyterians more effectively about its ministries. Four in five synod and presbytery executives (79 percent) also believed that the GAC should sharply reduce the size and scope of its work.
- Half or more of Presbyterian leaders in each constituency believed that the GAC exhibits leadership in support of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission to a great extent or to some extent. Three-quarters of synod and presbytery executives (77 percent) believed this, as did three in five congregational leaders (59 percent).
- Half or more of Presbyterian leaders in each constituency believed that the GAC was faithful to its purpose to a great extent or to some extent. Nine in ten synod and presbytery executives (93 percent) and two-thirds of congregational leaders (65 percent) believed this.
- At least three in five Presbyterian leaders in each constituency believed that the work of the GAC is very important or important to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Three in five congregational leaders (64 percent) and synod and presbytery executives (60 percent) believed this.

- In response to an open-ended question, some Presbyterian leaders argued that the GAC is out of touch with presbytery leaders, congregational leaders, and rank-and-file Presbyterians. Also, Presbyterian leaders exhibited confusion about the difference, if any, among the GAC, Office of the General Assembly, elected GAC, and GAC staff.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 08-D

Comment on Item 08-D—From the General Assembly Council.

A NEW WAY FOR A NEW DAY General Assembly Council of the PC(USA)

COMMENDATION

There are several comments the General Assembly Council (GAC) would like to lift up for the 218th General Assembly (2008) in response to the report from the General Assembly Committee on Review of the GAC. First and foremost the General Assembly Council would like to commend the Committee on Review for its work and concur with the committee's ten overarching recommendations. In fact, the GAC is impressed with how closely the focus and direction of the recommendations correspond to issues the council has identified as on-going concerns.

In its original recommendations to the GA Committee on Review, included at the end of the General Assembly Council's Self-Study, the GAC identifies some of the primary concerns emerging from its organizational redesign. These concerns are reflected in the following plan of action:

1. That the 218th General Assembly (2008) confirm the General Assembly Council's role and responsibility as the primary coordinator of mission direction and priorities for the General Assembly.
2. That the General Assembly Council continue using the framework of the Mission Work Plan to set objectives, develop action steps, outcomes, and measurements, and to help ensure the success of the strategy, including
  - a. Engaging the larger church in new ways of networking and partnering in mission,
  - b. promoting an understanding of the distinctive role restricted and unrestricted funds play in the General Assembly Council's ability to respond to the church's needs,
  - c. continuing to explore new and more effective methods for funding mission,
  - d. striving to create a stable but flexible work environment for staff,
  - e. developing an evaluation process that will assist in setting measurable outcomes, and facilitate ongoing assessment.
3. That the General Assembly Council emphasize the importance of creating a successful ongoing communication strategy capable of sharing the activities, resources, and concerns of the General Assembly Council and the wider church with the congregations and middle governing bodies of the church.
4. That the General Assembly Council make it a priority to participate in efforts that help to develop effective linkages with the governing bodies of the church.

In many ways this plan of action mirrors the concerns picked up by the Review Committee in its recommendations, namely concerns about evaluation and prioritization, communication and stewardship, trust and credibility. It's also worth noting that the General Assembly Council does not view these as concerns for future emphasis but rather as issues that have been and still are being addressed. Evaluation and prioritization are integral components of the staff's review of 2007–2008 objectives, and the same will be true for the operational goals developed for the 2009–2012 Mission Work Plan. Communication and stewardship have been consistent priorities throughout the restructuring process, and concerns about increased trust and credibility infuse the overall fabric and design of the new mission strategy.

A UNIQUE PERIOD IN THE LIFE OF THE COUNCIL

As mentioned in the Review Committee's report, in many ways this review deviates from the norm given the fact that the period it covers has seen monumental changes in the General Assembly Council, its staff, and its ministries. For the last seven years the General Assembly Council has been very busy improving itself. A quick review of that history provides a sense of just how extensive this process has been.

The seeds for these changes were laid as early as 1999 when the General Assembly instructed the GAC and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly to proceed with holding consultations with synods and presbyteries that would examine and encourage relationships. In 2002, indications of seismic changes in the church and the broader society caused the General Assembly Council to launch a Strategic Visioning Process and to engage in a process of “spiritual discernment” actively seeking God’s guidance in shaping General Assembly mission. Isaiah 43:19 tells us that God informs Israel, “I am about to do a new thing; now it springs forth, do you not perceive it?” Surely God is saying the same to the church in this day and time, and the General Assembly Council has been and is making a faithful effort to both perceive and respond in effective ways.

In 2003, the General Assembly Council employed consultants to help gauge its effectiveness in governance. In 2004, the council approved its first Mission Work Plan, effective for 2005 and 2006, employing objectives to establish the focus and direction of its ministries, and setting in motion the most extensive reorganization of the mission agency experienced in many years. In this reorganization, the council moved from a three-division configuration (Congregational, National, and Worldwide) to its new ministries centered structure. The new Mission Work Plan system is now in its third iteration with recommendations for 2009–2012 being sent to the 218th General Assembly (2008) for approval.

The period from 2000 to 2006 was indeed a unique period, a time when the General Assembly Council set its sights on meeting the changing needs of the church and mission. Clearly, this was not change merely for the sake of change but rather the result of an extensive process of discernment, reflection, and just plain hard work, and the council believes its efforts to make its programs more responsive to the needs of a changing church will pay substantial dividends.

FIDELITY TO THE MISSION

The primary responsibility of the General Assembly Council is mission and while this process of discernment and study was going forward the council continued to be diligent in the fulfillment of its role. The ministries of the council are many and varied. A quick sampling would include activities as broad and diverse as education, advocacy, network support, resource development, program administration, communication, events planning, publishing, training, institutional support, missionary sending, ecumenical partnerships, ministries of relief and development, matching and placement, and consultative services—just to name a few—and all of these activities continued uninterrupted throughout this period of study, reflection, and reorganization. Indeed, the council is proud of the fact that the integrity and effectiveness of its programs has been maintained. Evidence of its faithfulness along these lines can be seen in the 2007 General Assembly Council Annual Report, a report that highlights the many accomplishments of the council’s ministries.

Ministry is what the council is all about. The General Assembly Committee on Review’s survey seeking input into the church’s perception of the council’s ministries produced mixed results, some uplifting and others identifying opportunities for improvement, but the results clearly attest to the importance of mission and ministry even amidst the changes that characterize these times. The survey observes, “Half or more of respondents in each constituency believed that the General Assembly Council was faithful to its purpose to a great extent or to some extent. Nine in ten synod and presbytery executives (93 percent) and presbytery committee on preparation for ministry and committee on ministry moderators and co-moderators (90 percent) believed the General Assembly Council was faithful to its purpose. Two-thirds of congregational leaders (65 percent) and half of international and ecumenical partners (50 percent) and donors (58 percent) believed the General Assembly Council was faithful to its purpose.”

The survey was also encouraging in its assessment of the council’s role, “At least three in five respondents from each constituency believed that the Council’s work is very important or important to the denomination.” It is reassuring to know that mission is still an important priority to the church and that the council is viewed as having an important role in this crucial area.

Item 08-Info

A. Presbyterian Council for Chaplains and Military Personnel (PCCMP)—Forwarded from the General Assembly Council

2006–2008 REPORT

The PCCMP has been extraordinarily active in its support of chaplains since the 217th General Assembly (2006). Ever since 9-11, reserves and National Guard have been mobilized in large numbers. That continues today with forty-five reserve and National Guard chaplains mobilized from 2006 to 2008. To date, all have come home in good shape. We have been in near constant contact with most of them—assisting in their entry in the active military, speaking with their families, churches, and presbyteries, helping explain pension and USERRA rights, providing support when they returned from the military. With many forces deployed to Afghanistan, Iraq, Kuwait, Djibouti, and the region, the tempo of reserve component utilization may remain high for years. We’ve enjoyed assisting individuals, churches, presbyteries, and General Assembly offices in supporting deployed military members and chaplains. The PC(USA) was especially helpful in posting the names of all of our deployed chaplains for prayer on the PC(USA) Website. We’ve been gratified to see prayers offered, care packages sent, and chaplains “adopted” by churches.

Approximately sixty of our active duty chaplains were deployed into Southwest Asia for actions regarding Iraq and Afghanistan from 2006 to 2008. Many are still deployed. Our military chaplains suffer the same hardships as other military; their ministry is often in harm’s way. We’re glad that only two have earned Purple Hearts and that both are expected to make full recoveries. Some of them are quite exhausted after a war tour; some have symptoms of post-traumatic stress. We seek to be with them and find appropriate support. We held a retreat for chaplains attended by 115 chaplains and family members. We represented the church at retirement ceremonies for eighteen chaplains. We were at funerals for several retired chaplains. We look forward to contacts after chaplains redeploy and are reunited with their families.

The PCCMP has two core functions:

1. The ecclesial duty of endorsement of clergy for service in the military and veteran’s administration (VA) chaplaincies.
2. The pastoral function of supporting those same clergy during their time of service.

Over the past two years, we approved fifteen for military chaplain candidate (seminarian) programs. We endorsed nineteen for the Army, Navy, and Air Force; some are in the reserves while others went immediately to active duty chaplaincy. We endorsed ten for the VA chaplaincy and nine for the Civil Air Patrol (Air Force Auxiliary). Each approval or endorsement requires a collection of application, transcripts, presbytery approval, and letters of reference. After the documents are gathered, we interview the candidates.

Our current data on chaplains by denomination is shown below. We provide endorsement and support to 47 seminarians and 341 clergy. Eighteen of the active duty are female as are two of our VA chaplains. Most of our presbyteries have participants in one or more of the chaplaincy programs.

	Chaplain Candidate	Reserve/ Guard	Active Military	Full-Time VA	Part- Time VA	Civil Air Patrol	Totals

*Of these Reserve/Guard, 22 are currently mobilized

We attended General Assemblies or General Synod for all of our denominations. The chaplain ministry is well received and supported by each denomination. We also participate in the GAC of the PC(USA) without vote because of our covenant relationship. We will host our annual meeting in November 2008.

The ongoing pastoral care for chaplains is an extension of what presbyteries do through committees on ministry. We expect our chaplains to maintain a sound relationship with the PCCMP and their presbytery. We seek to keep a semiannual written contact with each active duty chaplain. We augment that contact with email and telephone. We also make personal contact with each chaplain at least every other year with a visit to their duty station or a meeting at a gathering of chaplains. We also respond very quickly when chaplains and families are in crisis. We work hard to serve chaplains who are changing commands, moving from the USA overseas or the reverse. Quite a few stop by the office in the District of Columbia while in a move or when in Washington for military duty. The PCCMP also hosts an annual retreat for chaplains and families; this facilitates networking and mutual support for our Presbyterian clergy who are often isolated from other Presbyterian contact.

The PCCMP works to interpret its mission and needs to the church. We had good support from Presbyterians Today, Horizons, and the Presbyterian News Service to explain what chaplains do. We’ve also been published in several seminary publications, the Outlook, and the Layman. We made visits to eleven seminaries these past two years and to many presbyteries to interpret the chaplain story and PCCMP mission.

The PCCMP also maintains sound working relations with the chiefs of chaplains offices for each branch of the military and the VA. It offers leadership in the Military Chaplain Association, the National Conference on Ministry to the Armed Forces (NCMAF) and the Endorsers Council for Veterans Affairs Chaplaincy (ECVAC). The NCMAF is the advisory body to the secretary of defense on religion.

Keeping the ministry vital with adequate funding has been difficult. We have redoubled our development efforts, using a part-time development officer and several regional volunteer assistants. We have also found a new fund source in the Combined Federal Campaign. However, the bedrock of our financial health remains with the PC(USA). We are most appreciative of our restored covenant relationship (renewed in 2005) and the inherent financial support of this ministry and function of the church.

Anyone wishing more information can check at our website: www.pccmp.org or call our office in Washington, D.C., 202-244-4177. We will also gladly mail a DVD showing our chaplains and agency at work with the military; it was featured at the Fall 2007 General Assembly Council meeting.

Yours in Christ's Service,

Edward T. Brogan, Director
Chaplain, Colonel, USAF (Ret)

B. Report of the General Assembly Council on Current Task Forces, Work Groups, and Ad Hoc Committees

As instructed by the 204th General Assembly (1992), the General Assembly Council presents to the General Assembly annually, the work of all task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies established by the General Assembly Council, its divisions, or other assembly entities (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 144, 147, 277–78.)

All ministries and the Executive Director's Office were requested to disclose information on how many task forces, work groups, ad hoc committees, and similar bodies were currently at work in their entity. Of the entities responding, sixty-three such groups are currently operating. Fifty-one of the groups were reported as having ongoing responsibilities. The other twelve groups have set completion dates with a written report expected by the entity, the General Assembly Council, or the General Assembly itself. Whenever it is possible, the General Assembly Council assigns tasks to an existing part of its structure. All persons serving on a board, committee, task force, or work group with an expected life of more than two years are selected through the General Assembly Nominating Committee process.

1. Evangelism & Church Growth

Ongoing responsibilities: Mission Development Resource Committee, Financial Aid for Studies Reading Teams, Presbyterian Student Strategy Team (PSST).

2. Peace & Justice

D. Parameters for Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts and Hands Gifts—From the General Assembly Council

The General Assembly Council reports for information, the following resolution establishing parameters for the Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts and Hands gifts. The resolution was approved by the General Assembly Council Executive Committee during its conference call meeting of October 29, 2007:

Resolution

Where the following eight (8) requirements are met, as they may apply to a particular gift, the funds generated will be counted towards the $40 million funds development goal of the Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts and Hands (MIJHH) in support of international mission personnel and church growth:

1. The donor may be an individual member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (PC(USA)) or an individual not a PC(USA) member. The donor may be a PC(USA) governing body, a PC(USA)-related or supportive agency or corporation, or a non PC(USA) affiliated foundation, corporation, or other entity.
2. The donor will have been informed about MIJHH prior to making the gift and the donor will express in writing an intent that the gift is for MIJHH.
3. The gift may be made in the form of immediately available monies, an irrevocable endowment established and dedicated for the benefit of a MIJHH eligible purpose, or a signed pledge commitment.
4. The gift must be fully paid by December 31, 2012, except in cases of endowments created in accordance with requirement number 3, herein that may extend in perpetuity.
5. The gift may or may not flow to the General Assembly Council (GAC). The gift may remain with other PC(USA) governing bodies. The gift may flow to other PC(USA)-related agencies or church partners. An acceptable irrevocable endowment may be made through the PC(USA) Foundation or other institutions approved by the GAC as to purpose, security and suitability of the investment.
6. The gift must advance either PC(USA) international mission personnel or PC(USA) church growth as those terms are defined below:
  - A. International mission personnel means personnel whose primary work is outside the U.S. and advances the global witness and service of the PC(USA), whether or not the personnel are sent by the GAC. To further clarify the intent of this paragraph:
    - i. International mission personnel may be sent by all PC(USA) governing bodies or other PC(USA)-related agencies. If the personnel are being sent by other than the GAC's World Mission Program Area (World Mission), then the sending entity and World Mission must be in agreement that the proposed position is consistent with and supportive of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s work and witness in the place to which the personnel are being sent and such personnel must attend a World Mission orientation for mission personnel prior to deployment;
    - ii. At the GAC, international mission personnel must be new positions. That is a position that has not existed previously or has not been filled in the past 3–5 year term. A person with missionary experience is not excluded from candidacy;
    - iii. Donors may give for the purposes of PC(USA) international mission personnel generally or for a particular PC(USA) mission personnel position;
    - iv. International mission personnel is also understood to include projects related to a PC(USA) mission personnel position, as described above; and,
    - v. The Agreement between the Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts and Hands and the Worldwide Ministries Division (predecessor to the current PC(USA) World Mission area) on funding International Mission Personnel and dated April 27, 2005 is hereby incorporated by reference. In the event any of the provisions of that Agreement should conflict with those otherwise stated herein, the explicit provisions of this Resolution shall apply.

- B. Church growth means providing funding for:
- i. grants for new church development, especially in racial ethnic, Immigrant, and Gen-X new church developments;
  - ii. grants for church redevelopment for existing congregations;
  - iii. grants for racial ethnic and immigrant fellowships;
  - iv. grants for specialized ministries such as day-care centers, youth outreach programs, and parish nurses;
  - v. grants and loans for “bricks-and mortar” projects, including property acquisition, building construction, building repair, and expansion; and,
  - vi. grants and loans for technology upgrades to assist worship;
7. In reporting gifts, the following financial reporting standards shall apply:
- A. Campaign total will consist of:
- i. Face value of outright gifts and pledges from individuals, foundations, or other entities received and payable within the campaign period and post campaign accounting period and no later than December 31, 2012;
  - ii. Face value of outright gifts and pledges from congregations and middle governing bodies received and payable within the national campaign period and post campaign accounting period and no later than December 31, 2012. It is understood that said gifts and pledges may also be counted as commitments and contributions to local fund raising efforts.
- B. To be reported, all pledges shall be in written form with signature by the individual donor, the donor’s legal representative or trustee: All pledges from congregations require written verification by the clerk of session or the stated clerk of the presbytery. The date of recording for financial reporting purposes shall be the date of the vote by the session or the middle governing body, if verification is received within 5 working days past the end of the quarter.
- C. Outright gifts shall be recorded when assets are transferred irrevocably to the PC(USA) or the Presbyterian Foundation. Deferred gifts will be reported only when assets are transferred, or in the case where no assets are transferred, when the donor consummates a legally binding pledge agreement or other irrevocable document with the PC(USA) or the Presbyterian Foundation.
8. If questions arise regarding whether or not the requirements set forth above have been met, a request for clarification will be presented in written form to the full Steering Committee of MIJHH for its review and validation, and the full committee is hereby authorized to determine whether the funds generated are within the campaign or not. Further, upon its review and validation, the Steering Committee of MIJHH shall immediately report such determination to the GAC or if the GAC is not in session, to the GAC Executive Committee.

Further, and recognizing that certain commitments and agreements have been made relative to that certain gift from Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church which does not fall within all the parameters set forth above and while still honoring the commitments and assurances made to previous MIJHH donors, a one-time exception will be made to treat the MAPC as counting toward the goals of MIJHH to the extent that: i. funds generated from its quasi endowment shall be used consistent with Item 6.A.i., above; and, ii. gifts shall be recorded only in an amount equivalent either to a signed pledge to fund such position(s) or in the alternative, in the amount(s) actually received by MIJHH prior to December 31, 2012, as such gifts are received.

Background

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a large and diverse church. Its more than 2,000,000 members, governing bodies, and related institutions have a passion for the mission of the church. Since the inception of the MIJHH in 2002, Steering Committee and GAC leadership have witnessed, time and again, the enthusiasm for advancing global mission and domestic church growth. We have also seen donors (individuals and governing bodies) who want to contribute to the MIJHH but want to give gifts at some variance from the original intent of the campaign. These donors embrace the MIJHH; they simply do so in ways somewhat different from the original design. We have listened and learned in this process. The PC(USA) is growing into the 21st century church. The face of the church is changing and, with it, what Presbyterians want to give to and how they want to give. We believe the MIJHH should be agile enough to meet the church where it is right now.

Recognizing this, the Steering Committee of the Mission Initiative: Joining Hearts and Hands adopted a resolution on July 16, 2007, and referred it to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) General Assembly Council (GAC) Executive Committee with the recommendation the Executive Committee adopt the resolution and forward it to the September 2007 meeting of the GAC for ratification by that body. On July 27, 2007, the Executive Committee adopted the resolution. After further consultation, the Executive Committee adopted a revised resolution on September 18, 2007. The revised resolution was submitted to the GAC for ratification by the council. On September 21, 2007, the GAC voted to refer the resolution to the Executive Committee for further review and deliberation, with pertinent background documentation forwarded to each GAC elected member for their review; requesting that each council member send comments or advice to the GAC chair or Executive Director for consideration by the Executive Committee; and further, that the Executive Committee be authorized to take final action on adoption of the resolution. A telephonic conference meeting of the Executive Committee was held on October 2, 2007. Following discussion and inquiry as to MIJHH's guidelines and actual practices, the Executive Committee decided to appoint a committee to further revise the proposed resolution incorporating ideas and points raised during the telephonic conference meeting. The Executive Committee called a telephonic conference meeting for October 29, 2007, for ratification of the resolution, as further revised. The resolution should be reported as information to the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Background

Nehemiah was one of the Bible's great leaders. He exhibited three abilities that every leader needs to develop and demonstrate.

First, a leader needs discernment to assess accurately the current condition of the organization, i.e. "This is where we are now." When Nehemiah looked at his country, he saw people on the verge of losing their identity. Because Jerusalem was unprotected and vulnerable to attack, its inhabitants sought security in small villages outside the city. Gradually they melted into these foreign cultures, losing their unique language, culture, and religion.

Nehemiah exercised discernment to assess the situation correctly. He saw beyond the obvious—that the Jews were drifting geographically—to the more subtle fact that they were drifting spiritually.

Second, a leader needs the vision and understanding to add, "And this is where we need to go." Nehemiah realized what Jerusalem needed if it hoped to be the city God intended. Without direction, the situation would inevitably worsen, and the nation would lose its grip on what spiritual identity it could salvage.

Visionary leaders know the status quo won't last forever; most static organizations are actually in the first stages of decline. So leaders look ahead. They envision change. Nehemiah pictured his nation as it ought to be—strong and sure of its identity.

Third, a good leader knows how to bring together the people and resources needed to move the organization from where it is to where it needs to be. Nehemiah was a master at this mobilization. He gathered together hundreds of workers and inspired them to work "with all their heart" (Neh. 4:6). They would not give up their goal, even in the face of opposition.

Lead is an active verb. A leader is able to say, "Here's how we get to where we want to go," and people follow.

The abilities of a leader in Nehemiah's time are the same for us today. As those of us called to leadership in the church know, how we manage the process of getting things done through other people is an important component of leadership. To accomplish our goals we need to have the ability to bring together the necessary people and resources with an effective structure based on a solid theological foundation.

The vision for governance detailed in the following pages will provide the effective, theologically grounded structure to help us accomplish our goals.

Theological Foundation

So if anyone is in Christ, there is a new creation: everything old has passed away; see, everything has become new (2 Cor. 5:17).

In our reflections together, the Governance Task Force has been inspired by fresh winds of the Spirit that God is sending within our life as a denomination. We believe that a church that is reformed and continually being reformed by the providence of God (Book of Order, G-2.0200) needs to reshape structure and process to respond to the contemporary needs of a changing world. In this third millennium, governance systems have become leaner and more flexible, collegial, and focused on empowering all constituencies. We believe that the part of the body of Christ called the General Assembly Council needs to become a new creation in the ways we implement and interpret the vision of the General Assembly. The proposals in this report reflect our sense of the Spirit's call to reshape our life together.

The task force has been guided in its reflection, discussion, and work by the following affirmations. They are founded on the witness of the Bible and the expositions of our Reformed tradition, including the Book of Order and The Book of Confessions.

We believe Jesus Christ is the head of the church and the Lord of the conscience, and that whenever we gather we are wholly dependent on the mercy of God to guide us as individuals and as a community.

We believe baptism is an act of grace initiated by the community of Christ, and a foundation for a life of Christian discipleship. Baptism is our entrance to the Christian community and our call to service in the church and in the world. By its very nature it obligates the individual to the community.

We believe the connectional polity of our denomination provides witness to the manifestation of the Spirit of Christ that the strong in faith may need to submit individual freedoms to the conscience of the community. In our governance system, the responsibility of the individual and the responsibility of the community are held in tension; neither is elevated. The individual responsibility to discern the will of God is tested in the life of the community.

In a church that is faithful and diverse, we propose a General Assembly Council (GAC) structure that can build up the body of Christ with a unifying vision, helping us to better discern the mind of Christ. We have endeavored to strengthen our relationships within the body of Christ by offering a connecting network between the GAC and the middle governing bodies of the church—all to the glory of God!

Rationale

The BoardSource self-assessment the General Assembly Council (GAC) completed in January 2003 clearly showed the need for the council to be closer to congregations, presbyteries, and synods, and to look for ways to better communicate to them. It also indicated the large size of the council was a concern, and that we needed to look at our size and the relationship between elected and staff roles as together we guide and best support the mission of the church. Taking all of this into consideration, in February 2004 the Mission Work Plan called for us to evaluate, develop, and propose a structure of the GAC (elected and national staff) that will strengthen connectedness with presbyteries and synods.

The current structure of the GAC has served us faithfully and well in an era where General Assemblies met annually, terms of office began and ended each year during an assembly, and the work of the staff was structured within divisions. But the winds of the Spirit are leading us in a new direction:

1. Biennial assemblies have changed terms of office and altered the functions of the GAC over a two-year period.
2. Because the Mission Work Plan has built a new structure around four goal areas that do not fit naturally into the existing GAC structure, it is important to re-envision a GAC governance structure that supports this new reality.
3. Strengthening connectedness with presbyteries and synods requires enhancements to our ability to communicate and our capacity to act quickly as a leaner, more efficient entity.
4. Because presbyteries and synods are in close touch with the mission needs of the church and are creating new governance patterns and structures that are more fluid, flexible, and effective, we believe the GAC can learn from these middle governing bodies. A smaller council and a commitment to meet annually with presbytery and synod executives will encourage communication and mutual learning to happen.

General Assembly Council Awards Policy

(Approved by the General Assembly Council, September 1999, Revised September, 2007)

The General Assembly Council, at various times and places, may present awards to honor persons or entities/organizations for outstanding achievements in relationship to the goals of the General Assembly Council. Listed below are guidelines to be followed for determining award recipients:

- A. Appropriate staff will (re)formulate written policies and procedures in the selection process for each award to be submitted for approval by the appropriate Mission Committee. [Each award is to have a one-sheet explanation including criteria and process for determining the selection with periodic review and/or approval of changes (possibly included in covenants)].
- B. Each selection committee will submit proposed recipients for each award to the appropriate Mission Committee with the names of those serving on the selection committee and written rationale for the proposed selection(s). This should be done prior to informing the proposed recipient(s) of their selection. The appropriate Mission Committee reviews the proposed recipient(s) in light of the ongoing commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to be reformed and always reforming according to the Word of God and the Call of the Spirit, as well as to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Constitutional standards and policies. This should be done before the selection goes forward.
- C. All nominees should be submitted to the appropriate Mission Committee at or before the winter meeting of the GAC (or its successors) for its review. In the event the nominees cannot be named by the winter meeting of the GAC, the nominees will be sent to the GAC Executive Committee for its action.

- D. The selection committees will report to the appropriate Mission Committee the results of their consideration of “Awards as issues to ponder” (see below) and this response will be included in the minutes of the appropriate Mission Committee.
- E. In the event the selection committee’s nominee is not accepted by the appropriate Mission Committee, the selection committee may appeal that decision to the General Assembly Council. Appeals are limited to questions pertaining to compliance with award criteria.

From the Report of the Awards Task Group to the Executive Committee of the General Assembly Council, September 22, 1999:

Awards as issues to ponder:

... The work Group proposes that the following five items need to be pondered thoughtfully by the groups awarding and administering awards “within the scope of the work of the General Assembly Council.” [See recommendation D.]

1. Why give awards? The answer seems to be simply, “to honor the person.” While this is part of an answer, the questions also asks for honesty regarding the motivation of the group giving the award. Is there a strong element of advocacy for a cause? The work group is convinced that we must remember that it is the Church of Jesus Christ which is involved in such activities.
2. Develop an appropriate basis for each award.
  - a. Scripture, particularly the Gospels, warn us about the dangers of seeking honor (Matthew 13:57 and parallels). “Honor” is most frequently used relating to reverence toward the Triune God.
  - b. In The Book of Confessions, the emphasis on honor to God is continued. Appropriate to our present concern are passages such as C-5.026, 5.258 (regarding government in the light of Romans 13), and C-7.237, 239, and .241, where honor for others is discussed.
  - c. The Directory for Worship offers what we found to be perhaps the most helpful comments regarding this situation in W-4.7001:

“Service given to the community beyond the particular mission of the church may be appropriately recognized as an expression of Christian discipleship with prayer and thanksgiving at a suitable time in an occasion of worship. Significant accomplishments in the lives of Christians or honors and other forms of recognition received by them may also be occasions for such celebration with the community of faith.” [Note how this compares with W-4.1001, .2004, .3003, and .5002.]
3. How much staff time, money, and energy go into awards? Our investigation suggested that the “costs” of awards tend to be hidden. Some awards are supported by dedicated funds for cash awards. Our concern is not with these, but primarily with the “costs” in staff time and energy. Most of the actual costs are considered “Office Expense”, and appear to be relatively minor.
4. When and where should awards be given? The giving of awards at a special ceremony was not part of the 211th General Assembly. There continue to be numerous breakfasts where awards are conferred. However, reflection on W-4.7001 suggests that the question of the appropriate venue for giving awards can be a fruitful enterprise. For example, when the Restorative Justice Award was given at a presbytery meeting, the person was honored as the value and importance of this aspect of mission were highlighted. The effect of this change of venue suggests the wisdom of careful reflection on the appropriate venue in the light of the purpose of the award as a recognition of commitment to mission.
5. Can awards serve as models and/or inspiration? We believe that the answer to this question is, “Yes,” when there has been careful review and preparation for the way in which each award is conferred, as well as where that is most appropriately done.

ETHICS POLICIES

(Replaces Conflict of Interest Policy)

The Ethics Policy for Elected and Appointed Members of the General Assembly Council is set out immediately below. The Ethics Policy for General Assembly Council Employees is set out at <http://www.pcusa.org/gac/ethics.htm>

ETHICS POLICY for Elected<sup>4</sup> and Appointed Members of the General Assembly Council and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

Introduction

This Ethics Policy for Elected and Appointed Members of the General Assembly Council (“GAC”) and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (“COGA”) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“Ethics Policy”) addresses business ethics and does not include the other ethical values and policies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“PCUSA”)<sup>5</sup>. The Ethics Policy applies to all elected and appointed members of the GAC and COGA and members of their committees, task forces and workgroups in matters relating to the performance of their duties and responsibilities for the GAC/COGA. Hereinafter the term “elected member” will be used to collectively refer to those individuals listed in Footnote 1 below. The term “GAC/COGA” collectively refers to those two ecclesial bodies, their elected members, their respective staff members, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, and all subparts thereof.

All funds and property received and administered by the GAC/COGA are entrusted to the organization by God through the faithful financial support of PCUSA members and friends. The highest degree of stewardship and fiduciary responsibility is expected of all elected members, including the receiving, reporting, and use of funds, property, and time. Elected members are responsible for complying with laws, regulations<sup>6</sup>, and GAC/COGA and PCUSA policies and procedures.

As an elected member, what does this Ethics Policy require of me?

The required standards of this Ethics Policy are set out in 1-6 immediately below. The forms and processes are set out in the five attachments.

Standards of Ethical Conduct

1. Duty of Loyalty and Care. The duty of loyalty and care as well as the obligation of good stewardship requires all elected members to act first in the best interests of the GAC/COGA rather than in the elected member’s own interests or the interests of another entity or person. All elected members shall exercise reasonable efforts to inform themselves of the mission and ministry of the GAC/COGA. All elected members shall act as a reasonable elected member would act under the same or similar circumstances. These responsibilities are set forth below.
2. Conflicts of Interest. All elected members shall avoid conflicts of interest, potential conflicts of interest, and situations that give even the appearance of a conflict of interest.<sup>7</sup>
  - a. Definition. “Conflict of interest” means any situation in which the elected member may be influenced or appear to be influenced in decision-making or business dealings by any motive or desire for personal advantage other than the success and well-being of the GAC/COGA. Personal advantage means a financial interest or some other personal interest, whether present or potential, whether direct or indirect. This standard applies to both actual and contemplated transactions. When in doubt, the elected member is to assume there might be a conflict and should raise the question pursuant to this Ethics Policy.
  - b. Employment Ineligibility. No GAC elected member shall be eligible to become an employee of GAC or otherwise render compensable services to the GAC for the duration of their term. For purposes of this paragraph, resignation does not result in the premature end of term. For example, an elected person who resigns with one year left in his/her term continues to be prohibited from becoming an employee until the expiration of that remaining year. No COGA elected member shall be eligible to become an employee of OGA or otherwise render compensable services to OGA for the duration of their term. This prohibition does not apply to a member serving as an ex officio member of the GAC or COGA. For purposes of this paragraph, resignation does not result in the premature end of term. Exceptions, however, may be made under the following two circumstances if the GAC Executive Committee or COGA Coordinating Committee (as appropriate) votes by 2/3 to allow the exception:
    - To facilitate development of specified projects through limited contracts of less than 18 months in duration. The elected member may be compensated under the contract.
    - To fill an officer or employee position on an interim or acting basis for two years or less. The elected member may be compensated for such service. The elected member must resign his/her elected position.
  - c. Disclosure Deadlines. All present and potential conflicts of interest issues must be disclosed in writing annually (See Attachment 1) and thereafter as they arise. If the conflict is known in advance of any meeting, business transaction, contract, or other activity at which issues may be discussed or on which the issues may have a bearing on the elected member’s approach, whether directly or indirectly, it shall be disclosed ahead of time and the elected member shall abstain from any participation in the discussion or decision. If the conflict is not known in advance, it shall be disclosed when the actual or potential conflict becomes apparent. All disclosures are to be made promptly in writing to the chair/ moderator of the body and to the General Counsel. (See Attachment 2). See Attachment 5 for procedures to follow at meetings of the elected body or its committees, task forces and workgroups to document disclosure and action by disinterested members.
  - d. Potential Conflicts of Interest. All elected members are likewise to disclose promptly, in writing, matters and relationships that have the potential for giving rise to the appearance of a conflict in business dealings with the GAC/OGA. Examples include, but are not limited to, financial interests, leadership roles, or board membership with vendors and other organizations doing business with the GAC/OGA. GAC/OGA business dealings with an elected member's friends and family<sup>8</sup> are particularly sensitive and are to be disclosed and carefully evaluated because of the potential for inferences of tangible or intangible personal advantage and the appearance of impropriety. All disclosures are to be made promptly in writing to the chair/moderator of the body and to the General Counsel. (See Attachment 2).

<sup>6</sup> Federal and state constitutional religious free exercise provisions, as well as laws and ordinances, exempt religious organizations from some laws. An elected member should consult with the General Counsel if such questions arise.

<sup>7</sup> Personal investments with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., or employee benefits provided by the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are not considered a conflict of interest.

- e. Gifts and Relationship Building. To avoid appearances of impropriety, any gifts, gratuities, special favors, and hospitality to an elected member shall not be accepted by any elected member from any person or organization that sells, delivers, or receives any goods, materials, or services to or from the GAC/OGA. This prohibition includes those persons or organizations that desire to enter into such relationships with GAC/OGA. There are four exceptions to this rule:
    - (1) Gifts, meals, outings, and relationship-building activities provided by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) churches, middle governing bodies, partner churches or related organizations in connection with GAC/OGA business. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.
    - (2) Gifts that primarily benefit the GAC/OGA and not an individual elected member, such as gifts of complimentary rooms given to the GAC/OGA by hotels, conventions, and conferences in relation to official GAC/OGA business. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.
    - (3) Occasional small gifts (less than $50.00 in value, such as flowers or foodstuffs) to an individual elected member. Where gifts are shared with other elected members or GAC/OGA staff (e.g., foodstuffs set out for all to partake), then the gift is not deemed to be to an individual elected member. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount.
    - (4) Luncheons, dinners, outings, and relationship-building activities in connection with GAC/OGA business may be received. If an activity permitted under this section #4 results in a value of over $100 to the elected member, the elected member shall promptly report this in writing to the chair of the body and to the General Counsel. Elected members shall not accept monetary gifts of any amount. The written report will include a description of the activity, the dollar value, the name of the person/organization providing it, and the business that person/organization does with GAC/OGA. The General Counsel shall maintain a log that includes all of the written reports submitted under this section #4. This log will be available at all times to the GAC Chair, the GAC Executive Director, the COGA Moderator, the Stated Clerk and the Chair of the Audit Committee.
  - f. Process and Resolution. All conflict of interest disclosures, reports, or questions are to be made promptly and in writing to the chair of the body and to the General Counsel. The General Counsel will consult with the chair of the body and the GAC Executive Director or the Stated Clerk, as appropriate. After consultation, the General Counsel will make a recommendation to the GAC Executive Committee or the COGA Coordinating Committee, as appropriate. Those bodies provide the final decision on any elected member conflict of interest matters.
3. Confidentiality of GAC/COGA Information. Elected members shall not disclose information about the GAC/COGA that is not known outside of the GAC/COGA or is not known by public means. Of course, it is expected that elected members will share certain GAC/COGA information with other parts of the PCUSA, related entities and the public when asked to do so by the GAC/COGA. If questions arise, the elected member should inquire of the chair of the body. If the chair/moderator of the body needs assistance, the General Counsel should be consulted by the chair/moderator.
  4. Transactions, Reporting, and Document Retention. Each elected member has a duty to prepare, process, maintain, and report complete, accurate, and timely records pertaining to their role, including, but not limited to, expense reports. This also includes safeguarding all physical, financial, informational, and other GAC/COGA assets and records. Elected members shall comply with the Records Retention Schedule of the Office of the General Assembly's Department of History and related schedules as part of the normal course of business and use the schedules in a consistent and accountable manner for both records retention and destruction purposes. See www.history.pcusa.org/national/schedules.html. See also the Electronic Records Policy for GAC and OGA (anticipated release in 2007). Any document relevant to actual or anticipated internal investigations, legal proceedings or governmental investigations (civil or criminal) must not be destroyed and must be preserved in a manner that would ease accessibility and retrievability of the document. In addition, elected members shall not direct or participate in establishment or maintenance of undisclosed or unrecorded funds or assets, nor shall the elected member direct the making of any artificial or false entries in the financial or other records of the GAC/COGA.
  5. Duty to Disclose/Whistleblower Policy. Elected members have a duty to report violations of this Ethics Policy, whether the violation is by themselves or by another. This includes, but is not limited to, financial, accounting, or auditing irregularities. See Attachment 2 for Self-reports. See Attachment 3 for Whistleblower Reports concerning others. See Attachment 4 for Procedures for processing a Whistleblower Report. Likewise, concerns about the appearance or the possibility of violations should be reported. Care must always be taken to be factual and objective. Violations shall be reported promptly in writing to the General Counsel, and may be reported anonymously. Anonymous whistleblower reports can also be made by calling the hotline at (888) 236-6877 (operable May 2, 2007). An anonymous whistleblower report must include sufficient corroborating evidence to justify initiating an investigation. (If the alleged violation involves the General Counsel or one of his staff members, it should be reported to the Internal Auditor.)

<sup>8</sup> "Family" includes the elected member's spouse, parents, siblings, spouses of siblings, children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, the spouses of children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, any other blood relative, and individuals who live in the elected member's home.

- (a.) No Retaliation. There shall be no retaliation within GAC/COGA for good faith complaints, reports, participation in an investigation or for providing truthful information relating to an alleged violation of this Ethics Policy. In addition, there will be no retaliation where an elected member makes a good faith report of the commission or possible commission of any criminal offense to a law enforcement officer. Elected members are protected even if the allegations are mistaken or unsubstantiated, as long as the elected member reasonably believes the reported conduct constitutes a violation of the Ethics Policy. One who makes a claim or report under this Whistleblower Policy in bad faith, or knows or has reason to know that such claim or report is false or materially inaccurate may be subject to disciplinary sanctions by the governing body with jurisdiction over the elected member.
- (b.) Confidentiality of Investigation. Reports under this Whistleblower Policy will be treated confidentially with disclosures made on a need-to-know basis only to those directly involved in the investigation of the reported concern. To the extent possible within limitations of the law, policy and the need to conduct a competent investigation, confidentiality will be maintained.
- 6. Violations. Violation or noncompliance with this policy may result in discipline by the governing body with jurisdiction over the elected member.
- 7. Amendments. The Ethics Policy may be amended from time to time. In consultation with the General Counsel, the GAC Executive Director and the Stated Clerk (as appropriate) are authorized to make reasonable and necessary changes to this Ethics Policy. Substantive changes must be reported back to the elected body approving this Ethics Policy. Editorial changes need not be reported back.
- 8. Designees. Where this Ethics Policy assigns a duty to a particular officer or staff position, that officer or staff position may use a designee to complete the duties.
- 9. No Waiver by GAC/COGA. Nothing in this Ethics Policy shall be construed to waive any claim, assertion or defense of the GAC/COGA to exemption or exclusion from applicability of a statute and/or regulation or lack of jurisdiction of a civil court or governmental agency.
- 10. Trainings. Trainings to familiarize the elected members with this Ethics Policy and its related forms and procedures will be conducted for GAC/COGA elected members by the Legal Services Office as frequently as deemed necessary by the GAC Chair and COGA Moderator, as appropriate:

Procedures for processing a Whistleblower Report of possible Ethics Policy violation in regards to another elected member, an employee, or an organization

A. All reports under the Whistleblower Policy (See the Ethics Policy) shall be submitted in writing promptly to the General Counsel. Anonymous whistleblower reports may be made by calling the hotline at (888) 236-6877. An anonymous whistleblower report must include sufficient corroborating evidence to justify initiating an investigation. If the alleged violation involves the General Counsel or one of his staff members, it should be reported to the Internal Auditor. The General Counsel will decide if the reported activity, if confirmed, would be an Ethics Policy violation, a possible violation of a policy or procedure not covered by this Ethics Policy, or a matter to be processed through another avenue, typically supervisor review with a report to the General Counsel. If the General Counsel decides the report will not be processed under this Ethics Policy, the General Counsel will respond to the accuser unless the report was filed anonymously. The General Counsel shall keep a log of all reports received under the Whistleblower Policy. Whether or not an investigation was done, the log will include the resolution of all reports. The log will be available at all times to the Chair of GAC, the Moderator of COGA, and the Chair of the Audit Committee. If the person reporting is simply confused about an issue and how it applies, then the General Counsel will ensure clarification is provided by the chair of the body or the General Counsel. If the chair of the body provides a written response to the elected member, a copy of the response will be provided to the General Counsel.

- B. All other reports shall be initially reviewed by a three-person committee (Investigative Committee) comprised of the General Counsel, the Internal Auditor and a third person appointed by the GAC Chair or COGA Moderator (as appropriate). The Investigative Committee will first determine whether or not an investigation is warranted. If it is not, the Investigative Committee shall so report. If an investigation is warranted, the Investigative Committee shall proceed as set forth below.
- C. The following processes shall apply to an investigation conducted by the Investigative Committee:
  - 1. If the report alleges a violation by a GAC elected member, then the GAC Chair and the GAC Executive Director shall be notified an investigation has commenced. If the report alleges a violation by a COGA elected member, then the COGA Moderator and the Stated Clerk shall be notified an investigation has commenced.
  - 2. If the report alleges a violation by the GAC Chair, then the vice-chair and the GAC Executive Director shall be notified an investigation has commenced. If the report alleges a violation by the COGA Moderator, then the vice-chair and the Stated Clerk shall be notified an investigation has commenced.
  - 3. The Investigative Committee shall be allowed to retain the services of experts it may need to conduct a reasonably thorough investigation.
  - 4. The Investigate Committee may recommend administrative leave for any involved employees while the investigation is in process.
  - 5. The Investigative Committee will promptly conduct its work. The typical investigation will include the following steps:
    - a. Interview all parties involved with relevant knowledge, including but not limited to the accuser and the accused (if possible). Secure and review any relevant documents or other communications (if available and appropriate).
    - b. Determine if there is a potential for risk to persons or property. If there is a potential risk, take reasonable measures as appropriate to protect those persons and property.

Complete a written report of the findings and recommendations, (including discipline of the elected member). The Investigative Committee will provide a copy of its report (including all relevant documents) to the Audit Committee. At the same time the report is submitted to the Audit Committee, copies will be provided to the accused and the accuser. The chair/moderator of the body and the GAC Executive Director or Stated Clerk (as appropriate) will also receive a copy. Generally, the accused and the accuser will have seven business days to submit written comments to the Audit Committee in response to the Investigative Committee's written report. The Chair of the Audit Committee may extend this period if such an extension is reasonably necessary.

- 6. All elected members and employees are required to fully cooperate with these investigations, and shall not be retaliated against by supervisors or anyone for cooperating and participating in the investigation.
- 7. The Audit Committee shall consider all the submissions promptly and reach a conclusion. While the Audit Committee does not have the authority to discipline elected members of GAC/COGA, its decision shall include any recommendations in that regard. GAC or COGA, as appropriate, shall give great weight to the decision of the Audit Committee. The Audit Committee shall make a full report of the matter to the GAC Executive Committee and the Executive Director or the COGA Coordinating Committee and the Stated Clerk (as appropriate). Thereafter, the GAC Executive Committee or the COGA Coordinating Committee (as appropriate) will affirm, modify, or reverse the decision of the Audit Committee. In reaching its decision, the GAC Executive Committee or the COGA Coordinating Committee (as appropriate) may also hear from any of the following as it deems fit: the accused, the accuser, the Investigative Committee, and others it deems relevant.
- 8. GAC/COGA will ensure that whistleblower reports submitted under this Ethics Policy are dealt with impartially and confidentially. To that end, information will only be shared on a need-to-know basis so as to fulfill the process. Any elected member who violates the confidentiality of this process shall be subject to disciplinary action by the body with jurisdiction over the elected member.
- 9. GAC/COGA prohibit retaliation, including but not limited to making any threatening communication by verbal, written, or electronic means, against anyone who reports in good faith or provides any information concerning violations of the Ethics Policy or applicable state or federal laws or who provides truthful information relating to the commission or possible commission of any criminal offense to a law enforcement officer. GAC/COGA will not discipline any elected member where the elected member in good faith (or any person acting pursuant to the request of the elected member) reports, discloses, testifies, or otherwise informs GAC/COGA, pursuant to this Ethics Policy, of a violation by an elected member, employee, or organization.

Any elected member found engaging in retaliation will be subject to discipline by the body with jurisdiction over the elected member.

ATTACHMENT 5
Meeting Procedure

Actions taken by the GAC and COGA are recorded in minutes. For purposes of this document, “minutes” includes administrative notes. If an employee, officer or elected member has a conflict of interest with regard to a proposed transaction under consideration at the meeting, that person shall leave the meeting and henceforth refrain from discussing or voting on the matter. The person with the conflict of interest may, however, respond to questions posed by an elected member. The minutes must reflect:

1. the date of the meeting;
2. the names of employees, officers and/or elected members with conflicts of interest regarding the proposed transaction;
3. the names of those who left the meeting;
4. the names of those members who voted on the matter;
5. description of data obtained and relied upon by the GAC or COGA and how the data was obtained;
6. if the transaction is approved between GAC/COGA and the person with a conflict of interest, the basis for the approval (include any difference in comparability data and value of transaction to GAC/COGA and how that affected the approval); and
7. terms of the transaction as approved.

General Assembly Per Capita Apportionment

Description of Per Capita

“In order to give meaning to the interdependent nature of Presbyterian polity” (Book of Order, G-9.0404), per capita is the responsible way of sharing the costs that equitably belong to the whole Presbyterian Church community expressing the essential unity of the church. The payment of per capita apportionment can be seen as a sign of healthy relationships within the church, giving tangible witness to the unity and wholeness promised to us in Jesus Christ.

The General Assembly per capita apportionment can be historically documented in the Presbyterian Church since the mid-1800s when a plan of mileage was adopted by the General Assembly in order to defray the expenses of commissioners attending meetings of the General Assembly. Over the ensuing years, per capita has been defined in various documents and reports as being used to fund ecclesiastical and administrative functions. The costs of these functions are appropriately shared by the whole church.

The chronology of per capita development in the twentieth century shows that General Assemblies took action to expand the spectrum of functions that the General Assembly per capita finances. Beginning in the early 1920s, the General Assembly voted to enlarge the office of the General Assembly to include various program departments that served the whole church. In the process, the General Assembly agreed to finance related administrative expenses through the General Assembly per capita apportionment. The planning, coordination, and review of mission were included in the former United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America in 1973, and this has been assembly policy for the reunited church since 1983.

Definition

Per capita is an opportunity for all communicant members of the Presbyterian Church through the governing bodies to participate equally, responsibly, and interdependently by sharing the cost of coordination and evaluation of mission; of performing ecclesiastical, legislative, and judicial functions that identify a Reformed church, while at the same time strengthening the sense of community among all Presbyterians.

They will also submit an analysis of income which will support the budget and will recommend a per capita apportionment rate. The analysis will include anticipated receipts from per capita apportionment, an itemized estimate of all revenues anticipated from other sources, and the type and amount of funds on hand.
- b. A Joint Budget Table will be convened on the call of either COGA or GAC to make recommendations on unresolved matters.

2. Provision for a Joint Budget Table

If agreement is not reached on particular issues, the report to the General Assembly will articulate the respective position of the two bodies.
- c. When necessary, the Joint Budget Table may recommend revisions to the total approved per capita budget. Revisions must be approved by both bodies.
- d. Any revisions that would increase the total budget funded by the per capita apportionment will be recommended by the Joint Budget Table to COGA and GAC for approval. This increase cannot exceed three (3) percent.

REPORT OF INDEPENDENT AUDITORS

The Board of Directors
Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation

We have audited the accompanying consolidated statements of financial position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation (the "Organization") as of December 31, 2007 and the related consolidated statements of activities and changes in net assets and cash flows for the year then ended. These consolidated financial statements are the responsibility of the Organization's management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these consolidated financial statements based on our audit.

We conducted our audit in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audit provides a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, the consolidated financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the consolidated financial position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation as of December 31, 2007, the changes in its net assets and its cash flows for the year then ended, in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.

Our audit was conducted for the purpose of forming an opinion on the 2007 basic consolidated financial statements taken as a whole. The consolidating information presented on pages 21 through 24 is presented for purposes of additional analysis of the consolidated financial statements rather than to present the financial position, results of operations, and cash flows of the individual organizations. The consolidated information has been subjected to the auditing procedures applied in the audit of the basic consolidated financial statements and, in our opinion, is fairly stated in all material respects in relation to the 2007 basic consolidated financial statements taken as a whole.

NOTE 1 - ORGANIZATION AND NATURE OF OPERATIONS

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), ("PCUSA") is an unincorporated body of Reformed Christians, who have agreed to conduct worship and other religious activities in conformity with the then current version of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Constitution, which contains among other things, in its Book of Order, a Form of Government setting forth a detailed formal structure of the Church. As an ecclesiastical organization, PCUSA does not exist under any federal law. Central to the structure of PCUSA is the concept of governing bodies. At the national level, the governing body is the General Assembly. The ecclesiastical work of the PCUSA at the General Assembly level is carried out by a number of ministry units and related agencies.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation ("PCUSA, A Corporation") is a corporate entity of the General Assembly of PCUSA, and is the principal corporation of the General Assembly. All voting members of the General Assembly Council are members of the Board of Directors of PCUSA, A Corporation. PCUSA, A Corporation receives and holds title to property and income at the General Assembly level related to mission activities, generally maintains and manages all real and tangible property, including the insuring of such property, effects short-term investment of funds prior to either their disbursement or transfer to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation (the Foundation) for longer-term investment; acts as the disbursing agent for all funds held for the General Assembly and for other governing bodies and entities upon their request; and provides accounting, reporting and other financial and related services as the General Assembly or General Assembly Council may direct or approve.

PCUSA, A Corporation is a tax-exempt religious corporation under Internal Revenue Code Section 501(c)(3).

NOTE 2 - BASIS OF PRESENTATION AND SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

Basis of Presentation: The accompanying consolidated financial statements reflect the consolidated operations of PCUSA, A Corporation and its constituent corporations, which are presented on the accrual basis of accounting in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America. The constituent corporations of PCUSA, A Corporation are the following: General Assembly Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); The Historical Foundation of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, Inc.; The Hubbard Press; Pedco, Inc.; The Presbyterian Historical Society, Inc.; Presbyterian Life, Inc.; Presbyterian Publishing House of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Inc.; The Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (formerly known as Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America) a New York corporation; Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), a New York nonprofit corporation.

In order to ensure the observance of limitations and restrictions placed on the use of available resources, PCUSA, A Corporation maintains its financial accounts in accordance with the principles and practices of fund accounting. This is the procedure by which resources for various purposes are classified for accounting purposes into funds established in accordance with their nature or purpose.

For external reporting purposes, however, PCUSA, A Corporation's financial statements have been prepared to focus on the organization as a whole and to present balances and transactions classified in accordance with the existence or absence of donor-imposed restrictions. Net assets and related activity are classified as unrestricted, temporarily restricted and permanently restricted as follows:

- Unrestricted Undesignated - net assets that are not subject to donor-imposed restrictions. Unrestricted undesignated net assets consist of the accumulation of certain contributions, gifts, bequests, and related income thereon, which are available for general church purposes.
- Unrestricted Designated - net assets that are not subject to donor-imposed restrictions. Unrestricted designated net assets consist of the accumulation of certain contributions, gifts, bequests, and related income thereon that have been designated for specific purposes by the General Assembly Council of the General Assembly.

- Temporarily Restricted - net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions that may or will be met either by actions of PCUSA, A Corporation or the passage of time. Temporarily restricted net assets primarily consist of contributions and related investment income.
- Permanently Restricted - net assets that are subject to donor-imposed restrictions to be maintained permanently by PCUSA, A Corporation. Generally, the donors of these assets permit PCUSA, A Corporation to use all or part of the income earned on related investments for general or specific purposes. Permanently restricted net assets consist primarily of endowment funds and revolving loan funds.

Cash Equivalents: For purposes of reporting cash flows, PCUSA, A Corporation considers investments with an original maturity of three months or less when purchased to be cash equivalents.

Investments: Investments are recorded at fair value based on quoted market prices. Investment transactions are recorded on a trade-date basis. Realized gains and losses are recorded using the specific identification of securities sold on funds held by the Foundation and using the historical cost of securities sold on funds held by other investment managers.

The trustee believes that the carrying amount of its alternative investments is a reasonable estimate of fair value as of December 31, 2007. Because alternative investments are not readily marketable, the estimated value is subject to uncertainty and, therefore, may differ from the value that would have been used had a ready market for the investments existed and such differences could be material.

Long-term investments held by the Foundation represent General Assembly endowment funds, which are generally not available for immediate use.

Contributions from Congregations: Contributions from congregations include amounts in-transit at year-end.

Allowance for Loan Losses: The allowance for loan losses is maintained at a level considered by management to be adequate to provide for loan losses inherent in the loan portfolio. Management determines the adequacy of the allowance based upon reviews of payment history, recent loss experience, current economic conditions, the risk characteristics of the various categories of loans and such other factors, which in management's judgment deserve current recognition in estimating loan losses. The allowance for loan losses is increased by the provision for loan losses and reduced by net loan charge-offs.

Annuity and Life Income Funds: PCUSA, A Corporation is an income beneficiary of trust funds held by the Foundation. In accordance with SFAS No. 116, Accounting for Contributions Received and Contributions Made, and SFAS No. 136, Transfers of Assets to a Not-For-Profit Organization or Charitable Trust That Raises or Holds Contributions for Others, PCUSA, A Corporation has recorded as an asset the net present value of the future income to be received from the funds.

