Our current election system is characterized by one of the world’s highest levels of campaign spending yet some of the lowest levels of voter turnout of any democracy. With a few high profile exceptions, participation among communities of color is particularly dampened due to registration processes that are inefficient, inconvenient, and inaccessible. These factors raise significant concerns about the tremendous lack of racial, ethnic, and gender diversity among those in positions of political power. With the disturbing dependence of our political representatives on continuous fundraising for their increasingly expensive campaigns, we are concerned about increasing the divisions in wealth and power and the pervasive partisanship and polarization in American politics. With the move to electronic voting equipment, we see numerous new technological and managerial vulnerabilities in our elections processes. It is time for Presbyterians to act.

Low voter participation in U.S. elections weakens the health of American democracy. Half of all eligible citizens do not participate in the election of the U.S. president or Congress members, with turnout even lower in midterm and local elections. The U.S. ranks 114th in voter turnout among recognized democracies according to the International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance.<sup>2</sup> Low voting levels do not hold for all population groups, and for some fairly clear reasons. Voter turnout is lowest among those of low income, low education, and young citizens whose mobility makes it hard to meet arbitrary and restrictive deadlines. Requirements that voters purchase state-issued photo IDs seems likely to discriminate against low-income voters, when the Federal Election Commission’s own findings, revealed before congressional committee, reveal no significant incidence of voter fraud.<sup>3</sup> The permanent disenfranchisement of felons unfairly affects citizens of color and men. Communities of color have long been targeted in partisan-motivated purging of registration lists. Though we are aware of the original rationale for keeping the federal District of Columbia “un-political,” continuing to deprive the citizens of the District of Columbia (65 percent African American) voting rights seems a partisan and inevitably racially determined act of denial. We also recognize the necessity of civic education, especially for young people, new citizens, and inexperienced voters.

While we applaud the 2006 renewal of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, we believe that without effective, nonpartisan enforcement, historic patterns of disenfranchisement will remain. The Electoral College for presidential selection imposes another uneven burden on an even larger majority of the population, and seems to be an undemocratic anachronism remaining in our Constitution producing more “spectator states” than contested ones. Partisan-controlled redistricting has created gerrymandered districts that ensure the reelection of approximately 98 percent of all House incumbents every two years, and there are other incumbent advantages as well. Campaign finance laws need to be seriously considered in light of the increasing influence of special interest money and the rising cost of political campaigning, though we note that the problem of ineffectual congressional ethics committees is being addressed.<sup>4</sup> Media corporations, which lease the publicly owned airwaves, have a responsibility to provide equal access to all viable political candidates and parties.

Beyond the scope of this study are explorations and solutions to the perceived “brokenness” or dysfunction in the U.S. government’s response to issues like immigration, ending petroleum dependence, handling nuclear waste, limiting healthcare costs and expanding coverage, agricultural subsidies, restricting handgun violence—issues where clear majorities want reasonable solutions. Glenn Tinder, a political scientist at the University of Massachusetts, alleges that the checks and balances in our system work too well:

Since World War II, political scientists have been intensely concerned about America’s relatively ineffective and undemocratic government. Government is relatively ineffective because of the way checks and balances disrupt all efforts at orderly planning and execution; it is relatively undemocratic partly because the same checks and balances make it almost impossible for voters to assign and assess political responsibility, and partly because institutions like the federal bureaucracy are beyond the voters’ control and comprehension. ... Political scientists have for several decades been worried above all by America’s disorganized and irresponsible parties. Numerous studies have argued for stronger and more disciplined parties, and a host of practical measures for reaching this end have been proposed. In the meantime, the national parties have steadily disintegrated and our checked-and-balanced government has increasingly come under the control of voracious and uncompromising pressure groups.<sup>5</sup>

Whether this is an entirely accurate assessment, Constitutional Law scholar, Sanford Levinson, sees accurate perceptions of the growth of presidential power fueling the enormous costs of presidential campaigning.<sup>6</sup> With vast appointive power over the federal departments and veto power (including the practice of “signing statements” that shape enforcement), the concentration of presidential power, especially in the area of national security, makes it logical to focus financial resources on that election above all others. Levinson points out other areas where the framers of the Constitution did not see all eventualities. Elections themselves may not always be the best method for solving problems. While the 17th Amendment allows governors to name persons to senatorial vacancies, for example, the Constitution decrees now-costly, often hastily waged, special elections for House seats that become vacant. In terms of larger checks and balances in the U.S. system as it currently works, Levinson advocates Supreme Court terms of eighteen years to counteract the incentives to appoint relatively young justices who may serve for literally generations. Other proposals for change involve adopting elements from parliamentary systems, such as the increased accountability that comes when a chief of state is required to present government policy in open debate, such as before the House of Commons in Britain.

With one exception, the affirmative right to vote, the study team recommendations avoid constitutional changes and larger issues of governance.<sup>7</sup> This has to do with the assignment given by the assembly, and not an undue reverence for the Constitution itself—a wonderful but not sacred document. (“The Constitution was made for the Republic, not the Republic for the Constitution.”) The widespread frustration with the electoral process alone, however, lies behind the numerous proposals to make the process fairer and more representative than the current marketing process. Hence the proposal that consideration be given to proposals by FairVote and others of methods such as<sup>8</sup> Ranked Choice, Instant Runoff Voting, and Proportional Voting—all of which are already employed in limited jurisdictions and which can empower minority communities.

Overall, this resolution brings together two profoundly important policy streams in Presbyterian social witness so that, as the prophet Amos preached, “justice may roll down like the waters.” Historically, there is our longstanding nonpartisan support for civil and representative democratic government in America. And more recently, we are challenged by our 1999 “Vision of the Beloved Community” in which the PC(USA) covenanted to become an antiracist and inclusive community: “to embrace racial and cultural diversity as God-given assets of the human family ... resisting oppression and working to overcome racism within its own life and the life of society by blending social analysis, institutional reconstruction, and individual healing with discernment, prayer and worship-based action.” This action was reinforced that same year by the policy statement, Building Community Among Strangers (Minutes, 1999, Part 1, pp. 79, 275), which addressed electoral and other means to improve the civic life of our nation. In this election year, which promises to be heated and very expensive, we are called to reflect Christ’s passion for reconciliation, justice, and love, mindful of the profound call to mutual respect and to deep listening of our church’s own 2006 resolution on the peace, unity, and purity of the church.

As Christians, we believe in the powerful “already” of Christ’s revelation of God’s equal love for every person and the “not yet” of the coming or realization of God’s reign. As Presbyterians, we believe it is our individual and corporate vocation to engage the “already” of the powers of good and evil for the sake of God’s “not yet” community. As Americans, “we the people” believe in equal rights under the law as well as “the pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness.” As Reformed Christians, we know that liberty, equality, and fairness of representation require constant vigilance.

B. Biblical Foundations

The roots of our study go beyond John Calvin to the authority of Scripture. The Bible reveals God acting decisively in history to provide for human renewal of social structures by our struggles for freedom and truth, and for love and justice. Seven principles are emphasized here as contributing to the influence of Christianity on the foundations of democracy:

- The sovereignty of God who wills and orders, and also relativizes all human institutions and loyalties—as heard in the early binding and universalizing covenants with Adam, Noah, and Joshua, and portrayed throughout the biblical witness.
- The dignity and equal preciousness of every human being under God’s equalizing covenant of love and justice, created to be unique and free in the “image of God”—as portrayed in Genesis 1 and redeemed by Jesus Christ, the “Second Adam” of Romans 5.
- The critical tension between our human sinfulness and God’s good purposes, especially our willfulness, selfishness, and hypocrisy that issue in relationships and systems of domination—as portrayed in the primal experience of the garden of Eden, ancient Israel’s struggles with and among its wayward kings (esp. 1 Samuel 8), the prophetic traditions of Isaiah, Amos, Micah, and the witness, met with crucifixion, of Jesus.

- The power of love and reconciliation that we experience, by grace alone, near to us in Jesus Christ, through his resurrection and living Body, the Church—and moving beyond the Church by the Holy Spirit wherever freedom and truth, love and justice are being realized.
- Our mutual responsibilities for love of self and neighbor, peace and justice (right relationship), affirmed repeatedly by covenant community’s organizing of itself, from Exodus to the Pauline and pastoral letters, to reflect the double or greatest commandment to “love God with all your heart, mind, and soul, and neighbor as thyself.”
- The special concern given to the suffering, vulnerable, and oppressed in our communities and the particular responsibility and accountability of those who have wealth, power, and privilege to use their gifts for fulfilling God’s vision of creation—perhaps most clearly summed up in Matthew 25.
- The call to live out these teachings as active witnesses—beyond the local church and into the world, obedient to the sovereignty of God, ever-tempted to selfishness and sin but sacrificially and sacramentally working in the world with the mind of Christ speaking to the Christian conscience (the Great Commission in Matt. 28, Rom. 12 and 13, Eph. 4).

C. Theological and Ethical Foundations

John Calvin gave structure to the Reformed Churches to reflect his vision for reforming both church and political life. He understood his work in The Institutes of the Christian Religion to be a guide to the understanding of the Bible. He concluded the Institutes in Book IV in two sections on the liberty of the Christian life in the church and on liberty in the political realm. Neither our current form of the church nor of the state correspond exactly to his recommendations—both have evolved through five hundred years of history. However, our concern for liberty and accountability in both institutions remains. We maximize liberty as the fuller empowerment of human beings to live in love with God and their neighbor; we maximize accountability as we participate and advocate for the participation of all of God’s children. Toward this end, among many ministries of the church, we strive to be always reforming both institutions so that they may enable each person to develop and serve.

The Bible, John Calvin, and contemporary Christian ethics utilize at least three approaches to ethics: rules, goals, and responses to the context. This policy develops out of three goals, which can be formulated as rules, enforced by the state to render them laws, under which for us reflect Christian faith seeking justice. The three are: participation, equality and fairness in the system of voting, and accountability as citizens and officials. There is no human liberty without participation in social reality—which, in the American situation, is the representative-democratic processes of politics. Equality and fairness are constitutive aspects of both justice and love and are requirements of Christian living. Accountability is demanded of every political figure in the Bible story. Because of sin in human personal and social life, transparency and the enforcement of principles of equality and liberty is required as a condition of a fair common life. Both citizens and officials are accountable for their custody of the democratic-representative process. To deny anyone a fair vote is a sin. Reinhold Niebuhr’s aphorism that “[human] capacity for justice makes democracy possible but [human] capacity for injustice makes democracy necessary” is a fair summary of the possibilities of our political life as we strive to make it as participatory, just and accountable as possible.

We believe our democracy can evolve to greater equity and liberty for us all because, as Martin Luther King Jr. wrote from a Birmingham jail in April 1963, “Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere.” Christian philosopher and social critic Cornel West updates this truth for us when he reminds: “Every historic effort to forge a democratic project has been undermined by two fundamental [shared] realities: poverty and paranoia. The persistence of poverty generates levels of despair that deepen social conflict and the escalation of paranoia produces levels of distrust that reinforce cultural divisions.”<sup>9</sup> The “good news” is that what we do for the least powerful among us politically benefits us all, opening our political system’s access to the God at work in the experience and voices of new citizens, the young, the poor and increasingly aging voters, with fewer economic resources to spare and more needs. We do not need to let poverty and fear-based thinking paralyze our democracy any further.

D. Presbyterian Tradition and Democracy

Democracy has been more than simply a point of pride for Presbyterians in the United States. It is part of our heritage and an object of our repeated concern as we still struggle to make democracy real for African Americans and other voluntary immigrants and racial minorities, women, and young people. Democratic government begins in personal responsibility—to share in making the rules under which we live in society—and it includes rules and civic practices designed to ensure “liberty and justice for all.” The healthy functioning of our “system” has rarely been taken for granted. Countless Presbyterians on town councils, in state legislatures, and in our nation’s Congress itself have known how important basic fairness and integrity are to the work of government. Our tradition has never accorded special virtue or power to bishops or kings or their modern equivalents. Positively stated, each of us has an affirmative political vocation that comes with citizenship in our system of self-government.

Democratic parallels in church and state: Historically, we Presbyterians have made much of the parallels between our system of government in the church, with its elected leadership in the session, the presbytery, the synod, and the General Assembly, and that of the United States, moving from local to state and to federal elections. Certainly most of us know that elected leadership carries burdens, whether one is moderator of presbytery or mayor of any town, power is held in trust for the common good. Classic studies, like James Hastings Nichols' Democracy and the Churches (1950), looked not simply at the processes by which the Reformed tradition shaped Western democracies, but looked at the matter of ethos, the nature of our public spirit, and sense of principle—not to idealize the past, but to acknowledge human sin in it, and even the virtue of our sense of sin. We affirm that fundamental basis for checks and balances of power, and the awareness of our ultimate accountability to God and not to other human beings and groups (Peter: “we must obey God rather than men”). Alongside this awareness of human fallibility is the strength that God gives us: “God alone is lord of the conscience and has set it free from the doctrines or rules of men, or anything contrary to the scripture.”

“The church reformed, always reforming”: Because we stand together for the ongoing reform of both the church and the society (“ecclesia reformata, semper reformanda”), Presbyterians have consistently urged governments to improve their functioning and correct injustices. For us, the separation of church and state has not meant the separation of faith and politics, for such a separation would be an abdication of responsibility. As the fine 1983 General Assembly study and policy, Reformed Faith and Politics, explains, “the question of the relationship of God and Caesar” is not easily answered, but the distinction remains crucial. Without a sense of God’s sovereignty, and without respect for Jesus Christ and the prophets God raises up in every time, the pretensions of states and rulers can and do lead to the casual taking of human life, disregard for the ordinary person, and the despoiling of God’s creation. Politics, then, is too often the petty or tragic expression of human folly, but to disdain it is to be corrupted in different ways by a false innocence and overly simple thinking.

The Civil Rights movement of the 1960s and 1970s remains a defining moment for the “mainline” churches, in part due to the witness of a particular prophet, Martin Luther King Jr., within the historic Black churches, but also in part due to the witness of African American leaders within those mainline communions. In Gayraud S. Wilmore’s Black and Presbyterian: The Heritage and the Hope (1983; 1998), he speaks of the role of African Americans within the decision-making process of the Presbyterian churches, both the North and South predecessors. He points to the importance of organizing a body within the church like the Council on Church and Race in 1964, and to the importance of actions of witness chosen. And one of the key actions of witness for justice was the voter registration drive. The unusual Hattiesburg Ministers Project in Mississippi, for example, drew more than three hundred ministers to help register voters, to teach in the Freedom Schools, and sometimes to march. It would be our study team’s claim that this was faithful politics as well as electoral reform, and something that enriches the heritage of those who are white and Presbyterian as well.

Our advocacy and social witness goals: To improve government in our time is to address, as this report and its recommendations do, the continued disenfranchisement of some Americans and the challenges for us all of new forms of voting technology and new levels of monetary power in politics. Cynicism may be today’s biggest enemy of democracy, as the rule of money threatens to disenfranchise voting itself. Yet it is not cynicism to recognize that under current practice, non-wealthy candidates need not apply, and expensive TV advertising suppresses thoughtful deliberation, while organized groups and corporate interests effectively determine policy in their chosen areas. We see what some have called “endless campaigning,” with marketing and governing increasingly mixed. This report begins with the belief that hope will continue to outpoll distrust, but only if it is a wise hope.

Despite a campaign to identify a problem of voter fraud that would necessitate further restrictions on voter access—a campaign that has led to congressional investigations of the politicization of the Justice Department, no significant levels of fraud have been found. Rather, increasing levels of corruption and lobbying abuse have been revealed with increasing numbers of members of congress under investigation. This points to the significant difference between enacting laws and enforcing them.

The pressing global need for effective government: In terms of determining need for the reforms proposed in this resolution, we look not only at problems in the electoral process, but to basic problems in our governmental decision-making—for governance is communal decision-making. Back in 1983, the General Assembly study asked, “Can the U.S. political process handle ... the energy issue for a just and sustainable future? Is the system adequate to meet the needs of the urban population of the country? Can a just migration policy be developed with all the pressure groups and fears around the issue? Finally and most important, can a just peace be secured? ... All four issues, addressed theologically and ethically by the church will require political leadership.” We can only say that solutions to these four major issues remain elusive, while the threats to the environment and world peace have only intensified. The need for effective government, in fact, is the six billion-person question for the future of the planet today.

E. Historical Steps in Civil Rights Advocacy

For the purposes of this study, to show the development of support for the 1965 Civil Rights Act, the history of the church’s official stands for civil rights is traced back to the Presbyterian Church in the United States (PCUS) 1947 General Assembly. This is not to ignore earlier concern for non-racial democracy and denunciations of lynching, for example, that may be found in General Assembly Minutes and Home Mission records. A thorough review of the legislative advocacy steps can be found in the 2004 Assembly Report on Electoral Reform and the Disenfranchisement of People of Color. Highlights of the transformative post-World War II period include:

- The 1947 PCUS assembly stated its official civil rights support by condemning all organizations and individuals who aim to hinder any minorities “in the exercise of their civil rights or deny such rights on the basis of race, creed, class or color” (Minutes, PCUS, 1947, Part I, p. 164).

- Two years later, the General Assembly received and sent down to lower judicatories the report, “States’ Rights and Human Rights.” The paper was not proposed for adoption because of its controversial character, but it was commended to the churches by the assembly for study because it “... set forth with great clarity problems in the field of civil rights ... and points up with equal clarity our responsibilities ...” (Minutes, PCUS, 1949, Part I, p. 100).

- In 1953, the individual’s Christian political duty was affirmed as part of our responsibilities to our neighbors when the PCUS assembly encouraged men and women of the church to use the right to vote wisely and to work for the “same privileges for all citizens” (Minutes, PCUS, 1952, Part I, p. 93; see also Minutes, PCUSA, 1956, Part I, p. 234, and Minutes, PCUS, 1974, Part I, p. 164).

- By 1956, this was brought to a practical level, the voting arena. In the northern church, the 1956 PCUSA General Assembly called upon Christians to work to eliminate the poll tax “and other restrictions which prevent many citizens from exercising their legal rights at the polls and which affront the dignity of persons ...” (Minutes, PCUSA, 1956, Part I, p. 235; see also Minutes, PCUS, 1957, Part I, p. 194).

- The 171st General Assembly (1959) went on to call for measures to guarantee voting rights to all citizens of voting age and to establish the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights as a permanent agency of the U.S. government (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1959, Part I, p. 380).

- The 172nd General Assembly (1960) urged state legislatures and the United States Congress to continue to work for legislation that would effectively secure and protect the rights of all citizens to vote, regardless of race (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1960, Part I, p. 356).

- The 174th General Assembly (1962) of the UPCUSA urged federal leadership to eliminate racial restriction of voting rights by any of the states (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1962, Part I, p. 349).

- In 1965, the PCUS affirmed the historic Voting Rights Act, saying “The basic purpose of the civil rights movement should be to obtain for the Negro—and of course, for all minority groups—justice in the affairs of daily life and the right to respect as a human being under the redemptive concern of God. Jesus, by His words and life, calls us, as his followers, to support him in this struggle ...” (Minutes, PCUS, 1965, Part I, p. 159).

- In 1981 and 1982, the UPCUSA also supported extension of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and opposed the attempt to deny civil rights to new immigrants to the United States (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1981, Part I, p. 309; and Minutes, UPCUSA, 1982, Part I, p. 425).

- The 194th General Assembly (1982) of UPCUSA affirmed all efforts to include actively all citizens in the election process, including the use of bilingual ballots as mandated by the Voting Rights Acts, and declares its opposition to actions by government that have the effect of discouraging such exercise of citizen’s rights (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1982, Part I, p. 425).

To reflect on these acts of witness and solidarity is also to reflect on the enduring patterns of white privilege within both society and church, social, economic, and cultural patterns that are reflected only partly in the formal political process. Changes in the language of the resolutions—the return of “people of color,” for example, signals a changing social reality, and the prospect of a time when no one racial ethnic group may be in the majority. As a resolution team focused on the mechanisms of representation and participation, we have not analyzed the dynamics of partisanship in U.S. politics and its relation to the question of race. We can only say here that the church benefits from challenging questions that push us toward truth, in both the inward and the outward being.

F. Presbyterian Precedents for Electoral Reform

The church’s concern for voting rights, outlined above, has been accompanied by concern for electoral reform. One sentence from a 1950 General Assembly statement sums up the basic Presbyterian approach to faith and politics: “We believe that every Christian should recognize the individual responsibility of citizenship including not only the responsibility to know about public issues and candidates, but also to provide Christian leadership in local parties and to go faithfully to the polls” (Minutes, PCUSA, 1950, Part I, p. 236).

The church’s call for public participation and witness was stated most forcefully in 1983 when the General Assembly adopted a major policy on “Reformed Faith and Politics” in response to the rise of the new religious right and the political disappointments of the 70s.<sup>10</sup> As shown in the affirmation quoted at the beginning of the resolution that begins this study, the 1983 policy lifted up the political vocations of citizenship and leadership in public service as forms of discipleship in individual and institutional terms. It goes on to recommend that Presbyterians actively support political participation, voter registration, civil discourse, and the pursuit of political office, revitalized parties, and beyond “single-interest politics” broad coalition work for justice, always recognizing, once again, that we heed the Reformed concern to resist “human limitations, narrowness, and sin” (Minutes, 1983, Part I, pp. 778–79). It recommended specifically that we:

- “Affirm responsible participation in politics as an indispensable part of the calling of all Christians and encourage individual Presbyterians to become active in the political process, including but not limited to being candidates for political office at all levels. ...” (Ibid, p. 778).
- “Request that sessions or presbyteries study the voter registration patterns of their communities and consider, where appropriate, action to assure a greater level of registration and voting as a sign of minimal participation in the political process” (Ibid).
- “Call on each session and presbytery to promote public dialogue on the significant political issues of the day to assist in restoring a climate of civic discourse in the country” (Ibid).
- “Urge presbyteries to acknowledge individual Presbyterians within their bounds who seek or hold political office. ...” (Ibid, p. 779).
- “Affirm the party system and encourage individual Presbyterians to work within parties to revitalize them and make them more responsive to ethical and theological demands. ...” (Ibid).
- “Decry the practice of ‘single-issue’ politics and recommend a broad consideration of a candidate’s position in determining whether to support the candidate” (Ibid).
- “Affirm coalitions of individuals to lobby for social justice issues and causes and call on the governing bodies of the church to take public policy stands on such issues” (Ibid).
- “Acknowledge human limitations, narrowness, and sin, which prevent any one political stance from being labeled exclusively ‘Christian’” (Ibid).
- “Reaffirm our historical commitment for working for economic justice, peace and disarmament, racial and civil rights, and the promotion of social righteousness” (Ibid).

A question, to which this study returns at its conclusion, is the matter of how much the “political vocation” envisioned implies the kind of Reformed civic virtue that, in turn, is formed in the ethos of the democratically organized congregation and presbytery.

With the 1996 “Theological Ethics and Political Participation” statement, the General Assembly summarized several earlier policies showing that they have consistently encouraged the political activity of Christians acting in response to their faith. More directly about voting rights and electoral reform, the assembly included two requests that: (1) “sessions or presbyteries study the voter registration patterns of their communities and consider, where appropriate, action to assure a greater level of registration and voting as a sign of important and needed participation in the political process. ...” and (2) “[we] acknowledge human limitations, narrowness, and sin, which prevent any one political stance from being labeled exclusively ‘Christian’; and reaffirm our historical commitment for working for economic justice, peace, and disarmament, racial and civil rights, and the promotion of social righteousness” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 76, 122, 521–22).

The 2000 Resolution on Campaign Finance Reform: The role of money in our electoral processes drew the General Assembly’s attention in 2000 when it called for campaign finance reform by “Direct[ing] the Office of the General Assembly and the Washington Office to communicate the General Assembly’s strong support for ... campaign finance reforms, in order to increase public participation in elections and fairness in allocating the benefits and burdens of society” (Minutes, 2000, Part I, pp. 51, 424). The study group reporting in 2008 felt that a responsible analysis of this issue deserves future attention, in light of the Supreme Court’s recent ruling in support of special interests purchasing unlimited advocacy advertising under an interpretation of the right to “free speech.” Such attention would need to consider patterns of ownership of television and other media, and the remarkable influence of those at the top of our social pyramid of wealth.

G. Recommendations

1. Toward Increasing Voter Participation

Since its beginning, the United States has been a democracy in the process of becoming, with each new generation taking steps to advance the goal of “government by the people.” The poet, Langston Hughes speaks to “Let America Be America Again.”<sup>11</sup> Yet despite the hard-won right to vote by landless white men (1856), African Americans (1870–1965), women (1921), Native Americans (1924–48),<sup>12</sup> Chinese Americans (1943), 18–20 year-olds (1971), and others, serious obstacles and groups depressing active voter participation remain. In recent years only about 50–55 percent of U.S. citizens of voting age have voted in presidential elections, while smaller percentages have voted in “off-year” congressional, state, and local elections. These percentages are significantly lower for racial ethnic minorities and poorer citizens. The explanation for Americans’ lack of voter participation can be found in: (a) the provisions of our Constitution, (b) our voter registration system, (c) cynicism about “meaningful choice” or that their vote counts, and (d) various other obstacles that discourage voter turnout.<sup>13</sup>

a. Voter Franchise: The Affirmative Right to Vote

The United States, the oldest constitutional democracy in the world, is one of only eleven (of the estimated 120 democracies) that do not guarantee to their citizens the right to vote. Article I of the Constitution allows each state to define for itself which of its citizens have the right to vote in both state and national elections. While the 15th, 19th, 24th, and 26th Amendments prohibit states from denying the franchise on the basis of race, sex, ability to pay a poll tax, or being eighteen years of age or above, states are still able to deny voting rights to selected groups, most notably to prison inmates and to persons with a prior felony conviction. In the United States, voting is considered not a fundamental right of citizenship but rather a privilege that may be denied. What is needed is a constitutional amendment that would provide U.S. citizens with the same fundamental right to vote as is enjoyed by citizens in other democracies.

b. Universal Voter Registration

Most of the world’s constitutional democracies provide for universal voter registration of its citizens, either by automatically registering all citizens to vote, or by not requiring formal registration for elections. In the United States, by contrast, the burden to register to vote (and to maintain that registration) is placed upon the individual citizen, and states and localities differ widely in determining where, how, and when a person can register. Because of varying and changing local registration procedures, FairVote estimates that “More than eight million American citizens cannot vote where they live, but could vote if living in another state.”<sup>14</sup> A section of the 1965 Voting Rights Act was aimed specifically at eliminating tactics used by southern states to prevent blacks from registering, and in 1993 Congress passed the Motor-Voter law intended to ease the registration burden for all Americans. But only seven states have taken the much more effective step of allowing “same day” registration, allowing citizens to register on Election Day. Compounding the registration burden is the fact that state and local registration lists are often inaccurate and incomplete, resulting in voters being turned away from the polls on Election Day.

The Help America Vote Act (HAVA) of 2002 addressed part of the problem. The act requires each state to implement a “single, uniform, official, centralized, interactive computerized statewide voter registration list.” That standard would help prevent some of the problems widely reported in the 2000 and 2004 elections when the names of many voters who believed that they were registered did not appear on the registration list of their jurisdiction. As the Baker-Carter Election Reform Commission reported in 2005, however, most states have yet to comply with that requirement. Our recommendation goes further than HAVA. We propose that the United States adopt legislation that would more closely follow the practice of the majority of the world’s democracies of automatically registering all citizens to vote, a registration that would be recognized in all fifty states and other U.S. jurisdictions. As noted by FairVote, universal registration would help ensure that the more than fifty million unregistered Americans, representing nearly one-third of the eligible electorate, would be eligible to vote on election day. Since unregistered voters are disproportionately young, low-income, or people of color, such a move could potentially have a dramatic impact on voter turnout and election results.

Toward Universal Registration: There are various methods by which universal registration can be accomplished in the United States. One of the more widely supported proposals, which we support, is the registration of high school students—making registration a requirement for graduation or for community service credit, or registering all students age seventeen and older as part of Constitution Day on September 17 each year. Other means that have been proposed to achieve universal registration include automatically registering citizens as they obtain a driver’s license or deal with a government agency, or providing every citizen upon birth or naturalization a voter registration number similar to the requirement for a social security number.

c. Other Obstacles to Voter Participation

The United States has more than ten thousand separate voting jurisdictions with separate laws and regulations. A citizen’s right to vote is thus very much dependent on the jurisdiction in which the citizen resides. Even if citizens are legally eligible and registered to vote, they often are confronted by obstacles preventing them from doing so. One serious obstacle is the inconvenience of having to vote on a single defined day, and often encountering long lines and equipment failures.

- Voting by mail is one reform designed to eliminate those problems but only the state of Oregon has enacted that change.
- Early voting is another reform designed to address those problems and sixteen states have adopted that change.
- Reform groups also recommend easing absentee ballot restrictions.
- By far the most fundamental reform, however, and one that we endorse, is setting aside a national holiday for voting. A national election day (or weekend) holiday would enable people of all income levels, employment conditions, and family responsibilities to participate in the election. A holiday would also focus attention on this crucial event in our national lives, as well as facilitate the recruitment of poll volunteers.
- Accessibility for all eligible voters ensuring that disabled and minority language voters can vote privately and independently

d. Community Organizing So That Voters Count

The Presbyterian church has encouraged community involvement and political activity on the part of its members, especially toward meeting urgent human needs. For instance, in 1996, the General Assembly maintained: “There is a continuing need for those in the public arena to hear God’s voice through our political participation as citizen voters and advocates, and as politicians. As Christians this is in full accord with our belief that God is sovereign of all of life” (Minutes, 1996, Part I, p. 522). The most basic political activity is the responsibility to vote and to ensure that others are empowered for that same responsibility. To this end, we encourage churches to organize their local communities for voter registration and turnout. Voter registration can happen in a variety of ways such as joining with local organizations that already engage in voter registration; sending teams of members door to door or into local shopping areas to register people to vote, and registering congregants to vote before and after church activities. It is critical that the leaders of this effort know the voter registration laws of their local jurisdiction and avoid advocating for specific candidates. In addition, churches can organize teams of member to call registered voters to remind them of an upcoming election and offer rides to polling stations. Finally, churches can work in their communities in order to find out what issues are important in an upcoming election. All of these activities are in full accord with our calling as Christians and citizens.

2. Toward Insuring Equality and Fairness

a. Give the District of Columbia Full Voting Rights and Congressional Representation.

It continues to be a travesty that the 600,000 tax-paying residents of Washington, D.C., have no voting representation in the House of Representatives or in the Senate. This is despite D.C. having a population larger than Rhode Island and Wyoming that are able to elect two Senators and one member of the House. While the intention was originally to counteract the power of local citizens (and militias) over the fledgling early capital, today the disenfranchisement of D.C. residents has become an international embarrassment, especially for its impact on the nonwhite 65 percent of the D.C. population who would likely vote for candidates of color. In the spirit of the overall recommendation that full voting rights be given to the 600,000 tax-paying citizens of D.C., we recommend passage of a bill currently before Congress that would at least give to residents of D.C. the right to elect one member of the House of Representatives, the same right that is extended to all other Americans.<sup>15</sup>

b. Re-enfranchise Felons Who Have Paid Their Debt to Society

According to the Brennan Center for Justice, the United States is alone among Western democracies that permit laws that lock people out of the voting booth for life once they have been convicted of a crime. These laws are often a remnant of Jim Crow discrimination—with stiffer sentences linked to crimes more likely to be committed by people of color. In three states, a felony conviction will result in a lifetime ban from voting, while in eight other states lifetime disenfranchisement may result. In other states, prisoners on parole or on probation may be denied the right to vote. Altogether across the nation, state felon disenfranchisement laws permanently bar more than five million Americans from voting and in many jurisdictions, serving on juries. Restoring the right to vote to ex-felons strengthens democracy by increasing voter investment in the system and provides incentives for ex-offenders to make more positive contributions to society. Political participation also helps people reintegrate into the community after serving time in prison. Re-enfranchisement also means that the home communities of those convicted regain their political voice and ability to elect representatives accountable to their needs and interests.<sup>16</sup>

c. Enforce the Voting Rights Act

Recognizing that civil rights legislation is not always enforced or well funded, the following concerns highlight the kind of protection for the vulnerable that we would like to see the Department of Justice Civil Rights Division emphasize.

d. Reject Expensive Voter ID Requirements

For generations, discriminatory practices such as poll taxes and literacy tests prevented people of color from voting. Today so-called “antifraud” legislation is being introduced in some southern states that will recreate similar filters by requiring voters to produce new types of identification on election day. No longer will documents such as a birth certificate or social security card suffice to prove a prospective voter’s identity. A drivers license or an accepted state-issued alternative will now be required, a burden that will heavily fall on low-income voters, and therefore also persons of color. The elderly will also be disadvantaged.

e. Protect People and Communities of Color From Targeted Purges of Voting Lists

Evidence has arisen that party activists in Florida targeted communities of color in particular with postcards to determine if voter-mailing addresses were still good.<sup>17</sup> They then challenged all voters whose cards were returned as “undeliverable,” including military personnel, college students, mis-delivered and recent moves—for unfair, partisan impact. We commend developing legislation that requires each state to provide notice, at least forty-five but ideally ninety days before an election, of all names that have been removed from a voter registration list, thereby giving individuals an opportunity to cure the problem that led to the purge. We also note that universal and same day registration, with proper identification and affidavit, would also make this practice less likely to be abused.

f. Punish Deceptive Campaign Practices

Over the past several years, voters have had to endure deceptive practices targeted at persons of color. Examples are fliers distributed in Milwaukee telling voters that they can’t vote if they didn’t pay their parking tickets; flyers in Maryland misleading voters about the party affiliations of candidates for key state offices; and e-mails sent in Virginia providing false information about where to vote. The Deceptive Practices and Voter Intimidation Act introduced in Congress is designed to criminalize such practices. The bill has our strong support.

g. Nonpartisan Legislative Districting

Drawing the boundaries of congressional and state legislative districts to their partisan advantage has become a favorite tool of both political parties. The result is that most districts are heavily stacked to favor one party, resulting in incumbents almost always being reelected and voters left with few competitive races in which to participate. Many reformers, including Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger of California, have thus proposed that after every census a nonpartisan commission draw district boundaries. Voters would then more likely be able to participate in meaningful competitive contests, while legislators would be forced to pay more attention to the views of their constituents.<sup>18</sup>

3. Toward Enforcing Accountability and Responsibility in Our Electoral Process

There are thirteen thousand electoral jurisdictions in our country, each under widely varying state regulations. We need a more uniform, well-funded, credible, and popularly supported national electoral infrastructure that is nonpartisan and locally accountable. In 2004 and 2008, stories emerged from states such as Ohio, Florida, Texas, Virginia, and Maryland, of long lines at precincts with high proportions of low-income voters, including students. The following causes have been noted: a failure of funding and leadership; inadequate resources for voter education and training of election workers; inferior voting equipment and or ballot design; failure to plan for high volumes of voters, including inexperienced voters; poorly designed ballots; an unfairly executed purge system; and a resource allocation system that often left poorer counties, which often were counties with the highest percentage of black voters, adversely affected.<sup>19</sup> We recommend:

a. Development of a “best practices” standard or uniform national infrastructure for voter registration records, staff training, public education, and electoral management.

Counties are usually responsible for key functions such as the hiring, training and paying of poll workers, setting up polling places, establishing systems of election day communication, and handling breakdowns in electronic machines and poll books. We recommend a uniform and well-supported electoral infrastructure that is nonpartisan and has local accountability. (An elections official from Denver, Colorado, has shared with us one standard of such an infrastructure that we pass on as an Appendix B for local comparison and consideration.) Standards should be in place for:

- Transparency: We need utter transparency for decision-making that is too often made behind closed doors. Every election director should make public—for public review and comment in a timely way—their county’s plan for running elections that addresses any problem exposed in the primary elections and a full checklist of what they plan to do in preparation for November.

- A national (and universal) voter registration system in light of the new mobility of American voters.
- Nonpartisan elections officials: All local, state, and federal elections officials must be protected from partisan influence, even secretaries of states appointed by their governors national standards for the allocation of voting systems and poll workers for each precinct.
- Poll worker training: providing a common model and funds to states for the education and training of poll workers.
- Procedures for counting or rejecting provisional and emergency ballots, counted even if voters are sent to the wrong precinct or polling place, as long as they are voting in the correct county.
- Procedures for proper registration verification or purging: each state should provide public notice, at least forty-five days before an election, of all names removed from a voter registration list. States must also give individuals an opportunity to cure the problem that led to the purge.
- Minimum and universal national standards for voting equipment, ballot design, and ballot counting.

b. Full funding and expanded authority of the Election Assistance Commission (EAC) once nonpartisan safeguards are in place.

As a result of the controversies surrounding the 2000 presidential elections, Congress passed the federal Help America Vote Act (HAVA) of 2002. The act funded electronic voting equipment in every state, established an Electoral Assistance Commission and Council—elected by president and approved by senate, required verification of equipment and funded numerous model programs. While we are concerned about the politicization of relatively minimal “voter fraud” cases when we see greater threats from systemic powers than wayward local voters, we also recognize the importance of this important center for the development of our electoral infrastructure. Increased federal funding should be partnered with new protections against partisan use of its oversight and funding powers.

c. Legislation to require independence and verifiability of electronic voting machines, if not paper trails.

The implications of HAVA have yet to reveal themselves fully. However, the act has been heavily criticized. Many express grave concern that electronic equipment will make balloting more susceptible to political manipulation, fraud, and racial bias. There is distrust of the manufacturers of the leading voting machines as well as in the verifiability of the software itself. We recognize the need for verifiability and the independence of electronic voting machines in order to permit selective auditing. We understand the desire of many to have a “paper trail”. Paper ballots—or even op-scan “ballots” as advocated by the League of Women Voters, however, are expensive and time-intensive to count, store and also to verify. Until sufficient safeguards for confidentiality, independence and audit ability are in place, we recommend continuing public participation in both electoral monitoring and in this important public debate about the necessary layers of protection against fraud in the handling of all electronic equipment and software.

d. Campaign finance reform and public financing—it is not too late!