Inventories: Inventories represent books, periodicals, and curriculum produced by PCUSA, A Corporation for distribution. These items are stated at average cost.

Property and Equipment: Property and equipment consists principally of the PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment, and domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land and property held for disposition.

The PCUSA, A Corporation headquarters building and related land and equipment are stated at cost, or fair value at the date of donation, if donated. The domestic properties used for mission work, cemeteries, racial ethnic schools, undeveloped land, and other properties are recorded based on fair value at date of donation, appraisal value or replacement cost. Expenditures, of greater than $5,000, which increase values or extend the useful lives of the respective assets are capitalized. Depreciation is computed using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the assets.

PCUSA, A Corporation holds title to various other foreign properties. Such properties include properties used for mission work, cemeteries, undeveloped land, and property held for disposition. Shared Services has administrative responsibility for property taxes, insurance, maintenance and improvements for these properties. Generally, it is PCUSA, A Corporation's policy to exclude the cost or donated value of foreign properties from its financial records.

Deferred Revenue: PCUSA, A Corporation holds special events each year. Monies received to support future special events are recorded as deferred revenue.

Collections: PCUSA, A Corporation's collections consist of works of art, ecclesiastical objects and papers, historical treasures, scientific specimens and other assets. The collections, which were acquired through purchases and contributions since PCUSA, A Corporation's inception, are not recognized as assets on the consolidated statements of financial position. Purchases of collection items are recorded as decreases in unrestricted net assets in the year in which the items are acquired, or as temporarily or permanently restricted net assets if the assets used to purchase the items are restricted by donors. Contributed collection items are not reflected on the consolidated financial statements. Proceeds from deaccessions or insurance recoveries are reflected as increases in the appropriate net asset classes.

Use of Estimates: The preparation of financial statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the reported amounts of assets and liabilities and disclosure of contingent assets and liabilities at the date of the financial statements. Estimates also affect the reported amounts of revenue and expenses during the reporting period. The more significant estimates made relate to the valuation of mortgages, loans, and contributions receivable and valuation of investments. Actual results could differ from those estimates.

For the calendar year 2007, the distribution of income was 5% of the average annual fair value based on the 20-quarter rolling average as of June 30, 2004 (an eighteen-month lag).

Payments for calendar year 2007 and subsequent years will use the same eighteen-month lag. It is anticipated that payments will approximate the estimated sustainable rates of total return (income and a portion of capital appreciation) after inflation. This formula will be monitored to determine the effects of changing return and inflation expectations on the preservation of purchasing power and the generation of appropriate levels of spendable income.

NOTE 13 - FAIR VALUES OF FINANCIAL INSTRUMENTS

The following methods and assumptions were used by PCUSA, A Corporation in estimating its fair value disclosures for financial instruments:

Cash and Short-Term Investments: The carrying amounts reported in the consolidated statements of financial position for cash and short-term instruments, included in investments and accrued income, approximate their fair value.

Investment Securities: Fair values for investment securities, which equal the carrying amount reported in the consolidated statements of financial position, are based on quoted market prices, where available. If quoted market prices are not available, fair values are based on quoted market prices of comparable instruments.

Mortgages and Loans: PCUSA, A Corporation's loan portfolio consisted of approximately 36 church loans ($5.3 million), some of which are collateralized by church properties, and 1,189 unsecured student loans ($3.2 million) at December 31, 2007. Generally, the church loans have repayment terms of 10 to 20 years and the student loans have repayments terms of 2 to 10 years. These loans are considered a part of the mission of PCUSA, A Corporation and their carrying values approximate fair values based on current interest rates and the present value of the estimated future cash flows.

NOTE 14 - COMMITMENTS AND CONTINGENCIES

PCUSA, A Corporation holds and participates in an insurance fund (the Fund) that exists to provide a source of funds for that portion of certain losses not covered by commercial insurance to cover deductibles on commercial insurance and for certain classes of uninsured losses. Various General Assembly-level agencies and corporations are included in the Fund. The largest possible loss to be assumed in any one event or occurrence is $250,000, with $1,000,000 as the largest potential aggregate of all claims in a single calendar year.

The minimum balance of the self-insurance fund shall not fall below $5,000,000 as a result of claims paid. In the event this happens, an assessment will be made to the insured entities to return the fund to the $5,000,000 minimum balance. The assessment will be based on each insured entity's 5-year loss ratio. A 1% minimum assessment will be made by the entities that have not experienced any losses in the 5-year period.

On the Church Addressing Intergenerational Injustice in America—From the Presbytery of New Covenant.

The Presbytery of New Covenant overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Declare that federal government practices and policies that create ever-increasing debt and unfunded or underfunded obligations for future generations of Americans are a grave moral concern as well as a clear danger to the republic.
2. Call upon public leaders to have the courage to address this economic and moral crisis while there is still time.
3. Call upon individual Presbyterians, sessions, presbyteries, and agencies of General Assembly to study, pray, and speak words of justice and morality into the present situation and to defend future generations who have no defense. We do not at this time call upon General Assembly agencies to prepare study documents or study papers, and we do not propose that the church at this time have a monolithic policy recommendation. We do call upon the church and the nation to study the policies and practices that have created this grave moral and economic crisis, to repent of the sins of greed and of stealing from future generations who cannot defend themselves, and to call upon our citizens and national leaders to make the sacrifices necessary to begin to solve this problem before it is too late.
4. Call on the nation for a day of prayer on this issue.

Rationale

1. The Problem

According to the non-partisan United States General Accountability Office and the Honorable David M. Walker, Comptroller General of the United States (<http://www.gao.gov/cghome/d07937cg.pdf>), “saving our future requires tough choices today.” According to the GAO and the comptroller general, in 2006, explicit liabilities of the government were 10.4 trillion dollars, but implicit liabilities, based on future commitments to social security and Medicare, Parts A, B, and D, bring total federal government liabilities to 50.5 trillion dollars. At the same time the GAO estimates total household net worth in the United States in 2006 to be 53.3 trillion dollars, meaning that our liabilities make up 95 percent of total household wealth. The GAO also estimates that the per person burden is currently $170,000 and the per-family burden is $ 440,000. The GAO concludes:

- The “Status Quo” is not an option.
- We face large and growing structural deficits largely due to known demographic trends and rising health-care costs.
- GAO’s simulations show that balancing the budget in 2040 could require actions as large as
  - cutting total federal spending by 60 percent or
  - Raising federal taxes to 2 times today's level.
- Faster economic growth can help, but it cannot solve the problem.
- Closing the current long-term fiscal gap based on reasonable assumptions would require real average annual economic growth in the double-digit range every year for the next seventy-five years.
- During the 1990s, the economy grew at an average 3.2 percent per year.
- As a result, we cannot simply grow our way out of this problem. Tough choices will be required.

2. The Role of the Church and of Christian Faith in Addressing This National Problem

A majority of citizens of the United States are currently enjoying relative prosperity and are engaging in levels of personal consumption, which, while not shared by all, are purchased in part by our nation accumulating debt and other obligations for future generations of Americans to pay. The Christian faith is clear that exploiting future generations is both ungodly and immoral.

Proverbs 13:22 says, “The good leave an inheritance to their children's children. . . .” (NRSV). To leave debt is the opposite of leaving an inheritance.

In 1 Timothy 5:8, it says, “And whoever does not provide for relatives, and especially for family members, has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.” (NRSV)

In the Old Testament, the Jubilee year was instituted so that even a profligate and irresponsible generation in the life of a family could not permanently endanger the inheritance of its heirs by selling off the family wealth forever—instead land was only rented and not sold and reverted back to the original family every fifty years (Lev. 25:10,13). Though we do not live in a society where land is the primary form of wealth, the lesson of Leviticus 25 for today is that our generation of Americans should be prevented from saddling future American generations with crippling and debilitating debt.

Part of the way the American political system normally works is that people who believe they are being damaged or exploited by national policies and practices can band together and organize politically to improve their lot. Unfortunately unborn generations as well as those who are only children cannot organize to protect themselves from what our society is doing to them. They have no voice or vote. We believe the Church of Jesus Christ is called to speak for them and to urge its members and the nation to stop and reverse this serious intergenerational injustice.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-01, from the Presbytery of New Covenant, overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to: “declare that federal government practices and policies that create ever-increasing debt . . . are a grave moral concern as well as a clear danger to the republic.” Individual Presbyterians and all bodies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), public leaders, and the nation would be called upon to “repent . . . of stealing from future generations who cannot defend themselves” and make sacrifices necessary to reduce the debt burden. And finally, the overture requests the General Assembly to “call on the nation for a day of prayer on this issue.”

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that in response to this overture the following be approved:

1. Commend the presbytery for its strong concern and urge the Washington Office to include the problem of spiraling debt in its usual policy and education materials and in communication with elected officials as appropriate to context.
2. Request Presbyterian representatives to ecumenical bodies working on economic and environmental sustainability, and on such matters as the Social Creed for the 21st Century, include consideration of the intergenerational debt burden among justice concerns.
3. Include the call to prayer in materials prepared for Labor Day in relation to the Social Creed and other economic justice policies.

Rationale

The Presbytery’s concern for the debt burden on future generations is real. They ask the church not to prepare additional study documents, but ask that “the church and the nation (to) study the policies and practices that have created this grave moral and economic crisis . . .” and quote from a PowerPoint presentation by the comptroller general of the United States, David M. Walker, delivered at the University of South Florida, May 30, 2007. They quote several Bible texts to show that “our generation . . . should be prevented from saddling future American generations with crippling and debilitating debt.” They maintain that “the Church of Jesus Christ is called to speak for them and to urge its members and the nation to stop and reverse this serious intergenerational injustice.”

Because the overture does not specify who should do or be addressed by any of the actions suggested, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) suggests measures that would give the presbytery’s concerns visibility within on-going and already developed Presbyterian and ecumenical programs, and at little extra cost.

The problem of intergenerational debt has been addressed by the General Assembly on numerous previous occasions and in a range of study materials. Government documents, and those of many private agencies, also provide information on the topic, as the overture notes.

On the Use of Non-Disposable Food Service Items—From the Presbytery of Heartland.

The Presbytery of Heartland overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the General Assembly to request Presbyterian congregations and individual members to highly encourage the use of non-disposable food service items, and to refrain from the use of disposable food service products, particularly styrofoam and other non-biodegradables; to use non-disposable bags for packing items purchased in the commercial market, and to refrain from using plastic bags; to choose tap or home or church-filtered water instead of bottled water or soda, and to refrain from purchasing those liquids in plastic bottles. Even though this represents only a part of what we can do to live in a more environmentally just manner, it is extremely important in beginning to live sustainable, healthy lives.

Rationale

Reaffirm the statements of the 183rd, 187th, 192nd, 193rd, 195th, 196th, 199th, 201st, 202nd, 204th, 205th, 206th, 208th, 210th, 211th, 213th, 215, and 216th General Assemblies (1971, 1975, 1980, 1981, 1983, 1984, 1987, 1989, 1990, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1996, 1998, 1999, 2001, 2003, 2006) reflecting the determination of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that protection of the environment is an essential part of the Christian faith.

In Isaiah 6:3 the Seraphs “called to [one] another and said: ‘Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of [God’s] glory.’” According to Isaiah, the visible presence of God is pulsing through creation, as Creator, Christ, and Spirit. We worship in this sanctuary called earth.

The Book of Order (W-7.5001a) states that “God calls the Church in the power of the Holy Spirit to participate in God’s work of creation and preservation.” In (W-7.5003), it reminds us that we are “stewards of God’s creation who hold the earth in trust . . . .”

The 217th General Assembly (2006) strongly urged all Presbyterians to live carbon neutral lives and to act boldly to lead the way in reducing our energy usage. This included reduction of emissions in transportation, food production, packaging, and shipment. It noted that “the urgency, injustice, and seriousness of this issue calls us as Christians to act NOW and to act boldly to lead the way in reducing our energy usage” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 896).

The urgency is also reflected by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, a group of 2,500 scientists. They have discovered that what we do in the next two to three years will determine our future. Their latest findings show “much stronger trends in climate change than previously thought,” and that if the world does not act quickly to reverse current trends, the results will be disastrous.

It has been found that the styrene in styrofoam and the metabolites and byproducts of many plastics can have toxic effects on humans (particularly children and childbearing women) and therefore on all of the web of creation. Styrofoam products, plastic bottles, and plastic bags are the cause of major environmental concerns. Plastic bags are a nonrenewable resource, are a major part of our landfill waste, and litter the environment, sometimes being deadly to animals.

Traditional plastic bottles can take 1,000 years to degrade, and more than 40 million bottles a day become trash or litter in the United States.

We may eliminate our opportunity for healthy living through our reliance on synthetic chemicals by acting as a disposable society. We cannot make God’s Creation a wasteland of things created, used, and then discarded and still expect people or the rest of Creation to prosper. By seeking safer and more sustainable alternatives, all of us and particularly future generations can live a more faithful and just life.

Justice, peace, and the environment are interrelated. Whenever we humans abuse the environment, whenever we engage in non-sustainable consumption of our earth’s finite resources, we are not only endangering the future of life on our planet, but we are committing acts of violence and injustice against other life—both present and future. Protecting and restoring creation is central to our own survival.

We in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have a rich tradition of justice and reverence for life. Included in our mission is responsible and faithful stewardship of God’s earth. It is vital that we begin anew daily to find ways to care for others, ourselves, and earth as our expressions of our love for God. We must find alternative, sustainable methods of living, so that not only future generations, but all of creation may have the opportunity to live healthy, full lives.

Historical References

In 1954, the Presbyterian Church stated:

We call upon the Christian conscience to recognize that our stewardship of the earth and water involves both a land-use program that recognizes the interdependence of soil, water and man and the development of a responsible public policy which will resist the exploitation of land, water, and other natural resources, including forests, for selfish purposes and maintain intelligent conservation for the sustenance of all living creatures through future generations (Minutes, PCUSA, 1954, Part I, p. 198).

This stewardship commitment has been repeated and reaffirmed by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessors, as follows:

1967 The Confession of 1967 stresses the justice of sharing resources and the interdependence of resources and living creatures.

1971 The 183rd General Assembly accepted the Christian Responsibility for Environmental Renewal statement that calls for a new order of values based on an “eco-ethic” and a Statement on Environmental Renewal (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1971, Part I, pp. 578–83).

1975 A recommendation is made to the 187th General Assembly (1975) to affirm advocacy of the protection of wild-life areas and parklands (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1975, Part I, p.59).

1980 The 192nd General Assembly (1980) votes to (1) develop educational resources on the adverse impact that careless technology has on the environment and health of the unborn; (2) instruct the Board of Investment Committee to review corporate responsibility regarding manufacture of dioxins (Minutes, PCUS, 1980, Part I, p. 56).

1981 The 193rd General Assembly pledges support of the United Nations Drinking Water and Sanitation Decade, 1981–1990, calling upon Presbyterians to develop lifestyles that are consistent with the necessity to conserve water (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1981, Part I, p. 254).

1983 The 195th General Assembly (1983) urges the session of each congregation in the Presbyterian Church (USA) to consider making a “Commitment to Peacemaking” that included “making peace with the earth—involve the congregation in efforts to protect and restore the environment.”

1984 The 196th General Assembly (1984) calls upon Congress of the United States to reduce the emissions of sulfur dioxide and the oxides of nitrogen to a level that will protect the most sensitive environment and states that human stewardship is not a “dominion of mastery” and calls us to exercise respect for the integrity of natural systems and for the limits that nature places on economic growth and material consumption (Minutes, 1984, Part I, p. 349).

1987 The 199th General Assembly (1984) votes to urge the United States government to assure acceptable disposal sites for high-level nuclear waste. It also votes to urge each presbytery and local church to encourage and support alternatives to pesticides and support the victims of pesticide poisoning (Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 796).

1988 The Environmental Justice Office is created to study past environmental policies of the United Presbyterian Church (USA) and the Presbyterian Church in the United States to create a combined report of environmental concerns for Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Environmental Justice Office is a ministry of the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), lodged in the National Ministries Division, Social Justice Program Area, and is now actively involved in creation care and environmental justice issues.

1989 The 201st General Assembly (1989) calls for governments to strengthen regulations and enforcement regarding transportation of oil and hazardous substances, in response to the Exxon-Valdez tanker spill in 1989 (Minutes, 1989, Part I, p. 642).

1990 The 202nd General Assembly (1990) passes “Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice” affirming “creation cries out in this time of ecological crises,” calling the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to respond to this cry and engage in an effort to make the 1990s the “turnaround decade,” providing the foundation for the work of the Environmental Justice Office. Also, the 202nd General Assembly calls attention to the problem of global warming and encourages the United States government to take steps toward incorporating environmental damage and depletion into “full-cost pricing” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 646–70).

The Affirmation of Faith from that General Assembly noted that “Restoring Creation is God’s own work in our time...” and that “The love of neighbor, particularly “the least” of Christ’s brothers and sisters, requires action to stop the poisoning, the erosion, the wastefulness that are causing suffering and death.—The future of our children and their children and all who come after is at stake. In this critical time of transition to a new era, God’s new doing may be discerned as a call to earth-keeping, to justice, and to community.”

1992 The 204th General Assembly (1992) directs all future General Assemblies to print all official reports on recycled and recyclable paper and to direct all related bodies to use recycled and recyclable paper for all reports and publication (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 846).

1993 The 205th General Assembly (1993) reaffirms the “Call to Restore Creation,” receives the document “World Scientists’ Warning to Humanity” as a prophetic word to the church, urges President Clinton to follow new policies from the Earth Summit, and directs the Social Justice and Peacemaking Unit to advocate for policies that will reduce carbon dioxide emissions (Minutes, 1993, Part I, pp. 896–97).

1994 The 206th General Assembly (1994), within the context of its “Resolution on the United States in Its Asia-Pacific Relations,” listed five basic principles by which past General Assemblies have been guided related to international affairs. One of the principles, and the resolution that follow it, relates specifically to the environment. “The General Assembly has advocated new understanding of the relationship among human life, institutions, and the total stewardship and care for the planet, which is the common heritage of all peoples”(Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 310).

1996 The 208th General Assembly (1996) approves the paper “Hope for a Global Future: Toward Just and Sustainable Human Development” as policy for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Just and sustainable human development is the comprehensive enhancement of the quality of life for all, present and future; it necessarily involves the integration of economic, social, political, cultural, ecological, and spiritual dimensions of being.

1998 The 210th General Assembly (1998) calls upon the United States to ratify the protocol negotiated in Kyoto and urges Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations and institutions to pursue energy efficiency and conservation in their buildings and property.

1999 The 211th General Assembly (1999) again calls upon the U.S. to ratify the Kyoto Protocol, urges the United States to go beyond Kyoto targets for carbon dioxide emission reductions, directs the Presbyterian Center in Louisville and all other properties of the General Assembly to minimize fossil fuel energy (along with urging local congregations to do the same), and directs the General Assembly to promote education regarding global warming and other environmental concerns (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 669–70).

2001 The 213th General Assembly (2001) calls to issue and disseminate the “Call to Halt Mass Extinction.” The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) calls Presbyterians, other citizens, governments, and societal institutions to face the severity of this threat and to take steps to prevent mass extinction and preserve the biodiversity essential to the flourishing of life (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 473–75).

2003 The 215th General Assembly (2003) calls on the United States government to join the world effort to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and to develop and enact a national emergency response, underwritten by law, with adequate financial support, and economic enforcement mechanism, to be fully functioning by 2005, with targeted reductions by that time (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 617).

2006. The 217th General Assembly (2006) asked that the church ask its members to “make a bold witness by aspiring to carbon neutral lives” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 896). It was noted that “without significant changes in public policy and corporate behavior to complement actions of personal discipleship, massive and irreversible climate changes will only accelerate over the next century” (PC(USA) Memorandum; Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, December 4, 2006).

Notation: The overture was drafted by Earthkeepers, a mission unit of Mission Outreach and Social Justice; and Heartland Presbytery’s chapter of the national group, Presbyterians for Restoring Creation.

On Requesting That the 218th General Assembly (2008) Celebrate the Mission “Living Waters for the World” and View a Video Describing That Ministry—From the Presbytery of Holston.

The Presbytery of Holston overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to celebrate with us the life-changing impact of “Living Waters for the World” as a clear, proven example of the shared future of mission as described in “An Invitation to Expanding Partnership in God’s Mission,” and respectfully re- quests that the video, Clean Water for All of God's Children, or a portion thereof, be shown to the assembled body of commissioners.

Rationale

Living Waters for the World, a mission of the Synod of Living Waters, has proven to be a tangible way to share and show God's love, engaging in mission with, not for, others, by linking clean water for bodies with living water for our souls. Living Waters for the World trains and equips volunteer mission teams to partner with communities throughout the world in need of clean water. Teams trained by Living Waters for the World work closely with community leaders to install a water-treatment system, and to educate the community about the appropriate use of clean water.

Since the inception of the Living Waters for the World training program in 2004, the Holy Spirit has moved within this mission in amazing ways:

- More than 500 volunteers have been trained from 29 states and 8 other nations, including Mexico, Guatemala, Kenya, Ghana, and Madagascar. These volunteers span the ideological and theological spectrum, yet stand joyfully together on the common ground of Christ's call to mission.
- One hundred seventy water systems have been installed in 150 communities in 19 nations, dramatically impacting the long-term health and well-being of more than 50,000 of our brothers and sisters throughout the world.
- Living Waters for the World's approach of partners entering into a three-year covenant relationship exemplifies the concept of "mission in partnership" and helps to ensure sustainability of the project and the empowerment of the communities served.
- The potential for continued exponential growth is evident, as more training sessions are added each year, and awareness throughout the denomination continues to grow with recognition such as being a 2007 Presbyterian Women Birthday Offering recipient and the designated mission project of the 2008 Rainforest Adventure Vacation Bible School curriculum.

"An Invitation to Expanding Partnership in God's Mission," the vision document produced from the January 2008 Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) mission consultation, "Renewed Call to Presbyterian Mission in the World: A Dialogue for our Shared Future," calls us to covenant to live and serve together in God's mission according to the following values:

1. Trusting in the Holy Spirit and trusting in one another as each discerns how God is moving us in mission. (Acts 10)
2. Doing mission in the way of Jesus who humbled himself, showing the way of self-giving and self-emptying. (Philippians 2)
3. Seeking to be faithful to God as we live and proclaim the fullness of Jesus Christ's good news; personal witness to those outside the church, justice for the oppressed and compassion for those in need. We accompany others in their efforts to be faithful. (Luke 4)
4. Affirming the complementary nature of God's gifts to all in the one body of Christ and encouraging one another in living out those gifts. (1 Corinthians 12)
5. Recognizing our responsibility to each other by communicating openly, acting transparently and speaking and hearing the truth in love. (Ephesians 4)
6. Striving in our mission to be aware of the context out of which we come, to respect the persons with whom we labor and to honor the context in which they live. In an era of massive global inequalities we commit ourselves to be sensitive to and address the issues of power that result from our differences. (Philippians 2)
7. Valuing long-term relationships, partnerships characterized by perseverance and long-term commitments that support and encourage global partners. (1 Thessalonians 2)

This presbytery believes that Living Waters for the World embodies these values and, in a desire to lift up this example to the greater church, respectfully requests that the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approve this overture of celebration.

Concurrence to Item 09-03 from the Presbyteries of Blackhawk, National Capital, New York City, San Joaquin, and Transylvania.

Concurrence to Item 09-03 from the Presbytery of St. Andrew (with Additional Rationale)Rationale

The Presbytery of St. Andrew is a mission partner with the Synod of Living Waters, hosting the training program of Living Waters for the World at our Hopewell Camp & Conference Center. Since beginning this program, called Clean Water U, in 2004, more than 500 volunteers have been trained from 29 states and 8 other nations, including Mexico, Guatemala, Kenya, Ghana, and Madagascar.

Volunteers attending the training at Camp Hopewell span the ideological and theological spectrum, yet stand joyfully together on the common ground of Christ's call to mission.

Living Waters for the World provides an opportunity for Presbyterians and others from all walks of life, with various skills and interests, to come together and receive the training and support resources they need to put their faith into action in practical, empowering way.

Living Waters for the World is a clear, proven example of the shared future of mission as described in An Invitation to Expanding Partnership in God's Mission.

The Presbytery of St. Andrew has witnessed that Living Waters for the World embodies these values and, in a desire to lift up this example to the greater church, respectfully requests that the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approve this overture of celebration.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-03Comment on Item 09-03—From the General Assembly Council.*

The General Assembly Council (GAC) affirms the initiative that Living Waters for the World, Waterlines, Inc., Marion Medical Mission, numerous Joining Hands Against Hunger Networks, international presbytery partnerships, Presbyterian Hunger Program, Church World Service, and other Presbyterian groups have taken to respond in different ways to the critical need for clean drinking water in hundreds of communities around the world. The GAC lifts up the work that Living Waters for the World has done to educate congregations about this issue as an example of a Presbyterian organization recognizing a critical need and working to address it. Because Living Waters for the World is only one of many mission initiators working to address this issue, it is appropriate for the General Assembly to both affirm and encourage all Presbyterians working on this critical issue.

Given the escalating worldwide water crisis and in the spirit of the Dallas Consultation on the Worldwide Mission of the Church (Preston Hollow Presbyterian Church, Dallas, Texas, January 16–18, 2008), staff from World Mission and Compassion, Peace & Justice ministry areas are inviting interested Presbyterians to attend a Mission Consultation on Water during which a new water network will be formed. This will allow the full spectrum of Presbyterians and others working on water issues to come together to share information and best practices. This initial consultation will take place in Sacramento, California, from November 13–16, 2008.

Item 09-04

[In response to Item 09-04, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 53, 54.]

On Instructing PDA to Continue to Work on Nurturing Partnerships with Presbyteries Affected by the Storms of 2005—From the Presbytery of South Louisiana.

The Presbytery of South Louisiana overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Commend the staff and volunteers of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, who, working under extremely difficult circumstances, created a framework for a continued and faithful response to the storms of 2005.

2. Instruct Presbyterian Disaster Assistance to continue the work of nurturing partnerships with the presbyteries affected by the storms of 2005, including regular consultations concerning volunteers and resources.
3. Affirms and endorses the agreements made with the presbyteries concerning volunteers and resources, allowing for continuing refinement and evaluation as circumstances change.

Alternate Resolution Approved

In response to this recommendation, that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following resolution:

[This item of business was generated by combining Items 09-04 and 09-17.]

Whereas Presbyterians throughout the General Assembly have been generous and gracious in responding to the 2005 Hurricanes Katrina, Rita, and Wilma with gifts of time, resources, and prayers; and

Whereas Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) has been and continues to be abundantly helpful in providing leadership and resources in the affected areas and in coordinating relief efforts throughout the denomination; and

Whereas PDA and the presbyteries and synods involved in recovery efforts recognize that the work of rebuilding is far from complete and have worked together to develop a long-term financial response plan, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the 218th General Assembly (2008)

1. Thanks Presbyterians throughout the denomination for their generous giving, prayers, and volunteer services in recovery efforts working not only with PDA but also in partnership with local congregations.
2. Thanks and commends the staff and volunteers of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, who, working under extremely difficult circumstances, created a framework for a continued and faithful response to the storms of 2005.
3. Instructs Presbyterian Disaster Assistance to continue the work of nurturing partnerships with the presbyteries affected by the storms of 2005, including regular consultations concerning volunteers and resources.
4. Affirms and commends the long-term recovery plan for the Gulf Coast, which was developed jointly by PDA and the synods and presbyteries impacted by hurricanes Rita, Katrina, and Wilma. This plan, approved by the GAC, funds recovery efforts on the Gulf Coast through 2011 and allows for continuing evaluation and adjustments as circumstances change.

Rationale

The destructive hurricanes of 2005, Katrina, Rita, and Wilma, affected many communities and churches in the Southeastern United States.

The members and churches of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through their own efforts and through Presbyterian Disaster Assistance and the agencies of the General Assembly, have made significant and continuing contributions to the ongoing work of rebuilding and recovery.

Presbyterian Disaster Assistance has worked as a significant partner in transmitting funds, recruiting and supporting volunteers, and developing partnerships with the affected presbyteries, including negotiating agreements concerning use of resources.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 09-04 instructs Presbyterian Disaster Assistance to continue to work on nurturing partnerships with presbyteries affected by the storms of 2005.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 09-04 be approved.

Rationale

This item compliments the recommendations of Item 09-15 “Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future,” in recognizing the need for long-term strategies and partnerships with communities and churches in the Southeastern United States.

On Addressing the Tragedy of America’s Gun Violence—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Pastoral Recommendations for the Entire Church

a. Pray for God’s comfort, courage, and peace for the eighty families who lose loved ones every day to guns in America [~~particularly remembering those who lost their lives in the most devastating massacre at Virginia Tech and to pray~~] [and] for the 1,000 families who daily experience death by guns in the developing world.

b. Commend those persons, congregations, organizations, and agencies who work to stop gun violence and dedicate their time, financial resources, talents, energies, and prayers to find viable solutions to this domestic and international plague and to applaud them for their courage in unmasking the idolatries of our time.

c. Encourage pastors and sessions of local churches and their communities to organize interfaith groups that will visit sites where there have been shootings and/or killings and lead brief worship services to demonstrate the concerns and hopes of the faith community in pursuing peace in our neighborhoods.

d. Study and act on the previously approved policies of the PC(USA) and its predecessor denominations concerning gun violence [and small arms trafficking].

e. Monitor diligently the political processes in cities, states, and the nation for opportunities to work for the passage of laws that control gun access and to seize these opportunities to support legislation that will make our streets, schools, and places of worship free from gun violence.

f. Work with legislators to take the following actions that will increase the safety and well-being of our nation and communities:

(1) ~~[Close the gun show loophole in the thirty five states where it remains open to ensure that all persons buying guns at gun shows undergo a background check.] [To ensure that all persons buying guns at gun shows undergo a background check, close the gun show loophole in the thirty-five states where it remains open.]~~ (The U.S. Department of Justice Statistics, “Background Checks for Firearm Transfers,” 2005, reveals since the Brady law was enacted in 1994, 1.4 million gun purchases were denied by background checks from licensed dealers for convicted felons, those who have serious mental illness, terrorists, minors, domestic abusers and other prohibited parties.)”

(2) Ban the sale and possession of large ammunition ~~[elips]~~ [magazines] and assault weapons that have no redeemable social purpose, and cannot legitimately be termed “sporting guns.”

(3) Support the introduction of new technologies, such as micro-stamping [in which identifying information from a gun is transferred onto bullet cartridges], which allow law enforcement to more easily trace guns and solve crimes.

(4) ~~[Affirm and support the work of the PC(USA), through its UN offices and The International Action Network on Small Arms and Light Weapons (IANSA), to stop illegal gun sales to the developing world in which the United States is complicit.]~~ [Affirm and support the work of the PC(USA) through the Presbyterian United Nations Office and other appropriate offices to stop illegal arms sales by the United States and others.]

~~[(5) To amend existing laws that call only for the issuance of warnings rather than the confiscation of guns from those who are issued restraining orders.]~~

2. Programmatic Recommendations for National Church Agencies

a. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with [the Office of Theology and Worship,] the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, the Presbyterian United Nations Office, and the Presbyterian Washington Office, to prepare for the larger church a comprehensive study on the concerns raised in this overture. The study should [articulate a Reformed Theology of proactive, constructive nonviolence way of life and tactical method for bringing God's justice and peace to our communities and around the world;] assess the social and economic costs of gun violence; explore how gun violence fits into a larger national culture of violence, and identify ways that the church can effectively address gun violence issues domestically and internationally, and to report these findings along with proposed action items to the 219th General Assembly (2010).]

~~[b.—Direct the Office of Theology and Worship, in consultation with the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, to prepare a statement articulating a Reformed theology of proactive, constructive nonviolence as way of life and tactical method for bringing God's justice and peace in our communities and around the world.]~~

[e-][b.] Direct the national offices to provide annually to our pastors, educators, and members educational and worship resources to encourage and equip the whole church to engage fully in the struggle to reduce gun violence. (This is similar to Recommendation 3. of Overture 00-95. On Gun Violence—“From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta, Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 482.)

~~[d-][c.]~~ Direct the Washington Office and the Peacemaking Unit to make gun violence one of its highest priorities; and to direct the Peacemaking Unit to make an annual progress report to subsequent General Assemblies until this issue is resolved. (This is similar to a recommendation from the 1989 Resolution on Assault Weapons, Minutes, 1989, Part I, p. 430, paragraph 35.118.)

[e-][d.] Direct the Stated Clerk to distribute this resolution to all members of Congress; to the present and future president of the United States, to appropriate members of the Cabinet, and to members of state legislatures.

[f-][e.] Direct the Stated Clerk to specifically call on the U. S. government to enter into negotiations with its international partners in the United Nations to adopt a legally-binding trade treaty to counter the illicit trade in small arms and light weapons, particularly to developing nations.

[g-][f.] Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate and commend these actions to other ecumenical faith communities, and to invite their active participation in the struggle to reduce gun violence, both domestically and internationally.

[Financial Implications: (2008): $5,660; (2009): $24,650; (2010) $5,240 (Per Capita-GAC)]

Rationale

Emboldened and encouraged by Scripture, we reaffirm our faith that God equips believers to love mercy, to do justice, and walk humbly with God (Micah 6:8). In particular, Jesus empowers us to be peacemakers in the midst of violence; to extend the open hand rather than a clenched fist; to name unjust and oppressive systems; to fight against practices that demean any human being made in the image of God; to wrestle with the principalities and powers in this fallen world; and to work so that “justice will roll down like waters and righteousness like an ever flowing stream.”

The sixth commandment says, “You shall not kill.” John Calvin argued that this commandment not only forbids killing but carries with it the obligation to prevent harm and to preserve life and build shalom in human society. In the most practical of terms, Jeremiah calls us today as he called the Jews going into exile “[to] seek the welfare of the city where I have sent you into exile, and pray to the Lord on its behalf, for in its welfare you will find your welfare” (Jer. 29:7).

Our Presbyterian polity reminds us that to be faithful witnesses to Jesus Christ we must be diligent to preach the Gospel for the salvation of humankind, and we must be equally diligent to preserve the truth; promote social righteousness; and exhibit the Kingdom of Heaven to the world (Book of Order, G-1.0200).

In obedience to these principles for four decades, the General Assemblies of the PC(USA) and its predecessor denominations have proposed responsible measures to confront a unique, annual national tragedy that no other developed nation permits. Some 30,000 Americans die by guns each year in the United States. An average of eighty people are killed by guns every day, including eight children. An American child is twelve times more likely to die by a gun than all the children of twenty-five industrialized nations combined.<sup>1</sup>

The church must also note that the exorbitant annual economic cost of gun violence is at least $100 billion. Medical costs, decimated families, the court system, our jails and prisons, and security measures in airports, schools, and public buildings all contribute to this sum.<sup>2</sup>

Moreover, gun death rates of our citizens in the United States are exponentially higher than the death rates of our military personnel killed in warfare: 1,490 of our military personnel were killed in action in Iraq and Afghanistan between 2001–2004.<sup>3</sup> In the same time frame, nearly 100,000 Americans were killed in our communities by guns.<sup>4</sup> Since John F. Kennedy was assassinated in 1963, more Americans have died by gunfire within our own country than perished in all the wars of the 20th century.<sup>5</sup>

The 108th General Assembly (1968) of the PCUS petitioned Congress to enact, without delay, legislation to control the sale and possession of firearms of all kinds (Minutes, PCUS, 1968, Part I, p.103). The 201st General Assembly (1989) urged strong legislation to ban the private ownership of destructive automatic weapons such as AK-47 assault rifles, Uzis, and all paramilitary weapons, whether domestic or imported (Minutes, 1989, Part I, p. 430). A federal assault weapons ban was signed into law in 1994, but in September 2004, the U.S. Congress permitted the ban to expire, without a vote, which returned these dangerous weapons to the civilian market.

In each of the seven policy statements made by the respective General Assemblies since 1988, the church was called to diligently study the issue of gun violence. The 201st General Assembly (1989) directed the church to make an “annual progress report ... to subsequent [General] Assemblies until this issue is resolved” (Minutes, 1989, Part I, p. 430). The 212th General Assembly (2000) commissioners directed the Congregational Ministries Division to develop, on an annual, continuing basis, “additional curriculum to challenge the thinking of congregations about creative approaches to gun violence in America” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, p. 482).

In 1990, in the denomination’s most comprehensive policy statement on gun control, the General Assembly called on the church to begin a respectful and open dialog with all parties in order to solve this ongoing crisis. The church asked that governing bodies and congregations identify and train advocates on this and other public policy issues who will become actively involved in political dialog and the legislative process (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 606). While our church has made some bold and far-reaching statements and claims strong policies against gun violence, our actions have failed to live up to our words. That, in part, is why this overture begins with a call to repentance for the church.

Regretfully, the measures listed above, which reflect the hopes and dreams of a strong majority of the American people, including gun owners,<sup>6</sup> have fallen on deaf ears in most state and national legislatures and, to our shame, even in our churches.

We therefore strongly call the church to read and affirm this entire resolution in a spirit of repentance. We do not ask that we hang our heads or beat our breasts, but that we move forward into the future actively seeking the justice and peace our Lord calls us to pursue and put in place.

Trusting in God’s grace and forgiveness, we must acknowledge that our support of the sensible measures listed above to stop the killing has been less than we intended. Neither have we shown the respect due to the victims and families of those who are being killed and maimed every day by guns. The silence of pulpits and classrooms in addressing this ongoing tragedy is deafening. We would remind the church that to address this issue only by mourning those who have been killed and/or praying for comfort for their families and friends is not sufficient. Neither is it enough to only pray for a change of heart for the perpetrators of violence. God calls us to be persistent advocates for sensible legislation that will prevent this annual slaughter of children, women, and men.

While a strong majority of our citizens, including gun owners and sportsmen, support responsible gun control measures, the church, rather than being a light to the world, has mirrored our society and permitted a small minority of strident, well-funded persons to control the debate on the place of guns in our democratic society.

The unacceptable level of violence we experience in America because of weak gun laws is due in part to a culture of sound-bytes and unexamined public policy. Every American knows the familiar slogans: “Guns are the foundation of America’s freedoms”; “Guns save lives”; “Freedom First”; “The Second Amendment guarantees all the other amendments.” “We don’t need the government to make new laws, but to enforce the thousands of laws that are now on the books” etc. But, the most egregious slogan yet, was that used by counter-protestors at vigils where families and friends mourned the thirty-two persons who died in the massacre at Virginia Tech: “Here lie disarmed victims.”

The church must bear responsibility for permitting these and other simplistic slogans and catchy sound bytes to become what is erroneously perceived by many in the media, our legislatures, and our churches, as the authentic voice of the American public. IT IS NOT! We must not acquiesce or fail to speak the truth on this matter, and we must begin in earnest, comprehensive and compassionate education about gun violence, so we can distinguish fact from fiction.

We call on the church to regain its courage and its voice, to bring its moral authority to the table, and to lead honest and full discussions on the role and utility of guns in our democratic society. If the church of Jesus Christ is not part of the solution, then our silence is part of the problem. We acknowledge that this will not be an easy task. The strident, vocal, and well-funded minority that opposes all gun regulation will be there to cry “foul” and contend that the Church of Jesus Christ is not the venue to have this conversation. On the other hand, we believe that the church is the very place where this discussion needs to take place, for we are called by God to be healers and to bring peace where there is perpetual violence. Like Jeremiah, we dare not treat the wounds of God’s “people carelessly, saying, ‘Peace, peace,’ when there is no peace” (Jer. 6:14).

The consequence of avoiding the discomfort associated with this necessary and honest dialog within our fellowship is that we will continue to endure the equivalent of a 9/11 massacre every eighteen months. These deaths are too high a price to pay to maintain the embarrassing status quo, which the gun lobby often contends is “the price of freedom.”

Let it not be said of our generation of Christians that what we have learned from history is only that we do not learn from history. If nothing is done domestically, our lax federal and/or state regulations on the buying and selling of lethal weapons guarantee that incidents like Columbine and Virginia Tech will occur again and again. There will be the same tears, the same decimation of families, the same cries of pain, the same lasting physical and mental scars, the same escalation of fear, and the same lame speeches of nervous leaders who will tell the world how much they grieve for the victims and how they will remember their families in their prayers. Then, these speeches will be followed by a hasty retreat from the scene and an avoidance of discussing the real questions of the day: “Why do we permit this?” and “What can we do now, so that this will never happen again?”

Because violence in America is a major spiritual concern, we must listen to the warning that the 202nd General Assembly (1990) gave the church: “The religious community must also take seriously the risk of idolatry that could result from an unwarranted fascination with guns which overlooks or ignores the social consequences of their misuse” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, p. 605, paragraph 40.105). It is past time to take this warning to heart and dedicate our best minds to the study of America’s trust in violence and in the instruments of violence.

Because God has made us citizens of the world and brothers and sisters to the entire human family, we must not only seek freedom from gun violence in our own cities and communities, but in the cities and communities of the developing world, which is today suffering from the sale of guns from U. S. manufacturers. The United States has surpassed Russia and France as the world’s leading exporter of small arms and light weapons, especially to developing nations with one billion dollars in sales per year. Even more shamefully many of these sales are illegal.<sup>7</sup> The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church in 1981 called the church’s attention to an increasing number of private gun sales that were made to Northern Ireland (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1981, Part I, p. 85).

If the rule of law is to be honored, and if justice is to be sought, the church must come to terms with recent revelations from the Congressional Research Service, which documents the burgeoning trend of the U. S. in supplying military assistance and weaponry to countries that pledge their allegiance to us in our “global war on terror even though the state department has judged many of these countries to be unstable, lacking in democratic principles, and having a history of human rights abuses.”<sup>8</sup> One thousand people die each day in the developing world from small arms.<sup>9</sup>

As part of God’s one human family, we must be vigilant in recognizing the linkage between the gun violence we experience in America and the violence we purposefully export by supplying others with the tools of violence. It is certain that as guns and small arms are placed in the hands of vindictive militias and child soldiers, even if they should side with us in “our global war on terror,” the already high death rates of women and children in those regions will escalate even further. And as these guns make their way to the black market, an old AK-47 can be purchased for as little as $100.<sup>10</sup> In reality, our nation is distributing weapons of mass destruction. Faithfulness to God demands that we challenge our government’s questionable actions and examine our nation’s trust in these weapons to produce international security and peace.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-05—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 09-05 urges approving a resolution addressing the tragedy of America’s gun violence.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that Item 09-05 be approved.

Rationale

Item 09-05 calls on the church to recognize that little has been done to counter the increasing rise in gun violence in the United States. The ACWC confirms the shocking statistics cited in the overture, and encourages advocacy by the denomination to reverse this trend.

In particular, domestic violence is a major component of all gun violence. Women account for 61 percent of deaths among intimate partners. This is a primary issue for ACWC, and deserves attention by the entire denomination.

[The assembly approved Item 09-06 with amendment. See pp. 53, 55.]

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in partnership with the Office of Child Advocacy and in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, to create a resolution team to study the church’s policies on public education in relationship to the issues of desegregation, affirmative action, faith-based initiatives, [home schooling,] charter schools, and the No Child Left Behind law, with attention to [class] [name] as well as race; making appropriate recommendations [that would be presented to the 219th General Assembly (2010)] and, if appropriate, subsequently] preparing a study guide for individual and congregational use.

Public Education for the 21st Century

As Presbyterians, we believe that “an education of high quality for all children is an obligation of society and indispensable to the political and economic health of our democracy,” and that we are called “to respond in every possible way with measures that seek to evidence love and justice in the education of children and youth” (A Call to Church Involvement in the Renewal of Public Education, Minutes, 1987, Part I, pp. 481 and 485).

As Presbyterians, we have also acknowledged that the persistence of systemic racism and racial prejudice in our school systems continues to discourage and impede academic achievement for economically disadvantaged students and children of color.

On June 28, 2007, the Supreme Court found the voluntary desegregation plans in the Louisville, Kentucky, and Seattle, Washington, public school district programs to be unconstitutional. The debate around that decision reflects many of the challenges facing public education today. The public school system in many cities is effectively segregated on racial and economic lines, yet the Court has ruled out remedies in which race may play a deciding factor in school assignment. Certainly there is educational value in integrating classrooms in order to educate children to become leaders in a multiracial, multicultural society, but even when successful, integrating classrooms has not guaranteed a quality education for every child.

Nor is re-segregation (or continued segregation) the only challenge facing public education in dismantling racism. A growing number of school districts, especially in urban areas, have no majority group. They also struggle to ensure that each child receives the education she or he needs, including access to magnet and charter schools. Funding public education is also widely variable among and within states, generally to the disadvantage of children of color. The PC(USA) is committed in principle to a public education system that works for all children.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns believes it is time for the church to assess its long-held policies on public education, to revise and update them in light of the current social environment, and to provide better resources for Presbyterians as they seek to be advocates for children in the 21st century.

Presbyterians have always placed a high value on education and General Assemblies have been long time supporters of access to quality education. As issues of desegregation and affirmative action are being challenged in public school systems, we are being called to look at the variety in the make up of school districts and examine again the foundation of public education in the 21st century.

Because the social environment has changed and we are becoming a more global and technological society, models of education need to be re-considered in light of the intersections of race, ethnicity, language, class, and gender. Population demographics and social contexts all over the U.S. are changing quickly. For example, in some California school districts, eighty or more different primary languages are spoken. There are not enough teachers and not nearly enough experienced educators who are prepared to teach in multicultural and multilingual classrooms.

No Child Left Behind is having a major impact on schools across the country. Despite its lofty aims, NCLB as formulated is not producing the intended outcomes. Some children, particularly poor children and children of color, continue to be left behind. Inadequate funding to implement the provisions of the law, punitive measures used to punish schools that do not demonstrate adequate yearly progress, the use of disaggregated scores to call attention to groups that do not meet standards, and an over reliance on test scores as the key way of measuring progress are not only leaving our children behind, but are undermining the infrastructure of our public school system.

Changing immigration policies are also having a major impact on public schools. Particularly issues surrounding education for illegal immigrant children have been debated and measures such as the California Proposition 187 in 1994 attempted to deny public education for illegal immigrants. Although it is not a legislative issue yet, many illegal immigrants cannot register for college because they do not have a social security number.

Many Presbyterian statements on education are more than forty years old and need to be reconsidered for the current time, given changed educational methods and alternatives, including charter schools, and resources from the faith-based initiative program and private donors.

The recent 2007 Supreme Court ruling striking down two public school plans that used race as a factor in deciding where students attended school will also have impact on schools across the U.S. What were the issues in this case and how does the issue of desegregation play a role in the current context? These are questions that will continue to be asked of Presbyterian parents and other voters across the country.

Item 09-07

[In response to Item 09-07, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 53–54, 55.]

From Homelessness to Hope: Constructing Just, Sustainable Communities for All God's People—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the recommendations below and receive the attached study paper that provides their rationale and resources for social policy, social service, and education:

1. Commend the ongoing commitments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), its General Assembly and agencies in order to strengthen future witness:
  - a. Commend previous policies related to homelessness and affordable housing, including: “Building Community Among Strangers,” 211th General Assembly (1999); “Ending Homelessness for All Women,” 210th General Assembly (1998); “Lazarus at the Gate: A Call to Renewed Ministries in Housing,” 193rd General Assembly, UPCUSA (1981); “Statement on Housing,” 113th General Assembly, PCUS (1973).
  - b. Commend previous Presbyterian commitments to actions aimed at preventing poverty, e.g. education, job development, day care, living wage, health care, gambling, and so on—and thus strengthen individuals and families in their efforts to avoid homelessness.
  - c. Affirm the following principles, which underlie this resolution and its recommendations, as foundational to faithful ministry with persons who are homeless:

- Universal access to safe, decent, accessible, affordable, and permanent housing is a measure of a truly just society and a sign of the coming Reign of God.

- The church is called to create communities of hospitality that assure all members of society, including persons experiencing homelessness, a right to basic economic and social well-being, including safe, affordable housing.

- The church is called to honor God’s gift of the earth and to create, through personal lifestyle choices and the structures of society, sustainable communities where people can be securely housed in just relationship with one another and the earth.

- The church is called to challenge society to provide safe, decent, accessible, affordable, and permanent housing for all persons who cannot secure such housing through their own means.

d. Commend the more than 3,500 Presbyterian congregations reporting hands-on engagement and/or financial support for housing and homeless ministries, in cooperation with Habitat for Humanity in at least 25 percent of the cases (according to the annual Stated Clerk’s questionnaire; 53 percent of the 6,834 responses received). Celebrate this response and encourage other congregations, presbyteries, synods, and church-related entities to join them.

e. Commend the Presbyterian Washington Office and its interfaith work on housing and poverty issues, and direct it to include this action on homelessness and affordable housing in its advocacy work with communities of faith and members of Congress.

f. Commend the Presbyterian Network to End Homelessness, whose mission is to affirm, challenge, educate, and empower local churches, and the church as a whole, in the struggle to end homelessness.

2. Encourage a comprehensive response to the crisis of homelessness and affordable housing:

a. Encourage congregations, presbyteries, synods, and other church-related entities to take the lead in welcoming shelters, transitional housing programs, and affordable housing into their communities; to work in favor of mixed-income communities rather than exclusionary ones; and to counter Not In My Back Yard syndrome (NIMBYism) whenever it appears.

b. Urge congregations, presbyteries and synods, and other church-related entities, in all their responses to homelessness, to provide linkages to comprehensive services to meet the varied needs of persons facing the crisis of homelessness.

c. Urge congregations as employers and members who are employers, or in a position to exert influence regarding hiring and compensation practices, to educate themselves about the cost of living, especially housing, in their communities and to pay a living wage and provide benefits to all employees.

d. Urge congregations and members who are employers, or in a position to exert influence regarding hiring, to consider employing youth and adults reentering the workforce after being homeless or spending time in prison, drug or alcohol rehabilitation, or mental health treatment.

e. Encourage congregations to become part of national or local coalitions that strive to achieve worker justice and to work with employers in their communities to assure that workers are paid a living wage.

f. Urge congregations, presbyteries and synods, and other church-related entities to seek partners with whom they can further and deepen their response to the crisis of affordable housing and homelessness in their communities, including the construction of permanent, affordable rental housing and advocacy for policy change at local, state, and national levels.

g. Encourage congregations, presbyteries and synods, and other church-related entities to commend persons and organizations that work for and support “green” design in their homes and communities, and to partner with such persons and organizations in their own efforts to develop permanent, affordable rental housing.

h. Encourage congregations, presbyteries and synods, and other church-related entities to commend and support residents of public housing in their efforts to organize and exert residents’ voices in the decision-making structures in their communities.

i. Encourage congregations, presbyteries and synods, and other church-related entities to commend owners and landlords who act responsibly in their stewardship of rental property and seek justice in the face of economic inequities.

3. Expand utilization of church resources to address the crisis of homelessness and affordable housing:

a. Affirm that the church is called to offer its diverse resources in response to the crisis of homelessness and affordable rental housing, but also insist that the faith community cannot and should not be expected to address this crisis in isolation.

b. Urge the church at all levels to work in coalition with other agencies and in public-private collaboration to leverage and maximize resources available to address the crisis.

c. Encourage congregations, as they consider renewed stewardship of and/or renovation of their property, to allocate space for services for persons in need of housing assistance or the construction of affordable housing.

d. Encourage congregations, as they undertake capital campaigns for the expansion and/or renovation of their buildings, to be guided by good economic and environmental stewardship and to designate a significant portion of the campaign's proceeds for programs aimed at housing assistance, supportive services for persons with low income, and/or the construction of affordable housing.

e. Encourage congregations to make use of the Presbyterian Investment Loan Program (PILP) as they expand and/or renovate their buildings in order to make space for programs aimed at housing assistance or supportive services for persons with low income.

f. Urge the Presbyterian Foundation, in collaboration with the General Assembly Council, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and the office on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, to utilize its Creative Investment Program to invest meaningfully in the Local Initiatives Support Corporation (LISC) in order to create a revolving loan fund, which could be available to Presbyterian congregations, presbyteries, synods, and coalitions in which church entities are involved, for predevelopment loans to support the construction and rehabilitation of permanent rental housing for individuals and families with low income and/or a history of homelessness. The investment would accrue at an interest rate to be agreed upon between the Foundation and LISC and would result in a secure investment for the PC(USA).

g. Encourage Presbyterians and other persons of faith who, as homeowners, benefit from the current tax policy (e.g., the Home Mortgage Interest Deduction) to consider making an annual donation, in an amount equivalent to their housing-related tax savings, to programs that provide housing assistance, supportive services to families or individuals with low income, or the construction of affordable rental housing for those who do not receive such tax benefits.

4. Advocate legislative and policy directions in keeping with this resolution:

a. Policy Affecting Housing and Housing Services

(1) Preservation and expansion of the Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher program of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), as administered by local housing authorities, as a means to provide affordable rental housing and other federally-supported housing assistance to persons with little or no income.

(2) Restoration and expansion of "Project-Based Section 8" and other federal subsidy and incentive programs that promote the construction of affordable housing.

(3) Development of Housing Trust Funds at state and municipal levels, as well as a National Housing Trust Fund, as means to making significant funding available to both urban and rural communities for the development of permanent, affordable housing.

(4) Enactment of inclusionary zoning policies and support for other strategies to achieve mixed-income communities.

(5) Improved education about and enforcement of existing nondiscrimination laws with regard to housing and home financing.

(6) Preservation and development of housing programs at all governmental levels that target households with low incomes and persons with special needs.

(7) Preservation and revitalization of the 2.5 million units of affordable housing funded under the Public Housing and Project-Based Section 8 programs.

(8) Provision of additional units of housing for persons with extremely low income to replace all units destroyed through community redevelopment initiatives.

b. Policy Affecting Services for Persons Experiencing Homelessness or at Risk of Homelessness

(1) Revision of municipal zoning codes to include the temporary housing of persons (e.g. shelters, transitional housing, or supportive housing) as a permitted use.

(2) Revision of municipal zoning codes to encourage and facilitate the development of affordable rental housing.

(3) Revision of municipal ordinances to prohibit discrimination against persons based on their housing status.

(4) Sufficient resources for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and pertinent areas within the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and other departments to enable them to make progress toward and reach the goal of ending chronic homelessness. Two key elements to achieving this goal are increased funding for housing subsidy programs and the coordination of supportive services with permanent rental housing for all persons experiencing homelessness.

(5) Supportive Housing (housing plus services) for all people who have little or no income, are disabled, or were formerly homeless to aid them in living independent, healthy, and fulfilling lives.

(6) Continuation of and increased investment in the McKinney-Vento Act and related legislation, which provide funding for many services for persons who are homeless or at risk of homelessness, including amendments that would increase flexibility in program administration and make programs more performance-based.

(7) Expansion of Veterans Administration (VA) programs for veterans who are homeless or at risk of becoming homeless to include funding for permanent housing and the creation of innovative new models for service, including programs to help reintegrate returning veterans into the community, encourage partnerships between the VA and community-based organizations, and link permanent housing for veterans and their families with supportive services.

(8) Renewal and expansion of federal funding to help communities prevent homelessness among youth and young adults, as well as persons with special needs as they reenter communities from jails and prisons, and to provide housing and supportive services.

(9) Expansion of programs for supportive housing targeted to people who are homeless with mental illness to prevent their recycling between the streets and shelters and jails or prisons.

(10) Restoration of funding for mainstream programs that have been utilized by states, cities, and counties to provide housing and services as part of their comprehensive plans to prevent and end homelessness. These include but are not limited to HUD's Community Development Block Grant Program, the Home Investment Partnership Program (HOME), Supportive Housing for the Elderly Program (Section 202), and Supportive Housing for Persons with Disabilities (Section 811) as well as Medicaid, and other grants to states and localities.

c. Lending Practices

(1) Confirmation of "A Reformed Understanding of Usury for the 21st Century" [(217th General Assembly (2006)] and its recommendations regarding the need for financial literacy and change in state and federal policies and legislation that "allow lenders to take advantage of either the naïveté or financial plight of borrowers" (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 805).

(2) Correction of abusive lending practices at all levels and the development of strategies to provide a safety net for households that have fallen victim to subprime lending.

(3) Development of foreclosure prevention strategies and programs to benefit households at risk.

d. Taxation

(1) Replacement of the Home Mortgage Interest Deduction (HMID) with a 15 percent refundable Home Tax Credit, which a household could receive even if it has no tax liability, in order to encourage homeownership among households with lower income, distribute tax benefits more equitably, and significantly increase assistance to homeowners with low and moderate income.

- (2) Development of a targeted Rental Rebate Tax Credit at the state or federal level to benefit tenants with low or moderate income.
- (3) Expansion of the refundable Child Tax Credit by reducing the income threshold in order to reach more families of extremely low income.
- (4) Expansion of the Earned Income Tax Credit to include workers not raising children.
- (5) Support of fiscally responsible federal budget priorities and adequate revenues to ensure long-term funding for critical housing assistance and other safety net programs for families with low income.
- (6) Advocacy for budget priorities at all levels of government that utilize incentives and tax credits to encourage “smart growth” and the development of sustainable communities.

5. Direct the communication and distribution of this resolution:

- a. Urge the office of Small Church and Community Ministries, in collaboration with the Presbyterian Washington Office and other church entities, to develop and/or make available resources to educate individual Presbyterians and congregations on the nature and extent of the crisis in homelessness and affordable housing, the types of housing that can address the needs of those caught in the cycle of homelessness, and ways to respond to and advocate for public policy directives.
- b. Direct the General Assembly Council to facilitate the development of a portion of its website to make information, resources, and advocacy suggestions related to this resolution easily accessible to the church at all levels.
- c. Direct the Office of the General Assembly, in collaboration with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, to publish this report in its entirety online and in hard copy, making copies available to each presbytery, resource center, synod, and requesting session, as well as colleges and seminaries related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and for distribution throughout the church through Presbyterian Distribution Services; and to notify the church of its availability through the PC(USA) Website.

Alternate Resolution Approved

In response to this recommendation, that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following resolution:

The 218th General Assembly (2008) approves the recommendations below and receives the study paper that was attached to the original item of business, which provides rationale and resources for social policy, social service, and education:

The purpose of these recommendations is to provide information and guidance for governing bodies and direction for denominational advocates. These recommendations affirm the complexity of issues surrounding homelessness and the need for a holistic approach that (1) addresses ministry to those experiencing or at risk of homelessness and (2) the structural components necessary for a comprehensive solution.

The historical witness of the PC(USA) affirms the following principles, as foundational to faithful ministry with persons who are homeless:

- Universal access to safe, decent, accessible, affordable, and permanent housing is a measure of a just society and a sign of the coming Reign of God.
- The church is called to create communities of hospitality that assure all members of society, including persons experiencing homelessness, a right to basic economic and social well-being, including safe, affordable housing.
- The church is called to honor God’s gift of the earth and to create, through personal lifestyle choices and the structures of society, sustainable communities where people can be securely housed in just relationship with one another and the earth.
- The church is called to challenge society to provide safe, decent, accessible, affordable, and permanent housing for all persons who cannot secure such housing through their own means.

1. Commend the ongoing witness, commitment, ministry and advocacy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), its General Assembly and agencies, the Presbyterian Washington Office, the Presbyterian Network to End Homelessness, and the more than 3,500 Presbyterian congregations reporting hands-on engagement in housing and homeless minis- tries. We commend previous Presbyterian commitments to actions aimed at preventing poverty, e.g. education, job development, day care, living wage, health care, and gambling toward strengthening individuals and families and individuals in their efforts to avoid homelessness.

2. Encourage congregations, presbyteries, synods, and other church-related entities to pursue comprehensive responses to the crisis of homelessness and affordable housing. The General Assembly Council ministries of Compassion, Peace and Justice will develop and provide resources (including this report) to help these entities in this task, covering such actions as:

- Shelters, transitional housing programs, mixed-income communities, and affordable housing in their communities;
- Links with service providers in the community;
- The impact of employment practices, including sustainable wages and benefits, employment of youth and adults reentering the workforce after being homeless or institutionalized;
- Links with local, regional, and national coalitions that advocate for worker justice and sustainable wages, green design in homes and communities, permanent affordable rental housing;
- Supporting residents of public housing in their efforts to organize and have voice in their communities;
- The application of stewardship strategies in the area of homelessness, such as allocating physical space for services for persons in need of housing assistance, tithing capital campaign proceeds;
- General Assembly resources available to congregations, such as the Presbyterian Investment & Loan Program, Inc. (PILP).

3. Affirm that the church is called to offer its diverse resources in response to the crisis of homelessness and affordable rental housing, but also insist that faith communities cannot and should not be expected to address this crisis in isolation from governmental and private sector partnerships. Therefore, we advocate initiatives such as:

a. Policy Affecting Housing and Housing Services

(1) Preservation and development of housing programs at all governing levels that target households with low incomes and persons with special needs, especially the federal Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher program.

(2) Restoration and expansion of “Project-Based Section 8” and other federal subsidy and incentive programs that promote the construction of affordable housing, and revitalization of the 2.5 million units of affordable housing funded under this program.

(3) Development of Housing Trust Funds at municipal, state, and national levels, to make significant funding available to both urban and rural communities for the development of permanent, “green,” affordable housing.

(4) Enactment of inclusionary zoning policies and support for other strategies to achieve mixed-income communities, with attention to replacing housing units for persons with extremely low income when displaced through community development initiatives.

(5) Improved enforcement of existing nondiscrimination laws with regard to housing and home financing.

b. Policy Affecting Services for Persons Experiencing Homelessness or at Risk of Homelessness

(1) Revision of municipal zoning codes to include the temporary housing of persons (e.g. shelters, transitional housing, or supportive housing) as a permitted use, to facilitate the development of affordable rental housing, and to prohibit discrimination against persons based on their housing status.

(2) Increased funding for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and other departments to progress toward the goal of ending chronic homelessness, such as:

(a) Expansion and adequate funding for Supportive Housing (housing plus services) for all people who have little or no income, are disabled, are formerly homeless, or are living with mental illness, to aid them in living independent, healthy, and fulfilling lives, and to prevent persons from recycling among the streets, the shelters, the jails, and the prisons.

c. Policies Affecting Lending Practices

(1) Development of foreclosure prevention strategies and programs to benefit households at risk.

(2) Restrict predatory and abusive lending practices, in consultation with the 217th General Assembly (1996)'s recommendations regarding "A Reformed Understanding of Usury in the 21st Century" (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 805).

d. Policies Affecting Taxation

(1) Support of fiscally responsible federal budget priorities and adequate revenues to ensure long-term funding for critical housing assistance and other safety net programs for families with low income.

(2) Advocacy for budget priorities at all levels of government that utilize incentives and tax credits to encourage "smart growth" and the development of sustainable communities.

(3) Increase tax benefits for those living at lower income levels, so as to achieve a more equitable distribution of tax benefits for the purpose of achieving greater economic stability for individuals and families at risk of homelessness such as:

- expansion of the Earned Income Tax Credit to include workers not raising children
- expansion of the refundable Child Tax Credit by making it available to more low-income workers, and
- development at the state or federal level of a refundable tax credit targeted to low-income renters, similar to the subsidy provided to homeowners through the federal mortgage interest deduction.

4. That the General Assembly urge the Presbyterian Foundation, in collaboration with the General Assembly Council, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and the office on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, to expand its Creative Investment Program to invest meaningfully in the Local Initiatives Support Corporation (LISC) to create a revolving loan fund available to Presbyterian congregations, presbyteries, synods, and coalitions in which church entities are involved, for predevelopment loans to support the construction and rehabilitation of permanent rental housing for individuals and families with low income and/or a history of homelessness.

6. Request that all PC(USA) members forgo one meal per week (if one is able) as an act of worship and humility. The value of that meal is to be pledged (in a manner of the donor's choice) to feeding those in need.

Rationale

I. Introduction

“Working a full-time job does not guarantee a family a decent, affordable place to live.”<sup>1</sup>

According to a 2007 report from the Center for Housing Policy, American households, whether renting or owning, are under increased pressure to maintain housing. Between 1997 and 2005, the number of working families paying more than half their income for housing increased 87 percent, from 2.4 million to 4.5 million. When families living in severely inadequate or dilapidated housing are included, the total of working families with critical housing needs rises to 5.2 million nationally. Housing needs exist across “the housing landscape” from large to small metropolitan areas, in urban and suburban counties alike. While the problem is most acute on the West Coast (Los Angeles, Anaheim, and San Diego areas) and East Coast centers like New York and Miami, the pattern exists in all regions of the country. Moreover, critical housing needs worsened in twenty-seven of the thirty-one metropolitan areas studied.

This picture is complicated by the turmoil in the subprime mortgage market, whereby households are brought into home ownership with teaser mortgage rates, which then fluctuate upward, quickly putting payments out of reach. General sluggishness in the housing market makes selling difficult and forces many households into foreclosure, which is at an all-time high. Mortgage companies themselves are being forced into bankruptcy, making hundreds of their own employees vulnerable.

These and other factors put pressure on the already tight affordable rental housing market. When eviction or several moves force a choice between being housed and being able to meet other expenses, individuals and families seek alternatives—doubling up with family or friends, moving into a cheap motel, or living out of their car. Then, not knowing where else to turn, they appear at the doors of churches or other service providers seeking a handout, a meal, or a place to stay. Piecemeal responses to such appeals, while compassionate, do not address underlying problems and issues—and can actually impede progress toward permanent solutions.

A far better response is to help persons find a path toward a comprehensive plan to end their homelessness. Without such a plan, individuals and families remain in poverty and cycle in and out of homelessness. Unless it is addressed comprehensively, this cycle of poverty and homelessness will continue to the next generation.

Though many programs and approaches to address the problem have emerged over recent decades, homelessness is still with us. In many ways, it is more insidious now than before. Nevertheless, it is at last becoming clear what must be done. This paper insists on two affirmations:

- The cycle of homelessness will be broken when each person or family experiencing homelessness is treated with dignity and respect and is offered hospitality and welcome to permanent housing.
- The cycle will be broken when everyone has access to resources to meet their needs for safety, food, housing, physical and mental health care, substance abuse treatment, child care, transportation, and freedom from violence.

These affirmations emerge from several principles, which underlie this resolution and its recommendations and are foundational to faithful ministry with persons who are homeless:

- Universal access to safe, decent, accessible, affordable, and permanent housing is a measure of a truly just society and a sign of the coming Reign of God.
- The church is called to create communities of hospitality that assure all members of society, including persons experiencing homelessness, a right to basic economic and social well-being, including safe, affordable housing.
- The church is called to honor God’s gift of the earth and to create, through personal lifestyle choices and the structures of society, sustainable communities where people can be securely housed in just relationship with one another and the earth.
- The church is called to challenge society to provide safe, decent, accessible, affordable, and permanent housing for all persons who cannot secure such housing through their own means.

Homelessness and the struggle to find permanent, affordable rental housing is a crisis that spans the country. It can be found in a diverse range of communities, from rural/small town to suburban to urban/metropolitan. Thus programs of sustainable, supportive housing are needed across this vast range of communities. People of faith are a common thread running throughout these diverse communities as well, and the church can be a catalyst for building a comprehensive response.

In order to develop a faithful response to the crisis of homelessness, the church is called to a ministry of hospitality and beyond that to a ministry of home-making, “the creation of ... space where souls can thrive and dream—secure, protected, related, nourished and whole.”<sup>2</sup> The church is called to help people move from homelessness to hope through constructing just, sustainable communities for all God’s people.

II. The Problem

The crisis of homelessness is inextricably linked to the crisis of affordable housing. As noted earlier, both are increasingly prevalent throughout the country, in diverse types of communities. In urban areas, where large numbers of persons who appear to be homeless can be seen on city streets and in public spaces such as libraries and bus stations, homelessness is very visible. However, about 14 percent of persons in need of shelter are in isolated rural areas where they may live in their cars or in parks, campsites, or abandoned buildings.<sup>3</sup> “Couch-hopping” or “doubling-up” with friends or family members is a less visible form of coping with homelessness in all types of communities. While it meets the immediate need, “doubling up” soon leads to stress for both children and adults. Moreover, housing additional persons who are not included on a lease leads to overcrowding and, if discovered, is grounds for eviction, which may result in two families at risk for homelessness.

A. What Is Homelessness?

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD)<sup>4</sup> defines the term “homeless” or “homeless individual or homeless person” as

1. an individual who lacks a fixed, regular, and adequate nighttime residence; and
2. an individual who has a primary nighttime residence that is:
  - a. a supervised publicly or privately operated shelter designed to provide temporary living accommodations (including welfare hotels, congregate shelters, and transitional housing for the mentally ill);
  - b. an institution that provides a temporary residence for individuals intended to be institutionalized; or
  - c. a public or private place not designed for, or ordinarily used as, a regular sleeping accommodation for human beings.

It is interesting to note that persons who “double up” (the most common first response to being without permanent shelter) are not counted among “the homeless” according to this HUD definition.

There are several levels of homelessness, from “precariously-housed” (persons who are dependent on others for shelter) to “chronically homeless” (persons who experience long-term homelessness or reoccurring episodes of homelessness). Some individuals or families—as a result of an interruption of income, fire, or a medical crisis—have a short-term need for housing assistance; they need housing, along with the time and resources to regain their footing after the crisis. They access the system, regain stability, and move back into independent living. The experience of homelessness can be a blip in an otherwise stable life. More often, however, it is not, and the crisis of homelessness is the predictable result of a complex interaction of losses and conditions.

Individuals and families needing assistance with housing nearly always need a complex array of other services in order to achieve enough stability to maintain permanent housing. The process of moving from shelter to stability is not simple, especially for the 150,000 to 200,000 persons in the U.S. who experience chronic homelessness. There are often setbacks, making the need for both a comprehensive plan and significant support along the way extremely critical.

B. Who Is Homeless?

During the 1950s and 60s, “skid row” flop houses and Single Room Occupancy (SRO) hotels were available in cities to house single persons with low-income. Residents tended to be older (over fifty), white men, many of whom had problems with alcohol and were living apart from their families. They tended to work in the menial jobs that were readily available in center cities; because of the availability of these jobs, such persons were able to manage on modest incomes of about $350 a month.

Today, a far greater number of persons experiencing homelessness are young, in their 30s, and members of a minority group. Approximately two-thirds have spent some time in jail, a mental hospital, or in drug rehabilitation, yet few have access to follow-up care. Youth and young adults who are homeless are likely to have spent time in foster care, a group home, or as a runaway. Due to economic shifts and the gentrification of downtown areas, persons who become homeless are largely unemployed (80 percent) or have extremely low income. Moreover, as a result of economic distress, the stress induced by being homeless, and inadequate access to health and mental health systems, persons who are without shelter are 30–40 percent more likely than the general population to have a substance abuse problem, mental illness, or a chronic physical disease. They are also mobile. It is estimated that families at risk for homelessness move an average of four times in the year prior to seeking refuge in a shelter.

While homelessness is not restricted to any one population group, three groups merit special mention.

- Veterans are heavily represented among persons utilizing housing services, and record numbers of veterans of our current wars in Iraq and Afghanistan are seeking housing assistance within months of leaving the military.
- Families with children are increasingly at risk for homelessness. In 2002, families comprised 41 percent of urban homelessness, an increase of 5 percent in just two years. In rural areas, research indicates that families, single mothers, and children make up the largest group of people who are homeless. Nationally, approximately 39 percent of persons experiencing homelessness are children. It is estimated that 600,000 families and 1.35 million children are homeless in the U.S. each year.
- Between a million and 1.6 million youth and young adults experience homelessness each year.<sup>5</sup> Presenting issues include aging out of foster care, running away from home, or being abandoned or locked out by parents or guardians. Youth may have strained relationships with family due to domestic violence, mental illness or substance abuse among family members or from parental disapproval of their sexual behavior or sexual identity; they may also have experienced physical or sexual abuse by parents or guardians.

“Chronic homelessness” refers to persons, regardless of age, with an unaddressed disabling condition (substance use disorder, serious mental illness, developmental disability, or a chronic physical illness or disability), who have been homeless (1) continuously for one whole year, or (2) four or more times in the past three years. The plight of such persons is exacerbated by policy changes and budget constraints within the medical, mental health, and other sectors, which all too often result in indigent persons being released to communities that are ill-prepared to provide housing or continuing care for persons with special needs.

Thus common precedents to homelessness include: unemployment, underemployment, inadequate wages and benefits, inadequate or depleted social benefits, inadequate services for mental illness or drug dependency, and the inability to maintain even the lowest-cost housing. An important underlying factor is the loss of manufacturing jobs and other employment that enabled wage earners to provide for themselves and their families. Overall, wages have not kept pace with the rapidly increasing cost of housing, and most communities have an extreme affordable housing deficit.

C. What Is Affordable Housing?

Housing is considered affordable when the cost of housing (rent or mortgage/tax payments), plus basic utilities apart from telephone, does not exceed 30 percent of the household’s income. In 1997, 2.4 million households spent more than half their income on housing, some of which was severely inadequate or dilapidated. By 2005, this number had jumped to 5.2 million—an 87 percent increase. From 2000 to 2002, the national housing wage (the hourly wage required for a worker to afford a two bedroom home) increased by 18 percent. By comparison, the overall inflation rate for 2001 was 1.6 percent. The lack of affordable housing and the limited scale of housing assistance programs are the primary causes of homelessness.

In recent years, rents have soared, putting housing out of reach for thousands of Americans. In 1999, only 4.9 million rental units were available to 7.7 million renters with extremely low income—a shortage of 2.8 million units. Stagnant incomes among households at the low end of the income distribution, combined with a shrinking pool of affordable units due to demolition or condo conversion and the lack of political will to develop new affordable units, perpetuate the affordable housing crisis. More than 37 million households pay so much for housing that they cannot afford other necessities such as food and medical care. Furthermore, increasing rents in 2005 and 2006 predicted escalating housing cost burdens or homelessness for households with low income.<sup>6</sup>

D. How Can the Crisis of Homelessness Be Addressed?

The primary legislation to address homelessness is the McKinney-Vento Act, first passed in 1987 as the Urgent Relief for the Homeless Act. Previously, the Reagan Administration had viewed homelessness as a problem best handled by state and local jurisdictions. However, pressure for the federal government to be an active participant in addressing the needs of constituents experiencing homelessness led to strong bipartisan support for federal help in providing emergency relief (shelter, food, mobile health care, transitional housing, etc.). Recent revisions have increased the number of federally-supported shelter beds, mandated that school systems make education available to children who are homeless, and increased the focus on permanent housing. While the availability of public funds to address homelessness is variable and severely limited, these funds are an essential component as communities work to garner all available resources to meet the needs in their area.

An ideal policy would have three foci: prevention, housing assistance, and supportive services.

E. Prevention

A key element in overcoming the crisis of homelessness is to keep people from becoming homeless in the first place. Public policy that strives to keep people housed would focus on: enhancing the low-cost housing supply, eliminating unemployment, providing adequate wages and benefits, reducing discrimination, and implementing support systems for persons who are precariously housed. Over the long term, homelessness prevention must involve:

- An adequate supply of affordable housing.
- An adequate supply of jobs that pay a living wage<sup>7</sup> and provide benefits.
- Adequate community-based health and mental health services.
- Strategic intervention when households are at risk.
- Adequate discharge planning to ensure that persons exiting foster care, hospitals, jails, prisons, or other institutions have immediate access to supportive housing.
- Development of social networks.
- Investment in programs for youth who are homeless and aging out of foster care.

F. Housing Assistance

Housing assistance can mean the difference between stable housing, precarious housing, or no housing at all, but the demand for assistance dramatically exceeds the supply. Most families and individuals who seek housing assistance are placed on long waiting lists. The Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher program, a major source of housing assistance, experienced a decrease of nearly 150,000 vouchers between February 2004 and August 2006.<sup>8</sup>

Most Americans believe that government-based housing assistance, i.e. housing assistance utilizing tax dollars, is aimed primarily at families with low income and involves programs of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and local housing authorities. In actuality, the opposite is true. The majority of housing assistance in the United States comes through tax breaks to homeowners, the majority of whom have middle to high income. According to the Center for Budget and Policy Priorities, there were $154 billion in indirect, housing-related tax breaks (the invisible part of the national budget that doesn't get voted on each year) in 2006. In comparison, direct expenditures on federal housing assistance in 2006 (the visible budget that does get voted on each year) totaled $38.3 billion. The Joint Center for Housing Studies at Harvard University asserts that “federal assistance to very low-income households reaches only about one-quarter of eligible renters and virtually no homeowners.”<sup>9</sup>

Housing assistance programs are often the critical factor between being housed and not being housed, yet programs for households with low income reach only a fraction of families who are poor enough to qualify for them (around five million households are served).<sup>10</sup> We must do better.

G. Supportive Services

Supportive services are a critical part of a comprehensive plan to break the cycle of homelessness. Communities seeking to provide a comprehensive approach to ending homelessness need to: (1) identify who can provide the necessary services, and (2) address the urgent question of resources to address a wide variety of needs. Such needs include:

Housing Services:

- Safe and affordable housing
- Housing vouchers for market rate housing
- Supportive services in permanent housing for persons with mental illness, addiction, and other disabilities

Educational Services for Adults:

- Literacy training
- Employment training
- GED classes
- Tenant education
- Financial literacy
- Tax assistance

Programs for Children and Youth:

- Safe and affordable childcare, available 24/7
- Early childhood education
- Head Start
- Tutoring
- After-school programs
- Job training
- Counseling to enhance self-worth and identity

Other Support Services:

- Domestic violence assistance
- Public assistance (food stamps, temporary assistance to needy families, utility assistance, nutritional programs such as WIC)
- Transportation
- Advocacy for jobs that provide a living wage and benefits

Health Care:

- Mental health-care evaluations and treatment
- Preventive care including immunizations, nutrition, and prescriptions
- Dental care
- Free clinics
- Addiction treatment and counseling

The crisis of homelessness is complex, as are the components needed to break the cycle and enable families and individuals to live independently in safe, secure and affordable permanent housing. Yet it is to this crisis in all its complexity that Jesus Christ calls the church to respond.

III. Theological-Ethical Framework

L: Christ is present wherever food is shared and drink is given to those who thirst. Jesus practiced a hospitality that made room at the table for those looked down upon and ordinarily left out. Against the custom of His day, He ate and drank with sinners and tax collectors, with strangers and enemies.

Yet when people came together with Jesus, amazing things happened. Strangers became friends. The hungry were fed. People were healed. A new community was formed.

ALL: WE LONG TO BE PART OF SUCH A COMMUNITY. (Communion liturgy, St. Mark's Presbyterian Church, Tucson, Arizona)

In biblical times, hospitality was the foundation for all morality. The people of Israel, with their experience of being strangers and sojourners before coming into the land, understood covenant with God to include care for vulnerable strangers in their midst. Worship and outreach to those in need could not be separated.

Is not this the fast that I choose: to loose the bonds of injustice, to undo the thongs of the yoke, to let the oppressed go free, and to break every yoke? Is it not to share your bread with the hungry, and bring the homeless poor into your house.... (Isa. 58:6-7)

Much of Jesus' ministry as recorded in the Gospels is marked by acts of hospitality; his choices about where and with whom to share his meals break down the prevailing walls of division and exclusion. His ministry and that of his followers are dependent on the hospitality of others. Moreover, he characterizes the coming Reign of God in terms of a banquet where all are welcomed and find a seat. Paul, in his nurturing of young congregations, emphasized welcoming one another as Christ had welcomed all, especially those deemed "unclean" by society. Such restorative hospitality is both a participation in and an anticipation of God's hospitality by which "strangers" become "partners"<sup>11</sup>

God wants a chair for everyone at the banquet table. The table is of God. It is not the property of the rich and powerful. The table is God's creation. It is meant as a gift to be shared in sustainable hospitality for all. God makes a home and a place for all at the table, but humans, through sin, have excluded particular groups of people. Rather than sharing for sustainability, we have hoarded and destroyed God's gift. Due to human sin, hospitality too often becomes a matter of sharing our crumbs rather than offering an abundant loaf; such remedial solutions provide only a momentary respite from social stratification and its stigma. People who are poor remain poor and on the margins.

In contrast, true hospitality is equated with justice. Each person is provided not only a chair and a meal, but a bed and a place of shelter, indeed the opportunity to become an ongoing part of the community, the extended household. True hospitality requires the emancipation of slaves and economic redistribution, so all may find a place to be at home.

Ancient Israel envisioned its world, indeed the whole of creation, as a household or a village of households, where residents not only lived together but also nurtured and protected one another. Persons who were poor were seen as "sibling" or "neighbor" to be loved as oneself. Leo G. Purdue writes,

In the formation of our own ethical paradigm, informed by scripture, we, too, must learn to envision not only our own society but also all creation as a place for human dwelling ... a collection of family households, in which all peoples and creatures have a place to dwell. ... [and in which we] are responsible to and for one another, for the "good creation," and to [God] who ... not only continues to love and nurture us but also expects us to love and care for our neighbors as ourselves.<sup>12</sup>

How is the church called to respond in faithful ministry in response to the crisis of homelessness? There is no one answer. However, the call to true biblical hospitality compels us to go beyond compassion and charity. Our response must empower people to move from homelessness to hope. Our response must include elements of justice, community, and the sustainable sharing and use of God's gift of creation.

A. Justice

In the culture surrounding Jesus and the early church, Greek and Roman views of benevolence and hospitality stressed formal, reciprocal obligations between host and guest. This tradition emphasized the worthiness and goodness of recipients rather than their need. In fact, relations were often calculated to benefit the benefactor.<sup>13</sup> Lactantius, a tutor to the son of Constantine, took a different view. To him, hospitality to strangers was ultimately equated with justice: "But in what does the nature of justice consist than in our affording to strangers through kindness, that which we render to our own relatives through affection."<sup>14</sup> Jesus himself modeled such an approach when he urged hospitality to those who could not reciprocate: "When you give a feast, invite the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and you will be blessed because they cannot repay you" (Luke 14:13-14).

Theologically, we serve God when we respond with compassion to our brothers and sisters, when we feed, welcome, clothe, and care for persons in need (Matt. 25:31-46). Seeing the face of Jesus in the face of "the least of these," churches often begin with a direct response—by collecting food or clothing, opening soup kitchens and shelters, or allocating space to counseling programs or health clinics. While these responses are necessary, they do not address the causes of homelessness, do little to break the cycle for individuals and families in need, and may be offered in ways that do not empower them.

Churches can also respond on a deeper level by getting involved in partnerships to create affordable housing. Such efforts, whether aimed at making housing affordable or actually constructing low-income housing, come closer to approaching justice since housing is a basic step to success in other societal arenas. Even so, the way churches develop partnerships and provide affordable housing will determine whether people who are homeless experience them as empowering or paternalistic.

The church should be involved in both of these levels of hospitality. However, to truly be about the work of constructing just, sustainable communities, the church also needs to be involved in advocacy for public policies that prevent people from becoming homeless and remedy the injustices inherent in the vicious cycle of poverty.

B. Community

Hospitality, as envisioned here, includes economic restructuring so that people can meet their basic physical needs (have a place at the table). It also includes an even more basic element: respect, the recognition of the worth of all who are seated at the banquet. In the early Christian church, communities of hospitality distributed goods to persons in need, but they also ate meals together, lived simply, and praised God through worship and prayer.

All who believed were together and had all things in common; they would sell their possession and goods and distribute the proceeds to all, as any had need. Day by day, as they spent much time together in the temple, they broke bread at home and ate their food with glad and generous hearts, praising God and having the goodwill of all the people. And day by day the Lord added to their number those who were being saved. (Acts 2: 44–47)

They intentionally sought to form relationships of love and care with one another and with God. Such intentionality depends, theologically, on a view of each person as created in the image of God (imago dei) and a commitment to the discipline of listening to and taking seriously all voices at the table, especially those that are usually ignored. Too often, rather than paying attention to the stories and insights of people who are homeless, we fall into the easier pattern of assuming that, because a person is dirty, he or she is also ignorant, lazy, and of little worth. We lump all people who are homeless into one category; we do not acknowledge that each person, whether housed or without shelter, has a personal narrative. A revolutionary first step towards creating communities of hospitality is simply to affirm that all people have dignity, equal worth, and the capacity to contribute special gifts in community.

As the story of the starving widow who serves Elijah (1 Kings 17–18) attests, those who are poor and outcast can be just as hospitable as those who are rich and powerful, if not more so. Love of neighbor entails both being a neighbor to others and allowing others to be neighbor to us. How easily we forget that our titles and possessions, even our well-being as persons, are a gift from God. How easily we forget that the bountiful goods at the banquet table are neither deserved nor earned; as gifts they are to be shared, not hoarded at the expense of others.

Developing community requires breaking down the exclusionary boundaries we have erected, both individually and structurally. People who are homeless are often disconnected from the basic relationships that make people secure in the world. Peruvian theologian Gustavo Gutierrez spoke of the difference between a church for the poor and a church of the poor. We must do the same.

Hospitality means moving beyond having a commitment to welcome (in the abstract) to proactively thinking about how our churches can become communities of hospitality. It is easy to preach love of neighbor, but to truly be a community of hospitality means going beyond the abstract to concrete action, on both individual and structural levels. Every aspect of a congregation's ministry must be viewed and evaluated through the lens of community reconciliation. How can each element of its ministry work to break down cultural, class, and racial boundaries? How can congregations interact on a broad scale to create flourishing communities where all have the capacity to become participating members?

With regard to homelessness and affordable housing, churches and other communities of faith can play a unique role. The public voice of churches of the poor, or communities of hospitality that include people in need, is authentic. Such an authentic voice of justice can be especially potent when communities strive to close doors and refuse access, when the goal of community life becomes exclusion rather than inclusion. The church's emphasis on the need for communities of hospitality can supplement society's emphasis on human rights; communities of hospitality can offer the human connection and rootedness that give people a sense of home. Even so the church cannot do this alone. Religious communities can offer connections of care and meaningful identity, but the state is needed to protect basic human rights and ensure that decisions by private church and/or church-based organizations about who is "deserving" of care do not lead to discrimination.

C. Sustainability

Biblically, creation is a gift from God. Humans, as part of God's creation, are given the opportunity to share life with other creatures in land that belongs to God. With God's gracious gift comes responsibility: to care for the land, to tend it, and to honor the One by whose grace it is ours to enjoy. This was a prime theme when Israel came into the land of promise:

You shall observe my statutes and faithfully keep my ordinances, so that you may live on the land securely. The land will yield its fruit, and you will eat your fill and live on it securely. The land shall not be sold in perpetuity, for the land is mine; with me you are but aliens and tenants. Throughout the land that you hold, you shall provide for the redemption of the land. (Lev. 25:18–19, 23–24)

Neglectful of this biblical insight, however, we have increasingly depleted the earth's resources. Sustainability requires that we think not only about how all are going to be seated at the table but how we are even going to have a table!

Hospitality requires that we all live more simply so that the earth can continue to sustain itself and the growing human population. We must ask what type of houses and communities we are building. For example, do we think about how to provide simple yet sustainable housing that is affordable for all? Or do we see "housing assistance" as property tax and home mortgage deductions for homeowners, even those with more than one home, while others have no home at all?

God has provided enough for all but, in our greed, we misuse and misappropriate God's gift. Thus the call for sustainable hospitality is strongest for those who consume the most. Such an emphasis on sustainable hospitality also calls for structural changes that would move the housing industry's emphasis away from investment in high-end housing and toward earth-friendly housing and community planning. This would include increased commitment to mixed-income communities, so persons who work in a community can more easily find affordable housing near their workplace. Added benefits would include shorter commutes—and thus more time for involvement in family and community life as well as lessened dependency on fossil fuels and highways.

IV. Constructing Just, Sustainable Communities

Presbyterians and other persons of faith have responded valiantly to the crisis of homelessness over recent decades. Of the 6,834 congregations that responded to questions about their involvement in ministries in homelessness and housing in 2006,<sup>15</sup> over 53 percent indicated that they had provided either volunteers or financial support or both to a ministry with persons who are homeless or in need of housing assistance. Responses show that both financial support and volunteers were nearly evenly split between Habitat for Humanity and other ministries. Presbyterians are responding to this social crisis, which reaches literally to the doorsteps of our churches. This response is worthy of celebration, yet the problem persists.

How can the cycle end? The answer is both simple and complex.

A. Strategies for Breaking the Cycle of Homelessness

To become involved or to deepen their current involvement, individuals and congregations can:

- Become educated about homelessness and its causes;
- Identify who is already at work on homeless issues and join them;
- Determine if their community or state has a "Plan to End Homelessness"<sup>16</sup> and find ways to work within it;
- Provide space within church buildings for programs that address homelessness and housing-related needs;
- Partner with other churches and religious communities;
- Partner with secular agencies to provide linkage to comprehensive services;
- Provide in-kind donations and services: direct service volunteers, volunteers to serve on boards and committees, access to church property, transportation, and goods that agencies need to provide services (clothing, toiletries, furniture, meals, other equipment, etc.);
- Provide financial support.

Whether offered by one organization or through a collaborative effort, a replicable, community-based strategy for breaking the cycle of homelessness has several components. These components include:

- Prevention, which helps people keep their housing;
- Individualized, comprehensive programs of housing and services for those who become homeless;
- Affordable, permanent housing with a variety of support services so that residents are able to maintain their housing.

There must also be a process to measure outcomes both for these components and for the individuals and families who are engaged in the services.

An effective response can take many forms and be developed in a community of any size. Churches and religious communities can and should play a significant role, providing resources (financial support, volunteers, in-kind donations, and advocacy) to make the model successful. The goal is:

- To support families or individuals who are able to become totally self-sufficient, and
- To provide those who are not able to be self-sufficient with the support services they need to maintain permanent housing.

When persons who have experienced the trauma of homelessness have a home, they can more successfully address other aspects of their lives. Adults can seek appropriate training or employment. Parents can focus on parenting and increasing family resources. Children are less likely to experience depression and behavioral problems and thus are more able to achieve appropriate developmental milestones. Persons who struggle with mental illness, physical disabilities, learning limits, and addiction may not be able to become totally independent but with permanent housing in association with needed services, they too can live with dignity and in safety.

The key to success is a comprehensive plan for a spectrum of programs developed to meet varied needs. Such a plan should link the needs of each individual and family with critical elements of service. Communities, depending on their size, location, and resources, may have one program, which provides all the elements needed, or a variety of programs that work together to provide comprehensive services. For some individuals and families, an end to homelessness may involve living independently in permanent, affordable housing with no further need for services. For another family or individual, an end to homelessness may mean living indefinitely in permanent housing with supportive services. In both cases, however, the cycle of homelessness has been broken because there is a comprehensive system of services, families and individuals have participated in their success, and the community has collaborated to make this possible.

Critical elements of a comprehensive approach to breaking the cycle of homelessness include:

1. Community Planning and Participation:

Communities, and public and private organizations within the community, including churches, should identify who is providing services, identify gaps in services as well as additional partners, and develop an overall plan. All service components should be linked, and they must be easily accessible by individuals and families in need. This kind of partnership requires commitment, flexibility, and the acknowledgment that significant change will only come about through collaboration at all levels.

2. Homelessness Prevention:

Strategies to prevent homelessness and funds to assist individuals and families facing loss of their housing should work together within a comprehensive system aimed at preventing repeated or chronic homelessness. Funding (a combination of private, governmental, not-for-profit, and faith-based funds) used in conjunction with strategic interventions can prevent evictions. For example, a mediator can help tenants and property manager reach an agreement on past-due rent and reasonable future payments. Follow-up assures accountability on the part of both recipients and housing providers.

3. Emergency Shelters:

Many communities have developed seasonal emergency shelters to keep persons from dying on the streets during seasons of extreme cold or heat. Ideally, however, such programs are available year-round and provide temporary shelter, meals, supportive services, and a thorough assessment of guests' needs. Emergency services, by definition, are aimed at meeting a critical, emergency need, but they can also provide an entry point for beginning to address longer-term needs and the means to maintain a safe and healthy way of life. In order to leave the shelter and prevent their homelessness from recurring, individuals and families need a comprehensive assessment and plan. Strong linkages between shelters and other services assure that plans are not only developed but fully implemented.

4. Transitional Housing Leading to Permanent Supportive Housing:

Transitional housing, along with a complete spectrum of support services, is the next step in breaking the cycle of homelessness. Program staff help families and individuals develop a comprehensive plan and assure that they receive both appropriate housing and the services needed to live in that housing successfully.

5. An Individualized Comprehensive Service Program:

Breaking the cycle of homelessness is dependent on access to both housing and appropriate services. A successful program will assess and address critical issues such as chemical dependency, domestic violence, education, physical and mental health, life skills, job skills, self-esteem, and history of sexual assault, and recommend ways persons can develop successful living routines.

6. The Assessment Specialist:

Key to this approach is the assessment specialist who works with families or individuals and helps them choose training to advance their skills or find full- or part-time employment. If persons are unable to work, due to health or other limitations, their plan will focus on enabling them to live in stable housing with appropriate services.

7. Measuring Success:

“Success” in ending homelessness differs for each individual or family. Nevertheless, it is very important for communities and participating programs to measure the outcomes of their work. Are individuals and families remaining housed for six months or a year? Are programs providing appropriate and necessary services? Is there enough safe and affordable housing to meet the community’s needs? Are service providers working together to assure the success of the comprehensive model? Is the community-at-large participating? Is the religious community active in helping to bring about an end to homelessness?

B. Models of Faithful Ministry with People Who Are Homeless

Examples of comprehensive and effective response to the crisis of homelessness abound throughout the country. A few are described here to demonstrate the various forms that a just, sustainable and community-based approach can take.

Providence House, Shreveport, Louisiana, (www.theprovidencehouse.com) is a residential development center for families with children. Located on the edge of downtown Shreveport in an area with a mix of churches, businesses, and vacant buildings, Providence House serves more than fifty families daily. It provides or accesses comprehensive support services from the community to help families gain the resources necessary to reach their highest self-sufficiency and move to permanent independent living. Begun as a mission of First Presbyterian Church, Shreveport, Providence House now functions as an ecumenical, community-wide collaboration of most expressions of the faith community and the private sector. An eighteen-year-old program, it started as an emergency shelter but began addressing the need for long-term solutions fifteen years ago. The success rate for “graduating” families is 84 percent.

A 14,000 square foot main building provides a private room for up to twenty-eight families with children; each family shares a bathroom with another family. A licensed Child Development Center serves thirty-nine preschool children daily and provides meeting space, a library, and a computer and education center. Once stabilized, the family moves into one of more than thirty scattered-site apartments available to the program; apartments are selected based on the program’s assessment of what the family will be able to afford at graduation. Apartments are fully furnished with donated furniture, household items etc. Upon graduation, the lease is transferred to the family, enabling them to remain in the community where they now reside, thus enhancing their move toward stability.

The Campus for Human Development (CHD), Nashville, Tennessee, (www.chd-nashville.org) is a service-based model in a medium-sized city. “Emphasizing the scriptural ideals of love and community through service to the homeless,” the programs offer “the grace of hospitality” and are “centered around an atmosphere of mutual respect.” The result of a 1995 merger of three organizations (some predecessor programs—food pantries, soup kitchens, etc.—go back to 1969), the program now represents an outreach ministry of more than two hundred congregations. With fellowship with the poor at the heart of its approach, CHD offers a continuum of care that provides both residential and educational programs with a focus on both emergency and long-term needs. Programs include:

- Room at the Inn: More than 150 congregations provide food, shelter, and transportation during the coldest months.
- Educational programs: Classes, ranging from Anger Management and GED Preparation to Art and Drama, are taught by volunteers.
- Respite Care: Facilities for medically frail persons to recover and assess future needs.
- Alcohol and drug treatment.
- Guest House: Around-the-clock shelter for those in substance-abuse treatment.
- Day Services: Showers, meals, clothing, work identification, case management, referrals, mail, bus passes for work, hospitality.
- Hispanic services.
- Congregational Helpline to help congregations screen requests for benevolence assistance.

CARE 66, Gallup, New Mexico, (www.care66.org) strives “to create opportunities to end homelessness” in Gallup and surrounding McKinley County in rural New Mexico. It does this by addressing both poverty (through job creation and community development) and the lack of affordable housing. CARE 66 is an abbreviation for Community Area Resource Enterprise; the “66” refers to their location on U.S. Highway 66.

The program focuses on providing transitional and supportive housing, along with case management, a daytime opportunity center, and other services leading toward self-sufficiency. A low-income housing development project will provide thirty multi-bedroom units for families, and they will soon utilize a $7 million tax credit to create additional units of housing. Enterprise creation includes a salsa-making company and other job creation, training and micro-enterprise developments. The long-term hope is that housing development and enterprise creation efforts will generate enough revenue for the program to achieve operational self-sufficiency.

Some programs are focused on a particular aspect of the cycle of homelessness or a particular portion of the homeless population. Presbyterian Senior Services Grandparent Family Apartments, Bronx, New York, (www.pssuse.org) develops and provides supportive services and programs for older adults who are raising grandchildren due to the inability or unavailability of their children to do so. Fifty apartment units (ten, three-bedroom units and forty, two-bedroom units) are available, along with social services and activities on site for both the children and the grandparents. Another such program is Interfaith House in Chicago (www.Interfaithhouse.org), which uses the crisis of illness or release from hospitalization to provide case management leading to independent living with ongoing supportive services as needed. Another program, Seventh Landing in St. Paul, Minnesota, was designed to accommodate young adults who have spent the better part of their lives moving between foster care, treatment facilities, and homeless shelters. Twelve efficiency apartments give residents needed privacy and independence; on-site supportive services include job training. On the street level, a coffee shop offers living wage job experience for residents and provides an important service to the surrounding community.

Testimony:

In 2002, Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church in Manhattan began an Overnight Shelter Ministry. With guidance from local organizations involved in homelessness, we were quickly able to organize inspections, beds, linens, toiletries, and a food budget from the city, all at no cost. Our main responsibility was to staff the shelter with volunteers. After three months of preparatory work, the shelter opened, with services available one night a week. (In collaboration with two other congregations, we are now open five nights a week and hope to expand to seven nights soon.)

It didn’t take long, however, to realize that the root causes of homelessness needed to be addressed. Luciano Kovacs at Jan Hus Presbyterian Church contacted me about creating an interfaith advocacy effort in support of affordable housing. Calling ourselves East Side Congregations for Housing Justice (ESCHJ), a broad representation of East Side religious leaders came to the table. Housing agencies quickly got wind of our organizing and joined forces with us, providing expertise and even a blueprint for ending homelessness in New York City within ten years.

The ESCHJ and the Overnight Shelter ministry feed each other. When you work night by night at the shelter level, it is easy to become overwhelmed by the staggering numbers of persons who are on the streets and the stories of individual heartache. The fact that we can take concrete steps to make significant change is energizing. It also works the other way: To know the story and see the face of a person experiencing homelessness motivates us to work even harder for systemic change.

C. Faithful Response to Homelessness Through Advocacy

... Enslaving poverty in a world of abundance is an intolerable violation of God’s good creation. Because Jesus identified himself with the needy and exploited, the cause of the world’s poor is the cause of his disciples. ... A church that is indifferent to poverty, or evades responsibility in economic affairs, or is open to one social class only, or expects gratitude for its beneficence makes a mockery of reconciliation and offers no acceptable worship to God. (“The Confession of 1967,” The Book of Confessions, 9:46c)

As Presbyterians, we are led from worship into the world where, guided by Scripture, we act out our calling as disciples of Jesus Christ. Our Book of Order is instructive:

God sends the church in the power of the Holy Spirit to exercise compassion in the world, ... feeding the hungry, ... comforting the grieving, ... caring for the sick, ... visiting the prisoners, ... freeing the captives, ... sheltering the homeless, ... befriending the lonely. ...

The call [to compassion] is accepted as the faithful respond in prayers of confession and intercession, in acts of self-offering, and in offering material goods to be shared in ministries of compassion. ...

The church is also called to engage those structures and systems which create or foster brokenness and distortion. Christians respond to these calls through acts of advocacy and compassion, through service in common ministries of the church, and through cooperation with agencies and organizations committed to these ends. (Book of Order W-7.3001–.3003)

While individual acts of mercy and compassion are well understood as “Christ-like,” and providing financial support to groups and ministries engaged in the relief of misery and injustice is common, many Christians are reluctant to become directly involved themselves. Fewer still accept the call of the gospel to “engage those structures and systems which create or foster brokenness and distortion.”<sup>17</sup> Yet as Reformed Christians, our heritage is filled with examples of such faithful engagement, and the church has again and again affirmed the efficacy of such action.<sup>18</sup> This commitment stems from a strong belief in the sovereignty of God over all aspects of life: “... No area of life—personal, social, political, or economic—is beyond [God’s] rule and redemption (UPCUSA, 1958).

As a community of discernment, the church seeks guidance for its responsibility in the world, including the public realm, through continual dialogue with the living word of God (Christ) through the witness of Holy Scriptures.<sup>19</sup> In Scripture, inescapable themes are found: The Hebrew prophets continually remind God’s people of their responsibility “to do justice ... love [mercy], and walk humbly with [their] God” (Micah 6:8) and to “let justice roll down” (Amos 5:24). They do not hesitate to speak the Word of God to the political, religious establishment. Specific warning is given to those who ignore the well-being of persons who are marginalized and oppressed.

In the New Testament, Jesus demonstrates profound continuity with the exodus tradition and the prophetic witness of the Hebrew Scriptures. In anticipation of his birth, Mary, in the Magnificat, sings of the One who has “exalted those of low degree” (Luke 1:52). Jesus draws on Isaiah’s vision, deeply rooted in the exodus, to interpret his call to ministry (Luke 4:18–19). And with the death and resurrection of Jesus come the gifts of divine healing, forgiveness, reconciliation, and empowerment. As Christ’s Body in the world, “the church is given the responsibility to discern the work of Christ in the world and for the world, and to act on what it believes faithfulness to Christ entails.”<sup>20</sup>

Part of the role of the church in relation to social witness and engagement is to call other parts of society to account and to solicit their collaboration in addressing injustice. While the church’s resources are considerable, they pale in the face of other sources, both public and private, that can be brought to bear on the needs of the world. While some would claim that tending to people who are poor and homeless is the rightful work of the church—and not the government—the religious community cannot do it all. A vital role of the church and its resources is to call government to account and to leverage governmental funds to address the agendas in which the church and the society agree action is needed. This is called advocacy.

Advocacy is needed and can be carried out at any level, from the local church to the local community and at municipal, state, regional or national levels. Sometimes, churches are drawn into advocacy by the plight of their own members. Such was the case in San Francisco’s Chinatown some years ago.

1. Testimony:

San Francisco’s Chinatown has one of the highest population densities in the country, and like much of the city, affordable housing is a huge challenge. In the 1970s, as demand for housing forced rents sky high, evictions were rampant. Rather than sleeping in the streets, senior citizens and large families squeezed into the only housing available: 8-foot by 10-foot single room occupancy (SRO) hotel rooms, with no bathrooms or kitchens.

Though small and theologically conservative, the Presbyterian Church in Chinatown (PCC) got involved in a housing ministry for two reasons: (1) housing was such a crushing need for the community, and (2) Chinatown was not getting its fair share of government support to build affordable housing.

During the late 1970s, PCC organized to push San Francisco’s Redevelopment Agency and the Department of Housing and Urban Development to create an affordable housing development in Chinatown on land available directly across the street from its historic Mission Center, Donaldina Cameron House. Working through the Chinatown Coalition for Better Housing, the church took major leadership in this communitywide effort. After months of attending zoning board hearings and other meetings, the church and the coalition were victorious.

The Mei Lun Yuen Housing Project, the first such development in Chinatown, built with funding through HUD and the city’s Redevelopment Agency, was completed in 1982. Aimed at addressing a broad need for affordable housing, the project’s 186 units include one-bedroom units for seniors, studios, and three- and four-bedroom units for families.

My own family was poor, and we found ourselves evicted, with few options for finding affordable housing. To us, the experience of our church’s struggle for affordable housing was a powerful witness for Jesus Christ; in fact, it was through this experience of the church that I chose to go to seminary. Today, twenty-five years later, the Chinatown Coalition for Better Housing continues to advocate for affordable housing. Churches can never build enough homeless shelters and affordable housing on their own. We can do a lot more by pushing our government to prioritize “food, shelter, and clothing” as a basic human right for all God’s children.

2. Municipal and State-Level Advocacy

As with direct engagement, advocacy often begins with what is obvious and at hand, and then grows in complexity. To begin, individuals and congregations can:

- Identify landlords who provide safe and affordable housing and assist families with low income to find affordable housing.
- Develop partnerships with private landlords; help agencies develop partnerships with private landlords.
- Welcome affordable housing and housing assistance programs such as shelters into their communities.
- Support shelters and other service providers when community conflicts arise over the presence of programs for persons who are homeless or of low-income.
- Assure that the congregation as an employer and members as employers pay a living wage and provide benefits.
- Encourage members who are employers, or are in a position to exert influence regarding hiring, to consider employing youth and adults reentering the workforce after being homeless or spending time in prison, drug or alcohol rehab, or a mental health facility.
- Encourage church members who own rental property to offer safe, affordable housing to their tenants.

From small beginnings such as this, advocacy can expand as issues and opportunities present themselves. Churches can then:

- Advocate for community employers to pay a living wage and offer benefits.
- Advocate for policies and resources that prevent homelessness.
- Advocate for policies and resources that address the needs of individuals and families who are homeless.
- Become involved in organizations that support mixed-income communities and inclusionary zoning policies; attend zoning board hearings and report back.
- Initiate or support efforts to develop municipal or statewide housing trust funds.
- Collaborate with existing coalitions working on issues of homelessness and affordable housing; develop communitywide coalitions to respond to issues as they emerge.
- Advocate for policies that address poverty, inequity and discrimination and aim to create communities that are just and sustainable.

More detailed descriptions of some of these suggestions follow.

3. Living Wage Campaigns

One of the ways that the church can be involved in working to prevent homelessness is through coalitions of organizations that support workers in their struggle for a living wage. Such campaigns, in which the church is one participant among many, have been mounted in numerous cities across the country. In addition to giving church support to significant organizing efforts, the presence of clergy and laity can bring emotional and spiritual support to the workers engaged in the struggle for justice.<sup>21</sup>

One such program is Clergy and Laity United For Economic Justice (CLUE), Los Angeles (www.cluela.org), an inter-faith association of more than six hundred religious leaders who came together to respond to the crisis of the working poor in Los Angeles. In 1996, religious leaders joined the effort to pass a living wage law, which mandated that businesses with city contracts must provide adequate wages and health benefits. Since the legislation passed, CLUE, working in partnership with activist unions and community organizations, has continued to channel religious support for low-wage workers. Programs include campaigns to support hotel workers, security guards, nursing home workers and residents, and grocery workers. They also support immigration reform and legislation to hold “Big Box stores” such as Wal-Mart accountable to both workers and communities.

4. Inclusionary Zoning Policies

Inclusionary zoning policies lead housing developers, through legislative mandate or development incentives, to make a percentage of units in new housing developments affordable to households with low- and moderate income. These policies have been adopted by hundreds of cities around the country and have produced thousands of units of affordable housing in mixed-income communities. Multiple studies have shown that mandatory inclusionary zoning programs do not dampen development nor decrease property values in surrounding neighborhoods. Generally, developers receive density bonuses (i.e., they are allowed to build larger buildings), tax relief, zoning variances, and/or expedited permitting to offset the costs of affordable housing production.

5. Strategies to Counteract Neighborhood Exclusivism

When communities are not inclusive, NIMBYism (Not In My Back Yard syndrome) is a major obstacle to faithful ministry with persons who are homeless or in need of affordable housing. Congregations that reach out to persons in need of housing assistance are not always located in low-income areas, and their ministry can prompt outcries from neighbors, local businesses, schools and day care providers. Fears of having “those people” in the neighborhood range from concerns about safety and disease to fears that “community values” (i.e., property values) will be adversely affected by the presence of a shelter, transitional housing, or an affordable housing development in the area.

Public forums to allow neighbors to raise their concerns are helpful and necessary. Even so, congregations and service providers can find themselves faced with bad press, hostile phone calls and letters, pickets, zoning complaints and lawsuits. All this leads to enormous legal, programmatic and emotional costs to staff, volunteers and program participants.

Agencies and congregations need to be proactive in addressing the broad concerns of the community before there is a need to seek their support for expansion or new programming. Relationships with coalitions of religious congregations and other potential community allies must be kept current. On the policy level, NIMBYism can be addressed through municipal policy reform in two areas: (1) zoning ordinance change to make “temporary housing” (e.g. shelters, transitional housing) a permitted use, and (2) human relations policy change that would prohibit discrimination against persons based on their housing status.

6. Case Study

Some years ago, Lincoln Park Presbyterian Church, located in a highly gentrified area of Chicago’s north side, undertook a major campaign to renovate its building and, in doing so, provide a permanent home for Lincoln Park Community Shelter (www.lpcsonline.org), which, for most of its twenty-two years, had rotated services among several area church buildings. Then, as plans for its building were being developed and capital campaigns for both the church and the shelter were getting underway, Lincoln Park found that a significant piece of its effort to expand its ministry with persons who are homeless would involve confronting NIMBYism.

A number of neighbors opposed the church’s becoming the base for a full-time transitional housing program. They pursued legal action and organized other neighbors. Complaints were filed with both the zoning board and the building department. Meanwhile, church leaders and shelter staff met with the alderman regularly, and neighboring churches mounted a campaign in support of the shelter’s expansion, with between 200 and 500 people present for every zoning board hearing. After a delay of nearly two years, clearance for the program was given, and construction finally began. Even so, neighbors continued to challenge both the shelter and the congregation. Spring 2007 saw the dedication of the new program—full-time, in permanent space, focused on transitional housing; intense case management, and several “On Track” programs (Substance Abuse Recovery, Mental and Physical Health, and Job Training and Employment) are provided to help participants gain stability and move toward permanent housing.