Large sums of money, and the time needed to raise it, dominate our electoral and legislative processes. Money buys access to legislators as well as to the details in legislation.<sup>20</sup> If they reject special interest money, candidates fear that their opponents will outspend them—and spending counts: incumbents almost always raise more money than challengers, and the candidate who spends the most money almost always wins. (For House seats, the number is more than 90 percent.) Because the Supreme Court has ruled the campaign contributions are a protected form of “speech,” the most important reform to enhance the voice of citizens and reduce the role of powerful special interests and big money in elections is public financing.<sup>21</sup> Under such systems, candidates or parties receive public funds to replace or augment private money. Public funding can curb the appearance of the influence of big money over lawmakers, encourage candidates with limited resources to run for office, and allow politicians to spend less time raising money and more time serving their constituents.

The cost of political advertising has played a major role in driving up the expense of political campaigns. According to the League of Women Voters, candidates, parties, and issue groups spent approximately $1 billion on political ads in 2002. We encourage Presbyterians to support the McCain-Feingold-Durbin Free Air Time legislation. That legislation will require television and radio broadcast stations to provide free airtime to candidates and political parties for political debate before elections.

We also recommend a comprehensive federal “clean elections” bill that, like bills in four states, gives public financing to qualified candidates who agree not to take campaign contributions from private sources (except for a limited number of small “qualifying” contributions that serve to establish eligibility for the full public stipend). Good examples are the Fair Elections Now Act and the Clean Money Clean Elections Act. Modeled after existing election-financing systems in states like Arizona and Maine, this legislation outlines a new system for financing congressional campaigns with public funds. Significantly, the Fair Elections Act is a voluntary program.

4. Proposals for Renewing Our Democracy

The famed economist, Milton Friedman, is quoted saying, “We need to keep political alternatives alive ... until the politically impossible becomes the political inevitable.”<sup>22</sup> The following approaches challenge the polarizing “duopoly” of our two-party system, allow minorities to better leverage their votes for representation and offer every voter more meaningful choices and alternative choices. The local governments that are seeking new ways to empower their voters and welcome the application of these electoral mechanisms to our church government also encourage us.

a. Reform Our Primary System

While 100 million or more Americans regularly participate in the election of the president, rarely do more than a third of that number vote in the presidential primaries and caucuses that select the party candidates. Only a small percentage of these voters have a truly meaningful voice. The fortunate few in Iowa, New Hampshire, and a handful of other early voting states usually decide for the rest of the nation who the nominees will be. In 2008, particularly in the Democratic primary, more states were involved, highlighting differences in candidates’ strategy and funding. Unfortunately, the early states still do not adequately mirror the racial, ethnic, and socioeconomic diversity of the country as a whole.

b. Elect President by Popular Vote (Electoral College Reform)

Our current Electoral College system produced the divisive results of the 2000 presidential election where the popularly chosen candidate does not win the overall election. That method of electing the president also allows voters in only a few “battleground” states to have their support seriously courted by the candidates. One solution to these problems would be for states to exercise their ability to distribute their electoral votes among the state’s congressional districts, thereby breaking up the statewide winner-take-all system. However, only two states have exercised that option, and unless all the large states agree to follow that example, the electoral college vote is even less likely to reflect the preference of the popular majority. Thus those who look to reform the Electoral College system have proposed another idea, the National Popular Vote plan. This plan calls upon states to enter into an interstate compact with each member state pledging to award its electoral votes not, as now, to the presidential candidate who receives the most popular votes in that state, but rather to the presidential candidate who has received the most popular votes nationwide. States that join the compact are bound to follow that procedure only if the compact’s membership commands a majority of electoral votes to elect a president (270 or more votes). Thus the challenge for the proponents of this idea is to convince that number of states to join the compact.<sup>23</sup>

c. Allow Instant Runoff Voting (IRV)

Our representative system is oddly built around another contradiction—winner-take-all legislative elections: the candidate who receives the most votes wins the election, even if not receiving a majority of the votes; votes cast for other candidates count for nothing. Such elections reinforce two-party dominance, contribute to the polarization of our county, often lead to a lack of meaningful choices, and hence discourage voter participation. We therefore recommend consideration of “instant runoff” (or ranked choice) voting whereby voters rank their preferences by placing the numbers 1, 2, 3, etc. beside the names of their first, second, or third choice candidates. If no candidate receives a majority of first preferences, the candidate with the fewest first preferences is eliminated and those ballots are counted again, this time with the eliminated candidate’s supporters having their ballots counted for their second choice candidate. The counting process continues until one candidate receives a majority. Not only would this system save the cost of run-off elections in jurisdictions where such elections are required (hence the name), it also increases voter choices. Voters are liberated to vote for the candidates they really like instead of only having to choose the “lesser of two evils” or worry about being a “spoiler” leading to the election of their least favored candidate. The system also encourages civility during election campaigns—candidates dare not attack one another lest they forfeit second or third place preferences. The system can be used in legislative elections as well as executive offices such as mayor, and it has been endorsed by the League of Women Voters and by leaders from both major parties. It is currently being used in two major cities, San Francisco, California, and Burlington, Vermont.

d. Consider Proportional Voting (PV)

Proportional voting systems require multi-member legislative districts and are thus less likely to be adopted in the United States than an IRV system. Their strength, however, is that they allow like-minded groups to put forth on the ballot a list of legislative candidates and ask voters to choose from among the lists. If 40 percent of the voters in a ten-member district chose the Republican list, then the top four candidates on the Republican list will be elected. The winners from the other lists will be similarly determined. Obviously political parties other than the two major parties will be favored under such a system, and the elected legislative body will more closely reflect diverse groups, interests, and viewpoints.

H. Conclusion: Civic Virtue and Civic Ethos; The Reformed and Reforming Citizen and Church

Because we believe God works through both human freedom and the love of neighbor as self, our self-love and self-interest must always be tempered by neighbor-love and neighbor-interest. Our electoral practices, like our democratic principles, must be actively respectful of the dignity, liberty, and equality of all of those neighbors created in the “image of God” who also deserve voice and vote in self-determination. When people do not have voice or vote, they exit the political system.<sup>24</sup> Politics is communal decision-making and the more diverse the community, the more personally enlarging politics can become—if our moral commitments and communities of support are strong enough. To listen to all voices, even to help lift them up as the title of this study—from James Weldon Johnson’s hymn—suggests, is not to agree with them all. It is a call to listen for God’s voice, and then to speak and act as Christians for the good of all as best as we can see it (building on the resources available to us).

The members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are among the most politically active of U.S. citizens, partly because many of us know how the system works (or doesn’t). We vote at a higher percentage than other Americans, and give significant amounts of money to political campaigns, and that translates into economic and generally racial advantage. We embody a mixture of self-interested savvy and high-minded idealism that helps us recognize how checks and balances begin on the inside. And that awareness makes us cautious in claiming “civic virtue,” but convinced that politics is about more than interests grappling for advantage. Politics is not simply a marketplace. It is about power and subsidies and resentments and fears of loss, but it is also about enduring loyalties and hopes, expanded identities, and generosity of spirit.

Reports like this produce recommendations because “truth is in order to goodness,” as the Book of Order says, and because even the elect benefit from guidance, as Calvin taught in the “third use of the law.” Democracy itself can be mean, if the voters and the choices before them are mean, although we suspect that such a democracy would soon leave too many people out. Popular leaders and parties can promote irresponsible ideas, ignore dangers, burden future generations. Good laws are essential but not sufficient; enforcement requires a belief that government itself should serve “the people.”

We thus advocate a Presbyterian democratic or electoral ethic of individual discipline, multicultural awareness and communal responsibility. Presbyterians cannot just plead good intentions and self interest and still be full witnesses to the loving will of God in Christ for all of creation. We seek to interpret the world through the scriptural categories of sin and grace, justice and love, death and resurrection. In that light we may find what Christian ethicist Cheryl Sanders calls a “prophetic citizenship,” which calls the privileged to concern for the “oppressed least of these.”<sup>25</sup> The recommendations in this report are to help provide a communal base for that kind of citizenship.

Our Presbyterian Civic Ethos

We are Christians first and Americans second, understanding God’s sovereignty above every nation, including our own. The gifts of the Reformed tradition to democratic life have been large, based in a clarity about justice and the importance of impartial law for the common good. This report is intended to aid in the naming and updating of that civic contribution, yet also be a contribution the life of the church itself. Do we look for the Holy Spirit in struggles of the suffering for liberation, both at home and abroad? Do we see that there is both a Christian and a citizen’s response to make to their condition, without identifying the two? The answers to these questions depend on the nature of our congregational life and the scope of our preaching.

As a fraction of the U.S. population, we must share our traditions and ethos with other churches and welcome their convergence with us in old and new ecumenical ways. In 1975, Robert N. Bellah wrote that America suffered from a “broken covenant,” something deeper than a social contract. In the 1980s and 90s, he and four colleagues wrote about the “habits of the heart” necessary for “the good society” (to use both book titles). The civic ethos called for here would be among our Presbyterian “habits,” but would point to new habits as well: deeper engagement in our churches and communities across political, racial, and class differences; more explicit and intentional practices of dialogue and discernment; and continued vigilance for the rights of individual conscience. We may find reinforcement for this sense of ethos as lived communal ethic in the proposed Social Creed of 2008, also before this assembly:

With all those who labor and are heavy-laden, we commit ourselves to a culture of peace and freedom that embraces non-violent initiatives, human dignity and greater equality, with a deeper spirituality of inward growth and outward action. By these means, we witness to our hope in the God who makes all things new, whom we know in Jesus Christ.<sup>26</sup>

The Work of the Study Team

Assembled and completing its work in 2007, the study team consisted of: Elder Dianne Briscoe, Esq., chairperson, member of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and a family court officer in Denver, Colorado; the Reverend Roger Gench, Ph.D., vice-chairperson, pastor, New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, Washington, D.C.; Elder Charles Easley, member, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, vice-chairperson, General Assembly Council, academic administrator, ret., Atlanta, Georgia; Elder Howard Scarrow, Ph.D., professor of political science, ret. State University of New York, Stony Brook, New York; Elder Ronald Stone, Ph.D., professor of Christian social ethics, ret. Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Elder Patricia Petty Morse, Esq., International Affairs, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.; Wayne Vaden, Esq., former Denver city clerk, lawyer in private practice, Denver, Colorado; Khalilah L. Brown-Dean, Ph.D., assistant professor of political science, Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut; Beverly Ann Gaddy, Ph.D., professor of political science, University of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; the Reverend Rebecca Reyes, M.S.W., coordinator, Latino Health Project, Duke University Medical Center, Durham, North Carolina.

The study team met twice in full, first in Washington, D.C., at the Washington Office of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and then in Denver, Colorado. At the first meeting, hosted by then Presbyterian Washington Office Director the Reverend Elenora Giddings Ivory, the study team heard from eight civil rights and electoral reform organizations and received materials from several other organizations and individuals. Initial research and drafting was done by the Reverend Louisa L. Davis, Ph.D., director of Greater Washington Allies in Reconciliation, an Interfaith Antiracism Alliance, consultant to the study team, complemented by several study group members. The Reverend Christian Iosso, Ph.D., coordinator of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, provided staff services. At its Denver meeting, the team reviewed a draft of the report, reached consensus on most points, and authorized revisions. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy received the report at its October meeting and authorized further revisions for its January 2008 meeting.

Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) jointly recommend the 218th General Assembly (2008) receive the attached study and approve the resolution and recommendations below, together titled, "Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future."

I. Resolution

Introduction

The 217th General Assembly (2006) received initial reports on the effects of Hurricane Katrina on New Orleans and the Gulf Coast from several sources: the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), impacted presbyteries, and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA). Presbyteries affected by the hurricane immediately began to search for pastors displaced by the disaster, coordinated communications with churches, and assessed the impact on congregations, church members, and pastors as they developed a response and coordinated recovery efforts with PDA. Presbyterian Disaster Assistance had swung into action immediately, beginning the double process of emergency support and assessment of long-term needs. Thanks to tent communities and other logistical arrangements by PDA and the hospitality and coordination provided by presbyteries and local congregations, an astonishing number of more than 35,000 volunteers have now pitched in to help reverse the effects of a combined natural, governmental, and cultural disaster, providing more than 178,000 volunteer days of service, worth an estimated $21 million in labor plus an additional $95,000 in donated materials, while Presbyterians overall have contributed $27 million in funds.

This report begins by saluting the Christian commitment of the volunteers. We believe the whole church should be proud, and we find Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, the Gulf Coast hosting and giving congregations, and the presbyteries of the Gulf Coast region worthy of honor. Quoting Isaiah 58:12, in 2007 the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA) called on the whole church to be "repairer[s] of the breach, [and] restorer[s] of [the] streets to live in." The effects of this disaster on the church itself have also been of great concern, as congregations and presbyteries have been weakened. This is a time when most Presbyterians put aside theological differences to respond to God's call to care for one another, acknowledging that: "[when] one member suffers, all suffer together"

(1 Cor. 12:26). But we do not care only for ourselves, and we recognize that all the churches together cannot repair a Katrina-sized breach in our social fabric.

Thus this report complements that outpouring of hands-on and financial concern to look at what the tragedy revealed about New Orleans and its neighboring communities, and about our government's response. This is not an exhaustive catalog of devastation, ward-by-ward or parish-by-parish; nor does it inventory all of the weaknesses in systems of criminal justice, transportation, environmental protection, levee engineering, or urban planning. Public housing and public health remain at the core of Gulf-area needs, and the New Orleans school system is now a large and uneven experiment in non-union charter schools. Economic development remains stunted except for the tourist industry. Yet while the church must be aware of these realities, its focus must be on the suffering and vulnerability of families and communities and the responsibility of federal, state, and local government to respond.

Beyond the church's own caregiving, it is the church's divinely ordained mission to stand with the afflicted, and not to minimize the patterns that have made for soul-drowning poverty in parts of every city and rural county. The attached study looks at the "framing" coverage of the disaster, responses by the church and others to the immediate tragedy, but then looks at structural issues of race, gender, and class and the resources of our tradition to face these dynamics.

The primary author of the study was raised in New Orleans and, with their permission, shares some of the suffering of his own family, most of whom have struggled to stay, and stayed to struggle, in that city. As a professor of urban ministry, he also takes us to the hard truths beneath the deluge of data: although the emergence of a black presidential contender gives hope to our aspirations for a race-neutral society, much of our culture and civic ethos remain stunted by structural racism. Any plans for rescue must recognize these mutually reinforcing legacies of segregation in employment, housing, and education. This is part of the church's work of strengthening its witness of charity with a concomitant witness of justice advocacy, and it prompts the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) to propose a focused continuing study of our urban areas and the capacities of the church within them.

Long-Range Concerns of the Church

We have seen a great process of triage, planned and unplanned, reflecting lines of race and class, which has resulted in the virtual halving of pre-Katrina populations, with the bulk of the population loss among the poor. We have seen scores of deaths and continued hard living in Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) trailers and moldy homes. Even for those remaining and still returning to New Orleans and its surrounding parishes, there is a great difference between families getting back on their feet and the wholeness of community. It is for the church to lift up a right of place that goes beyond land value, and the cultural and spiritual losses that require more than physical reconstruction.

Of existing policies that speak most directly to this reality, "Building Community Among Strangers," written following racial and other tensions of the Los Angeles riots in the early 1990s, expresses the need for systemic change. The church's commitments to sustainable development and against "environmental racism" or locating toxic hazards primarily in or near poor communities, often communities of color, also speak to the Gulf Coast situation. In addition to social witness policies, of course, the PC(USA) has strategies of mission and evangelism that look to building up the witness of congregations in areas of disaster and disruption.

The recommendations of this report also look to the vulnerability of countless other coastal communities threatened by accelerated climate change and other geographic challenges. The ACREC and ACSWP chose to title this report with the Bible's promise of redemption despite tragedy taken from 2 Corinthians 4:8-9. Too many people in coastal Louisiana and Mississippi have indeed been "afflicted ... but not crushed," "struck down, but not destroyed," and we pray not driven to despair. The message of the hope in all disasters must be that God the Creator does not abandon people and neither should we.

This resistance to abandonment is the other side of the church's theological concern for the common good. It does mean special assistance for those in special need, but it does not mean subsidizing ecologically or logistically unsustainable residence patterns. Insurance practices are discussed in the study paper, but wise federal regulation both holds companies to fulfill their agreements and puts scientifically justified limits on shoreline development. Similarly, there need to be limits on development in dry areas with regard to fire and everyday water depletion. In this way, reflection on the Katrina catastrophe's remediation turns one to issues of prevention, planning for disaster and emergency response, and careful study of the sociology of recovery.

The global prospect of increased internal displacement, in relation to both ecological change and warfare, prompted the United Nations Human Rights community in 1998 to put forward Guiding Principles on Internal Dis- placement. The same group that helped develop the Guiding Principles, the Brookings-Bern Project on Internal Displacement, has supported a study applying those principles to the post-Katrina situation (note: Hurricane Katrina and the Guiding Principles on Internal Displacement by Chris Kromm and Sue Sturgis, Institute for Southern Studies, January 2008). This and other comprehensive reports review the adequacy and implementation of the 1988 Stafford Act, the basic five-level framework for federal disaster assistance (full name: The Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act). It is thus not the church's role to duplicate this kind of study, but for appropriate agencies and representatives to examine and support key recommendations, particularly for the good of potentially affected areas and planning for the church itself.

As the attached study indicates, an extensive bibliography of reports has been distilled in the recommendations below. Both the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy have listened to a range of persons involved, and the latter body has also visited New Orleans.

II. Recommendations

In response to the catastrophic disaster to Gulf Coast areas precipitated by Hurricane Katrina, the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommend that the 218th General Assembly (2008):

1. Receive the study paper entitled, "Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to A More Equitable Future," and direct that it and the resolution approved be made available on the web and in a limited printing for all presbyteries, synods, and educational institutions related to the church, as well as a copy given to each volunteer group staying at a PDA volunteer village.

2. Declare that in light of the Reformed tradition's understanding of the role of government as the arm of a whole people acting to maintain the common good, the official responses of society's agencies, public and private, to the disaster of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita have been grievously inadequate regarding the needs of those affected by trauma, loss, and relocation in the Gulf Coast region and, in particular, to the African American citizens of New Orleans, the physically challenged, and the poor of that city.

3. Call the nation to repentance regarding our society's continuing failed responses by taking concrete, timely steps, through policy formation and the appropriate marshalling of financial and human resources, to transform New Orleans and the Gulf Coast region into a model of redevelopment with social and environmental justice.

4. Commend those members and bodies within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that have modeled constructive and compassionate response:

a. The 35,000 plus volunteers who gave more than 178,000 days of service estimated to value more than $21 million in volunteer labor; and all those who contributed funds to face this unprecedented disaster;

b. Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) for its outstanding role in assisting the whole church in responding to Hurricanes Katrina, Rita, and Wilma.

c. The congregations and presbyteries on the Gulf Coast that have welcomed and hosted volunteers and coordinated clean up and rebuilding efforts, and those from around the country and the world who have sent mission teams and resources to the Gulf Coast.

d. Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA) for supporting caregivers and engaging Presbyterians from across the country in addressing systemic and specific concerns in New Orleans and elsewhere and in educating Presbyterians on the connection of charity and justice.

e. The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for waiving dues for congregations impacted by the disaster for seven months and for providing more than $300,000 in emergency assistance grants to church workers in the affected region. The Board of Pensions also streamlined access to care with its medical plan vendors and arranged additional counseling services to address personal impacts of the devastation and stresses of care giving.

f. The synods of the impacted areas for administering funds raised by PDA for pastor and church staff salary support. More than $714,922 was distributed to support pastors and staff of congregations.

g. The Interagency Task Force, which brought together representatives from various agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to coordinate ongoing, long-term responses to the needs of congregations, including assessment and funding of congregations needing assistance with rebuilding their damaged facilities. More than $2,218,569 has been distributed for the rebuilding of damaged church facilities.

5. Express concern regarding the health, environmental, and safety issues related to the disposal of Hurricane Katrina debris by directing the Stated Clerk to:

a. Communicate to the City Council and mayor of New Orleans the PC(USA)'s affirmation of the closure of the Chef Menteur landfill in 2007, and to communicate our continuing concern regarding the health and environmental issues involved in the use of the Old Gentilly landfill.

b. Urge the Louisiana Department of Environmental Quality to work with New Orleans city officials to develop a comprehensive debris management strategy that addresses environmental, safety, and health issues at landfills used for the disposal of Hurricane Katrina waste.

c. Request congressional hearings on debris management post-Katrina that examines the lessons learned from this disaster and provides recommendations for state and federal actions that guide debris management, especially in regards to hazardous waste, in future disasters.

6. Urge the Presbyterian Foundation, through its Creative Investment Program and in collaboration with the General Assembly Council through the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) and in consultation with other offices, to make a loan of $4 million to Local Initiatives Support Corporation (LISC) in order to create a low-interest revolving loan fund that would be available to Presbyterian congregations, presbyteries, and coalitions in which church entities are involved, in the affected Gulf region for development loans to support the construction and rehabilitation of affordable, permanent rental housing and mixed housing attached to congregational redevelopment, or to fund neighborhood initiatives organized by community development corporations in which a Presbyterian congregation or presbytery is involved. Following the precedent of $4 million made available for development in Los Angeles in 1991, and limited to a five-year period, this investment would accrue at an interest rate to be agreed upon between the Foundation and LISC and would result in a secure investment for the PC(USA).

7. Encourage PDA and those agencies involved in disaster recovery research to work in collaboration with long-term recovery organizations in finding economically viable "green" building processes, recommended materials (appropriate to context), and models to assist in sustainable rebuilding.

8. Direct Small Church and Community Ministry, Racial Ethnic Ministries, and other appropriate ministries of the General Assembly Council, in consultation with Presbyterian Disaster Assistance, to produce a resource for proactive ministry and preparation for disaster in urban and rural areas of concentrated poverty, and provide these to coastal and other vulnerable presbyteries. (This work may be done ecumenically and build on existing resources).

9. Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to review the provisions of "Building Community Among Strangers" and other policies involving urban congregations and populations in light of the patterns of enduring poverty in most major U.S. cities, and to study with urban presbyteries ways that public policies may assist the redevelopment of communities and congregations.

10. Direct the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Washington Office, and other ministries of the General Assembly Council (GAC), as appropriate, to support the following public policy directions at the federal level, and urge individual Presbyterians, congregations, presbyteries and synods, as able, to support these and other equitable reconstruction policies on all levels of government, especially state and local:

a. Re-professionalization of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) through careful investigation of its failures of communication, logistics, and coordination with local bodies and institution of new policies as necessary to ensure better emergency preparedness, communications with evacuees, cross-cultural awareness training, involvement of affected people and institutions in recovery efforts, and outreach to persons of color and women as employees and contractors.

b. Long-range planning on population displacement and study of the impacts and effectiveness of FEMA recovery efforts and state/local disaster management.

c. Federal maintenance of prevailing wage levels (under the Davis-Bacon Act), affirmative action requirements, Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) standards, and other worker and union protections in reconstruction efforts.

d. System-wide review of the fairness of charter school-based education in New Orleans, including its impacts on teachers as well as children, especially those living in trailers on a long-term basis.

e. Full compliance with environmental laws governing hazardous wastes, fairness in locating waste sites and other hazards in the full range of communities.

f. Public housing reconstruction on at least a “one-for-one” basis to ensure replacement of housing destroyed and policies to strengthen provision of affordable housing to those whose incomes range up to 200 percent of the federal poverty threshold.

g. Preserve affordable housing by instituting rent freezes immediately following disaster and providing for investigation of price gouging in the rental and housing markets in a federally declared disaster area.

h. Urge that Congress investigate: (1) whether persons displaced by the hurricanes on the Gulf Coast were allowed to live in FEMA trailers with dangerously high levels of formaldehyde as has been reported in February 2008 by the Center for Disease Control (CDC); (2) why it took FEMA more than two years to investigate health complaints from persons living in these trailers; (3) the health impact this delay has created in persons living in FEMA trailers; and (4) how FEMA plans to relocate the 36,000 people still living in FEMA trailers whose health continues to be put at risk.

i. Accountable state and federal planning by the Army Corps of Engineers and other bodies to maximize public safety and minimize public exposure to natural risks in the strengthening of levees and other infrastructure improvements.

j. Environmentally-sound planning, in light of climate change, to allow bayou and delta buffer area regeneration and the appropriate protection and regulation of fishing and other coastal economic redevelopment.

k. Effective insurance regulation to ensure clarity in coverage and fairness to policyholders.

l. Rebuilding of full hospital capacity in affected areas, and development of psychiatric resources for communities affected by large-scale depression and post-traumatic stress, with particular attention to services for the indigent and uninsured. Such resources should include youth protective and domestic violence preventive outpatient services.

11. Encourage and equip leaders in local congregations in the Gulf Coast area to help in identifying critical needs that may be addressed through local public policy, and to engage proactively in the development and implementation of such public policy. Direct the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Washington Office, and other ministries of the General Assembly Council (GAC), as appropriate, to identify and make available resources to equip and empower local leaders for this task.

Rationale

This resolution comes in response to the affirmation of the 217th General Assembly (2006) that:

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns will continue to explore ways of addressing issues resulting from the Katrina disaster by consulting with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC), Peacemaking, Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA), the Office of Black Congregational Enhancement, and other related entities that will ensure the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s appropriate response to these issues. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 941)

Purpose of the Study Paper

In an effort to clarify facts concerning Jesus Christ from the variety of documents in circulation at the time, Luke wrote the New Testament book that bears his name to a friend beginning with these words: “Since many have undertaken to set down an orderly account of the events that have been fulfilled among us ... I too decided, after investigating ... to write an orderly account for you. ...” (Luke 1:1–3). In similar fashion, Martin Luther King Jr., in 1963, amidst many conflicting assessments of strategies employed to achieve civil rights for all citizens in that era, wrote his famous “Letter from the Birmingham Jail” to clarify his position concerning difficult social justice issues.

Today, a wide variety of helpful studies about the devastating economic, social, educational, cultural, and spiritual realities confronting New Orleans and Gulf Coast regions in the post-Hurricane Katrina era have been compiled.<sup>1</sup> “Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future,”<sup>2</sup> (2 Cor. 4:7–10) seeks to outline, from among some of these resources, recommended action-steps as set forth above for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The aim here is to affirm the vision and spirit of hope reflected in the people of New Orleans and the Gulf Coast areas in spite of the devastation that continues to impact their lives to this day. Particular attention is devoted to issues of race, gender, and economic injustice that, with disappointing regularity, are reflected in the experiences and stories of some of the most vulnerable people affected by this natural and human disaster.<sup>3</sup> As such, these recommendations are intended to assist Presbyterian Christians to implement a vision a hope and positive systemic change that safeguards the welfare of society’s most vulnerable constituencies and historically marginalized communities such that, in the words of scripture, “justice [will] roll down like waters ... righteousness like an everlasting stream” (Amos 5:24) and “the glory of the Lord [will] be revealed, and all people shall see it together. ...” (Isa. 40:5).

Background: What Hurricane Katrina Revealed

During September 2005, the world watched on television tragic pictures of New Orleans as it was deluged not only by water, but also by apathy, incompetence, and indifference. This situation was largely the result of irresponsible funding decisions of government officials and the Army Corps of Engineers that repeatedly ignored the inadequacy of levees and emergency preparedness plans that should have been in place for a city built below sea level. Indelible images of the flooded city remain in our minds: mostly poor and African American people waving their water-soaked clothing in the air, begging for help; women, some with infants in arms, children, men, and elderly persons perched on rooftops, bridges, or lined up to get into the Superdome. Scene after scene of pathos was daily news fare with sick people exposed to the hot summer sun lying on mats, in wheelchairs, in nursing homes or hospitals waiting for buses that never arrived, or deceased and covered with newspaper, rags, and even an American flag as grieving relatives sat nearby in stunned disbelief. Crowds of people walked across a bridge seeking dry land and shelter only to meet a wall of armed police from Gretna, a city that did not flood, refusing them entrance.

Unfortunately, the horror of this tragic reality was exacerbated by a wave of media coverage that sensationalized the incidence of crime and looting occurring in the immediate aftermath of Hurricane Katrina and delayed some assistance. Mainstream newspapers, television, and radio reported that black residents were raping, looting, and shooting at rescue workers and generally running wild in the streets. These reports spread fear among people in New Orleans across race and class, and were especially terrifying to women. That crime wave later proved to have been largely fictional.<sup>4</sup> Racism is evident in the different ways that actions of black and white residents were portrayed in the media. In one Associated Press photo, a black man carrying a plastic bag through the floodwaters carried the notation that he had been “looting” a local grocery store. In another media story, a similar picture of a white couple carried the notation that they were wading through the flood waters after “finding” these items at a local grocery store.<sup>5</sup> The extent of the coverage that the media placed on looting, shootings, rapes, and violent activity gave the appearance that these behaviors were more rampant than later evidence suggests. These reports represented an additional abuse to many people and an entire city already devastated by the largest natural disaster to hit the coastal United States. Moreover, these sensationalized reports overlooked the heroic sacrifices of many people who were flood victims themselves (children, young adults, older adults, neighbors helping neighbors, medical personnel, police officers, and other public servants who did not abandon their posts) and, nonetheless, sought to reach out and help others. To this point:<sup>6</sup>

It became immediately clear that many of the heroes and heroines of Hurricane Katrina were residents of New Orleans, Baton Rouge, Atlanta, Houston, Biloxi, and other surrounding communities who, without fanfare and often without outside resources, saved lives and provided not only food, shelter and clothing, but love and care for their sisters and brothers in the days, weeks, and months after the hurricane. And easily overlooked, is the fact that many of these heroes and heroines were victims themselves, who selflessly risked their own well-being of their families to help others.<sup>7</sup>

Hurricane Katrina hit the Mississippi coast heaping devastation and suffering upon thousands who lost their homes, businesses, churches, and schools with their communities torn asunder and lives shattered. Physical, economic, and emotional ruin and trauma was spread across the Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama coasts and surrounding areas. Yet, it was shocking scenes from New Orleans that revealed the abandonment of people in crisis that exposed graphic race, gender, and class distinctions that continue to bedevil our society. These realities challenge the PC(USA) afresh to make its public proclamation of the Gospel, which plainly teaches the axiom summarized in Galatians 3:28 that “There is no longer Jew or Greek, there is no longer slave or free, there is no longer male and female; for all of you are one in Christ Jesus.”

In the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina’s landfall on August 29, 2005, not only did levees break and fail to protect the city from the flood waters, but promises also broke that were supposed to protect people from the overwhelming danger, sickness, and loss of life that occurred. More pathetic than even this catastrophe are the social and economic realities that typified pre-Hurricane Katrina New Orleans, which can be found in cities across the nation whether in Seattle, Miami, Los Angeles, Chicago, Boston, or Atlanta and, indeed, around the globe in even more profound dimensions. Other cities may not be below sea level physically, but educationally, economically, and in terms of social challenges facing poor families in urban centers engulfed by health challenges, drugs, gun and gang violence, and unemployment, they are seriously below needed safety levels.<sup>8</sup>

In addition to the human losses and general vulnerability of poorer communities, there were distinctive cultural losses in the wake of Katrina. The Crescent City and The City That Care Forgot are the two most widely known nicknames long associated with New Orleans, Louisiana. The Crescent City is the nickname that bespeaks of New Orleans' location, noting its early days of having literally been settled in the crescent-shaped bend of the Mississippi River as it winds its way southward toward the Gulf of Mexico. The City That Care Forgot is the phrase that captures the spirit of New Orleans and the emphasis on enjoying life's simple pleasures. This can be seen in the city's passion for good cuisine, good conversation, its love of jazz, Mardi Gras, and all the interplay of African, French, Spanish, Haitian, Creole, other cultural, ethnic, and religious dynamics that, historically, have mocked the wider region's social and political bigotries. Although New Orleans, nonetheless, has always been governed by them. While legendary artists such as Louis Armstrong, Pete Fountain, Mahalia Jackson, and Wynton Marsalis were born in The Crescent City, their cultural contributions to the world have been shaped by the spirit of freedom and its "gumbo" of social, cultural, and artistic improvisation, syncopation, call-and-response, blues, and celebration that is The City That Care Forgot. It is this latter nickname that the tourist industry has capitalized on as it seeks to help New Orleans move beyond Hurricane Katrina, although that event and its aftermath may well have redefined the phrase into the city that a nation's compassion forgot.

In the broader area of Louisiana and Mississippi, including the city of Biloxi, also struck by the hurricanes, we recognize the human costs and heroism as well, and note the cultural impacts on areas known for Cajun traditions, Native communities, natural beauty, and tenacity of spirit. Some coastal areas were entirely swept away by the hurricanes; many churches as well as homes and businesses were severely damaged. Partly because of different governmental patterns of response and density of population, rebuilding has progressed farther in Mississippi and Louisiana areas outside New Orleans. We are also grateful for the hospitality shown by persons and churches throughout the region from Houston to the Florida Panhandle; a single Presbyterian-run program for the homeless in Shreveport, Louisiana, Providence House, lived up to its name immediately after Katrina hit, renting all available apartments for New Orleans evacuees through the action of its far-sighted director.

As we approach nearly three years beyond Hurricane Katrina and its devastating impact, the tasks of crafting viable social justice strategies to address compassionately the injustice issues this disaster exposed still remain. Sociologist Iva E. Caruthers has clearly defined the scope of the challenge facing people of faith in the wake of this crisis with these words:

... Images of the elderly, the children, the poorest of the poor—the very “least of these” spoken of by Jesus (Matthew 25:31–40)—being abandoned by all levels of government and by much of the disaster relief community still ... [remain]. More powerful than these images, however, is the apparent impotence of [our society as a whole] to engage expeditiously and forthrightly in ... [an] effort that affirms the compassionate caring and total commitment of a nation to assess and document what happened and to provide the assistance and assurances needed to the thousands of American families most devastated by this unprecedented natural disaster and national tragedy.<sup>9</sup>

Initial Responses

In the wake of this tragedy, people of faith and goodwill responded nationally and internationally to help fill obvious gaps in government bureaucracy's inadequate response. The PC(USA) congregations and presbyteries responded immediately and generously by assisting those displaced by the hurricane and its aftermath with emergency housing, personal assistance, and recruiting and training volunteers to go to disaster sites throughout the Gulf Coast region to help traumatized victims begin the difficult and painful tasks of rebuilding their lives. Presbyterian Disaster Assistance immediately began a double process of emergency support and assessment of long-term needs.

Two years after Hurricane Katrina, Presbyterian work and commitment in the Gulf Coast continues. Presbyterians walk alongside survivors as they take steps toward rebuilding their communities and rebuilding their lives. This effort has involved lay leaders, ministers, and staff who are all part of a collective effort for long-term recovery along the Gulf Coast. This has been a historic event in the life of the PC(USA). Never before have thousands of volunteers from all walks of life responded so faithfully to a disaster of this magnitude and the long-term recovery ahead. More than 31,000 volunteers have given over one million hours of service estimated at a value of $23 million. “The true impact of transformation in people's lives cannot be measured in numbers, but can be witnessed in the words of the people who have been deeply engaged in the process of recovery.”<sup>10</sup>

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) had begun to identify implications of the disaster as soon as its dimensions became clear and considered ways to develop a “... statement of prophetic witness” that would address the “social and spiritual devastation ...”(internal ACREC document). Several subsequent events contributed to the church's growing attention to the challenges to a faithful witness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ wrought by Hurricane Katrina and the attendant continuing stories of pain and injustice. In September 2006, at a Stony Point Peacemaking conference, Mtangulizi Sanyika, a New Orleans activist and former academic, spoke on the neglect of the city in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. Parallel to these efforts, the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. convened a task force that continues to study the crisis and advocate solutions at the city, state, and federal levels.

In January 2007, PHEWA (Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association) held its biennial meeting in New Orleans, allowing persons from across the nation to see many of these challenges firsthand and hear from local residents engaged in rebuilding their lives. Quoting Isaiah 58:12, the PHEWA called on the whole church to be “repairer[s] of the breach, [and] restorer[s] of the streets to live in.” Additionally, the conference featured major presentations by scholars and church leaders, including one by professor and lawyer, Bill Quigley, who focused on challenges facing the city. On February 16, 2007, the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) held panel discussions in Louisville with presbytery and General Assembly Council staff with participation from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC). Ideas for this resolution have been distilled from that conversation. Members and the executive presbyter of the Presbytery of South Louisiana, including former General Assembly Vice Moderator Jean-Marie Peacock, and Lisa Easterling of the Luling host site, have proved to be essential resources. On October 24–28, 2007, ACSWP held a meeting in New Orleans that included hearings at Berean Church with a wide range of local officials and volunteer leaders. Yet, grievous challenges remain.