The struggle, despite exacting an extremely heavy toll on both the congregation and the shelter, brought area churches closer together in regard to both LPCS and homelessness and affordable housing issues in general. Many other community residents, including students from nearby DePaul University became involved in advocacy efforts in support of the shelter.

7. National Level Advocacy

While arenas for advocacy at the municipal, county and state levels are widely diverse, depending on locale, there are several policy directions which the Presbyterian Church (USA) at all levels is called to support at this time.

a. Investment in Local Initiatives Support Corporation (LISC)

When a not-for-profit housing development organization identifies a site and begins to amass the needed financing to construct or rehabilitate affordable housing for people with low income, there are certain predevelopment expenses that must be met in order for the project to reach fruition. Such expenses include environmental site assessments and mitigation, architectural and engineering plans, zoning assessments and the like. Most nonprofit groups do not have access to predevelopment funds, and reliance on conventional lending for these expenses can significantly drive up the cost of the project.

Help is available through intermediaries such as the Local Initiatives Support Corporation (LISC) (www.lisc.org). A national organization founded in 1980, LISC is dedicated to helping nonprofit community development organizations transform distressed neighborhoods into healthy and sustainable communities. LISC has created mechanisms to extend predevelopment loans through the underwriting of a particular project in order to assess its likelihood of success. LISC accepts investments from corporations, foundations and other institutions, which it then uses in a revolving predevelopment loan fund. Funds invested in LISC pay a determined rate of interest and are secure, risk-free investments. They also spin off significant social benefit as a concrete investment in the lives of people in desperate need of affordable housing alternatives.

The PC(USA) can participate in LISC through entities such as the Presbyterian Foundation's Creative Investment Program. Congregations are also encouraged to invest.

b. National Affordable Housing Trust Fund

The goal of the National Affordable Housing Trust Fund is to construct, rehabilitate, and preserve 1,500,000 units of housing over the next ten years. Current legislation seeks to accomplish this through a program modeled on successful, state level programs. Funding—three-quarters of which would be earmarked for families with extremely low income (below 30 percent of median income or below the national poverty level)—would be parceled out to local jurisdictions (60 percent) and states, Indian Tribes, and insular areas (40 percent), which would then award grants to entities that build and rehabilitate housing. Awards may be granted to any organization, agency, or other entity (including for-profits, nonprofits, and faith-based organizations) that has demonstrated the experience and the capacity to carry out the proposed Trust Fund activity. Within each state, a proportionate amount of funds must go to rural areas. In exchange for Trust Fund dollars, a proportionate number of units would be set aside for families with low income, thus encouraging healthy, mixed-income development.

Trust funds will be available for construction, rehabilitation, acquisition, preservation incentives (including for manufactured housing and community land trusts), and operating assistance to facilitate affordability. Funds may be used for both rental housing that is affordable and for down payment and closing cost assistance by first time homebuyers. A formula for matching funds includes a provision that up to 33 percent of the match may be provided through binding commitments to provide services for residents. The fund would be financed through contributions from government-backed mortgage programs, e.g. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, with additional revenue generated by the Federal Housing Administration, which insures mortgages.

c. Budget Priorities and Adequate Revenue

Adequate municipal, state and federal revenue is key to the availability of housing assistance and comprehensive supportive services for persons who are homeless or at risk of homelessness. Tax cuts constitute the single largest contributor to budget deficits. The Center for Budget and Policy Priorities notes that, "tax cuts just for the top one percent of taxpayers (people with incomes exceeding $402,000 in 2006) will cost nearly twice as much as HUD's entire budget."<sup>22</sup> HUD support for low-income housing assistance programs has deteriorated since 1980; continued budget deficits will exacerbate this ongoing problem.

d. "Smart Growth" Development and "Green" Construction

Another budget prioritization factor that affects the availability of affordable housing is "Smart Growth," an urban planning and transportation theory that concentrates growth in order to avoid urban sprawl and advocates compact, transit-oriented land use, including mixed-use development with a range of housing choices, including affordable housing. "Smart Growth" values long-range, regional considerations of sustainability over a short-term focus on profits. Locating people near jobs, shopping, and each other has a positive impact on travel time, transportation infrastructure costs, the environment, and personal/community life. Beyond community planning, "green design" incorporates environmental responsibility within the design and construction of particular buildings. Policy that provides financial incentives and tax credits to developers to encourage affordable housing development utilizing "green" design and construction methods within mixed-use and "Smart Growth" development, without leading to gentrification, is recommended as a way to enhance the growth of just and sustainable communities.

e. Taxation

As discussed earlier in this paper, most Americans believe that government-based housing assistance, i.e. housing assistance utilizing tax dollars, is aimed primarily at families with low income and involves programs of the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) and local housing authorities. In actuality, the majority of housing assistance in the United States comes through tax breaks such as the Home Mortgage Interest Deduction (HMID), deductions for state and local property taxes, and the capital gains exclusion for home sales, which only benefit homeowners.

According to the Center for Budget and Policy Priorities, these tax breaks cost the federal treasury an estimated $154 billion in 2006. Furthermore, 80 percent of the 2006 tax benefits of the Homeowners Mortgage Interest Deduction went to households in the highest income quintile.<sup>23</sup> As of 2005, homeowners could deduct mortgage interest on two homes, up to a loan value of $1.1 million; they could also deduct interest on home equity loans up to $100,000.<sup>24</sup> In the meanwhile, half of all homeowners do not claim itemized deductions because their mortgage interest is less than the standard deduction. Tenants, of course, do not qualify. Thus, while the majority of homeowners, those with low- and moderate income, cannot deduct interest on even one home, those who are rich can deduct interest on two.

A better approach would be to replace the HMID deduction with a fifteen percent refundable Home Tax Credit, which would encourage homeownership, distribute tax benefits more equitably, and help significantly more homeowners with low- and moderate income. Structured as a refundable credit, which a household would receive even if it has no tax liability, it is estimated that this approach would increase the percentage of homeowners receiving tax benefits for home ownership from 54 percent to 90 percent.

A targeted Rental Rebate Tax Credit at the state level would provide similar assistance to tenants, who do not qualify for any such assistance under current policy.

Increasing family income is an important part of any comprehensive strategy to make housing more affordable for families with low income. Changes in tax law in recent years have exacerbated the problem of rising inequity; tax credits can provide good remedies for households adversely affected by those changes.

One approach would expand the refundable Child Tax Credit by reducing the income threshold so it reaches more families with very low income. The current income threshold—$11,750 in 2007—excludes ten million children whose families are too poor to claim the credit. The threshold rises with inflation, which increases the tax burden on the poor and drops many families from the benefit altogether. According to the Tax Policy Center, in 2005 half of all African American children, 46 percent of Hispanic children, and 18 percent of white children received either no Child Tax Credit or a reduced amount because their families' earnings were too low. Lowering the income threshold on the refundable Child Tax Credit would allow millions of children and families with the greatest need to receive at least some portion of the credit, allowing them to better provide for life necessities including housing.

Another approach would expand the Earned Income Tax Credit to include workers who are not living with children. According to the Center for Budget Policies and Priorities, adults with no children are the only group of working tax filers who begin to owe federal income taxes before their incomes reach the poverty line. In 2006, workers in this group, though eligible for a maximum $412 credit, received an average of only $230. Increasing the amount of the credit for workers with low income who are not living with children would increase work incentives and economic security for millions of Americans.

f. The Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher Program

Unaffordable housing is a primary cause of homelessness. HUD's Section 8 Housing Choice Voucher program, the nation's largest low-income housing assistance program, provides rental assistance to nearly two million households. Vouchers, available through local housing authorities, allow families to rent apartments in the private market at no more than 30 percent of household income; the housing authority pays the balance of the full market rent to the landlord. About 60 percent of households using vouchers are families with children; nearly one-third include people who are elderly or have disabilities. Because vouchers are portable, they provide families with opportunities to assert greater independence and choice about where they wish to live.

Despite being widely recognized as a very cost-effective way to house families with low income, the program has suffered significant setbacks over the past three years, and about 150,000 vouchers were cut nationwide between February 2004 and August 2006.<sup>25</sup>

Advocates are hoping to strengthen the current program by raising payment standards, increasing access to housing, and authorizing new incremental vouchers. Ongoing advocacy to retain and expand the Section 8 Program is a continuing priority.

g. Preservation of Existing Affordable Housing

Thousands of units of housing for families with extremely low income are being lost every year to decay, demolition, gentrification, the expiration of government contracts, and other factors. The preservation and revitalization of the 2.5 million units of affordable housing funded under the Public Housing and Project-Based Section 8 programs is an essential part of addressing the crisis of affordable housing. It is also essential that housing destroyed through community development initiatives be replaced with housing that is affordable to persons with extremely low income.

h. Supportive Housing

Supportive Housing—permanent, affordable housing linked to services—provides people with low income, disabilities, or a history of homelessness the help and support they need to stay housed and live more independent, healthy and fulfilling lives. Supportive housing is the single most effective way to reduce homelessness for persons with special needs. It strengthens communities and helps integrate people with disabilities and other special needs into the life of their neighborhoods. Further, numerous studies attest to the cost-effectiveness of supportive housing. Not only is it significantly less expensive than the institutional alternatives that people who are homeless and disabled often cycle through—including shelters, institutions, and hospitals—but it also ends tenants' dependence on emergency services for health care and treatment. Moreover, it offers persons who are formerly homeless the dignity of life in community, highlighting the values of interdependence and recovery from the experience of being homeless.

i. The McKinney-Vento Act

The McKinney-Vento Act, through numerous revisions, has been the primary source of federal support for services to persons who are homeless for over twenty years. A comprehensive national strategy for ending homelessness at its root causes depends on the continuation of and increased investment in such legislation. Amendments that would increase flexibility in program administration and make programs more performance-based would improve the Act's ability to move people out of the cycle of homelessness into permanent housing.

j. Department of Health and Human Services

While most programs aimed at assisting persons who are homeless or at risk of becoming homeless have been centered in the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) is also involved in some services for such persons. In order to better serve people who are homeless in this country, HHS must become a full partner in the effort to end chronic homelessness and meet the services needs of all persons experiencing homelessness. Programs such as, but not limited to, Project for Assistance in Transition from Homelessness (PATH) and Health-care for the Homeless must receive adequate funding and provide linkage with affordable and supportive housing programs administered through other governmental departments.

k. Veterans Administration

Large numbers of persons experiencing homelessness in this country are veterans. While Vietnam era veterans tended to become homeless a decade after leaving the military, many veterans returning from service in Iraq and Afghanistan have sought housing assistance almost immediately. The role of the Veteran's Administration (VA) in helping to fund supportive housing for veterans who are at risk of long-term homelessness must be expanded. Legislation is also needed to expand VA programs for veterans who are homeless to include funding for permanent housing and the creation of innovative new models for service, including programs to help reintegrate returning veterans into the community, encourage partnerships between the VA and community-based organizations, and link permanent housing for veterans with special needs and their families with supportive services.

l. Community Reentry Programs

Each year thousands of persons reenter American communities from jails and prisons. Many suffer from mental illness or are in other ways at risk of becoming homeless and/or returning to prison. Federal funding is critically needed to help communities prevent and end homelessness for people with special needs who are reentering communities from jails and prisons. Funding that would provide housing and services for prisoners reentering the community must be renewed and expanded. Expansion of programs that fund supportive housing targeted to people who are homeless with mental illness, who often cycle between the streets and shelters and jails or prisons, is also needed.

m. Restoration of Flexible Federal Funding to States, Cities, and Counties

Many programs that offered federal funding to states, cities, and counties, enabling them to define their own priorities and enhance funding for affordable housing and supportive services as part of their comprehensive plans to prevent and end homelessness, have been eroded or abolished in recent years. These include but are not limited to HUD's Community Development Block Grant Program, Home Investment Partnership Program (HOME), Supportive Housing for the Elderly Program (Section 202), and Supportive Housing for Persons with Disabilities (Section 811), as well as Medicaid, and other grants to states and localities. This flexible funding is critical and must be restored.

n. Subprime Mortgage Lending Market

Subprime mortgages are a relatively new and rapidly growing segment of the mortgage market. While expanding home ownership opportunities for persons who might otherwise not be able to finance home purchases, this expanded opportunity has come at a cost. Unscrupulous lenders often hide the true cost of subprime loans from unsophisticated borrowers.<sup>26</sup> When an initial period at a low "teaser" rate is complete, monthly payments increase dramatically, often putting homeowners at risk for foreclosure or even homelessness. In 2007, there were $1.3 trillion in subprime loans outstanding, up from $65 billion in 1995 and $332 billion in 2003.<sup>27</sup>

During 2007 and 2008, 1.8 million hybrid Adjustable Rate Mortgages (ARMS) are due to be reset. The weakening housing market environment plus the vulnerability of many holders of these mortgages will lead to even more foreclosures, especially among the families and older adults with low income who are targeted for such loans. As these persons are forced out of their homes, the demand for affordable rental housing increases, putting further strain on an already inadequate affordable housing market. Foreclosure prevention programs cost approximately $3,300 per household and have obvious social benefit. Conversely, households and their communities lose an estimated $80,000 when foreclosures are carried out.<sup>28</sup>

Policy responses to the subprime crisis should be designed to correct the abuses in this market, prevent future foreclosures, and create a safety net for families who have fallen victim to subprime lending.

V. Conclusion

As Presbyterians, led from worship into the world, we are guided by Scripture and act out our calling as disciples of Jesus Christ. In this time we are called to respond to the crisis of homelessness and affordable housing which, despite many programs and approaches aimed at ending homelessness, is still with us. Nevertheless, it is at last becoming clear what is needed. Each person or family experiencing homelessness (1) must be treated with dignity and respect and offered hospitality and welcome to permanent housing, and (2) must have access to the necessary resources and services to enable them to meet their needs and be able to maintain housing. The path from homelessness to hope is challenging, but the church is called to respond to this crisis with all its resources—people, property, influence, advocacy, energy and finances—as it works to construct just, sustainable communities for all God's people.

The commission was founded in 1991 to educate lawyers and the public about legal and other problems of people who are poor and/or homeless and to train lawyers to provide pro bono assistance to persons who are homeless or at risk of becoming homeless. Issues addressed include education of children who are homeless and strategies for addressing NIMBYism (Not In My Back Yard syndrome).

Recognizing that homelessness is affected by factors that cut across federal agencies and programs (e.g., housing costs, job readiness, education, mental health), the goal of ICH is to develop a comprehensive approach to ending homelessness within the federal government itself. One section of their website shares experiences of innovative approaches to a variety of issues related to homelessness. It also lists every state or community that has developed a Ten Year Plan to End Homelessness.

Interfaith Worker Justice (IWJ): www.iwj.org

The IWJ is a network of people of faith that strives to educate, organize, and mobilize the religious community in the U.S. on issues and campaigns that will improve wages, benefits and conditions for workers and give voice to workers, especially those of low income.

National Alliance to End Homelessness: www.endhomelessness.org

A leading voice on issues of homelessness, the alliance analyzes policy and develops pragmatic, cost-effective policy solutions. They work collaboratively with public, private, and nonprofit sectors to build state and local capacity, leading to stronger programs and policies to help communities end homelessness. They also provide data and research to policymakers in order to inform the debate and educate both the public and opinion makers. Their document “A Plan, Not a Dream: How to End Homelessness in Ten Years” sparked a major movement toward a coordinated, service-based approach and the development of Ten Year Plans in communities throughout the nation.

The National Association for the Education of Homeless Children and Youth www.naehcy.org

National Center for Homeless Education (NCHE): www.serve.org/nche

The NCHE provides research, resources and information to help communities address the educational needs of children experiencing homelessness. It is related to SERVE, a U.S. Department of Education program associated with the School of Education at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

National Funders Group: www.nfg.org/

This U.S. network of foundations and other philanthropic organization, while not a grant making organization itself, supports community-based efforts to improve economic and social conditions in low-income communities through research, analysis and other services. Publications, several of which focus on homelessness and affordable housing issues, may be downloaded or ordered in hard copy.

National Law Center on Homelessness and Poverty: ww.nlchp.org

Operating as the legal arm of the nationwide movement to end homelessness, the center works to (1) impact litigation, (2) advocate for effective policy, and (3) educate the public about both the root causes of and solutions to homelessness. Issues they address include housing, domestic violence, income, and children and youth.

The National Low-Income Housing Coalition: www.nlihc.org

This organization is dedicated to ending America's affordable housing crisis, a problem they feel Americans are capable of solving. Their focus is on those with the most serious housing problems, households with the lowest income. They also have state level organizations throughout the US. An annual web resource ("Out of Reach 2006" is the latest) outlines affordability housing issues.

The National Network for Youth: www.nn4youth.org

This thirty-year-old network works with not-for-profits and advocacy groups on education, training, materials and policy for youth who are homeless and/or in poverty. Their mission is to champion the needs of runaway, homeless and other disconnected youth through advocacy, innovation and services, one community at a time.

The National Policy and Advocacy Council on Homelessness: www.npach.org.

The mission of this grassroots antipoverty organization is to ensure that national homelessness policy accurately reflects the needs and experiences of local communities. Their website links to other groups, including national faith-based national efforts.

Policy Link <http://www.policylink.org/EDTK>

While largely concerned with issues of health care, the RWJF has been a major participant in research and the development of significant initiatives in health-related aspects of supportive housing programs.

Smart Growth Online: www.smartgrowth.org

This web-based catalogue of "Smart Growth"-related news, events, information and research is a service of the Smart Growth Network, which was founded in 1996 as a collaboration between the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and various environmental and professional groups and governmental entities. #### Books and Journals

A Work of Hospitality: The Open Door Reader 1982-2002, Peter R. Gathje, ed., The Open Door Community, 910 Ponce de Leon Ave NE, Atlanta, GA 30306-4212, $15 donation if possible. The Open Door Community in Atlanta, founded in 1981, has gained notoriety for its street actions on behalf of Atlanta's homeless, inmates on Georgia's Death Row, and the primarily poor patrons at Grady Memorial Hospital. In this anthology of pieces from their longstanding newsletter, the theme of hospitality, in one form or another, plays through sections on homelessness, work with prisoners, sacrament, the community's saints and martyrs, and the theology of hospitality.

Cityscape: A Journal of Policy Development and Research, Office of Policy Development and Research, U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (published three times a year, each issue is devoted to various perspectives on a topic; individual articles or the entire issue may be downloaded from www.huduser.org or a hard copy may be purchased for $5.00).

Community and Growth: Our Pilgrimage Together, by Jean Vanier, Paulist Press (revised ed) 1989.

People need companions, friends with whom they can share their lives, their vision and their ideals. In short, they need community. This classic book is a series of "starting points for reflection" on the nature and meaning of community by the founder of l'Arche community for persons who are mentally-handicapped and their helpers.

Ending Poverty in America: How to Restore the American Dream, edited by John Edwards, New Press, 2007, $25.95.

Published in conjunction with one of the country's leading anti-poverty centers, the Center on Poverty, Work and Opportunity in Chapel Hill, NC, this book brings together respected social scientists, journalists, activists and business leaders, both liberal and conservative, to explain why poverty is growing and outline concrete steps that can be taken to start turning the tide.

Making Room: Recovering Hospitality as a Christian Tradition, by Christine D. Pohl, Wm. B. Eerdmans, 1999. For centuries, practicing hospitality was central to Christian identity, yet our generation knows little about this rich, life-giving spiritual practice. Pohl combines biblical and historical research with a look at contemporary communities of hospitality. A Study Guide by Pohl and Pamela J. Buck (2001) provides discussion questions, activities and further resources to assist readers and small groups.

NIMBY: A Primer for Lawyers and Advocates, American Bar Association, Commission on Homelessness and Poverty ($10, order form is available online at abanet.org). This book discusses the potential roadblocks that come into play when establishing a facility such as a shelter, group home, or soup kitchen in a community. The book addresses the issues and possible reaction within the community, tips on how to work with the community, the zoning process, and the legal tools to combat NIMBY attitudes and exclusionary zoning ordinances.

Religious Collaboratives for Social Justice, by Nile Harper, Wm. B. Eerdmans (forthcoming June 2008). This book provides ten case studies (local, regional and national) of collaborative movements that resulted in significant social change. The Living Wage Campaign and several efforts around affordable housing are represented.

Urban Churches, Vital Signs: Beyond Charity Toward Justice, by Nile Harper, Wm B Eerdmans, 1998, 2005. This book, now out of print but available through Amazon.com, presents case studies of 28 congregations that are deeply involved in their community in ways that move from a charity/ service orientation to one of justice. The marks of a justice orientation include: a focus on public policy; investment for the long haul; long-term improvement for large sectors of society; efforts directed to basic/root causes of injustice; goals focused on change in policy/priorities, structures/institutions; participant engagement in self-development and empowerment; involvement requires time, risk, hard work, compromise and financial resources—and may lead to conflict.

What Every Church Member Should Know About Poverty; A Framework for Understanding Poverty; Hidden Rules of Class at Work, by Bill Ehlig and Ruby K. Payne, aha! Process, Inc, 1999, 143 p. Available from Amazon or www.rubypayne-poverty.com. Congregations, though often perceived as open, welcoming environments, can be inhospitable to people from poverty. The authors illustrate the way people from poverty view middle-class churches—and how to change those perceptions; they also provide approaches for teaching church members and leaders some of the special considerations that can be afforded persons who are economically disadvantaged.

Research and Resources on Homelessness and Affordable Housing

“‘. . . A Stranger and You Invited Me In’; Affordable Housing Advocacy for Presbyterians,” by Erin Hoekstra and Bill Emerson, Presbyterian Washington Office. Available at www.pcusa.org/washington or www.pcusa.org/smallchurch/housingsunday.

This resource includes updated statistics on homelessness, brief articles on links between housing and wages and housing and hunger, an annotated list of Federal Housing Programs, Programs at Risk in the federal budget, and “Housing Advocacy 101,” a quick guide to advocacy on local, state and federal levels.

Christian and Citizen, Presbyterian Church (USA), Public Policy Advocacy Team, edited by the Presbyterian Washington Office (www.pcusa.org/Washington/christiancitizen/newstudyguide/pdf).

Updated after each General Assembly, this extensive resource provides: (1) a theological and biblical framework for Christian public witness, and (2) a sampling of church statements on major policy issues that may be at stake in upcoming local and national elections.

Hate, Violence and Death on Main Street USA: A Report on Hate Crime and Violence Against People Experiencing Homelessness, 2006, National Coalition for the Homeless (download from NCH at www.nationalhomeless.org or order a hard copy for $10 + $2.75 shipping/handling).

During the last eight years, in 200 cities in 44 states and Puerto Rico, 614 violent acts have been committed against homeless individuals; this violence has resulted in 189 deaths. This report updates and documents the situation and draws attention to a clear correlation between homeless-directed violence and efforts by cities to criminalize homelessness.

“Homelessness: The Church Responds to an Enduring Tragedy,” Church & Society Magazine (91:5) May/June 2001. Available through Presbyterian Distribution Services, 1-800-524-2612 (PDS 72-630-01-603, $2.50 plus shipping) or order via website: www.pcusa.org/churchandsociety.

“The Link between Housing Affordability and Growth Management: The Academic Evidence,” Anthony Downs, ed, Brookings Institution, 2002.

Critics of growth management accuse it of driving up housing prices. However, this study found that families with lower- and lower-middle income are often priced out of housing in areas that lack growth-management measures. Indeed, they frequently are deliberately screened out through exclusionary zoning practices. The authors conclude that “Smart Growth” policies that attempt to ensure each jurisdiction provides its fair share of affordable, workforce housing can mitigate against these problems. Related material, based on a Brookings symposium, is available in book form as Growth Management and Affordable Housing: Do They Conflict? (2004).

“State of the Nation’s Housing 2007,” Joint Center for Housing Studies, Harvard University (www.jchs.harvard.edu/son/index.htm).

This report is an analysis of the 2006 turnaround in the U.S. housing market, which led to high inventories of unsold homes and record numbers of foreclosures, while affordability remained a pervasive problem. Remedies, they say, will require an unlikely combination of structural and public policy shifts at state, local and federal levels, as well as sufficient economic growth to dramatically lift the real income and wealth of the bottom quarter of households.

Additional Models of Comprehensive Service Organizations

Bridge of Hope, Exton, PA (<http://www.bridgeofhopeinc.org/template/index.cfm>)

“Ending and preventing homelessness one church and one family at a time.” Bridge of Hope’s focus is to move single women and their children out of homelessness to wholeness by calling the church into action. A staff person and a mentoring group of eight to ten persons covenant to work with a family for twelve to eighteen months; intensive case management and housing assistance is provided, along with ongoing support as the family moves toward goals such as permanent housing, financial self-sufficiency, growth and wholeness. Their website provides information on how to start a Bridge of Hope program in your congregation or community.

Committee on Temporary Shelter (COTS), Burlington, VT, www.cotsonline.org/

From humble beginnings in 1982, COTS has become a comprehensive program providing a full range of services of families and individuals who are marginally housed or homeless. In the process, several historic buildings in Burlington have been preserved and given new life in the service of area persons with low income. They also work in collaboration with other groups to address issues of affordable housing.

The Open Table, Paradise Valley, Arizona (www.theopentable.org)

A Methodist church near Phoenix, Arizona welcomed a man from a nearby shelter into worship, and then gathered members with various connections in the community to work with him until he was housed and able to live independently. “The Open

Table” model, which works to move persons suggested by area shelters “from homelessness to wholeness one life at a time,” has spread to many other congregations. A “Get Started Manual” and other resources are available to interested groups.

Weingart Center, Institute for the Study of Homelessness and Poverty, Los Angeles <http://www.weingart.org/>

Based in an eleven-story former Skid Row Hotel, the Weingart Center is a comprehensive one-stop service center for homeless men and women in Los Angeles. Its aim is to provide innovative solutions to break the cycle of homelessness and end poverty. The center can house 600 clients nightly in fully furnished rooms and dormitories. A variety of other programs, including a medical clinic, meals, a drop-in center for inebriates, long-term alcohol recovery, and extensive case management, are also available.

APPENDIX A

Members of the Homelessness Work Group included: Dr. Marilyn Bruin, St. Paul, Minnesota; the Reverend Norman Fong, San Francisco; Simone Hennessee, Shreveport, Louisiana; Elder Howard Jackson, Baltimore; the Reverend Laura Jervis, New York City (chair); Dr. Gail Russell, Chicago; Dr. Laura Stivers, Misenheimer, North Carolina; and Donna C. #### ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 09-07 Homelessness to Hope: Just, Sustainable Communities for All God’s People.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 09-07 be approved.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 09-07 is the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s “From Homelessness to Hope: Constructing Just, Sustainable Communities for All God’s People” report.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises that Item 09-07 be approved.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns recognizes the damaging and lasting affects that homelessness has on families, especially on women and children. Additionally, ACWC is concerned about the undeniable links between intimate partner violence and homelessness. The National Coalition for the Homeless in 2007 reported that women often experience homelessness resulting out of the need to leave abusive and violent relationships. They state that:

- Battered women who live in poverty are often forced to choose between abusive relationships and homelessness.
- In a study of 777 homeless parents (the majority of whom were mothers) in ten U.S. cities, 22% said they had left their last place of residence because of domestic violence (Homes for the Homeless, 1998).

- A 2003 survey of 100 homeless mothers in 10 locations around the country found that 25% of the women had been physically abused in the last year (American Civil Liberties Union, 2004).
- In addition, 50% of the 24 cities surveyed by the U.S. Conference of Mayors identified domestic violence as a primary cause of homelessness (U.S. Conference of Mayors, 2005).
- Studying the entire country, though, reveals that the problem is even more serious. Nationally, approximately half of all women and children experiencing homelessness are fleeing domestic violence (Zorza, 1991; National Coalition Against Domestic Violence, 2001).

The ACWC is encouraged by this report to help address this important issue.

COGA AND GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-07

Comment on Item 09-07—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC).

In order to be good stewards of our resources, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council urge the 218th General Assembly (2008) not to make exceptions to Standing Rule H.2.a.(12).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council remind commissioners and advisory delegates of Standing Rule H.2.a.(12), which reads: “(12) As soon as practicable after the adjournment of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish the assembly’s proceedings and other documents as the assembly may direct in an appropriate format (i.e. print or electronic) to be determined by the Stated Clerk.”

This rule was added to Manual of the General Assembly several years ago to help control expenses and maximize distribution of documents.

If the General Assembly decides to make an exception to the rule, it will be necessary for the assembly to suspend the Standing Rules, which requires a 2/3 affirmative vote of the total enrollment of commissioners.

Item 09-08

[The assembly approved Item 09-08 as amended. See pp. 54, 55.]

God’s Work in Women’s Hands: Pay Equity and Just Compensation

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do the following:

1. As “the provisional demonstration of what God intends for all of humanity” (Book of Order, G-3.0200), that the 218th General Assembly (2008) commend the PC(USA)’s commitment to the equality of women in society and church, to ending discrimination against women, and to economic justice for women through “equal pay for jobs of comparable worth” (Minutes, 1984, Part I, p. 508).

2. As a demonstration of “the new reality in Christ” through “the quality of its common life” (Book of Order, G-3.0300c(2)), that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following recommendations to uncover and correct unjustified pay disparities in the church caused by gender and/or race stereotypes:

a. That local congregations participate in the PC(USA)’s goal of assuring gender equity in pay by doing the following:

(1) fully completing and submitting in a timely manner the Session Annual Statistical Report and the Change in Terms of Call;

(2) using the data and tools of their presbytery, and the counsel of the committee on ministry, to evaluate the equity of their level of clergy compensation, with particular regard to women clergy and racial/ethnic clergy;

(3) assuring that unjustified pay disparities do not exist between male and female employees or white and racial/ethnic employees who are doing comparable work;

(4) prorating the compensation and benefits of part-time workers with full-time equivalents; and

(5) where women clergy are not employed, providing the congregation with the experience of women clergy leadership by, for example, inviting women clergy to serve as pulpit supply and in other leadership capacities.

b. That presbyteries participate in the PC(USA)'s goal of assuring gender equity in pay by doing the following:

(1) reviewing annually the terms of call of pastors in order to assess whether stereotypical patterns about race, ethnicity, and gender unfairly affect terms or task assignments;

(2) using evaluative tools to be provided by the Office of Vocation to determine if unjustified pay disparities exist among clergy of the presbytery due to gender or race/ethnicity;

(3) aiding congregations in their understanding of pay equity issues, including ways that inequitable compensation contributes to differential impacts on families of all racial/ethnic backgrounds;

(4) developing an annual report to the presbytery identifying the ratio of gender representation by staff position (including support staff) in small-, medium-, and large-sized congregations;

(5) setting progressive goals toward equal gender and racial/ethnic representation at all levels of church leadership within the presbytery;

(6) using the tools of a pay equity study to determine whether unjustified pay disparities exist among the presbytery's male and female employees or white and racial/ethnic employees who are doing comparable work; and

(7) establishing mentoring programs in Committees on Preparation for Ministry for women candidates.

c. That the Board of Pensions (BOP) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) participate in the PC(USA)'s goal of assuring gender equity in pay for clergy by providing the following data from members' annual reports to entities of the PC(USA) as requested for pay equity studies: total effective salary, gender and race/ethnicity of clergy member, year of ordination, position held, part-time or full-time, presbytery and size of congregation served.

d. That the Presbyterian Foundation (FDN), Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC), Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), and Board of Pensions (BOP) participate in the PC(USA)'s goal of assuring gender equity in pay for its employees by providing the following data to entities of the PC(USA) as requested for pay equity studies: salary, position held, part-time or full-time, gender and race/ethnicity, date of hire, and highest level of educational achievement.

e. That the General Assembly Council (GAC) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) participate in the PC(USA)'s goal of assuring gender equity in pay for its employees, including mission personnel, by providing the following data to entities of the PC(USA) as requested for pay equity studies: salary, position held, part-time or full-time, gender and race/ethnicity, date of hire, and highest level of educational achievement.

f. That the Office of Vocation, in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC), presbyteries, and congregations, participate in the PC(USA)'s goal of assuring gender equity in pay for clergy by developing by 2010 a tool to enable presbyteries' committees on ministry to analyze clergy terms of call and compensation offers for pay equity purposes; and that this tool be placed on the PC(USA) Website that would include a place for presbyteries' committees on ministry accessing the tool to register their interest; and that the Office of Vocation report on the use of this tool to each General Assembly through 2020.

g. That the Office of Vocation, in consultation with the Office for Cultural Proficiency, participate in the PC(USA)'s goal of assuring gender equity in pay for clergy by developing and providing on-going training modules for committees on ministry and the councils of presbyteries and synods with regard to gender and racial/ethnic sensitivity in hiring and employment practices. Such training modules should include the identification of discriminatory questions and stereotypical assumptions in interviews about women's abilities to fulfill essential aspects of the position as well as ways to ensure that task assignments do not disproportionately assign women clergy to caring and nurturing activities and men to decision-making and leadership positions; and that this guidance be placed on the PC(USA)'s Website; and that the Office of Vocation report on its development and promotion to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

h. That the Office of Vocation and Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), participate in the PC(USA)’s goal of assuring gender pay equity by designing a program for women clergy interested in preparing to serve as heads of staff; and that the Office of Vocation report on this program to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

i. That the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in consultation with Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry Area and the Office of Vocation, update the PC(USA)’s 1983 “Theology of Compensation” report (Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp. 82, 116, 689–704) to provide theological guidance to church and society with regard particularly to the impact of secular market assumptions on the compensation practices of the PC(USA).

j. That the Human Resources Department and the Offices of Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) and other appropriate entities, participate in the PC(USA)’s goal of assuring gender pay equity by conducting a pay equity study covering the employees of the General Assembly Council (GAC) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and report the results of this study to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

k. That seminaries[, Presbyterian colleges, universities, and schools (as listed in Item 12-06)] participate in the PC(USA)’s goal of assuring gender equality by implementing a pay equity study for seminary employees and by developing educational opportunities, including curricular content and continuing education programs, to prepare women clergy to serve at all levels of church leadership.

l. That Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) participate in the PC(USA)’s goal of assuring gender pay equity by including pay equity and equal gender representation as criteria in its evaluation and monitoring of the businesses in which the church invests.

m. That the Theology, Worship, and Education Ministry Area, in consultation with Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, prepare and distribute a user-friendly instrument based on the Reformed tenets of our faith for helping congregations achieve racial, ethnic, and gender justice in compensation and other employment issues.

n. That Presbyterian retirement centers review criteria for residence to assure that women are not disadvantaged.

o. That the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly communicate the PC(USA)’s appreciation to the World Council of Churches (WCC) and the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) for their global efforts on behalf of women’s equality.

3. For the “promotion of social righteousness, and the exhibition of the Kingdom of Heaven to the world” (Book of Order, G-1.0200), that the 218th General Assembly (2008) commend the PC(USA)’s commitment to women’s equality in society by a. recommitting itself to the support of institutional policies and legislation that would:

- (1) expand women’s civil protections to include equal pay for work of comparable worth;
- (2) provide prorated compensation and benefits for part-time employees;
- (3) heal work/family conflict through adequate financial support for those providing childcare and elder care, more flexible work hours, paid medical and family leave, family-supporting wages for all workers, and universal access to quality health care;
- (4) establish quality education as a basic human right;
- (5) uncover and eliminate racial bias in hiring and employment practices;
- (6) reduce the growing inequality in wages, benefits, and wealth; and

b. directing the Presbyterian Washington Office (PWO) and the Presbyterian United Nations Office (PUNO) to advocate for ratification of the Equal Remuneration Convention;

c. urging synods, presbyteries congregations, and individuals to advocate for local, state, and federal legislation that support these policies; and

d. directing the Stated Clerk to publish the entire report, “God’s Work in Women’s Hands,” in the Minutes and the Office of the General Assembly to place the report on the PC(USA)’s Website.

Rationale

I. Introduction

This report is in response to a referral (Overture 99-17. On Affirming the Equality of Women and Men—From the Presbytery of North Puget Sound [Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 80, 591–93]) from the 211th General Assembly (1999). That assembly “requested the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns to initiate a church wide study on the current status of women in the church and society, with particular attention to issues of aging women, pay equity, child care, family/medical leave, and relations between women and men in places of work, home, and family; with a report and any relevant action to be brought to the 214th General Assembly (2002)” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp.80, 591). Having addressed the other issues in subsequent years, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, convened a resolution team on pay equity in 2007. Members of the resolution team included: Gloria Albrecht (who served as consultant and primary writer), Esperanza Guajardo (chair), Andy Jacob, Vicky Lovell, Donna Misterly, Kirk P. Perucca, and Sandra Robertson.

Staff to the team were Molly Casteel, associate for Women’s Advocacy, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns; and Belinda M. Curry, associate for policy development and interpretation for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The goal of realizing equity in the church and the world for all of God’s children is sealed in Scripture, rooted in the Reformed tradition, and consistently mandated in Presbyterian policy statements. From its founding, God’s church has been called to provide a prophetic witness wherever and whenever equity remains unrealized. Whenever there are patterns of inequality that profoundly distort what is equitable—what people deserve and need to sustain themselves—not necessarily strict equality, then both the witness and the unity of the church are at stake.

In the church and in the world today there is a disturbing disparity in how people who work are compensated for their labor. Particularly distressing is the pay disparity that exists based on gender and race/ethnicity. As people who believe and proclaim that vocation is a gift from God, pay inequity stands as a sinful violation of God’s covenant with all of humanity.

The above recommendations provide steps in the journey toward realizing pay equity for all women in both church and society. They are being offered faithfully, humbly, and hopefully: that they will help lead and guide our church and world in a prophetic witness for just compensation for all women.

In this paper the term “women” refers to all females of all races or ethnicities unless otherwise specified. While the expressions of racism and sexism are distinct, they become intricately entangled in the lives of women of color and impossible to separate. However, addressing the full range of issues raised by racial and ethnic discrimination, especially as it affects men as well as women, is beyond the mandate and capacities of this Resolution Team.<sup>1</sup> The Team has, however, documented the unjustified disparities that exist between white women and women of color, particularly African American women, as experienced in access to jobs and in wages. Living in the fullness of Christ requires that the experience of white women not be taken as the experience of all women. Nor are the experiences of African American women the same as those of other racial/ethnic women. Limitations in research limit the data that is available for some racial/ethnic groups. For purposes of this paper the term “white” refers to people of any European heritage. The team is aware that these terms do not accurately reflect the experiences of many people with multiple racial or ethnic heritages.

II. Biblical and Theological Foundations in the Reformed Tradition

Twice in the gospel accounts of the life of Jesus Christ does the Savior weep. In the Gospel of John, Jesus sheds tears of compassion while standing with Mary over the lifeless body of her brother Lazarus. He arrived in response to her desperate plea to intervene in the cycle of life and death. In his account of this event, John is very clear: Jesus’ tears are the product of his being “greatly disturbed in spirit and deeply moved” (John 11:33, NRSV). The account goes on to suggest that Jesus’ deep compassion is the result of his even deeper relationship with Mary, Martha, and Lazarus. Like Jesus, we have an immense capacity for compassion. And, also like Jesus, our compassion is often sparked by the pain we experience through others with whom we are in deep and abiding relationships.

The Gospel of Luke provides the other ground nourished by the tears of Jesus. On the brow of a hill overlooking Jerusalem as he prepares to descend on Palm Sunday, Jesus weeps for the city. Through his cloud of tears Jesus says, “If you, even you, had only recognized on this day the things that make for peace!” (Luke 19:42, NRSV).

In contrast to his compassion at the tomb of Lazarus, these Palm Sunday tears are not produced by the pain from an individual, personal relationship. They are rather the expression of the anguish—even anger—in witnessing corporate and systemic oppression and injustice in the wider community. Jesus’ Palm Sunday tears mark how far the world is from God’s plan for an abundant creation in which all is shared with justice and equity. In the following pages, facts, statistics, trends, and stories serve as markers for how far the world and the church are from sharing God’s abundant creation equitably.

So, why this meditation on the tears and compassion of Jesus? Or on the righteous, prophetic anger expressed by Jesus? In lieu of offering a new and fresh biblical interpretation related to pay equity, we offer this meditation for two reasons.

First, we commend these stories as a clear and biblically based call to action. Both stories illustrate the centrality of, and capacity for, compassion in the life and ministry of Jesus. Both stories demonstrate the need to see, hear, and feel beyond ourselves. Nothing less than genuine compassion is called forth from the followers of Christ.

Most importantly, both of these stories illustrate the core truth that when faith culminates in compassion it is incomplete. After Jesus weeps with Mary for Lazarus, he raises him to new life. After Jesus weeps for Jerusalem he bursts into the temple, turns the tables, drives out the merchants, and pronounces, “My house shall be a house of prayer” (Luke 19:46, NRSV). Tears of compassion and expressions of concern that fail to nourish the seeds of action are hollow and lifeless. Thus, if this resolution taps our denominational capacity for compassion—even producing tears—but does not lead to concrete, prophetic, life-giving action, it is incomplete.

Secondly, these two accounts also provide a process—albeit a painful one—for prophetic action. Jesus’ response to Mary was so quick and resolute exactly because of his emotional ties to her and her family. Compassion, action, and justice must be practiced at home with the ones whose pain we know and understand best. Therefore, even while ascending to a hill above the city to issue prophetic pronouncements about the injustices in the wider community, the church that faithfully claims Jesus Christ as Savior needs to recognize and address its complicity in those same injustices.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has established a strong foundation for such prophetic action both in church and society:

1. Grounded in the biblical affirmation of the equality of women and men, each created in the image of God, the PC(USA) has developed a history of support for the equality of women in society and church as exemplified by these statements from previous General Assemblies:

- “In the church, men and women must act as equal partner. . . . The church must challenge and change anything which interferes with a person’s full development and wholeness. It must reject attempts to force persons into stereotypes which destroy personhood and deny human freedom and creativity” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1971, Part I, p. 299).
- “. . . God calls upon the church to act in society to end discrimination on the basis of sex and to challenge anything which interferes with women’s full development and wholeness” (Minutes, PCUS, 1972, Part I, p. 178).
- “A political, economic, and social system that translates unalterable human differences—race, ethnicity, gender, age, and physical ability—into occasion for oppression, exploitation, and hopelessness, is incompatible with Reformed theology” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 59, 426).
- “. . . God works through all persons in a variety of ways without regard for a hierarchy based upon gender” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 80, 591).

2. Grounded in the biblical revelation that creation is God’s first work and that humanity, women and men, are called by God to join in the work of sustaining and healing God’s creation through our work, Reformed theology understands work as one of God’s blessings: a vocation of service to God and neighbor. The holy God who works sanctifies work. Through work we not only fulfill our material needs, but we contribute to the well-being of the community as we exercise our God-given capacities. This theology, summarized in God’s Work in Our Hands, includes the following principles:

- “Work, paid and unpaid, is an integral part of the believer’s response to God’s call” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 59, 426).
- “The foundation upon which all just employment policies are built is access to employment at a level of compensation that allows people to live in dignity and security” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 59, 426).

- “Inequalities in compensation and working conditions demand the strictest scrutiny” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 59, 426).

- “All conditions of paid employment, including compensation and working conditions, should sustain and nurture the dignity of individuals, the well-being of households and families, the social cohesiveness of communities, and the integrity of the global environment” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 59, 426).

3. Grounded in the prophetic biblical witness to God’s passion for justice in economic life, hearing Jesus preach that he came “to proclaim release to the captives and recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty those who are oppressed, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord” (Luke 4:18–19), the church recognizes poverty as “a moral scandal of maldistribution and unsustainability” (“Hope for a Global Future,” Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 546–47). The poverty of women and children, known as “the feminization of poverty,” due in part to an enduring, gender-based pay inequity, has been of special concern to the PC(USA).

- “The reconciliation of [humanity] through Christ makes it plain that enslaving poverty in a world of abundance is an intolerable violation of God’s good creation. Because Jesus identified himself with the needy and exploited, the cause of the world’s poor is the cause of his disciples. The church cannot condone poverty, whether it is the product of unjust social structures, exploitation of the defenseless, lack of national resources, absence of technological understanding, or rapid expansion of population. . . . A church that is indifferent to poverty, or evades responsibility in economic affairs, or is open to one social class only, or expects gratitude for its beneficence makes a mockery of reconciliation and offers no acceptable worship to God” (The Confession of 1967, The Book of Confessions, 9.46).

- “...affirming the goal of equity in economic life and particularly expressing support for economic justice for women” (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 360).

- “Reaffirms the urgency of issues related to women and economic justice and calls congregations, governing bodies, and individual Presbyterians to become familiar with the policies of the General Assembly on economic justice for women and their families and to advocate and support measures that would make those policies effective” (Minutes, 1984, Part I, pp. 327–28).

- “Reaffirms the goals of the Ecumenical Decade of Churches in Solidarity with Women . . . .” These goals included, “Enabling the churches to free themselves from racism, sexism, and classism; from teachings and practices that discriminate against women. . . .” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 80, 592).

Guided by these biblical and theological convictions of our Reformed tradition, the Resolution Team on Pay Equity re-examined the issue of gender pay equity in church and society for the purpose of determining what God’s call “to do justice” (Micah 6:8 NRSV) demands of us, our churches, and the society in which we live today. In the following pages there is painful evidence of ongoing systemic pay inequity in the church of Jesus Christ, Presbyterian, and in the world, based on gender and race. Like Jesus, our compassion—and our action—must take effect in our own denominational home, as well as in our world. We must share our tears—and our action—with those in our own family whose labor is recognized neither adequately nor equitably. As the church of Jesus Christ strives to achieve within itself the just relationships to which God calls us, then we can, with integrity, seek to hold the wider community accountable to that same justice.

May God bless the compassion that the Spirit calls from these pages and guide the actions that seek to deliver God’s justice.

III. Pay Equity in Church and Society

A. Understanding Pay Equity

1. Equal Pay for Equal Work

Currently, the Equal Pay Act of 1963 and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 require that employees doing the same work for the same employer be paid the same. This reflects the value that wages should be based on a measure of the education, skills, experience, responsibilities, risks, and other working conditions required by the job regardless of the gender, race, or ethnicity of the worker. The concept of using a job evaluation system to measure and correct inequities in pay caused by gender and race bias is not new. During WWII, the National War Labor Board, in response to customary disparities in wages paid to women and racial/ethnic minorities, required equal pay for equal work, regardless of the gender or race of the worker. It is interesting to note that it also ordered equal pay for workers doing “comparable quantity and quality of work on the same or similar operations,” but with very limited actual success.<sup>2</sup>

However, the Equal Pay Act of 1963 and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 did not follow this broader precedent. These laws require equal pay for workers who are doing the same work: equal pay for equal work. Even this protection is not always adequate. In a recent Supreme Court Case (Ledbetter vs. Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, 2007), the Court decided that employees had to file a complaint within 180 days of the company's first discriminatory paycheck. It rejected the idea that each subsequent paycheck was a new act of discrimination. It rejected the reality that most employees do not know what other employees are being paid. Thus, the plaintiff, Ledbetter, lost her suit even though she had been given lower wage increases than her male co-workers in each year of her long employment.<sup>3</sup>

2. Equal Pay for Comparable Work

Anti-discrimination laws were critical to opening doors for women and moving toward equal employment opportunities. However, because women and men rarely do the same work, these laws have not been sufficient to close the gender wage gap. The term pay equity, therefore, has come to mean a strategy of comparing the relevant characteristics of different jobs. Jobs that are different, but which have the same characteristics, are evaluated as similar in value. Thus, workers in jobs that have been evaluated as similar in value, although of different categories within a company, would be paid similarly. The goals are:

- to base wages on the actual value of the work being done within an organization;
- to eliminate wage disparities created by past traditions about what women or racial/ethnic employees should be paid; and
- to eliminate embedded stereotypes about the value of work traditionally assigned to women or racial/ethnic groups.

The basic goal is fairness: women and racial/ethnic employees who perform work comparable with that of white males should not be disadvantaged by lower wages and benefits due to their gender or racial/ethnic identity. It should be noted, however, that other forms of injustice related to compensation, such as the growing disparity in median compensation between the highest paid executives and other employees, are not resolved even if pay equity is fully achieved.

3. Pay Equity and Biblical Justice

Biblical justice evaluates how the benefits and burdens of human life are shared so that all can live together with respect for the God-given dignity of each, including all genders, races, and ethnicities. Biblical justice calls for the healing of brokenness inherited from the past and the reconciliation of social divisions that burden some groups over others. In light of the disparity between women's and men's wages that existed in 1984, the 196th General Assembly adopted a Resolution on Equal Pay for Work of Comparable Worth. This resolution affirmed God's call for "justice and equity for all people," including "economic justice for women." It noted that the law of equal pay for equal work did not resolve the gender pay disparity. Therefore, it endorsed "... the concept of equal pay for jobs of comparable worth as a particularly effective means of obtaining economic justice for women" (Minutes, 1984, Part I, p.508).

In the Reformed tradition, glorifying God includes, indeed, requires, the just ordering of public life. Our response of love for one another must take the form of establishing justice in social life. To that end, the 200th General Assembly (1988) adopted the study paper, All the Live Long Day: Women and Work and urged every part of the church "... to advocate for public policies that support existing General Assembly policy statements on economic justice for women, including pay equity, child care, welfare reform, employment, and collective bargaining."<sup>4</sup>

Eleven years later, the 211th General Assembly (1999), expressing continuing concern for economic justice for women, mandated a review of the issue of gender pay equity. The persistence of the gender pay gap makes the goal of pay equity more relevant today than it was in 1984 since, at its present rate of closure, it will take 50 more years to achieve equal pay.<sup>5</sup>

B. The Gender Wage Gap

1. A Brief History

Women have always been a part of the U.S. workforce. In the 1700s, the low wages of most male workers drove low-income women of European heritages into domestic and agricultural employment, and, in the 1800s and 1900s, into the factories of the northeast. Legal slavery, sustained by landowners' desire for cheap labor, forced women of African heritages to work in fields and manor houses. After emancipation, continuing racial segregation required them to toil as agricultural and domestic workers.

However, gender stereotypes, enforced by laws and customs, severely restricted the kinds of jobs women could hold, the social value "women's work" commanded, and the wages provided. Employers refused to hire women for jobs they deemed unsuitable for females. Jobs were legally advertised as “men only” and “women only,” as well as “white only” and “colored only.” Women could be fired for getting married or becoming pregnant. Hours of work were often dictated by gender stereotypes. These stereotypes, enforced by both law and custom, were further refined by race and class biases. Women of color were typically assumed to be suitable for hard menial labor—labor deemed inappropriate for most white women. Low-income women of any race or ethnicity did work unsuitable for “gentlewomen.” Despite the economic necessity of paid work for many women, a long-standing social norm cast a disapproving eye on any woman who worked outside the home, especially a mother.

2. The Current Context

Today, almost 50 percent of the U.S. workforce is female. This figure illustrates the remarkable shift that occurred in women’s employment in the last half century. In 1950, only one-third of all U.S. working-age women were in the workforce, including about 40 percent of all working-age black women.<sup>6</sup> By 2005, almost 60 percent of all working-age women were in the workforce.<sup>7</sup> In the 1950s only about 20 percent of all married couples had employed wives; today about 50 percent of all wives are employed.<sup>8</sup>

Most surprising, perhaps, is the fact that almost 70 percent of all mothers with children under the age of 18 are in the labor force today,<sup>9</sup> including nearly three-fourths of single mothers,<sup>10</sup> and 54 percent of all mothers with children under one year of age.<sup>11</sup> Mothers, like fathers, are working to provide economic support for their families as well as for the personal fulfillment and social contribution such work provides. According to the Economic Policy Institute, if mothers in married, middle-income families had not entered the workforce, the average real income of these families would have increased by only 5.8 percent in the twenty-one years between 1979 and 2000. Because of mother’s paid work, these families experienced an increase in income of 25 percent.<sup>12</sup> Working outside the home has become a necessity and a norm for most modern women and for their families.

Yet, a significant wage gap continues to persist between men and women. Each year the median annual earnings of full-time, year-round female workers is compared with that of full-time, full-year male workers. In 1955, the gender wage gap was 63.9 percent. Fifty years later, 2005, the gender wage ratio was 77.0 percent.<sup>13</sup> This means that the median annual earnings of a woman who worked full-time, year round was 23 percent less than that of a man who worked full-time all year. The gender wage gap of African American and Hispanic American women workers (compared with white male workers) is much larger: 62.5 percent and 52.5 percent, respectively, in 1999.<sup>14</sup> as women age, the gap grows, disadvantaging women at the point of retirement. Long-term studies indicate that progress toward closing the gender wage gap in the 1980s was due more to a decline in male wages than to an increase in female wages. Since 1996, the annual gender wage gap has fluctuated up and down, generally hovering around 75 percent.<sup>15</sup>

3. The Cost of the Gender Wage Gap on Women and Families

This disparity has enormous consequences for the well-being of all women and their families.

a. Impact on All Women

- In 2005, the median annual earnings of all women were almost $10,000 less than that of men.<sup>16</sup> When couples experience such a gap in pay, it is likely that the demands of the husband’s better paying job will be prioritized over those of a wife’s lesser paid job. Any accommodation of employment to the demands of family care work will logically be assigned to the lower-paid woman. This exacerbates lifetime earnings differences and jeopardizes women’s economic security in the event of divorce and in retirement.

- Childcare costs may make employment unfeasible for lower wage women workers.

- In 2001, the median family income of single mother families was $28,142, more than 40 percent less than that of single father families ($40,715).<sup>17</sup>

- The average woman working full-time and all year, over the course of a forty-year career, will lose about $523,000 due to the gender wage gap, seriously impacting her economic security both during her working years and in retirement via lower pension and Social Security income.<sup>18</sup>

- Almost 30 percent of all women workers make poverty-level wages or less.<sup>19</sup>

- It is estimated that the poverty rate of U.S. women would be reduced by 50 percent, “if women’s jobs were fairly paid—even taking into account the fact that many women work less than full-time.” The income of nearly 40 percent of poor white women would rise above the Federal poverty threshold.<sup>20</sup>

- Families with a parent working in underpaid female- or race-segregated jobs, regardless of their gender or race, bear unfairly the burden of greater economic distress.

b. Greater Impact on Racial/Ethnic Women

- The average black woman worker earned $17,400 less than the average white male worker in 2006. Over a thirty-five-year-long career, this would add up to a difference of $696,600, jeopardizing economic security during working years and retirement.<sup>21</sup>

- Racial/ethnic couples must make up this difference in income by working more hours than white couples to achieve similar incomes. In 2000, black, middle-income couples worked 500 more hours per year to achieve the same level of income as white middle-income families.<sup>22</sup> This adds up to ten more working hours per week each week of the year.

- College-educated African American women typically work more hours per year than do college-educated white women. This disparity in hours worked is over a month more of full-time work by college educated African American women workers.<sup>23</sup>

- In 2005, 25 percent of white women, 37 percent of black women, and 46 percent of Hispanic women earned poverty level wages.<sup>24</sup>

- If women of color were paid fairly, it is estimated that the income of nearly 50 percent of poor racial/ethnic women would rise above the Federal poverty threshold.<sup>25</sup>

What causes this pay gap now that women are almost half of the workforce? Interest in pay equity is a response to this situation.

C. Why Women Earn Less Than Men

There are several causes for the existence and persistence of the gender pay gap: segregated occupations by gender and race, differences in education and work skills, and gender discrimination.

1. “Women’s Work” and Segregated Occupations

One cause of the gender wage gap is that women and men still tend to be employed in different occupations and industries: occupational segregation. Researchers find that occupational segregation accounts for as much as 30 percent of the gender wage gap.<sup>26</sup> Today 55 percent of all women workers are concentrated in female-dominated occupations (jobs where women comprise 70 percent or more of the workforce). These occupations reflect traditional gender stereotypes of women as caregivers, servers, and assistants: for example, childcare workers, receptionists, typists, bookkeepers, LPNs, legal assistants, and retail sales.<sup>27</sup> Racial/ethnic women are overrepresented in health and educational service work, private domestic work, retail sales, and institutional cleaning. Of course, occupational segregation also subjects men to gender stereotyping that can restrict their options or expose them to unhealthy working conditions. Religious institutions are not immune to these stereotypes.

In addition to the restrictions such stereotyping places on women’s contributions to society and their opportunities to develop their full human capacities, studies comparing sex- and race-segregated occupations with other occupations have uncovered a number of troubling conclusions that specifically disadvantage women:

- Workers in gender- or race-segregated occupations earn less than workers with similar education and skills in other occupations.<sup>28</sup>

- Even when the characteristics of different jobs are similar, jobs held primarily by white men pay more than jobs held primarily by women or racial/ethnic men. For example, in 1984, Minnesota found that state-employed zookeepers (primarily male) were paid a great deal more than state-employed childcare workers (primarily female) even though the state’s job evaluation system scored the jobs similarly.<sup>29</sup> A national survey reported in 1999 that childcare workers (primarily female) were typically paid less than parking lot attendants (primarily male).<sup>30</sup>

- As the percentage of female or racial/ethnic male employees increases in an occupation, the average pay for workers in that occupation decreases.<sup>31</sup>

These studies suggest that the value society places on some occupations, such as elementary school teaching or home health care, continues to reflect the biases of previous times, rather than an occupation’s actual contribution to the workplace or to society. Susan, a single mother, works as a nurses’ aide:

Basically the job is to give care to the residents of the nursing home. We wash them, we feed them, we take them to the bathroom. You have to lift them out of bed into their wheel chairs. ... I've been doing this for six months and just passed my certification exam last month. ... I work from three in the afternoon until eleven at night. It pays $5.70 an hour.<sup>32</sup>

2. The Role of Human Capital

Two main variables in the qualifications of workers influence the jobs for which they may be considered: education/training and labor force experience. The term “human capital” refers to the job-related qualifications that workers gain through education and work experience. To the extent that women and racial/ethnic minorities do not have as much human capital as white men, one would expect to see a disparity in wages. However, as the data below show, the large differences that once existed between men and women, and between racial groups, have been closing. Thus, while differences in human capital may explain as much as 50–70 percent of the gender wage gap, researchers find that 30–50 percent of the gender wage gap is still left unexplained after taking human capital differences into account.<sup>33</sup>

a. Educational Attainment

To the extent that the average educational achievement of women and racial/ethnic minority workers is less than that of the average white male worker, one would expect to see a wage gap. However, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, the gender gap in educational attainment has been largely closed for about a decade:

For the population 25 to 29 years in 2003, educational attainment levels of women exceeded those of men ... 88 percent of young women and 85 percent of young men had completed high school, while at the college level, the proportions were 31 percent and 26 percent, respectively. The last year young women and men had equal rates of high school and college attainment was 1995.<sup>34</sup>

The gap in educational attainment by race/ethnicity is closing, but still significant. Among 25 to 29 year olds, in 2003, 89 percent of whites, 80 percent of blacks, and 57 percent of Hispanics had received a high school diploma. There is a much larger racial disparity in achieving a bachelor's degree among these young adults: 34 percent of whites, 17 percent of blacks, and 11 percent for Hispanics. Of all those over the age of 25, 30 percent of whites, 17.3 percent of blacks, 49.8 percent of Asians, and 11.4 percent of Hispanics have earned a bachelor's degree or more.<sup>35</sup> The multiple reasons for these disparities include the inequalities in both income and wealth that exist between white households and those of color, the unequal quality of public school education, the rising cost of college education, and the reduction in aid available to students through Pell grants and the G.I Bill. Since the early 1990s, in each racial/ethnic group, women have exceeded men in college enrollment and in degree attainment.<sup>36</sup>

b. Labor Force Experience

In the 1950s, women's pattern of participation in the workforce tended to include employment before marriage, absence from the labor force between the ages of 25 to 34 while raising young children, and a return to the workforce after age 35 and especially after age 45. At every age level, men's workforce participation rate was about double that of women's. This pattern has changed drastically since the 1970s. Today, at every age level, women's participation rate has come within 15 percentage points of men's.<sup>37</sup> Most wives and mothers remain in the workforce and more than 75 percent of all women workers work full-time, yearround.<sup>38</sup> African American women have always participated in the labor force at higher rates than white women. For example, in 1900, 41 percent of African American women were in the workforce as were 16 percent of white women.<sup>39</sup> By 2005, the labor force participation rate of African American women reached 61.6 percent and that of white women reached 58.9 percent, almost closing that gap.<sup>40</sup>

c. Closing the Human Capital Gap

While the strategy known as pay equity is important in addressing the gender wage gap, it does not address the differences that still persist in attaining education and work experience. These differences are particularly acute for people of color. Fully addressing the gender wage gap requires addressing those gender and race inequalities that continue to shape other social institutions. The PC(USA) is enriched by its tradition of support for racial equality and opposition to any form of racial discrimination in church or society. For example, the PCUSA stated, "... the Church [must] demonstrate in every phase of its life and work the reality of brotherhood in which no person or group is penalized by virtue of minority status" (Minutes, PCUSA, 1951, Part I, p.257). The PC(USA) has also developed a long tradition of support for ensuring quality public education for all children, but especially for children most at risk. The 208th General Assembly (1996) stated: "Education is a basic human right and is essential to human development because it enhances human capacities, improves opportunities, and widens the range of choices" (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 532). The 211th General Assembly (1999) spoke out against "resegregation and the withdrawal of resources from Black children" (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp.77, 681). The goal of gender equality for all women calls the church beyond the strategy of pay equity and raises again the challenge of creating a society in which no person is disadvantaged in educational attainment or employment opportunities by gender or race.

3. Gender Discrimination

When a significant wage gap exists between similarly educated and experienced workers, a suspicion of employment discrimination seems reasonable. One recent study compared the average earnings of full-time, year-round, college-educated male and female workers at five-year intervals between college graduation in 1984 and 2004. At each point a gender wage gap existed. A gap of $11,001 in 1984 increased to a gap of $36,842 in 2004 when these workers were in their forties.<sup>41</sup> Some of this gap may be due to the different college majors and subsequent professions that women and men choose. However, as the American Association of University Women points out, men in female-dominated professions, such as education or nursing, still earn more than their female counterparts. They also note that, “In biological sciences, a mixed-gender major, women earn only 75 percent as much as men earn.”<sup>42</sup> How much of the gender pay gap can be attributed to gender discrimination?

In 1998, the President’s Council of Economic Advisors came to this conclusion:

... there still exists a significant wage gap that cannot be explained by differences between male and female workers in labor market experience and in the characteristics of jobs they hold. ... Some studies have tried to measure discrimination directly by looking at pay differences among men and women in very similar jobs or by comparing pay to specific measures of productivity. These studies consistently find evidence of ongoing discrimination in the labor market and support the conclusion that women still face differential treatment on the job.<sup>43</sup>

For example, a comprehensive study of restaurant hiring practices found gender segregation related to “high” and “low” end restaurants. Male waiters were concentrated in restaurants where the meal service was more formal and more expensive. The authors concluded: “Our findings provide strong evidence of discrimination against women in high-price restaurants. ...” Moreover, the earnings for wait staff are significantly higher in high-price restaurants, leading to gender differences in earnings among wait staff workers.<sup>44</sup>

a. The Dilemma of Women’s Work Choices

Explaining the “unexplained” gender pay gap that exists after differences in human capital and segregated occupations are taken into account has led researchers to consider how women’s “choices” about employment and their employment experiences are impacted by traditional gender expectations. While the decisions that women make are often referred to as “choices,” it is important to keep in mind that these are decisions made under conditions that limit women’s full options. The way a society organizes employment and domestic work and the relationship between the two shapes the decisions that individual women and men must make. For example, while most employed women work full-time, a majority of part-time workers are women—many trying to balance family and work demands by working part-time but others working part-time due to the lack of available full-time jobs. Other stereotypes affect how women “choose” to handle a variety of workplace situations. For example, much research shows that women are less likely to enter into negotiations over salary offers. However, additional research has shown that women who initiate salary negotiations are perceived more negatively than men. “What we found across all the studies is men were always less willing to work with a woman who had attempted to negotiate than with a woman who did not.” Women’s reluctance to negotiate salary is a reasonable reaction to how they will be treated if they do.<sup>45</sup>

b. Stereotyping Women Employees

In our society, the traditional assumption that men “work” and women care for the home and children continues to create stereotypes and workplace practices that disadvantage women employees. Single women are disadvantaged by the assumption that they may, at some point, marry and have children. Simply becoming a mother makes women vulnerable to stereotypes. Studies show that even when motherhood has not reduced women’s paid working hours, mothers who are employed are likely to earn less than women who have no children or men who become fathers.<sup>46</sup> Regardless of their actual job performance, employees who are mothers may be perceived as not fully committed to their employment or as less competent, less available, or less competitive. They may be given less important and less demanding projects by supervisors who presume that mothers have particular work-hour constraints. In May, 2007, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission issued guidelines for determining when different treatment of caregivers is illegal: “Because stereotypes that female caregivers should not, will not, or cannot be committed to their jobs are sex-based, employment decisions based on such stereotypes violate Title VII.”<sup>47</sup> However, because caregivers, per se, are not a protected class of people under Title VII, the law is not violated if employers treat mothers and fathers in a similar unfavorable manner.

The EEOC Guidelines discuss a variety of practices that could violate Title VII, including:

- Subjecting women who become mothers to less favorable employment treatment without evidence of changes in their work performance;
- Treating female workers less favorably based on gender assumptions about how caregiving responsibilities might interfere with work performance;

- Treating less favorably mothers who work part-time, or who take advantage of flexible working hours;
- Overlooking mothers as candidates for relocation on the assumption that mothers would not want to relocate;
- Interviewing women applicants, but not men, about how they will manage their current or future caregiving responsibilities.

c. Family Responsibilities and Care Giving

Much is being written today about work-family stress. In a competitive economy, employees who devote time to caring for dependents may be penalized whether they are women or men. However, despite most women's participation in the paid workforce and the economic importance of their work to employers and wages to their families, women are still society's primary unpaid caregivers for the young, the elderly, the chronically ill, and the disabled. With persistent cuts in health care, the burden of care, even for patients needing more skilled care, is shifting from a paid labor force of women workers in health-care institutions to an unpaid labor force of women in the home. The conflict created for women as the demands of employment and the demands of caregiving clash is sometimes called "the maternal wall."<sup>48</sup> In our society, the traditional assumption that men "work" and women care for the home and children continues to shape our social institutions in ways that create a real disjuncture between the important work of caregiving and the important work of employment. For example, the practice of mandatory overtime ignores the equally important family responsibilities of women and men. While employers may choose to provide paid leave, the Family and Medical Leave Act only requires employers of a certain size to provide unpaid leave to attend to sick children or parents making this leave difficult and costly especially for lower wage workers and racial/ethnic workers. In a survey of those caring for elderly relatives for more than eight hours a week, two-thirds of the caregivers reported having lost promotions and training opportunities at work.<sup>49</sup> There is much research showing that women work fewer hours in employment than they would like and interrupt their hours more than men because of childcare concerns. The cost of childcare absorbs 15 percent of the average working mother's income and 35 percent of the income of mothers in low-income families.<sup>50</sup> For the most part, the work place still assumes that workers have, or should have, no responsibility for caregiving work.

Women in lower-paid work, who are disproportionately women of color, experience this conflict more severely. Stable childcare, that is affordable and of good quality, is often out of reach of low-income workers. They may have to rely on public transportation to get to childcare and to work. And low-income workers are typically employed in work characterized by nontraditional and unstable working hours, mandatory overtime, and rigid workplace policies regarding lateness and absences. Julie has an associate's degree and two children in elementary school:

I went to work and told them I could not work nights any more because of the two children. The manager had a ten o'clock meeting at night. It is one of the coldest winters in history. My oldest daughter has asthma. He said, "You will be there at that meeting or you'll be fired." I said, "I can't bring my children out in that kind of weather. Find a baby-sitter. I can't find a baby-sitter, not at ten at night." He said, "Either you be at the meeting or you are fired." So I quit.<sup>51</sup>

Higher income and professional women do not escape these conflicts as evidenced by the findings of the Glass Ceiling Commission in 1995 and the report of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in 2004.<sup>52</sup> Taking time out, even occasionally, to respond to the needs of children or other dependents is seen by supervisors as a loss of labor market experience and commitment that hurts career opportunities, including future wages.

Faced with this conflict, some women choose to work fewer hours, take less demanding work or, in other ways, structure their paid employment to fit their caregiving responsibilities. For example, although about 25 percent of women employees work part-time, women make up a majority of part-time workers. For low- and moderate-income families, however, part-time work has a high cost: lower wages per hour as well as fewer hours and less access to pensions, health insurance, family leave, and unemployment or disability insurance. It has long-term negative consequences for Social Security benefits. By taking up the important and necessary unpaid work of caregiving, some women pay the price of greater economic vulnerability and less opportunity to develop their full human capacities. Jessie has two elementary-age children:

I need to work during the day so I can be here with my kids at night. ... My kids are first. My kids are always first. Basically everything I work for or think of working for is around them ... the hours, the pay, the kind of work I do—all the decisions revolve around them.<sup>53</sup>

d. Closing the Work-Family Gap

Do women need to become like men (that is, free of primary caregiving responsibilities) to achieve economic justice? In fact, this is the claim of some who deny the reality of gender discrimination and the gender wage gap. According to Denise Venable:

When women behave in the workplace as men do, the wage gap between them is small. June O'Neill, former director of the Congressional Budget Office, found that among people ages 27 to 33 who have never had a child, women's earnings approach 98 percent of men's. ... Rather than being "funneled" into low-wage, low-prestige and part-time positions, women often choose these occupations. ...<sup>54</sup>

One problem with this perspective is that it limits its focus to this specific, young age group. This focus allows it to ignore the impact of marriage and childbearing on women's wages at any age. It also illustrates the underlying error of our society's current concept of work. The secular meaning and value of "work" is limited to only those activities that earn a wage by serving the marketplace. In this conception, the broad range of families' needs and what parents do to meet those needs is not "work." In fact, family responsibilities detract from real work. Wages and hours of employment that are insufficient to support the income needs of workers are justified as the free choice of less-skilled workers, or the free choice of mothers. According to this view, those who "choose" to respond to the care needs of families and dependent persons can be said to have freely chosen to deny themselves and their families' economic well-being.

In the Reformed tradition, both paid and unpaid work, work that produces material things and work that forms families and communities, are essential to human well-being. Societies literally cannot survive without the work of families. Both are of equal dignity. This broad and encompassing biblical meaning of human labor is celebrated in the Reformed tradition as vocation, a blessing, and a response to blessing. We serve God and receive God's blessings by serving the well-being and reconciliation of all people and the care of God's creation. Given this foundation, economic justice for women requires the mending of the work-family division. It requires society's commitment to the value of caregiving, to the economic well-being of all caregivers, paid and unpaid, and to men's and women's equal sharing of the joys and burdens of caregiving. It requires a workplace fit for parents and other caregivers.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved the policy, Transforming Families, which clearly acknowledged the destructive effects of work-family conflict on women, men, and families:

As we strive to fulfill our covenantal vocation as Christians in both work and family life, we struggle with the difficulties of balancing the two and of bringing about conditions in our society that are truly family friendly and that recognize the great value of reproductive, nurturing, and caregiving work. (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 781)

In response, the assembly called on all levels of the PC(USA), including individual Presbyterians, to advocate for legislation that would:

- "Make generous financial support available for the care of children and other dependents. Such support should not discriminate among those who choose to have dependent family members at home, those who choose commercial care, and those who choose other care arrangements. The goal is to ensure quality, affordable, and safe care for every child and dependent" (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 57, 759).
- "Induce employers to offer more flexible work hours, more paid leave for the care of dependent persons and child-related activities, more telecommunications options, more possibilities for part-time jobs with prorated wages and benefits, family-supporting wages for all workers, and more available, affordable, and flexible child-care programs" (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp.57, 759–60).
- "Ensure 'the right of every person to have access to quality health care that is adequate, affordable, and accountable' as a necessity for family life" (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp.57, 760).

To fully address the gender wage gap, the church must recommit itself to healing work-family conflict and to public policies that value all families and their work of nurture and caregiving (refer to Recommendation 2.c. of this report). A number of secular organizations provide information on pay equity tools and companies that are trying to reduce work-family conflict.<sup>55</sup> Appendix 2 provides an example of an investment company's screening criteria for gender equity.

IV. Women in the Global Workforce

While it is far beyond the scope of this paper to analyze adequately women's experiences of employment around the world, the globalization of trade, labor markets, and finance creates ties between U.S. Christians and workers worldwide.<sup>56</sup> According to the International Labour Office (ILO), women now make up 47.9 percent of the world's wage and salaried workforce. About 52 percent of working age women participates in the world's workforce. In 2006, most employed women worked in service sector jobs (42 percent) or agricultural jobs (40 percent). Seventeen percent worked in industry.<sup>57</sup>

Most countries, but not the U.S., have ratified the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) which establishes nondiscrimination as a human right. Nonetheless, the ILO report, Time for Equality at Work, found that gender stereotypes continue to shape women's work even in the developed world.<sup>58</sup> For example, in England the majority of women workers are "... concentrated in 'the five Cs': caring, cashiering, catering, cleaning and clerical."<sup>59</sup> In most of the world's economies, women earn less than their male co-workers earn, even in high-skilled occupations such as computer programming and even in female-dominated occupations such as nursing. The ILO distinguishes between those variables in either an individual's or an industry's characteristics that may create pay differences that are not due to discrimination and those pay differences that are discriminatory: (a) when different pay is given for the same work, and (b) when different pay is given for jobs that are different but of equal value—as when traditionally female jobs are valued less than traditionally male jobs due to stereotypes about the value of women’s work. It concludes that the elimination of sex-based pay discrimination “requires an in-depth review of job evaluation practices and pay policies of enterprises in order to definitively eradicate sexist prejudices and stereotypes.”<sup>60</sup>

Research by the Project on Global Working Families found work-family conflict and punitive treatment of caregivers in countries around the globe.<sup>61</sup> A significant percentage of families with children under six years of age have all adult members (over 18) in the paid labor force: 50 percent of Russian households with young children, 41 percent of such households in Brazil, 68 percent in Vietnam.<sup>62</sup> For many low-income families the tragic choice is between earning enough money to feed their families (income) and being physically present to care for their children. Having caregiving responsibilities makes paid work difficult to find. Staying home to care for a sick child means losing pay, or having to work twice as many hours to make up for the lost time, or losing the job.<sup>63</sup> As in the U.S., low-income and poor families experience fewer supports for handling caregiving conflicts (less leave, paid or unpaid, less time flexibility, rigid working conditions, inadequate wages, and so forth). The health, safety, and educational needs of children suffer.<sup>64</sup> Parents cannot be in two places at once. In Botswana, Numuko Ndebele described what happened while she was at work:

They were cooking while I was at work, using the gas stove. I think they switched one button on but didn’t light the stove. I can’t say what happened, but whatever they did, the whole house was in flames. Everything was burned out.<sup>65</sup>

Thus, despite their increased participation in employment, the working conditions of the women of the world continue to create greater economic vulnerability for women, and, consequently, for their children. In some developing nations the focus on low-priced export products, such as clothing, electronics, and shoes, provides low-wage industrial work for women. However, these jobs provide no opportunity for advancement beyond their subsistence wages. Global competition for lowest waged workers makes such industrial work unstable as companies move from country to country. Competition between countries to attract low-cost export industries reduces the power of workers and governments to demand decent conditions that sustain families. In some places companies treat women workers as subcontractors producing for export from their homes.<sup>66</sup> The ILO estimates “... that women make up at least 60 percent of the world’s working poor.”<sup>67</sup> Unfortunately, these poor conditions for employed women may justify to families and governments a lack of investment in education and training for girls, resulting in no or slow generational progress toward economic justice for women. It is important to note that both religion and culture play a role in maintaining and justifying the stereotypes that disadvantage women.

V. Pay Equity in Religious Organizations

A. Other Christian Groups

Although the Resolution Team on Pay Equity was mandated to study the issue of pay equity in both church and society, the team did not have the resources to do an exhaustive analysis of Christian groups. Our limited research showed that many church bodies formally affirm the equality of women and men. Some have taken actions to achieve that within their structures. The examples that follow suggest principles for those serious about addressing pay equity issues:

- It is essential to use valid research tools to uncover unintended gender, racial, and ethnic differences that negatively and unjustly impact women employees. We will not know if we do not look.
- The affirmation of our belief in gender equity is insufficient without the commitment that results in effective employment policies, their routine application, and their consistent oversight by those charged with their implementation. Achieving gender equity must be an intentional and on-going process.
- Justice will only result when its vision is pursued by effective actions.

1. World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC)

The World Alliance of Reformed Churches, of which the PC(USA) is a member, states that “...the Church of Jesus Christ belongs equally to women and men.” The WARC laments, however, that “... this is still a dream to be realized as the church manifests injustices against women and deep divisions embedded in the persistent patriarchal ideology...”<sup>68</sup> Through its Programme to Affirm, Challenge and Transform and its Department of Partnership of Women and Men, WARC has worked with member churches around the world regarding issues related to women, including ordination, violence, and economic justice. It has not yet addressed specifically the strategy of pay equity.

2. World Council of Churches (WCC)

Since 1948, the WCC has addressed the goal of “women’s full and creative participation in church and society” in every “Assembly and other international ecumenical meetings.”<sup>69</sup> This goal, and the guidelines developed for the WCC office in Geneva, are derived from the belief "... that men and women are made equally in the image of God, and, in the community of the baptized, are equal participants in the Body of Christ." The guidelines warn that the decision to address gender inequality involves dealing with gender imbalance both in the church and in the larger society and its culture and institutions. Therefore,

In order to build and to sustain a healthy and thriving community of women and men, members of staff need to be able to see the image of God in each other. In order to serve the justice and dignity that this image implies, they need to be engaged in a constant process of learning and unlearning beliefs, attitudes and forms of behavior.

Specifically, the guidelines for the Geneva Office include the following:

- "The appointment procedure will include an assessment of each applicant's gender awareness in accordance with this policy, both through letters of reference and the interview process."
- "Gender awareness training of new and continuing staff will further reflection on gender roles and relations."
- "All jobs and job descriptions will include a clause calling for gender sensitivity."
- "Jobs and job descriptions will focus on the role of each staff person within the framework of the needs of the Team."
- "The Leadership Team will carefully monitor all staff appointments and set in place a strategy so as to reach a balance of gender in all appointments and grades."
- "The monitoring process will form an integral part of the proposed ongoing evaluation of all work. . . ."

These statements suggest an approach that the PC(USA) could adopt for its own work toward the goal of employment justice.

3. United Methodist Church (UMC)

In 2000, the General Conference of The United Methodist Church, based on its affirmation of the "inherent value and equal worth in God's sight of every person," directed the General Council on Finance and Administration "... to evaluate internal wage structures and practices of general agencies of The United Methodist Church in light of the principle of pay equity and to include this assessment in its regular monitoring of equal employment opportunity compliance under The Book of Discipline. . . ." The resolution further directed this agency to develop a job-evaluation and classification system that would be uniform across all agencies of the church with the goal of developing a database of information and reducing the "opportunity for bias based on gender or ethnic status. . . ." The General Council on Finance and Administration is to "provide the 2008 General Conference with an evaluative report on pay equity in the general agencies, based on the monitoring of pay equity that has been conducted since implementation of the new systems and processes. . . ." <sup>70</sup>

This action has enabled the UMC's General Commission on the Status and Role of Women to gather a great deal of data about gender and racial disparities in representation, appointments, and wages. One conclusion reached is that a gap of 9 percent exists between the wages of clergywomen and clergymen with the same years of experience and same type of appointment. <sup>71</sup> A 2004 study of the status of racial/ethnic clergywomen found that they "... experience no substantive support from the denomination, struggle with lack of opportunities for appointments and visible leadership roles, and receive salaries that are lower than those of their male and female European-American peers and their male racial-ethnic peers." <sup>72</sup>

B. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) <sup>73</sup>

In faithfulness to our biblical and theological foundations, the PC(USA) must look inward to its own practices. Are we truly open to hiring women equally with men? Do we practice "equal pay for equal work"? Do we challenge and undo gender and racial stereotypes that limit human freedom, creativity, and personhood? Do we establish equal pay for work of comparable worth in order to undermine these stereotypes? The Resolution Team analyzed the data available to it from several PC(USA) sources to explore the relative status of women, racial/ethnic persons, and men in the PC(USA). While the issue of pay equity includes non-clergy employees of the church, no data about non-clergy employees were available to the team. In this section, we describe these sources and our findings. In addition, Appendix 1 provides a report from the Presbytery of Baltimore describing its work to achieve pay equity. More information about the methodologies used in the following section is provided in Appendix 3.

1. Compensation Data from Individual Congregations

Compensation data for clergy from five presbyteries in four synods were analyzed to explore differences by gender and by race/ethnicity. <sup>74</sup> The presbyteries represented are Western Reserve of the Synod of the Covenant, Mid-Kentucky and St. Andrew of the Synod of Living Waters, Heartland of the Synod of Mid-America, and Riverside of the Southern California and Hawaii Synod. To the extent possible, compensation or "terms of call" were defined consistently across all the congregations. The analysis looked at information regarding 286 clergy: 199 men and seventy women (seventeen cases do not have information on gender). Information is available to identify race/ethnicity for 194 clergy (165 Caucasian employees, 18 African Americans, 5 Asian Americans, 5 Hispanic Americans, and 1 Native American).

This dataset is not based on a random sample of Presbyterian clergy, and thus our findings may not reflect precisely the experiences of the entire PC(USA) clergy. It was, however, the only data available to the Resolution Team on Pay Equity. While data were made available for only a few presbyteries, and compensation may not be defined in exactly the same way among these presbyteries, this analysis sheds light on current practice in the PC(USA). The resolution team believes it is very likely that the issues documented by these data, in terms of differences in positions and earnings of women as compared with men, and whites as compared with racial/ethnic clergy, are very similar throughout the PC(USA). They also mirror findings from the broader U.S. workforce.

Analysis of complete, comprehensive data about all PC(USA) clergy compensation would be extremely valuable for understanding the impact of gender, race, and ethnicity on opportunities and compensation in the PC(USA).

Detailed findings from this analysis are presented in Table 1, below, and in the Appendix. Key findings are:

- Men earn substantially more than women (27 percent more) and whites earn substantially more than racial/ethnic clergy (26 percent more).
- Women clergy are less likely to be in the top position of their congregations than men are.
- Women and racial/ethnic clergy have fewer years of service than do men and whites.
- Men and whites serve in larger congregations than women and racial/ethnic clergy do.
- Women and racial/ethnic clergy work part-time more often than men and whites do.

These differences in clergy positions, and other factors that are not directly measurable in this dataset, lead to very different earnings for the groups analyzed here. Women earn an average of $42,698, while men earn $54,117; men's earnings are 27 percent higher than women's. The earnings gap is virtually the same across the racial/ethnic divide: whites earn an average of $51,941, or 26 percent more than racial/ethnic clergy, whose average earnings are $41,117.

In order to study the impact of being female or of a racial/ethnic group, we employed a statistical technique to isolate those factors from others that also affect the terms of call offered to clergy, such as position and years since ordination. (See Appendix 1 for more information on the statistical analysis.) We examined the effect of the following factors in determining individual clergy earnings:

Gender

Race/ethnicity: In two groups: whites, and all others.<sup>75</sup>

Position: We grouped congregational positions into three categories: Pastors and Associate Pastors, Commissioned Lay Pastors and Stated Supply, and all other positions.

Years since ordination: Three categories: one to ten, eleven to twenty, and twenty or more.

Size of congregation: Small (one to 100 members), medium (101 to 500 members), and large (more than 500).

Work hours: Full-time or part-time, where full-time is defined as thirty-five hours per week or more.

The regression analysis confirms some very basic relationships between worker and job characteristics and clergy earnings. As one would expect:

- Full-time clergy earn more than those employed part-time.
- Pastors have higher earnings than other clergy.
- Earnings are much higher in larger congregations (26 percent higher in medium-sized than in small-sized congregations, and 60 percent higher in the largest congregations than in the smallest ones).

Terms of call vary widely among congregations: Earnings are 50 percent lower in both Mid-Kentucky and Western Reserve than in Heartland; Riverside trails Heartland by 25 percent; and St. Andrew’s clergy earn 34 percent more than those in Heartland (when comparing clergy in the same position, work schedule, size of congregation, gender, racial/ethnic identity, and years since ordination).

Women and racial/ethnic clergy earn less than men and whites, even when they have the same position (by 4 percent and 13 percent, respectively). However, these relationships are not statistically significant. That is, the data suggest that being female or a racial/ethnic clergy lowers earnings, if all other factors are held constant, but the analysis cannot confidently rule out the possibility that the observed relationship in this data set is simply due to chance.

However, the lack of statistical significance does not mean that women and racial/ethnic clergy are not in fact paid less just because of being female and of a racial/ethnic group. The PC(USA) dataset is small, with only 70 women and 32 racial/ethnic clergy. For some observations, certain pieces of data were missing (e.g., work schedule); these were dropped from the regression analysis, making the sample size even smaller. (221 observations were available for the regression study.) In addition, women are more likely to serve in smaller congregations, have fewer years since ordination, and be in positions other than pastor (Table 1). It may be that systemic barriers in the PC(USA) prevent women from serving in larger congregations, or from being ordained in a timely manner. If this is the case, then some of the discrimination that women face will show up as differences by size of congregation or years since ordination, rather than as a gender effect.

Other research suggests that many women in the clergy face the same kinds of discriminatory treatment that are reported by women throughout the workforce. A study by the PC(USA)'s Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns quotes comments from women who experienced sexual harassment, biased expectations about doing "women's work," and discrimination in rising to leadership positions in the church.<sup>76</sup> Similar reports have been written of women clergy in other denominations.<sup>77</sup>

2. Analysis from the Board of Pensions

The PC(USA) Board of Pensions provided information on average salaries of clergy to the Resolution Team on Pay Equity, with data by size of congregation and, within each size category, by gender and years of service (ten or fewer, and eleven or more).<sup>78</sup> Effective salary and number of clergy are indicated for full-time pastors and, for congregations of 201 or more, for full-time associate pastors.

Key findings from the team's evaluation of this report (Table 2) are:

- Women have a lower average effective salary as compared to men as both pastors and associate pastors in nearly all congregational size categories.<sup>79</sup>
- There is a substantial wage differential between male and female pastors with ten years or less of service in congregations with 501 to 1,000 members—nearly $21,000.
- There is only one female pastor in the 13 congregations with 1,501 or more members, so women's and men's earnings cannot be compared for that group.

3. Information Provided by the Church Leadership Connection

The resolution team was also provided with information from the Church Leadership Connection. These data include some relevant comparisons of women and men in the PC(USA). However, the data does not distinguish racial/ethnic identities in general nor racial/ethnic identities by gender.

a. Women Are Under-represented as Ministers Compared with Their Presence as Candidates

Table 3 shows the percent of active ministers who are women, and the percent of clergy candidates who are women, from 1997 to 2005. Over this entire period, women constituted half or more of all candidates for clergy positions, while only one-fourth to one-third of all active ministers were women. Women are half of all clergy candidates, but only one-third of ministers.

b. Women's Presence in Church Leadership Is Not Growing

From 2000 to 2005, the share of pastors and co-pastors and of associate pastors who were women remained nearly constant: Just over one-fourth of pastors/co-pastors are women, while a smaller share—about one-sixth—of associate pastors are women (Table 4). (These numbers are different from those presented in Table 3 because retired persons are not represented in Table 4.) Women's leadership role in the church is not growing.

c. Women Are Underrepresented in All Synods

There is some variation among synods in the integration of women into pastoral positions, but only within a small range (Table 5). The Synod of the Northeast has the highest percent of female ministers, at 26 percent, and the Southern California and Hawaii Synod has the lowest, at 17 percent. The problem of women's exclusion from church leadership is widespread.

4. Conclusions

Although little data were available to the Resolution Team on Pay Equity, what we were able to analyze suggests that women and racial/ethnic clergy are limited to a supporting role in the PC(USA). They are paid less, have positions in smaller congregations, and are more likely to work part-time.

The fact that women and racial/ethnic clergy continue to average fewer years since ordination is particularly troublesome given that the PC(USA) approved the ordination of women in 1956. It may be that institutional factors—the way curricula are designed, or the support students have while studying for the ministry—somehow discourage women and racial/ethnic persons from completing their studies, or makes it more difficult for them to complete in a timely fashion. If so, it will be difficult for these groups to catch up to higher-paid and more prominent male and white clergy. In fact, women's strong presence among minister candidates is not paying off; men candidates are more likely to become ministers than are women candidates.

This data analysis is preliminary. Without a comprehensive dataset, it is impossible to draw conclusive findings about the experiences of women and racial/ethnic clergy in today's PC(USA). If the recommendations recommended by the team are approved and fully implemented, a more definite analysis could be completed. This review of the team certainly suggests that there are factors in the way terms of call are settled on, and in congregations' decisions about what positions to offer to which candidates, that are hostile to women and racial/ethnic clergy.

Appendix 1 Clergy Compensation Equity in the Presbytery of Baltimore

The Pay Equity Resolution Team thanks the Presbytery of Baltimore, its committee on ministry, and George Fisher for providing us with the following description of their work:

In 2007, the Committee on Ministry of the Presbytery of Baltimore formed a task group to examine clergy compensation in the presbytery to determine the extent to which race or gender may be influencing clergy compensation. Because the Presbytery of Baltimore has for many years ranked clergy positions according to a numerical factoring system,<sup>1</sup> the task group has been able to examine questions of pay equity more quantitatively than would otherwise be possible.

The COM provided the task group with information on clergy compensation (as of December 21, 2007), along with information on the status and factoring of each position, and the racial grouping and date of ordination for each pastor. We divided the information into groups on the basis of gender and race, and prepared two plots of total compensation against position factor, one comparing compensation for male and female pastors (Figure 1), the other for white and non-white male pastors (Figure 2).

In an attempt to capture the trend of the data on compensation for male and female pastors, we calculated least-square regression lines for Figure 1. Given the relatively small number of points in Figure 2, we chose not to calculate regression curves for those data. And because the presbytery includes only one non-white woman pastor, we chose not to produce a plot of racial differences for women pastors.

The plots of gender differences and racial differences are broadly similar. Both show that in positions factored at the minimum value, race and gender have little effect on compensation. Both show that no women or non-white men occupy positions factored above about 800. And both show that in positions factored between about 600 and 800, increasing factors are associated with smaller increases in the compensation of women and non-white men than in the compensation of white male clergy. A similar disparity emerges from comparison of the distribution of salary levels in positions factored at the same level: median salaries for women clergy are 13 percent above the minimum levels, while median salaries for men are 26 percent above the minimum.

Women and non-white male clergy in the Presbytery of Baltimore are thus in positions associated with lower factors than are their white male colleagues, and are compensated at lower levels than their white male counterparts in positions with similar factors. Part of these differences in compensation may reflect differences in experience: the median time since ordination is six years less for women clergy (17 years) than for male clergy (23 years), and nine years less for non-white male clergy (15 years) than for white male clergy (24 years). We will continue our study of these data to explore other factors that may influence differences in compensation.

<sup>1</sup> The system of factoring used by the Baltimore Presbytery represents an attempt to rank clergy positions according to their complexity and the level of professional expertise expected. Factors for positions requiring ordained clergy range from a minimum of 520 to a maximum of 1070. Each year, the presbytery establishes median, minimum (80 percent of the median), and maximum salaries (120 percent of the median) for each factor. A more complete explanation of the factoring system used by the Presbytery of Baltimore is available online at <http://www.baltimorepresbytery.org/documents/Factoring-FAQ2006.pdf>.

Calvert Investment Principles: Women's Employment Equity

The Calvert Group, Ltd. has established seven principles as “a code of corporate conduct to empower, advance, and invest in women worldwide” ( See www.calvert.com/pdf/womensprinciples.pdf for the entire policy). Below is a list of the principles with some of the criteria Calvert uses to define those principles that are particularly relevant to this study of pay equity.

1. Disclosure, Implementation, and Monitoring: Corporations will promote and strive to attain gender equality in their operations and in their business and stakeholder relationships by adopting and implementing proactive policies that are publicly disclosed, monitored, and enforced.

In this regard, companies agree to take all reasonable steps to:

A. Publicize their commitment to these Principles through a CEO statement or comparably prominent means, and prominently display them in the workplace and/or make them available to all employees in a readily accessible and understandable form.

B. Be transparent in the implementation of these Principles, and promote their endorsement and implementation by affiliates, vendors, suppliers, customers, and others with whom they do business.

C. Engage in constructive dialogue with stakeholder groups, including non-governmental organizations (NGOs), business associations, investors, and the media on their progress in implementing the Principles.

D. Establish benchmarks to measure and monitor progress toward gender equality, and report results publicly.

E. Develop and implement company policies, procedures, training, and internal reporting processes to ensure observance and implementation of these Principles throughout the organization.

F. Establish an unbiased, non-retaliatory grievance policy allowing employees to make comments, recommendations, reports, or complaints concerning the treatment of women in the workplace.

G. Conduct periodic audits, self-evaluation, public disclosure, and reporting on status and progress made in the implementation of these Principles.

H. Ensure that these Principles are observed not only with respect to their own employees, but also in their relations with independent contractors, sub-contractors, home-based workers, vendors, and other non-employees with whom they do business.

2. Employment and Income: Corporations will promote and strive to attain gender equality by adopting and implementing wage, income, hiring, promotion and other employment policies that eliminate gender discrimination in all its forms.

In this regard, companies agree to take all reasonable steps to:

A. Pay the legal wage to all women.

B. Establish pay equity policies that pay comparable wages and benefits, including retirement security benefits, to men and women for comparable work.

C. Eliminate all forms of discrimination based on gender or cultural stereotypes, including wages, hours, benefits, job access and qualifications, working conditions, or other work-related privileges or activities.

D. Develop verifiable programs to hold managers accountable for attaining measurable progress in the hiring, training, retention, and promotion of women.

E. Prohibit discrimination based on a woman's marital, parental status, or reproductive status in making decisions regarding employment or promotion.

F. Implement reasonable and equitable policies regarding layoffs, contract work, and temporary work that do not disproportionately affect women.

G. Undertake concrete, verifiable actions to provide pregnant and post-natal women with employment security that allows for interruptions in their work for maternity, parental leave, and family-related responsibilities.

H. Facilitate or otherwise provide information regarding the availability of childcare or family care facilities or assistance to employees.

I. Strive to pay a living wage to all women.

3. Health, Safety, and Violence: Corporations will promote and strive to attain gender equality by adopting and implementing policies to secure the health, safety, and well-being of women workers.

7. Business, Supply Chain, and Marketing Practices: Corporations will promote and strive to attain gender equality by adopting and implementing proactive, non-discriminatory business, marketing, and supply chain policies and practices.

Appendix 3

Details of Analysis of Compensation Data for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

A. General Findings

Table 1 summarizes relevant information about the observations in this PC(USA) dataset. Most of the individuals in the dataset are Pastors (162 out of 264 reported cases); others are Associate Pastors (31), Temporary Supply (18), Stated Supply (16), Commissioned Lay Pastors (11), Interim Pastors (16), Interim Associate Pastors (2), VAL (4), and four are other employees in various positions. Women are less likely to be pastors than are men, and more likely to be interim pastors or temporary supply clergy. Whites and racial/ethnic group members are roughly equally likely to be pastors, but whites are less likely to be associate pastors and more likely to be commissioned lay pastors or temporary supply.

About one-quarter of women and men have one to ten years since date of ordination. Half of women clergy have eleven to twenty years since ordination, with the other quarter having twenty or more years. Men have much more seniority: one-quarter are in the middle range, and half have more than twenty years since ordination. Racial/ethnic clergy are more concentrated among those with only one to ten years since ordination, while whites are mostly in the eleven-to-twenty and twenty-or-more categories. Individual clergy take many paths to seminary and may have different experiences between seminary graduation and acceptance of a clergy position. Demographic groups with fewer average years since ordination are likely to be offered lower terms of call on the basis of their having less experience. If there are barriers to women and racial/ethnic groups becoming ordained, those structural impediments will have important impacts on women's and men's, and whites and racial/ethnic clergies' earnings.

Male clergy are more likely to be in large churches (more than 500 members) than are women, and whites are much more likely than racial/ethnic clergy to have access to those positions. Here again, structural barriers that restrict women and racial/ethnic clergy to smaller churches will have an impact in lowering earnings for these groups, as larger churches tend to have the resources to offer higher compensation.

Full-time clergy positions are filled more often by men than by women (89 percent of men, and 76 percent of women, work full-time), and more often by whites than by racial/ethnic clergy (86 percent and 79 percent, respectively). These differences in work-hours reduce women's and racial/ethnic clergy's earnings relative to men's and whites'.

B. Results of regression modeling

The dependent variable in our regression analysis is compensation, which is defined as salary plus housing.<sup>80</sup> The analysis indicates that being female or a racial/ethnic person reduces compensation, when controlling for other factors (Appendix Table 1).<sup>81</sup> That is, when comparing two individual clergy who have the same work schedule (full-time or part-time), work in the same size of congregation and in the same position, and in the same Synod, if one is a woman and the other a man, the woman earns less than the man; if one is a racial/ethnic person and the other a white person, the racial/ethnic individual earns less than the white person. As expected, working full-time, having more years since ordination, working for a larger congregation, and being a Pastor or Associate Pastor also increase compensation. Overall levels of compensation in some of the Synods in our dataset are lower than others, with Heartland and St. Andrew having the highest compensation in general.

Taken together, the factors included in the regression model explain more than half (58 percent) of the variation in terms among clergy in the PC(USA) dataset. The remainder is affected by factors that are not measured in the data available to the Resolution Team.

Coefficients that are statistically significant—where the regression model can confidently confirm that the reported relationship is not an artifact of chance—are indicated with ** or ***, depending on the strength of the factor’s statistical significance.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 09-08. Pay Equity and Just Compensation.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 09-08 be approved.

Item 09-09

A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century and Recognition of the Centennial of the “Social Creed of the Churches” of 1908—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008):

1. Approve the text below of “A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century” and its two-page background statement and rationale;

2. Honor the centennial of the original 1908 Social Creed by receiving and encouraging use of the video documentary, The Social Creed: Toward a New Social Awakening, 1908–2008 and the book of prayers entitled, Prayers for the New Social Awakening: Inspired by the New Social Creed (Louisville: Westminster/John Knox, 2008);

3. Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC), through the Presbyterian Washington Office, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and other appropriate offices, to publicize and interpret this “Social Creed” as a [~~concise consensus statement~~] [synopsis] of existing policy and to affirm its holistic vision of necessary changes for our society to meet the challenges of sustainability and globalization;

4. Direct the Office of the General Assembly to include a copy of the “Social Creed” and its background statement in summary reports of the General Assembly action, to share word of its approval with member communions of the National Council of Churches of Christ (NCCC), of the National Association of Evangelicals, and with the Roman Catholic Church, inviting them to join in this trans-confessional Christian affirmation, and to send a copy to each member of Congress;

5. Direct the Compassion, Peace, and Justice Ministries of the General Assembly Council to integrate “A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century” into its on-going educational and advocacy programs, and the Ecumenical Office of the Office of the General Assembly to include the Social Creed and its vision of Christian moral and soul convergence among the initiatives it lifts up in cooperative work with ecumenical partners and state and local councils of churches;

6. Encourage congregations, presbyteries, synods, seminaries, and colleges related to the church to study and discuss the “Social Creed,” and to do so jointly when possible with ecumenical partners, noting its support by the National Council of Churches of Christ and the concerns it shares with the “sung” Social Creed of the United Methodist Church, the “Covenant for a New America” of Sojourners/Call to Renewal, and with the “Covenant for Black America” developed at annual African American study forums by public affairs commentator, Tavis Smiley.

A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century

We churches of the United States have a message of hope for a fearful time. Just as the churches responded to the harshness of early twentieth century industrialization with a prophetic “Social Creed” in 1908, so in our era of globalization we offer a vision of a society that shares more and consumes less, seeks compassion over suspicion and equality over domination, and finds security in joined hands rather than massed arms. Inspired by Isaiah’s vision of a “peaceable kingdom,” we honor the dignity of every person and the intrinsic value of every creature, and pray and work for the day when none “labor in vain, or bear children for calamity” (Isa. 65:23). We do so as disciples of the One who came “that [all] may have life, and have it abundantly” (John 10:10), and stand in solidarity with Christians and with all who strive for justice around the globe.

In faith, responding to our Creator, we celebrate the full humanity of each woman, man, and child, all created in the divine image as individuals of infinite worth, by working for:

- Full civil, political, and economic rights for women and men of all races.
- Abolition of forced labor, human trafficking, and the exploitation of children.
- Employment for all, at a family-sustaining living wage, with equal pay for comparable work.
- The rights of workers to organize, and to share in workplace decisions and productivity growth.

- Protection from dangerous working conditions, with time and benefits to enable full family life.
- A system of criminal rehabilitation, based on restorative justice and an end to the death penalty.

In the love incarnate in Jesus, despite the world’s sufferings and evils, we honor the deep connections within our human family and seek to awaken a new spirit of community, by working for:

- Abatement of hunger and poverty, and enactment of policies benefiting the most vulnerable.
- High quality public education for all and universal, affordable, and accessible healthcare.
- An effective program of social security during sickness, disability, and old age.
- Tax and budget policies that reduce disparities between rich and poor, strengthen democracy, and provide greater opportunity for everyone within the common good.
- Just immigration policies that protect family unity, safeguard workers’ rights, require employer accountability, and foster international cooperation.
- Sustainable communities marked by affordable housing, access to good jobs, and public safety.
- Public service as a high vocation, with real limits on the power of private interests in politics.

In hope sustained by the Holy Spirit, we pledge to be peacemakers in the world and stewards of God’s good creation, by working for:

- Adoption of simpler lifestyles for those who have enough; grace over greed in economic life.
- Access for all to clean air and water and healthy food, through wise care of land and technology.
- Sustainable use of earth’s resources, promoting alternative energy sources and public transportation with binding covenants to reduce global warming and protect populations most affected.
- Equitable global trade and aid that protects local economies, cultures, and livelihoods.
- Peacemaking through multilateral diplomacy rather than unilateral force, the abolition of torture, and a strengthening of the United Nations and the rule of international law.
- Nuclear disarmament and redirection of military spending to more peaceful and productive uses.
- Cooperation and dialogue for peace and environmental justice among the world’s religions.

We—individual Christians and churches—commit ourselves to a culture of peace and freedom that embraces non-violence, nurtures character, treasures the environment, and builds community, rooted in a spirituality of inner growth with outward action. We make this commitment together—as members of Christ’s body, led by the one Spirit—trusting in the God who makes all things new.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2004 Referral: Item 08-18. 2004 Referral: Item 08-18. Commissioners’ Resolution. On Celebrating the “Social Creed” of the Churches and Considering a 21st Century Social Creed (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 18, 627–29).

This rationale begins with the background statement to be printed on two pages with the Social Creed.

Toward a New Social Awakening: The Role for a Twenty-First Century “Social Creed of the Churches”

“The Social Creed of the Churches,” endorsed in 1908 by the Federal Council of Churches, was their pledge to work together for a better, fairer, and more faithful United States. One hundred years ago, the explosion of industry and its impact on U.S. society called for a new focus in the churches’ ministry. Those in the churches sensitive to the human costs of industrialization saw in those costs a challenge to the fullness of the gospel, which is both personal and communal in dimension. The Social Gospel movement, evangelical at its heart, inspired by Jesus’ preaching of “the kingdom of God,” was acutely aware of the brutalities of new working conditions, the social tensions of assimilating millions of immigrants, and the loss of communal values in fast-growing cities.

More than one hundred years ago, workers caught in the machinery of early industrialization were ground down by twelve-hour shifts and seven-day workweeks. Families were broken by absent or exhausted parents. Workers with disabilities were summarily dismissed and devalued. Retired workers were left without pensions. Children worked when they should have been at school or at play. At the same time, enormous wealth was generated. That wealth, however, was distributed to a relative few, primarily the owners of industry.

Responding to this changing situation, the churches saw the need to work across denominational lines in pursuit of social change. At the formation of the Federal Council of Churches in 1908, the denominational representatives put in place social principles that were to guide the council's work in the succeeding years. The "social creed" was introduced by Methodist Frank Mason North, who had earlier written the great Social Gospel hymn, "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life." From North's report on "The Church and Modern Industry" was lifted up a section of fourteen principles and policies that were unanimously put into a short statement, the Social Creed, that was repeatedly affirmed, expanded, and adopted by various denominations in future years. It was to be a concise and practical summary of what a "Christ-like God" willed for those seeking "to reduce the hardships and uphold the dignity of labor."

Through the Social Creed, the churches declared that they would stand together and work toward addressing the needs of all workers. As a result of their commitment, they were able to influence our country in profoundly good ways. The churches' pledge of support for "the toilers of America" helped to abolish child labor and bring about worker safety, retirement security, health care, unemployment compensation, and more. In that prophetic witness, the churches' leaders anticipated Social Security, the social protections of the New Deal, and more recent health and environmental protections. For these reasons, they deserve our thanks for their brave witness and our celebration of it by making a new commitment in the twenty-first century. It is also highly appropriate that the National Council of Churches of Christ, successor to the Federal Council, claim this heritage.

Similar economic problems persist today: injustice in the workplace, growing social inequities, and the intolerably high percentage of people living in poverty in the United States and in other nations. The majority of people around the world do not have access to adequate health care. Workers worldwide continue to earn low wages, fear occupational hazards and the loss of employment or other penalties when they need or use time to care for family members. These and many other problems call to the Christian conscience and to the moral imperative in every human heart.

However, in the twenty-first century we are also confronting complex new issues that reach beyond economics and call for unprecedented global cooperation and new governance structures. Some challenges seem greater, as the costs and consequences of war and the persistence of racism meet massive environmental degradation. Global warming threatens our very existence. We recognize more clearly divisions of wealth etched along lines of race and gender, and an undeniably "racialized" U.S. criminal justice system. Too many people seem resigned to accept the present shape of our global market system and fail to see that any alternatives may exist. The responsibilities of both governments and citizens for the common good are often ignored or denied. Divisions between the rich and the poor grow wider by the day. In too many places, corruption in politics rises steadily and government competence declines. Based on enduring Christian principles, we seek to address these and other challenges in a coherent and hope-filled way.

We celebrate earlier efforts best by extending the ecumenical witness for justice in the workplace, promoting greater social equality, and reducing poverty. In hope that we too can affect change, we call upon concerned Christians to pledge their commitment to a new venture of cooperation through "A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century." This Social Creed remains concerned with economic issues but also addresses issues that fell outside the earlier reformers' line of vision. This is not a doctrinal creed; it is a shared affirmation that points to the heritage of redemptive energy and theological ethics in every faith tradition. Many elements recall the 1908 Social Creed; "the living wage," the "abolition" of child labor, "the abatement of poverty," the concern for public goods and laws, and the one-page framework that makes for maximum usability.

"A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century" is strongly grounded in God's promises of life in abundance for us and the whole creation and focused on the themes of globalization and sustainability. It is more explicitly theological than the 1908 statement, and reflects the churches' learnings from Christian Realism and Liberation Theologies, and from the strong resource of ecumenical social thought. It joins a public conversation with international ecumenical declarations, several U.S. "covenants," and the Millennium Goals and Earth Charter associated with the United Nations. It is also written in the face of wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, and the danger of additional war in the Middle East and elsewhere. It is written to build consensus in the United States, and does not address every current issue.

Language chosen for the creed may be seen as optimistic by some, but is intended to express the gospel conviction that real freedom and power in life consist in sharing, rather than in an abundance of things. The gospel stories witness to Jesus' prophetic challenge to the established social and economic order. Jesus of Nazareth came not to be served, but to give his life for others: his life and example still challenge us to confront injustice and preach the Good News. By supporting "A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century,” the endorsing church bodies and individual Christians affirm that the moral vision and tradition of action identified with the Social Creed of 1908 can help guide our ministries in the decades ahead.

Assignment from the 2004 General Assembly, Reaffirmed in 2006

The 216th General Assembly (2004) considered and unanimously approved by voice vote, with amendment, a commissioners’ resolution on celebrating the centennial of the “Social Creed of the Churches” adopted in 1908 at the founding of the Federal Council of Churches, and considering the preparation of a new Social Creed for the twenty-first century (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 18, 627–28). A final report was envisioned for the 218th General Assembly (2008), incorporating a proposal for broader participation and educational and liturgical resources from the 217th General Assembly (2006). This is in answer to that request.

The action of the 216th General Assembly (2004) was in three parts, consistent with the ecumenical, ethical, and educational nature of the original Social Creed (re-printed following this brief narrative).

1. The Office of the General Assembly was directed to consult with ecumenical partners and the National Council of Churches and other appropriate bodies to find ways to honor the role of the churches in advocating an end to child labor, a six-day week, occupational safety, retirement security, a living wage, and other concerns that “a Christ-like God” was believed to want for all Americans.

2. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy was directed to initiate a survey of key Christian principles to guide twenty-first-century Presbyterians and others in addressing major concerns such as the lack of health insurance, the outsourcing of jobs to countries without human rights or environmental safeguards, and the impact of growing economic inequality on our democracy. It was urged, in doing this, to utilize the Presbyterian Panel, literature surveys, volunteer experts, and past General Assembly statements.

3. Both bodies were directed, in cooperation with the Office of Theology and Worship, to develop ways to celebrate the centennial and to consider the possible goals, basic commitments, and value of an updated social creed for the twenty-first century.