Structural Issues of Race, Gender, and Poverty

Although it is a well-established fact that the notion of race is a social construct and has no genetic significance biologically,<sup>11</sup> the cultural conundrum of ethnicity continues to plague all social contexts and generally plays out in ways that leave economic and political disenfranchisement unequally located among people of color.<sup>12</sup> The stamp of these social realities is seen, for example, in health statistics regarding HIV/AIDS, two-thirds world debt among poor southern nations to affluent northern nations, in the incarceration percentages of U.S. prisons, and in the continuing inequities inflicted upon the poor and people of color in the wake of Hurricane Katrina. This is what law professor Victor Goode views as structural racism, the functional outcomes of racially discriminatory behavior in society that manage to avoid identifiable definitions of law:

Structural racism is racism underneath and across society, permeating its entire history, culture and institutions. Our culture, including our education, perpetuates, normalizes and legitimates the effects of racism, while making them invisible to the narrow legal definition of unlawful segregation.<sup>13</sup>

Structural racism not only fails to serve people equally across race, culture, and ethnic origin in society through the agencies of private and government entities, but also in such vital information venues as print, radio, television, cinema, and cyberspace as well as in legislative acts ostensibly designed to foster a “colorblind” society while still culturally and psychologically affirming white supremacy and privilege. The overt goals of the colorblind or race-neutral environment are promoted as eliminating ethnicity from consideration in serving human needs, arguing that not to do so only belittles or insults people of color and encourages resentment among several of society’s white constituencies.<sup>14</sup>

Yet, a great deal of attention is paid to race and ethnicity in society whether in housing patterns, educational institutions, health care, employment, business and investment opportunities, nutrition, transportation access, and even in worship practices. It is against this social and cultural backdrop of structural racism that the nationally televised scenes from New Orleans immediately following Hurricane Katrina should be understood. As Wellesley College political science professor Jean Hardisty observed, the nation’s post-Katrina response was a metaphor of structural racism with “wealthy Whites on the high ground [and largely able to escape the city] while people of color and poor Whites were on the low ground [and the least able to escape the city’s floods].”<sup>15</sup>

Addressing the challenge of race, gender, and poverty distinctions in the social context of the United States is not a new phenomenon. Chattel slavery of the antebellum period leading up to the Civil War was a racial and economic injustice as was the extended period of legalized apartheid in the United States known as racial segregation.<sup>16</sup> Yet, what scenes from Hurricane Katrina’s aftermath exposed so shockingly and vividly was the lingering structural race and poverty distinctions of the post-Civil Rights era of the 1950s and 1960s that, while well known and documented, are typically ignored or hidden in society. Consider the following race, economic, and social justice realities that were well known before Katrina made landfall:<sup>17</sup>

- New Orleans had a black population of 67.3 percent, 26.6 percent white, 3.1 percent Latino, and 2.3 percent Asian.
- Twenty-three percent of all New Orleans residents lived at or below the official poverty level. The national average is 13.1 percent.
- At the time of Katrina, “5% of non-Latino whites did not have access to a car, while 27% of blacks in New Orleans were without cars.”<sup>18</sup>
- New Orleans median household income was $31,369. National average was $44,684.
- 51,707 children (42 percent of all children in the city) were poor; 48,740 of those poor children were black. Nearly one in two of all black children in pre-Katrina New Orleans were poor.<sup>19</sup>

- Fifty-seven percent of senior citizens in New Orleans had physical disabilities. The national average was 39.6 percent.
- In Louisiana, 69 percent of black children live in poverty.
- More than 90,000 people in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama made less than $10,000 a year.<sup>20</sup>

While these realities were well known before Hurricane Katrina, the fact is that these same challenges mirror race, poverty, and gender inequities that characterize contexts throughout the nation and are in no way limited only to urbanized areas of the Gulf Coast and surrounding regions of New Orleans, Louisiana, Biloxi, Mississippi, or Mobile, Alabama. Consider the following realities that evidence the outcomes of structural racism across the nation:

- Unemployment among African Americans represents more than twice the percentage of unemployed whites.<sup>21</sup>
- In cities such as New York and Chicago, some estimates put the number of unemployed black males at 50 percent.<sup>22</sup>
- In Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, nearly one-in-two black adults have no full-time job.<sup>23</sup>
- Long-term African American unemployment is now at a twenty-year high.<sup>24</sup>
- By 2002, over one in four Latino and African American families were asset poor, having no liquid financial assets, compared to 6 percent of whites. Families with small amounts or a moderate amount of wealth drew down their meager stockpile of savings to use as private safety nets.
- Of the 2.1 million inmates today, 910,000 are African American.<sup>25</sup> By contrast, only 740,000 African American males are in four-year colleges and graduate programs, though most are in a narrower age range.
- Blacks are 12.3 percent of the population, but are 43.9 percent of the state and federal prison population.<sup>26</sup>
- Latinos are 12.6 percent of the population, but are 18.3 percent of the prison population.
- Whites are 69 percent of the population, but 34.7 percent of the prison population.
- Studies by the Harvard University Civil Rights Project have shown a pattern of resegregation in education in most regions of the United States; where 34 percent of black students attended majority white public schools in 1991, by 2002 only 25 percent did so.<sup>27</sup>

These social realities represent the functional outcomes of what is best understood as structural racism and classism that ignores and tolerates poverty. Researchers from a variety of research organizations including the Brookings Institute, Children's Defense Fund, the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA, and the National Urban League among others have independently concluded that the evidences of structural race and poverty realities that typified pre-Hurricane Katrina have corresponding circumstances that can be found in urban centers across the nation.<sup>28</sup> Political scientist Jean Hardisty summarized the situation and its resulting challenge this way:

We should not imagine that structural racism is only found in the three states affected by Katrina. It pervades the entire country. The visual images of Katrina would be similar in Chicago, Boston, Washington, DC, Atlanta, Miami, and other cities where race and poverty reinforce each other. ... Until those of us who benefit from white privilege have to confront the consequences of that privilege, it is possible for us to believe the white supremacist line that people of color are victims of their own moral failings, not of [public and private] policies.<sup>29</sup>

In Keeping with Our Tradition

Regrettably, many well-meaning Christians continue to approach social justice issues in the public square as if these were matters of secular social service concern with humanitarian merit, but somehow fail to see the visceral connection of social justice as part of their witness to the Gospel as believers in Jesus Christ. As such, the social, economic, political, and bureaucratic chicanery that characterized our nation's response to the victims of Hurricane Katrina is often viewed as an unfortunate social situation, but not clearly understood as a sinful condition that calls for a prophetic and redemptive response from us. The fact is that this situation represents an outrage to the essence of our faith in Christ and flies in the face of our Reformed tradition as Presbyterians. Our faith heritage calls us to be forthright in attending to matters of social justice because any abuse of vulnerable people, variously described throughout scripture as the widow, orphan, poor, sojourner/alien/stranger, or sick (for example in Ex. 22:21, 22; Lev. 19:10, 33; Deut. 24:17; 26:12, 13; Ps. 99:4; Amos 4:1, 5:24; Luke 10:29–37; James 2:14–17) and summarized by Jesus in Matthew 25:39–46 as “the least of these,” is an affront to God.

Through the ages the church, through its confessional statements, has affirmed human dignity as being at the core of its faith and witness and has condemned acts of economic, race, or gender discrimination as sin. Historically, the confessions of the church, spanning more than four centuries from a variety of social, political, and cultural contexts, affirm that the Holy Spirit works through faithful human beings to correct unfortunate situations in people's lives and that this is, in effect, a means of proclaiming the Gospel and calling people to repentance. Here are but a few examples from our confessional heritage stressing this reality:

Scots Confession, Chapter XIII, 3.13

The cause of good works, we confess, is not our free will, but the Spirit of the Lord Jesus, who dwells in our hearts by true faith, brings forth such works as God has prepared for us to walk in. ...

Heidelberg Catechism, 4.086, the Answer to Question 86

Q. 86. Since we are redeemed from our sin and its wretched consequences by grace through Christ without any merit of our own, why must we do good works?

A. Because just as Christ has redeemed us with his blood he also renews us through [the] Holy Spirit ... [in God's] own image, so that with our whole life we may show ourselves grateful to God for [God's] goodness and that [God] ... be glorified through us; and further, so that we ourselves may be assured of our faith by its fruits and by our reverent behavior may win ... neighbors to Christ.

Second Helvetic Confession, 5.098, Chapter XIV

Of Repentance and the Conversion of Man [People]: ...

THE MINISTRY OF RECONCILIATION. In the letter to the Corinthians the apostle says that the Lord gave the ministry of reconciliation to his ministers (II Cor. 5:18 ff.). ... And explaining his words still more clearly he adds that Christ's ministers discharge the office of an ambassador in Christ's name, as if God himself through ministers exhorted the people to be reconciled to God, doubtless by faithful obedience. Therefore, they [the believers, ministers, and members] exercise the keys [to the Kingdom of Heaven] when they persuade [people] to believe and repent. Thus they reconcile [people] to God.

Shorter Catechism, 7.102, Question 102

Question 102: What do we pray for in the second petition (of the Lord's Prayer)?

Answer: In the second petition, which is, "Thy kingdom come," we pray that Satan's Kingdom may be destroyed, and that the Kingdom of grace may be advanced, ourselves and others brought into it, and kept in it, and that the King of glory may be hastened.

The Theological Declaration of Barmen, 8.17, Part II: From Evangelical Truth #3

The Christian Church is the congregation ... in which Jesus Christ acts presently as the Lord in Word and Sacrament through the Holy Spirit. ... It [the Church] has to testify in the midst of a sinful world, with its faith as with its obedience, with its message as with its order, that it is solely [God's] property, and ... lives and wants to live solely from [God's] comfort and ... direction ... .

The Confession of 1967, 9.44, Part II, Sec. A-4a (Inclusive Language Version)

... The church is called to bring all people to receive and uphold one another as persons in all relationships of life: in employment, housing, education, leisure, marriage, family, church, and the exercise of political rights. Therefore the church labors for the abolition of all racial discrimination and ministers to those injured by it.<sup>30</sup>

Brief Statement of Faith, 10.4, lines 65–71:

In a broken and fearful world,
the Spirit gives us courage
to pray without ceasing,
to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior,
to unmask idolatries in Church and culture,
to hear the voices of peoples long silenced,
and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace.

While not a part of our constitution, the Belhar Confession, first produced in 1987 by the Dutch Reformed Mission Church, provides a faithful witness in the Reformed tradition. "Belhar's relevance is not confined to Southern Africa. It addresses three key issues of concern to all churches: unity of the church and unity among all people, reconciliation within church and society, and God's justice."

Belhar Confession of the Uniting Reformed Church of South Africa

Section 4. We believe

- that God has revealed himself as the one who wishes to bring about justice and true peace among people;
- that God wishes to teach the church to do what is good and to seek the right;
- that the church must witness against and strive against any form of injustice, so that justice may roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream;
- that the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged; that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others.

John Calvin used the notion of the image of God to capture the essence of the biblical understanding of what it means to be human: human beings were made by God for relationship with God and each other. For the Reformers, this understanding served not only to highlight God's purpose for human community, but as evidence that as beings who bear the indelible stamp of God's image, humans are to be accorded special, sacred status in creation as part of God's crowning achievement if this Hebrew concept is read as a future promise within creation. God calls us to fulfill the meaning of being in God's "image" by the way we live together, thereby making God's presence in the universe known. Thus, in Scripture God is portrayed as one who recognizes the value and worth of human life, and affirms the inherent dignity of human beings.<sup>31</sup> In 1999, the PC(USA) affirmed "that racism violates God's purpose for humanity and is contrary to the Gospel of Jesus Christ" and defined it as sin,<sup>32</sup> stating that:

God created human beings, a diverse family, to live together and to love one another as God loves us. We violate God's intention for the human family by creating false categories of value and identity, based on identifiable characteristics such as culture, place of origin, and skin color.<sup>33</sup>

The movement from our confessions to public policy is not automatic, but depends on a whole tradition of public engagement, the sense that we have a personal and corporate responsibility to reform not only ourselves but the world. This requires understanding both complex issues and the resources that are available for change.

Toward a More Equitable Future

While Hurricane Katrina has been replaced in the nation's headlines with other issues and many in society have moved on to preoccupation with other realities, it is important for people of faith to recognize that the legacy of this devastating human catastrophe continues for many people. Individuals and entire families have been affected and labor under the weight of physical, emotional, economic, and spiritual trauma to this day. Although their lives have been permanently altered, the processes of government and, in some cases, even non-governmental relief agencies to help these persons repair the harm they have experienced are far from adequate. These are ordinary people of all age ranges and social conditions, whether poor, middle income, working, retired, or unemployed, whose post-Hurricane Katrina continuing struggles of survival and faith in God largely go unnoticed and undocumented. The story of Oliver Sennett,<sup>34</sup> a deeply religious man, represents but one example of tens of thousands of ordinary and unnamed human beings who fall into this category.

Oliver is a seventy-three-year-old, lifelong New Orleans resident who has been living in a FEMA trailer since April 2006. In June 2004, Betty, Oliver's wife of nearly fifty years died from pancreatic cancer following its diagnosis three months before she died. Oliver was still coping with this loss when Hurricane Katrina struck on August 29, 2005, and wiped out their house. Although Oliver Senior earned his living as a carpenter, he lost all his tools during Katrina. Slowly, he's gotten enough to begin rebuilding his house, but moves slower than he used to move. His goal is to complete the work on restoring his house before April 2008. Of the few neighbors he has these days, most also live in trailers as he does.

Still living in the trailer, it was the after-shock following Hurricane Katrina, however, that truly tested Oliver's faith. One year after the hurricane his oldest son, Oliver Junior, died at age forty-eight leaving a wife and three teenage boys. The family wonders whether this death may have been facilitated by a misdiagnosed assessment of his chest pains by overworked and understaffed New Orleans area emergency room personnel. Oliver Jr. called his Dad on the cell phone from the emergency room to report that the two attending physicians were arguing over whether he should be sent home or kept for further observation. He was sent home.

The family's perspective on the attention Oliver Jr. received during his emergency room visit is better understood when one considers that one year after Katrina (August 2006), only three of the city's ten hospitals were reported open.<sup>35</sup> According to the New England Journal of Medicine, throughout the metropolitan area of New Orleans, only fifteen of twenty-two hospitals were open, with only 2,000 of the usual 4,400 beds available<sup>36</sup> leaving the capacity of area's post-Katrina healthcare delivery system severely reduced:

The number one current problem is total hospital capacity, says Joseph Uddo, chief of general surgery at East Jefferson General Hospital in neighboring Jefferson Parish. "Emergency department patients can't move into the hospital because beds aren't available ... Common at all facilities include complications in patients with untreated chronic diseases, particularly hypertension, diabetes, and AIDS. ... Many believe that mortality has also increased substantially. ... As a crude indicator, there were 25 percent more death notices in the Times-Picayune in January 2006 than there were in January 2005."<sup>37</sup>

The situation of former lower Ninth Ward residents, William and Alberta Sanders,<sup>38</sup> provides an example of the bureaucratic insensitivity that insurance companies have shown in light of the complete devastation of that area by flooding following a break in the levee aside the Industrial Canal. Their home was located three blocks from where the breach in the levee occurred that decimated their neighborhood, including the circa 1964 brick ranch house that was their home. They recalled quite clearly the floodwaters from 1965's Hurricane Betsy that forced them to be rescued via canoe from the roof of their newly constructed home back then. As such, when the advisory to evacuate was issued, they joined the hosts of people leaving the city, traveling with their son and his family to higher ground further north in central Mississippi.

Like several times before when hurricanes were predicted, they took only a few essential papers with them and did not bother to pack much thinking they would return home soon. In fact, they left their car preferring to let their son drive. They looked forward to returning home soon until they learned that, once again, the levee in the Ninth Ward had broken. Like thousands of others in that area, there was no way they could know that they would never see their home again or any remnants of the irreplaceable items that accompany forty-eight years of marriage. Their house was literally washed away by the tidal wave that rampaged through the neighborhood when the levee breached and leaving nothing but a pile of rubble on their property along with their neighbor's house that sat where their house used to be. Though shocked, what surprised them even more was the letter dated June 30, 2006, received from their insurance company.<sup>39</sup> The letter notified them that assessors had surveyed the damage to their home and concluded that it had sustained $234 in wind damage, but since their policy carried a deductible of $500, they would receive nothing from the policy that had been in force from the days following the 1965 hurricane.

Insurance companies have been very slow to respond to claims. Shortly after Hurricane Katrina, many insurance agents covering New Orleans made a distinction between wind damage from the hurricane, which was covered, and flood damage from the breach in the levees, which was not. Similar situations occurred in Mississippi because of the flood from the storm surge following the hurricane. This indecisiveness and the subsequent lack of coverage for homeowners has been a debilitating factor for many trying to rebuild.<sup>41</sup>

These stories are not unique, but help put a face on the tens of thousands of people whose lives have been forever changed by this situation and for whom the processes of governmental and business responses have proven totally inadequate and insensitive as a result of structural racism. The list of injustices heaped upon the citizens of this area and the surrounding communities of the Gulf Coast is staggering, whether reference is to the ugliness of the Chef Mentour Landfill controversy and the ecological disaster that is post-Katrina New Orleans,<sup>42</sup> the educational catastrophe that has become the New Orleans public system of post-Hurricane Katrina Charter Schools and the largely poor and black children enrolled or all the educators and staff who lost their jobs,<sup>43</sup> the abuse of mostly Latino migrant workers employed in clean-up and rebuilding efforts, the huge increase in crime, homelessness, as well as private security firms operating in the area, or the issues of people who continue to be in other cities across the nation unable to return home.

The magnitude of these injustices is only exacerbated by related acknowledgements from FEMA more than two years after Hurricanes Katrina and Rita (February 2008), that some 144,000 trailers the agency issued to hurricane victims contained unsafe levels of formaldehyde, an industrial chemical classified as a probable carcinogen.<sup>44</sup> Hurricane victims struggle to cope with depression and ongoing stress without the ordinary social, medical, and other emergency support services and giving rise to market increases in the incidents of domestic violence, child abuse, substance abuse, and suicide.<sup>45</sup> For example, only one domestic violence shelter in New Orleans survived Hurricane Katrina<sup>46</sup> and one organization, the Louisiana Coalition Against Domestic Violence, a statewide network of support organizations for battered women based in Baton Rouge, reported that one year after Katrina, the plight of victims of domestic abuse remains greatly endangered due to the lack of intervention and shelter resources:

Since Katrina, Orleans Parish has had no beds for women suffering from domestic violence. The YWCA has closed with no hope of re-opening, and the building that housed transitional living for Crescent House burned to the ground. St. Bernard Parish lost its shelter in the storm; they now have a FEMA trailer for an office ... one year after the storms the Greater New Orleans area has only eighteen beds for women experiencing violence; now many women won't leave their homes or FEMA trailers because they know that there is no safe haven to be had in the area.<sup>47</sup>

The miracle is that Oliver Sennett or William and Alberta Sanders, and the others like them, are people whose faith in God has revealed a resilience and hopefulness of spirit that defies human logic. Their determination to return to New Orleans and rebuild new lives for themselves in the future is an inspiration. They represent the very essence of what apostle Paul wrote in 2 Corinthians 4:8–10:

We are afflicted in every way, but not crushed; perplexed, but not driven to despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; struck down, but not destroyed; always carrying in the body the death of Jesus, so that the life of Jesus may also be made visible in our bodies.

It is against this backdrop that the above recommendations have been formulated to assist the PC(USA) affirm that as believers in Jesus Christ, we stand with these people in their suffering and struggles. Moreover, we also affirm that our church, too, is "afflicted in every way ... crushed ... perplexed" and often "struck down" (2 Cor. 4:8–9) by the challenges faced by the people of New Orleans and the Gulf Coast region as well as by those challenges which repeatedly call our attentions away from their plight.

The PC(USA) recognizes that analysis of the multiple evidences of institutional failure, social callousness, and bureaucratic dysfunction exposed by the structural racism and poverty revealed in the aftermath of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita ultimately are not helped by our society's penchant for blame and outrage. In light of this, we affirm that the PC(USA) shall not succumb to despair nor see destroyed our witness to the power of the Holy Spirit to enable us, through faith in Jesus Christ, to prophetically aright grievous wrongs in society. In the face of the structural iniquities exposed by these disasters, as people of faith, we are called to lift a new vision of what God can enable us to do, through faith and action, to transform ugly injustices into transformed and uplifting communities where love and justice are not merely utopian ideals, but form the basis of public policy informed by faith in Jesus Christ. It is toward this type of more equitable future that the above recommendations have been framed for the prayerful consideration and approval of the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-15

Comment on Item 09-15—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council (GAC) commends the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) for its response to the affirmation of the 217th General Assembly (2006), which called for exploration of ways to address issues resulting from the Katrina disaster. “Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future” reflects an even broader scope than the devastation that afflicted the Gulf Coast region in 2005. It explores issues revealed by, not just resulting from, Katrina and looks at the eco-conomic, social, educational, cultural, and spiritual realities of race, class, and gender, not just in the Gulf Coast but across the nation, and decries these realities as sin.

Further, the GAC joins with ACREC and ACSWP in applauding those members and bodies within the PC(USA) that have modeled a constructive and compassionate response to the tragedies of Hurricanes Katrina, Rita, and Wilma, including, but certainly not limited to, the volunteers and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA).

COGA AND GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-15

Comment on Item 09-15—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC).

In order to be good stewards of our resources, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council urge the 218th General Assembly (2008) not to make exceptions to Standing Rule H.2.a.(12).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council remind commissioners and advisory delegates of Standing Rule H.2.a.(12), which reads: “(12) As soon as practicable after the adjournment of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish the assembly’s proceedings and other documents as the assembly may direct in an appropriate format (i.e. print or electronic) to be determined by the Stated Clerk.”

This rule was added to Manual of the General Assembly several years ago to help control expenses and maximize distribution of documents.

If the General Assembly decides to make an exception to the rule, it will be necessary for the assembly to suspend the Standing Rules, which requires a 2/3 affirmative vote of the total enrollment of commissioners.

Item 09-16

[The assembly approved Item 09-16. See pp. 54, 55.]

Creating a Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Report to the 218th General Assembly (2008)—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)

In order to provide continuity and direction for the continuing consultations between the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Executive Officers of the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly, ACREC recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following actions:

1. Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC), Office the General Assembly (OGA), Presbyterian Board of Pensions (BOP), Presbyterian Foundation (FDN), Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), and Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) to prepare a written plan for the continuing implementation of cultural proficiency or comparable approach to organizational change. This plan will be a mechanism for assessing needs, setting goals, and developing strategies with measurable action steps, and will address the following:

a. Develop an organizational plan to sustain cultural proficiency that addresses the particular needs of both management and employees, through

- education,
- increased awareness,
- application.

b. Communicate commitment to cultural proficiency to management and staff.

- Is there a vision statement or other expression of agency policy?
- Are cultural proficiency expectations expressed in job descriptions, performance goals, and evaluations?

- Is there an agency-wide communication strategy to promote employee awareness of cultural proficiency goals?

- c. Review agency policies and practices assessing barriers to diversity and inclusiveness.

- What policies have been reviewed?
- What is the process for review?
- As a result of agency review, what changes have been made to support cultural proficiency goals?
- What policies or practices are scheduled for review?

- d. Assess employment profile using statistical data that includes

- salary range and occupational category (including senior management),
- separations and new hires, and
- breakdown by race, ethnicity, and gender.

- e. Develop strategies to increase diversity in employment through - recruitment and hiring, and

- internal mobility.

2. Direct ACREC to develop a report format and timeline for the consultation process. The Cultural Proficiency Plan and report of accomplishments for each entity shall be reviewed as part of the regular, recurring consultations between ACREC and agency executives (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 542–43).

3. Direct the Moderator of the 218th General Assembly (2008)—in consultation with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns, the associate for Cultural Proficiency, and the General Assembly Nominating Committee—to appoint a Climate for Change Task Force composed of eight members.

- a. Instruct the Climate for Change Task Force to review the current Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Affirmative Action/Equal Employment Opportunity (AA/EEO), contracting and purchasing policies; and recommend revisions.

- b. The Climate for Change Task Force shall recommend changes to:

- (1) Update churchwide AA/EEO policies to reflect the church’s commitment to using the tools of cultural proficiency for organizational change;

- (2) Provide guidance and standards for consistent application of the Minority Vendor Policy in the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly;

- (3) In consultation with staff, develop new guidelines and procedures to be used in lieu of services formerly provided by Project Equality; and

- (4) Revise and update AA/EEO and Minority Vendor policies to reflect changes in the agencies related to the General Assembly and the changing business environment created by emerging technology.

- c. In doing its work, the task force shall be staffed by the Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministry (GAC), in consultation with the associate for Cultural Proficiency and the manager for Purchasing, and consult with representatives of the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly, as appropriate.

- d. The Climate for Change Task Force shall provide an interim report to the 219th General Assembly (2010), and a final report to the 220th General Assembly (2012).

[Financial Implications: (2008): $0; (2009): $12,960; (2010): $12,960 (Per Capita-GAC)]

Rationale

I. Introduction and Overview

The church's capacity to achieve its goals for effective multiracial and multicultural ministry in the future is dependant on its willingness today to transform itself through intentional actions:

- Reflecting the abundant diversity of God's human family;
- Equipping the church to minister effectively in diverse racial and cultural contexts; and
- Dismantling systemic barriers to full and inclusive community.

General Assembly policy calls for the agencies of the church to reflect this commitment in their employment policies and practices, helping to equip the whole church to live into this vision.

The church is called to promote social righteousness and to exhibit the Kingdom of Heaven to the world (Book of Order, G-1.0200). The church professes that racism in any form is a sin (Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community, 211th General Assembly (1999)). Without deliberate efforts to transform the systems of privilege and power, we perpetuate patterns of discrimination through our inaction.

The agencies of the General Assembly, participating in the ministry of the whole church, are called to demonstrate leadership through this change.

Cultural Proficiency is a proactive process that works for individual and organizational change. The expected outcome is an organization that more effectively

- recruits, hires, and promotes for a diverse workforce;
- functions internally in ways that nurture and sustain the gifts and strengths of diversity; and
- responds constructively to the challenges of diversity.

The ACREC task force report, Creating a Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004), directs the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly* to utilize the tools of cultural proficiency, or other comparable processes, to develop and sustain healthy organizational cultures that support diverse workforces.

As directed by the General Assembly, ACREC's consultations with the executive leadership of the six agencies includes

- ongoing implementation of cultural proficiency or similar processes;
- monitoring and assessing the employment profile of each agency by race, ethnicity, and gender, consistent with PC(USA) AA/EEO policy; and
- monitoring and assessing General Assembly policies pertaining to Project Equality and Minority Vendors.

II. Summary of Findings

The 2007 consultations between ACREC and the corporate executives of the six agencies related to the General Assembly* continued to focus on the implementation of Cultural Proficiency and the representation of women and people of color, particularly in senior management.

Cultural Proficiency is an intentional, proactive approach to creating a work environment that welcomes the diversity of race, culture, gender, class, abilities, and other factors; building an organizational culture that utilizes the strengths of diversity and can respond to conflicts that arise out of diversity in constructive ways. To sustain the commitment to Cultural Proficiency and live into the vision of creating healthy corporate cultures that reflect the vision of becoming a truly inclusive multiracial, multicultural church, ACREC finds that agencies need to be able to articulate a concrete plan of action that

- communicates management's commitment to the vision of diversity and inclusiveness; and
- provides for education, increased awareness and application of the tools for cultural proficiency.

To sustain momentum, provide direction, and create accountability for cultural proficiency efforts, agencies need to

- evaluate policies and practices, and
- identify areas for improvement, set goals, and develop action plans with measurable action steps.

The ACREC believes that efforts to implement cultural proficiency would be strengthened with a systematic approach that includes a means of accountability. A written plan developed by each agency would provide the mechanism for planning and a means of assessing its accomplishments. Future consultations between ACREC and the agency executives will focus on the implementation of each agency's plan of action. To provide clear and consistent guidance to the agencies and to facilitate the work of ACREC in monitoring the implementation of cultural proficiency, or comparable process, the committee should outline a standardized format for the agencies to use.

Since 2001, when the ACREC Task Force to Review General Assembly Entities began its work, the single most critical finding has been the persistent absence of people of color in the top management levels of the six General Assembly entities it monitors. In consultations with the executives, all reported that the greatest barrier to change at this level is the relative slow rate of turnover. The ACREC has observed this slow rate of turnover in five of the six agencies monitored. However, in the GAC—where retirement, downsizing, and reorganization created almost complete turnover in senior management between the 2005 and 2007 consultations—the GAC failed to take advantage of the opportunity to increase diversity at the top.

The ACREC laments the loss of this opportunity, and in light of this failure, it must seriously question the commitment of the GAC to the vision of Cultural Proficiency.

The 2004 report of the ACREC Task Force to Review GA Entities, Creating a Climate for Change, approved by the 216th General Assembly (2004), called for the General Assembly related agencies to commit resources and procedures to provide for effective recruitment to address the need for greater diversity in upper management. In the 2005 consultations, the executives of these agencies expressed their support for this concept. In 2007, the agencies reported that discussions had begun, but that a plan was not yet in place. There is a critical need for an effective recruitment strategy. The ACREC urges the GAC, working in cooperation with the other five agencies, to make this an urgent priority, and will continue to monitor its implementation.

In order to provide for a more comprehensive analysis of each agency's employment profile, ACREC requests that agencies provide statistical data on separations and new hires, in a format consistent with the data currently reported to ACREC.

The ACREC notes that strong support for Cultural Proficiency, Minority Vendor Policy, and Project Equality by an agency's governing board has a positive impact on implementation of these policies in the organization. The ACREC urges the governing boards of each of the corporate agencies to include regular education for cultural proficiency in their agendas.

There is a need to review and update the policies of the General Assembly concerning affirmative action, equal employment, and minority vendors. Current policies date to the 1980s and early 1990s. Application and implementation of these policies is not consistent across the agencies that relate to the General Assembly. Moreover, a rapidly changing business environment is changing the way General Assembly agencies do business in ways that were not anticipated by the makers of this policy.

- The Minority Vendor Policy, established in 1984, sets the goal for 10 percent of goods and services purchased by General Assembly level entities to be purchased from minority-owned businesses. Statistical data in support of the Minority Vendor Policy is not maintained or reported consistently by all General Assembly-related entities.
- Project Equality, a nonprofit organization supported by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), provided Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity audits and compiled a buyer's guide. It has been a primary resource in support of the Minority Vendor Policy. However, Project Equality closed its door in 2007, and is no longer available to provide those services.
- Affirmative Action/Equal Opportunity policies of the General Assembly pre-date the commitment to cultural proficiency.
- Purchasing is increasingly done through the Internet, with credit cards and by individual employees directly, rather than through a purchasing office or agent. This has made it harder to identify and track goods and services purchased from women and minority vendors. It also means that achieving the goals of the Minority Vendor policy are much more dependent on educating employees so that they make decisions consistent with church policy.

A review of these policies needs to consider

- providing guidance for consistent application in all General Assembly-related agencies;
- updating current policies to reflect the church's commitment to cultural proficiency; and
- revising existing policies to reflect organizational changes in the agencies related to the General Assembly, changes in the way they do business, and changes such as the loss of Project Equality.

III. Agency Highlights and Areas for Growth

A. General Assembly Council

1. Cultural Proficiency

General Assembly Council has shown some faithfulness toward implementing cultural proficiency. Actions include:

- Created the Office of Cultural Proficiency and employed a full-time associate for cultural proficiency.
- Implemented training for employees in cultural proficiency.
- Launched InterJournal, a monthly in-house electronic commentary lodged on CenterNet, with a focus on human diversity and cultural proficiency.

2. Employment Profile

The General Assembly Council, when given opportunity to increase its cultural proficiency profile in upper management, failed.

- In previous reports, GAC executives cited the lack of turnover as the single greatest barrier to increasing diversity in upper management. With nearly 100 percent turnover in the senior management category of the GAC, ACREC views this as a missed opportunity to be faithful to the General Assembly mandate of 2004.

- In the senior management category, there is a total of nine people: three white females (33 percent) and one person of color (11 percent). Of the three deputies for the major GAC ministries—Communications and Funds Development, Mission, and Shared Services—there are two white males and one white female.

- In contrast to the above, the total number of all managers and supervisors (209), including all associates, is 61 percent female and 23 percent people of color.

3. Minority Vendor Policy and Project Equality

The 2006 minority vendor expenditures of 13.1 percent is the highest percentage that has been achieved in the fourteen years this report has been prepared by the purchasing office. The observation of ACREC is that the primary reason for this percentage was due to a construction project at Ghost Ranch with $2,547,192 spent with Blue Sky Builders, Inc., a Hispanic construction company. At the same time, GAC lost some major minority vendors in other areas. Without the Ghost Ranch project, the percentage of minority vendor purchasing would have been only 5 percent, a significant drop in comparison to prior years.

The ACREC strongly encourages intentional efforts to maintaining a 10 percent minority vendor purchasing in accordance with General Assembly policy.

At the time of ACREC's consultation with the GAC, Project Equality had only recently closed its doors. The GAC was just beginning to explore alternatives to using the Project Equality Buyer's Guide and audit services.

B. Office of the General Assembly

1. Cultural Proficiency

The ACREC observes that OGA is a relatively small organization. The leadership of OGA promotes a culture of inclusiveness that relates as a family. The OGA promotes a strong culture of self-development and upward mobility and actively encourages employees to take advantage of tuition reimbursement and continuing education opportunities.

2. Employment Profile

In the senior management category, there are a total of eight people: 25 percent are women of color and 75 percent are white males. In the management category, 18 percent are people of color, 64 percent are white females.

3. Minority Vendor Policy and Project Equality

OGA reported that for office purchasing, it participates through the GAC.

In lieu of Project Equality, OGA reports that it works with local agencies to provide AA/EEO assessments for General Assembly arrangements with hotels and convention centers.

C. Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP)

1. Cultural Proficiency

The PILP is a small organization of fourteen employees. It receives Human Resources services through the GAC and participates in cultural proficiency programs such as the Cultural Proficiency training in Education Day and other activities in 100 Witherspoon and have had discussions about language usage in staff meetings.

2. Employment Profile

The PILP's greatest challenge in increasing its diversity in employment is low staff turnover. In 2006, one clerical position was filled. The person selected was a white female. The PILP does not expect to increase staffing. Management expects one retirement in the next eighteen months.

3. Minority Vendor Policy and Project Equality

The PILP reported that for office purchasing, it participates through the GAC. The PILP reports that the major vendors with which it has contracts are committed to equal employment opportunities.

D. Presbyterian Publishing Corporation

1. Cultural Proficiency

The PPC reports that it continues to promote equal opportunity in all aspects of employment: salary administration, continuing education assistance, and target recruiting. It identified its greatest accomplishment in cultural proficiency in the diversity of the titles/authors they publish.

However, it reported minimal activity directed towards creating an organizational climate for change. The ACREC noted that, regrettably, PPC terminated its minority internship program.

2. Employment Profile

Staff representation is currently below the General Assembly recommended percentage of 20 percent for persons of color. According to PPC management, two factors contribute to this: a reduction in force and voluntary turnover. The lack of diversity is greater at management levels. The PPC has six people in senior management, one Native American and two white females.

3. Minority Vendor Policy and Project Equality

The PPC does not gather minority vendor data on its own purchasing. It reported that it purchases catering, office supplies, printing, editorial services, production services, marketing products, and marketing services from a variety of minority vendors.

E. Board of Pensions

1. Cultural Proficiency

The Board of Pensions employs M.E.E.T. on Common Ground: Speaking Up for Respect in the Workplace as an alternative approach to cultural proficiency.

The Board of Pensions reports the following activities to further implement cultural proficiency within its agency:

- Tuition reimbursement;
- Mentoring new and potential managers;
- Training for prevention of harassment; and
- Strong support for upward mobility.

2. Employment Profile

Senior management is a total of twelve persons: One (8 percent) person of color and four (33 percent) white females. In the official/managerial category, there are a total of forty-five persons: fourteen (31 percent) persons of color and eighteen (40 percent) white females.

3. Minority Vendor Policy and Project Equality

The Board of Pensions reports to ACREC that it does not maintain minority vendor data in the format requested by ACREC. For many local purchases, it utilizes the Project Equality Buyers Guide to identify new vendors. When minority vendors are identified, it utilizes them when appropriate. For example, BOP identified a minority owned printing and design firm. In 2006, it has spent more than $500,000 with this firm.

The Board of Pensions reports that in its contractual arrangements with financial institutions, it actively seeks minority and women-owned companies. In addition, it seeks with all of the companies in its investment portfolio, to establish relationships with racial ethnic and/or women principals, portfolio managers, or client service officers. It requests that existing managers complete a detailed EEOC report every three years and provide their current policy on the advancement of women and racial ethnic employees in the firm. These reports are provided to the Board of Directors for the Board of Pensions.

F. The Presbyterian Foundation

1. Cultural Proficiency

The ACREC observes with appreciation the efforts of the Foundation to implement cultural proficiency within its agency. It has:

- Conducted a survey of employee perceptions of the Foundation's work culture;
- Implemented a senior management team building course;
- Conducted prevention of harassment training for managers and for employees;
- Completed a one-day training program on managing diversity;
- Completed one-day training for all employees in cultural proficiency, including all field staff;
- Provided training for all employees on effective listening skills; and
- Promoted its tuition reimbursement program.

The Foundation reported that due to limited turnover, management has placed an emphasis on changing the organizational culture to increase employee satisfaction.

2. Employment Profile

In senior management, the Foundation has a total of eleven persons: one (9 percent) person of color and two (18 percent) white females. In the officials and managers category, it has a total of thirteen persons: two (15 percent) persons of color and eight (62 percent) white females.

3. Minority Vendor Policy and Project Equality

The Foundation has not been required by the General Assembly to gather minority vendor data. It began collecting data in 2004. In 2006 it reports the following figures for purchasing: 5.8 percent African American, .1 percent Asian/Pacific Islander, 16.4 percent women.

With major contractors, the Foundation expresses its commitment to equal employment policies and requests information on their equal employment opportunity policies. The Foundation reported that in one instance a company put a policy in place in order to do business with the Foundation.

VI. Conclusions

“Justice is the order God sets in human life for fair and honest dealing and for giving rights to those who have no power to claim rights for themselves. . . .” (Book of Order, W-7.4002).

The church is called to give full expression to God’s abundant love by embodying the diversity of God’s human family in all facets of its life, including the work and management of its institutions. In faithful witness to God’s love and justice, the church must confront and combat the historical patterns of racism, ethnocentrism, sexism, and classism that divide our society and our church. This challenge requires that its own corporate institutions examine themselves, and work with urgency, diligence, and creativity to remove all barriers to the full and equitable participation of all of God’s people in their employment and management.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns expresses thanks to the members of its subcommittee who conducted the consultations with agency executives and prepared this report: Eugene Turner, Noushin Framke, and Irvin Porter; and staff: Teresa Chavez Saucedo and Sherri Pettway.

APPENDIX A
DEFINITIONSCultural Proficiency:

Cultural proficiency provides language to describe, and standards to assess, both healthy and nonproductive policies, practices, and behaviors. It acknowledges that change does not happen overnight, that people and organizations move on a continuum from highly exclusive and oppressive organizations and behaviors to highly inclusive organizations and behaviors. It is built on a foundation that aligns the principles of inclusivity in diversity with the core values and mission of the organization. It also acknowledges that organizations are resistant to change and that the causes of resistance must be taken into account and addressed openly in order to bring about cultural transformation within an organization.

M.E.E.T. on Common Ground—Speaking Up for Respect in the Workplace:

A training program utilized by the Board of Pensions. It introduces a four-step practical model to promote mutual respect and improve cross-cultural communication in the working environment:

- M—Make time to discuss
- E—Explore differences
- E—Encourage respect
- T—Take responsibility

Appendix C: Minority Vendor Annual Report 2007

Minority expenditures for 2007 are 8.9% falling short of the 10% goal set by the GAC 1983 Minority Vendor Policy. This report reflects successes and area's requiring attention. Emphasis to increase expenditures with racial ethnic vendors has been successful with an increase of the percentage of expenditures with Hispanic, Asian, and Native American vendors. Purchasing Services continues to look to expand our minority owned suppliers specifically African American vendors and increase opportunities with these suppliers so that we exceed our policy goal.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 09-16

Comment on Item 09-16—From the General Assembly Council.

In its report to the 218th General Assembly (2008) on “Creating a Climate for Change Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns “laments the loss of [the] opportunity” to increase diversity at the top that was occasioned by “almost complete turnover in senior management between 2005 and 2007” in the General Assembly Council. We agree. In our search for senior leaders, both among existing staff and through external recruiting, we were successful in achieving strong gender diversity, but we did not achieve the racial ethnic diversity to which we aspired. The external recruiters engaged for three positions, our Human Resources Department recruitment personnel, and hiring managers all sought diverse candidates. We reached out broadly within the church and beyond for referrals and recommendations and while we did identify some candidates, our efforts did not succeed in producing the results that we wanted. We recognize that our support systems were not as adequate for the task as we would have liked them to be.

The General Assembly Council is earnest in its resolve to address this situation and is initiating actions with this goal in mind. A project team is working on developing a more effective process for identifying racial ethnic candidates for the church. We recognize that we need to inspire greater assistance from groups and individuals who can both recommend and encourage qualified racial ethnic candidates. Human Resources is working to develop better methods for advertising positions and attracting a greater representation of applicants, and staff is looking at ways of utilizing racial ethnic networks within the church to promote opportunities for employment by the church. This may have been a missed opportunity, but it need not be a self-perpetuating legacy. If done right the changes that have resulted from this experience will make a real difference in the future.

The Synod of the Sun overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Thank Presbyterians throughout the denomination for their generous giving, prayers, and volunteer services in recovery efforts;
2. Thank, praise, and commend the Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) staff and volunteers for their huge contributions in recovery work; and
3. Affirm and endorse the financial plan developed by the presbyteries, synods, and PDA.

Rationale

Presbyterians throughout the General Assembly have been generous and gracious in responding to the 2005 Hurricanes Katrina, Rita, and Wilma with gifts of time, resources, and prayers.

Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA) has been and continues to be abundantly helpful in providing leadership and resources in the affected areas and in coordinating relief efforts throughout the denomination.

The PDA and the presbyteries and synods involved in recovery efforts recognize that the work of rebuilding is far from complete and have worked together to develop a financial response plan through 2011.

The Synod of the Sun and its eleven presbyteries have been thoroughly involved with and informed about recovery efforts on many levels. The range of involvement includes hurricanes that struck the Presbyteries of New Covenant and South Louisiana, the Presbytery of Arkansas’ hosting the PDA’s national call center, and the distribution of more than $800,000 of PDA funds and contributions for church staff salary support in affected congregations.

But many Presbyterians across the denomination are not aware of a disaster recovery meeting in Gulfport, Mississippi, in January 2008. Key persons from recovering presbyteries and synods gathered with PDA and GAC staff to share information. This group reviewed PDA expenditures from 2005 to the present and developed a plan for expenditures for recovery work through 2011. The plan indicates a need for an additional $1.5 million to address disaster relief needs.

Also, presbyteries and synods in the recovery areas are aware of information being written that is critical of PDA. The information accuses national staff of refusing to pay out funds and wants to force the immediate expenditures of all funds. The people in the affected areas believe that such a distribution of funds would be unwise and would jeopardize the recovery work outlined in the carefully developed plan of action adopted by all of the presbyteries and synods in the affected areas. If it were not for the good stewardship of the governing bodies involved and PDA in setting aside money, the long-term needs would not be met.

In light of the continuing pattern of mutual suspicion, intimidating litigation, and labor tension, despite some apparent improvements in worker safety, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008):

- 1. Direct that an appropriate program body of the General Assembly Council (GAC) continue to monitor the situation at the Tar Heel plant, consulting with a joint committee of persons from both presbyteries, possibly including persons of management and labor background, and reporting to the GAC itself in 2009.
- 2. Request that the General Assembly Council (GAC) make a report to the 219th General Assembly (2010), drawing from the consulting group, a staff liaison, and other research, and making recommendations, if warranted, concerning actions Presbyterians may take.
- 3. Commend the representatives of the presbyteries and the management and labor representatives for their willingness to engage in dialogue and provide information in order to obtain a better understanding of each other's perspectives and that of the church.

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2006 Referral: Item 09-02. Resolution on Smithfield Packaging, Inc.—From the Presbytery of New Hope (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 50, 51, 784–87).

Subject: Labor rights and working conditions at the major pork processing plant in Tar Heel, North Carolina, operated by Smithfield Foods, Inc.

Summary: The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) was requested to work with two presbyteries on a labor relations and workplace safety matter and to report back to the 218th General Assembly (2008). Meetings have been held with all parties (representatives of Smithfield Foods management, that of a subsidiary, Murphy Brown, the United Food and Commercial Workers Union and workers supportive of unionization, the North Carolina Council of Churches, and the Presbyteries of New Hope and Coastal Carolina). Relevant actions have been taken as recently as March 1 (by the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina). The plant has been visited and a recommendation developed.

1. Background

Item 09-02 from the 217th General Assembly (2006) read as follows:

The Presbytery of New Hope overtures the 217th General Assembly (2006) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to do the following:

1. Support justice for workers at Smithfield Packing by requesting that Smithfield Packing
  - a. obey the law;
  - b. stop the use of threats, intimidation, and violence against workers;
  - c. implement the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) orders to respect workers rights and assure safety in the workplace.

09 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL JUSTICE ISSUES

2. Direct that the Office of the General Assembly communicate this call for justice to
  - a. the North Carolina attorney general, the North Carolina Department of Labor, the U.S. attorney general, and the U.S. Department of Labor;
  - b. the major food chains—Harris-Teeter, Food Lion, Bi-Lo, Lowes Foods, Piggly-Wiggly, Walmart, Winn Dixie, Target; and
  - c. Joseph Luter III, CEO, Smithfield Foods, Inc, 200 Commerce St, Smithfield, VA 23430.

Rationale

Smithfield Packing Inc. is the largest pork producer and processor in the world, and the Smithfield Packing plant in Tar Heel, North Carolina, is the largest pork processing facility in the world, employing more than 5,000 workers and slaughtering more than 32,000 hogs a day.

Human Rights Watch, documented in “Blood, Sweat and Fear” (copyright 2004; available at <http://hrw.org/reports/2005/usa0105/> ) that Smithfield Packing has violated internationally recognized human rights standards by using intimidation, threats, and violence against workers and still continues to do so.

Human Rights Watch, in the same document, reported evidence showing that Smithfield Packing discourages workers from reporting workplace injuries; and seeking medical care from their family physician.

Evidence show that Smithfield Packing has a history of intimidating, threatening, and harassing workers who engage in organized activity to defend their labor rights, to improve their working conditions, and to ensure their well-being in the workplace.

A federal court in North Carolina ruled that Chief of Security Danny Priest violated the Ku Klux Klan Act for physically assaulting a pro-union worker and a union organizer after a union election in 1997.

The National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) found Smithfield Packing guilty of violating workers rights to organize a union and ordered Smithfield to obey the law and allow workers to exercise their legal rights and as a means to promote workplace safety without fear of retaliation or threats.

Smithfield Packing has repeatedly delayed and denied justice for Smithfield workers.

Smithfield Packing Inc. and Smithfield sub-contractor QSI Inc, were found guilty of using the company police to physically assault workers, cause the false arrest of a worker, and threaten bodily harm in retaliation for legal activities to protest working conditions, in violation of federal labor law.

The PC(USA) has a long historical record of being aligned with the poor and oppressed around the world and in our own country and of supporting worker rights and workplace safety. (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 784–85)

The General Assembly Social Justice Committee recommended approval. The committee had the following comment: “That the 217th General Assembly request New Hope Presbytery, in consultation with the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina, to inspect the Smithfield facility, speak with management, monitor elections, and report to the 218th General Assembly.”

Following a motion from the floor “to refer Item 09-02 to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy,” the action, guided by the Comment, was approved by a vote of 323-150, with 7 abstentions.

NOTE: At the General Assembly, in the Social Justice Committee, Dennis Pittman represented the Smithfield Company, the Reverend Mark Davidson, a commissioner from the Presbytery of New Hope, was overture advocate, and there were several union and worker representatives. Both the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) had provided advice and counsel memos supporting the overture; only ACREC’s representative took part in resourcing the committee. The committee had commissioners from both North Carolina presbyteries present and some discussion had to do with the fact that Tar Heel, where the plant is located, is in Coastal Carolina, while New Hope was the presbytery initiating action. Hence the comment recommending that the two presbyteries work together in follow-up. No funds were allocated by the General Assembly to ACSWP or any other entity along with the referral.

2. The Actions and Perspectives of the Presbyteries

a. The Presbytery of New Hope

The overture on Smithfield Foods originated in the Church of the Reconciliation in Chapel Hill, N.C., and the pastor of that church served as overture advocate at the General Assembly, but the text was developed by members of the Peace and Justice Committee of the presbytery from a variety of congregations. The group studied information from the North Carolina Council of Churches, which had endorsed the Justice for Smithfield campaign, from Human Rights Watch, from several other denominations, and from union-affiliated workers. Their digest of this information is reflected in the overture’s rationale. Members of the Presbytery of New Hope committee visited the Tar Heel plant before the General Assembly but after submission of the overture; they had originally sought a meeting with the company in 2005 and had also invited a minister-member of the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina to go with them (as it worked out, that person was unable to join them).

Following initial correspondence in the Fall 2006, a representative of ACSWP visited the Presbytery of New Hope on March 10–11, 2007, and found that the Peace and Justice Steering Team and several pastors to be strongly supportive of the overture. Barbara Zelter of the North Carolina Council of Churches also participated in that visit.

Representatives of the Presbytery of New Hope, including the executive presbyter, attended a May 8, 2007, “listening session” developed by the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina executive presbyter at the Graves Memorial Presbyterian Church.

Representatives of the Presbytery of New Hope, including the clerk of the presbytery, joined in the visit to the plant on November 12, 2007, which was followed by meetings with top management of Smithfield and with union representatives and supportive workers. The Presbytery of New Hope's representatives have made efforts to involve the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina on several occasions but have not wanted to condition their "witness for justice" on the involvement of persons representing the neighboring presbytery.

b. The Presbytery of Coastal Carolina

The clerk of the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina shared the action of the 217th General Assembly (2006) with his presbytery on October 7, 2006, noting his "opinion that the Presbytery of New Hope was assigned the primary responsibility for follow up to the assembly's action, as described in the approved comment, but that the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina would be called upon to consult with and assist New Hope in carrying out the tasks as described in the comment." The ACSWP has agreed that the comment served as a de facto task sheet, and that part of its role was to help the presbyteries work together.

The presbytery executive of the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina, in consultation with pastors from the Wallace and other churches, developed a "listening session" with Presbyterian managers from the Murphy Brown subsidiary of Smithfield on May 8, 2007. Two representatives of ACSWP attended this meeting, along with three guests from the Presbytery of New Hope, including the New Hope executive presbyter. As suggested by its title, this meeting consisted largely of the ACSWP and other church participants seated around a room listening while the corporate executives spoke from a central table. This was a very helpful, if somewhat one-way, sharing of perspectives, especially since the executives included the chief executive officer of Murphy Brown, himself a member of the Smithfield Board of Directors, and others at a high level in the firm. All were familiar with the General Assembly's statement although ACSWP staff indicated that formal notification to the company had been delayed in hopes that such a direct conversation could be held on the issues involved.

The church representatives included Hispanic missionaries from both presbyteries, both of which are sponsoring immigrant fellowships. In the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina, these fellowships include workers at the Tar Heel facility, though none were available for a discussion that May 8 evening. The hardships of workers were discussed, and this was prior to the Immigration Control and Enforcement (ICE) raids on the plant in the summer of 2007. Among the majority membership of the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina, most members involved with Smithfield are in management and some come from Presbyterian families long in the area.

Representatives of the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina, including its clerk and acting executive presbyter, joined in the visit to the Tar Heel plant and meetings with top management and, later, union representatives on November 12, 2007. Concerns had been raised, however, that the presbytery had not been consulted before the overture was approved by the Presbytery of New Hope. No meetings, to our knowledge, were held concerning Smithfield issues during 2006 or 2007, either in a social concerns committee or on the floor of the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina, but on March 1, 2008, that presbytery approved a resolution expressing the concern that they had not been consulted or informed at the outset when the Presbytery of New Hope was initiating its overture (Full text of resolution provided upon request by the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina or ACSWP). Neither ACSWP nor the Presbytery of New Hope feel the chronology summarized at that presbytery meeting was entirely accurate. In addition, representatives of neither body were invited to be present by the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina due to the press of business. (Note: Both presbyteries are large and meet only three times per year, and the Presbytery of Coastal Carolina is going through an executive presbyter interim period.)

3. A Summary of the Position of the Workers as Reflected by the Justice at Smithfield Campaign

Viewpoints of the workers are reflected partly in the presenting overture itself, which cites the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) finding, confirmed by the U.S. Court of Appeals, in favor of the union's position. The primary contention was that management (including its own company police force, now disbanded) had threatened, intimidated, and fired workers and otherwise hampered the secret ballot elections of 1994 and 1997. In 2000, an NLRB administrative law judge threw out the election results, but not until 2004 did the NLRB uphold that decision, which Smithfield then appealed. During the 217th General Assembly (2006), the U.S. Court of Appeals affirmed the NLRB decision authorizing another election, free of intimidation. The initial judge determined that Smithfield had committed many "egregious" labor law violations; and the U.S. Court of Appeals cited "the intense and widespread coercion prevalent at the Tar Heel facility."<sup>1</sup> The announcement that the company would no longer fight the most recent NLRB rulings, presented while the 217th General Assembly (2006) was in session, seemed both to substantiate the position of the workers' representatives, (as did national newspaper coverage at that time), and also indicate a change in the company's approach.

Injuries are a major concern of the workers and the union. On various occasions workers have signed petitions and otherwise protested injury rates at the plant, many of which may be linked to the speed of the cutting line where 8,000 hogs are disassembled each shift. This speed is intense. On the kill floor, the hogs move past workers every three to four seconds (Bob Herbert, "Where the Hogs Come First" The New York Times, June 15, 2006).<sup>2</sup> The types of injuries usual in slaughterhouses are cuts with the electric knives; lifting problems; repetitive motion disorders, and falls on floors and stairs covered with blood, internal fluids, and guts. The union cites a 2007 report by the Research Association of America that found “injuries had increased 200% from 2003 to 2006” (Summary Statement to PC(USA) on the Right of Smithfield Foods Inc Workers in Tar Heel, NC, to Organize a Union—Nov. 2007). In addition, former workers allege insufficient medical care (Packaged With Abuse, Research Associates of America, October 2006), termination following injury on the job (Summary Statement), and problems with workers’ compensation claims. In the report, “Workers’ Rights at Smithfield...” Human Rights Watch describes various techniques used by the company to deny workers’ compensation:

Employees described various company rationales to deny workers’ compensation, such as accusing workers of calling the rescue squad without calling the company first; of waiting to report an injury; of “lying” to a doctor about a work-related injury when the company’s injury report, written by the clinic staff, said the injury happened at home; of waiting a day to report an injury to avoid a drug test; of going to the hospital emergency room without permission, etc. ... Many workers’ accounts described companies maneuvering to put as many injuries as possible on regular medical insurance plans or short-term disability rather than workers’ compensation. (Workers’ Rights at Smithfield Foods in Tar Heel, N.C.—An Excerpt from the Human Rights Watch Report, Blood, Sweat, and Fear: Workers’ Rights in U.S. Meat and Poultry Plants, pp. 6–7).

Turnover is another issue. A high turnover rate is common in the industry, even in unionized plants, and is one factor cited by the union for high injury rates. This high turnover rate persists even though Smithfield’s own unionized plants are reported to pay somewhat higher wages than the Tar Heel plant. From its side, Smithfield notes that Tar Heel pays better than many other employers in the county and region—a region that has lost cotton, tobacco, and textiles to even lower-wage parts of the world. A company representative also maintained that Human Rights Watch had never actually visited the plant. The 2006 ACSWP advice & counsel memo on the overture noted that high turnover in a high unemployment area may be an indicator of harsh working conditions.

Another important issue for workers and the union is earning power and benefits. Tony Equale outlines the importance of the wage issue in his article, “By All Means Necessary,” September 1, 2007, published on the Website of the United Methodist Church, General Board of Church and Society:

So why does Smithfield resist unionization at its Tar Heel plant? That’s easy to answer. Just do the math: Starting wages at Tar Heel are around $9 an hour, and the highest paid make around $13. In the unionized plants, the starting pay is $12 /hr and the range goes up to $20 and higher. Even if you just stay with a $3 an hour difference across the board, not paying those three extra dollars each hour to 5000 workers saves Smithfield $30,000,000 per year. (Section “Smithfield,” 10th paragraph; note: these rates have been increased, partly to attract workers from as far away as South Carolina).

The wage disparity between unionized and non-union plants has a parallel in the disparity between the meatpacking industry wages and those in the general U.S. manufacturing sector. As unionization declined, wages in the meatpacking industry began declining in the 1980s. In 1983, for the first time, industry pay dropped below the U.S manufacturing average. Since that time, this decline has continued and even accelerated, falling to a point 15 percent lower in 1985, then 18 percent lower in 1990, and 24 percent lower by 2002 (“Workers’ Rights at Smithfield Foods...,” pp. 1–2).

Two other dynamics relate to the race of the workers at the plant. One involves a concern that the company may play off African American and Hispanic workers against each other (these are the two largest blocks of workers; white and Native American workers make up the remainder of the workforce). This situation was portrayed by Charlie LeDuff, a reporter who worked briefly at the plant (“At a Slaughterhouse, Some Things Never Die: Who Kills, Who Cuts, Who Bosses Can Depend on Race,” The New York Times, June 16, 2000). Duff outlined what it appeared to be the steering of certain racial groups into particular jobs at the Tar Heel plant. A superficial observation from the joint ACSWP and both presbytery delegations’ visit is that while African American and Hispanic workers seemed mixed throughout the plant, managerial and supervisory workers seemed disproportionately white.

The second major dynamic relates to the immigration status of employees. In the summer of 2007, a number of workers were arrested as undocumented aliens, some reportedly shipped to for-profit prisons in Georgia. Union supporters charged that many of the Hispanic workers arrested were strong union supporters (“Immigrant Crackdown Opens a Slaughterhouse’s Work Force,” by Steven Greenhouse, The New York Times, October 2, 2007). Company ID photos were used in identification: company officials noted that they themselves had to cooperate with the ICE (formerly, INS). However, the union’s concerns about company motivation were not without foundation. In fact, the 2000 NLRB administrative law judge’s decision indicated that the company had illegally threatened to call ICE (then the INS) to report immigrant workers if they chose to be represented by a union (“Workers’ Rights as Smithfield...,” p. 9)

Shortly after the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) delegation’s visit, on November 16, 2007, as many as 1,200 workers walked out—a very risky thing to do when one is not in a union. The union, in fact, disavowed involvement in the walk-out. Reports indicated that the workers were not solely motivated by the previous firing of Hispanic workers and the “no-match” letters sent to hundreds of employees, telling them that the Social Security numbers they use do not match the names held by the Social Security administration. According to the Hispanic missionaries and others, the company has used undocumented workers in the past. The number of Hispanic workers is now declining, and there are reportedly 1,000 fewer Hispanics in the plant as of October 2007.<sup>3</sup> These changing workforce numbers may indicate that the government’s pressure on companies and employees is working. The net result is higher turnover and thus more instability and possibly more injuries among the less experienced workers.

In assessing workers' views, it is worth noting that a decreasing share of the U.S. workforce is unionized and that this decline is a major contributing factor, according to an MIT study, behind stagnating real wages for American workers ("Inequality and Institutions in 20th Century America," Working Paper 07-17, MIT Department of Economics, Working Paper Series, by Frank Levy and Peter Temin, June 27, 2007). As noted above, the meatpacking industry is no exception. Eric Schlosser (author of Fast Food Nation) notes that, "In 1970 the typical American meatpacking worker earned about 20% more than the typical factory worker. Today he or she earns about 20% less."<sup>4</sup> It is also the case that despite long delays, the NLRB finally acted on the serious allegations that have characterized Smithfield's response to unionization in the past. Under the current administration, this is seen as a rare event and perhaps indicates notably aggressive corporate tactics used in the case. North Carolina has the lowest percentage of unionized workers in the United States, and this may have been a significant factor in the 1991–1992 decision to build the massive plant in a hard-hit rural area.

A final element of the union's efforts is the corporate campaign, implemented following the election defeats of 1994 and 1997 and designed to enlist allies in other parts of society. This campaign was a response to the union's perception of the negative climate in the plant. The organization implementing the campaign, "Justice at Smithfield," which is closely allied with the union, does not advocate a "boycott" of Smithfield (since it is partly unionized) but some selective purchasing of products produced in Tar Heel. The cumulative effect of countless worker testimonies and presentations, including those of several union organizers, has led to support from many groups, including religious groups: The National Baptist Convention, the Progressive National Baptist Convention, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, the United Church of Christ, the North Carolina Council of Churches, and most recently, the General Conference of the United Methodist Church (texts available from ACSWP). The Presbytery and ACSWP representatives appreciate the cooperation they received from union organizers and off-duty workers who met with our teams and provided information to us.

4. A Summary of the Position of Smithfield Foods, Inc.

The following summary reflects information from the Smithfield.com Website; materials provided by the corporation; and two significant conversations, one with senior management of Murphy Brown, the other with the president of the company, Joseph Luter IV, the chief corporate spokesperson, Dennis Pittman, and several other managers of the Tar Heel plant. The presbytery and ACSWP representatives appreciate the high-level cooperation they received from Smithfield senior leadership and the hospitality provided, including a guided tour of the Tar Heel facility. Given the support given by the General Assembly to significant criticism of the company's operations, we also appreciate the willingness of corporate leaders to meet with church representatives and the role that presbytery and congregation leaders and pastors played in helping these meetings happen.

The company disagrees profoundly with the union position and maintains that a "third party," as it terms the union, is not needed. Conditions at the plant are better than at many comparable facilities, accident and turnover rates are at least comparable, and the immigration issues the company recently faced are unavoidable. They point to what they perceive as self-serving behavior and propaganda on the part of the union, combined with an effort to denigrate company's efforts, such as criticism of the adequacy of the company's medical facility (for non-serious injuries). The company's 2006–2007 Corporate Social Responsibility report states that the medical facility provides doctor visits, x-rays, lab work, and prescriptions. In 2006, there were 8,000 visits and 48,000 prescriptions dispensed. (For its part, the union contends that work-related problems are not treated adequately with few staff being able to speak Spanish, lack of referrals to specialists, and lack of attention to workers' health complaints that may lead to lost time or recorded incidents.) The company discloses safety performance information that indicates slippage in two of three categories between 2004 and 2005, and improvement from 2005 to 2006, but data is aggregated for the entire company, and not broken down by sector, individual plant, or even by unionized and non-union facilities. The company reports that as of April 2006, 43 percent of its U.S. workforce was unionized with 18,100 workers in pork processing, and 2,400 in beef processing being covered by union contracts.

Workforce composition in 2006 showed that 35 percent of workers were female while women were 16.8 percent of officials and managers. Racial minorities composed 67.4 percent of workers, and 24.4 percent of officials and managers.

In the "listening session," some Smithfield representatives indicated that the company felt "singled out" by the church (to which the church's long involvement with companies through Mission Responsibility Through Investment and efforts like the Taco Bell Boycott on behalf of tomato workers were mentioned). Charitable works and other examples of good corporate citizenship were mentioned by local church members not employed by the company. The executives are also very aware of the competitive business situation, increasingly on a global basis, even if Smithfield is now the largest player in their region.

From a business standpoint, Smithfield is doing very well: $11 billion in sales in 2006, with profit rates higher than Hormel and other meat packing companies. Smithfield is expanding market share overseas, in places like China, where meat consumption has been growing. The company has expanded through acquisition not only in hog production (long a part of North Carolina culture on a decentralized basis) but turkey production. The Tar Heel location draws from pig nurseries all over the area and the company has sought to expand the already massive plant to accommodate more than the 32,000 pigs per day. The organization of the plant itself is focused on efficiency and necessarily on cleanliness (inspectors enter the facility regularly and at will).

In addition, the company is addressing ecological issues (largely beyond the purview of this set of discussions) due to water use and treatment of hog waste and meat by-products, as well as concerns from animal rights advocates and organic hog growers about concentrated living conditions of animals in “factory farms.” As part of a settlement in 2000, Smithfield contributed $15 million to agricultural research on the waste and water concerns; the company Website gives further information on environmental practices. With regard to the treatment of animals, Smithfield announced in March of 2007 that it was phasing out “gestation crates,” which severely confine pregnant sows throughout their pregnancies.

In discussion with top management at the Tar Heel plant, the company’s willingness to have another secret ballot election was reaffirmed. However, the alternative proposed by the union, the “check-off,” or “card check,” was seen as open to too much influence or pressure from the union when workers are off duty. In a way, the company representatives paint likely union behavior as the mirror of the coercive behavior that courts have found the company itself to have practiced. A letter after the November 2007 meeting contained extensive newspaper documentation of worker injury rates at a unionized poultry operation in Charlotte. The company’s clear message to potential union members: unions do not always help.

During some of the period in 2007 between the May and November meetings with the church, there were conversations and even negotiations between the company and union representatives. These focused on whether an agreed on period of “neutrality” could be allowed by the company at the workplace, in preparation for a secret ballot election. There was also consideration of what kind of observers and conflict specialists might help a genuine process (the Carter Center might be a model of this kind of observer role). From the company’s point of view, the Smithfield Justice campaign would also need to call off its allies from their constant criticism of the company. The question is partly one of how important the non-union position is to the company’s business model, another question is whether that centralized model itself is ecologically sustainable.

Shortly before the November 12 meeting, the company ended discussions with the union and filed suit against the union, its organizers, and some of its allies, alleging violations of racketeering and extortion law. While press coverage in some cases ridiculed the suit for comparing collective bargaining to extortion, and the company subsequently modified many of its charges of falsehood and other allegations, the suit has withstood an initial union motion for dismissal. Because this suit, especially in its unusually personal effort to criminalize individual union employees and discourage church and other civic group support, has effectively ended negotiations, ACSWP felt it important to get an outside opinion on its legal substance. An opinion by John Borger of Faegre & Benson of Minneapolis on the First Amendment issues involved is available from the committee’s Website: the opinion suggests that the company’s legal strategy does not seem well-grounded. Given the company’s history of litigating and appealing all NLRB decisions, the question is whether this suit is primarily another form of attempted intimidation and delay of a credible and good-faith voting process.

5. A Summary of the Position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The church’s policy in favor of “industrial reconciliation” goes back into the early 20th century and is not based in an idealized picture of harmony between management and labor. Rather, in accordance with the Reformed understanding of sin and unchecked power, the church recognized that unions helped balance the power of management even in times of weak government social protections. The church has also recognized that by improving wages, working conditions, and benefits, unions have helped millions of Americans attain a foothold in the lower middle class. We quote here briefly from several General Assembly statements:

- The 98th General Assembly (1958) encouraged business and labor leaders to recognize “... their responsibility for the well being of persons in such matters as sufficient wages, health, housing and other living conditions . . .” and “to deal realistically and forthrightly with injustice and corruption of any kind . . .” (Minutes, PCUS, 1958, Part I, p. 226).

- The 183rd General Assembly (1977) “... Reaffirm[ed] the actions of previous General Assemblies supporting the right of every employable person to a job, decent and safe working conditions, and a salary adequate to meet at least his or her basic needs” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1977, Part I, p. 126).

- The 120th General Assembly (1980) said: “... In view of our theological understanding of economic and social justice we affirm for all persons the right to be paid adequately and treated with fairness and dignity. ... In view of our theological understanding of liberation, justice, community, and the reality of sin, we affirm the right of all workers, except those on whom national or community security depends, to join labor organizations and participate in collective bargaining” (Minutes, PCUS, 1980, Part I, pp. 229–30).

- The 214th General Assembly (2002) “...encourage[d] members of the PC(USA) to contact legislators urging support of the family farmer/ranchers, farm and processing plant workers, and equitable world trade policy” (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 23, 535).
- The policy statement, God’s Work in Our Hands: Employment, Community, and Christian Vocation affirms that:

Inequalities in compensation and working conditions demand the strictest scrutiny. As our workforce becomes increasingly diverse, these concerns become even more urgent. Employment for persons who have suffered the injustices of prejudice and bias is the object of laws requiring affirmative action. A political, economic, and social system that translates unalterable human differences—race, ethnicity, gender, age, and physical ability—into occasion for oppression, exploitation, is incompatible with Reformed theology. . . . All conditions of paid employment, including compensation and working conditions, should sustain and nurture the dignity of individuals, the well-being of households and families, the social cohesiveness of communities, and the integrity of the global environment. Justice demands that social institutions guarantee all persons the opportunity to participate actively in economic decision making that affects them. All workers—including undocumented, migrant, and farm workers—have the right to choose to organize for the purposes of collective bargaining (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 59, 426).

Given the racial and ethnic composition of the Tar Heel plant workforce, we cannot ignore the role that racial patterns may play in the social relations and expectations of all parties. In documents such as Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community, approved by the 211th General Assembly (1999), the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has committed to speaking out against racism in all its forms as sin. The position of the church in this area was well-underlined by the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns at the General Assembly, and a representative from ACREC participated in the meeting with top management on November 12, 2007.

At this time, the situation appears to qualify for the type of action envisioned by The Confession of 1967, when it says:

In each time and place, there are particular problems and crises through which God calls the Church to act. The church, guided by the Spirit, humbled by its own complicity and instructed by all attainable knowledge, seeks to discern the will of God and learn how to obey in these concrete situations.... For workers on the cutting line, they must finish their trim work every 17 seconds (“At a Slaughterhouse, Some Things Never Die; Who Kills, Who Cuts, Who Bosses Can Depend on Race,” by Charlies Leduff, The New York Times, June 16, 2000). ## Item 09-20

That the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Affirm the Declaration of Principles for a Presidential Executive Order on Prisoner Treatment, Torture and Cruelty, as developed by The National Religious Campaign Against Torture, The Center for Victims of Torture, and Evangelicals for Human Rights, which states:

Though we come from a variety of backgrounds and walks of life, we agree that the use of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment against prisoners is immoral, unwise, and un-American.

In our effort to secure ourselves, we have resorted to tactics which do not work, which endanger US personnel abroad, which discourage political, military, and intelligence cooperation from our allies, and which ultimately do not enhance our security.

Our President must lead our nation back to our core principles. We must be better than our enemies, and our treatment of prisoners captured in the battle against terrorism must reflect our character and values as Americans.

Therefore, we believe the President of the United States should issue an Executive Order that provides as follows:

The "Golden Rule." We will not authorize or use any methods of interrogation that we would not find acceptable if used against Americans, be they civilians or soldiers.

One national standard. We will have one national standard for all US personnel and agencies for the interrogation and treatment of prisoners. Currently, the best expression of that standard is the US Army Field Manual, which will be used until any other interrogation technique has been approved based on the Golden Rule principle.

The rule of law. We will acknowledge all prisoners to our courts or the International Red Cross. We will in no circumstance hold persons in secret prisons or engage in disappearances. In all cases, prisoners will have the opportunity to prove their innocence in ways that fully conform to American principles of fairness.

Duty to protect. We acknowledge our historical commitment to end the use of torture and cruelty in the world. The US will not transfer any person to countries that use torture or cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment.

Checks and balances. Congress and the courts play an invaluable role in protecting the values and institutions of our nation and must have and will have access to the information they need to be fully informed about our detention and interrogation policies.

Clarity and accountability. All US personnel—whether soldiers or intelligence staff—deserve the certainty that they are implementing policy that complies fully with the law. Henceforth all US officials who authorize, implement, or fail in their duty to prevent the use of torture and ill-treatment of prisoners will be held accountable, regardless of rank or position.

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate [~~this action and the related positions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on issues related to torture~~] to the president of the United States, the major candidates for the presidency, and to others in the federal government charged with oversight of the policies and practices of interrogations [this action and the related positions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) on issues related to torture].

3. Encourage individuals, congregations, and middle governing bodies to lift up our commitment to human rights, the elimination of torture, and to ethical standards in interrogation.

4. Direct the Peacemaking Program to identify or create devotional, study, worship, and homiletic resources, and make them available on the Web so that individuals, congregations, and middle governing bodies can lift up our opposition to torture and our commitment to human rights and ethical standards in interrogation.

Comment: The 218th General Assembly (2008) commends the 217th General Assembly (2006) for their action in approving "Human Rights in a Time of Terrorism and Torture" (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 867ff).

Rationale

This resolution builds on the PC(USA)'s long history of opposition to inhumane interrogation and torture and support for the rule of law and justice, most recently expressed in the approval of the 217th General Assembly (2006) of the resolution, "Human Rights in a Time of Terrorism and Torture" (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 867ff), and the overture, "A Call for a Commission of Inquiry" (Ibid, p. 783). This resolution reaffirms and builds on these actions by setting forth basic moral guidelines on these matters for current and future government officials.

This action is timely because of the juncture we are at in the history of our nation and because we have an opportunity to join with a multitude of faithful people from many traditions who have joined together in outrage at abuse and in hope for a return to what is best in our nation.

The National Religious Campaign Against Torture is a growing interfaith coalition of 210 denominations and faith groups including the PC(USA). The Center for Victims of Torture is a nonprofit organization working to end torture and heal the victims. Evangelicals for Human Rights is a nondenominational group that works with the National Association of Evangelicals and was specifically founded to end torture. These groups represent the wide consensus throughout the diversity of the faith community that torture is always wrong.

The Declaration of Principles for a Presidential Executive Order on Prisoner Treatment, Torture and Cruelty was written to express this to those at the highest levels of government who are responsible for creating and implementing policies and practices regarding interrogation. This statement recognizes the need for moral clarity by government leaders, if we are to prevent abuse and promote accountability. Therefore, the religious community, through these organizations, has worked for more than two years to articulate the basic principles that we want to see adopted and articulated by the next president as the understanding of how the United States conducts interrogations.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-20

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-20—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The ACSWP supports Item 09-20 and notes that it is in harmony with the policy statement, “Human Rights in a Time of Terrorism and Torture,” approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006) (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 867ff). Therefore, ACSWP advises that this item include a statement commending the action of the 217th General Assembly (2006).

The PC(USA) is a participating member of the National Religious Campaign Against Torture, an interfaith initiative, and the Stated Clerk is a signatory to the declaration of principles.

Item 09-21

[The assembly approved Item 09-21 with amendment. See pp. 54, 55.]

Commissioners’ Resolution. On Local Enforcement of National Immigration Laws That Adversely Affect Local Congregations.

That the 218th General Assembly (2008) does the following:

1. Declares that the common practice of police officers working in collaboration with Federal government institutions to enforce immigration laws represents a dangerous situation for families and the community in general.
2. Declares that the raids and road blocks near churches are unjust and represent a violation to people’s right to worship.
3. Denounces the suffering and hurting of thousands of young children and parents, which is the product of the separation during deportations.
4. Denounces the injustice and the lack of standards in the detention centers.
5. Deplores hate speech against immigrants in public arenas.
6. States that the PC(USA) believes that all humans should have access to basic human needs like health, education, and housing.
7. Calls upon churches, presbyteries, and synods to closely work with youth who are living with a sense of hopelessness due to lack of a legal status.

[8. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate these declarations in writing to the Congress and the president of the United States.

[9. Encourage Presbyterians to advocate for the fair and humane treatment of all persons by law enforcement officials in their local and state governments.]

Rationale

Actions of the General Assemblies in 2004 and 2006 promoted peace and a better understanding of issues regarding immigration. Recent developments in cities all over the country are evidence that attacks to the human dignity and a growing sentiment of rejection toward the immigrants continues to be a problem. Only a few churches and presbyteries are intentionally involved in denouncing the daily reality of thousands of church members that are living in fear.