The Social Creed Resolution Study Team

The ACSWP appointed a Social Creed Resolution Study Team that included the following persons: Gary Dorrien, Nile Harper, Carrie L. Harris, Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty, Ann Rhee Menzie, Richard Poethig, Ronald Stone, Lidia Serrata-Ledesma (chair), with Eugene TeSelle as a consultant historian. Patricia Chapman was added to the study team in 2006. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy thanks them for their service and also thanks the many congregations and individuals who discussed the text and provided comments.

The members of the study team represented a broad base of experience and insight, with several experts on church life and witness at the turn of that earlier century and others unfamiliar with what was once a very influential stance of the church (updated four times!). The team reviewed a collection of the previous social creeds and several commentaries on these materials, hearing from several historians and ethicists. The relation of the “social creed” as a form of theologically grounded social witness was contrasted with the short foundational ecumenical creeds of the early church, including the Nicene and Apostles’ Creed in The Book of Confessions.

The Reformation Era and twentieth century confessions in The Book of Confessions themselves contain much ethical instruction on work and commerce drawn from Scripture: any twenty-first century update of the Social Creed needed to be consistent with that base and more recent General Assembly policy studies. The Office of Theology and Worship confirmed that any “social creed” would not be considered a doctrinal creed, and found the current text to reflect the basic theology of the church.

The resolution team also approved a Presbyterian Panel questionnaire circulated in November of 2005, asking for the views of that balanced sample of ministers and elders on the kinds of topics considered in 1908 and in subsequent work of the church, including the 1983 study of the church’s relations with transnational corporations (by which many more Presbyterians are employed than were a century ago). The results of the Presbyterian Panel (posted on the ACSWP website: <http://www.pcusa.org/acswp/socialcreed.htm>) show strong support for virtually all the positions later embodied in the Social Creed. The study group was convinced that it would be worthwhile to prepare a new Social Creed for the twenty-first century in conjunction with the celebration of its predecessor, thereby illuminating consistent social values and concerns of the church.

While this conviction was developing among Presbyterians, the United Methodist Church also determined that the centennial of the 1908 creed was worth commemorating and, through its Board of Church and Society, appointed a task force chaired by Bishop Susan Morrison to coordinate that work. Similarly, within the Justice and Compassion Unit of the National Council of Churches, a task force was put together, chaired by Dean Michael Kinnamon of Eden Theological Seminary (a Disciples of Christ minister), including members from the Coptic Orthodox, Methodist, Reformed, United Church of Christ, and Roman Catholic Churches, staffed by a National Baptist. Professor Kinnamon was subsequently elected general secretary of the NCCC.

Acknowledging the different ways these and other communions may lay claim to the Social Creed tradition and formulate its relevance for today, the Presbyterian team invited the others to schedule their meetings with some overlap at a common location in March of 2006. Copies of the 1908 and 1972 Methodist Social Creeds flank the main inside door to their Washington Office building. Both texts are regularly re-printed with their updated Social Principles. Partly because of this regular tradition, and partly to attract a younger audience, they determined to celebrate the Social Creed centennial with a more poetic version that could be put to music. This was seen as a complement to the Presbyterian and ecumenical consensus document that Methodists strongly supported in the NCCC process.

The Presbyterian Heritage, Christian Cooperation, and Growing Convergence

While Presbyterians, Methodists, and the other denominations can take pride in having spoken clearly on matters of great social importance years before our constructive proposals were enacted into law, the centennial is not simply to celebrate our being “right” or “ahead of our time.” The 1908 Social Creed was part of a Social Gospel creativity that continued in Christian Realist form after World War I, providing Christian vision of a fairer, more stable economy even during the “Great Depression.”

The Presbyterian church was the first denomination to set up a national-level ministry to workers and immigrants in 1903, which was praised and imitated by other denominations. That office was directed by Charles Stelzle who also developed the Labor Temple for ministry and outreach to workers. General Assemblies of the PCUSA approved adaptations of the Social Creed in 1910, 1914, 1920, and 1932. Then, after World War II, the church both grew and spoke prophetically on justice issues, including racial equality. Marshal Scott, following a mandate from the 1944 General Assembly, established the Presbyterian Institute of Industrial Relations (PIIR) at McCormick Theological Seminary in 1945, directed by Scott and later by Richard Poethig; it trained a diverse body of ministers and some laypersons committed to research and action for social justice, particularly in industrial and urban areas. Scott and Henry Jones also extended this work internationally through the urban-industrial mission of the Council on Ecumenical Mission and Relations (COEMAR). The PIIR and the international dimension were then united in the Institute on the Church in Urban Industrial Society (ICUIS), linked to the World Council of Churches and also based at McCormick Seminary. This is not to minimize the sincere spiritual struggle of Christians on all sides of the social changes of the twentieth century, but to affirm an impressive institutional and educational commitment to relate Christianity to business and labor.

It is worth including in the celebration of the Social Creed a fiftieth anniversary, that of the First Asian Conference on Industrial Evangelism held in Manila, Philippines, in June 1958. That event brought folks from fifteen Asian countries who were engaged with industrial workers and their unions in their countries and led to deeper understanding of the working poor overseas. The movement spread and became a major focus for the Christian Council of Asia and became a global network with work in Africa and Latin America. The World Council of Churches (WCC) picked it up in the early 1960s and organized an urban-industrial desk that tied all of the networks together. The current head of the WCC, Sam Kobia of Kenya, came out of this network.

General Assemblies of all three predecessor churches now reunited made many strong statements during the last century, brought together in the current Presbyterian Social Witness Policy Compilation (see Advisory Committee website: <http://www.pcusa.org/acswp>). Few statements have had the impact of the original Social Creed, influencing the presidential election context in 1912, for example, and pre-figuring much important legislation protecting workers, persons with disabilities, and retired persons. In 1933, at the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration of the Federal Council of Churches, President Franklin Roosevelt commended the churches for their social teaching. Subsequent church witness, however, has not only influenced legislation but included the development of creative programs, such as Hunger, Peacemaking, and Self-Development of People. Newer church efforts encourage investments in ecologically safe development enterprises and purchases of “sweat-free” and “fair-trade” products.

General Assemblies (and many congregations and members) have also endorsed campaigns for economic and social justice that have been both controversial and effective: the Taco Bell boycott, protest against Talisman Oil in Sudan, corporate responsibility efforts including selective divestment from South Africa to help end apartheid, and support for Truth and Reconciliation Commissions in South Africa and several countries in Central America. The Social Creed concept is not a specific campaign like these, but an expression of core Christian values and goals for how we treat each other in economic and social life. The advocacy and social service efforts by this denomination and others suggest that our members appreciate both strategic and “hands-on” ways to promote justice; the updated Social Creed can help affirm these concerns in a concise set of clear Christian commitments.

Many self-described evangelicals in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and others are equally concerned with issues of economic justice. Jim Wallis of the Sojourners Community is filling churches or auditoriums wherever he speaks. The Sojourners/Call to Renewal “Covenant for a New America,” while considerably longer than the one page Social Creed, focuses on solutions to the scandal of poverty in the United States. The National Association of Evangelicals adopted on October 7, 2004, a statement entitled, “For the Health of the Nation: An Evangelical call to Civic Responsibility,” and sponsored a book edited by Ronald J. Sider and Diane Knippers, entitled Toward an Evangelical Public Policy (BakerBooks, 2006). Similarly, a strong collection of essays on the new Social Creed, To Do Justice: Engaging Progressive Christians in Soul Action, edited by Presbyterian scholars Rebecca Todd Peters and Elizabeth Hinson-Hasty (Westminster/John Knox, 2008), both revisits and expands upon themes of the Social Gospel for this new century.

Finally, in the twenty-first century we are increasingly aware of what is being said by Roman Catholics, Jews, Muslims, and secular movements. The new Social Creed is intentionally more inclusive than was the 1908 Social Creed itself, putting an essential commitment to racial and gender equality in the first of its points. We note the “Covenant with Black America,” developed out of annual forums on “The State of Black America” organized by radio and television personality Tavis Smiley. A multi-faith effort, A Spiritual Covenant for America, has been developed by Rabbi Michael Lerner. All uses of “covenant” language indicate the desire for something stronger than a social contract, and recall the comprehensive work of Robert N. Bellah and others in The Broken Covenant (1975), Habits of the Heart (1985), and The Good Society (1991). Yet, in this pluralistic and globalizing environment, the advisory committee and its study team believe it is all the more important for any new social creed to be an expression of Christian conviction, reflective of Christ’s Good News to all people—thus the decision to join with Protestant and Orthodox Christians in the National Council of Churches of Christ (NCCC) to show a unity of Christian conviction and to strengthen the impact of new Social Creed.

A Positive Statement of What the Churches Stand For

The Social Creed of 1908 was not perfect, and reflected the limits of our church leadership of the time. While it dealt sympathetically with the problems faced by labor, including women and children and immigrants, its perspective was white, Protestant, and middle class. Our predecessors not only wanted to help lift up those less fortunate, but to give them Sabbath time for worship and family life, free from desperation and degradation. This spirituality was part of its effectiveness, despite its not mentioning other major issues such as lynchings in the South, the Prohibition cause, or support for women’s suffrage. The work of Presbyterian historian, Ronald C. White, Liberty and Justice for All (Westminster/John Knox, 2002), has illuminated the support for racial justice among Social Gospel leaders and the role of Black Social Gospelers, arguably including the early W.E.B. Dubois. We would be wise to remember A Brief Statement of Faith’s word that we “hear the voices of those long silenced” as we seek to address effectively the mainstream of our culture.

Allowing for—and seeking to minister to—a very changed context, the new Social Creed follows the example of the 1908 Social Creed in its positive phrasing of what the churches stand “for.” In its ongoing study of globalization, the advisory committee is aware of the statements of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC), meeting at Accra, Ghana, in 2004, and the World Council of Churches’ “AGAPE” document received at its February 2006 assembly in Porto Alegre, Brazil. These are passionate statements of Christian solidarity in the face of economic globalization pressures and enormous suffering among the poor in many countries. Those affirmations illuminate our understanding of discipleship in world perspective, but they are not the relatively short statement of Christian goals and principles that is a social creed. The ACSWP continues to prepare a study guide for the 2006 General Assembly resolution, “Just Globalization: Justice, Ownership, and Accountability,” and, as a member of the WARC, participates in the Covenanting for Justice program examining the implications of the Accra Confession (which was received by the 217th General Assembly (2006)).

As the new Social Creed and its background statement note, globalization provides a context similar to what industrialization provided for the original Social Creed. Much of the U.S. economy is now “post-industrial,” based on information and seeking maximum flexibility in trading relationships. Back then, transportation advances added to the productivity of new inventions; today technological advance is still crucial, but the cyber-mobility of capital has vastly overshadowed the influence of labor. State socialism, in Marxist and non-Marxian forms, is now largely gone, but most developed nations have many more social protections and social equality than the United States, with approximately a seventh of our population in poverty and almost one sixth without health insurance. Then the task of reformers was to deal with national problems and gain laws and regulations at the national level; now it is also to deal with transnational problems and seek transnational solutions.

The place of the “mainline” Protestant church has also changed, though the resolution team does not disparage either the potential impact or the concern for integrity that “our” voice still carries. We know many are discouraged about the future, torn between self-doubt and ideological denial of the suffering of others. It is certainly not possible in any one statement by one or more churches to recapture the courageous optimism of the Social Gospel movement, some of whose leaders had as much utopian hope as egalitarian outrage. United States citizens today, in comparison to citizens of most other countries, feel greater insecurity about terrorism and the economic impact of trade and budget deficits. Corruption and cronyism also seem pervasive at the top levels of corporations and government, which leads to a moral cynicism at unshared sacrifices, especially by those involved in the Iraq war. Illegal immigrants, totaling as many as twelve million, though resented by some, also bear large burdens in the low wage sector of the economy. All of these topics are complex: the challenge in a social creed is to focus on the moral issues and affirm constructive directions that reflect the hope of the Gospel.

One successful example of the input of church witness around an old social creed concept is the “Let Justice Roll” movement to increase the minimum wage to what the Social Creed calls a “living wage.” In the 2006 election, all six states that had a “living wage” referendum on their ballots passed them, yielding literally millions of dollars for the working poor and helping to get Congress to increase the national minimum wage.

The Social Creed of 1908 came relatively late in what is called The Progressive Era so that it built consensus on some matters that had been struggled over since the 1880s. It did not give full expression to the sense of outrage and moral demands that had given rise to the era; neither did it say all that could have been said about Jesus’ teachings and the transforming work of the Holy Spirit. We also cannot speak to every social concern of our time, but present a holistic vision and one explicitly grounded in Christian faith. Focused as it was, however, the original Social Creed influenced the way Christians and others saw the world of work. Most of the churches’ stands seemed reasonable and decent and were enacted into law—in some cases after being struck down at first by a very conservative Supreme Court. Other elements in that 1908 statement still await fulfillment. Times do change, and expectations of government and corporations and individuals and churches and climates change.

A centennial offers an opportunity to reflect on the process of change, perhaps to count the blessings of some progress, and perhaps also to count the cost of new efforts. The invitation of the commissioners of this 218th General Assembly (2008), should the recommendations above be approved, is that we remember an insightful and encouraging act of witness, and that we try to offer a similar statement of conviction and hope to our time, and to our God.

Appendix A

The Social Creed of 1908 Federal Council of Churches [Now, National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.]

We deem it the duty of all Christian people to concern themselves directly with certain practical industrial problems. To us it seems that the Churches must stand—

For equal rights and complete justice for all men in all stations of life.

For the right of all men to the opportunity for self-maintenance, a right ever to be wisely and strongly safe-guarded against encroachments of every kind.

For the right of workers to some protection against the hardships often resulting from the swift crisis of industrial change.

For the principle of conciliation and arbitration in industrial dissensions.

For the protection of the worker from dangerous machinery, occupational disease, injuries and mortality.

For the abolition of child labor.

For such regulation of the conditions of toil for women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of the community.

For the suppression of the “sweating system.”

For the gradual and reasonable reduction of the hours of labor to the lowest practical point, and for that degree of leisure for all which is a condition of the highest human life.

For a release from employment one day in seven.

For a living wage as a minimum in every industry, and for the highest wage that each industry can afford.

For the most equitable division of the products of industry that can ultimately be devised.

For suitable provision for the old age of the workers and for those incapacitated by injury.

For the abatement of poverty.

To the toilers of America and to those who by organized effort are seeking to lift the crushing burdens of the poor, and to reduce the hardships and uphold the dignity of labor, this council sends the greeting of human brotherhood and the pledge of sympathy and of help in a cause which belongs to all who follow Christ.

Item 09-09 A Social Creed for the Twenty First Century and Recognition of the Centennial of the Social Creed of the Churches’ of 1908.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 09-09 be approved.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 09-09 is the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s recommendation on the “Social Creed for the 21st Century.”

The Advocacy Committee on Women’s Concerns (ACWC) supports the recommendation to approve “A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century.” While we would like more emphasis on women’s justice issues, we affirm its inclusiveness and support its acceptance. Ecumenical documents require compromise and negotiation. The Social Creed makes bold stances relevant in this new century. We concur in this celebration of our unity and commitment to justice. This document will support the whole body of Christ in mutual study and support our work for a more just world.

Item 09-10

[The assembly approved Item 09-10 with amendment. See pp. 54, 55.]

The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008):

1. Approve the study and recommendations, entitled, “The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming,” to revise existing energy policy, “The Power to Speak Truth to Power” (hereinafter, referred to as the “1981 Energy Policy”). [The 1981 Energy Policy was jointly adopted by the 121st General Assembly (1981) of the Presbyterian Church in the United States (Minutes, Presbyterian Church in the United States, 1981, Part I, pp. 122, 413–25), and the 193rd General Assembly (1981) of The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (Minutes, The United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, 1981, Part I, pp. 42, 86, 293–306).]

2. Urge individuals and families in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

a. Pray, asking for God’s forgiveness and for the power and guidance to enjoy and care for creation in new ways.

b. Study energy sources, their advantages and disadvantages, and the impacts they have on human communities, all species, and the ecological systems that support life on Earth.

c. Practice energy conservation as a form of thanksgiving and sharing by adjusting thermostats, walking, biking, carpooling, using mass transit, turning off lights and appliances, recycling, minimizing the use of plastic water bottles and other wasteful packaging, etc.

d. Purchase energy-efficient appliances and fuel-efficient vehicles for use at home and at work.

e. Purchase sustainably grown food and other products from local producers in order to reduce the energy associated with producing, and shipping goods.

f. Reduce consumption of meat because the production of grain fed to most livestock is fossil fuel-intensive and their waste emits methane, which is a potent greenhouse gas.

g. Purchase Green-e certified energy and/or carbon offsets in the pursuit of a carbon-neutral lifestyle. Green-e certification ensures these payments result in additional installations of renewable energy generation capacity as well as verifiable and permanent environmental benefits.

h. Invest personal funds in the renewable energy industry and also in companies that demonstrate concern for the well-being of their workers, their communities, and the environment.

i. Advocate for change and leadership within the church and in all forms of government regarding energy policy and global climate change.

3. With regard to the councils[, governing bodies,] and agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the 218th General Assembly (2008):

a. Urges synods and presbyteries to become models of energy-efficient institutions and proponents of renewable energy by

(1) stocking resource centers with information about energy issues;

(2) working with the New Church Development Committee to ensure that all new and remodeled churches meet high-efficiency standards;

(3) strengthening support for Stewardship of Creation Enablers, inviting them to provide workshops on energy and related concerns, and consulting with them to provide carbon-neutral meeting sites and transportation plans whenever possible;

(4) advocating before local, state, and federal governments for public policies that encourage energy efficiency and renewable energy generation; and

(5) adopting environmental education and energy conservation as high priorities at all Presbyterian camps and conference centers.

b. Urges the “Restoring Creation” program to establish a Presbyterian Green Energy Fund, which would help congregations and other organizations in our church reduce their carbon footprint through investments in energy efficiency, renewable energy production, and Green-e certified carbon offsets.

c. Urges the Office of the General Assembly to make future meetings as carbon neutral as possible (considering climate, travel requirements, amenities, and energy conservation efforts by hotels, conference centers, and academic institutions).

d. Urges the General Assembly Council, the Presbyterian Foundation, and the Board of Pensions to continue to improve the energy efficiency of the Louisville, Jeffersonville, Philadelphia, and other national agency offices.

e. Urges the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to expand efforts to engage businesses on energy efficiency and conservation in manufacturing, transport, and product design; to work with companies on appropriate technology applications, including co-generation, wind, solar, biomass, geothermal, and low-head hydroelectric; to support solutions to the problem of nuclear waste; and to advocate that utilities establish incentives to reduce electricity, oil, and gas usage while also eliminating barriers for small power producers to interconnect with the power grid.

f. Urges the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., to continue to encourage energy efficiency, renewable energy technologies, and new and mixed uses such as adding generating capacity or housing to underused city facilities.

g. Urges presidents of Presbyterian-related colleges and universities to consider becoming a signatory of the American College and University Presidents Climate Commitment, which obligates these schools to become carbon neutral in the future and to integrate sustainability into the curriculum.

h. Urges Presbyterian-related seminaries and conference centers to make environmental education on global climate change and energy a part of their curricula; to take measures to reduce energy consumption; and to encourage holistic thinking about the relationships between technology and nature.

i. Urges the Stated Clerk and other people representing the PC(USA) in ecumenical programs and initiatives to explore and develop whenever possible joint statements and studies on energy policy with other communions or councils of communions, and the General Assembly agencies to join in appropriate coalitions with non-church bodies to reinforce these measures of practical discipleship.

4. Concerning the church’s social responsibility regarding U.S. energy policy, the 218th General Assembly (2008):

a. Endorses and approves the following principles and stances that will guide our church’s advocacy work regarding policy discussions and legislative proposals to revise energy policy in the context of global climate change:

With our Lord, we will stand with “the least of these” (Matt. 25:40) and advocate for the poor and oppressed in present and future generations who are often the victims of environmental injustice and who are least able to mitigate the impact of global warming that will fall disproportionately upon them.

As citizens of the United States, which has historically produced more greenhouse gases than any other country, and which is currently responsible for over a fifth of the world’s annual emissions, we implore our nation to accept its moral responsibility to address global warming.

In agreement with four prior General Assemblies (202nd, 210th, 211th, and 215th) that have called on the U.S. government to ratify the Convention on Climate Change and the Kyoto Protocol, we ask the U.S. government to do nothing less than repent of its efforts to block consensus and to work with the international community as it develops a binding agreement to replace the Kyoto Protocol when it expires in 2012.

As advocates for justice, we reject the claim that all nations should shoulder an equal measure of the burden associated with mitigating climate change. Industrialized nations like the United States that have produced most of the emissions over the last three centuries deserve to shoulder the majority of the burden. Rapidly industrializing nations like China and India with very low per capita rates of energy consumption and greenhouse gas emissions should not be expected to bear an equal share of the burden. Our church challenges all nations to embrace their common but different responsibilities with regard to dealing with climate change.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) supports comprehensive, mandatory, and aggressive emission reductions that aim to limit the increase in Earth's temperature to 2 degrees Celsius or less from pre-industrial levels. Legislation should focus on the short-term goal of reducing U.S. greenhouse gas emissions 20 percent from 1990 levels by 2020, and 80 percent from 1990 levels by 2050.

In order to achieve these targets, we support legislative and policy proposals that:

(1) Internalize the social and environmental costs related to greenhouse gas emissions in the prices of fossil fuels. A preferred way to capture these costs would be through an initial auction and continued trade of a fixed number of emissions allowances in a "cap and trade" approach applied to all sectors of the economy. Affirming "the polluter pays" principle, emissions allowances should be sold because giving them away simply rewards the largest polluters. While the initial price may need to be low at the outset to avoid adverse economic repercussions, price caps defeat the purpose of harnessing the market to achieve this social and ecological good. A separate tax based on the carbon content of fossil fuels could compliment a cap and trade approach, but it should not replace it because a carbon tax lacks a guaranteed cap on total emissions. Revenues generated from either or both approaches should be utilized nationally to redress the regressive impact of higher energy prices on people who are poor, to increase funds for public transportation, to increase research and development as well as investment in renewable energy, and to encourage the purchase of energy efficient appliances and vehicles. Internationally, the United States needs to contribute funds to help poorer nations adapt to the social dislocation and ecological devastation caused by global climate change.

(2) Shift subsidies and financial incentives toward industries specializing in renewable energy and energy efficiency and away from the fossil fuel and nuclear power industries. One vital step would be to extend for ten years the federal tax credit for production of electricity from wind, solar, geothermal, closed-loop and open-loop biomass, landfill gas, and small irrigation power facilities. Similar incentives at the state and county level should be reauthorized and expanded. Subsidies can also influence personal consumption decisions. For example, "feebates" require purchasers of fuel-inefficient vehicles to pay a fee; these funds are then utilized to offer purchasers of fuel-efficient vehicles a rebate on the purchase price. Federal research and development grants are another important financial incentive. These funds need to be increased, and a much larger percentage must be dedicated to renewable energy, alternative fuels, and energy efficiency. Funding for these measures can be made revenue-neutral by reducing subsidies to the oil, gas, and nuclear power industries.

(3) Adopt significantly increased efficiency standards for all energy consuming appliances, buildings, and vehicles. Recently modest improvements have been made to federal laws regarding the energy efficiency of buildings and appliances as well as the nation's Corporate Automotive Fuel Economy Standards (CAFE). These increases are overdue and much needed, but states like California and New York should not be blocked from raising these standards if they wish to do so. Increased efficiency and fuel economy standards should be based on the best science available and in dialogue with the relevant industries, but ultimately legislated standards are more productive than voluntary goals negotiated with industries. In addition, public scrutiny must be brought to bear on regulatory agencies to ensure that they are insulated from undue industry influence.

(4) Mandate that an increasing percentage of the nation's energy supply be produced renewably and sustainably. More than half the nation's states have adopted renewable portfolio standards that impose differing mandates on energy providers. Not surprisingly, most of the investment in renewable energy production is taking place in these states. Adoption of a 20 percent national Renewable Energy Standard (RES) by 2020 would build on the success in the states. Environmental problems associated with ethanol production related to the federal Renewable Fuels Standard (RFS), however, indicate there can be dangers associated with ratcheting standards up too quickly. Any mandate must ensure that the energy is produced renewably and sustainably.

(5) Remove market barriers for producers of renewable energy. These barriers include expensive and overly complicated requirements for connecting to the electricity grid, insufficient transmission line capacity, and extremely low power purchase rates based on avoided costs from fossil fuel power plants that are not yet accountable for their impact on global warming. Both Germany and Japan have stimulated the renewable energy industry in their nations through requiring net billing and also mandating higher "feed-in" rates. Such measures would stimulate investment in residential solar and wind power in the United States and help restore the nation as a leader in technological innovation. Other initiatives to expedite transmission capacity are also critical to the expansion of renewable energy in the nation.

(6) Encourage decentralized and distributed power generation. Decentralized, residential renewable energy systems, and distributed generation from community wind farms can relieve pressure on the power grid, create new jobs, and empower local communities. State and federal tax credits are one way to encourage investment in decentralized and distributed renewable energy production. Flexible financing schemes are also valuable. The state of Minnesota has pioneered a unique approach to community-based economic development (C-BED), which has resulted in the largest number of community-owned wind farms in the nation.

(7) Place a moratorium on all new coal-fired and nuclear power plants until related environmental concerns are addressed. Given the predominant role carbon dioxide plays in global warming and climate change, and given that coal-fired power plants are responsible for 40 percent of the nation's carbon dioxide emissions, it would be irresponsible to build new coal-fired power plants or coal-to-oil technologies until it can be demonstrated that the carbon can be captured economically and sequestered permanently. Similarly, given the extremely toxic danger that spent nuclear fuel poses to future generations for thousands of years, it is irresponsible to build new nuclear power plants until a permanent means of disposing of this waste is placed into service.

(8) Limit exploration and exploitation of new fossil fuel supplies to parts of the nation where this can be done without adverse damage to people and the environment. As the climate in the Arctic warms, it is doubtful that the economic benefits of drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge can outweigh the environmental damage that this will do to one of the nation's most beautiful and wild places. Another example of such a limit would be the ecological devastation associated with mountaintop mining in Appalachia.

(9) Support a systemic shift to rail-based public transportation and urban planning that emphasizes mass transit. These measures would discourage urban sprawl and the depletion of water and energy resources, especially in the Southwest. Farmland in and around cities should be preserved to maintain and increase the capacity for local food production. Support for public transportation will also require substantial funding to repair the nation's highways, bridges, and dams. Efforts should be focused on increasing the quality of the nation's transportation and energy infrastructure, not on increasing the size of it.

(10) Revise U.S. national security policies. Decrease attempts to control oil resources owned by other nations and the profligate use of energy supplies to enforce inevitably temporary as well as massively tragic military interventions. Increase the authority of science-based international standards for addressing the issue of global climate change. Strive to decouple nuclear power from nuclear weapons production so as not to encourage a new round of nuclear proliferation.

b. Expresses gratitude to climate scientists in government, industry, academia and the United Nations, and to environmental public-interest groups and far-sighted political leaders, for their steadfast commitment to the common good and future welfare of all species.

c. Directs the Stated Clerk, the Presbyterian Washington Office, the Presbyterian United Nations Office, the Environmental Justice Office, and other General Assembly representatives to advocate for this approach to national energy policy before Congress, the Executive branch, state legislatures, and regulatory agencies, including those specifically involved in the areas of climate change and international cooperation, with the goal of restoring the United States of America to a leadership position in taking responsibility for reducing the scale and speed of global climate change.

Rationale

These recommendations and the supporting study document are in response to the following referral approved by the 214th General Assembly (2002): Overture 02-57. On Revising the Denominational Policy on the Issue of Energy (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 72 and 596).

Introduction

To imagine the fullness of God is to talk about energy. From beginning to end, the Bible is replete with images of energy and divine activity. In the first verses of Genesis "a wind from God swept over the face of the waters" inaugurating God's creation of the world (Gen. 1:2).<sup>2</sup> In the last chapter of Revelation "the river of the water of life" flows from the throne of God to water the trees of life which grow along its banks, and whose twelve kinds of fruit are for the healing of the nations (Revelations 22).

Energy is central to God's work as Creator, Redeemer, and Sanctifier. In the first creation account God works for six days to create the world, which God proclaims "very good" (Gen. 1:31). The second creation account emphasizes that the first human being (Adam) is created from energy-intensive and life-sustaining humus (adamah) (Genesis 2). God's redeeming and liberating work is also described in dramatic and energetic ways. After parting the Red Sea, God leads the freed Hebrew slaves in a pillar of cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night (Ex. 13:21). The prophet Amos compares God's quest for justice to the powerful force of a waterfall and the might of a raging river that clears everything from its path (Amos 5:24). Finally, God's gift of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost is preceded by "a sound like the rush of a violent wind" after which "tongues, as of fire" rested on each of the disciples (Acts 2:1-3).

God provides energy in abundance for all whom God has made (Ps. 145:15). Both the birds of the air and the fish of the sea first receive the same blessing God bestows on human beings—to be fruitful and multiply (Gen. 1:22). As the people of God wander in the wilderness after the Exodus, God sends "enough" manna each day to sustain the community (Exodus 16). The jubilee legislation in Exodus and Leviticus stressed the needs of the poor and wild animals to eat from fields left fallow every seven years because all creatures are entitled to the energy they need to live. In the Gospel of John, Jesus proclaims that he has come so that all "may have life, and have it abundantly" (John 10:10). Jesus demonstrates this in the feeding of the five thousand, where all are fed and there are twelve baskets of food left over (Mark 6:39-44). Paul summarizes: "God is able to provide you with every blessing in abundance, so that by always having enough of everything, you may share abundantly in every good work" (2 Cor. 9:8).

There can be no greater measure of God's abundant provision than the energy provided by Earth's sun. Each hour of every day the sun delivers more energy to Earth than human beings consume in an entire year. Renewable energy sources can provide almost six times more power than human communities currently consume from all energy sources.<sup>3</sup> Unlike virtually all other species, however, human beings in the modern era have not learned how to live in harmony with current solar energy. Instead, human communities have grown and some have prospered over the past three centuries by tapping into banked solar energy that has been buried for millions of years beneath Earth's surface.

Today, heavy reliance on these fossil fuels (coal, oil, and natural gas) has produced grave threats to justice, peace, and the integrity of creation. The American Lung Association estimates more than 150 million people in the United States live in areas where poor air quality due to the combustion of fossil fuels puts their health at risk.<sup>4</sup> Those who bear the brunt of this pollution are asthmatics, the elderly, the very young, and those who live nearest polluting industrial facilities or busy highways, generally the poor and often racial minorities. Economically, the rising cost of petroleum fuels has impacted all Americans. The average price of gasoline has more than doubled since 2002, rising to over $3 a gallon.<sup>5</sup> Persons in low-income households often must choose between paying their energy bills or buying food and medicine. This is unjust.

Politically, various studies estimate that the U.S. spends between $55 billion and nearly $100 billion each year on the military to secure oil supplies around the world.<sup>6</sup> These estimates do not include more than $100 billion spent each year since 2003 for the war in Iraq, which has the world's third largest proven reserves of oil.<sup>7</sup> Recently the National Petroleum Council warned that international energy development and trade are more likely to be influenced by geopolitical considerations and less by market factors.<sup>8</sup> President Bush acknowledged this reality in his 2006 State of the Union address when he remarked: "America is addicted to oil, which is often imported from unstable parts of the world."<sup>9</sup> Our dependence on fossil fuels is a threat to peace.

There are also serious environmental problems associated with our heavy reliance on fossil fuels. Oil spills around the world despoil waters and harm wildlife. Mountaintop coal mining in Appalachia erodes hillsides, ruins scenic lands, and degrades surface streams and groundwater supplies. Nitrous oxide emissions and particulate matter from fossil fuel combustion play havoc with respiratory systems. Volatile organic compounds in petroleum fuels produce cancers and other diseases. Sulfur dioxide emissions from the burning of coal produce acid rain that destroys forests and significantly reduces agricultural production around the world.

While these are all serious problems, they pale in comparison to the perils posed by global warming and climate change. The related challenges posed by global climate change are unprecedented in human history. If the world takes a business-as-usual approach and continues a fossil fuel-intensive energy path during the 21st century, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) projects current concentrations of greenhouse gases could more than quadruple by the year 2100. Under this scenario, the IPCC projects the global-average surface temperature will increase 4.0° Celsius (7.2° Fahrenheit) by the end of the 21st century. Put into perspective, the global-average surface temperature only increased 0.6°C (1.1°F) during the 20th century.<sup>10</sup>

This rapid rate of global warming will raise sea levels, endangering millions living in low-lying areas, despoil freshwater resources, widen the range of infectious diseases like malaria, reduce agricultural production, and increase the risk of extinction for 25–30 percent of all surveyed species.<sup>11</sup> A subsequent report released by the U.S. Climate Change Science Program claims “[w]e are very likely to experience a faster rate of climate change in the next 100 years than has been seen over the past 10,000 years.”<sup>12</sup>

These findings have prompted scientists all over the world to plead for reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. James Hansen, the leading climate scientist in the U.S., argues that following a business-as-usual approach for ten more years “guarantees that we will have dramatic climate changes that produce what I would call a different planet.”<sup>13</sup> Nathan Rive of the Center for International Climate and Environmental Research in Oslo writes: “If we are to have a 50 percent chance of meeting a 2° Celsius [3.6° F.] target we would have to cut global emissions by 80 percent by 2050.”<sup>14</sup>

Together with people all around the world, Christians at the outset of the 21st century must respond to this climate crisis by developing a new way of living in harmony with Earth’s energy resources and in solidarity with all of God’s creatures. This moral obligation involves our commitment to the poor and marginalized among the present generation, but it especially includes our responsibilities to future generations. Actions taken or not taken today will impact the welfare of the planet for centuries to come.

Those of us living in the United States have a unique moral responsibility to change our energy consumption practices in the face of global climate change. According to the World Resources Institute, our nation is responsible for nearly 30 percent of the carbon dioxide emissions produced by the combustion of fossil fuels from 1850–2002, and we still lead the world accounting for approximately 23 percent of all greenhouse gas emissions today.<sup>15</sup> The U.S. is also the sixth largest per capita polluter. Only Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Kuwait, Australia, and Bahrain emit more greenhouse gases per person.<sup>16</sup> Each person in the United States produces 24.5 tons of greenhouse gas emissions per year, compared to only 3.9 tons per person in China.<sup>17</sup> There is no question that as a nation, and as individuals, the United States must accept its moral responsibility to deal with the negative consequences associated with fossil fuel consumption and global warming.

Presbyterians in the United States first addressed issues related to energy policy in a comprehensive policy statement adopted in 1981: The Power to Speak Truth to Power.<sup>18</sup> This important social policy document elaborated an ethic of ecological justice that attempted to unite in one broad scope of moral concern the ethical obligations Christians have both to present and future generations, as well as to all human and natural communities. Four norms rooted in Scripture and Christian theology were central to this ethic: Justice, sustainability, sufficiency, and participation. Twelve guidelines rooted in these norms were also identified to aid in ethical assessment of energy options: Equity, efficiency, adequacy, renewability, appropriateness, risk, peace, cost, employment, flexibility, timely decision-making, and aesthetics.

The ethic of ecological justice and its related norms were developed further a decade later in 1990 when the PC(USA) approved a major teaching on environmental policy, Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice.<sup>19</sup> This study recast the norm of justice in terms of solidarity and honed the application of the other norms to environmental issues.

As new scientific studies further confirmed the phenomenon of global warming, and as the prospects grew for a second war in oil-rich Iraq, delegates at the 214th General Assembly (2002) approved a proposal to revise the 1981 policy.<sup>20</sup> The recommendations and accompanying study document, The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming, were developed in response to that plea. They utilize the ecojustice norms and energy guidelines to engage in a revised ethical assessment of U.S. energy policy within the context of challenges posed by global warming and climate change.

There are three important truths revealed in the accompanying study document. First, the potential supply of renewable and alternative energy sources far exceeds the current and projected demand from all energy sources. God has truly furnished creation with energy in abundance. Nevertheless, the second truth is that our nation still relies heavily on fossil fuels and nuclear power to provide 93 percent of the energy we currently consume. We are not living sustainably in relationship with God’s creation. This leads to the third, sad truth: Our reliance on these traditional energy sources poses grave dangers to justice, peace, and the integrity of creation. In fact, we find ourselves at a pivotal moment in history with regard to global climate change. Scientists warn that global greenhouse gas emissions need to be reduced 80 percent below 1990 levels by the year 2050 in order to avert catastrophic consequences associated with global warming.

After this brief introduction, the second part of this study explores in greater detail various problems associated with the heavy use of fossil fuels and the extraordinary challenges posed by global climate change. The third part identifies theological and ethical resources to grapple with these problems, and the fourth part uses these resources to conduct an ethical assessment of U.S. energy options.<sup>21</sup>

The challenges we face are daunting, and to many they appear insurmountable. Certainly our Presbyterian tradition supports a hard-eyed realism with regard to the nexus of issues related to energy policy and global climate change. We do not inventory here the political failures and missed opportunities of the past twenty-five years that have led to greater dependency on fossil fuel and the undermining of science-based regulation in favor of short-term market incentives and market manipulation by companies like Enron. It can be argued that massive subsidies to the coal, oil, gas, and nuclear power industries have corresponded with a deliberate disinvestment in public transportation and infrastructure, while also retarding the acquisition of technological expertise in the U.S. alternative energy sector. Empowered, however, by a just, good, and gracious God, we must resist the temptation of despair. Among the wealthy and powerful such despondency can be self-serving because it leads to moral paralysis. This “cheap despair” changes nothing and preserves the status quo from which the wealthy and powerful currently benefit. Empowered by God’s costly grace, we must work tirelessly with others as individuals, as a church, and as global citizens to live in harmony with the energy resources God has so abundantly provided.

Only God can give us the power to change. Our Reformed tradition reminds us that it is God who created the earth and saw that it was good, God who sustains the earth and seeks to hold its processes together, God who judges sin and greed, and God who reveals in Jesus Christ that love and justice are the essence of God’s power. God is the inexhaustible source of energy for personal, social, and ecological transformation. Although we are complicit in the evils we face, we can repent of our own sinful misuse and abuse of the Earth as we confess our sins. As recipients of God’s endless mercy, this redemptive energy frees and empowers us to be good stewards of God’s creation.

Energy choices, more than ever, are moral choices. As our planet grows warmer, our Christian witness must become bolder. As individuals, families, congregations, and church administrative bodies, we must become the change we want to see in our nation. We must put our own houses in order even as we call on our nation to accept its moral responsibility with regard to energy policy and climate change. Together we must radically reduce our carbon footprint.<sup>22</sup>

Two years ago, the 217th General Assembly (2006) voted to “strongly urge all Presbyterians immediately to make a bold witness by aspiring to live carbon neutral lives.”<sup>23</sup> Carbon neutrality requires us to reduce energy consumption that releases carbon dioxide into the atmosphere and to purchase carbon offsets to compensate for those carbon emissions that cannot yet be eliminated. For example, offset funds can be used to plant trees that absorb carbon dioxide; to invest in alternative energy sources; to facilitate energy-efficient design, building and operation of buildings; or to purchase energy-efficient appliances for those individuals or churches that cannot otherwise afford them.<sup>24</sup> The recommendations above emphasize the importance of carbon neutrality for all expressions of our church.

Faced with the nexus of issues related to energy policy and climate change, and guided by the ecojustice norms and energy guidelines, Christian stewardship is expressed in three major areas of responsibility. Our witness begins at the personal level, it must be reflected in the practices and priorities of all organizations in our church, and it culminates in our advocacy for changes in public policy at all levels of government. The above recommendations address each of these dimensions of social responsibility.

I. Problems Related to Fossil Fuel Energy Sources

Energy is a key factor in advancing well-being and realizing human potential. Advances in the creative and efficient use of modern, fossil fuel energy sources have been at the heart of progress in affluent industrial nations, enabling advances in living standards to levels never experienced before in history. Energy is vital for growing and providing food for the world, for facilitating advances in health technologies, for powering transportation and industry, and for powering the growth of the information and communication revolution. As technologies have advanced, energy costs as a share of economic output have tended to decline. This has created the foundation for sizable growth in living standards, reducing the burden of human toil and turning what were once conveniences into virtual necessities for those in the industrial and industrializing worlds.

Nevertheless, roughly one-third of the world’s population (more than two billion people) still lacks access to adequate supplies of energy, particularly electricity. This lack of access impairs human health and welfare, wastes environmental resources, and limits development in countless ways. For cooking, reliance on inefficient wood stoves leads to emission of large amounts of carbon monoxide and particulate matter, creating high levels of indoor air pollution that induce respiratory illness and shorten lives. Deforestation brings its own tragedies. Without electricity, there is no refrigeration to cool vaccines, no power for lights and computers needed to expand education, and limited connection to the wider world.

While one-third of the world’s population experiences serious problems associated with too little access to modern supplies of energy, all nations are grappling with various problems associated with too much use of fossil fuel energy sources by the rest of the world.

Social Problems. Even in the United States, where environmental regulations have slowed the rate of emissions related to the increasing use of fossil fuels, the American Lung Association estimates more than 150 million people live in areas where the air quality puts their health at risk.<sup>25</sup> Health impacts are spread across the United States, but have a particularly harsh effect on vulnerable populations such as asthmatics, the elderly, the very young, and those who live nearest polluting industrial facilities or busy highways, generally the poor and often racial minorities. Each year diesel exhaust alone is responsible for more than 125,000 cancer cases in the United States, and nearly 100,000 Americans die each year from causes attributable to smog.<sup>26</sup> Around the world, the global toll from air pollution is much worse, likely exceeding a million deaths annually. This is particularly the case if indoor air pollution is included, which has a very significant impact on women and children who spend more time indoors.

Health issues associated with coal mining and the burning of coal to generate electricity are especially sobering. Next to petroleum, coal is the second largest source of energy in the world.<sup>27</sup> Each year more than six thousand coal miners are killed in China's coal mines.<sup>28</sup> Since 1900, more than 100,000 people have been killed in coal-mine accidents in the United States, and black lung disease is estimated to have killed twice as many miners over the same period of time.<sup>29</sup> Accounting for nearly half of all electricity generation, coal-fired power plants in the U.S. produce two-thirds of all sulfur dioxide (the leading cause of acid rain), 22 percent of all nitrogen oxide (a major contributor to smog), approximately 40 percent of carbon dioxide (the principal greenhouse gas), and a third of all mercury emissions (a potent neurotoxin that accumulates in body tissues).<sup>30</sup> The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention reports that one in twelve women in the U.S. has an unsafe level of mercury in their blood, and that as many as 630,000 babies could be at risk for health problems. The Environmental Protection Agency has issued advisories in forty-four of the fifty states regarding high mercury levels in various kinds of fish.<sup>31</sup>

Economic Problems. For various reasons, energy prices have risen sharply in the United States over the past decade. Persons in low-income households (especially elderly residents, the disabled, and children) are most vulnerable to rising costs and often must choose between paying their energy bills or buying food and medicine. Congress created the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program (LIHEAP) in 1981 precisely to address this need. Families receiving LIHEAP assistance must have income below 150 percent of the federal poverty level. Two-thirds of LIHEAP families earn less than $8,000 per year. Sadly, funding levels for the program have not kept pace with the growing number of households eligible for assistance. In recent years Congress has only authorized sufficient funding to provide LIHEAP assistance for 16 percent of the eligible population.<sup>32</sup>

The rising cost of petroleum fuels has impacted all Americans. The average price of gasoline has more than doubled since 2002, rising to over $3 a gallon.<sup>33</sup> Since U.S. oil production peaked in the 1970s, imports have been rising steadily to meet demand. Today, the United States imports more than 60 percent of the oil it consumes. Imports of energy-related petroleum products in 2006 cost more than $290 billion and represented more than 30 percent of the nation's international trade deficit.<sup>34</sup> Spurred by rapidly increasing demand in China, record prices for oil are pushing the U.S. cost of imported oil even higher.

There are other significant costs related to U.S. oil supplies. Various studies estimate that the United States spends between $55 billion and nearly $100 billion each year on the military to secure its oil supplies around the world.<sup>35</sup> These estimates do not include more than $100 billion spent each year since 2003 for the war in Iraq, which has the world's third largest proven reserves of oil.<sup>36</sup> With the number of civilian and military deaths in Iraq approaching 100,000 people, those who mourn the loss of their loved ones remind us that the human toll far exceeds the economic costs of this war.<sup>37</sup> Nevertheless, when these costs are added to the cost of federal and state subsidies to the oil industry, and combined with estimates of health-care costs related to fossil fuel pollution, some analysts argue that the true cost of a gallon of gasoline at the pump ranges from $8 to $11 per gallon.<sup>38</sup>

Political Problems. Recently the National Petroleum Council warned that international energy development and trade are more likely to be influenced by geopolitical considerations and less by market factors.<sup>39</sup> President Bush acknowledged this reality in his 2006 State of the Union address when he remarked: "America is addicted to oil, which is often imported from unstable parts of the world."<sup>40</sup> In recent years, more than half of U.S. oil imports have come from four leading suppliers: Canada (19 percent), Saudi Arabia (12 percent), Mexico (11 percent), and Venezuela (10 percent). Nigeria, Algeria, Angola, Iraq, Russia, and Ecuador round out the other top ten suppliers.<sup>41</sup> While the U.S. enjoys primarily positive foreign relations with its neighbors, Canada and Mexico, it has strained relationships with Saudi Arabia, Venezuela, and Russia. In addition, the relationship between blood and oil is all too clear in Iraq's civil war, and it is becoming more apparent as the level of violence and civil unrest grows in nations like Nigeria and Angola where oil wealth is not being spread broadly to all residents of these oil-exporting nations.

Once oil has been extracted from beneath the ground, transporting the oil can lead to another set of political problems. More than half the world's oil passes through a few potential "choke points," including the Suez Canal, the Bosphorus, and the Straits of Hormuz and Malacca.<sup>42</sup> A significant disruption of oil shipments through any of these points could wreak havoc on the world's economy. Nine out of the last ten recessions in the United States were preceded by oil price shocks related to supply disruptions.<sup>43</sup> Many analysts fear that Iran may lay siege to tankers in the Strait of Hormuz if the United States or Israel attack the facilities it has built to enrich uranium.

With demand for natural gas rising around the world, Russia's control of natural gas supplies raises concerns for many nations in Europe and Central Asia. Recently Russia signed a deal to build a pipeline from Turkmenistan through Kazakhstan, which will feed Russia's network of pipelines to Europe. The deal seeks to thwart efforts by the U.S. and other European nations to build oil and gas pipelines that would avoid Russia by connecting to Europe through Azerbaijan and Turkey.

Having recently reduced the flow of natural gas to Georgia and other countries, many European nations fear Russia will use its virtual monopoly over natural gas resources for political purposes.<sup>44</sup>

This brief overview reveals a host of social, economic, and political problems associated with our heavy reliance on fossil fuels. There are also serious environmental problems. Oil spills around the world despoil waters and harm wildlife. Mountaintop coal mining in Appalachia erodes hillsides, ruins scenic lands, and degrades surface streams and groundwater supplies. Nitrous oxide emissions and particulate matter from fossil fuel combustion play havoc with respiratory systems. Volatile organic compounds in petroleum fuels produce cancers and other diseases. Sulfur dioxide emissions from the burning of coal produce acid rain that destroys forests and significantly reduces agricultural production around the world.

II. Global Warming and Climate Change

While these are all serious problems, they pale in comparison to the unprecedented perils posed by global warming and climate change. After nearly two decades of intensive study, scientists around the world have reached a much greater consensus about these phenomena, their causes, and likely impacts. The United Nations established the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) in 1988 to review and assess the most recent scientific, technical and socioeconomic information relevant to climate change. The IPCC has issued reports every five years and issued its Fourth Assessment Report in four installments during 2007. More than 1,200 authors contributed to the report and their work was reviewed by more than 2,500 scientific experts.<sup>45</sup> Since each report for policy makers is approved line-by-line in plenary sessions, the IPCC's findings are arguably the least controversial and most accepted assessments of climate change in the scientific community.

The IPCC Fourth Assessment Report in 2007 finally persuaded many that global warming is real, that it is caused by human activity, and that it will very likely produce climate change in the 21st century that will be unprecedented in human history. The following are some of the key findings reprinted directly from the IPCC reports.

Human and Natural Drivers of Climate Change<sup>46</sup>

- Global atmospheric concentrations of carbon dioxide, methane and nitrous oxide have increased markedly as a result of human activities since 1750 and now far exceed pre-industrial values determined from ice cores spanning many thousands of years.
- Carbon dioxide is the most important anthropogenic greenhouse gas. The global atmospheric concentration of carbon dioxide has increased from a pre-industrial value of about 280 ppm to 379 ppm in 2005. The atmospheric concentration of carbon dioxide in 2005 exceeds by far the natural range over the last 650,000 years (180 to 300 ppm) as determined from ice cores.
- The primary source of the increased atmospheric concentration of carbon dioxide since the pre-industrial period results from fossil fuel use, with land use change providing another significant but smaller contribution.
- The understanding of anthropogenic warming and cooling influences on climate has improved since the Third Assessment Report (TAR), leading to very high confidence [greater than 90 percent probability] that the globally averaged net effect of human activities since 1750 has been one of warming.

Direct Observations of Recent Climate Change<sup>47</sup>

- Warming of the climate system is unequivocal, as is now evident from observations of increases in global average air and ocean temperatures, widespread melting of snow and ice, and rising global mean sea level.
- Eleven of the last twelve years (1995–2006) rank among the 12 warmest years in the instrumental record of global surface temperature.
- At continental, regional, and ocean basin scales, numerous long-term changes in climate have been observed. These include changes in Arctic temperatures and ice, widespread changes in precipitation amounts, ocean salinity, wind patterns and aspects of extreme weather including droughts, heavy precipitation, heat waves and the intensity of tropical cyclones.
- Average Arctic temperatures increased at almost twice the global average rate in the past 100 years.

Projections of Future Changes in Climate<sup>48</sup>

- Continued greenhouse gas emissions at or above current rates would cause further warming and induce many changes in the global climate system during the 21st century that would very likely be larger than those observed during the 20th century.
- Best estimates and likely ranges for globally average surface air warming for six emissions scenarios are given in this assessment. For example, the best estimate for the low scenario is 1.8°C [3.2°F], and the best estimate for the high scenario is 4.0°C [7.2°F].
- Both past and future anthropogenic carbon dioxide emissions will continue to contribute to warming and sea level rise for more than a millennium, due to the timescales required for removal of this gas from the atmosphere.

Current Knowledge of Future Impacts<sup>49</sup>

- Drought-affected areas will likely increase in extent. Heavy precipitation events, which are very likely to increase in frequency, will augment flood risk.
- In the course of the century, water supplies stored in glaciers and snow cover are projected to decline, reducing water availability in regions supplied by meltwater from major mountain ranges, where more than one-sixth of the world population currently lives.
- The resilience of many ecosystems is likely to be exceeded this century by an unprecedented combination of climate change, associated disturbances (e.g., flooding, drought, wildfire, insects, ocean acidification), and other global change drivers (e.g., land use change, pollution, over-exploitation of resources).
- Approximately 20–30% of plant and animal species assessed so far are likely to be at increased risk of extinction if increases in global average temperature exceed 1.5–2.5°C.
- Globally, the potential for food production is projected to increase with increases in local average temperature over a range of 1–3°C, but above this it is projected to decrease.
- Many millions more people are projected to be flooded every year due to sea-level rise by the 2080s. The numbers affected will be largest in the mega-deltas of Asia and Africa while small islands are especially vulnerable.
- Poor communities can be especially vulnerable, in particular those concentrated in high-risk areas. They tend to have more limited adaptive capacities, and are more dependent on climate-sensitive resources such as local water and food supplies.

Clearly global warming and related climate change brought on by the combustion of fossil fuels pose grave threats to justice, peace, and the integrity of creation. The information provided by the IPCC raises at least two fundamental ethical issues. The first is an intergenerational question: What are our obligations to future generations with regard to reducing or mitigating the challenges posed by climate change? The second is an intragenerational question: How do we equitably distribute responsibility among present generations for meeting our obligations to future generations?

III. Theological and Ethical Resources

These are not new questions; Presbyterians identified and addressed them more than twenty-five years ago when they adopted The Power to Speak Truth to Power in 1981. This important social policy document elaborated an ethic of ecological justice that attempted to unite in one broad scope of moral concern the ethical obligations Christians have both to present and future generations, as well as to all human and natural communities. Four norms rooted in Scripture and Christian theology were central to this ethic: justice, sustainability, sufficiency, and participation. Twelve guidelines rooted in these norms were also identified to aid in ethical assessment of energy options: Equity, efficiency, adequacy, renewability, appropriateness, risk, peace, cost, employment, flexibility, timely decision-making, and aesthetics.

The ethic of ecological justice and its related norms were developed further a decade later in 1990 when the PC(USA) approved a major teaching on environmental policy entitled Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice.<sup>50</sup> This study recast the norm of justice in terms of solidarity and honed the application of the other norms to environmental issues.

Today we need to apply these norms and guidelines to engage in a revised ethical assessment of U.S. energy policy within the context of challenges posed by global warming and climate change. What follows is a brief summary of the four norms drawn from Restoring Creation for Ecology and Justice as well as a revised description of the twelve guidelines identified in The Power to Speak Truth to Power.

Eco-Justice Norms

Sustainability “means ... the capacity of natural systems to go on functioning properly, so the living creatures that belong to these systems may thrive. As a norm for human behavior, sustainability expresses the meaning of God’s call to earth-keeping: Relate to the world so that its stability, integrity and beauty may be maintained .... Sustainability is the capacity of the natural order and the socioeconomic order to thrive together.”<sup>51</sup>

Participation “means being included in the social process of obtaining and enjoying the good things of God’s creation. Because the Creator’s intention is that nature’s gifts of sustenance be available to all members of the human family, all have a right and a responsibility to participate. ... If any are excluded, something is unacceptably wrong.”<sup>52</sup>

Sufficiency “... insists that all participants be able to obtain a sufficient sustenance ... enough for a reasonably secure and fulfilling life.”<sup>53</sup>

Solidarity “means ... vibrant community based on commitment and fidelity. ... [I]t embraces ecological, ethical themes of each individual’s worth and dignity together with the fundamental interdependence and unity with the Creator’s creatures. ... [H]uman beings are all members of one human family ... while belonging also to nature as integral components of one creation.”<sup>54</sup>

These four norms sketch the broad outline of an ethic of ecojustice. The following twelve guidelines help to apply these norms to specific issues related to energy policy and global climate change.

Energy Policy Guidelines<sup>55</sup>

Equity concerns the impact of policy decisions on various sectors of society with special concern for the poor and vulnerable. Burdens and benefits should be assessed and distributed so that no group gains or loses disproportionately.