Justice to the immigrant would involve:

- Recognizing his/her contributions to society;
- Making possible the basic needs for safety, shelter, food, and health.

The U.S.A. is a nation with strong roots in justice for all, including the immigrants, with the purpose to live in harmony and peace. As members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) we understand that justice is a Christian value that we have received through Jesus Christ, therefore, we are committed to preach, teach, and promote justice. We are called to be part of the solution to the suffering and pain in our community, and with courage proclaim our beliefs beyond any political, economic, religious, or cultural interest. We are called to be a voice for those that are not being heard and a beacon of light for those without hope.

We read in Deuteronomy 10:17–19, “For the Lord your God is a God of gods and Lord of lords, the great God, mighty and awesome, who is not partial and takes no bribe, who executes justice for the orphan and the widow, and loves the strangers, providing them food and clothing. You shall also love the stranger, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt.”

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-21

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-21—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 09-21 be approved.

Rationale

The resolution rightly refers to recent General Assembly policy statements that call for advocacy and welcome for all immigrants. Previous General Assemblies have frequently reaffirmed the church’s call to be a “voice for the voiceless” and to provide welcome for the stranger.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a “Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the U.S.” which called upon the members of the PC(USA) to:

- a. Advocate the establishment by law of a comprehensive legalization program for undocumented persons already living and working in the United States.
- b. Advocate the reform of current immigration policies and procedures to ensure a more timely and humane process, with special attention to family reunification and to those persons who have been waiting for their immigrant visas and for naturalization.
- c. Adamantly oppose the exploitation of any and all workers as a violation of the humane and just treatment due to all children of God. ... (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 738)

Further, the 217th General Assembly (2006) approved, “On Advocacy and Welcome for All Immigrants,” which:

1. Reaffirm[ed] the 216th General Assembly (2004)’s “Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the U.S.”
2. Affirm[ed] that our denomination—mindful of the current realities and threats to our belief system—not sway from our solidarity with, and pledge of service to, all of our brothers and sisters regardless of their race, creed, color, nationality, or residency status.
3. Affirm[ed] those Presbyterian congregations and presbyteries that are already standing alongside immigrants and are actively engaged in acts of compassion, empowerment, and advocacy.

4. Challenge[ed] each Presbyterian congregation and presbytery to embrace a comprehensive approach to “advocacy and welcome” for immigrants that includes, at the very minimum

a. an opportunity for hard-working immigrants who are already contributing to this country to come out of the shadows, regularize their status upon satisfaction of reasonable criteria, and, over time, pursue an option to become lawful permanent residents and eventually United States citizens;

b. reforms in our family-based immigration system to significantly reduce waiting times for separated families who currently wait many years to be reunited;

c. the creation of legal avenues for workers and their families who wish to migrate to the U.S. to enter our country and work in a safe, legal, and orderly manner with their rights fully protected; and ... (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 880)

Additionally, commissioners are referred to Item 09-11 “A Resolution to Study Immigration Detention in the United States,” which directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to “study and monitor detention in relation to immigration in the United States, giving attention to the experiences of women and children detained and affected.” This new study on detention will address several concerns lifted up by the commissioners, including the concern for families.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-21

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-21—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) concurs with the Advice and Counsel from the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns and further advises that Item 09-21 be approved by adding the following recommendations:

[“8. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate these declarations in writing to the Congress and the president of the United States.”]

[“9. Encourage Presbyterians to advocate for the fair and humane treatment of all persons by law enforcement officials in their local and state governments.”]

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 09-21

Advice and Counsel on Item 09-21—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 09-21 deals with social justice issues and immigration.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises approval of Item 09-21.

The ACWC appreciates the wider context of the complexities of the immigration issue and supports practical ways to show justice and compassion to immigrants in the United States. Recommendations 3 and 4 of this item relate to Item 9-11 that highlights an increase in immigration detention in the United States which negatively impacts the lives of thousands of women and their children. Item 9-11 is a practical way to address several of these issues of serious concern. The ACWC shares the concerns lifted up in this item that reflect the hardship and injustices being faced by families from deportation and detention.

Item 09-Info

A. Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy Agency Summary

1. Assigned Responsibilities: Strengthening Presbyterian Social Witness

Social witness is part of what it means for the church to be “salt” and “light” in the world today.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), as a servant of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), develops, interprets, and monitors policies that encourage and challenge the Church and society to reflect and act in faithful response to God’s call to do justice. (Mission Statement, approved October 2002 in El Paso, Texas)

In every age, the Spirit calls on the church to discern afresh God’s redemptive purpose in our particular time and place in history. The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s work is to discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in relation to contemporary society. In this work, the ACSWP and its task forces draw upon a great wealth of resources:

- the voices of the biblical text;
- the wisdom of theological discourse;
- the guidance of the Reformed confessions;
- the tradition of past policy statements;
- the insights of sociopolitical disciplines;
- the advice of members and all governing bodies of the church;
- the insights of people who are poor, victims of existing policies, and those who have not had a voice in councils of the church; and
- the counsel of ecumenical partners. (Minutes, 1993, Part I, p. 769).

Social witness can occur at many different points: in a church session, in a presbytery, in an advocacy group, in the participation of Christians in mission, in a meeting of the ecumenical church, in an individual Christian's brave refusal to "go along" with injustice.

For Presbyterians, however, decisions about the church's social witness are made by persons elected to serve in governing bodies (session, presbytery, synod, and General Assembly). As councils of the church meet, the elected persons are commissioned "... not simply to reflect the will of the people, but rather to seek together to find and represent the will of Christ ..." (Book of Order, G-4.0301d). The advisory committee's structure and function go back to 1936 when "consecrated" and justice-oriented persons from the Boards of Christian Education and National Missions were elected to a Social Education and Action Committee.

In providing service and resources to meet the needs of congregations, middle governing bodies, and the General Assembly, ACSWP members find guidance in the mission statement quoted above. Theologically grounded ethical reflection is part of the salt and light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The ACSWP engages with the grassroots in assisting the General Assembly to discern what it means to proclaim and embody the Gospel in a world that remains too grim for too many. At the same time, the committee's membership contains persons with expertise in theology, social ethics, and various other disciplines, approximately half of whom hold Ph.D.s.

Making a personal social witness begins with very individual ways of growing and developing as a Christian—prayerfully studying the Scriptures, being inspired by Jesus, the prophets, and courageous stands of the church, gaining insight from past ethical witness, connecting one's faith with others in the Christian community, and then being faithful in the world beyond the church. The ACSWP seeks to be a partner in the ministry of reconciliation, for "each member [who] is the church in the world ..." (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.38).

The churchwide work of the ACSWP is based on ethical guidance from the Scriptures, The Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order. The 1993 General Assembly policy statement, Why and How the Church Makes a Social Policy Witness (OGA-93-019), provides extensive documentation of key biblical passages and is a useful document in congregational interpretation of the ACSWP and its mission.

All of those biblical texts have a common theme. The Gospel says that to confess Jesus Christ as Lord is to believe that God can and has overcome the powers of sin in the world. Christians do not work alone, but join the Lord Jesus Christ who is already at work in our world. John Calvin said that social concern, expressed by action on behalf of our neighbors, is a central part of the faith. Our historic confessions, the work of theologians, and the actions of 217 General Assemblies have reaffirmed that message. Our faithfulness as Reformed Christians means action.

Procedures and Personnel

In support of the work of the assembly, the ACSWP is given direct access to the assembly as it meets biennially. Between sessions of the assembly, the ACSWP also assists the General Assembly Council (GAC), the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), and other agencies of the church as their work involves the development and interpretation of social witness policy.

The committee carries out its responsibilities in five major ways. They are the

1. development and recommendation of new social witness and policy for approval by the General Assembly;
2. interpretation and communication of the General Assembly's social witness and policy, both to the church and the world at large;

3. rendering of advice and counsel to the entities and governing bodies of the church on matters of social witness policy throughout the year;
4. rendering of advice and counsel to the General Assembly when it meets as a governing body; and
5. monitoring peace and justice concerns per mandates from the General Assembly.

The ACSWP develops and recommends new social witness and policies primarily in response to referrals from the General Assembly and its entities, and in a manner consistent with the Manual of the General Assembly, “On Forming Social Policy.” This policy development requires depth of theological reflection, breadth of input, and diversity of participation. Before a policy statement is approved, extensive consultation is mandated at all stages of development. Thus, the committee’s work is connected to the concerns of Presbyterians gathered in worshiping and serving communities across the land.

The committee’s advice and counsel group carries out the task of providing advice and counsel at the meeting of the General Assembly. This group of elected committee members, together with other staff and resource persons from several General Assembly Council entities, advises commissioners in assembly committees and other entities about social policies applicable to issues before the assembly. It may also comment on the need or direction for future social policy. Advice and counsel is provided throughout the meeting, through “Advice and Counsel Memoranda,” by oral testimony before assembly committees, and informally.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) consists of twelve members, nine of whom are at-large members elected by the General Assembly from the whole church and three who are General Assembly Council members. Members are: Gloria Albrecht, Detroit, Michigan; Donna C. Bradley, Tucson, Arizona; Dianne L. Briscoe (vice-chair), Denver, Colorado; Charles F. Easley Sr., Atlanta, Georgia; B. Gordon Edwards (chair), Stillwater, Oklahoma; Esperanza Guajardo, San Antonio, Texas; Ronald J. Kernaghan, Pasadena, California; Lewis S. Mudge, Berkeley, California; William Saint, Fairfax, Virginia; and Jack M. Terry, Minneapolis, Minnesota. In the fall of 2006, Nile Harper, an at-large member from Fridley, Minnesota, resigned from the committee. The following spring, Larry I. Palmer, an at-large member from Louisville, Kentucky, resigned from the committee. In the fall of 2007, the Moderator of the 217th General Assembly (2006) appointed Marsha Fowler, Altadena, California, and John C. Knapp, Atlanta, Georgia, to fill the positions vacated by Harper and Palmer. Staffing for the committee includes Christian Iosso, coordinator; Belinda M. Curry, associate; and Bonnie M. Hoff, senior administrative assistant.

2. Accomplishments

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) members and staff make themselves available for interpretive events as requested and as time allows. The committee welcomes inquiries through its office in Louisville. All governing bodies, churches, and members are encouraged to use the “Presbyterian Social Witness Policy Compilation,” which contains the core of the assemblies’ social policy statements since 1946. It is revised regularly to meet the needs of the church and can be downloaded from the worldwide web at (www.pcusa.org/acswp).

The ACSWP meets following each General Assembly, to discern and prioritize its work; periodically between the assemblies, to review progress on papers and projects; and in January before an assembly, to edit and approve final drafts for submission to the assembly. This year the committee has prepared one new policy statement, an ecumenical statement, and seven resolutions to strengthen current social witness policies.

- Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness
- A Social Creed for the Twenty-First Century
- Costly Lessons of the Iraq War
- From Homelessness to Hope: Constructing Just, Sustainable Communities for All God’s People
- God’s Work in Women’s Hands: Pay Equity and Just Compensation
- Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights, and Electoral Reform
- Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future
- The Power to Change: U.S. Energy Policy and Global Warming
- Resolution on Human Rights in Colombia

In preparation of this year's major proposed policy statement, the Task Force on "Serious Mental Illness" completed its work in the spring of 2007. This task force developed the proposed new policy and recommendations for the church to work for justice with persons living with mental illness, within both the church and the wider social order. The ACSWP took ownership of the task force's report, "Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness," at its summer 2007 meeting. A synod consultation on this report was held in the fall of 2007. Fifteen of the sixteen synods were represented at this event. Most of the synod consultation recommendations were incorporated into the mental illness report.

The committee's work on updating "The Nature and Value of Human Life," a 1981 study paper developed by the Presbyterian Church in the United States, is progressing forward. At its winter 2008 meeting, the committee discussed holding consultations across the church to obtain a diversity of theological and ethical viewpoints on the complex issues concerning this topic. The committee will submit a report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

The ACSWP continues to explore ways to use the new Web technologies to enhance the communal conversation and consensus-building that strengthens our shared social witness.

In 2006, with a preface by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, the ACSWP published and sent to all congregations the resolution against torture entitled, Human Rights in a Time of Terrorism (PDS 68-600-06-002). In addition, the committee assisted the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) in the publication of four other reports: the policy statement on Living into the Body of Christ: Towards Full Inclusion of People with Disabilities (PDS OGA-06-091), A Reformed Understanding of Usury for the Twenty-First Century (PDS OGA-06-088), A Report on Economic Security for Older Adult (PDS OGA-06-089), and Resolution on Just Globalization: Justice, Ownership, and Accountability (PDS OGA-06-090). These resources can be downloaded at <http://www.pcusa.org/oga/publications> or <http://www.pcusa.org/acswp/>.

The ACSWP sponsored globalization consultations in Illinois in May 2007, and New York in January 2008. These will contribute to the development of study material with diverse viewpoints on globalization to go with the 2006 policy and with our study, as members of WARC, of the ACCRA Confession. The committee also convened a consultation on the Iraq War and Muslim-Christian peacemaking work at Stony Point in September of 2007.

The committee has developed a DVD to promote the new ecumenical "social creed" for the 21st century—an action item before this General Assembly and other resources, including a prayer book, scholarly essays, and an interpretive booklet.

The ACSWP works collaboratively with the six mission and ministry areas of the General Assembly Council (GAC), other entities of the GAC, and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA). The ACSWP has liaisons from the Peace and Justice area, and from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC). When possible, the committee spends time with local church members, relevant presbytery committees, and with ecumenical members during its meetings. Such opportunities occurred in 2006 and 2007. One of the committee's meetings was held at the Presbyterian UN Office, for example, and included both a hearing on human rights and genocide, and a reception later with thirty local pastors and church members. In addition, the committee seeks creative ways to support the ministries of the Presbyterian theological institutions and colleges. Last year, the committee made available 100 complimentary copies of the Resolution on Just Globalization to Columbia Theological Seminary (CTS) in Decatur, Georgia, to distribute to the 2007 CTS Colloquium participants. Issues concerning the ecological crisis were the focus of this event.

The committee assists in organizing an annual gathering of the Theological Educators for Presbyterian Social Witness (TEPSW). This group is composed primarily of Christian ethicists currently or formerly serving in seminaries and other educational institutions related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Since the last General Assembly, the committee assisted with two such gatherings. In the fall of 2006, the TEPSW met at Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, New Jersey. The fall 2007 meeting was held on the campus of Union Theological Seminary & Presbyterian School of Christian Education, Richmond, Virginia. The location of the 2008 meeting will be the Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Louisville, Kentucky.

The ACSWP will focus on emerging social witness issues and future priorities at its summer meeting. Other responses by the committee to General Assembly work may be found in the responses to referrals report.

B. Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) Agency Summary

"The Lord is a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble." (Ps. 9:9)

"The Spirit told me to go with them and not to make a distinction between them and us." (Acts 11:12)

... [Be] doers of the word, and not merely hearers ..." (Jas. 1:22)

1. Introduction

The context of women's advocacy is a human situation where women experience injustice because they are women. Grounded in communal faith in "God [who] liberated the people of Israel from oppression . . . [and] covenanted with Israel . . . that they might do justice . . ." (Book of Order, G-3.0101b) and motivated by painful recognition of sexism within and without, the Presbyterian church explicitly articulated in the "Articles of Agreement" its commitment to work against gender-based discrimination. The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) is a contemporary fulfillment of this promise. Created by the mandate of the 205th General Assembly (1993) at the recommendation of the Report of the Task Force on Shape and Form, ACWC is charged with the responsibility of assisting the church to give full expression to the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 . . . monitor[ing] and evaluat[ing] policies, procedures, programs, and resources regarding the way in which they impact the status and position of women in the church . . . and advocat[ing] for full inclusiveness and equity in all areas of the life and work of the church in society [as a whole]. (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 262)

2. Assigned Responsibilities

The ACWC's assigned functions are delineated in the GAC Manual of Operations (Appendix I, EV, Section VIII.B.), and they include:

- Preparing policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on women's concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or on its own initiative;
- Advising the General Assembly Council on matters of women's concerns including statements concerning pressing issues that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly;
- Providing advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners' resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of women's concerns;
- Assisting the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on women's concerns and provide information to the church as requested;
- Providing the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on women's concerns;
- Monitoring the implementation of women's policies and programs relative to women's concerns; and,
- Through advocacy maintaining a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of women's concerns.

The ACWC is a function of the Office of the Executive Director, General Assembly Council, and connects to it through the executive administrator, though its direct staffing is provided by the associate of women's advocacy in the Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries/PW ministry area. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly. The ACWC has organized itself with a leadership team of three co-chairs: two serve as corresponding members to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council respectively. A member of ACWC is a voting member of the Mission Responsibility Through Investment committee (MRTI). There are twelve members of the committee, ten members are nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly. They are chosen based on their individual qualifications and do not represent any constituencies. Members who left the committee in June 2006 were: Allison Seed (General Assembly Council), Dean Foose, Lillian Oats (Presbyterian Women), Ani Lelea, and Aleida Jernigan. Members who joined the committee in June 2006 were Mary Carter, Maria Cardenas Baez, Aisha Brooks-Lytle, Louise Davidson (Presbyterian Women), and Manley Olson (General Assembly Council). Two members resigned during this reporting period—Aisha Brooks-Lytle, in late 2006, citing life circumstances that did not allow her to fully participate (in her letter she cited a lack of understanding what the time requirements of the committee were before her election from the floor); and Mary Carter, in early 2007, due to a diagnosis that prevented her from completing her term. In November 2007, two members were appointed by the Reverend Joan Gray, Moderator of the 217th General Assembly (2006), as recommended by the General Assembly Nominating Committee—the Reverend Dr. Gay Byron and Belinda Rice. Their first meeting with ACWC was January 2008.

a. 2006–2007: ACWC Met Three Times

(1) August 3–6, 2006, in Boise, Idaho

- Visits were made throughout southwestern Idaho and southeastern Oregon, addressing healthcare, mental health and social services, domestic violence services, and banking as it affects family farms;
- Member orientation, Website updates, and generative conversations about the work of the committee;

- Emerging issues were discussed and prioritized for work during the two years between General Assemblies and three workgroups were formed: Health and Human Sexuality, Rural/Urban Issues, and Status of Women/Language;
- Jerri Rodewald was elected as co-moderator to fill the one year unexpired vacancy left when Lillian Oats was not re-elected; and,
- Adeline DeCastro and Jerri Rodewald were elected to the Women of Color Consultation Task Force.

(2) October 26–28, 2006, in Washington, DC

- Met with the Reverend Elenora Giddings Ivory and other members of the staff of the Washington Office, addressing criminal justice, domestic violence prevention and education, school crisis response programs, empowering victims of crime, and reproductive health issues;
- Health and Human Sexuality workgroup distributed a letter to all Presbyterian members of Congress stating PC(USA)'s policy on women's reproductive rights and health care;
- Absentee policy was adopted by ACWC;
- Agreed to work with ACSWP in developing the pay equity resolution; and,
- Jerri Rodewald, Terry Alexander, Rebecca Harrison, and Jack Terry were appointed to a communication subcommittee.

(3) February 15–17, 2007, in Louisville Kentucky;

- Elder Jerri Rodewald elected to serve a full term as co-chair, term to begin in August 2007;
- Staff guests: Peggie Blenman, HR director, and the Reverend Dr. Marcia Myers, director, Office of Vocation;
- Forum presented jointly to ACWC and ACREC focused on post-Katrina issues;
- Communications subcommittee met with designer, Dana McMahan, to scope the new Website;
- Health and Human Sexuality workgroup held three-part educational session with guest speaker, the Reverend Dee Dale (MCC);
- Status/Language workgroup met with Research Services; and
- ACSWP coordinator, the Reverend Dr. Christian Iosso, updated ACWC on work currently being done by them.

b. 2007–2008: ACWC Met Three Times

(1) June 6–8, 2007, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

- Met with the Reverend Joan Gray, Moderator, 217th General Assembly (2006); the Reverend Curtis Kearns, executive administrator (GAC), Board of Pensions executives and appropriate staff, and a Presbyterian Historical Society representative who provided an educational session;
- Consulted with the General Assembly Nominating Committee: the Reverend Cindy Edwards, GANC member and contact for ACWC; and Valerie Small, staff;
- Attorney Julia Thorne, manager of Immigration Services (PC(USA)) provided information and continuing education regarding immigration issues in preparation for the October meeting;
- Health and Human Sexuality working group hosted a education program on gender with guest speaker, Chris Paige;
- Consulted with Joel Hanisek, UN representative, and Jonathan Crooms, young adult intern, Presbyterian United Nations Office, about international gender justice issues; and,

- Met with the Reverend Dr. Joseph Small, director, Theology, Worship, and Education ministry to receive an update on several items coming to that office out of the 217th General Assembly (2006).

(2) October 18–22, 2007, in Merida, Yucatan, Mexico;

- Met jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) for large sections of the educational and cultural portions of the meeting—focus of these sessions to examine what pushes immigration to the US, the a/effects on communities in Mexico and the Presbyterian Church of Mexico;
- Visited San Pablo Presbyterian Theological Seminary and Chichen Itza;
- Participated in a listening tour of Dzan, Yucatan, Mexico, a primarily Mayan community where we interacted with villagers and were hosted by municipal leaders and the nonprofit organization, IndeMaya;
- Approved the new logo for ACWC;
- Jointly reviewed the revised Form of Government, drafted letter for FOG Task Force, and appointed joint working group with ACREC to schedule a follow-up conversation; and,
- Approved the ongoing work of the working groups to develop final proposals for action at the 218th General Assembly (2008).

(3) January 24–26, 2008 in Louisville, Kentucky

- Leadership Team: representatives from ACWC and ACREC leadership met with Karen Schmidt, deputy executive director for Communications and Funds Development, and Dianna Ott, coordinator, Creative Services;
- Met jointly with ACREC and Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) in two sessions;
  - Discussion with the Reverend Dr. Cliff Kirkpatrick, Stated Clerk, regarding denominational issues and celebrated his service;
  - Joint committee work also saw discussion about the assembly with guests Vernon Broyles, Office of the General Assembly, and Nancy Hamilton, GAC executive associate; and,
  - Extensive review of actions being taken by the three committees to the 218th General Assembly (2008);
- Working Groups perfected recommendations for ACWC report to General Assembly regarding:
  - Immigration Detention; Trafficking of women; Beginning process for extensive research project on the status of women in the PC(USA); and, persons to recommend as committee resource people to the 218th General Assembly (2008);
- Reviewed and adopted narrative report and the pay equity resolution to be jointly submitted with ACSWP to the 218th General Assembly (2008);
- Selection of the Advice and Counsel team and resource persons;
- Welcomed newly appointed ACWC members, the Reverend Dr. Gay Byron and Belinda Rice, to fill vacancies in the class of 2010;
- Elected Elder Adeline DeCastro as co-chair to a two-year term to begin August 2008;
- Recognized outgoing elected members with thanks, to Karen Breckenridge, Nancy Neal, and Manley Olsen (GAC); and,
- Participated in Presbyterian Center worship celebrating the life of Dr. Martin Luther King.

4. Highlights

a. Status of Women/Language

The work group focusing on the Status of Women and Language had many ongoing projects this year. We have monitored the work being done by different entities as instructed by the 217th General Assembly (2006), including the creation of an E-hymnal and the report concerning ordination of Christian educators. We communicated with PC(USA) seminaries and leaders to encourage the use of inclusive and expansive language. We commissioned the Presbyterian Panel, in November 2007 (see www.pcusa.org/research/panel), to gather information regarding the attitudes and assumptions toward women's leadership in the church. We also reviewed this data and concluded that an extensive study on women in the church would be beneficial to our work of advocating for justice within the church. The study will benefit the whole church as it will set a baseline for comparisons, reveal where women are and are not in the structures and measure the quality of their participation at all levels of the church. A portion of this work may be accomplished in approving the joint resolution from ACSWP and ACWC for a study of pay equity within the PC(USA). This comes in response to the referred action of the 200th General Assembly (1999).

b. Rural/Urban Affairs

The Rural and Urban Affairs work group is charged with monitoring Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) policies and work regarding immigration/detention, homelessness, hurricane/disaster relief, trafficking in persons, globalization, and gender-based violence. The work group followed up on work assigned to it by ACWC, partners, and the 217th General Assembly (2006). A study of church policies and current realities regarding trafficking in women/adults led to the conclusion that the General Assembly must encourage congregations and presbyteries to engage in stronger outreach to and advocacy for trafficked persons. In partnership with the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, the a/effects of globalization were examined while in the Yucatan of Mexico. A review of denominational policies on for-profit prisons and just immigration, as well as practices of for-profit detention centers and conversations and observations in Mexico resulted in the conviction that PC(USA) policy statements did not address serious concerns about immigrant detention practices in the United States. Two actions came out of this work: one expanding the concern and work against human trafficking and one seeking action regarding immigration detention in the United States.

c. Health and Human Sexuality

The Health and Human Sexuality Work Group has focused on emerging issues relating to women's health; access to medical care, pharmaceuticals and counseling (including availability, affordability, and accuracy); and gender and sexuality information, education, and equity. We have prepared for proposed overtures to General Assembly through an education program for ACWC members with the help of experienced educators and pastors. Recognizing the sexualization of women in culture and in the conversations of the church about reproductive health, the work continues.

d. Women of Color Consultation Task Force and Joint Working Group

The 217th General Assembly (2006) recommended the creation of a task force on the Women of Color Consultation. Made up of seven persons, this task force was launched in October 2006, completing its work and reporting to the 218th General Assembly (2008) in a separate report. Constituted jointly by ACWC and ACREC, in consultation with Presbyterian Women and the National Cross Caucus, the task force studied the recommendations, which came from the Women of Color Consultation in 2004. In addition to analyzing and determining what progress had been made, the task force designed and recommended a mechanism for monitoring future progress by the denomination. The task force modeled cultural proficiency and antiracism models in its work together. The joint working group for ACWC and ACREC continues to review this work and looks forward to implementing and monitoring their suggested actions.

e. Communications Subcommittee

A subcommittee on communications was also established by ACWC shortly after the 217th General Assembly (2006) in response to the review. The ACWC Website has been separated from the women's advocacy Website for clarity and easier access and has been redesigned. A new logo was commissioned and an informational brochure will be ready for the 218th General Assembly (2008).

5. Actions of the Committee for Consideration of the 218th General Assembly (2008)

- Resolution to Study Immigration Detention in the United States
- Resolution to Expand the Church's Ministry with and Advocacy Against Human Trafficking
- Resolution to Explore the Study of the Status of Women at All Levels in the PC(USA)

6. Other Actions

- God's Work in Women's Hands: Pay Equity and Just Compensation, jointly submitted with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

7. Appreciation

The Reverend Molly Casteel became associate for Women's Advocacy and staff for ACWC in September 2005. With her arrival, and the continuing administrative support of Leigh Harper, senior administrative assistant, ACWC has functioned well with a large portfolio of work. The co-chairs and committee express their sincere and deepest appreciation.

—Report Submitted by the Reverend Sarah Colwill, F. William (Bill) Gray, and Jerri Rodewald, co-chairs, Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns.

C. General Assembly Committee on Representation Agency Summary

1. Assigned Responsibilities

The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR), in its constitutional mandate, shall advise, advocate, resource, review, recommend, and consult with the General Assembly committees, councils, and Ministries Divisions in order to ensure that the principles of inclusiveness are implemented. Its main function shall be to advise the governing bodies with respect to their membership and to that of their committees, boards, agencies, and other units in implementing the principles of participation and inclusiveness to ensure fair and effective representation in the decision making of the church. The committee shall advise the General Assembly on the employment of personnel in conformity with the Churchwide Plan for Affirmative Action and Equal Employment Opportunity.

2. Accomplishments

The GACOR has the responsibility to assist the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to realize that it needs its diverse membership to participate fully in leadership and that their contribution is important and must be sought out and acknowledged.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved a recommendation that permanent, advocacy, and advisory committees and commissions of the General Assembly would be reviewed to evaluate their work to fulfill the mandates given to them by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) based on a six-year schedule. The General Assembly Committee on Representation (GACOR) was reviewed at the 217th General Assembly (2006). The GACOR established a Self-Study Task Group to evaluate the work of the committee over the previous six years. The task group established a process for self-evaluation, reviewed materials and statistics, and presented its results to the Assembly Committee for Review at the 217th General Assembly (2006) meeting in Birmingham, Alabama. Following a favorable review by the assembly committee, the 217th General Assembly (2006) approved the self-study report with the following commendations:

— We commend the GACOR for excellence in its work. The commitment of GACOR to inclusiveness and fairness is admirable.

—We commend the GACOR for its active role in the face of changing national demographics as the GACOR leads the PC(USA) in embracing the emerging multicultural facets of this church.

Orientation for new members on GACOR has continued to be provided by members and staff of GACOR in conjunction with executive committee meetings held at the Presbyterian Center in Louisville, Kentucky, so that new members can rapidly familiarize themselves with the workings of the committee.

Training for GACOR members was accomplished during 2006/2007 meetings by inviting speakers to full committee meetings. The Reverend Belinda Curry, associate for Policy Development and Interpretation for the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy; the Reverend Gradye Parsons, director of Operations, Office of the General Assembly, and the Reverend Robina Winbush, director of the Department of Ecumenical and Agency Relations, Office of the General Assembly, were guest speakers at committee meetings, and their presentations were educational and informative. The GACOR Manager Joan E. Richardson provided training for members on "Cultural Proficiency." A presentation entitled, "Change Management," was given by GACOR member Angelica Michail to help members adjust to the many changes taking place in their churches and communities.

As part of its efforts to reach out and promote equal employment opportunity and affirmative action, GACOR has continued to circulate and publicize job postings in order to reach out to a more inclusive pool and has continued to assign GACOR members to serve as liaisons to, and attend meetings and conferences of, racial ethnic caucuses and councils and Presbyterians for Disability Concerns (PDC).

Over a two-year period, the GACOR Program Subcommittee evaluated COR reports from fifteen synods, which is an indication of the increased interest and concern at the synod level for the committee on representation (COR). Several presbyteries have indicated a renewed interest in reviving the work of committee on representation in their presbyteries. There are a few instances where synods still need to pay closer attention to their makeup, but on a whole there is improvement in many areas across the church. The Synod of Rocky Mountains did not submit a report to GACOR.

Many synod CORs have increased their interface with their respective presbyteries by sponsoring training sessions and heightened representation. There seems to be an increase of synods COR representation on synod nominating committees. There have been increased requests for instructional materials for their presbyteries to enhance their revitalization of the work of COR.

The Planning and Strategy Subcommittee is looking at ways in which it can strengthen communication with presbytery/synod staff as how best the COR can assist them as they look at issues of diversity, inclusiveness and representation.

A special subcommittee reviewed the first and the final draft of the Form of Government Task Force Report and felt that the language regarding issues of diversity and inclusiveness was not strong enough and therefore they sent in a comment. While the proposed Foundational Principles allow for more flexibility in presbyteries, GACOR feels that church's commitment to diversity, inclusiveness, representation, equal employment opportunity and affirmative action is diminished in the new wording and lack of a definitive structure.

It is through training, worship, strategies, study, and sharing that the GACOR equips and challenges synod CORs to achieve, accomplish, realize, endorse, and preserve the commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to inclusiveness and diversity in their synods and presbyteries.

The GACOR's Training Subcommittee provides both training and developmental opportunities for GACOR members and synod CORs. In October 2007, GACOR sponsored a biennial training event for synod COR staff and chairpersons in Daytona Beach, Florida. Forty-four people attended and fourteen synods were represented. The theme of the training was "Finding The Ore in COR," and the purpose of the workshop was to equip and challenge synod CORs to achieve diversity and inclusiveness in their synods and presbyteries. Leadership included:

- The Reverend A. Vanessa Hawkins, Associate for Black Congregational Enhancement, General Assembly Council, worship leader for the workshop.
- Elder Robert Wilson, Vice Moderator, 217th General Assembly (2006), keynote speaker.
- Workshops on disability and youth/young adult concerns lifted up the challenges and experiences faced by persons living with disabilities and young adults.
- A presentation by Elder Elona Street-Stewart, member of the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC), highlighted the nominating process and the need for CORs and nominating committees to work together.

An examination of the evaluation forms from the training event revealed that all participants received familiar information from a new perspective. Many commented that the training provided new ways to work with synod and presbytery CORs.

The Program Subcommittee received requests to make the synod annual report form more user friendly on the PC(USA) Website for down loading. Efforts are still underway that hopefully will enable respondents to enter data directly on the Web. The form is also available in Microsoft Word that can be e-mailed to synods upon request.

The Synod of the Northeast held a COR training event entitled, "There Is No They." It was very fruitful to learn what COR is and what our responsibilities are as a result of the COR training session. The GACOR Manager Joan E. Richardson participated in the training, and the following topics were covered:

- Biblical base for the work of COR
- Unpacking committee responsibilities
- Building relationships between COR and nominating committees
- Activating inactive committees
- Doing COR work in a new way

The Synod of Southern California and Hawaii presented “Everything You Wanted to Know About COR ... To Do COR Work.” All but one of the eight presbyteries in the synod was represented. Angelica Michail spoke on the work of GACOR and explained the brochure, “How to Start or Revive Presbytery CORs.” The GACOR bookmarks, toolboxes, and various brochures were distributed. The retreat was a wonderful venue for training and establishing better communication between synod and presbytery COR members.

The Synod of Lakes and Prairies Nominating Committee and the Committee on Representation (COR) have met in joint sessions. This is an excellent opportunity for COR to see firsthand the processes, challenges, and outcomes of the work that is done by the nominating committee. It also is a great opportunity for the nominating committee to hear observations, comments, and suggestions from COR members. Topics of interest to both committees were discussed:

- For recruitment for positions in presbyteries, synods, General Assembly—what criteria, expertise is needed?
- What is the role of synod COR and nominating committee in recruitment, training, and modeling effective work?
- What is/should be our relationship with presbytery counterparts, General Assembly, and each other?

Synods of Mid-Atlantic, Trinity, and Lincoln Trails had COR meetings and training events also. The GACOR Manager Joan E. Richardson participated in the meetings and shared training materials and resources.

3. Membership

The GACOR’s commitment to inclusiveness is reflected in the diversity of its membership from the sixteen synods as follows:

Alaska-Northwest, Alma-jean Marion, African American (*SA)
 Covenant, Linda J. Burger, White (SA) (D)
 Lakes and Prairies, Cindy Ray, White (A) (D)
 Lincoln Trails, M. Coleman Gilchrist, African American (A)

Item 10-01

[The assembly answered Item 10-01 by the action taken on Item 10-02. See pp. 58, 59.]

On Directing the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to Develop a New Comprehensive HIV and AIDS Policy for the Church—From the Presbytery of New Castle.

The Presbytery of New Castle, recognizing that the HIV and AIDS pandemic is a critical matter of social justice, overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to address the HIV and AIDS pandemic by directing the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in consultation with appropriate PC(USA) staff, networks, and church partners, to develop a comprehensive HIV and AIDS policy for the PC(USA), recommending compassionate action and giving prophetic witness regarding issues related to people living with HIV and AIDS in the U.S.A. and around the world, and report that policy to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Rationale

For more than twenty years the Presbyterian General Assembly has spoken on issues regarding HIV and AIDS. Our resolutions, however, have not been matched with a denominational resolve to commit significant finances and programmatic resources for education, advocacy, prevention, treatment, and cure in the global struggle against HIV and AIDS.

Among our many resolutions and overtures in the twenty-six years of HIV and AIDS pandemic:

- We have confessed “That our own church’s response to AIDS has been tardy” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 362, To Meet AIDS with Grace and Truth) and, noted the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) considers the AIDS/HIV crisis to be of utmost importance and urgency.”
- We have called the church to love, to compassionate care, to witness for justice, for the promotion of prevention, to deplore bigotry and intolerance. (206th General Assembly (1994), Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 507)
- We have called the church to become advocates for persons living with HIV and AIDS...” (210th General Assembly (1998), Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 690–91), and to become an advocate of God’s justice.

As we pass overtures, the HIV/AIDS pandemic is unrelenting:

- 39.5 million people are living with HIV worldwide, 95 percent in low- or middle-income countries;
- 2.9 million people died of AIDS during 2006—nearly 8,000 every day;
- 4.3 million people were newly infected with HIV in 2006—almost 12,000 every day;
- worldwide, less than 20 percent of people at risk of HIV infection have access to basic prevention services;
- at least 25 million people have died of AIDS since the disease was recognized in 1981.

A total of $10 billion is expected to be available for AIDS funding in 2007—just 55 percent of the $18.1 billion that will be needed to provide comprehensive prevention, treatment, and care worldwide (all figures from UNAIDS report, December 2006).

And the face of AIDS is changing, especially in the U.S.A., where:

- In 2004, African Americans accounted for 43 percent of all AIDS cases reported during the year, even though they make up just 12 percent of the population.
- AIDS is the number one cause of death for African Americans aged 25 to 44, before heart disease, cancer, and homicide (figures from Balm In Gilead or Kaiser Foundation).

The devastating pandemic of HIV/AIDS in the U.S.A. and around the world confronts the PC(USA) and the Church of Jesus Christ with an urgent challenge and a great opportunity to be both compassionate and prophetic as we live out our call to more fully realize the healing ministry of our Risen Lord. The PC(USA) needs a new comprehensive policy and programmatic emphasis.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)

Item 10-01 directs the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to develop a new comprehensive HIV and AIDS policy for the church.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that this item be approved.

Rationale

The rate of growth of HIV/AIDS numbers in racial ethnic communities is higher than in society at large, which makes them more vulnerable and susceptible. A successful policy needs to address this difference.