Efficiency is the capability of an energy policy or alternative to provide power with the input of fewer resources. It also means frugality in consumption and a decrease in pollution. New technologies are essential to satisfying this guideline.

Adequacy addresses the complex problem of supply. Policies and energy alternatives should be sufficient to meet basic energy needs. The meeting of basic needs takes priority until they are satisfied, then gives way to other guidelines, especially frugality and conservation.

Renewability refers to the capacity of an energy option to replenish its source. Reliance on renewable sources should take priority.

Appropriateness refers to the tailoring of energy systems to (a) the satisfaction of basic needs, (b) human capacities, (c) end uses, (d) local demand, and (e) employment levels. Energy decisions should lead to a variety of scales and level of technical complexity.

Risk concerns the measurable potential of an energy policy or alternative to harm human health, social institutions, and ecological systems. Low risk options are preferable.

Peace points to the potential of an energy policy to decrease the prospects of armed conflict. While international cooperation is essential to a sustainable energy future, energy dependence should be avoided to prevent disruption of supplies.

Cost refers to monetary costs as well as other social and environmental costs. All costs should be included in the prices consumers pay for energy.

Employment concerns the impact of a policy or alternative on employment levels, skills, and the meaningfulness of work. Policies and systems should stimulate the creation of jobs and new skills.

Flexibility points to the capacity of policies and options to be changed or reversed. High flexibility is preferable, and systems subject to sudden disruption should be avoided.

Participation and timely decision-making refer to the processes used to set energy policies and choose alternatives. Processes should allow for those affected to have a voice without leading to endless procrastination.

Aesthetics points to beauty as one aspect of a flourishing life. Policies and alternatives that scar the landscape should be avoided.

IV. Assessing Major Energy Options

The four ecojustice norms and twelve energy guidelines provide a means by which to conduct an ethical assessment of the traditional and alternative energy options available to policy-makers.

Traditional, Non-Renewable Energy Sources

The U.S. Energy Information Administration (EIA) reports that more than 93 percent of the nation's energy is currently provided by coal, oil, natural gas, and nuclear power.<sup>56</sup> Under the EIA's long-term reference case scenario, which assumes present trends will continue, these four sources will grow in volume and continue to supply a similar percentage of energy along with increased greenhouse gas emissions in 2030.<sup>57</sup>

Coal remains the chief source of energy to generate electrical power in the United States. Almost 50 percent of the electricity we use comes from coal-fired power plants.<sup>58</sup> Coal is also the most abundant fossil fuel in the world, and the United States has more reserves than any other nation. At current rates of consumption, the nation's coal supply would last more than 250 years.<sup>59</sup> Given this large domestic resource, utilities around the United States have proposed building 151 new coal-fired power plants in order to meet rising demand. The Department of Energy's Energy Information Administration projects that the nation will need 290 new plants to meet projected demand by 2030.<sup>60</sup>

Viewed through the lens of the ecojustice norms and energy guidelines, coal provides the U.S. with a large domestic energy resource that reduces dependency on foreign supplies, provides jobs in the mining, rail, and utility industries, and generates electricity at low economic costs. As the nation's dependency on foreign oil grows, many are also eager to tap the flexibility of this resource by converting coal into a liquid transportation fuel or into synthetic natural gas. These advantages are overwhelmed, however, by the fact that coal is a carbon-intensive fossil fuel whose combustion is producing enormous greenhouse gas emissions. Coal-fired power plants alone produce 40 percent of U.S. carbon dioxide emissions.<sup>61</sup> While these emissions will have a significant and inequitable impact on future generations through global climate change, they also have a deleterious impact on present generations through mercury pollution, acid rain, and the aesthetic destruction of mountain-tops and valleys. Continued dependence on coal-fired electricity generation violates the norms of sustainability and solidarity.

Cognizant of these flaws, the coal and utility industries are promoting a new generation of "clean coal" technologies. In fact, 77 of 151 proposed new power plants intend to utilize one of four different technologies that either improve combustion or gasify coal, thus modestly increasing the efficiency of coal-fired power plants from 38–40 percent to over 50 percent.<sup>62</sup>

The most important technology on the horizon, however, is carbon capture and sequestration (CCS). At some locations around the world, carbon dioxide is already being captured and pumped underground to force more oil out of the ground. The gas is not being sequestered, however. Eventually the gas is free to find its way back to the surface and up into the atmosphere. Given its contribution to global warming and climate change, the only way to responsibly expand coal-based generation in the future will be if the related carbon emissions can be permanently sequestered below ground. Research is under way to accomplish that goal, but even proponents of this technology acknowledge that it is at best fifteen years away from widespread commercial application.<sup>63</sup> Close scrutiny must be brought to bear on this research because concentrations of carbon dioxide pose real dangers to human and ecological health, both for present and future generations. Deep ocean storage risks acidifying water and damaging aquatic ecosystems. Storage underground as a gas poses risks to human populations because carbon dioxide is heavier than air and can cause suffocation at concentrations of 7–8 percent by volume. While it is not known whether it will be possible to sequester carbon dioxide permanently, studies project that CCS will lead to at least a doubling of the cost of coal-fired electricity.

Given the fact that carbon dioxide is the principal greenhouse gas, and that the combustion of coal produces enormous emissions, the ecojustice norms of sustainability and solidarity justify a moratorium on all new coal-fired power plants until it can be demonstrated that carbon capture and sequestration can be done in a verifiable and permanent way. In the mean time, the nation should use the next two decades to reduce demand for electricity by investing in energy efficiency and practicing energy conservation.

Oil products like gasoline and diesel fuel the nation's transportation sector and also serve as a primary feedstock in the plastics and chemical industries. Unlike coal, however, the world's proven reserves of oil may not be able to fuel growing consumption demands much longer. United States oil production peaked in the 1970s and many predict that global oil production will peak within the next two or three decades, if it has not done so already. Once conventional oil production peaks, it is expected to decline by as much as 3 percent per year.<sup>64</sup> Thus, fifteen years after the peak there could be 45 percent less oil available on the market. This relatively rapid change has the potential to spur inflation, plunge economies into recession, and ignite conflict around the world. While it is possible to extract oil from oil shale and tar sands, and even to convert coal to synthetic petroleum, all of these options are expensive both economically and environmentally. Clearly the world needs to find alternative fuels to power the transportation sector.

A continued reliance on oil violates almost all of the ecojustice norms and energy guidelines. Oil is the largest source of U.S. greenhouse gases, producing 44 percent of the nation's total emissions.<sup>65</sup> Approximately 67 percent of these emissions are attributable to the vehicle transportation sector of the U.S. economy.<sup>66</sup>

While we enjoy the convenience of our cars and drive ever more miles every year, we pass the ecological consequences of our driving on to future generations who have no control over our actions. This clearly violates the norms of sustainability and solidarity. Given the imminent scarcity of oil worldwide, a more efficient use of this vital resource is clearly warranted.

As we have seen, there is a significant link between oil and geopolitics that poses a direct threat to peace, democracy, and equity. United States dependence on oil from the Middle East in particular is ironic, self-defeating, and counterproductive. It is ironic because the U.S. military is the nation's largest consumer of oil. In 2006, the defense establishment spent $13.6 billion to consume 340,000 barrels of oil per day, representing 1.5 percent of total U.S. energy consumption.<sup>67</sup> The average U.S. soldier in Iraq and Afghanistan daily consumes sixteen gallons of oil either directly or indirectly through the use of Humvees, tanks, trucks, helicopters, and air strikes.<sup>68</sup> It is a bitter irony that some wars in the future may be fought in part to secure the oil to fight them.

United States dependence on Persian Gulf oil is self-defeating because some of the money the U.S. expends to import oil from this region has wound up in the pockets of those committed to sponsoring terrorism around the world. Fifteen of the nineteen terrorists who hijacked planes and crashed them into the World Trade Center and the Pentagon were citizens of Saudi Arabia. Osama bin Laden is a Saudi and oil money has helped finance Al-Qaeda. In 2005, the U.S. spent nearly $40 billion to import oil from the Persian Gulf while at the same time it financed a war on terror.<sup>69</sup> To some extent, every gallon of gas we purchase helps fund terrorists.<sup>70</sup>

United States dependence on foreign oil is counterproductive because it often requires the U.S. to do business with nations that do not support democracy. In a recent book, U.S. Congressman Jay Inslee cites Tom Friedman's First Law of Petropolitics: "The price of oil and the pace of freedom always move in opposite directions."<sup>71</sup> Inslee claims "[i]t is not a coincidence that of the ten nations with the largest proven oil reserves ... only one (Canada) is a true democracy."<sup>72</sup> Among the top ten suppliers of oil to the United States are nations like Nigeria and Angola, which are experiencing civil unrest because their oil wealth has not been spread very broadly. In addition, the leaders of two other major U.S. suppliers, Vladimir Putin in Russia and Hugo Chavez in Venezuela, are taking steps to shore up their personal power in ways many believe will undermine democracy in these nations.

Viewed through the lens of the ecojustice norms and the energy policy guidelines, there is little question that reducing U.S. dependence on oil in general, and Persian Gulf oil in particular, need to become national priorities.

Natural gas is the most desirable fossil fuel because it is about half as carbon intensive per unit of energy as coal or oil, and it is a highly flexible resource that can be utilized in a variety of end uses and sized to scale. Prices for natural gas have risen sharply in recent years, in part due to market manipulation by companies like Enron, but mostly because of the increase in natural gas-fired electricity generation. Utilities have invested in gas-fired power plants for various reasons. They are ideal for responding to peak-load demands throughout the year because they can be brought on-line quickly. In addition, they are more economical to build than coal-fired or nuclear power plants and it is also easier for utilities to secure the necessary environmental permits. This increased demand for natural gas due to electrical generation has driven up the cost of heating homes and businesses as well as the cost of production in agriculture and other industries where natural gas serves as an important energy source or chemical feedstock.

Application of the energy guidelines produces a mixed assessment of natural gas. On the one hand, it is far less polluting than the other fossil fuels, it is a very flexible resource, and it plays an important role in the economy. On the other hand, domestic production lags behind consumption, the majority of global supplies are unevenly concentrated in the Middle East and Russia, and thus the potential for conflict will increase over access to this valuable energy resource. The United States now imports a growing percentage of natural gas from Canada, Mexico, and the Caribbean—increasingly in the form of liquefied natural gas, which is dangerous to transport and vulnerable to terrorists. As with oil, experts predict global production will peak in the first half of this century and be followed by even higher prices.

The ecojustice norms of sustainability and sufficiency require us to use this valuable resource wisely as a bridge to a future in which fossil fuels play a diminishing role. Key to this effort will be to replace the role natural gas plays in electricity generation with investments in renewable energy generation. While it is possible to gasify coal and to process methane hydrates sequestered on the ocean floor into natural gas, it would be more prudent to capture and utilize methane that is already being emitted into the atmosphere via livestock and landfills because methane is twenty-one times more potent a greenhouse gas than is carbon dioxide.<sup>73</sup>

Nuclear power is undoubtedly the most controversial of the traditional energy sources in the United States. Currently 104 commercial reactors produce 19 percent of the nation's electricity and serve approximately fifty million people.<sup>74</sup> Together with coal-fired power plants, these facilities are the backbone of the nation's base-load electricity supply. While no new reactors have come on-line since 1996, more than two dozen are now on the drawing boards due to a variety of tax, insurance, and production subsidies made available to the industry via the federal Energy Policy Act of 2005.<sup>75</sup>

Faced with the prospect of rapid climate change, the primary strength of nuclear power is that it produces virtually no greenhouse gas emissions once reactors are operational and construction is completed. While construction costs are very high, operational costs have been relatively low. In addition, while the region around Chernobyl in Russia had to be abandoned and cordoned off due to high radiation levels, the nuclear power industry in the United States has never suffered such a major catastrophe. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission proudly emphasizes that there has been no loss of life associated with the operation of the nation's commercial nuclear reactors in the history of the industry.

The primary weakness of nuclear power is that the United States has not figured out how to dispose of the highly radioactive toxic waste that is produced by the reactors. Spent fuel rod assemblies are piling up in cooling ponds and in above-ground storage casks at two-thirds of the reactors around the nation because the federal government has failed to open an underground geological repository to receive this waste. While Congress mandated that Yucca Mountain in Nevada become the site for this facility, its original opening in 1998 has been postponed several times and now is slated to open no sooner than 2017. If and when it does open, the facility will be too small to accommodate the amount of spent nuclear fuel produced to date.

The energy guidelines illuminate additional concerns related to nuclear power. Recent discoveries of steel embrittlement and leaks of tritium into groundwater supplies from aging reactor facilities raise concerns about the safety risks associated with operating these facilities beyond the length of their original operating licenses. While reactor facilities are heavily guarded, many fear what would happen if terrorists managed to damage a reactor or casks entombing spent fuel rods outside the reactor building. Others ask whether nuclear power is an appropriate way to produce the steam used to propel the generators that produce electricity. The complexity and danger of this energy source are so great that it is regulated by an independent body within the federal government, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Advocates within the industry point to new reactor designs that should make nuclear reactors much safer to operate in the future.<sup>76</sup> Some also encourage the United States to reprocess its spent nuclear fuel in order to reduce the waste burden and to recycle the energy that remains in spent fuel rod assemblies. President Jimmy Carter abandoned reprocessing in the 1970s over concerns about nuclear proliferation and because he believed it was too expensive. The federal Energy Policy Act of 2005 reversed this policy by authorizing $580 million for research and development of nuclear reprocessing and transmutation processes.<sup>77</sup> Recently the Department of Energy announced that it would remove nine metric tons of plutonium from hundreds of the nation's nuclear warheads and refabricate the plutonium into a mixed uranium and plutonium oxide (MOX) fuel that can be burned in commercial nuclear reactors.<sup>78</sup>

France reprocesses more than one thousand metric tons of spent fuel every year from its fifty-nine reactors, but it never built breeder reactors that were supposed to burn up the plutonium and other high level nuclear waste left over after reprocessing. With breeder reactors out of the picture, France is burning a MOX fuel that consists of 8 percent plutonium and 92 percent depleted uranium in the nation's reactors. One of the problems, however, is that MOX fuel has almost five times as much plutonium as enriched uranium fuel, which increases the risk of unexpected chain reactions during operation and reprocessing. In addition, spent MOX fuel is three times as hot as spent uranium fuel and thus needs to be placed in cooling ponds for 150 years before it can be placed in an underground waste repository like Yucca Mountain. These used fuel assemblies are starting to pile up at France's reprocessing facility in La Hague and have as yet no permanent home in an underground geological repository.<sup>79</sup>

Given the extremely toxic nature of high-level nuclear waste, the ecojustice norm of solidarity and the energy guideline of equity require that the long-term waste issue be resolved. It is not fair to burden future generations with highly toxic waste. At the same time, the norm of sustainability and the adequacy guideline remind us that nuclear power provides a significant amount of our electricity supply today and does not produce greenhouse gas emissions that imperil generations in the future. Like natural gas, it may be best to view nuclear power as a resource that can bridge the gap to a more sustainable energy future. Unless and until the waste issue can be resolved, however, it would be best to bring intense scrutiny to bear on proposals to re-license existing reactors and to put a moratorium on the construction of new reactors. If the waste and related safety issues cannot be resolved with a very high degree of confidence and integrity, nuclear power should be phased out.

Alternative and Renewable Energy Sources

The U.S. Energy Information Administration (EIA) reports that only 7 percent of the nation's energy supply is currently provided by renewable energy sources. Of this total, biomass (48 percent) and hydroelectric power (42 percent) lead the way, followed by geothermal (5 percent), wind (4 percent), and solar (1 percent).<sup>80</sup> Under the EIA's long-term reference case scenario, which assumes present trends will continue, renewable energy sources will grow in volume but still represent only 8 percent of the nation's energy supply in 2030.<sup>81</sup> If changes are made in national energy policy, however, the EIA projects that 25 percent of the nation's electricity supply and transportation fuels could be produced renewably by 2025.<sup>82</sup> Globally, the European Renewable Energy Council and Greenpeace International claim "renewable energy, combined with the smart use of energy, can deliver half of the world's energy needs by 2050."<sup>83</sup>

Not surprisingly, energy efficiency and renewable energy sources fare better than fossil fuels and nuclear energy when assessed in light of the ecojustice norms and energy policy guidelines. For example, sustainability is emphasized when we take advantage of the renewable energy resources offered by the sun and the geothermal energy from the earth. The norm of sufficiency is well addressed through efforts to promote energy conservation and efficiency. Solidarity and equity are enhanced as the burden of greenhouse gas emissions are reduced for future generations. Investments in renewable energy and energy efficiency should also improve the prospects for peace by increasing domestic energy supplies and by diminishing reliance on nuclear energy and the risks it poses. Finally, the norm of participation is expressed through individual acts of energy conservation and the prospect renewable energy technologies offer for decentralized power generation. Proponents claim millions will benefit from the boom of new jobs in the renewable energy sector.

There are certainly areas of concern, however. Since renewable energy sources currently provide so little supply both nationally and globally, will they have the capacity to meet demand with an adequate and sufficient supply in the future? Access to affordable energy sources is vital to human well-being. There are also concerns about the environmental consequences of some approaches to renewable energy production. For example, corn-based ethanol currently requires large amounts of fossil fuel inputs, is water intensive, and increases the risk of soil erosion. Debates also whirl around whether the cost of new renewable energy technologies will have a regressive impact on the poor and possibly plunge national economies into recession. Finally, aesthetic concerns are rising as more and larger wind turbines occupy greater swaths of land.

With this general assessment in mind, we turn now to explore the potential of specific alternative and renewable energy sources in greater detail.

Energy Conservation and Efficiency offer the U.S. the most substantial and immediate ways to maximize supplies and decrease annual greenhouse gas emissions. Energy conservation taps the moral virtue of frugality and seeks to make wise use of God's precious energy resources through behavioral changes in lifestyle practices. Energy efficiency utilizes available technology to use less energy to produce goods and services. Taken together, energy conservation and energy efficiency are vital hallmarks of good stewardship and a sustainable energy future.

The disruptions in oil supply and resulting price shocks during the 1970s triggered a national commitment to energy conservation and efficiency in the United States. During this period some of the nation's smokestack industries also moved offshore. As a result, per capita energy use has stayed about the same over the past thirty years while per capita economic output has increased 74 percent.<sup>84</sup> Compared to 1973, the U.S. saves more energy today than it produces from any single energy source, including oil.<sup>85</sup>

The potential to save even more energy in the future is significant. United States energy use per dollar of gross national product is almost double that of other industrialized countries.<sup>86</sup> Energy use per capita in the U.S. is twice that of citizens of countries in the European Union. The U.S. Department of Energy conservatively estimates that increased efforts at energy efficiency could cut national energy use by 10 percent in 2010 and approximately 20 percent in 2020. The American Council for an Energy-Efficient Economy more optimistically estimates that adoption of new policies and laws could lower national energy demand by 18 percent in 2010 and by 33 percent in 2020.<sup>87</sup> When these investments in energy efficiency are coupled with increased renewable energy generation, other studies indicate that the U.S. could cut in half the carbon dioxide emissions related to electricity generation by 2020.<sup>88</sup>

Cost-effective technologies exist today to reduce substantially energy consumption in all of the nation's energy sectors (industrial, commercial, residential, and transportation). Past experience reveals, however, that legislative action is key to achieving these gains. The disruptions in oil supply and resulting price shocks during the 1970s triggered a national commitment to energy conservation and efficiency in the United States. Acting in a bi-partisan manner, Congress drafted the nation's first Corporate Automotive Fuel Economy (CAFE) standards that President Richard Nixon signed into law in 1975. These standards required automakers to double the average fuel economy of cars from 13.6 miles per gallon (mpg) in model year 1974 to 27.5 mpg in model year 1985. Similar fuel economy standards were adopted for light trucks. As a result, U.S. oil imports dropped from 46.5 percent in 1977 to 27 percent in 1985.<sup>89</sup>

Unfortunately this trend did not continue. The 27.5-mpg standard for cars remained the same after 1985, and the standard for light trucks only increased from 20 mpg in 1989 to 21.6 mpg in 2006.<sup>90</sup> As a result, U.S. fuel economy standards have lagged well behind virtually all other industrial countries. In Japan, new vehicles must achieve approximately 46 mpg, in the European Union the figure is 37 mpg, and even China's standard of 29 mpg exceeds the current U.S. average.<sup>91</sup>

Recently, however, President George W. Bush signed into law the Energy Independence and Security Act, which included the first major increase in the nation's CAFE standards in more than twenty years.<sup>92</sup> In contrast to the initial CAFE legislation that resulted in a 100 percent increase in fuel economy, the new legislation mandates only a 40 percent increase over thirteen years. Automakers will have to increase the combined average fuel economy of cars and light trucks from 24.5 mpg today to 35 mpg in 2020. Under this law, U.S. oil imports should be reduced by 1.2 million barrels per day and level off at approximately 10 million barrels per day in 2030, instead of continuing to grow beyond 12 million barrels per day.<sup>93</sup>

While legislative action can increase the number and variety of energy efficient products in the marketplace, consumers do not have to wait to invest in energy efficiency or to practice energy conservation. Trading in a sedan that gets 24 miles per gallon in combined city and highway driving for a hybrid sedan that gets 36 miles per gallon improves energy efficiency by 50 percent and cuts related greenhouse gas emissions in half. These gains can be further increased if citizens conserved fuel by choosing to drive fewer miles every year. Similar gains can be made by reducing energy consumption in the buildings in which we live and work. The American Institute of Architects reports that the energy consumed to heat and power buildings across the United States produces 48 percent of the nation's greenhouse gas emissions.<sup>94</sup> Adjusting thermostats, sealing leaks, installing insulation, and investing in more efficient lights, appliances, furnaces, and air conditioners could substantially reduce energy consumption in our homes and business settings.

There is no question that energy conservation and efficiency represent the least expensive and largest "source" of energy in the United States. They also offer the fastest way to reduce the nation's carbon footprint and greenhouse gas emissions. While reduced consumption could reduce economic activity, this should be offset by the acquisition of more efficient goods. Energy conservation, in particular, is one area where we don't have to wait for the government to exercise greater responsibility. Each and every one of us can exercise greater personal responsibility by being better stewards of energy by practicing energy conservation and investing in energy efficiency. The ecojustice norms and energy guidelines compel us to make energy conservation and energy efficiency personal and national priorities.

Solar energy also offers enormous potential. Every day the sunlight that reaches Earth provides 2,850 times more energy than human communities currently consume.<sup>95</sup> This energy can be utilized in a variety of ways with different technologies. Residential solar thermal collectors capture and store the sun's energy in water. According to a study by the Department of Energy, these systems could provide half of the space heating and 65–75 percent of the hot water needs for U.S. homes.<sup>96</sup>

Concentrated solar thermal collectors are often located in desert regions and produce high-temperature heat for industrial processes or steam that can be used to generate electricity. A recent report indicates that seven states in the southwestern region of the U.S. could use concentrated solar power to produce ten times more electricity than is produced from all sources in the nation today. While it currently costs 9–12 cents per kilowatt hour to produce electricity in this manner, costs are expected to decline to 4–7 cents per kilowatt hour by 2020.<sup>97</sup>

Solar chillers use thermal energy to cool and dehumidify air like conventional air conditioners. This new technology has been successfully demonstrated and will likely make major inroads in the near future.<sup>98</sup>

Photovoltaic (PV) cells are the most visible solar energy technology, and their installation is growing rapidly around the world. These cells convert sunlight into electricity and can be utilized in a variety of scaleable applications. They are often the least expensive way to bring electricity to remote locations, but most PV installations today are connected to the electricity grid. Global production of PV cells has grown sixfold since the year 2000, rising largely in response to public policies in Japan and Germany, which seek to encourage their use. According to a study by the International Energy Agency, PV could meet 55 percent of U.S. electricity demand.<sup>99</sup> One of the drawbacks to PV production is that the cells are constructed with toxic chemicals and heavy metals. These materials are used widely in the semiconductor industry, however, where new techniques are emerging to reduce the environmental and safety risks.

Wind energy is being converted into electrical energy by wind turbines at a record pace in the United States and around the world. In recent years only natural gas-fired power plants have added more capacity to the U.S. power grid than have wind farms.<sup>100</sup> The U.S. has led the world in wind energy installations since 2005.<sup>101</sup> Even with turbine and component prices rising with global demand, installations with an excellent wind resource can often generate electricity at a lower cost (3–5 cents per kilowatt hour) than natural gas-fired power plants.<sup>102</sup>

The U.S. wind resource is distributed around the nation, but the most abundant winds are in the Great Plains region. Theoretically North Dakota, Kansas, and Texas together could furnish the U.S. with all of the electricity it consumes.<sup>103</sup> The Department of Energy estimates that the U.S. off-shore wind resource could support as much generating capacity as currently exists in all of the nation's coal-fired, natural gas, and nuclear power plants.<sup>104</sup>

One of the main drawbacks to wind power, as with solar, is its intermittent nature. The wind industry is vigorously exploring storage options so that wind energy can be dispatched on an hourly basis rather than just when the wind blows. Another important drawback concerns the lack of transmission capacity. While there is plenty of wind resource in the nation, too often the wind farms that harvest this energy are long distances from major metropolitan centers and thus require the construction of new transmission lines. Public resistance to the construction of new transmission lines is hampering the construction of a smarter grid that can handle the flows of energy from new wind farms.

Some oppose new transmission lines because they fear the electromagnetic fields in these lines may have an adverse effect on human health, but there is no dispute that the combustion of fossil fuels is definitely having an adverse effect on human health today and that this will only get worse in the future.<sup>105</sup> Others oppose the construction of large wind farms for aesthetic reasons, but the impact of wind turbines on the landscape pales in comparison to the ravages of mountaintop coal mining or the dangers posed by global warming. Finally, while there has been increased avian mortality associated with early turbine designs and the unwise siting of a few wind farms in migratory bird flyways, studies indicate that the vast majority of avian mortality is caused by housecats, vehicles, cell phone towers, and birds flying into windows.<sup>106</sup>

Biomass energy accounts for nearly half of the renewable energy currently produced in the United States. Biomass energy takes two primary forms. Biopower is produced when agricultural and forestry residues are used to generate heat and power. Biofuels are produced when the energy in crops and other plants are fermented into transportation fuels. When the feedstocks for biopower and biofuels are grown and harvested sustainably, biomass energy is truly renewable and carbon neutral. This is because the carbon dioxide that is released had previously been absorbed from the atmosphere by the plants.

The forest products industry is the largest producer of biopower. It burns forest residues to produce heat and electricity. At other sites around the nation, crop residues and switchgrass are burned with coal to produce electricity, thus reducing the net emission of carbon dioxide. Studies indicate that up to 15 percent of all coal could be replaced with biomass if upgrades are made to coal-fired power plants. Still another use of biomass is to capture methane from the decomposition of organic matter found in landfills, sewage treatment plants, and livestock facilities. Using this methane to produce heat or power is much wiser and more lucrative than letting this potent greenhouse gas enter the atmosphere.

Corn-based ethanol is currently the largest source of biofuel in the nation. The industry has grown rapidly in response to government incentives and market forces. It has been a boon to many farmers because corn prices have risen almost 50 percent in recent years.<sup>107</sup> It has also benefited rural communities because just one ethanol facility that produces forty million gallons per year can inject $140 million into the local economy.<sup>108</sup> Today, approximately 20 percent of the U.S. corn harvest is utilized for ethanol production, and that percentage is rising.<sup>109</sup> The Government Accountability Office projects that 30 percent of the nation's corn crop may be devoted to ethanol production by 2012.<sup>110</sup>

There are many problems with corn-based ethanol production, however. Almost all corn in the nation is planted, fertilized, cultivated, and harvested with machinery powered by fossil fuels. The fermentation and transportation of corn-based ethanol is also fossil-fuel intensive. As a result, burning corn-based ethanol in gasoline tanks only lowers greenhouse gas emissions by 13 percent.<sup>111</sup> There are also other environmental problems. The production of ethanol is water-intensive and thus puts significant stress on local groundwater resources; it can also produce significant air and water pollution. Finally, there is good reason to fear that soil erosion will increase as rising prices encourage farmers to plant corn in some of the thirty-five million acres currently set aside for soil and wildlife conservation.<sup>112</sup>

Economically, the increased use of corn for transportation fuel is driving up the cost of grain for livestock producers as well as the cost of food in grocery stores. Globally, grain prices have reached their highest levels in a decade. As a result, the United States is purchasing about half the grain it bought to distribute as food aid in 2000.<sup>113</sup> The United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization warns that rising food prices and reduced food supplies are increasing the likelihood for social unrest in developing countries.<sup>114</sup> In 2006 the rapidly increasing price of tortilla flour led to riots in some parts of Mexico.<sup>115</sup> Recently, the United Nations special rapporteur on the Right to Food called for a five-year moratorium on the production of first-generation liquid biofuels made from food crops such as corn, wheat, palm oil, and rapeseed.<sup>116</sup>

Obviously there are serious problems associated with the way biofuels are currently being produced in the United States. Even if the entire corn crop were devoted to ethanol production, it would only produce 12 percent of the gasoline we consume. Devotion of the entire soy bean crop to biodiesel production would only replace 6 percent of the nation's diesel consumption.<sup>117</sup> Key to biofuel production in the future will be new feedstocks and conversion technologies. While important technological challenges still need to be overcome, the potential of cellulosic ethanol is large because it produces ethanol from portions of plants not used for food and also from fast-growing trees and perennials like switch grass. Studies indicate that one third of the nation's current petroleum demand could be satisfied if cellulosic ethanol becomes commercially viable.<sup>118</sup>

There is clearly a great need for alternative fuels but the norm of precaution needs to be exercised, especially when genetic engineering is employed to develop new crops for biofuel production. Just as government incentives to spur corn-based ethanol production have had unforeseen and deleterious consequences, so too could genetic engineering of biofuels feedstocks if this research is not conducted carefully and regulated closely.

Hydropower is the second largest source of renewable energy in the U.S., producing 7 percent of the nation's electricity supply. The vast majority of this power comes from several large dams along major rivers in the western and eastern regions of the country. One advantage these facilities have over other power plants is that the amount of electricity can be increased or decreased relatively easily by adjusting the amount of water released to the turbines. This flexibility is important when accommodating the intermittent production of other renewable energy sources like solar and wind.<sup>119</sup> A major disadvantage of large hydropower projects, however, has been their toll on fish habitats, especially in the Pacific Northwest.

Remarkably, only 3 percent of the 80,000 dams in the U.S. are used to generate electricity. The Department of Energy reports that hydropower capacity could be doubled in the U.S. by installing generators at some of the dams that do not have them, and by installing more generators at dams that already are producing electricity. A significant share of this electricity could be generated at smaller hydroelectric dams that were taken out of production decades ago when their productive capacity was eclipsed by large coal-fired and nuclear power plants.<sup>120</sup>

Geothermal energy taps into heat from the center of the Earth, which is nearly as hot as the surface of the sun. Geothermal power plants tap some of this heat to create steam that powers turbines. The U.S. leads the world in geothermal electric power capacity installed at plants in four western states, but the Geothermal Energy Association estimates that this capacity could grow tenfold by the year 2025.<sup>121</sup> Other reports estimate that up to 20 percent of the nation's electricity could be produced by geothermal power plants by 2030.<sup>122</sup> Some of the drawbacks to the industry have been the high costs and risks associated with drilling, but new techniques are beginning to reduce these factors. In addition, while small amounts of carbon dioxide and hydrogen sulfide are often released, these emissions pale in comparison to those emitted by coal-fired power plants.

While the best geothermal power sources are located in the West, all areas of the U.S. are suitable for geothermal heat pumps. These pumps utilize the constant temperature of earth or groundwater near the surface of the ground as a heat source in winter and a heat sink in summer to regulate indoor temperatures. Heat pump sales are growing at about 15 percent a year and could expand further if this technology were routinely incorporated in the construction of new homes and buildings.<sup>123</sup>

Marine energy makes use of the waves, tides, and currents of the oceans that cover 70 percent of the planet. Since seawater is eight hundred times as dense as air, even small movements of seawater contain significant amounts of energy. Globally, wave energy is estimated to be equivalent to present world energy demand. Nationally, the Electric Power Research Institute estimates that near-shore wave resources in the U.S. could generate eight times more electricity than all of the nation's hydroelectric dams. Unfortunately, few wave energy devices have been tested.

Historically the most common form of marine energy has been tidal power, which involves using dams to trap water in a bay or estuary and then releasing it through turbines at low tide. Tide mills were common in Western Europe during the Middle Ages but fell out of favor during the coal-fired Industrial Revolution. Today efforts are underway to recapture the energy contained in tides, waves, and currents. Tidal projects in New York City's East River and in the Puget Sound near Tacoma have the potential to power thousands of homes in these cities but they are still at the experimental stage. Marine energy is currently not cost-competitive with any of the nation's renewable or non-renewable energy sources.<sup>124</sup>

Hydrogen may be the ultimate alternative and renewable energy source because it is the most abundant chemical element in nature. One of the challenges, however, is that hydrogen does not exist in large quantities in its pure form; it has to be separated from water, ammonia, or even fossil fuels before it can be used as a fuel source. This is an energy-intensive process. The use of fossil energy to do this work results in greenhouse gas emissions. The only way to make hydrogen a truly clean energy source is to use renewable energy to reform the hydrogen, and this is expensive. Nevertheless, once reformed, the hydrogen can be used in a fuel cell to produce electricity with water as the only emission, or it can be burned in an internal combustion engine. Other challenges remain, however. The platinum used in current fuel cell designs is in limited supply and expensive. Another challenge revolves around the safety of hydrogen storage. As the smallest chemical element, hydrogen easily escapes from most containers and is highly flammable. These production, storage, safety, and cost issues will all have to be resolved before hydrogen can become the fuel of the future.

Conclusion

This ethical assessment of the major energy options facing U.S. policy makers reveals three important truths. First, the potential supply of renewable and alternative energy sources far exceeds current and projected demand. God has truly furnished creation with energy in abundance. The second truth, however, is that the United States still relies heavily on fossil fuels and nuclear power to provide 93 percent of the energy we currently consume. We are not living sustainably in relationship with God's creation. This leads to the third, sad truth: Our reliance on these traditional energy sources poses grave dangers to justice, peace, and the integrity of creation. In fact, we find ourselves at a pivotal moment in history with regard to global climate change. Scientists warn us that global greenhouse gas emissions need to be reduced 80 percent below 1990 levels by the year 2050 in order to avert catastrophic consequences associated with global warming.

The challenge we face is daunting. The temptation to despair is real. Only God can give us the power to change. Our Reformed tradition reminds us that it is God who created the earth and saw that it was good, God who sustains the earth and seeks to hold its processes together, God who judges sin and greed, and God who reveals in Jesus Christ that love and justice are the essence of God's power. God is the inexhaustible source of energy for personal, social, and ecological transformation. Although we are complicit in the evils we face, we can repent of our own sinful misuse and abuse of the Earth as we confess our sins. As recipients of God's endless mercy, this redemptive energy frees and empowers us to be good stewards of God's creation.

Energy choices, more than ever, are moral choices. As our planet grows warmer, our Christian witness must become bolder. As individuals, families, congregations, and church administrative bodies, we must become the change we want to see in our nation. We must put our own houses in order even as we call on our nation to accept its moral responsibility with regard to energy policy and climate change. Together we must radically reduce our carbon footprint.

Two years ago, the 217th General Assembly (2006) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) voted to "strongly urge all Presbyterians immediately to make a bold witness by aspiring to live carbon neutral lives."<sup>125</sup> Carbon neutrality requires us to reduce energy consumption that releases carbon dioxide into the atmosphere and to purchase carbon offsets to compensate for those carbon emissions that cannot yet be eliminated.<sup>126</sup> The appendix and recommendations that accompany this study emphasize the importance of carbon neutrality for all expressions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Faced with the nexus of issues related to energy policy and climate change, and guided by the ecojustice norms and energy guidelines, Christian stewardship is expressed in three major areas of responsibility. Our witness begins at the personal level, must be reflected in the practices and priorities of all organizations in our church, and culminates in our advocacy for changes in public policy at all levels of government. The accompanying document makes specific recommendations for the 218th General Assembly (2008) regarding each of these areas of responsibility.

Appendix I

Carbon Neutrality and the PC(USA)

Presbyterians can set an important example of stewardship by not only minimizing our energy consumption, but also by pursuing a carbon neutral lifestyle. This can take many forms. For example, funding the installation of energy efficient products and photovoltaic cells in lower income countries or communities helps to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases while also improving the well-being of those in these regions; similarly, replanting trees in deforested areas removes carbon from the atmosphere and restores farmland and nature. When Nobel Prize-winner Wangari Maathai of Kenya, founder of the Greenbelt Movement, preached in 2004 to her long-time friends in the White Plains Presbyterian Church in suburban New York, she invited all Presbyterians to join in that practical and very participatory work of planting belts of green trees around encroaching deserts. Thus the voluntary adoption of a carbon-neutral lifestyle can be justified on fairly self-interested grounds, but contributions can also be understood to be participation in a movement of social restoration, even a form of communal redemption that goes against the materialistic grain.

There are many ways to calculate the carbon footprint of an individual or business, but one of the best calculators is available at the website of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency: http://www.epa.gov/climatechange/emissions/ind\_calculator.html. Prudential choices in household energy management and personal transport can greatly reduce greenhouse emissions as well as other pollutants while also saving money. Perhaps the most vivid example is in the case of household lighting. The cost of compact fluorescents has dropped drastically due to technological advances and economies of scale. The replacement of twenty 100-watt incandescent bulbs with new compact fluorescent bulbs would reduce a typical family's carbon dioxide emissions by approximately 2.5 tons each year and save them around $100. It is possible for a family to reduce another 1.2 tons of carbon dioxide emissions each year by increasing insulation, tuning up of a furnace, and installing energy efficient showerheads. Additional energy savings are realizable by purchasing Energy Star appliances and fuel-efficient or hybrid vehicles. Energy conservation can be practiced by using mass transit or ride-sharing more often, and also by walking or biking to places you would ordinarily drive.

As with One Great Hour of Sharing offerings in Lent, frugality with regard to our energy consumption can yield savings sufficient to buy carbon offsets for the emissions we still produce. Although the U.S. has not taken responsibility for its greenhouse gas emissions, a tool does exist in tax law for climate protection. United States tax-exempt charitable groups qualifying under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code can arrange carbon offset purchases from groups such as Climate Care or Native Energy, and gifts to them designated for such purposes should ordinarily be tax deductible for those itemizing deductions in federal tax returns and for many state and local income taxes as well. A Presbyterian Energy Fund would operate within these already tested guidelines, as our church and others already run designated-use funds of many kinds at relatively low administrative cost. A Presbyterian Energy Fund could help congregations and other organizations in our church reduce their carbon footprint through investments in energy efficiency and through the purchase of carbon offsets from reputable sources.

Additional resources related to living a carbon neutral lifestyle are available on the Restoring Creation program website, <http://www.pcusa.org/environment/restore.htm>, and the website of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy: <http://www.pcusa.org/acswp/wwd/energy.htm>. For a list of carbon offset providers by state, consult the website for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's "Green Power Program," <http://www.epa.gov/grnpower/>. Congregations, presbyteries, and synods interested in purchasing "green power" from renewable energy facilities developed on American Indian/Native American reservations should consult the Native Energy website, <http://www.nativeenergy.com/>.

But the mother of all subsidies to the oil industry, and the automakers who depend on it, occurs in the realm of defending the supply of petroleum itself. According to a summary of studies compiled in 2001 by the New York Times, the United States had already been spending $25 billion a year on the military defense of oil-exporting countries in the Middle East.<sup>i</sup> The Bush administration will spend $98 million more to protect just one pipeline that delivers oil, bound for the United States, to a transportation terminal on the Columbian border with Venezuela, the Canon Limon oil pipeline, which is owned by Los Angeles-based Occidental Petroleum.<sup>ii</sup> Multiple estimates agree that the annual cost to U.S. taxpayers to defend our oil supply around the globe is between $55 billion and nearly $100 billion.<sup>iii</sup> This estimate does not include more than $100 billion spent each year in Iraq for the war in that country, at least some of which is attributable to securing oil.

Item 09-11

[The assembly approved Item 09-11 with amendment. See pp. 54, 55.]

A Resolution to Study Immigration Detention in the United States

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) [in consultation with the appropriate General Assembly Council (GAC) and Office of the General Assembly (OGA) ministries areas,] to

a. [~~study and monitor detention in relation to immigration in the United States, giving attention to the experiences of women and children detained and affected~~] [analyze the social witness policy of the PC(USA) regarding detention in relation to immigration in the United States, giving attention to the experiences of women and children detained and affected]; [and]

[~~b. explore the social witness policy of the PC(USA) regarding detention; and~~]

[~~e.~~] [b.] report its findings and recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

2. Urge the Office of General Assembly and General Assembly Council to

a. support the program work of the Office of Immigration Issues, and provide adequate financial support for the development of resources regarding detention and immigration; and

b. support regional study seminars across the church focusing on detention and immigration and promote these events with connectional structures as appropriate.

3. Direct the Washington Office and the Office of Immigration Issues to

a. partner with ecumenical and interfaith entities to build/join in coalitions against detention; and

b. advocate for alternatives to detention.

Rationale

After spending two years studying immigration and its affect on women and children, ACWC recommends action. De-tention happens throughout the country and in many communities. The stories are troubling. One was reported in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, November 9, 2007. Officials took a twenty-seven-year old woman in Conneaut, Ohio, into custody after she admitted to being in the country “without papers.” Agents had tapped on the door of a house in search of an undocumented brother-in-law wanted for a felony crime. At the time the woman was breastfeeding her nine-month old baby. The agents removed the parents, and for three days, the child cried incessantly as she went without breast milk. At the same time, her mother, sick with worry, suffered as her breasts became engorged. A representative of the La Leche League of Ohio tried to reach the woman in Bedford Heights jail with a breast pump, but was never successful in getting milk back to the baby. The mother was eventually fitted with an ankle bracelet and released, and was to be deported to Honduras. Her two younger children are US citizens, but a five-year-old was to be deported with her.

I was naked and you gave me clothing, I was sick and you took care of me, I was in prison and you visited me. ... And the king will answer them, “Truly I tell you, just as you did it to one of the least of these who are members of my family, you did it to me.” (Matt. 25:36, 40)

A recent example of a problem arising from the detention of families appeared in the Houston Chronicle, December 11, 2007. “An 8-year old girl was separated from her pregnant mother by immigration authorities and left without her mother for four days in a detention center established to hold families together. The mother and daughter were sent to the T. Don Hutto Family Residential Facility, a former Central Texas prison where non-criminal immigrant families were held while their cases were processed. They were awaiting a decision on a bid for asylum, which they eventually lost.” The T. Don Hutto facility holds men, women (some pregnant), children, and infants, and is administered by the Corrections Corporation of America (CCA), the country’s largest for-profit corrections company.

Other situations when documented effects have been profound include death from lack of medical attention or withheld medications and sexual mistreatment in detention centers. Sixty-six immigrants have died in detention since 2004, according to 2007 reports by The New York Times and Human Rights Watch. In El Paso, a pregnant woman in the custody of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement died after complaining of leg pain and losing consciousness (reported in the Austin Statesman on August 08, 2007). Another example:

While detained at the CCA Central Arizona Detention Center from November 2005 to April 2006, a Liberian woman complained of nausea, severe abdominal pain, trouble sleeping, and pain during urination. The facility’s own records indicate medical staff believed she may have developed uterine fibroids, enlarged fibroids, and possibly needed a hysterectomy. She was frequently given 800 mg of Ibuprofen and told to exercise. In one instance, she fainted and consequently missed a court appearance. A few weeks before her release, she was taken to a public hospital where an ultrasound found a cyst which she reports doctors described as the size of a 5-month-old fetus. When the hospital determined she required immediate surgery, ICE released her from detention on medical parole in order to avoid having to pay for the procedure.<sup>1</sup>

The death of Young Sook Kim, in the Regional Correctional Center (Cornell Corrections) in Albuquerque, N.M. (September 2006) provides another shameful instance:

On or about August 22, 2006, Young Sook Kim was transported to Regional Correctional Center from Virginia. During the van ride in Virginia to the airport, Ms. Kim vomited. Throughout her detention, which lasted approximately two weeks, she suffered serious stomach problems. Her condition deteriorated steadily, eventually getting to the point where she could not eat. Other women detainees pled with guards and nurses to examine Ms. Kim and also completed numerous sick call requests, at least one of which was marked “urgent.” Ms. Kim never received proper care from a doctor. Only when her eyes finally turned yellow and she could no longer eat did the nurse agree to send her to the hospital. She was transported to the hospital on or about September 10, 2006 and died shortly thereafter.<sup>2</sup>

As immigration officials continue to detain family members, families are torn asunder; persons are detained without charge and may be moved frequently creating injustices. The church must bring its voice to this situation.

One example came from a social worker in southern California. An immigrant family had succeeded in purchasing a home and providing shelter for close family relatives. When the main provider was deported, the income lost resulted in the loss of the home.

I know, however, that the king of Egypt will not let you go unless compelled by a mighty hand. (Ex. 3:19)

Immigration detention is an emerging field of injustice and more detention centers are being built and operated by for-profit companies. The PC(USA) has policy on for-profit prisons, “Resolution Calling for the Abolition of For-Profit Private Prisons” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 439ff), and immigration, “On Advocacy and Welcome for All Immigrants” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 880ff), however, they do not adequately address this growing dimension of suffering in the family of God.

Immigrant detention statistics:<sup>3</sup>

- 283,000 were detained at a cost of $1.2 billion to taxpayers, at an average of $95 per day. Eighty-four percent do not have legal representation.
- Persons are detained in over 400 facilities including private corrections companies and over 312 county and city jails nationwide. Being undocumented is a civil violation, not a crime; however immigrants are retained in local jails are mixed in with the local prison population serving time for crimes.

- There are 30,000 detention beds and 3,600 have been added in 2007.
- Alternatives to detention include electronic monitoring, at a cost of $12 per day.

While we study detention and immigration, we must also find ways to support Presbyterian communities, fellowships, and churches whose pastors and members are facing detention issues. The Office of Immigration Issues has the expertise to produce excellent resources for the church and the wider ecumenical community to use for education and advocacy. What the office does not have is the resources to support this work.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-11—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 09-11, Recommendation 1, from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, requests the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to:

- a. study and monitor detention in relation to immigration in the United States, giving attention to the experiences of women and children detained and affected;
- b. explore the social witness policy of the PC(USA) regarding detention; and
- c. report its findings and recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve Item 09-11 with the following amendment to Recommendation 1: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“1. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)[, in consultation with the appropriate General Assembly Council (GAC) and Office of the General Assembly (OGA) ministries areas.] to

“a. ~~[study and monitor detention in relation to immigration in the United States, giving attention to the experiences of women and children detained and affected]~~ [analyze the social witness policy of the PC(USA) regarding detention in relation to immigration in the United States, giving attention to the experiences of women and children detained and affected]; [and]

“~~[b. explore the social witness policy of the PC(USA) regarding detention; and]~~

“~~[e.]~~ [b.] report its findings and recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010).”

Rationale

The year 2009 will mark the tenth anniversary of the approval of the Resolution Calling for the Transformation of Churches and Society Through Encounters with New Neighbors by the 211th General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 28, 30, 32, 353–71). That assembly called on the members of this denomination to:

Oppose the routine use of detention as an enforcement tool in addressing common immigration violations, noting the particular hardship this puts on women and children, urging presbyteries and sessions to similar advocacy. (Minutes 1999, Part I, pp. 30, 355).

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a “Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States,” which included the initiation of a position within the Office of the General Assembly to provide legal guidance and some services to members and bodies within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The immigration debate in the United States has grown even more complex since the approval of this General Assembly action, especially in relation to U.S. border and detention practices that put increasing numbers of women and children in custody. The ACSWP thinks it is both wise and timely for the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct this policy entity of the church to analyze the social witness policies of the PC(USA) in order to determine how the church may more effectively address the needs of women and children detained and affected by current U.S. immigration policies and practices.

The ACSWP has advised amending Recommendation 1 in Item 09-11 in order to minimize the financial resources required to perform this work. With this clarification as to scale, the ACSWP supports the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns' proposed recommendations in Item 09-11, as amended.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 09-11 directs the study of immigration detention in the United States, with attention to the experiences of women and children.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 09-11 be approved.

Rationale

The ACREC has been studying issues related to immigration along with ACWC. The growing number of women and children being detained in cities across the United States is a particularly disturbing new dimension to the immigrant experience that warrants study.

Item 09-12

[The assembly approved Item 09-12. See pp. 54, 55.]

Resolution to Explore the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the PC(USA)

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Create a task force to design a mechanism for the study of the status of women at all levels in the church that will
  - a. assess the presence, participation, and effectiveness of women at all levels of the PC(USA), both elected and employed;
  - b. explore and analyze attitudes about women in leadership; and
  - c. describe the treatment of women in leadership positions, including how they are compensated as compared with men.

This task force of seven members shall include two current or past members of ACWC, one current or past member of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and four people chosen for their statistical and sociological expertise. A majority of the task force members shall be women. This task force will report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

2. Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC) to
  - a. provide sufficient funding and staff support for the task force;
  - b. explore additional funding for research, data collection, and analysis in consultation with the task force; and,
  - c. report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

3. Equip all General Assembly Council (GAC) staff and members to be responsive to the needs of all women as part of their continuing commitment to valuing the gifts that all persons bring to the PC(USA). Continue to encourage General Assembly Council staff and members to reflect on and incorporate the values articulated in the “Report on Creating a Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004) (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 540ff.).

[Financial Implications: (2008): $0; (2009): $19,345; (2010): $16,000 (Per Capita-GAC)]

Rationale

On the day of Pentecost, Peter quoted the prophet Joel saying, “In the last days it will be, God declares, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy...” (Acts 2:17)

Almost two thousand years later, in “A Brief Statement of Faith,” we publicly affirm that “... God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community,”<sup>1</sup> and that the Spirit “calls women and men to all ministries of the Church.”<sup>2</sup> We declare that “the Spirit gives us courage to pray... to witness... to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of people long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace.”<sup>3</sup>

In our Constitution, we affirm that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic group, different ages, both sexes ... shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church.<sup>4</sup>

How do we “provide means which will assure greater inclusiveness?” How do we know when we have achieved inclusiveness? First, we need a baseline measurement. This will allow us to accurately assess the various levels of privilege and discrimination that women experience.<sup>5</sup>

The assembly has acted before. The 211th General Assembly (1999) directed the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns to “initiate a churchwide study on the current status of women in the church and society, with particular attention to issues of aging women, pay equity, child care, family/medical leave, and relations between women and men in places of work, home and family; . . .” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 591). Due to the funding being small and the workload of the advisory committee being considerable, this action was not reported on until this year. The action taken was to convene a resolution team on pay equity. The assembly declared in 1999 that “fullness of life in Christ and Christ’s prayer for unity require women’s full participation in church life, and that the image of God in women be fully recognized and valued” (Minutes, 1999, Part I, p. 591). This is still the case and we are no closer to being able to recognize the status of women in the church.

A comprehensive study on the status of women in the PC(USA) will incorporate an examination of the status of women of color and will help the church identify the ways in which women of color are impacted by both systemic racism and gender bias. This action will better equip the PC(USA) to respond to the challenge of the Report from the Women of Color Consultation (2005) and the Report and Recommendations from the Women of Color Consultation Task Force [presented to the 218th General Assembly (2008)] and move towards the vision of the PC(USA) to become a truly diverse and inclusive community of faith. The task force will also look at alternative statistical methods that can get at this kind of information—routine methods of collecting data don’t capture the different ways that women serve in the church. This effort will take time and expertise to design a process to move forward.

While Scripture and our constitution recognize and affirm the gifts of women and men, a recent Presbyterian Panel (November 2007) survey on attitudes toward women in leadership in the PC(USA) indicates that we, as a denomination, are not living up to God’s vision for the church. Preferences are still biased toward men for leadership. The write-in comments revealed deeper concerns. Two examples from different respondents:<sup>6</sup>

In general, men don’t seem to give women the same belief that they know what they are talking about unless they have degrees to back it up. And women will stop and listen to a deep voice and give his idea consideration even when I have said the same idea earlier.

Is anyone really surprised that the advent of ordaining women and the effort to establish gender and race balance has resulted in the departure of male leadership and support for our churches? I am not suggesting that these moves are wrong, but their effect cannot be denied.

The comments written in were either/or—rejecting the questions or relieved to be asked. The systemic nature of how bias shapes perceptions and expectations are at work in these responses. Without data, some will never be able to acknowledge the reality of the church for all women. If leadership matched membership representation, leadership would be more than 60 percent female. At best, the PC(USA) is half of that, but most women continue to serve in “other” ministries and few rise to lead congregations with multiple clergy staff or memberships over 500.

There is a widely held perception that women, who have faithfully provided leadership for the church at every level of service, whether compensated or not, are often not honored, respected, or paid the same as men. These stories do not have data to support them. We simply don’t know.

The ecumenical community has begun to respond. The ACWC read studies and reports from the Episcopal Church, USA (The State of the Clergy: 2006) and the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA).<sup>7</sup> The Episcopal Church, USA routinely reports disaggregated data to the church that helps identify where women are serving in more helpful ways.<sup>8</sup> These efforts provide their communions valuable input into the budgeting of women’s programs and continue to provide measurement of inclusiveness and change. These efforts strengthen their witness in ecumenical and international contexts. The United Methodist Church has a General Commission on the Status and Role of Women, which provides this function.

The ecumenical community demonstrates converging efforts to address gender bias within communions. The World Alliance of Reformed Churches launched (in 2007) a call for the Reformed family of churches to study gender leadership and power within the alliance as well as in their individual communions. There are recommendations from the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) and from the Women of Color Consultation Task Force.

Now is the opportune time for the PC(USA) to enter into a comprehensive study of the status of women in the church. This survey will provide areas for celebration. It is also expected to identify specific areas needing attention, identifying specific barriers that need to be addressed to bring about full acceptance and equitable treatment of women in the PC(USA).

A study of the status of women would aid in bringing wholeness to the church by providing a progress report to the church on how it is recognizing and welcoming the gifts God gives women. Our Scripture reminds us that the Light shines in the darkness and the darkness does not overcome it. Women have been faithful throughout the 300 years of Presbyterianism in the U.S.A. though they have been allowed into ordained leadership for only a small portion of that time. Women servants lead in all levels of the church. The task force will assess the data available and design a mechanism for studying the status of women throughout the PC(USA).

We celebrate the gifts of women each year in worship as a way of symbolizing the continuing struggle against gender bias in church and society. The PC(USA) celebrated three milestones for women’s ordination and in the shadow of these achievements we still hear stories of exclusion, oppression, and exploitation. From a liturgical resource:<sup>9</sup>

The Spirit of the Lord was upon [Jesus] to let the oppressed go free.

The Spirit cries: “Listen!” Women’s voices are often missing from the public arena, from pulpits, from textbooks and literature. Their images are degraded on billboards and magazine covers; their character in films and television shows.