Racial ethnic communities have specific cultural needs when it comes to HIV/AIDS education and awareness.

Distinct strategies need to be developed for these communities.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)

Item 10-01 urges the 218th General Assembly (2008) to address the HIV and AIDS pandemic by directing the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), in consultation with appropriate PC(USA) staff, networks, and church partners, to develop a comprehensive HIV and AIDS policy for the PC(USA), recommending compassionate action and giving prophetic witness regarding issues related to people living with HIV and AIDS in the U.S.A. and around the world, and report that policy to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) concurs with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s advice and counsel and advises that Item 10-01 be answered by the action taken on Item 10-02.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

Item 10-01 from the Presbytery of New Castle calls on the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to develop a new comprehensive HIV and AIDS policy for the church.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 10-01 be answered by the action taken on Item 10-02.

Rationale

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) notes that the concerns cited in Item 10-01 are similar to the concerns raised in Item 10-02. In Item 10-02, however, ACSWP notes that the rationale addresses the impact of HIV/AIDS on both the African American and Hispanic/Latino populations. Therefore, ACSWP advises that Item 10-01 be answered by the action taken on Item 10-02.

Item 10-02

[The assembly approved Item 10-02 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 58, 59.]

On Directing the General Assembly Council to Develop and Fund a Comprehensive HIV and AIDS Policy for the PC(USA)—From the Presbytery of the Pacific.

The Presbytery of the Pacific, recognizing that the HIV and AIDS pandemic is a critical matter of our faith and God’s justice, overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to address the HIV and AIDS pandemic by directing the [~~General Assembly Council (GAC), in consultation with~~] Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), [~~appropriate PC(USA)~~] [in consultation with appropriate General Assembly Council] staff, [PC(USA)] networks, and church partners, to develop and fully fund a comprehensive [study on] HIV and AIDS [~~policy~~] for the PC(USA), recommending compassionate action and giving prophetic witness regarding issues related to people living with HIV and AIDS in the U.S.A. and around the world, and report [~~that policy~~] to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Comment: That those appointed to this study represent a broad range of folks theologically, since policies might be formed from this study.

Rationale

For more than twenty years, the Presbyterian General Assembly has spoken on issues regarding the global struggle to confront the scourge of HIV/AIDS. However, our resolutions have not been matched with a denominational resolve to commit significant finances and programmatic resources for these ministries of compassion and advocacy. Our congregations and middle governing bodies need to be more fully equipped with HIV/AIDS-related resources, which include: education, prevention, compassion, advocacy for greater access to treatment, and increased investment in the research and development searching for a cure for HIV/AIDS.

Among our many resolutions and overtures in the twenty-six years of HIV and AIDS pandemic:

- We have confessed “That our own church’s response to AIDS has been tardy”, and, “noted the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) considers the AIDS/HIV crisis to be of utmost importance and urgency...” (To Meet AIDS with Grace and Truth, adopted by the 200th General Assembly, 1988)
- We have called the church to love, to compassionate care, to witness for justice, for the promotion of prevention, to deplore bigotry and intolerance (Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 575).
- We have called the church to “become advocates for persons living with HIV and AIDS...” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 691).

As we pass overtures, the HIV/AIDS pandemic is unrelenting:

- 39.5 million people are living with HIV worldwide, 95 percent in low- or middle-income countries.
- 2.9 million people died of AIDS during 2006—nearly 8,000 every day.
- 4.3 million people were newly infected with HIV in 2006—almost 12,000 every day.
- Worldwide, less than 20 percent of people at risk of HIV infection have access to basic prevention services.
- At least 25 million people have died of AIDS since the disease was recognized in 1981.
- A total of $10 billion is expected to be available for AIDS funding in 2007—just 55 percent of the $18.1 billion that will be needed to provide comprehensive prevention, treatment, and care worldwide (all figures from UNAIDS report, December 2006).

And the face of AIDS is changing, especially in the U.S.A., where:

- In 2004, African Americans accounted for 43 percent of all AIDS cases reported during the year, even though they make up just 12 percent of the population.
- AIDS is the number one cause of death for African Americans aged 25 to 44, before heart disease, cancer, and homicide (figures from Balm In Gilead or Kaiser Foundation).
- By the end of 2005, an estimated 77,125 Hispanics/Latinos with AIDS had died. <http://www.thebody.com/content/whatis/art17101.html - 2>
- The rate of HIV diagnosis among Hispanics/Latinos remains disproportionately high; in 2005, the annual rate of HIV diagnosis for Hispanics was three times that for non-Hispanic whites.

The devastating pandemic of HIV/AIDS in the U.S.A. and around the world confronts the PC(USA) and the Church of Jesus Christ with an urgent challenge and a great opportunity to be both compassionate and prophetic as we live out our call to more fully realize the healing ministry of our Risen Lord. The PC(USA) needs a new comprehensive policy and programmatic emphasis.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 10-02 on directing the General Assembly to develop and fund a comprehensive HIV and AIDS policy for the PC(USA).

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) concurs with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s advice and counsel.

We recommend our report, Women and AIDS: A Global Crisis, approved by the 213th General Assembly (2001), for consideration by the study group.

ACSWP ADVISE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 10-01, from the Presbytery of New Castle and Item 10-02, from the Presbytery of the Pacific, both call upon the 218th General Assembly (2008) to approve a new comprehensive HIV and AIDS policy for the church.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) notes that the concerns cited in Item 10-01 are incorporated in Item 10-02, which includes a concern for occurrence of HIV/AIDS in the Latino community.

The ACSWP advises that the General Assembly approve Item 10-02 with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of the Pacific recognizing that the HIV and AIDS pandemic is a critical matter of our faith and God’s justice, overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to address the HIV and AIDS pandemic by directing the [~~General Assembly Council (GAC), in consultation with~~] Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), [~~appropriate PC(USA)~~] [in consultation with appropriate General Assembly Council] staff, [PC(USA)] networks, and church partners, to develop and fully fund a comprehensive [study on] HIV and AIDS [~~policy~~] for the PC(USA), recommending compassionate action and giving prophetic witness regarding issues related to people living with HIV and AIDS in the U.S.A. and around the world, and report [~~that policy~~] to the 219th General Assembly (2010).”

Rationale

For more than twenty years, the Presbyterian General Assembly has spoken on issues regarding the global struggle to confront the scourge of HIV/AIDS. However, our resolutions have not been matched with a denominational resolve to commit significant finances and programmatic resources for these ministries of compassion and advocacy. Our congregations and middle governing bodies need to be more fully equipped with HIV/AIDS related resources that include: education, prevention, compassion, advocacy for greater access to treatment, and increased investment in the research and development searching for a cure for HIV/AIDS.

While the General Assembly has repeatedly made short statements on HIV/AIDS, the need remains to take a comprehensive look at the issue in the context of its current face and the global pandemic. The study proposed would look at the key role of the church in domestic and international public policy, and consider the enduring issues of personal and collective responsibility, gender inequality, poverty, racism, and violence. Specifically, the study will examine questions of scientific research; contraceptive and prophylactic availability; access to adequate, preventative medical care; public health and epidemiology; homophobia; and the impact of human trafficking for sexual exploitation. Although the church’s overall financial contribution is inevitably strategic and limited, the voice and analysis of the church is influential. Another part of the proposed study would look at the strategies already reflected in Presbyterian humanitarian assistance and consider the impacts of various potential aid, education and advocacy projects within the global campaign to eradicate this insidious disease.

Among our short resolutions and overtures in the twenty-six years of HIV and AIDS pandemic:

- We have confessed “that our own church’s response to AIDS has been tardy,” and, “noted the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) considers the AIDS/HIV crisis to be of utmost importance and urgency...” [To Meet AIDS with Grace and Truth, adopted by the 200th General Assembly (1988)].
- We have called the church to love, to compassionate care, to witness for justice, for the promotion of prevention, to deplore bigotry and intolerance [206th General Assembly (1994), Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 575].
- “Urge[d] all entities of the church to pray for families, communities, and nations suffering from the epidemic; [and] consider[ed] generating funds for Extra Commitment Opportunities established to address the global AIDS epidemic and all funding entities to consider making AIDS a priority concern” [Recommendations 2.a. and b., Women and AIDS: A Global Crisis, 213th General Assembly (2001), Minutes, 2001, Part I, p. 335].
- We have called the church to become advocates for persons living with HIV and AIDS [210th General Assembly (1998), Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 691], and to become an advocate of God’s justice (215th General Assembly (2003)].

Despite our statements and those of others, the HIV/AIDS pandemic is unrelenting: [Note: The statistics in this overture are cited from the 2006 AIDS epidemic update, published by UNAIDS and the World Health Organization. The changes noted below are from the more recent 2007 report, released in November 2007. Further, the decrease in numbers results from a change in the methodological approach to gathering data, which more accurately represents the problem, but does not necessarily reflect improvement.]

- ~~39.5~~ 33.2 million people are living with HIV worldwide, 95 percent in low or middle income countries.
- ~~2.9~~ 2.1 million people died of AIDS during ~~2006~~ 2007—nearly ~~8,000~~ 5,700 every day.
- ~~4.3~~ 2.5 million people were newly infected with HIV in ~~2006~~ 2007—almost ~~12,000~~ 6,800 every day.
- 15.4 million women were living with HIV in 2007, a 1.6 million increase from 2001. In sub-Saharan Africa, almost 61% of adults living with HIV in 2007 were women and the proportion of women living with HIV in the world is growing.
- Globally, the number of children living with HIV increased from 1.5 million in 2001 to 2.5 million in 2007, but the number of new infections declined.
- Worldwide, less than 20 percent of people at risk of HIV infection have access to basic prevention services.
- At least 25 million people have died of AIDS since the disease was recognized in 1981.
- A total of $10 billion is expected to be available for AIDS funding in 2007—just 55% of the $18.1 billion that will be needed to provide comprehensive prevention, treatment, and care worldwide. (all figures from UNAIDS report, ~~December 2006~~ November 2007)

And the face of AIDS is changing, especially in the U.S.A., where:

- A total of 1.4 million adults and children in North America are living with HIV.
- ~~In 2004,~~ According to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), African Americans accounted for ~~43~~ 49 percent of all AIDS cases reported during the year, even though they make up just ~~12~~ 13 percent of the population.
- AIDS is the number one cause of death for African Americans aged 25 to 44, before heart disease, cancer, and homicide (figures from Balm In Gilead or Kaiser Foundation).
- By the end of ~~2005~~ 2006, an estimated ~~77,125~~ 80,690 Hispanics/Latinos with AIDS had died. <http://www.thebody.com/content/whatis/art17101.html - 2>
- The rate of HIV diagnosis among Hispanics/Latinos remains disproportionately high; in 2005, the annual rate of HIV diagnosis for Hispanics was three times that for non-Hispanic whites. (U.S. figures are cited from the CDC unless otherwise noted.)

Many Presbyterians and entities of the General Assembly are engaged in HIV/AIDS ministries.

- PHEWA network, Presbyterians for AIDS Network (PAN), is planning a presbytery consultation on HIV/AIDS ministry at Columbia Seminary, scheduled for October, 2008. The hope is that this event will produce a “best practices” resource for those carrying out HIV/AIDS ministries and those seeking to start such ministries.
- International AIDS Ministries of the World Mission Ministry Area.
- National Health Ministries of the Compassion, Peace, and Justice ministry area.
- Peacemaking Program encourages congregations and governing bodies to use their share of the Peacemaking offering to support ministries in response to AIDS.
- Peacemaking Program, International AIDS Ministries, and PAN sponsored a travel study seminar on HIV/AIDS to South Africa and Malawi in February 2008.
- The Presbyterian Washington Office has advocated on issues of access to comprehensive health care, funding for the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), increased international assistance for relief of poverty diseases including HIV/AIDS, and access to affordable medication.

The denomination remains committed to these ministries.

The devastating pandemic of HIV/AIDS in the USA and around the world confronts the PC(USA) and the Church of Jesus Christ with an urgent challenge and a great opportunity to be both compassionate and prophetic as we live out our call to more fully realize the healing ministry of our Risen Lord. The PC (USA) needs a new comprehensive policy and programmatic emphasis.

Item 10-03

[In response to Item 10-03, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 58, 59.]

On Directing PC(USA) Entities to Reflect Balance in Advocating Both Sides of the Abortion Issue—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh.

The Presbytery of Pittsburgh overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct all PC(USA) entities in both funding and in publications to reflect balance and equality in advocating both sides of the abortion issue so that any advocacy is in full compliance with our 1992 Abortion Policy. Therefore, we direct our national offices to uphold this policy in any and all of their communications with both church and society.

Alternate Resolution Approved

In response to this recommendation, that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following resolution:

The 218th General Assembly (2008) directs the appropriate PC(USA) entities to redevelop congregational resource materials, on the subject of reproductive options, to more adequately reflect the full spectrum of biblical, theological, and pastoral counsel, while remaining consistent with the policy of the 1992 report of the Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion and the 2006 policy on Late-Term Pregnancies and Abortion. The General Assembly Council will report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

[Financial Implications: (2008): $8,378; (2009): $65,437; (2010): $32,686 (Mission)]

Rationale

The 1992 Abortion Policy states that “we as Presbyterians hold both Position A (“pro-life”) and Position B (“pro-choice”) positions.”

Recommendation III.B. (page 16) states “We recommend that future publications of the denomination and its ministry units reflect the diversity of positions about problem pregnancies and abortion found herein.”

Recommendation III.D. then states “We recommend that the General Assembly acknowledge the prerogative of Presbyterian entities to participate in ecumenical and interfaith organizations that represent different points of view concerning abortion. We also urge the General Assembly Council and the presbyteries to affirm procedures by which particular churches may be assured that their mission funds will not be used in violation of conscience on this issue.”

However, the only groups that receive funding or produce material or advocate on behalf of the PC(USA) are Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Choice (PARO), the Washington Office, Women’s Ministries, and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP). All of these organizations produce material and advocate specifically and diligently only for the “pro-choice” position.

Thus, not only do publications not reflect Position A found in the 1992 Policy (but only Position B), but in addition the Washington Office, ACSWP, and Women’s Ministries are funded with undesignated funds, thus violating the call to see that churches be assured that their mission funds not be used in violation of their conscience on this issue.

There is currently no organization advocating a pro-life position that is funded by the PC(USA). This one-sidedness is not in compliance with our 1992 Abortion Policy, thus violating the 1992 policy’s call for the ecumenical and interfaith organizations to “represent different points of view concerning abortion.” While Presbyterian entities have joined and pay dues to RCRC, an entity that supports all abortions, no entity funded by the PC(USA) has joined or pays dues to the National Pro-Life Religious Council. (Presbyterians Pro-Life is totally funded by the contributions of individuals and some individual Presbyterian churches but is not funded by undesignated PC(USA) mission funds and is not part of the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA) or any other PC(USA) entity).

If the PC(USA) cannot comply with the 1992 policy and be equitable and even handed in its funding, advocacy, and published materials, then funding in support of any one side of this critical issue should cease immediately. This fairness would then be in compliance with the 1992 Abortion Policy and would affirm the policy’s statement that the church provide for freedom and exercise of conscience on this matter that so clearly divides us.

Examples for consideration by sessions and presbyteries:

- The Washington Office has advocated to Congress on behalf of the PC(USA) in support of all abortions, including late-term abortions.
- The PC(USA) is a member of Religious Coalition of Reproductive Choice (RCRC). We support them with non-designated money. None of their literature or advocacies reflects the current 1992 Abortion Policy, including their 2006 late-term abortion statement.
- The PC(USA) is a member of Clergy for Choice.
- The PC(USA) is a member of Progressive Religious Partnership.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEMS 10-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 10-03, from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh, and Item 10-04, from the Presbytery of Beaver-Butler, both overture the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct all entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to advocate both sides of the abortion issue equally in both funding and publications.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that these overtures be disapproved.

Rationale

1. Items 10-03 and 10-04 are correct in their understanding that the 1992 policy adopted by the 204th General Assembly (1992), Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 357ff), respects the individual consciences of Presbyterians by acknowledging

a. the diversity of views that exists among Presbyterians with regard to the many complex issues involved in problem pregnancies and abortion. In fact, the first area of substantial agreement listed in the policy states:

a. The church ought to be able to maintain within its fellowship those who, on the basis of a study of Scripture and prayerful decision, come to diverse conclusions and actions.” (Ibid, p. 368, Paragraph 27.089)

b. that Presbyterians may choose to participate in interfaith groups that “represent different points of view concerning abortion” (Ibid, p. 374, Paragraph 27.145).

c. that procedures should be established to assure that mission funds offered by particular churches will not be used in violation of their conscience on the issue of abortion.

2. However, this emphasis on the diversity of views within the PC(USA) is only one of many other “areas of substantial agreement” (Ibid, p. 367–68, Paragraph 27.087, #1) reached by a “sizable majority of the special committee”—14 of 17 members—and approved by the 204th General Assembly (1992). The offices of the General Assembly must be faithful to these recommendations, many of which describe the social witness of the PC(USA) with regard to public policy on abortion. These offices include the Washington Office, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), Women’s Ministries, and Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Options (PARO), which is a ministry of PHEWA and an entity of the Compassion, Peace, and Justice ministry area. Presbyterian Panel surveys of member opinion have shown that varying majorities of Presbyterians support abortion depending on the situation.

With regard to the decision to terminate a pregnancy, the 1992 policy includes the following affirmations that protect the decision-making responsibility of women and their families in both pastoral care and public policy. These particular points are selected to illustrate the public policy position taken by the General Assembly:

a. “Problem pregnancies are the result of, and influenced by, so many complicated and insolvable circumstances that we have neither the wisdom nor the authority to ... decide each situation” (Ibid, p. 368, Paragraph 27.090).

b. “We affirm the ability and responsibility of women, guided by the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit, ... to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies” (Ibid, Paragraph 27.091)

c. “We do not wish to see laws enacted that would attach criminal penalties to those who seek abortions or to appropriately qualified and licensed persons who perform abortions in medically approved facilities” (Ibid, Paragraph 27.097).

d. “... no law should deny access to safe and affordable services for the persons seeking to terminate a problem pregnancy” (Ibid, p. 372, Paragraph 27.129).

e. “No law or administrative decision should (1) limit access to abortions; (2) limit information and counseling concerning abortions; or (3) limit or prohibit public funding for necessary abortions for the socially and economically disadvantaged” (Ibid, Paragraph 27.131).

3. Therefore, the Washington Office, and the other offices of the General Assembly, are mandated to represent these policies of the PC(USA) in their work and communications. There is no “other side” to these policy statements.

4. The concern that the resources on problem pregnancies and abortion produced by the General Assembly Council ministries are one-sided, representing only “position B” misrepresents the content of the policy that does not divide itself into two opposing and mutually exclusive positions or use the terms “pro-life” and “pro-choice.” In the discussion of Position A and Position B the policy states:

... What follows are two different approaches as to the biblical material that is seen as central to this issue. They are not necessarily mutually exclusive, nor are they the only approaches (Ibid, p. 366, Paragraph 27.074) [Italics added to emphasize that the topic of Position A and Position B is biblical interpretation, not policy recommendations.]

5. Because the 1992 policy states that

Problem pregnancies are the result of, and influenced by, so many complicated and insolvable circumstances that we have neither the wisdom nor the authority to ... decide each situation. (Ibid, p. 368, Paragraph 27.090)

Resources for the pastoral care of those facing such circumstances present the full range of faithful responses to a variety of issues facing women and their families during a problem pregnancy. Such publications include Nurturing the Children of God: The Call to Foster Parenting and Adoption, When No Choice Is Easy, and There’s Always a Father—Does the Father Have a Problem, Too? For example, the brochure When No Choice Is Easy discusses having and keeping the baby, giving the infant up for adoption, and whether abortion would be a moral choice. These publications can be accessed on the PARO Website. (<http://www.pcusa.org/phewa/paro.htm>)

6. In addition, other General Assembly resources that do not specifically mention problem pregnancies or address the issue of abortion nonetheless respond to the directive of the 1992 policy regarding “public policy initiatives and suggestions for the life of the church” that might serve to “reduce the numbers of unintended pregnancies and the numbers of women who choose abortion” (Ibid, pp. 369–70, Paragraph 27.108). These initiatives and suggestions include addressing economic realities, pornography, access to effective contraception, the promotion of healthy family life, and many others (Ibid, pp. 370–73, Paragraphs 27.109–134). Some of these concerns have been addressed in such publications as Transforming Families, and God’s Work in Our Hands. The ACSWP reports before the 218th General Assembly (2008) concerning homelessness, pay equity for women, serious mental illness, and a new social creed address economic concerns that can cause women to consider abortion.

7. Finally, the PC(USA) is a member only of the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice, but provides no financial support to it. This membership is appropriate because the RCRC literature is consistent with the PC(USA)’s 1992 policy of respect for women’s capacity “to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies” (Ibid, p. 368, Paragraph 27.091) and for public policies that protect women’s access to legal abortion. The RCRC literature quotes PC(USA) policy, as well as the policies of other denominations, and includes the following disclaimer: “Coalition membership does not require or imply conformity to all the actions and initiatives of the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice.”

It would be inappropriate for the PC(USA) to join or financially support organizations that oppose the policy of the PC(USA) concerning the protection of women’s full range of reproductive options and the public policies that assure the availability of that range. Individual Presbyterians, of course, may choose to do so.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-03

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-03—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 10-03 asks the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct all PC(USA) entities to reflect balance and equality in both funding and publications when advocating both sides of the abortion issue. This action is requested in order to be in full compliance with the church’s 1992 policy on abortion. It also directs national church offices to uphold this policy in all communications with church and society.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that this item be disapproved.

Rationale

This item mischaracterizes the policy and recommendations of the 1992 report, Problem Pregnancies and Abortion, and the work related to these issues by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

1. The 1992 policy is introduced with a recognition that theological and political differences coexist in the PC(USA):

Clearly there is both agreement and disagreement in our use and interpretation of Scripture. There is also agreement and disagreement on the basic issue of abortion. (Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion, 204th General Assembly (1992) Minutes, 1992, Part I, paragraph 27.086)

However, it moves from this acknowledgement to a listing of areas in which there is substantial agreement on the issue of abortion. In developing policy to be considered by the 204th General Assembly (1992), a majority of the special committee assigned to complete this study spoke about their own (“our”) agreement and disagreement. When the 1992 General Assembly adopted this report, the policy began to speak for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) as a whole. Within our denomination we do have differences theologically and politically on the issue of abortion. Two scriptural approaches are described as Position A and Position B in the narrative of the report. Every General Assembly since 1992 has upheld the policy of this report. Although we live with disagreements, the PC(USA) continues to be a denomination that finds “substantial agreement” on the areas that make up Presbyterian policy on the issue of abortion.

2. One of the most significant areas of Presbyterian policy addresses women’s decision-making in circumstances of problem pregnancy and abortion. There is “substantial agreement” in the 1992 policy that:

e. The considered decision of a woman to terminate a pregnancy can be a morally acceptable, though certainly not the only or required, decision. (Minutes, 1992, Part I, paragraph 27.093)

This statement is at the heart of the “pro- and anti-choice” debate. Presbyterian policy recognizes that not all Presbyterians agree, and yet, since 1992, General Assemblies have concluded that Presbyterians continue to “affirm the ability and responsibility of women, guided by the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit, in the context of their communities of faith, to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies” (Ibid, paragraph 27.091). While abortion under any circumstances is never to be required, Presbyterians understand that there are situations in which abortion may be a “morally acceptable” decision. This is what it means to be “pro-choice.” To advocate on behalf of women’s moral agency and right to make moral decisions regarding abortion is to abide by Presbyterian policy.

3. This overture suggests that if Presbyterian entities are engaged in any kind of “pro-choice” activity, they also need to advocate “anti-choice” or “pro-life” positions as well. However, this either/or approach does not comply with the policy of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). While the extremes of the spectrum share a careful regard for life as a gift of God, each weighs the adult and “potential life” differently. The policy recognizes that Presbyterians disagree on the issue of abortion, but there is not substantial agreement that we are both a pro-life and a pro-choice church. “Pro-life” members would not substantially agree that women’s abortion decisions can be morally acceptable; however, “pro-choice” members can agree that there is room for people to support or reject abortion as a moral alternative. Therefore, current Presbyterian policy is moderately pro-choice, acknowledging that we “hold varying points of view about when human life begins” (Ibid, paragraph 27.102) and our church “does not advocate abortion but instead acknowledges circumstances in a sinful world that may make abortion the least objectionable of difficult options” (Ibid, paragraph 27.102A).

4. This overture accuses PC(USA) entities, commonly responsible for the interpretation of General Assembly policy with regard to programming, of having only represented one side of the debate. The policy is inclusive of many differences. The only position that it excludes is one that does not allow for women’s moral agency (commonly referred to as the pro-life position). The overture contends that the Presbyterian Washington Office, Racial Ethnic, and Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Options (PARO) are supported by the church and not individual contributions. This is true for all mentioned but PARO who is largely supported by individual contributions.

Presbyterians Pro-Life (PPL) is not like these denominational entities of PC(USA) and it is not an appropriate comparison. The PPL is an independent organization with no line of authority or accountability to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The PC(USA) entities listed operate according to the policy of the PC(USA). Their work is monitored and reported to General Assembly (last in 2006) and has been deemed to be completely consistent with Presbyterian policy.

5. This overture suggests that entities of the PC(USA) are not in compliance with Recommendation III.B. of the 1992 policy, which recommends that publications reflect the diversity of positions about problem pregnancies and abortion. This simply is not true. Many resources have been published since 1992 on issues related to abortion, some of which include: four brochures (When No Choice Is Easy; When You Need the Wisdom of Solomon; There’s Always a Father; and When Pregnancy Involves Loss); Nurturing the Children of God: The Call to Foster Parenting and Adoption; and Life Abundant: Values, Choices, and Health Care. All of these resources convey the complexity of problem pregnancy decisions and the diversity of opinion that Presbyterians hold on how various options should be considered.

6. This overture contends that the 1992 policy is violated when PC(USA) entities partner with ecumenical and interfaith organizations such as the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC), Clergy for Choice, and the Progressive Religious Partnership. Recommendation III.D. of the 1992 report acknowledges “the prerogative of Presbyterian entities to participate in ecumenical and interfaith organizations that represent different points of view concerning abortion”(Ibid., paragraph 27.145). Pro-choice organizations recognize a wide diversity of opinion on the issue of abortion, while maintaining—as does Presbyterian policy—that the considered decision of a woman to terminate a pregnancy can be morally acceptable. The PC(USA) is not a member of Clergy for Choice or the Progressive Religious Partnership. Its membership in RCRC involves no financial support for the organization.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is empowered by the PC(USA) to advocate on behalf of women and women’s issues. In advocating for the right of women to make moral decisions regarding problem pregnancies, ACWC stands with other entities in the PC(USA) who are working to uphold Presbyterian policy on abortion. This overture seeks to direct national offices of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to uphold the 1992 policy on abortion in all of its communications. This is already the case and is monitored and reported on regularly. The ACWC advises that Item 10-03 be disapproved.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 10-03

Comment on Item 10-03—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council recognizes that abortion is a highly sensitive issue that needs to be approached with prayerful consideration. The General Assembly has acknowledged that within our church there is a wide range of deeply held convictions about the matter. The 204th General Assembly (1992) reflected this diversity of opinion, in its adoption of the report of the Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion.

Clearly there is both agreement and disagreement in our use and interpretation of Scripture. There is also agreement and disagreement on the basic issue of abortion. The committee agreed that there are no biblical texts that speak expressly to the topic of abortion, but that taken in their totality the Holy Scriptures are filled with messages that advocate respect for the woman and child before and after birth. Therefore the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) encourages an atmosphere of open debate and mutual respect for a variety of opinions concerning the issues related to problem pregnancies and abortion (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 367–68, 372–74).

Consequently, as the policies of the General Assembly regarding abortion and related issues have developed, they do not fit neatly into the frequently used forced-choice between “pro-life” and “pro-choice.” There are several points in the rationale of this overture that need to be clarified to accurately reflect General Assembly Council’s role as it fulfills the directives of this policy. The overture expresses concern that General Assembly Council ministries “produce material and advocate specifically and diligently only for the ‘pro-choice’ position.” This concern is not accurate. The 217th General Assembly (2006) affirmed the monitoring report from the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), which reviews the implementation of problem pregnancies and abortion policies. General Assembly Council ministries preparing resources on problem pregnancies and abortion strive to reflect a diversity of opinion in the resources that are produced. Resources prepared by ministries of the General Assembly Council cover the range of faithful responses in these difficult situations. Examples include: Problem Pregnancy: When No Choice Is Easy, There’s Always a Father—Does the Father Have a Problem, Too?, When Pregnancy Involves Loss, When You Need the Wisdom of Solomon—Helping Others Face Problem Pregnancies, Life Abundant: Values, Choices and Health Care, and Nurturing the Children of God: The Call to Foster Parenting and Adoption.

One concern raised in the overture is about the role of the Presbyterian Washington Office as it reflects General Assembly policy when legislation about abortion is before Congress or is deliberated upon in the Supreme Court. The Washington Office is mandated to express the policy of the General Assembly, and the General Assembly has been very clear on the issue of abortion legislation which states, “We do not wish to see laws enacted that would attach criminal penalties to those who seek abortions or to appropriately qualified and licensed persons who perform abortions in medically approved facilities” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 368).

The overture also questions the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s membership in several organizations that do not, from the overture’s perspective, reflect the comprehensive nature of the denomination’s 1992 statement on abortion. As a matter of clarification, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is not a member of Clergy for Choice and Progressive Religious Partnership, two organizations that were listed in the overture. The PC(USA) is a member of the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice (RCRC) but does not provide any financial support to this organization. The RCRC literature, which cites Presbyterian policy, is in line with the 1992 policy statement. The Religious Coalition appends to all of its documents the following reminder: “Coalition membership does not require or imply conformity to all the actions and initiatives of the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice.”

The General Assembly Council mission and ministries continue to be guided by the 1992 policy on abortion and problem pregnancies and encourages the church to continue to approach this challenging issue with the atmosphere of “open debate and mutual respect” for a variety of opinions (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 374].

Item 10-04

[The assembly answered Item 10-04 by the action taken on Item 10-03. See pp. 58, 59.]

On Advocating and Funding Either Both Sides of the Abortion Issue or Neither—From the Presbytery of Beaver-Butler.

1. Direct all PC(USA) entities, in both funding and in publications, to reflect balance and equality in advocating both sides of the abortion issue so that any advocacy is in full compliance with our 1992 abortion policy.
2. Direct the PC(USA) national offices to uphold the 1992 abortion policy in any and all funding allocations, and in all of their communications with both church and society; or to immediately cease funding in support of any one side of this critical issue. (Either of these actions would be in compliance with the 1992 Abortion Policy and would affirm the policy’s statement that the church provide for freedom and exercise of conscience on this matter which so clearly divides us.)

Rationale

The 1992 Abortion Policy adopted by the General Assembly states that we as Presbyterians hold both Position A (“pro-life”) and Position B (“pro-choice”) positions. The 1992 General Assembly’s action included adoption of the following recommendations:

B. We recommend that future publications of the denomination and its ministry units reflect the diversity of positions about problem pregnancies and abortion found herein. ...

D. We recommend that the General Assembly acknowledge the prerogative of Presbyterian entities to participate in ecumenical and interfaith organizations that represent different points of view concerning abortion. We also urge the General Assembly Council and the presbyteries to affirm procedures by which particular churches may be assured that their mission funds will not be used in violation of conscience on this issue. (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 373–74)

However, the only groups that receive funding or produce material or advocate on behalf of the PC(USA) are Presbyterians Affirming Reproductive Choice (PARO), the Washington Office, Women’s Ministries, and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP). All of these organizations produce material and advocate specifically and diligently only for the “pro-choice” position. The following examples are offered:

- The Washington Office has advocated to Congress on behalf of the PC (USA) in support of all abortions, including late-term abortions.
- The PC(USA) is a member of Religious Coalition of Reproductive Choice (RCRC). We support them with non-designated money. None of their literature or advocacies, including their 2006 late-term abortion statement, reflects the current 1992 abortion policy.

Thus not only do publications not reflect Position A found in the 1992 Policy (but only Position B), but in addition, the Washington Office, ACSWP, and Women’s Ministries are funded with undesignated funds. This violates the call to see that churches be assured that their mission funds not be used in violation of their conscience on this issue:

Currently, there is no organization funded by the PC(USA) at the denomination level that advocates a pro-life position. This one-sided advocacy is not in compliance with our 1992 abortion policy, thus violating the 1992 policy’s call for the ecumenical and interfaith organizations to “represent different points of view concerning abortion.” While Presbyterian entities have joined and pay dues to RCRC, an entity that supports all abortions, no entity funded by the PC(USA) has joined or pays dues to the National Pro-Life Religious Council.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the recommendations of Item 10-04 be answered by the action taken on Item 10-03.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-04

Advice and Counsel on Item 10-04—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 10-04 asks the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct all PC(USA) entities to reflect balance and equality in both funding and publications when advocating both sides of the abortion issue. This action is requested in order to be in full compliance with the church’s 1992 policy on abortion.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises this item be disapproved and refers to its comment on Item 10-03.

§Item 10-05

[The assembly approved Item 10-05 with amendment. See pp. 58, 59.]

Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Commend the Resolution on the Church and Serious Mental Illness approved by the 200th General Assembly (1988) (Minutes, 1988, Part I, pp. 443–46).

2. Approve the following recommendations related to “Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness”:

- a. Approve the policy statement and recommendations.
- b. Receive the background sections and appendixes.
- c. Approve the report as a whole for churchwide study and use.

d. Direct the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to publish the entire report “Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness” with appendixes and a related study/action guide; distribute it to the middle governing bodies and their resource centers, to sessions, and to libraries of the Presbyterian theological seminaries; and make additional copies available for sale to aid study and implementation efforts in the church.

e. Commend the members of the Task Force on Serious Mental Illness, the Synod Consultation on “Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness,” the staff of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), and the many individuals and groups who offered comments and suggestions in the development of this report on behalf of the whole church.

3. Approve the following definitions of (a) mental illness and (b) serious mental illness:

a. Mental Illness is a medical disorder characterized by disturbance in thought, mood, or behavior that causes distress or impairment of spiritual, interpersonal, behavioral, and emotional functioning. If left untreated, all mental illnesses are impairing.

b. Serious Mental Illnesses are severe and persistent medical disorders characterized by impairment in mood or behavior that cause distress and/or impairment in spiritual, interpersonal, and behavioral functioning. Salient examples are the disorders known as schizophrenia, bi-polar disorder, and major depression. Characteristic symptoms of serious mental illness include hallucinations, delusions, disorganized thinking, extreme mood changes, overwhelming hopelessness and sadness, severely impaired perception, judgment, or insight, and problems with concentration and attention. Serious mental illness is an enduring condition that affects one’s ability to cope with everyday challenges. If left untreated all mental illnesses may impair one’s ability to establish and maintain interpersonal relationships, practice one’s faith, worship God, attend school, go to work, or live independently. All mental illnesses can be impairing.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to send a letter commending the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations (JCAHO), the American Association of Pastoral Counselors (AAPC), the American Hospital Association (AHA), the American Nurses Association (ANA), the American Psychiatric Association (APA), the American Psychological Association (APA), and the National Association of Social Workers (NASW) for including spiritual assessment and religious history when designing care plans fully informed by cultural awareness.

5. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to send a letter encouraging the middle governing bodies, sessions, and individual members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and its ecumenical partners to give prayerful attention to this policy statement as a help in responding to serious mental illness in their families, congregations, and in the communities where they live, minister, and work.

6. Urge the presbyteries to do the following:

a. Provide educational opportunities for members to learn about treatment, counseling, ministry with people with serious mental illnesses, and how to address the stigma of serious mental illness in their congregations, particularly in regard to the experiences of children and youth, women and men, the elderly, and racial ethnic groups.

b. Provide training for pastors, staff, and lay care providers to help them develop appropriate identification and intervention strategies for persons at risk for suicide, especially teenagers, young adults, and the elderly.

c. Provide continuing education for pastors, staff, and lay care providers to train them to recognize and intervene when a person with a serious mental illness also abuses drugs, including alcohol.

d. Provide continuing education opportunities for pastors to help them learn how to support and advocate for families in crisis and to make appropriate treatment referrals.

e. Require mandatory continuing education credits for pastors on issues of pastoral care such as serious mental illness, addiction, domestic violence, child abuse, and other pertinent health-care issues.

f. Encourage pastors to become aware of the quality of services provided at local treatment facilities by consulting with administrators and care providers of those facilities, touring those facilities, and talking with people who receive such services.

g. Encourage pastors to preach sermons and provide Bible studies about serious mental illness.

h. Support the ministry and witness of the Presbyterian Serious Mental Illness Network (PSMIN), Presbyterians for Addiction and Action (PAA), and the Presbyterian Association of Specialized Pastoral Ministries (PASPM) of the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA), and Pathways to Promise, and encourage pastors and local sessions to do the same.

i. Encourage pastors to learn about the resources of the Veterans Administration (VA), as well as educating them to the needs of veterans of all ages, genders, and ethnicity.

7. Urge committees on preparation for ministry (CPMs), in consultation with the Office of Vocation of the General Assembly Council (GAC) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), to do the following:

a. Educate themselves about serious mental illness in order to help discern the call of individuals under care with understanding and compassion. This discernment should include consideration as to whether this person can be effective in the ministry of Word and Sacrament.

b. Assist individuals under care to find resources and support for any serious mental health concerns.

c. ~~[If an inquirer or candidate does not pass ordination exams, explore alternative means for administering ordination exams among the range of tools for assessing readiness for ministry.]~~ [Explore alternative means for administering ordination exams among the range of tools for assessing readiness for ministry, if an inquirer or candidate does not pass ordination exams.]

d. Encourage uniform standards and a uniform process for the psychological evaluation of candidates for ministry.

e. Require candidates for ministry and commissioned lay pastors (CLPs) to have successfully completed at least one unit of accredited clinical pastoral education (CPE).

8. Encourage committees on ministry (COMs) to do the following:

a. Educate themselves for early identification of pastors who may have a serious mental illness.

b. Develop more effective early intervention strategies and follow-up in dealing with pastors, sessions, and congregations when serious mental illness may be involved.

9. Urge sessions and congregations to do the following:

a. Prominently display educational material regarding serious mental illness, such as location and times for local meeting of the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI)— support groups/family-to-family training).

b. Display pamphlets from national advocacy groups such as Pathways to Promise, Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA), Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association (PHEWA), and the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI).

c. Subscribe to newsletters or web-based information updates from agencies listed above and post in newsletter/bulletin boards.

d. Provide support and advocate for individuals and families affected by serious mental illness.

e. Provide meeting room space for support groups and guidance for prayer-based support programs.

- f. Consider forming a relationship with a local chapter of the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI) for the purpose of fostering relationships between members of the congregations, their families, and people with serious mental illness.
  - g. Advocate for establishment of funding of not-for-profit agencies, counseling centers, and treatment programs for persons who struggle with mental illness, including those with dual diagnoses of alcohol and drug abuse.
  - h. Work to end the stigma of serious mental illness within the congregation and in the surrounding community.
  - i. Invite local mental health professionals to address serious mental illness in small groups and in worship services, and encourage family members with serious mental illness to attend them.
  - j. Create a church environment open to the transforming work of God where people know confidences will be kept and they will be accepted and supported when they ask for help.
  - k. In under-served areas, advocate for greater availability of mental health resources.
  - l. Encourage all members to prepare a Psychiatric Advance Directive (PAD), which specifies plans for their treatment in case of a mental health emergency. (Refer to Appendix D for an example of a PAD.)
  - m. Gain a deeper awareness of our own perceptions and attitudes regarding mental illness by making use of the recommendations here as well as the information provided in the background or rationale section of this report.
  - n. Encourage greater awareness regarding race, ethnicity, gender, class, age, and language as these relate to persons with a serious mental illness.
  - o. Advocate for housing for people living with a serious mental illness.
  - p. Encourage local sessions to adopt specific psychiatric units for prayer support, visits (when permitted), and material donations.
  - q. Conduct acts of worship recognizing Serious Mental Illness Awareness when designated in the Presbyterian Planning Calendar, Mental Health Awareness Month (May), and Serious Mental Illness Awareness Week (the first week in October).
  - r. Support the ministry and witness of the Presbyterian Serious Mental Illness Network (PSMIN), Presbyterians for Addiction and Action (PAA), and the Presbyterian Association of Specialized Pastoral Ministries (PASPM) of the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA), and Pathways to Promise, and encourage pastors and local sessions to do the same.
  - s. Encourage local hospitals to design comprehensive discharge plans for all psychiatric patients and to collaborate in and monitor the full implementation of these plans with available social service agencies post discharge.
  - t. Support church-based counseling services staffed by mental health professionals.
  - u. Support and advocate for resources to assist veterans such as: the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW), Disabled American Veterans (DAV), and The American Legion.
  - v. Inform and encourage veterans within the congregation to seek available resources to help them such as: the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW), Disabled American Veterans (DAV), and The American Legion.
  - w. Become active in helping members of the congregation prepare a Wellness Recovery Action Plan (WRAP).
10. Encourage the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) to establish a churchwide web-based network of congregations who are engaged in ministries with persons and families affected by serious mental illness.

11. Direct the Presbyterian Washington Office (PWO) do the following:

- a. Advocate for federal legislation that would increase and improve availability of mental health services in under-served areas.
- b. Advocate for federal legislation that would increase and improve care for vulnerable, high-need groups in racial and ethnic populations. Such legislation should include an increase in the number of multilingual and minority mental health practitioners.
- c. Advocate for federal legislation aimed at reducing the alarmingly high rate of suicides among elderly people. In addition to traditional psychological and medical interventions/treatments, efforts should be directed to reducing many of the social problems of the elderly, such as isolation and poverty that exacerbate mental illness.
- d. Advocate for federal legislation that would create health maintenance systems for persons with a serious mental illness to reduce symptom relapse and suicide risk.
- e. Advocate for federal legislation that requires parity in the coverage of mental health care and general health care, so that mental illnesses are covered on the same terms as other illnesses.
- f. Advocate for federal legislation that would increase and improve the Veterans Administration (VA)'s ability to care for veterans with mental illness.

12. Direct the Presbyterian United Nations Office (PUNO) to do the following:

- a. Advocate for international human rights treaties that would protect the rights of persons with a mental illness.
- b. Advocate for international human rights treaties that would improve mental health care universally.

13. Urge the Board of Pensions (BOP) to maintain its practice of providing benefits parity for treatment of mental illness.

14. Urge Presbyterian theological institutions and those related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by covenant agreement to do the following:

- a. Instruct students about the spiritual and social dimensions of mental health, and equip them to recognize the signs of mental illness and inform them of available treatments.
- b. Instruct students about the most recent medical research and findings regarding the causes of mental and serious mental illnesses.
- c. Instruct students on how to listen to, pray for, and follow-up with people who have a serious mental illness crisis and their families, including how to make appropriate referrals.
- d. Encourage those who are training to be worship leaders to use sermons and stories to educate their congregations about mental health and mental illness, and also to plan worship that celebrates occasions for mental health awareness.
- e. Provide educational opportunities about public advocacy issues affecting people with serious mental illness.

15. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, stated clerks of the middle governing bodies, stated clerks of the local sessions, and individual Presbyterians to:

- a. Urge local police to be trained to respond justly and humanely to persons with serious mental illness.
- b. Urge the department of corrections to recognize and respond appropriately to the needs of inmates with serious mental illness and provide timely, accessible, and high-quality treatment for incarcerated persons with serious mental illness.
- c. Support treatment and care facilities as alternatives to incarceration for persons with serious mental illness.

d. Urge careful planning for the release of prisoners so they receive immediate and intensive short-term support.

e. Encourage the criminal justice system to incorporate an evaluation for serious mental illness in sentencing and release guidelines.

f. Urge continuing education requirements and training programs for legal professionals, so they can keep well-informed about treatments for persons affected by serious mental illness.

[Financial Implications: (2006): $0; (2009): $10,800; (2010): $10,800 (Mission)]

Rationale

This report with recommendations is in response to the following referral: 1999 Referral: 25.039 Response to Recommendation Directing the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in Consultation with Appropriate Entities, to Develop a Comprehensive Serious Mental Illness Policy, Including Justice Issues and Full Participation in the Life of the Church and Report to the 217th General Assembly (2005)—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 42.309).

The recommendation read as follows:

Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, in consultation with appropriate entities, to develop a comprehensive serious mental illness policy, including justice issues and full participation in the life of the church, and report to the 217th [218th] General Assembly (2005) [2008] (Minutes, 1999, Part I, pp. 42, 309).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) received further instructions from the 213th General Assembly (2001): “Direct the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy to instruct its task forces on disabilities and serious mental illness to include the dimension of domestic violence and its impact in their respective work” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 61, 239). In addition, the 217th General Assembly (2006) instructed the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to “include consideration of youth suicide and self-injury in the ongoing work being done by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s Task Force on ... Serious Mental Illness” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 50, 917). This report focuses specifically on issues explored by the task force on serious mental illness, while an earlier disabilities policy, Living into the Body of Christ: Towards Full Inclusion of People with Disabilities, treats broader disability concerns (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 50, 919–39).

I. Introduction

The biblical theme of “exile” guides this policy statement. After offering a working definition and an account of the historical context, the report focuses on two major themes. The first theme is “The Land of Exile,” which explores the difficulties and injustices endured by people with serious mental illness. The experience of mental illness disorders people’s lives in ways that exile them from themselves, their families, and their community. The second theme, “God’s Call to Comfort,” focuses on appropriate ways congregations can minister with and to people with a serious mental illness. Throughout this report, people are understood from a Christian incarnational perspective, called to be delivered from chaos and disorder into the wholeness and communion of salvation. At the same time, the report recognizes the validity of the “medical model,” with its gifts of biochemical medication and social-scientific analysis. The goal of restoration from exile includes the integration of both perspectives and the renewal of a healthier culture and society. Especially because this document will be read to give hope to those suffering from mental illness and their families, stories are included from various perspectives that illumine and give depth to this policy statement. The stories have been altered to conceal the identities of the people in them.

A. God’s People in Exile, God’s Call to Proclaim Comfort

God sent the Prophet Isaiah to proclaim comfort to a people in exile, and also to bring that comfort to them in his own person. God’s people were suffering from exile from Jerusalem, the center of their covenantal life. It was in Jerusalem that they were able to celebrate and experience the wholeness of life as a people of the covenant with God.

Through the message of comfort, God affirmed that Israel was still beloved, though in exile. The covenant, “I . . . will be your God, and you shall be my people” (Lev. 26:12, NRSV), was confirmed. This, in and of itself, would bring comfort to an exiled people. God had not forgotten them nor abrogated the covenant with them.

Isaiah’s comforting was not to be in words only; his commission to comfort demanded personal involvement in preparing the way for the Lord to come to them. Their deliverance would come through the Lord, who would bring them back to Jerusalem in celebration of the glory of the Lord.

In the wilderness prepare the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. Every valley shall be lifted up, and every mountain and hill be made low; the uneven ground shall become level, and the rough places a plain. Then the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all people shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord has spoken. (Isa. 40:3–5, NRSV)

To God’s people in exile the Prophet Isaiah declared a message of comfort, and then was commanded to prepare the terrain for the advent of the Lord as Deliverer. Hebrew thought often merged message and deed. Accordingly, the Prophet was bid not merely to proclaim, but also to enact God’s message. The Prophet’s presence among them brought comfort to them, and embodied the vision that they were to prepare the way of the Lord, so that God might be among them.

Remembering both aspects of Isaiah’s call, the speaking and the doing, today our church acknowledges God’s call to be among and comfort persons with serious mental illness and their loved ones—persons who all too often have been exiled from the covenant community. Of course, exile may happen for various reasons. Some biblical scholars interpret the Hebrews’ exile as the consequence of their disobeying God, thus it is understood as divine punishment. However, persons living with serious mental illness are often exiled by the covenant community not because they themselves have disobeyed God, but because of a lack of information and understanding in the faith community. [Refer to the story of the man blinded at birth (John 9:1–12).]

If we reflect deeply enough we will realize that the people exiled include not only those afflicted with a serious mental illness, and their families and caretakers, but also the covenant community itself; for exiling others alienates the majority and fractures the family of God. The church by its own actions becomes exiled from its holier possibility, the covenant community that it is called to be.

The faces of people with serious mental illness are many. Some in our congregations choose to keep their mental illness private and do not disclose it to anyone in their church. They are fully functional and participate in the life of the church without their mental illness ever becoming apparent. Others’ mental illnesses are more evident to the congregation.

Our disinclination to face reality tragically divides our covenant community. Our brokenness prevents us from experiencing the reality that the prophet Isaiah described, and which Christ incarnated: “Then the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all people shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord has spoken” (Isa. 40:5, NRSV).

Christ came to bring reconciliation and wholeness to the broken communities of this world. Realizing that we have exiled others and thereby alienated ourselves from the promised glory of God, the church acknowledges this mandate from the Lord: “Comfort, O comfort my people!”

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) hears this call and seeks to respond through the power of the Holy Spirit, by welcoming outcasts as Jesus did. The Spirit connects us to people wrongly exiled by the social stigma surrounding serious mental illness. That same Spirit that was in Christ calls us to realize that the redeemed covenant community that we cherish is bound together as one family by God’s compassion for all. By doing so, we can find healing as we disclose how we are wounded and pray for each other.

As the Church incarnates the love of God that was so evident in Jesus, we experience the joy of the reign of Christ. (cf. Gal. 6:2) The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through this policy acknowledges its complicity in the suffering of people living with serious mental illness, people often exiled from our congregations and our civic communities. Through this policy, we seek to address our ignorance, prejudice, and fears. We acknowledge our call from the Lord to bring comfort to those in exile. Through this policy we seek to be reconciled to one another so that we may become the blessed community celebrating God’s gifts to all. We acknowledge that our words must be accompanied by action. Therefore, through this policy we offer ways by which the healing touch of Christ may come upon our faith community, and also upon the more extensive communities in which we live.

The Prophet Isaiah received a call from the Lord to proclaim and to bring comfort to an exiled people. This is the same call to which we, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), must respond today. We walk in faith with the Christ who stepped over social and religious boundaries and dared to touch and heal the lepers of his day. Like the Prophet Isaiah, we are called to be faithful companions of the Lord by breaking down dividing walls that exile us from each other, and celebrating the gift of community for all people. This policy is offered in expectant thanksgiving to God, trusting that by God's grace we shall all come to see the glory of God together.

B. Jesus' Ministry of Healing

In Jesus' earthly ministry he healed many people: through Jesus' healing power the blind could see, and the lame could walk, "and they brought to him all the sick, those who were afflicted with various diseases and pains, demoniacs, epileptics, and paralytics, and he cured them" (Matt. 4:24 NRSV). Many of the people Jesus healed were not just physical cures, but they included restoring a person to ritual cleanliness and therefore full participation in community life (lepers). Some also included a healing of the soul through the gift of forgiveness (the paralytic). Still others included the gift of peace, shalom, and wholeness (the woman with the flow of blood).

In Scripture, it is clear that healing is not confined to physical cure. Therefore, we make a distinction between healing and cure. Cure refers to the elimination of a disease or a disorder. Healing, on the other hand, is something much broader, and may or may not include the elimination of disease or disorder. Healing includes reconciliation, restoration to right relationship, the gift of courage to live faithfully within limitations, internal peace, God's call to vocation, and living a life of prayer, mutually up building interpersonal relationships, committed church life, and self-giving service to the world. People can be healed even when they continue to live with a disease or disorder. Some have discovered that the relentless search for a cure for their disorder is a great burden, and therefore the appropriate hope is for healing, not cure. The challenge for the church is to be an instrument of healing when cure is not likely.

As sovereign over all, God is free to use any means to heal the sick. We may experience God's healing power through healing prayer, laying on of hands, anointing with oil, and the prayers of the church. We may experience God's healing power through participation in the love, nurture, and admonition of the church. We may experience God's healing power through medication and psychotherapy. As spiritual, social, and biological beings, God may extend healing power to us through all three of these means, as well as through surprising, wholly unexpected means.

C. Definitions

Millions of people live with mental illness. It is the leading cause of disability in the U.S. and Canada for those between the ages of fifteen and forty-four.<sup>1</sup> Approximately one in four adult Americans has a diagnosable mental illness in any given year.<sup>2</sup> Although "mental disorders are widespread in the population, the main burden of illness is concentrated in a much smaller proportion."<sup>3</sup> According to the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH), one in seventeen or 6 percent of Americans have what can be called a "serious" mental illness.<sup>4</sup> It is serious mental illness that is the subject of this policy statement. In its widespread wake, few families and congregations are left unaffected.

Definitions of "mental illness" and "serious mental illness" vary greatly. In fact, the standard diagnostic manual used by mental health professionals does not even make a distinction between serious mental illnesses and non-serious ones.<sup>5</sup> The task force's mandate, however, was to address serious mental illness. We, therefore, recommend the following definitions:

1. Mental Illness is a medical disorder characterized by disturbance in thought, mood, or behavior that causes distress or impairment of spiritual, interpersonal, behavioral and emotional functioning. If left untreated, all mental illnesses are impairing.

2. Serious Mental Illnesses are severe and persistent medical disorders characterized by impairment in mood or behavior that cause distress and/or impairment in spiritual, interpersonal, and behavioral functioning. Salient examples are the disorders known as schizophrenia, bi-polar disorder, and major depression. Characteristic symptoms of serious mental illness include hallucinations, delusions, disorganized thinking, extreme mood changes, overwhelming hopelessness and sadness, severely impaired perception, judgment, or insight, and problems with concentration and attention. Serious mental illness is an enduring condition that affects one's ability to cope with everyday challenges. If left untreated all mental illnesses may impair one's ability to establish and maintain interpersonal relationships, practice one's faith, worship God, attend school, go to work, or live independently. All mental illnesses can be impairing.

II. The Church Speaks Again on Serious Mental Illness

The call for justice, care, and hospitality for God's children with mental illness is not new in our denomination. The 200th General Assembly (1988) approved two policies that explicitly called the church to care for and advocate for people with serious mental illness. The first was the policy statement on Life Abundant: Values, Choices and Health Care, which affirmed: "Good health—physical, mental health and spiritual—is both a God given gift and a social good of special moral importance. ..." (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 524). The second was the resolution, The Church and Serious Mental Illness, which spoke clearly to the church in these words: "The need to address chronic mental illness is urgent" (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 444).

In the present report, as our church again examines issues of serious mental illness, we do so as a people moved by the suffering of many who live with serious mental illness; and many questions of faith arise from this examination. Perhaps first and foremost is the question of how a good and powerful God can allow such pain. Is not it contrary to the very nature of the God we know in Jesus Christ? To witness the pain among many individuals and families affected by serious mental illness is to press to the limit our faith in God's love and power.

We cannot discern why there is suffering in God's good and lovely creation. We do know, however, that we are created as one body in the image of God, in our shared fragility, shared sin, our need to share God's grace in Jesus Christ, and our call to proclaim God's Kingdom. Therefore, as a church we are called to turn from our sinful ways, to turn from our pattern of exclusion, and to embrace all who live with serious mental illness as sisters and brothers, as co-members of Christ's body endowed with gifts for the upbuilding of the church.

While the church cannot eliminate a person's mental illness, we can welcome people who struggle daily with mental illness and thereby help reduce their suffering by changing chaos into wholeness. The church can recognize that although we might be powerless over some aspects of mental illness, God is not. Through the extraordinary power to love, we can share the precious gift of belonging with persons who have often heard that they do not belong. We can carry the message that by their baptism they bear the indelible mark of belonging to God's family forever. We have the opportunity to participate in the administration of God's grace to those recovering from mental illness, to their families and to covenant communities.

A Mental Health Professional's Story

Having worked for thirty years in the mental health field, I have had the opportunity to follow some clients for a long time. I have watched and worked with them as they struggled to cope and lead meaningful lives, within daunting limitations.

One such client, whose story I have permission to share, has learned to manage his illness and lives independently with the help of a private mental health agency. Our first encounter was on the streets of Atlanta where he often walked back and forth in front of the hospital screaming fragments of scripture and "preaching" to the public.

He was one of our many clients whom the mental services staff referred to as being in a "revolving door," regularly in and out of the hospital without getting any better. He had a difficult time accepting that he had a mental illness. He wanted all of his money, Supplemental Security Income (SSI), at one time so he could buy himself a boat, car, and a chicken farm. Then he could also get a wife.

After several years of missed appointments, being off medications, being arrested then readmitted to the hospital, he was assigned to me for case management. One day during one of our sessions he shared that he grew up in South Georgia. He was born to a single mother but she eventually married and had other children. Her husband never accepted him in the family and thus he grew up living with his grandparents.

His grandparents worked on a tobacco farm where he shared in the work to increase (slightly) the families' take home pay. He was a very angry and bitter teen and one day he got into a fight with the son of the owner of the tobacco farm.

Several days later the police came to his grandparents' home and told them that they needed to send "that boy" away because he was a troublemaker. After weeks of trying to decide what to do, the grandparents gave their sixteen-year-old grandson $45, put him on a bus, and sent him to Atlanta. The family had relatives who lived in Atlanta. Upon his arrival in Atlanta, however, there was no one to pick him up.

In this strange new city, he wandered the streets, ate what he could with the small amount of money he had, and slept in parks and stairwells. He was beaten and robbed. The police arrested him for panhandling. He was mistreated in jail; and when he was released, he said that he felt like he had "lost his mind."

It was very difficult to explain the appropriate approach to managing his life and how to accomplish his goals. Our outpatient case management sessions often ended with him leaving with no resolutions of any of his problems. Eventually I moved to another area in the mental health services and he was assigned a new case manager, but he would turn up in my area just to talk.

In my new support role for him, he asked me to read to him from the Bible. His favorite verses were "Gifts from the Holy Spirit." He enjoyed hearing that he had been given a special gift. He continued to have the same goals and the same problems but as he began to improve on his social skills he also began to improve with his compliance in treatment.

In January 2006, he came to my office neatly dressed saying: "These clothes came from Goodwill." From his coat pocket he proudly pulled out a worn church program, explaining that his sister (actually his stepsister) had given it to him. He added:

“She told me her father had died and gave me this program”. Look! This program says that I am his stepson! She told me she was sorry about how her daddy had treated me and wanted me to know that she, her sisters and brothers always told their daddy he had been wrong.” During this visit, he shared that he had a new job washing dishes at a local “fancy” restaurant in downtown Atlanta. He said: “The man knows I have a mental illness, but he said I am the best dish washer he has ever seen.” Then he smiled and put the worn program in his pants pocket.

III. A Brief History of God’s People in Exile

A. Varied Responses to People with Serious Mental Illness

Mental illness has been present in every culture and age; and life in exile from community has been the fate of millions of God’s children who live with mental illness. At times they have been the victims of unspeakable cruelty. People with mental illness have been burned at the stake as witches, lobotomized, subjected to painful medical experiments, confined in prisons, tortured, and executed. Yet at other times people with mental illness have remained a part of the community, living at home within families where their symptoms were accepted. Responses to people with mental illness have varied widely, ranging from forbearance and kindness to abandonment and exile.

Some interpret Jesus’ casting out demons to be healing mental illness, and some also understand mental illness today as a form of demon possession. It is true that mental illness can cause great suffering for those who live with it and for their families—a suffering so great that it seems that something very evil must be causing it. We know from the New Testament gospels many reports that Jesus “cast out demons.” The personification of evil that is found in those accounts seems to refer to real influences that bring chaos into human life. For example, in the fifth chapter of the Gospel of Mark, Jesus is confronted by “a man out of the tombs with an unclean spirit” (Mark 5:2, NRSV). The man’s life is full of disruptive chaos in his inner experience and his outward behavior. With divine power and authority, says the gospel, Jesus freed the man from disordering influences, restoring him to balance, self control, and appropriate behavior in his community. “And he went away and began to proclaim in the Decapolis how much Jesus had done for him; and everyone was amazed” (Mark 5:20, NRSV).

Whatever may be the ultimate nature of the disordering influence in this account (which remains to some degree mysterious to us), there seem to be very few instances in our modern experience of such miraculous deliverance. The Church today seems called to employ far less dramatic and more clinical means to assist those afflicted with serious mental disorders to gain some measure of healthy order, balance, self control, and appropriate behavior. Our role in healing and treatment follows the counsel of the Apostle Paul in Philippians 4:8, NRSV: “. . . whatever is true, whatever is honorable, whatever is just, whatever is pure, whatever is pleasing, whatever is commendable, if there is any excellence and if there is anything worthy of praise, think about these things.” In that light, we turn both to the truth, honor, excellence, etc., of modern medical science and to the love and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ as they are embodied in the life and worship of the Church.

We recognize that schizophrenia, bi-polar disorder, and major depression must be addressed medically. We also recognize the Church’s responsibility to welcome and care for those afflicted with these disorders and to employ the rich means of grace that are essential to the Church’s life to aid in their healing and restoration. We believe that it is therefore not useful or appropriate to attribute serious mental illness to “the work of demons,” though we recognize that there are powerful disordering forces at work in all of human life – many of which do not appear at all demonic but which do bring chaos with them.

As serious mental illness came to be treated more constructively and compassionately, a more general acceptance of counseling and psychotherapy developed in society. The Church contributed significantly to this process through the work of hospital chaplains, leading to the development of clinical pastoral education, and through the pastoral counseling movement, leading to the placement of counseling or “mental health” centers in many churches. These innovations added new dimensions to the traditional pastoral “cure of souls” and can be counted among the twentieth century achievements of the ministry and witness of the “mainline” church.

B. From the Mental Hospital to the Prison

In the early twentieth century in the United States (U.S.), the predominant response to mental illness was either voluntary or involuntary confinement to large state hospitals. Until the 1950s, hundreds of thousands of people were in such institutions. Several factors led to a new chapter in society’s response to people living with mental illness. First, new medications created the hope that people with a mental illness would be able to live outside institutions and participate in community life. Secondly, the public became aware of widespread cruelty and neglect in many state mental hospitals and began to call for closing them. Thirdly, the public became concerned for the civil rights of people involuntarily committed to mental hospitals.

Over the next few decades, thousands of residents of mental hospitals were released. The official plan was to create a nation-wide network of community-based mental health centers that would enable them to live on their own, supported by medical and social services. However, this network of centers never materialized, for lack of funding and community support. Though many of the former patients could have lived independently with adequate support, without it they could not maintain a safe and healthy life. Some stopped taking their medications, and their painful and debilitating symptoms returned. Some turned to alcohol and abuse of other substances as a way to control the symptoms. Many, unable to find or maintain housing and employment, became homeless.

Without social support, medication, housing, or treatment for their mental illness, some lived on the streets and engaged in bizarre public behavior. A small fraction threatened public safety. For mostly minor but sometimes major infractions, more and more people with mental illness ended up in prison. Today, more than half of the people in our prisons have some kind of mental health problem, and some of them are very serious: “an estimated 15 percent of State prisoners and 24 percent of jail inmates reported symptoms that met the criteria for a psychotic disorder.”<sup>6</sup>

Incarceration has become a widespread response to the mentally ill in the U.S. Over the course of several decades, we have witnessed a process of “trans-institutionalization,” that is, a shift from one institution to another: from large mental hospitals to prisons. In fifty years the number of people with mental illness living in hospitals dropped from 560,000 to 70,000, while the number of mentally ill people in prisons rose dramatically.<sup>7</sup> Prisons, of course, are not designed to provide the social support and attentive psychiatric care that many persons with serious mental illness require.

C. Still in Exile, Still Without Comfort

Like the people of Israel in exile, many people with mental illness remain outsiders, excluded from the warmth of family, friends, and even the church. People with serious mental illness are excluded for many reasons. Some people believe that all people with mental illness are dangerous and violent, or fear that their illness might be contagious; others just fear their unconventional or inappropriate behavior. Our churches should educate their members about serious mental illness and build understanding among all the members of Christ’s body. We recognize God’s call to proclaim comfort to people in exile by welcoming them home into the covenantal community of the church. If the church answers this call faithfully, the rest of God’s church shall find its way out of exile too: our exile from the possibility of becoming the loving community which God calls us to be.

IV. The Land of Exile

By the rivers of Babylon—there we sat down and there we wept when we remembered Zion. On the willows there we hung up our harps. ... How could we sing the Lord’s song in a foreign land? (Ps. 137:1–2, 4, NRSV)

A. Lives in Exile

The United States’ history of failure to provide adequate care for people with serious mental illness has been devastating. Our neglect has contributed to (1) homelessness, (2) addiction, (3) incarceration, and (4) suicide for many, as described below.

1. Homelessness

Though only 6 percent of the U.S. population has a serious mental illness,<sup>8</sup> this portion constitutes 20 to 25 percent of the homeless population.<sup>9</sup> Furthermore, they are “homeless more often and for longer periods than other homeless groups.”<sup>10</sup> Also, as many as two-thirds of all people with serious mental illness have experienced or been at risk for homelessness sometime in their lives, although only 5 percent of people with serious mental illness are homeless at any given time.<sup>11</sup>

There are many reasons why the homelessness of persons with mental illness is a very difficult problem to address. Independent living often requires supportive services, which society has failed to provide. Substance abuse, which plagues approximately half of the people with a serious mental illness, further complicates their maintaining permanent housing. In addition, many people with serious mental illness have not received the benefits to which they are entitled by law, and therefore cannot afford housing. Sometimes they stop seeking mental health services because of a history of unsuccessful attempts. They are often alienated from family members although they maintain lengthy relationships with other homeless people. They are twice as likely as other homeless people to be arrested or jailed, mostly for misdemeanors.<sup>12</sup>

2. Addiction

Many people who live with serious mental illness struggle with both a mental disorder and an alcohol or drug addiction. These persons with a dual diagnosis represent about one half of patients seen in psychiatric emergency rooms. More than half of the people who abuse drugs and or alcohol have at least one co-occurring mental illness. Of the persons who use cocaine, three out of four have a co-occurring mental illness. For those who abuse alcohol, one-third has a mental disorder.<sup>13</sup>

It is estimated that between 32 to 41 percent of individuals with a mood disorder have a substance abuse disorder. Persons with a bipolar disorder have the highest rate, 56 to 71 percent. Approximately one-half of persons with a psychotic disorder, including schizophrenia, also have a substance abuse problem.<sup>14</sup>

Alcohol abuse and chemical dependence are complicated disorders that are impacted by multiple factors. When existing alone, they are thought of as biological, medical disorders, or diseases. A person with mental illness may seek relief from symptoms by using alcohol or drugs. For example, a person with bipolar illness who cannot sleep may use alcohol or sedating drugs in an attempt to sleep or slow down. This self-medication may provide temporary relief, but it tends to worsen mental illness symptoms in the long term. In addition, it may contribute to noncompliance with treatment and medication regimes and increase the risk for adverse interactions with prescribed medications.

Substance use disorders may also mask the symptoms of a mental illness. For instance, when someone with a mental illness feels an intensification of their symptoms approaching, they may try to convince themselves and others that their symptoms are due to the substance abuse and not from mental illness. When mental illness symptoms are attributed solely to the effects of substance abuse, both disorders become more difficult to diagnose and treat.

Although personal responsibility is important in addressing substance abuse problems, alcoholism and drug addiction are illnesses in their own right. These illnesses are not the result of character flaws or poor moral choices. Recognizing their own powerlessness to overcome their addictions, people in twelve step recovery programs do in fact make progress against old habits by turning their lives over to a higher power. Involvement in church life can help to support them by giving their lives a meaningful context.

A Story of Recovery

I awoke from a nightmare of such extreme intensity that the commonplace became confusing and threatening. The familiar had become a bizarre blurring of the real and unreal, producing in me a gut-wrenching fear. My sense of time had disappeared. Even when I was awake, this “nightmare” continued through sleepless days and nights. I was bone tired, but my mind raced. When I felt a yawn coming on, I was unable to give into it before being carried away by a surge of frenzied energy. I was bereft of rest, and clarity of mind and perception. My thoughts were strewn with suspicions and delusions. I thought the Second Coming of Christ was imminent, but somehow that I alone was gifted with special powers to save the world. My sense perceptions seemed extraordinarily focused. Sometimes I thought I could see things that others could not. Stymied by the fact that other people were not validating my perceptions, I became isolated. My friends and family left me. I could no longer work. I lost my home, my freedom, and my sanity. My world came crashing down.

Although these experiences were the result of my addiction to prescription drugs (psychostimulants) and alcohol, there are many parallels between my mental disorder and those suffered by others who have a serious mental illness. While my story is of a person without a dual diagnosis, the symptoms induced by substance abuse are similar to symptoms associated with serious mental illness and worsened when there is a dual diagnosis condition. Unlike people with a serious mental illness, people with exclusively substance dependence can correct their brain chemistry once their substance abuse stops. Unfortunately, for those with a serious mental illness, this is not the case, for some will have to endure symptoms such as these throughout their lives.

This is how I began my recovery. Over time, my mind began to clear. Since I had been trained at Harvard Medical School, I was ashamed of my behavior. But my need for help outweighed my need to protect my pride. So, I got into treatment and began a lifelong discipline of recovery through the twelve-step program of Alcoholics Anonymous, and also through active involvement in a very supportive church, where my isolation was met with fellowship, my fears with compassion, and where my weaknesses were forgiven, and my service encouraged. I was able to return to work in my profession as a clinical psychologist. My personal experience is now being used to help others ravaged by mental illness.

I have discovered on my journey of recovery that chemical addictions and alcoholism are diseases, similar to physical disorders such as hypertension and diabetes. I have also come to realize that addictions are no respecter of persons. They can affect people who are highly educated and “ought to know better.” Fortunately, there are treatments available to persons with addictions and other types of mental disorders. The church plays an important role in recovery. In recovery, I have learned to more fully participate in life by appreciating my Creator’s daily gifts. I have reconciled with my wife, family, and community, and am keenly aware of my dependency on God’s grace; for without such grace, I would not be in the healthier place where I now am.

3. Criminal Justice System

Three times the number of persons with mental illness are in our prisons as are in our psychiatric hospitals.<sup>15</sup> Yet inmates rarely receive the treatment to which they are legally entitled. In the report entitled “Mental Health Problems of Prisons and Jails” published on the Department of Justice’s website, more than one-in-six jail inmates, one in three state prisoners, and one in four federal prisoners with a mental health problem received treatment for their condition since their admission.<sup>16</sup>

Life in prison for a person with serious mental illness is extremely difficult and prisons are ill-equipped to offer appropriate mental health services. “Few prisons offer adequate mental health care services, and the prison environment is dangerous and debilitating for prisoners who have mental illness. These prisoners are victimized by other inmates, punished by prison staff for behaviors associated with their illnesses, and often placed in highly restrictive cells that exacerbate their symptoms,” writes William Kanapaux in Psychiatric Times, summarizing a report by Human Rights Watch (HRW), released in October, 2003.<sup>17</sup> The President’s New Freedom Commission on Mental Health Final Report confirms the right to adequate mental health care for people in prison: “Providing adequate services in correctional facilities for people with serious mental illnesses who do need to be there is both prudent and required by law. The Eighth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution protects the right to treatment for acute medical problems, including psychiatric problems, for inmates and detainees in America’s prisons and jails.”<sup>18</sup> However, inmates are often not provided access to necessary medication or to the mental health providers they need.

Not only are people with serious mental illness over-represented among those serving prison terms, but also among those condemned to death by the state. Amnesty International (AI) reported that at least 10 percent of the first one thousand people executed in the United States since 1977 were severely mentally ill.<sup>19</sup> The Mental Health America (MHA) reports that 5–10 percent of the 3,400 people on death row in the U.S. are mentally ill.<sup>20</sup> These statistics are undoubtedly underestimated since in many cases there have been no psychiatric evaluations. Dr. Susan Lee, Amnesty International’s American programs director states: “Prejudice and ignorance give rise to fear, and for many people it is easier to sentence a mentally ill person to death than to find genuine treatment solutions.”<sup>21</sup> Our failure to care for people with serious mental illness has had deadly consequences for those on death row.

4. Suicide

Jonathan’s Story

In 2005, Jonathan (age twenty-five) returned from military service. He was repeatedly shaken by flashbacks of sixteen men in his unit who died during two days of intense fighting. In addition to waking flashbacks of the events of this period, Jonathan was also troubled by terrifying nightmares which left him feeling guilty for not being able to protect his buddies, and guilty for surviving what they did not. At first Jonathan resisted seeking mental health treatment because that seemed to him a sure admission of weakness. However, when panic attacks became intolerable he finally sought help through the Veterans Administration. Help came too slowly. After weeks of outpatient processing and a lack of inpatient beds, Jonathan committed suicide.

Like Jonathan, some sufferers conclude that life in exile is unbearable and choose to end their lives. Globally it has been estimated that nearly a million people take their own lives each year. In the U.S., the annual suicide rate is approximately 12/100,000.<sup>22</sup> According to the National Co-morbidity Survey Replication, 3.3 percent of the general population thinks about committing suicide in the course of a year. Most suicide attempts involve an individual with a mental disorder, particularly mood disorders and/or substance abuse disorders. Suicide rates among bipolar persons have been estimated at between 15 to 20 percent, with attempts as high as 50 percent.<sup>23</sup> According to the National Institute of Mental Health, “Four times as many men as women die by suicide<sup>24</sup>; however, women attempt suicide two to three times as often as men.”<sup>25</sup>

Several risk factors have been correlated with suicide and suicidal behavior. These include:

- age (elderly and adolescent);
- gender (male);
- race (Caucasian);
- religious affiliation (Protestant);
- marital status (single);
- employment status (unemployed);
- economic status (lower annual per capital income);
- physical health (persons with serious physical illness);
- previous suicide attempts;
- those who have poor social support or have lost such support altogether (as when a friend, family, or church member moves away or dies);
  - those in personal crisis (such as recently divorced or bereaved persons);
  - those with a prognosis of terminal illness;
  - those having less access to mental health resources and federal aid;
  - those having a history of emotional or sexual abuse; and
  - those living within certain geographical areas (the reasons for this last factor are sometimes not well understood).<sup>26</sup>

In addition to these risk factors, certain childhood adversities have been associated with a risk for suicidal behavior. These include childhood maltreatment or victimization (psychological, physical, and sexual abuse), problematic parenting or family environment, (family history of suicidal behavior, chronic and severe conflicts with family members), difficult relationships with peers and socioeconomic hardship.<sup>27</sup> Suicidal behavior may be attributed to biologically inherited mental disorders as well as environmental stressors and traumas.

a. Suicide Among Teens

“Suicides among young people nationwide have increased dramatically in recent years” states the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry (AACAP).<sup>28</sup> Suicide is so prevalent in youth that it is the third leading cause of death for those between the ages of fifteen and twenty-four, preceded by homicide and car accidents.<sup>29</sup> Each year, approximately five thousand people in this age range die from taking their own lives. Although staggering, this figure may actually be under-representative due to the stigma associated with suicide. One recent study indicated that one in four high school students seriously considered suicide. One in six made plans to attempt suicide and one in twelve tried to carry their plans out. Although Caucasian students were more likely than black students to consider suicide, there has been more than 100 percent increase in the rate of suicide among African American males.<sup>30</sup> Correspondingly high numbers of suicide attempts occur among Native American and Alaska Native youth. A dramatic elevation in suicide rate is also evident among gay and lesbian high school students. One study showed that gay and lesbian high school students were four times more likely to attempt suicide than heterosexual students.<sup>31</sup>

Teens face multiple pressures. They need to adjust to bodies that are in flux. They face independence. They have high expectations of themselves and sometimes face strong pressures from parents. They have a strong need to be accepted by peers. When these developmental tasks are frustrated, they may become dejected and express their anger and despair through suicidal acts. For teens who are susceptible to a serious mental illness, stresses such as excessive and intense family arguments, worry over grades, or the breakup of a romantic relationship may trigger suicidal behavior. Warning signs of suicide risk include extreme personality changes, loss of interest in routine activities, withdrawal, increased irritability, prolonged sadness, substance abuse, and a preoccupation with death.<sup>32</sup>

b. Suicide Among the Elderly

Elderly people are disproportionately likely to commit suicide. In the year 2000, elders constituted 13 percent of the U.S. population. Disproportionately, individuals sixty-five years and older accounted for 18 percent of all suicides.<sup>33</sup> Risk factors for suicide among elders differ in some ways from those among younger people. The elderly show a higher prevalence for depression and other serious mental conditions. They experience poorer social support, lower economic status, and serious physical health conditions that diminish their quality of life. Elderly people also use more deadly means when they attempt suicide, so the probability that they will survive is less than that for younger persons.<sup>34</sup> Younger people sometimes make a weak suicide attempt to get attention. This is rare among the elderly.