How shall we measure bias that diminishes possibilities? How do we measure the missing? the silenced? This is something that needs study and resources. Discrimination and devaluing based on gender, race, and class undergirds scourges like poverty and other destructive forces in society. Real change can happen if we focus our efforts where action is needed. We need a map to show us the places where we need to send our time, talent, and treasure and the paths to true inclusion and equity. Doing so will help us be light and salt in society and help move toward the Reign of God being revealed.

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)

Item 09-12. Resolution to Study the Status of Women in the PC(USA).

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 09-12 be approved.

Item 09-13

[The assembly approved Item 09-13. See pp. 54, 55.]

Hearing and Singing New Songs to God: Shunning Old Discords and Sharing New Harmonies (Report of the Women of Color Consultation Task Force to the 218th General Assembly (2008))

Hearing and singing new songs to God, calling the church to new directions and new ways of being in ministry, and affirming the denomination's ongoing efforts "to unmask idolatries in Church and culture, to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace" (A Brief Statement of Faith, The Book of Confessions, 10:4, lines 69-71), the Women of Color Consultation Task Force recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) take the following actions:

1. Declare 2009 to 2019 a "Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God" in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), which will call for transformation of the church, focusing on the intersections of gender, race, and class, and will include the following emphases:

- a. developing an understanding of and ability to use a "gender lens," that is, to view issues, institutions, and actions through the lens of gender-specific needs and realities;
- b. recognizing the intersectionality of gender and race, along with other factors such as ethnicity and class, that contribute to unique or particular experiences of oppression and/or privilege;
- c. seeking inclusivity with equity: moving beyond tokenism in the participation of women of color of all ages to valuing and embracing the gifts they bring to the life of the whole church;
- d. adopting an understanding of shared power as a fundamental element of community; and
- e. implementing mechanisms of accountability that hold the systems of power in the church accountable to the whole church, particularly those parts of the church that have been historically silenced or invisible.

2. Request the Moderator, the Stated Clerk, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council to communicate with congregations, presbyteries and synods, seminaries, campus ministries, and conference centers asking them to recognize the Decade of Hearing and Singing New Songs to God and incorporate it in worship, conferences, training events, and other activities.

3. Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) to create a permanent Joint Working Group on Women of Color in the Church, to be made up of two members of ACREC and two members of ACWC, appointed by the leadership of each committee.

a. In addition to the ACWC and ACREC members, the working group may appoint two to four members at-large, one of whom should be a young woman of color between the ages of 18–35, to provide representation and expertise, as needed.

b. The ACWC and ACREC shall meet jointly at least once a year, at which time an extra meeting day will be provided for the joint working group.

c. The joint working group shall monitor the church's response to issues and concerns raised in the initial Women of Color Consultation, advise ACREC and ACWC on new and emerging issues impacting women of color, and consult with the General Assembly Council in planning for future consultations.

4. Direct the General Assembly Council, in consultation with Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns, to plan a Women of Color Consultation that focuses on the full participation and leadership/decision-making roles of women of color of all ages in synods and presbyteries. Plans for the next consultation shall be reported to the 219th General Assembly (2010), for an event to be held no later than 2011, and from which a report and recommendations shall be submitted to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

5. Urge the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council elected to utilize the tools of cultural proficiency in all of their activities to deepen and enhance their work together across differences.

6. Request the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council, working in partnership to resource and equip presbyteries and synods, utilizing the tools of cultural proficiency, to work for equitable participation of women of color in all aspects of the life and ministry of presbyteries and synods.

7. Urge all entities in the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC) to be mindful of the critical importance of utilizing culturally proficient communication tools and strategies and to be intentional in working to communicate with the whole church to convey the vision of being diverse and inclusive with equity. Request Communications and Funds Development, in partnership with the Cultural Proficiency office, to equip OGA and GAC staff with culturally proficient communication tools.

8. Direct the Office of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, the Board of Pensions, the Presbyterian Foundation, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation to collect, organize, and report data for all research in the church (such as comparative statistics, Presbyterian Panel, data gathered by the Vocation's office on inquirers, candidates, and clergy, the Stated Clerk's annual statistical report, etc.) in a disaggregated form by race, ethnicity, gender, and age, so that data on women of color and young adult women of color may be identified separately for analysis, where possible and as permissible by law.

9. Direct the General Assembly Council to develop a resource for use by congregations, presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly that will provide tools to conduct a gender equity audit that includes age, race, and ethnicity, that enables entities within the church to gather quantifiable data on women and persons of color's presence, participation, and influence in decision-making processes.

10. Direct the General Assembly Council, in consultation with Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns, to expand on the basic antiracism training to include modules on the intersectionality of race, gender, and class, and provide focused training on internalized oppression and privilege, with a timeline as follows:

- a. the intersections of race, gender, and class by 2010;
- b. internalized oppression (race & gender) by 2012;
- c. white privilege and male privilege by 2014.

11. Reaffirm the General Assembly policy commitments to race and gender justice, including the church's commitments to ensure racial ethnic and women's representation in decision-making bodies. Urge all nominating committees, committees on representation, and policy-making bodies to be mindful of the intersections of race, gender, and class. At the General Assembly level,

a. remind and reaffirm the General Assembly Nominating Committee, the General Assembly Council Nominating Committee, and the committees on representation as they do their work, where they are guided by specific representation criteria to consider gender balance when they are fulfilling guidelines for racial ethnic representation and to include racial ethnic representation when fulfilling guidelines for women's representation;

b. remind and reaffirm the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to be mindful of the intersections of gender, race, and class in the appointment of its resolution teams, task forces, consultants, etc., and in the development of policy.

12. Encourage member-based organizations, networks, associations, and caucuses within the church to dismantle racism, sexism, classism, and ageism at all levels of the church, including within their own organizations. These organizations are encouraged to utilize the antiracism, cultural proficiency, and other leadership training resources developed by the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council to equip their members to be advocates of transformation within Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) structures (see Appendix B: Resources). They are encouraged to work in partnership with others in this endeavor.

13. Encourage the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as it participates with the World Alliance of Reformed Churches in its development of a global study process on gender, leadership, and power, to include attention to the intersections of gender, race, and class in the U. S. context.

Rationale

“The caged bird sings
With a fearful trill
Of things unknown
But longed for still...”
—Maya Angelou

“If you want to know me, learn my song!”
—African Proverb

1. Prelude

Hearing and singing<sup>1</sup> new songs to God releases our harmony of spirit and vibrant voice as faithful people of God. The ancient psalms have been our model of both tune and tone. Their lyrics and melodies have often called us and given voice to our shared harmonies of praise and lament from every person and all of creation.

Sadly, throughout the history of the church, some voices have been disvalued, excluded, or silenced. For too long, we have caged the faithful songs that some would sing. We have neither heard nor learned their songs, and so we have not really known them. Women, people of color, and particularly those at the intersections of these two identities have seldom found their voices heard and their songs sung throughout the life of the whole church.

So we who are church must now confess that whenever and wherever voices of the faithful are shunned, silenced, or ignored, there is disharmony that impoverishes the life of the whole church and denies our beliefs and commitments:

All of you are God’s children because of your faith in Christ Jesus. And when you were baptized, it was as though you had put on Christ in the same way you put on new clothes. Faith in Christ Jesus is what makes each of you equal with each other, whether you are a Jew or a Greek, a slave or a free person, a man or a woman. (Gal. 3:26–28, Contemporary English Version, Copyright © 1995 by American Bible Society.)

In sovereign love God created the world good and makes everyone equally in God’s image, male and female, of every race and people, to live as one community... (The Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, 10.3, lines 29–32)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. ... (Book of Order, G-4.0403)

Along with their sisters and brothers in the PC(USA), women of color fully affirm our churchwide commitments and vision to be a faith community of inclusive diversity and diverse inclusiveness of God’s people. Those commitments are biblical and theological—deeply rooted in our identity as Presbyterians and as Christians. Women of color also share their lament for the many ways that the church has not always kept faith with this vision. Those broken promises are some of the old discords to be shunned. Then, new harmonies can be sung:

God of the women long put to the test,
Left out of stories, forgotten, oppressed,
Quietly asking: “Who smiled at my birth?”
In Jesus’ dying, you show us our worth—Carolyn Winfrey Gillette

As the church seeks in faithfulness to live into the vision of wholeness that God calls us to be, women of color within the church offer their gifts—the rich diversity of experience, culture, and world view; gifts of faithfulness, service, and leadership—inviting the whole church to sing in new harmonies, naming and claiming new ways of being the whole people of God.

We believe the time, both God’s and ours, is now—now for all members of the church to learn the songs of women of color in the PC(USA) that we might truly know them and justly include them. Only in hearing and singing new songs to God will we fully and freely know all our sisters who are women of color, and thereby more fully and freely know God.

2. Background

In January 2001, the Racial Ethnic Women's Dialog of Presbyterian Women (PW) made a historic decision to call for a gathering of racial ethnic women. A great number of GAC ministry offices, presbyteries, synods, and Presbyterian Women responded to this call. In October 2004, more than 180 women of color from across the church came together in Atlanta where they met with approximately forty staff and elected consulting partners for national consultation. The participants were mostly grassroots, Presbyterian women of color leaders from diverse cultural and racial backgrounds. Most women were nominated by presbyteries, synods, PW groups, and racial ethnic caucuses to participate in the consultation. Among those participating were Asian Americans, African Americans, Latinas, Middle Easterners, Native Americans, Pacific Islanders, and new immigrant women from Ghana, Kenya, and other countries.

The 2004 consultation was the first opportunity for women of color to meet together since 1993 when the Committee of Women of Color (CWC) was phased out at the General Assembly Council level. The theme drawn from Rev. 22:1-2, "Come, Be Refreshed by the Waters of Life," expressed the spirit of hope and stirred creative imagination in women of many races, cultures, ages, and all aspects of the church's life. There were three plenary sessions that addressed key issues for women of color, and there were ten mini-consultations that allowed the participants to share their experiences, perspectives, and ideas. Together, the women developed their vision of how the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) might become an inclusive, beloved community. These sessions also generated the consultation recommendations that addressed many facets of the church's mission and ministry. Documents related to this process were published in the March/April 2005 issue of Church & Society magazine, titled "Come! Be Refreshed!"

After having participated in the consultation, participants expressed that they had developed new relationships and new understandings of issues that affect women of color and had learned strategies for bringing about change in the church. In addition, these women expressed more awareness and acceptance of each other's differences, recognizing those differences as strengths. The consultation became a safe place where they could speak freely, be heard, and be themselves. Many participants expressed a desire for continuing consultations, which serve "as the church's and society's hope and conscience."

Following the consultation, a team that included members of the consultation planning team and staff consultants, gathered the recommendations from the consultation in a report. The consultation recommendations were addressed to several entities of the church, including the General Assembly Council, Office of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Women, Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC), and the participants themselves.

Based on their review of the report, the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns submitted a joint resolution to the 217th General Assembly (2006). The resolution, approved by the assembly, stated the following:

1. Create a task force to respond to the recommendations in the Women of Color Consultation (WoCC) report. ... This task force should include representation from ACREC and ACWC, as well as members identified from Presbyterian Women and the National Cross Caucus. As part of the response to the recommendations, the task force will design a mechanism to monitor the implementation of the recommendations in the WoCC report. This task force will report to the 218th General Assembly (2008).
2. Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC) to provide sufficient funding and staff support for the ACREC/ACWC joint task force.
3. Direct the GAC to provide sufficient funding and staff support to ensure a regularly recurring Women of Color Consultation.
4. Equip all GAC staff to be responsive to the needs of women of color as part of their continuing commitment to valuing the gifts that all people bring to the PC(USA). GAC staff should continue to be encouraged to reflect on and incorporate the values articulated in the Report on Creating a Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004).
5. Encourage all members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to read, study, and respond to the WoCC report and recommendations. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 678)

3. Analysis of the WoCC Report

The report and recommendations of the Women of Color Consultation (released December 2005) took a wide-scope view of the church's organizational structure at all levels, and included reflections on the culture of the church. Women at the consultation spoke about their experience in the church

- at congregational, presbytery, synod, and national levels;
- in organizations, networks, and caucuses where they participate;
- as members and as leaders; and

- as ordained clergy, elders, deacons, and as laypersons.

Throughout the report, one can hear the authentic voices of racial ethnic women expressing both their love of Jesus Christ and the Presbyterian church as well as their struggle with a church that often renders them outsiders. They express deep frustration with a church that is often resistant to change and, many times, is obstructive to the efforts of women of color to participate fully in the life of the church. As the task force met and began its assessment, these questions served as their guide: “Whose voices are not being heard?” “What messages have been silenced?”

a. Themes

The task force identified four overarching themes in the consultation report, and placed these at the core of its analysis of the response to the report. Consultation participants were asked to share experiences of racism and sexism in the church and in the society. They were also asked to think about how the church might do things differently, in order to become a more welcoming church—fully engaging and supporting women of color in the life of the church. The report captures their recommendations to the church and reveals several overarching themes of their vision for a more inclusive and diverse church that affirms and takes seriously the gifts of racial ethnic women. The message that resonates throughout the report is a call to the church for transformation. If the PC(USA) is to become a truly multiracial, multicultural church that welcomes and is strengthened by diversity, the report holds that the church must be willing to be transformed—to learn new ways of doing and being a faith community.

(1) Gender Lens and Intersectionality

The report calls the church to use a “gender lens”—that is, to learn to see “gender-specific needs and realities.” The report also points out emphatically that women of color are both racial ethnic and female, thus, neither identity can be denied for them to be whole. It calls the church to develop a better understanding of the intersectionality of race and gender in the experience of women of color. The report continually reiterates the importance of incorporating women’s organizations, networks, and communication vehicles in planning at all levels of the church so that women’s experiences are made an integral part of the process of giving shape to the ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Furthermore, it urges that this should be done in a framework where “intersectionality” is understood to mean the ways in which the factors of race, gender, class and other social identities interact and intersect in the lived experiences and personal identity of women of color. Intersectionality then, is the recognition that the lives of women of color are both racialized and gendered, and therefore their experience of oppression is shaped by discrimination directed towards both their race and gender. Intersectionality is a recognition that women of color experience racism differently than men of color; it is a recognition that women of color experience sexism differently than white women.

(2) Church as a System of Privilege and Discrimination

The second theme arising out of the report is a call to the church to recognize the ways that the church perpetuates systems of privilege within its own structures and ethos, and to renew its commitment to dismantle racism in all its forms, recognizing the complexities of race, ethnicity, and class as factors of marginalization and privilege. The church has already done some of this work. The 211th General Assembly (1999), in Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community, directed all presbyteries to engage in antiracism training by 2005. While many presbyteries have undertaken this work, there are still many who have yet to do so. Antiracism resources and training opportunities are available to Presbyterians, though there seems to be a lack of initiative and recognition of a need to do the work. There remains a need to expand on the resources the church can provide congregations, presbyteries, and synods, in the areas of race, gender, and class intersections, internalized oppression, white and male privilege.

(3) Commitment to Inclusivity with Justice

Another theme present in the consultation’s report is a desire for the church to express a renewed commitment to inclusivity with justice, through equity and mutuality, recognizing the need for shared power at all levels of the church and the need for cultural transformation within the church to make this possible. Equity and mutuality are elements of a whole and welcoming beloved community that lend themselves to an environment where shared power is possible. It is much more than ensuring that particular groups are represented in decision-making bodies. Presbyteries and synods must be equipped with the tools of cultural proficiency and dialogue in order to develop and foster vital community-building skills. The adoption and incorporation of the tools for cultural proficiency throughout the body of the church can help to create an environment where women of color’s voices, gifts, and leadership are fully valued and appreciated.

(4) Making Visible the Leadership of Women of Color

Finally, the consultation is calling the church to express its commitments to inclusivity and diversity by developing, nurturing, and supporting the leadership and gifts of women of color within the church—beyond token representation. It is important, therefore, to collect data that will give the church an accurate assessment of where and how women of color are serving throughout the body of the church. This data would aid the church in measuring its own commitments in nomination and recruitment processes that utilize broad searches for candidates, and result in a greater diversity of candidates. Too often, the church has called on the same few people to be the representative for their racial ethnic or age group. The 208th General Assembly (1996), in Racial Ethnic Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy, called upon the church to commit itself to the goal of increasing the membership of diverse racial, ethnic, and immigrant communities, and to the vision of creating an environment where their numbers and gifts are welcome and valued. The church is more fully able to embody the beloved community when responding to this call. However, the consultation report also reflects the reality that the whole church has not actively embraced this goal with intentional, committed actions. Until that happens, denominational goals for increasing racial ethnic and new immigrant membership have little meaning.

b. Assessment of Recommendations

Many recommendations in the report were broad in scope, but there were also many that narrowly addressed specific program ministries and entities that existed in 2004. Many of these entities were downsized or eliminated in the 2006 restructuring of the General Assembly Council program areas. The task force, which was asked to assess the structure's response to the recommendations in the report, became frustrated by the confusion present within the organization—an organization that was in significant transition. Essentially, the task force had received a document addressed to a nonexistent structure and struggled with how to move forward.

While trying to fulfill its responsibility in the midst of transition, it became increasingly apparent to the task force that the processes for change can have a significant impact on the outcome. In other words, inclusivity with equity means that the people impacted need to have a voice in the changes that effect their participation in the life of the church. The task force experienced significant frustration as it saw the GAC, in particular, busily working to reorganize itself to support stated goals to become a more diverse, multicultural church, yet not taking time to attend to the work of 200 women of color—grassroots women from across the church—who spoke from experience about the realities the church confronts. The following describes some of the difficulties that the task force has experienced in addressing the recommendations to an organization in transition—and some of the successes. Within the GAC staff, all senior leadership positions have yet to be filled as of the writing of this report. Three ministries divisions in the GAC became one Mission Ministry with seven ministry areas. Program staff were sometimes dispersed into differing ministry areas and had to adjust to changes in management and budget. Without an ability to accurately determine who in the surviving structure should be contacted, the task force wrote the General Assembly Council asking for an assessment of program responses. In order to assist in this process, the task force translated the report from the Mission Work Plan 2005–2006 (MWP 05–06) framework into the Mission Work Plan 2007–2008 framework. This was done in the hope that it would improve the response rate, but the response rate remained low. However, the task force is pleased to report it had the opportunity to engage in conversation with the GAC working group developing the Mission Work Plan 2009–2010 in the interest of bringing the voices of the consultation into the planning of this guiding document. The Mission Work Plan 2009–2010 team appreciated how the Women of Color Consultation organized its recommendations in line with the mission work plan and commended this as a model for others.

Given these circumstances, the task force's attempts to receive written feedback from most program areas were only minimally successful. However, many of the staff that the task force sought to consult with were able to meet with the task force. Many of these conversations were helpful. The task force met with staff from

- Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area,
- Office of Vocation,
- General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC), and
- General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR).

In these meetings, the task force found colleagues who deeply appreciated the expressed concerns of women of color, and were eager to share their ongoing efforts to address these concerns. These conversations, a meeting with the Executive Committee of the GAC, and additional correspondence with the Executive Director have brought some measure of clarity on the work that GAC ministries are doing and the ways that their work is responsive to the concerns raised in the consultation.

c. A Model for Change

The initiative to sponsor a gathering of women of color in the church came from Presbyterian Women (PW) through its own Racial Ethnic Women's Dialog, which began in 1998. The dialog began as a response to racial ethnic women calling for a forum where their voices could be heard within PW. This group of women of diverse racial ethnic backgrounds and ages meets annually with the intention to break down barriers, promote mutual understanding, and to move in the direction of a deeper collaborative work. The process of the dialog has helped to raise awareness within PW of the need for change within their organization.

Presbyterian Women has engaged the issue of racism in a variety of ways. After declaring its antiracist identity in 2000, it has worked consistently on its antiracism initiative. The PW has offered two rounds of antiracism training programs over the last six years through which more than sixty women have been trained and are providing leadership to bring about racial justice in their churches, presbyteries, and synods. The PW has offered antiracism and cultural proficiency training to its Churchwide Coordinating Team (CCT) of PW since 2000. The PW CCT is also addressing issues of shared power and internalized oppression utilizing the antiracism and cultural proficiency training tools of the PC(USA).

Unfortunately, PW's commitment does not seem to be shared by many other entities in the church. Women attending the consultation repeatedly asked for accountability to be built into the system to respond to their voices and needs. Critical failures for this structural accountability were noted with the major reductions of staff (1993 and 2004), some of whom had responsibilities to these constituencies, and the elimination of the Committee of Women of Color (CWC), a national committee with sole focus on women of color's concerns, in 1993. With a few exceptions, Committees of Women of Color<sup>2</sup> have now been phased out at all levels in the connectional structure. With these losses, women of color strain to recognize support for them throughout the church. Acknowledging financial and membership losses in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does not mean we must accept a church of scarcity for women of color.

d. Tools for Change

During the consultation, Roula Alkhouri and Laura Mariko Cheifetz asked in their sermon—"But what sort of life is this? If we are identified only by the stereotypes that others hold against us ... only by what wounds us ... only by what limits our possibilities ... [then] what is it that makes us whole and good? What is it that makes us free?"<sup>3</sup> They are inviting the whole church to listen to their cries and hopes and to explore these questions together and respond to the vision to which God calls all of us. In the recommendations<sup>4</sup>, the consultation urged the church to "Demonstrate spirituality by growing into an inclusive community that embraces change with new ideas to make all racial ethnic/ immigrant persons feel welcome. ... Be more intentional about sharing power, creating accountability, and adopting new ways of doing ministry at all levels of the church..."<sup>5</sup>

This vision of the beloved community requires hard work from the whole church. To contribute to this vision, women of color recognize that they need to work on their own internalized oppression of racism and sexism. They call the family of God to this same self-examination, conviction, repentance, and transformation.

e. Cultural Proficiency

In order to build the beloved community, we need to learn to communicate effectively across our differences. We will learn that differences and distinctions do not have to separate us—instead they are gifts from an abundant loving God, which must be appreciated, celebrated, and engaged. Cultural proficiency is a process that can help us move in this direction, individually and organizationally. One of the tools of cultural proficiency is to recognize the barriers to change: the presumption of entitlement and lacking an awareness of the need to adapt to human diversity.

In the world of gender relations, power dynamics between men and women tend to disadvantage women. In the world of race relations in the U.S., power dynamics between whites and persons of color tend to disadvantage people of color. This broken system serves to advantage men and whites. Advantaged persons in this construct intentionally and unintentionally perpetuate systems of privilege. In this sense, women of color are doubly burdened—burdened by their race and burdened by their gender. This social construct does not take seriously the realities of women of color who live at the intersection of race and gender; the needs of women of color are often ignored.

The framework of cultural proficiency provides a spectrum (for individuals and organizations), which begins describing behaviors that are culturally destructive and builds toward cultural understanding, which honors differences as assets to the individual and the whole community. It is a tool to help individuals and organizations learn to assess where they are and where they need to change. These analytical skills are a critical component for organizations seeking to be intentional about change and transformation.

Cultural proficiency is

"...a way of being that allows individuals and organizations to interact effectively with people who differ from them. It is a developmental approach for addressing the issues that emerge in diverse environments."<sup>6</sup>

Culturally proficient organizations learn to recognize institutional and systemic barriers to inclusion with equity. Antiracism training and gender equity audits are two tools that can help organizations learn to identify structures and habits that work to marginalize people within their organizations.

Dialogue is a major tool for developing empathy and understanding. During the consultation, dialogue facilitated major change in the participants. Participants learned to appreciate each other's differences, learned from each other, and built strategies based on their collective wisdom.

In the work of the task force, tools of cultural proficiency were used to explore and understand how the intersections of race and gender are experienced in our own lives. In sharing with one another, we furthered our commitments to this process and to the understanding of how becoming culturally proficient changes us. These tools changed the task force. They can help to transform the church also.

f. World Alliance of Reformed Churches

It is important to note that women of color in the PC(USA) are not alone in calling the church to think critically at the intersections of categories, such as race and gender. There are many other women and men around the world that are making a similar call. For instance, a consultation on "Gender, Leadership and Power" (June 2007), organized by the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC), of which the PC(USA) is a member, examined the issues of leadership and power through a gender lens and in relation to race/ethnicity, culture, and many other forces that impact women's lives. What emerged from the WARC consultation is a proposal for a global study process that is intended for transformation of gender and power constructions in relation to racial and ethnic identity, cultural identity, use of the Bible and theology in the church, globalization, and leadership. The General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations (GACER) has recommended to the General Assembly Council "that it develop a strategy for such study process for the PC(USA) and leadership and our participation in the North America study process." Participation with WARC will strengthen and enhance the efforts within PC(USA).

g. Summary

What is true about the world is also true about the church. We have built systems of white and male privilege into the life and ministries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and these two gender-based and race-based systems seldom meet, making women of color fall between the cracks. Once recognized, we must transform this reality by removing the barriers and building, with one another, the beloved community. The church is called to be distinct, to be salt and light to the world—the gospel model for society. Anything less is a scandalous denial of God.

The reports received by the task force from responding entities indicate that PC(USA) structures continue to be naïve about their diversity claims. Yet these women do not end with a song of lament. Our faithful sisters in God's family remain steadfast in the church and continue to sing a song insisting on change, calling on the church to listen.

4. Conclusions

True commitment to a new vision of the church requires committed action. If the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is to become a diverse and inclusive community of faith that fully engages all of its members in all aspects of the life and decision-making with equity and mutuality, we must take concrete steps to effect the kinds of change that make this vision a reality. Change in an organization is a process that happens at multiple points and from multiple directions. Some things can be mandated or legislated, but some kinds of change must come with a conversion of the heart. Any strategy for change must also acknowledge that there are always barriers to change. This is especially true when confronting the systemic nature of racism, sexism, and classism. The task force acknowledges that if the vision for change does not belong to the whole church, the transformation called for by the Women of Color Consultation will not become a reality. Therefore, the task force is recommending a strategy that seeks to engage the church at every level and in a variety of ways.

Presbyteries and synods were prominent in the consultation report, as the place where members are most likely to be involved beyond the local congregation. Consultation participants lifted up specific denominational responsibilities and commitments that had an impact on their participation in the church. These included

- responsibilities and functions of presbyteries relating to processes of candidacy, call and ordination;
- the work of committees on representation to promote the engagement of women of color in the leadership of their presbytery or synod;
- the activities of presbyteries and synods to help congregations to engage in ministries of social justice,
- providing training and resources for antiracism work, and

- modeling the use of inclusive and expansive language in meetings and worship.

The women who participated in the 2004 consultation expressed a strong sense of urgency in their call for recurring consultations. The task force urges the GAC to reflect the same sense of urgency in planning and conducting the next consultation and recommends a timeline that would provide for an event no later than 2011. With the loss of staffing and programs directly relating to women of color, a consultation process is seen as an important mechanism to give voice for women of color within the PC(USA) structure. The task force believes the focus of the next consultation should be on presbyteries and synods.

a. Accountability to Each Other in the Community of Faith

A central theme of the consultation was the need within a connectional church to hold each other accountable to the commitments we have made as a community of faith. The governing bodies of the church play a critical role in exercising accountability through its structures, as do the member-based organizations that speak for particular constituencies within the church. The elected GAC plays a crucial leadership role in monitoring and directing the work of GAC staff and setting the Mission Work Plan goals.

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) were created by the General Assembly to monitor the work of the church and to advocate for women and for people of color, respectively. The spirit of the WoCC underscores the need for these two committees to work together to address the intersections of race and gender, rather than segmenting the work in separate categories of "women" and "racial ethnic." Historically, ACWC and ACREC have met jointly in conjunction with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP). The agenda for this joint meeting has focused on their common work in preparation for General Assembly. When assemblies met every year, this was an annual meeting, which facilitated the three committees' work in advising the assembly. However, it did not allow time for the creative work of developing new initiatives or educating committee members to work more effectively in the intersections of gender, race, and class that shape and inform the work that each committee is called to do.

Following the WoCC, ACREC and ACWC created a Joint Working Group with members of both committees to consider the recommendations of the consultation and ways in which the two committees could work together to address concerns raised by women of color. The Joint Working Group refers items of business back to the ACREC and ACWC committees for additional conversation and action. This gives responsibility to ACREC to examine issues of racial justice through a gender lens, and ACWC to examine issues of gender justice through a racial/cultural lens. The task force believes that the Joint Working Group is crucial to ensuring that ACWC and ACREC are equipped to be fully responsive to women of color in the church. The work of this group would be enhanced by the participation of non-voting members to provide greater representation and expertise. The current budgets for ACREC and ACWC do not provide for the costs associated with bringing additional participants to a joint meeting. Providing for that expanded participation and extended meeting time ensures that both committees can sustain the joint working group on a permanent basis and allows for greater representation of women from various parts of the church in the process.

b. Equipping and Resourcing the Church for Transformation

Intentional, committed strategies for change require equipping people with the tools for change. The 2004 consultation pointed to the failure throughout the church to use the resources available. Many of the women present were not aware of the denomination's commitment to do antiracism training at all governing levels, for example. The consultation also pointed to the need for additional resources to equip the church for change. When the consultation met in 2004, the concepts and tools of cultural proficiency were just being introduced to the church. As the task force did its assessment, cultural proficiency emerged as a way of speaking about the multiple facets of change that need to occur—encompassing a variety of strategies at different locations within the organizational structure of the church:

- Creating greater awareness of the realities of sexism, racism and classism; the intersections of gender, race and class; and the significant difference that age/generation makes in the experience of racism and sexism in our culture;
- Learning to recognize the barriers to change, which includes recognizing the ways that privilege and internalized oppression impact both personal relationships and formal structures within the church;
- Developing better skills for cross-cultural communication;
- Learning to share power and create relationships based on equity and mutuality, using different models for dialogue and decision-making;

- Recognizing the role of OGA & GAC to equip congregations, presbyteries, and synods by developing resources and facilitating networks where Presbyterians can share best practices and learn from each other’s experiences;
- Developing and utilizing tools to help the church learn to recognize the ways that it perpetuates systemic patterns of discrimination so that they can be dismantled:
  - Gender equity audits
  - Training in antiracism; the intersections of gender, race & class; internalized oppression and privilege
- Gathering, organizing and reporting data that gives an accurate picture of the status of women of color in the church; and
- Renewing commitments to seeking full participation of women and people of color through the work of committees on representation and nominating committees.

In addition to providing resources, support, and guidance to congregations, presbyteries, and synods, the work of the church at the national level is critical to transforming the church. The consultation, while affirming the work of the General Assembly in its public witness to race and gender justice, also expressed the need for the church at the national level to embody the vision expressed in our policies. The work of the General Assembly level committees, governing boards, and staff entities reflect whether the church is truly committed to transformation by the ways it embodies a new vision.

The 2004 consultation affirmed the work of the General Assembly Nominating Committee, the General Assembly Committee on Representation, and the denomination’s policies that require minimum levels of participation for people of color and women in particular entities. The consultation also underscores the importance of not segmenting race and class as the church seeks to be representative, seeking instead to pay close attention to the intersections of race and gender—so that when seeking to meet standards for racial ethnic representation we seek to have gender balance, and when seeking to assure participation of women, racial and cultural diversity is included in that representation.

The consultation also pointed to the importance of communication on multiple levels. Providing translation in meetings and publications in languages other than English are important steps to creating an inclusive church. Communicating in a culturally proficient manner encompasses other aspects as well:

- Paying attention to the diversity in the church,
- Not assuming there is only one normative way of being Presbyterian,
- Including persons of color in visual media with integrity,
- Using language that is inclusive and sensitive to the ways diverse communities speak about themselves, and
- Learning to speak to a generation that has grown up in an Internet age but remembering that not every congregation has Internet access.

These are just some of the considerations that should be reflected in the ways we communicate throughout the church.

Many of the women who participated in the consultation were invited through grassroots member-based organizations such as Presbyterian Women, the racial ethnic women’s organizations, racial ethnic caucuses, and Racial Ethnic Young Women Together. The consultation recognized that the members of these organizations also have a voice in effecting change within the church. They called on their own organizations and others throughout the church, to call their members to accountability and to equip their members to be effective agents for change. As the task force met with various entities within the church, it became more aware of the many organizations, associations, and networks that have significant impact on the life of the church—and it urges all of them to engage in the process of transformation.

APPENDIX A

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

Affirmative Action: A set of public policies and initiatives designed to help eliminate past and present discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin. The actual phrase “affirmative action” was first used in President Lyndon Johnson’s 1965 Executive Order 11246 requiring federal contractors to “take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed, and that employees are treated during employment, without regard to their race, creed, color, or national origin.” In 1967, Johnson expanded the Executive Order to include affirmative action requirements to benefit women. (Source: <http://www.now.org/nnt;08-95/affirmhs.html>.)

Ageism: Discrimination on the basis of age and life experience. The term is most often used to refer to discrimination against older adults, but within the church it can refer to the marginalization of young adults from leadership.

Antiracism: An active and consistent process of change to eliminate individual, institutional and systemic racism as well as the oppression and injustice racism causes. (Source: Canadian Race Relations Foundation’s Glossary of Terms.)

Assimilation: A process by which “outsiders” are brought into or are made to take on and then live out of, the identity of a dominant group, often resulting in the loss of the culture of the minority group. The term has a decidedly negative connotation implying coercion and a failure to recognize and value diversity. Other times this term is understood as a survival technique for individuals and groups.

Class: A category usually used to divide members of society into groups in terms of their economic status. The American Heritage Dictionary defines it as “a social stratum whose members share similar economic, political, and cultural characteristics.”

Consultation: (working definition for the 2004 consultation) Describes the process by which people engage one another at a meeting. It usually refers to a gathering where a group of people with a particular set of concerns, experience, and expertise are brought together to consult with one another with the goal of engendering a projected outcome.

Cross-cultural: Communication and interactions that understand and respect the difference culture makes in relationships.

Culture: Everything you believe and do that identifies you as a member of a group and distinguishes you from other groups. You may belong to more than one cultural group. Cultures reflect the belief systems and behaviors that are informed by ethnicity as well as other sociological factors like gender, age, sexual orientation, and physical ability. Both individuals and organizations are defined by their cultures. (Source: R.B. Lindsey, Kikanza Nuri Robins, and Raymond D. Terrell, editors. Cultural Proficiency: A Manual for School Leaders, 2003, 2nd edition.)

Cultural Competence: A term created by Terry Cross, which means interacting with one’s clients, colleagues, and community using the essential elements of cultural competence: assessing culture, valuing diversity, managing the dynamics of difference, adapting to diversity, and institutionalizing cultural knowledge. (Source: Lindsey, Robins, and Terrell.)

Cultural Group: A group of people that share certain characteristics such as mannerisms, beliefs (religious and other), language, values, and usually a common history, real or fictitious. See Ethnic Group.

Cultural Identity: Seeing oneself in relation to one’s own ethnic or cultural group. There are many different affiliations that we hold that come together to create a unique cultural identity for each of us. Our cultural identity is very complex with each group membership intersecting with the others. Because of this complexity, we cannot be judged, labeled, or categorized based on one aspect of our identity. (Source: D. Merrill-Sands, Holvino, and Cumming. Working with Diversity: Working Paper NO. 11, Center for Gender in Organizations, SIMMONS Graduate School of Management, MA, USA, 2000. www.awid.org/ywl/glossary.)

Cultural Filter: Our complex cultural identity creates in our minds a sort of “cultural filter.” Everything we experience each day goes through this filter, influencing how we think, feel, and react to the world around us.

Cultural Proficiency: The policies and practices of an organization, or the values and behaviors of an individual, which enable that organization or person to interact effectively in a culturally diverse environment. Cultural proficiency is a “way of being” that is reflected in the way an organization treats its employees, its clients, and its community. There are six points along the cultural proficiency continuum: cultural destructiveness, cultural incapacity, cultural indifference<sup>7</sup>, cultural precompetence, cultural competence, and cultural proficiency. (Source: Lindsey, Robins, and Terrell.)

Dialogue: A process of communication that allows people to share their perspectives and experiences with one another about difficult issues we tend to just debate about or avoid entirely. (Source: National Coalition for Dialogue & Deliberation. <http://www.thataway.org>.)

Discrimination: Treating members of a targeted group less favorably than those of the dominant group. Often occurs when the dominant group determines the accessibility of goods or services for, and/or the rights and privileges of, the targeted group. (Source: Association for Women’s Rights in Development, www.awid.org/ywl/glossary.)

Diversity: A general term for indicating that many people with many differences are present in an organization or group. Diversity refers to ethnicity, language, gender, age, ability, and sexual orientation and all other aspects of culture. (Source: Lindsey, Robins, and Terrell.)

Dominant Culture: Used widely to refer to the cultural group with the greatest political power in a given context.

Ethnic Group: A group socially defined on the basis of cultural characteristics of diverse types such as language, religion, kinship organization, dress, and mannerism, or any other set of criteria deemed relevant to the actors concerned. (Source: Merrill-Sands, D., Holvino, and Cumming. Working with Diversity, Working Paper, No. 11, Center for Gender in Organizations, Simmons Graduate School of Management, MA, USA: 2000.)

Ethnicity: A social construct which divides people into smaller social groups based on characteristics such as shared sense of group membership, values, behavioral patterns, language, political and economic interests, history, and ancestral geographical base. (Source:

Maurianne Adams, Lee Anne Bell, and Pat Griffin, editors. Teaching for Diversity and Social Justice: A sourcebook. New York: Routledge, 2000.)

Ethnocentrism: The belief that one's ethnic group is superior to all others, resulting, at times, in discrimination toward those of different ethnic backgrounds or national origin. (Source: Maurianne Adams, et. al.)

Gender (vs. Sex): Describes the socially constructed identities (as opposed to biological), roles, and expectations assigned to women and men. Feminine and masculine are the qualifiers used to describe gender stereotypes for women and men.

Gender Audit: A self-assessment tool for organizations and institutions on how gender issues are addressed in programming portfolios and internal organizational processes, and not on external evaluation.

Gender equality: Women and men have equal conditions for realizing their full human rights and potential to contribute to national, political, economic, social, and cultural development and to benefit equally from the results, not by becoming the same, but by correcting the systemic nature of inequality. (Source: Association of Women's Rights in Development, www.awid.org/ywl/glossary.)

Gender equity: The process of ensuring fairness to both women and men, often involving making measures available to compensate for historical and social disadvantages that prevent women and men from otherwise operating on the same level. Equity leads to equality. (Source: Association for Women's Rights in Development, <http://www.awid.org/ywl/glossary>.)

Gender lens: Using a gender lens is like putting on spectacles. Like using a pair of glasses to correct our vision, gender lens helps us focus our attention on gender differences in needs and realities and take these differences seriously.

Gender Roles: Learned behavior in a given society/community that conditions certain tasks, activities, and behavior to be perceived as male or female. They vary according to culture and/or social group and according to class, ethnicity, and race. Factors such as education, technology, economic change, and sudden crises like war and famine cause gender roles and the gender division of labor to change. (Source: Association for Women's Rights in Development, www.awid.org/glossary.)

Inclusive Language: A corrective to human languages that mirror the societal values and institutions of the dominant group. The inclusive language policy adopted by the PC(USA) in 1985 stated that the language of the church "should display a sensitivity to varied metaphors that reflect our belief in a covenanting God, the limitations as well as the richness of human imagery in language about God, and diversity among Presbyterians." (Source: Definitions and Guidelines on Inclusive Language, PDS 70-420-01-003.)

Institutional racism/sexism: When the values, norms, beliefs, standards, and expectations of a dominant group become the basis for organizational policies, practices, arrangements, and appropriate behaviors, and result in unequal distribution of benefits and opportunities. The power to control resources, determine access, reward and punish behaviors, distribute benefits and privilege is lodged in norms of the dominant group and access is denied to people of different identity groups. (Source: Merrill-Sands, D., Holvino and Cumming. Working with Diversity, www.awid.org/ywl/glossary.)

Internalized oppression: External oppression becomes internalized oppression when the oppressed come to believe and act as if the oppressor's belief system, values, and way of life are reality.

Intersectionality: The reality for women who suffer not only from gender discrimination, but also experience a range of other power relations such as racial, ethnic, caste, among others. For instance, most racial ethnic women experience discrimination not only because of their race but also because of their gender; in other words, racial ethnic women live the intersection of gender and race discrimination. (Source: Association of Women's Rights in Development, <http://www.awid.org/glossary>.)

Male privilege: Unearned and unquestioned set of advantages, entitlements, benefits, and choices bestowed on people solely because they are men living in a system that is built on sexism. By virtue of their maleness, men enjoy concrete benefits through access to resources and social rewards and the power to shape the norms and values of society. Generally, men who enjoy such privilege do so without choosing it or even being conscious of it.

Multiculturalism: The preservation of different cultures or cultural identities within a society or nation, holding each as equally valuable to and influential upon the members of society. The educational term, multicultural, refers to teaching about different cultures. Multiculturalism differs from cultural proficiency, in that it reflects a state of being, whereas cultural proficiency is a process or a way of being. (Source: Lindsey, Robins, and Terrell, Cultural Proficiency.)

Mutual Invitation: A process designed by Eric Law to ensure that everyone who wants to engage in a dialog has the opportunity to speak and be heard in a group setting where the dynamics of power can be played out in such a way that some may dominate the conversation while silencing others.

Patriarchy: Literally means "rule of the father." In a patriarchal society, women are seen as the primary house workers and child raisers, and their capacity to compete economically with men is thereby limited. Cultural patterns and legal restrictions continue to limit women's economic, political, and social equality to ratify the view that women are subordinate to men as a gender group, a subordination that is interstructured with class and racial subordination. Religion and society are deeply shaped by this system. (Source: Rosemary Radford Ruether, Dictionary of Feminist Theologies, Westminster/John Knox. Letty M. Russell and J. Shannon Clarkson, 1996.)

Person of color: Generally used to refer to "non-whites."

Prejudice: A pre-judgment drawn in the absence of evidence and held in the face of evidence that contradicts it. (Source: Working Definitions prepared for antiracism training in the PC(USA).)

Race: A socially constructed category developed during the period of European colonial expansion that uses characteristics such as skin color, facial features, and body structure as a basis for classifying people. (Source: Working Definitions prepared for antiracism training in the PC(USA).)

Racial ethnic: The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in 1987 defined “racial ethnic” as a term to refer to a group of people that defines itself or is defined by others as different from the dominant white American group. (Source: Minutes, 1987, Part I, p. 565).

Racism: (Power + Racial Prejudice=Racism) results from a merger of social power and racial prejudice to create systems that treat people differently whether intentionally or unintentionally. It shapes institutions and structures so that they provide privileges for some while oppressing others. It involves inequality and unfair access to the distribution of such resources as money, education, information, and decision-making power between dominant and dominated groups.

Sex (vs. Gender): Refers to the biological differences between women and men.

Sexism: Refers to gender stereotyping of men and women as hierarchically ordered (men over women) and also as confined to limited cultural identities and roles as “masculine and “feminine.” It is expressed in the exclusion of women from certain types of employment or leadership roles that are assumed to be the prerogatives of males. Sexism is expressed in personal, interpersonal, cultural, economic, legal, and political terms, and is part of a total social and cultural system. (Source: Rosemary Radford Ruether, Dictionary of Feminist Theologies, Westminster/John Knox. Letty M. Russell and J. Shannon Clarkson, 1996.)

Stereotype: A fixed notion or conception of a person, group, idea, etc., allowing for no individuality and no critical judgment of individual cases. Stereotypes are usually based on false generalizations about a particular category of people, and are often used to justify the actions taken against members of that group. (Source: Maurianne Adams, et. al.)

White Privilege: The concrete benefits of access to resources and social rewards and the power to shape the norms and values of society which whites receive, either consciously or unconsciously, by virtue of their skin color in a racist society where those who are considered to be white are the dominant group. Generally white people who enjoy such privilege do so without being conscious of it. (Source: “Working Definitions” prepared for antiracism training in the PC(USA).)

Endnotes

1. Mindful of people with hearing and speaking disabilities, it should be noted that language in this report about “hearing” and “singing” does not exclusively refer to physical activity of the bodyperson. Rather, the language of “hearing” and “singing” is metaphor that also, and perhaps more importantly, refers to activities of mind and spirit. Indeed, by the grace of God and the gift of faith, our minds and spirits both experience and express our praise and thanks to God through our “seeing” and “hearing,” through our “visioning” and “speaking” and “singing.”

Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights, and Electoral Reform—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns recommend that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Approve the report, “Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights, and Electoral Reform,” for study, and approve the following recommendations:

a. In order to strengthen the study and witness of Presbyterians across the church:

(1) direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to publish both resolution and study paper (together, the report) on the PC(USA) website, making available a printed copy for interested Presbyterians, for each presbytery and synod, and for use with state and federal legislators, election commissions, and other appropriate officials;

(2) encourage all members and friends of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to study and take actions suggested, including, above all, to vote their consciences; and

(3) direct the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC), through the Presbyterian Washington Office and other appropriate ministries of peace and justice, to advocate and support the positions developed in this resolution, and urge presbyteries, synods, and ecumenical ministries—national, regional, and local—to advocate and support these positions as well within their witness for the common good in a democratic society.

b. To increase voter participation:

(1) commend the extension of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 by the Bush Administration and Congress, by wide majorities (July 26, 2006; Senate: 98–0; House of Representatives: 390–33);

(2) support adequate funding and non-partisan enforcement of the Voting Rights Act’s provisions by the Department of Justice, the Federal Election Commission, and other federal and state agencies, with the ultimate goal of increasing U.S. voting levels among all U.S. population groups;

(3) support a constitutional “affirmative right to vote” of all citizens to undergird full and fair exercise of the franchise in all states, counties, and municipalities, including districts, territories, commonwealth, and protectorates unless specifically excluded by law;

(4) support universal voter registration to allow all citizens over eighteen years of age to vote, unless specifically excluded by civil or criminal sanction during period of sentence, building on the “single, uniform, official, centralized, interactive computerized statewide voter registration list” called for by the Help America Vote Act of 2002 (HAVA);

(5) support making election day a holiday or weekend event, to give people of all income levels, employment situations, and family responsibilities more opportunity to get to the polls;

(6) support the easing of absentee ballot restrictions to allow general voting by mail and early voting, by mail or in person, to reduce potential for long lines and equipment failures; and

(7) support measures providing greater accessibility for all voters, including those with disabilities and those speaking foreign languages.

[(8) support polling places on or near college campuses.]

c. To ensure equality and fairness:

(1) support full voting rights for the more than 600,000 residents of the District of Columbia who are ~~[tax-paying citizens]~~ currently unrepresented by ~~[either]~~ a voting representative ~~[or senators]~~ [in the congress, even though many pay taxes];

(2) support restoration of voting and other civil rights to former felons (more than five million persons), helping reintegrate them into society and give more voice to their generally poorer home communities;

(3) disapprove the imposition of special identification (ID) requirements~~[-, alleged to prevent fraud, that may further discourage poor and elderly voters]~~ [that do not provide for opportunities and means by which all persons may meet the requirements without placing a disproportionate and undue burden upon any group(s) of persons];

(4) support the Deceptive Practices and Voter Intimidation Act and similar legislation to prevent misleading mailings and advertisements, unofficial yet uniformed personnel being posted near polling stations, and other “vote-suppression” methods;

(5) support mandated publicity for voter roll purges to supplement direct mail communication in poorer and academic communities with high percentages of renters; and

(6) support nonpartisan legislative redistricting based on an adequately funded census to make districts more contiguous and competitive, including those with racial ethnic majorities.

[(7) Support efforts designed to ensure that persons otherwise qualified to vote be permitted to cast ballots only in the jurisdiction in which they are entitled legally to vote.]

d. To provide for greater accountability and responsibility, to support:

(1) development of a nonpartisan professional electoral infrastructure in the place of partisan elections and patronage hiring of election officials, to apply “best practice” standards for recordkeeping, staff-training, public education, and electoral management;

(2) national minimum standards for voting equipment, ballot design, ballot counting, and transparency of administration to help all citizens have their votes counted properly;

(3) increased expertise and funding for the Electoral Assistance Commission and Council to perform testing and licensing of electronic voting equipment, such machines and software to require safeguards for confidentiality, modular independence, and audit-ability;

(4) public funding and guaranteed access to airwaves for candidates to offset the great advantages of private contributions and personal wealth, as well as legislation to limit total contribution levels insofar as this is possible: examples of such legislation include the Fair Elections Now Act, the Clean Money Clean Elections Act, as well as the McCain-Feingold and McCain-Feingold-Durbin Free Air Time Acts;<sup>1</sup>

(5) legislation to restrict the privileged access of former elected officials to lobbying positions in industries they formerly regulated and other legislation to prevent the “revolving door” by which regulation in the public interest is undermined; and

(6) legislation and appropriate support for judicial cases that distinguish between campaign contributions and “free speech,” allowing meaningful regulation of special interest groups and individuals who are currently expected to spend approximately $400 million of the $1.5 billion 2008 election cycle.

e. To renew and broaden democratic practice, to support:

(1) alternatives to an ever-earlier primary season that would shorten the campaign process, decrease its costs, and increase the influence of diverse and urban states, through such means as the “Delaware Plan,” the “American Plan,” and other rotating primary plans designed to spread opportunity among voters in all states and allow a reasonably open field for new candidates;

~~[(2) popular majority election of the president of the United States through the National Popular Vote plan or other means to limit or eliminate the Electoral College as a force for favoring “swing” states over all others and effectively denying the “one person, one vote” principle;]~~

~~[(3)]~~ [(2)] protection of nonpartisan free speech by religious and other groups from government interference, while affirming the church-state proscription of religious and other nonprofit organizations providing election support for particular candidates or parties; and

~~[(4)]~~ [(3)] consideration of ways to increase voter choice by “instant run-off” or ranked choice voting measures that tabulate first, second, and even third choices, saving money on run-off elections and potentially increasing consensus and diminishing partisanship.

2. Approve the following practical actions for individual members and congregations:

a. Educational programs:

(1) Cosponsor or participate in political issues forums with members of differing racial ethnic groups, before both local and national elections. It is important that congregants hear both sides of an issue from two or more speakers or from the candidates themselves.

(2) Provide educational programs on the history and impacts of systemic racism in order to develop the “racial literacy” all citizens need to be able to notice assumptions and practices that marginalize racial ethnic members of our communities.

(3) Study and debate new voting processes like Instant Runoff Voting and Proportional Voting that could affect the tendencies toward two-party dominance and periodic “gridlock” in our current electoral system.

(4) Provide voter education, both about the issues and the importance and complexity of this responsibility (this could include instruction on the issues addressed in this resolution).

(5) Pastors can preach on the moral dimensions of political issues. Sermons should be clearly grounded in Scripture and be informed by our confessional heritage and past statements of the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian church.

b. Encourage voter registration and turnout:

(1) Conduct voter registration drives in partnership with organizations led by people of color and other neighborhood institutions, including ministerial organizations and interfaith bodies.

(2) Survey one's community, especially neighbors with the least means, in order to find out what issues are important to them in an upcoming election.

(3) Participate in voter turnout efforts.

c. Support improvements in the political process:

(1) Volunteer to be a poll watcher. A poll watcher is instructed on how to monitor activities at a local polling station to ensure the electoral process is fair and open to all registered to vote at that station.

(2) Support and encourage the action of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly in filing briefs in the Supreme Court on issues the General Assembly has supported, including campaign finance reform and the role of "free speech" and advertising.

(3) Support and encourage presbyteries and synods in monitoring local and state election laws, registration laws, and the use of voting machines.

(4) Support legislation; especially those on issues that have been supported by the General Assembly or one's local presbytery, such as voting rights in the District of Columbia, bills against deceptive electoral practices, and felon re-enfranchisement.

(5) Call on ACSWP and Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries-Presbyterian Women, in consultation with ACREC, to sponsor regional conferences on the electoral process and people of color, antiracism issues and systemic discrimination.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2004 Referral: Item 10-02. Task Force on Election Report and Recommendations, Recommendation 2. That the General Assembly Direct the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) to Participate in the Work of Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy as It Develops a Resolution—From the General Assembly Council (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 56, 686–700).

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a resolution calling for the reauthorization of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and for a further statement by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recommending new measures to prevent voter disenfranchisement in the United States. The 2004 assembly resolution is a detailed legal assessment of the need for accountability provided by the Voting Rights Act; it directed the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to develop a resolution on "the disenfranchisement of people of color in the U.S. electoral process" for the 218th General Assembly (2008) that would "address at least two dimensions": improvements in legislation (with a strong push for uniformity across states) and options for practical engagement (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 56, 686–700). This resolution answers that request with recommendations in five categories: to increase voter participation, to ensure equality and fairness, to provide for accountability and responsibility, to renew democracy more broadly, and to propose actions for individuals, congregations, and councils of the church. Fuller explanation for these measures is provided in the study paper, along with brief reflections on the Presbyterian ethos that provides our motivation for reform.

The General Assembly's 1983 policy statement, "Reformed Faith and Politics," provides an extensive theological basis for Presbyterian involvement (including a book of scholarly essays), reflected in the understanding below, which we reaffirm:

Discipleship is not only a personal, individual calling. The sovereign Lord works not only in the depths of individual souls but also in the organizations, the institutions, and the movements of human history. . . . All Presbyterians, therefore, have a political vocation. Beyond the general political vocation of citizenship there is the special political vocation of public office. Public officials are not to be despised but to be honored and to be challenged when they do wrong. We must be sure that the worthy calling of public service is not ignored or demeaned. To be realistic about politics is not to despise it but to learn how to use it as an instrument of justice. (Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp. 776–78)

Throughout the 1930s, 1940s, and into the 1950s, General Assemblies in all three predecessor churches laid the groundwork for supporting the civil rights struggles of the 1960s and 1970s. We reaffirm the support for democracy in the following statement from 1942:

In its emphasis on the accountability of the individual to God and on the spirit of cooperation, Christianity nourishes the very roots of democracy. For personal responsibility and voluntary cooperation are prerequisites to a true democracy. ... The enjoyment of special privilege by some because of race and creed, and the consequent discrimination against others, draws its support from sources that are at variance with the Christian principles of human worth and brotherhood (fellowship). ... We commend the efforts of our Government, in cooperation with industry and organized labor, to remove racial barriers. ... (Minutes, PCUSA, 1942, Part I, pp. 194–95).

Current Concerns: This resolution by the 2008 General Assembly continues the Presbyterian tradition of witness for democracy and the equality of electoral rights necessary for its exercise, noting the persistence of low levels of voting in the United States (ranked 114th among recognized democracies, according to the International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance), the structural limits on the principle of “one person, one vote,” the enormously distorting influence of wealth in our electoral process, and the variety of constraints that continue to be imposed on African Americans, other persons of color, and poorer and working class citizens of all races (such as purged voter rolls, disproportionate levels of felon disenfranchisement, higher percentages of challenged voters, unproven allegations of fraud, and practical obstacles to poll access). In addition, there are increasing concerns for the security of electronic voting machines and the neutrality of election officials chosen on a partisan basis.