Many elderly people who attempt suicide never seek professional care for mental anguish, though some research reports that almost half the patients who committed suicide had visited a physician in the preceding week.<sup>35</sup> So, detecting depression among the elderly is a crucially important role for primary care providers.

B. Discrimination Against the Stranger in a Strange Land

Many people with serious mental illness do not face such overt problems as homelessness, addiction, or imprisonment, as described above. Yet, solely on account of their illness they struggle with society’s sometimes subtle but nevertheless destructive attitudes toward persons with a serious mental illness. The stigma of having a serious mental illness may deprive them of employment or adequate health care; or they may face the possibility of inappropriate involuntary commitment.

1. Stigma

When a person is physically ill, it is expected that they will be supported and treated sympathetically in their quest for healing. When one has a long-standing, disabling illness or injury, it is expected that they will be given every assistance and consideration as they cope with their limitations and any ensuing hardships. Not so with mental illness. Not only must those who are diagnosed with a serious mental illness cope with the illness as such, but they, and their families, must also shoulder the additional burden of the nearly overwhelming presence of stigma.

Stigma is a mark of shame, disgrace, or disapproval; it is a sign that one is different from others and should be rejected because of that difference. “Stigmata” were literally cut or burned onto the bodies of “different” individuals in ancient Greece and they were shunned. Today stigma takes the form of negative, inaccurate stereotypes, ostracism, and cruel, ignorant humor. Stigma prevents ill persons from seeking treatment in a timely fashion. It diminishes public support for funding of necessary and appropriate services for the mentally ill. It prevents persons who are in recovery from finding meaningful and secure employment and acceptable housing. Stigma enables the insurance industry to impose a life time limit on the number of days for inpatient treatment. It contributes to cruelty in our criminal justice system. Stigma precludes persons with mental illness from seeking and receiving the gift of community and, most importantly, it denies to those who live with mental illness God's gift of hope. Although its effect is much the same for the members of all groups, stigma can be particularly harmful to some racial/ethnics and immigrants with a mental illness because of the already existing burden of discrimination they bear.

To begin to redress the consequences of stigma one must recognize that its roots are to be found in our own fears. If we recognize that a person with mental illness is the same as any other person in every regard except that they have a particular illness, then we must recognize that we too could be subject to such an illness. As psychiatrist R. E. Kendell writes, "Our concept of ourselves as rational beings guided by reasons and intelligence is crucial to our self confidence and self esteem; and encountering a fellow human being who has lost his or her reason and whose behavior is no longer rational is profoundly disturbing because it implies that the same might happen to us. That is why the mentally ill are mocked as well as feared, for mockery reduces the implied threat they pose."<sup>36</sup>

Many mental health professionals and individuals living with mental illness believe that media sources are a major contributor to the long lasting negative attitudes toward mental illness held by the public. Media sources are held responsible particularly for promulgating the notion that there is an extraordinarily high correlation between mental illness and violence when, in fact, "... the overall contribution of mental disorders to the total level of violence in society is exceptionally small."<sup>37</sup> Some media sources do much to legitimate the notion that persons with mental illness are an appropriate subject of humor and derision. Much of the content of both television and film contains demeaning terminology and caricatures that are hurtful to individuals and perpetrate centuries-old stereotypes. The same is true of conversation in public life and in private among persons who have no intent to hurt, but who fall victim to habits of expression.

The authors of the landmark Surgeon General's report of 1999 state very explicitly, "Stigma must be overcome. Research that will continue to yield increasingly effective treatments for mental disorders promises to be an effective antidote. When people understand that mental disorders are not the result of moral failings or limited will power, but are legitimate illnesses that are responsive to specific treatments, much of the negative stereotyping may dissipate."<sup>38</sup> Our church can be a powerful force in overcoming stigma by modeling for the rest of society how those living with a mental illness must be regarded—with respect, as loved children of God, and with deep appreciation for the unique gifts they bring to the community where they, too, are recognized as members of the Body of Christ.

2. Limited Employment Opportunities

According to the results of a comprehensive federal commission on serious mental illness, "among adults with serious mental illness there is a 90 percent unemployment rate—the worst level of unemployment of any group of persons with disabilities."<sup>39</sup> At the same time, though, studies show that many persons with serious mental illness want to work and could do so with moderate assistance. The commission also finds unacceptable that our nation's largest "program" for people with mental illness is disability payments rather than assistance in finding meaningful employment with benefits, job transition, and vocational rehabilitation.

3. General Health Care

Numerous studies have consistently shown that persons with mental illness have a higher mortality rate than the general population. They also have extensive medical needs that go undetected and untreated such as diabetes, accidents, and heart disease. "People being treated for serious mental illness by public mental health systems die 25 years earlier, on average, than do members of the general population."<sup>40</sup>

Various obstacles prevent people with mental illness from getting the medical help they need. Individuals with severe mental illness can be unwelcome in medical offices because they appear disheveled, have poor hygiene, and display idiosyncratic mannerisms. Their mood and thinking disturbances may elicit negative reactions. As a consequence they may receive only a cursory examination. Also, mental illness can create distortions in physical sensation, pain perception, and accurate reporting. A clear and complete history, without corroborating information obtained from others, such as a family member or friend, is difficult to obtain.

Some people are denied appropriate physical care due to the prior diagnosis of mental illness. The medical staff might focus on the mental illness to the exclusion of the physical ailment. The primary diagnosis may become the only diagnosis.

Some people with mental illness choose to avoid medical treatment altogether because of a general fear of others, especially medical personnel who are perceived as untrustworthy. Simple things such as making appointments, observing waiting room protocol, filling out forms, compliance with treatment recommendations, getting prescriptions filled, and seeing specialists can be overwhelming.

4. Involuntary Commitment

Decisions about the civil rights of persons with mental illness become particularly difficult when they are not a danger to themselves or others but their untreated illness leads them to live in inhumane conditions of deprivation and suffering. In this situation, does a loved one have a right to force them into treatment against their will? Some families have experienced the tragic cycle of their loved one going off medication, becoming unable to care adequately for themselves, being arrested and incarcerated, then released to the care of the family, only to go off their medications again and begin the cycle once more. In this case, should the family make treatment decisions on behalf of a loved one that might include committing him/her involuntarily to a hospital?

Decisions about civil rights for people with mental illness become difficult when untreated illness leads to inhumane conditions of deprivation and suffering. When a person's ability to assess her or his options has been gravely disordered by mental illness, does this responsibility fall rightly to loved ones? The National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI) has adopted the following statement regarding involuntary commitment that allows for greater consideration of individual circumstances. Rather than opposing without exception all involuntary commitment outside danger to self or others, NAMI recommends that:

States should adopt broader, more flexible standards that provide for involuntary commitment and/or court ordered treatment when an individual is gravely disabled, which means that the person is substantially unable, except for reasons of indigence, to provide for any of his or her basic needs, such as food, clothing, shelter, health or safety; or is likely to substantially deteriorate if not provided with timely treatment; or lacks capacity, which means that as a result of the brain disorder the person is unable to fully understand; or lacks judgment to make an informed decision about his or her need for treatment, care, or supervision.<sup>41</sup>

On the other hand, does the person living with mental illness have a right to the final say over his or her medication and treatment? Does she or he finally know what is in her or his best interest? Individuals ought to be free to make decisions before God about how to respond to their illnesses. One way to protect the individual rights of a person with mental illness is through Psychiatric Advance Directives (PADs). (Refer to Appendix D for an example of a PAD) By stipulating in writing and in advance their decisions regarding their own care, people with a serious mental illness can provide very helpful guidance to their families and mental health providers, to be used in the event that their illness becomes acute. This practice ensures that the will of the person with the debilitating mental illness is respected.

C. Comfort Withheld: Inadequate Mental Health Care

Our understanding of comfort for people with mental illness includes hospitality, affection, and nurture, as well as advocating for their access to the goods of society, including timely and excellent mental health care. Tragically, government funding for these services has been cut again and again. The church faithful to both God and to God's children who live with mental illness will engage in the struggle to make quality mental health care available to any who need it.

1. Barriers to Mental Health Services

According to a 2000 World Health Organization study, mental illness is the leading cause of disability worldwide. The study also concluded that mental illness is responsible for 25 percent of all disability in major industrialized countries.<sup>42</sup> Yet, "... only one out of two people with a serious form of mental illness seeks treatment for the disorder."<sup>43</sup> According to the President's New Freedom Commission on Mental Health, nearly all the citizens who are not receiving care are in that predicament because access to care is impeded. Though there are instances of persons simply choosing not to seek treatment, untreated mental illness can usually be accounted for by multiple obstacles to treatment. Some of these obstacles are a lack of transportation, the unavailability of childcare, the inflexibility of employers, the stigma of mental illness, and cultural or language barriers. Persons who need treatment will often not seek it for fear of being labeled "lazy," "crazy," "dangerous," or worse. They fear the inability to obtain employment, ostracism, and, ultimately, abandonment by society.

Chief among the obstacles to getting treatment, however, is the real or perceived inability to pay for the needed services. Many persons with mental illness lack health insurance altogether. They are unemployed, homeless, and perhaps addicted, and have either not sought or qualified for any public assistance. Others are insured, but not sufficiently. Those who rely on third party payments to pay for their mental health care often find that there are limits upon the services and medications covered. The President's New Freedom Commission wrote in 2000, "The current system of mental health care must rely on many sources of financing. Too many of the funding streams are tightly restricted regarding how they may be used and for whom. Providing access to effective treatments and services that are easy to navigate and that use flexible funding streams is crucial to transforming mental health care in America."<sup>44</sup>

An additional obstacle is posed by the insufficiency of inpatient psychiatric beds, especially for children and adolescents and for those living in sparsely populated states or regions. It is not uncommon for patients, including children, in some areas of the U.S. to be hospitalized hundreds of miles from home and family because no hospital beds exist or no beds are available in their home community. This possibility can often dissuade individuals from seeking and/or accepting treatment for themselves or family members.<sup>45</sup>

2. Lack of Insurance Parity

In the 1999 Surgeon General's report on mental illness cited earlier, it is noted that people who suffer from mental illness are least likely to receive the medical attention that they need. One of the major reasons for this failure is inadequate insurance coverage, which makes mental health care unaffordable.

Insurance coverage for mental illness has long been separate from and unequal to general health insurance. Mental illness coverage is much more restricted than coverage for other illnesses, such as heart disease, cancer, and diabetes. Limits on hospital stays, restricted numbers of psychotherapy sessions, higher co-payments, monthly limits on prescription drug costs, and caps on lifetime benefits are ways that insurance companies try to contain the cost of mental health coverage. Furthermore, accessing this coverage is complicated and confusing because insurance companies have "carved out," or separated, plans of coverage for mental health care. These "carved out" plans are run by subcontracted companies whose only task is to manage mental health services. The separate but unequal insurance coverage for mental illnesses has been called a lack of "insurance parity."

Tight restrictions imposed by insurance companies pose major barriers to obtaining timely mental health care. This generally means that at some point a person with mental illness must either enter the public health care system or receive no care at all. Individuals affected by mental illness report managed care is an immediate barrier and is often one of the primary reasons for the delay of treatment, especially for individuals who experience their first symptoms/episode of mental illness. The longer the delay in treatment the more costly the treatment will be when one does enter the health care system. "Untreated mental illness costs American businesses, government and families at least seventy-nine billion dollars annually in lost productivity and unemployment, broken lives and broken families, emergency room visits, homelessness and unnecessary use of jails and prisons."<sup>46</sup>

Studies show that there is no financial justification for a lack of insurance parity. Advocates such as the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI), the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH) and the Presbyterian Serious Mental Illness Network (PSMIN) support efforts to stop discriminatory insurance practices against those with mental illness. In 2005, NAMI researched and published "Grading the States: A Report on America's Health Care System for Serious Mental Illness" which disputes the insurance industry's claim that caring for persons with mental illness costs more and requires stringent management. In addition, a study in the New England Journal of Medicine concluded that the implementation of parity, when coupled with management of care, could improve insurance protection without increasing total costs.<sup>47</sup>

3. Managed Care

Managed Care is a controversial issue when discussing insurance coverage for people with mental illness. Insurers' explanations for higher co-pays, limited life time coverage, and limited number of days in the hospital is confusing and complicated, especially to individuals and families affected by mental illness.

Individuals affected by mental illness report that managed care is an immediate barrier and is often one of the primary reasons for the delay of treatment, especially for individuals who experience their first symptoms/episode of mental illness. While managed care has made it possible for more people to receive treatment for mental illness, it has resulted in more delays and less comprehensive treatment, according to the Rand Corporation's division on health, Rand Health:

When unmet need is defined as delays in receiving treatment or receiving less treatment than desired, persons in managed care had unmet needs more often than those in unmanaged care. In contrast, when unmet need is defined as no care, those in managed care had unmet needs less often. Although managed care may make it easier to access some treatment, it may make it harder to get comprehensive care [emphasis in original].<sup>48</sup>

The National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI) has published a report which cites the failure of managed care plans in many areas, including, "easy hospital admission and flexible hospital length-of-stay ... immediate access to all effective medications, suicide attempt viewed as a medical emergency, [and]... consumer and family participation in their treatment planning and care."<sup>49</sup>

Despite the lobbying efforts of the largest advocacy group in this country, the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI), and many other faith-based groups, Congress has failed to pass a bill requiring equal payments for mental health coverage. Such a bill would greatly enhance access to quality, timely, and affordable mental health care.

4. Obstacles to Obtaining Available Federal and State Benefits

Persons with mental illness commonly encounter obstacles when trying to obtain federal and state benefits and services. The President's New Freedom Commission on Mental Health wrote in 2003, "consumers (users of mental health services) often feel overwhelmed and bewildered when they must access and integrate mental health care, support services, and disability benefits across multiple disconnected programs that span federal, state and local agencies. ...”<sup>50</sup> Initial obstacles encountered include: limited knowledge of what benefits are available, the criteria for qualification, and cumbersome, lengthy, and confusing application procedures. In addition applicants are often refused upon their first attempt and must apply again. Therefore most applicants need help through the application process.

Evidence shows that the more serious a person’s mental illness, the harder it becomes to receive the treatment and assistance required by law.<sup>51</sup> There is also strong evidence that due to delays in seeking and qualifying for benefits, many are forced into homelessness and commit petty crimes, such as panhandling and shoplifting, in order to survive.<sup>52</sup>

Discharge plans are often inadequate. Patients leave the hospital without housing, or the means to secure food and needed follow-up medical services. Lacking the necessary information and skills to obtain such basic resources, persons with serious mental illness will likely be hospitalized again. In a similar manner, thousands of persons with mental illness who are released from prison have no access to basic necessities. The President’s New Freedom Commission found that, “... one of the groups most isolated from society are consumers who attempt to return to the community after being incarcerated. Linking people with serious mental illness to community-based services ... is an important strategy to reintegrate [persons with mental illness] into their communities.”<sup>53</sup> Failure to do this for a population that is commonly “poor, uninsured, disproportionately members of minority groups, homeless, and living with co-occurring substance abuse and mental disorders”<sup>54</sup> makes it “likely that they will continually recycle through the mental health, substance abuse, and criminal justice systems.”<sup>55</sup>

In addition to the complicated process for obtaining assistance, there are also practical obstacles, such as getting transportation to and from medical appointments, securing child-care during those appointments, gathering necessary documents (e.g., birth certificate, driver’s license, and proof of legal residence), obtaining an address for receiving benefits, making banking arrangements, and finding interpreters for non-English speakers. “Overwhelm[ing]” is the word used by The President’s New Freedom Commission to describe this process.<sup>56</sup> When a brain disorder impedes a person’s concentration, memory, and ability to organize and plan, the application for government benefits is often close to impossible and requires much assistance from others, such as family, friends, and the church.

D. Families in Exile

Serious mental illness renders not only an individual in exile, but whole families as well. Below are the stories of two different, unrelated families. The first is the story told by the mother of an adult son who receives a diagnosis of a serious mental illness. The second story is told by the daughter of a woman with a serious mental illness but who never receives treatment.

A Mother’s Story

It had been a frantic spring and summer. In the space of a just a few weeks, our twenty-two year old daughter moved from our small town to a large metropolitan area three hundred miles away. Our younger son and his fiancé announced in March that they were getting married in May, instead of waiting a year as they had been planning. So my husband and I drove U-Hauls, hosted a wedding, served on our church’s session and on a pastor nominating committee, helped care for our own parents who were ninety-three and ninety-five respectively, and worked with our oldest son to help him purchase a first home. In other words, life was happening. And, then, one fall day ... the phone rings.

At the other end of the phone is our twenty-six year old, newly married son, now living twelve hundred miles away, who says, “Mom, I need to tell you something ... I’ve been feeling really strange lately and I’ve been hurting myself.” My mind had no idea what this meant, but my stomach did. I was instantly sick ... I wanted to throw up ... my skin crawled ... I knew I had entered a place I had never been before.

I tried to keep my voice light, “What do you mean, hurting yourself?”... “I’ve been hitting my head on the concrete blocks in the shower at the gym. I don’t have any skin left on my forehead.” ... “Why, why are you doing this?” ... “I don’t know, Mom, but I’m scared. Cary [his new wife of five months] says I need to see a doctor. Do you think I should? ... “Oh, yes, honey, I do. Do you want me to come out to go with you?”... “No, that’s okay, Cary will go with me. I’ll let you know what the doc says, okay?”... “Okay, I’ll be waiting to hear. Love you.”... “Love you too, Mom. Bye.”

In that way, in the space of five or six minutes, life changes—completely. My world was suddenly an unknown landscape where I anticipated assault at every turn. I got through the following day—a day filled with a sense of overwhelming grief; already, I knew my son’s life was irreversibly altered. I grieved his losses—and mine. Finally, in early evening the call came; the doctor had been seen. And I discovered inside this frightened young man a strength I had never suspected. “Mom,” he says, “the doctor thinks I should go into the hospital and I agree. I’m going to check in at 6:30 in the morning.” “What hospital?” I ask. “A psychiatric hospital,” he says. All of my worst imaginings are confirmed, but he is clearly relieved and, while the anxiety is there in his voice, he is purposeful. I say to him—as I would say a thousand times over in the coming years—“You’ve made such a courageous decision; we couldn’t be more proud of you.” And then the practical emerges, “How will you cover the expense, will your insurance take care of it?” “I think so,” he says. “Well, don’t worry,” I say, “we’ll manage it and Dad [a stepfather who has been his Dad since the age of five] and I will get the earliest flight we can get in the morning.” “Okay, Mom, see you both when you get here and, Mom, I’m going to be okay.”

It suddenly hits me—with all that he is struggling with, he’s worried about me. And with that realization, the pain became unbearable and I sobbed. At this point his father and I felt we had two options—pull further and further into ourselves and become more and more overwhelmed by our fears or share this heartbreak with people we knew loved us and would want to be with us in a time such as this. We chose the latter. We made two phone calls. They were not to other family members but to our pastor and to two other church members and dear friends. The three of them were at our kitchen table within the hour. We talked, we cried, we prayed. Of course, the love and companionship of our pastor and friends did not allay all of our anxiety. Nor, did our firm belief that Christ was with us at that kitchen table take away all of our fears, but the communion at that table did make it possible for us to get through the evening and to take the necessary next steps to get to our son’s side.

I thought I had done things in my life that had required me to muster all the strength of will that I possessed. I was wrong; nothing had been required of me compared to finding the strength to open the door to that locked hospital unit, nor to seeing my six feet, 220-pound son looking dazed, in shorts and t-shirt, scabs covering his face and dozens of deep, self-inflicted cuts all over his forearms and thighs. As I held him in my arms I couldn’t breathe—thoughts swirled—how much pain must he be feeling to have done this to himself, how long had he been holding that pain in that it had to explode like this, what had I done to cause this, how could I have prevented it? Questions ... guilt ... helplessness ... pain. I felt destroyed ... I wanted to scream, to cry. I had entered a totally foreign world and I was terrified—and, worst of all, I knew my terror was nothing as compared to his.

Millions have entered the world of mental illness as I did that day and for far too many, I fear, it remains a strange and alien place that is consistently cold and hostile. That has not been my husband’s nor my experience. Our son had the good fortune to receive what we know in retrospect was reasonably good care. And, he had the courage to make the decision not to hide what he was experiencing from his sister and stepbrother or from his larger family, many of whom became sources of comfort and support. And he and his father and I were blessed with the never failing support of our pastor and our church.

Each Sunday, for months, our son was remembered in prayer and although our pastor, who was quite new to our church, had never met our son, he wrote him, he called him, he offered to accompany us on visits to him or to go himself. And because our son’s condition was known throughout our church family, one Sunday soon after his hospitalization, a member of our congregation told us about a local support group for families of persons living with mental illness. Later that day she called us with all the details so that we could soon attend a meeting. That support group was the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI) and we credit that group, along with the support we received from our church, with making the first few months after our son’s diagnosis bearable for us. It was through NAMI that we came to understand our son’s diagnosis—clinical depression so severe he was psychotic, borderline personality disorder, anxiety disorder, and Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD). The NAMI also equipped us with skills we could use in helping him get the treatment he needed and with helping us reclaim our own lives by learning that self-care is an important part of loving and being of help to someone who lives with a mental illness.

I fear, however, that our experiences may be the exception. Because our son was living more than a thousand miles away, it was not always possible for us to give him the kind of assistance he needed. Knowing we were worried about him having dependable transportation to his outpatient program, our pastor called a fellow pastor in a Presbyterian church near where our son was living and asked that he give our son any assistance possible. No contact was ever made. Likewise, when we were with our son we attended yet a different nearby Presbyterian church and I asked, in a written request, that the pastor visit our son. No visit ever occurred. This lack of response was very hurtful to us, because our son needed help and reassurance and we knew of few places to turn to. We had thought we could count on our church wherever it was located to attempt to help us in our time of need, but we were wrong. Fortunately, the compassion we found in our home church kept us believing in the capacity and mission of our church to help those who are hurting. And it has kept us praying that the understanding, the love and the support we found in what was our neediest hour will be present soon in all of our churches for all who live with mental illness and for their families.

The fear and great sadness that my husband and I experienced in the first few days and weeks of our son’s illness has abated. We continue to grieve the ways in which his illness limits his options and prevents him from taking full advantage of his many gifts. But this pain is more than offset by thankfulness that he is in recovery and that he has a full life. He has taken many steps forward and, yes, a few backward, but he continues on a path toward increasing wellness and he, his father, and I are filled with hope. Thanks be to God.

A Daughter's Story

I grew up with a mother who had a mental illness. It was never diagnosed. Rather, spiritual language was used to explain the condition. We would refer to her erratic behavior as “the dark night of the soul” or as a “demonic attack.” What was predictable was the unpredictable. Many times I went to bed crying because of the verbal attacks, and vindictive God language my mother used as weapons to keep us under wraps. God was not pleased with me. I was going to hell if I did not change my attitude. I was ungrateful and God would never bless me if I had evil thoughts about my mother in my head (which I did, so that sealed it!). I would try hard to please, but it never seemed good enough. If I looked forward to something, and let it matter, the rug would be pulled out from under me. I learned to neutralize events—NOT to let things matter. I said “whatever” a lot and meant it. For instance, we would be packed and ready to go on a vacation that I had been looking forward to for weeks. Then my mother would get a word “from the Lord.” It was not God’s will that we go on vacation after all. We would unpack and file back into the house, halfway convinced that we had been spared a terrible accident, or some other dreaded happening. I was never fully convinced however, that “mother” was the voice of God. At night when she woke me to cast demons out of me, mumbling incoherently, I wondered whether this is what other mothers did to their daughters. When we spent all Saturday casting evil spirits out of the house—going into every room of a huge four story dwelling—I would wonder whether other families spent their Saturdays doing this sort of thing as well. When she vomited to purge herself, or when she kept to herself for long hours up in her room with the door locked, I had the slim suspicion that perhaps things were not okay.

When I would awake (again in the middle of the night) and hear my parents screaming at each other, slamming doors, and my mother would disappear to an apartment in another city for a month or two at a time, I knew it wasn’t all about me. I might have been the most common target for her verbal lambasting but I came to realize that there was more to it all than just me. It was hard to get validation for this gnawing sense of unease and edginess because I was fairly isolated. I wasn’t really allowed to have friends. It was always OK at first, but then once they came over my mother became convinced that they brought with them a kind of heavy oppression, and I would have to cut the relationship off. It was easier to just not have any relationships at all.

My father was a kind man—a theologian at a well-known educational institution for higher learning. He kept telling me my mother would get better. After a blow up he would assure me that this was the last and final outrage. Yet, at times, when the chaos and anger got to a tipping point he would shake his head and say “Why does she have to be so cruel to you? She not only sticks the knife in, but then she turns it.” I am sure I didn’t know why she had to be so cruel, but at least it was validation for my sense that all was not as it should be, and I clung to his words.

Someday I thought to myself, I would show my parents and the world how life was meant to be lived. I would succeed, I would survive, I would be happy. Meanwhile, I tried to accommodate, ameliorate, and adjust my needs so that my mother’s needs could be met. All of us, my dad, my sister, and myself danced around the mental illness like marionettes pulled this way and that by erratic, unpredictable, strings of mood and temper, chaos and unpredictability. Jumping here, jerking there, we were caught in the web of dysfunction, and, never able to state the problem, were victimized by it.

Years of intensive psychotherapy later as I look back at the shattered landscape of my past, I am amazed that our spiritual language—instead of freeing us—kept us stuck. We were a Christian family. Mental illness doesn’t happen in Christian families! How on earth could we embrace the fact that we weren’t perfect, that somehow we were flawed, diseased, wrong headed? That reality was too threatening. Spiritual language glossed over the psychosis and distortion to create a situation where everything wrong, evil, and bizarre was projected out onto the world. It wasn’t us who had the problem. It was the world. It was “those people” out there who were tainted, wrongly motivated, unable to cope. We had the truth. It might have been a psychotic episode my mother had just experienced, or a lurking premonition that something “bad” was about to happen. Still, instead of naming it “the problem” we called it “truth” and believed that the lie was our salvation.

Today, I am alive because of the grace of God. I have experienced and know firsthand the love of Jesus, which is nothing like the image of God I was raised with. I have come to know myself, others, and the value of relationships that I long ago was denied. Life is full, God is good, and the freedom to love and be loved, a pure gift.

Each of the stories cited above gives its particular perspective on the devastating effects of serious mental illness on families. Below is further discussion of the experience of (a) parents of children with serious mental illness and (b) parents with mental illness raising children.

1. Families of People with Serious Mental Illness

The diagnosis of serious mental illness not only changes the life of the person who is affected, but also the lives of all those who surround him or her. Not only individuals with serious mental illness experience exile, but their families as well. One in four American families has a close relative affected by serious mental illness.<sup>57</sup> The sheer number of persons affected by serious mental illness is staggering and yet it remains “... far from the spotlight of public information.”<sup>58</sup>

The 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) affirmed: “We envision a church and society that welcomes and nurtures all persons, regardless of their family circumstances. . . . We look toward a society in which all members of the family are valued equally, with special attention to children and others who are more vulnerable.”<sup>59</sup> Certainly, people with a serious mental illness should be included in that population which is particularly vulnerable. They and their families are rightful claimants to our “special attention.”

However, instead of special attention, many persons who are living with mental illness, and their families who live among us and are part of our congregations, receive no attention at all. This neglect may result from a lack of knowledge about mental illness within many churches and an unwillingness to become involved in complex and painful situations.<sup>60</sup> It also results from the reluctance of families, because of the severe stigma attached to mental illness, to admit that a family member has a mental illness. In a 1991 Church & Society issue, the Reverend John M. Cannon writes: “Mental illness is one of the least understood of all illnesses. The myths and misconceptions that surround it are numerous and generally prejudicial. . . . Families are well aware of this stigma and are apprehensive about exposing themselves or their loved ones to it. No one wants one of their family feared or ridiculed, so they are silent.”<sup>61</sup>

This forced silence, this inability to share and to talk openly about the illness of a loved one, compounds an abundance of other difficult circumstances and painful emotions. Having an ill family member—a son or daughter, a spouse, a sibling, a parent—is sometimes overwhelmingly painful and all-consuming regardless of whether the family member is in the home, living independently, in a hospital, living in community mental health accommodations or homeless.

For example, unlike parents who have a son or daughter diagnosed with a physical illness, those whose offspring have a mental illness are often overcome with guilt. For too long society placed responsibility for mental illness on parents and their ability to nurture. And even though these theories of poor parenting have been debunked, the stigma persists and adds a sense of blame and shame for parents to shoulder. Therefore, we must continue to work to eliminate the stigma associated with mental illness while at the same time also acknowledging that all forms of child abuse and neglect does affect the development of a child physically, mentally, and spiritually. We cannot condone any form of child abuse or neglect, especially parental child abuse or neglect.

Moreover, having a son or daughter, a spouse, a sibling, or a parent with a serious mental illness is similar to experiencing the death of that person, because in so many significant ways the illness takes away the person one has known. He or she is gone along with the dreams and aspirations for him or her. However, the person has not died, and grief lingers. For months, sometimes for years, families have to endure this grief, often without the love, understanding and support from others. Frequently, the grief is accompanied by a sense of rage and anger. Mental illness seems particularly random in nature; all of its causes are not fully understood; and therefore, any understanding as to why it has happened to a member of one’s own family is especially elusive. This combination of profound sadness and anger is a potent emotion, and can be crippling.

There is also a tremendous toll exacted on the entire family by the time and energy spent attempting to care for the person living with serious mental illness. This care requires working with an extremely complex mental health care system that few know about before it is needed, usually under conditions of crisis. Most persons do not know where to turn to get the information they need or the help they require. Many, if not most, families bounce from emergency rooms to physicians to specialists to hospitals to community mental health agencies; an experience that is incredibly time consuming and exhausting. Many times the justice system is involved; and thus additional complications arise. There is also, more often than not, constant worry about how to meet the cost of all the services needed when insurance is absent or inadequate, and how to plan for a time when there may be no one left in the family to care for the ill member.

Frequently, the ill person requires round-the-clock supervision and assistance with medications and accompanying side-effects, constant vigilance to recognize signs of impending problems and crises; and if the potential for violence is present, particularly careful vigilance. Nearly unbearable levels of stress can burden the family members of the person with mental illness. One can reasonably say that having a person with mental illness in one’s family and home can be totally consuming, leaving little if any time for the needs of any and all other family members. This demand on time and energy, coupled with the unpredictable course of the illness and the constant presence of stigma, make “normal” life—friends, social occasions, the activities of other family members, community concerns, congregational life—very difficult. These sacrifices are particularly burdensome to children and young adults who are sometimes required to be caregivers for parents with serious mental illness.

One father writes about his son’s illness in the following way: “I thought that I knew all about illnesses. After all, I had survived a life-threatening car accident, bleeding ulcers, our daughter’s juvenile diabetes, and a bout with cancer. But I knew nothing of illness until I confronted schizophrenia. It is like no other illness I have encountered.”<sup>62</sup> Likewise, a man describing his wife’s illness confesses, “. . . when it brings a loved one to visible alteration of thought processes and behavior, [it] is the most frightening thing I have experienced in a background that includes some of the experiences, like war, that are reckoned most stressful. To see the loved one out of control . . . to watch such behavior and be unable to help is desolation of a special kind for a life partner to endure.”<sup>63</sup> The Reverend John Cannon supports these statements, writing, “family life becomes unsettled ... needs of other family members and management of the usual tensions that arise in everyday living ... must be done in a climate filled with bewilderment, embarrassment, and secrecy. Living with a mentally ill loved one is exhausting emotionally to every member of the family. It can and in some cases does destroy a family.”<sup>64</sup>

A mentally ill person’s awareness of the impact of his or her illness on family members must not go unnoted. A person suffering from mental illness often acknowledges the adverse effects of the effect of his or her illness on parents, partners, siblings and, in some cases, an offspring. Their sense of responsibility for the perceived damage their illness does to the family increases the burden of the illness and further complicates the recovery process. Consequently, caring for the families of those with mental illness and helping to relieve their burdens not only strengthens them, but also helps to bring healing to the family member who is ill.

Through its approval of the Resolution on the Church and Serious Mental Illness, the 200th General Assembly (1988) recognized its vital role in lessening the pain and suffering of families of the mentally ill, saying, “Reclaiming health as a central dimension of the church’s faith and life is of particular importance as the church seeks to meet persons and families struggling to cope with mental illness.”<sup>65</sup>

2. Parents with Mental Illness Raising Children

Parents with serious mental illness are at risk of losing custody of their children if their symptoms are not well managed and affect their parenting skills. Although the diagnosis of a mental illness is not a sufficient reason to lose custody, mental illness can make it more difficult for parents to care for their children competently. Although the parents who have mental illness may be caring and loving, they may be forced to give up custody of their children when their condition worsens. During acute phases of their mental disorder, parents may have trouble caring adequately for their children and face forced intervention by child welfare authorities. While it is imperative to ensure the safety and welfare of each child, it is highly traumatic for both parents and children to face this possibility. The trauma of losing custody adds another layer of suffering, which complicates recovery. Loss of hope, guilt and shame, alienation from the social service system, and added stigma increase the burden of already troubled individuals. Parents now have to navigate the maze of child protective services and the courts. Supervised visitations are intrusive, regular visitations burdensome, and evaluations threatening. They can feel betrayed by mental health professionals who are required to report abusive situations, and they feel hurt when their children exhibit mixed loyalties between themselves and their court-appointed guardians. This is especially true when children are placed with family members, who may already be in conflict with the parent.

Unfortunately, due to fear of custody loss and these other complications, parents exhibiting an exacerbation of their symptoms may avoid contacting health care professionals. This avoidance can make matters worse, as delay can worsen an already deteriorating situation, making it more likely that they would indeed lose custody. Clergy and other church caregivers can be good avenues of help because parents may feel safer coming to them rather than mental health professionals. This first line of response may be adequate to help stabilize their condition. If it is not, the church caregiver may then have to notify child protective services. Although this may feel to be a gross breach of trust, the child’s welfare is primary. When handled well, a favorable outcome can be achieved. For example, the family may be placed in contact with much needed community services for both parents and children. To help sustain trust in the church caregiver, it is of utmost importance for the caregiver to provide close follow-up once a call to protective services is made. If legal matters arise, the help of an attorney who specializes in this area can be solicited.

In 1997, the federal government passed the Adoption and Safe Families Act to protect ill parents from losing their custody rights. When parents do lose custody, appropriate treatment and support must be given to the parent so that family reunification can take place. Churches can assist parents who lose custody of their children by becoming familiar with such protections and referring parents to good legal counsel.

Many families find themselves in a no-win cycle of loss. Mentally ill parents fear that seeking help will lead to their losing custody of their children. Therefore they do not seek the psychiatric services they need and their parenting ability is further diminished.

E. Twice Exiled: Serious Mental Illness and Disaster Response

While natural disasters and warfare have always been with us, in the past decade we have experienced these events with greater awareness of the impact of these events on persons with serious mental illness and our national response patterns. With the major terrorist activity on U.S. soil on September 11, 2001, the effects of war in Vietnam and Iraq, and the aftermath of recent hard-hitting natural disasters, we have become more aware of weaknesses in our responses to and treatment of persons with serious mental illness. Emergency shelter settings are poorly equipped to recognize the difference between behaviors triggered by substance abuse and persons with serious mental illness. In the midst of the crisis response, there needs to be available interventions, both to those in crises and to the responders.

Tom's Story

During the disaster response of Hurricane Katrina in 2005, Tom, a young man in his late twenties, showed up at a local shelter in Louisiana. Because of his bizarre behavior, he was turned away by security who assumed that he was on drugs. Since this shelter was in a local community recreation building, Tom wandered across the street to the curb in front of a neighboring home. The family found him sitting there and after talking with him brought him back to the shelter. Security called the mental health volunteer from Red Cross who discovered that Tom had been on medication, which he had lost in the storm. A trip to the local hospital got some emergency medication and confirmed the diagnosis of schizophrenia. However there were no available beds. The on-call physician claimed that the only resource was the local jail. Therefore, we returned Tom to the shelter.

Although it was nearly midnight, many folks were still up. A small circle of affirming individuals helped Tom to calm down and feel safe. Within the next few days, Tom felt safe to share with others his history of mental illness, his struggle with homelessness, several failed efforts at employment, brief hospitalizations, and even two incarcerations for petty theft done at the bidding of other people who took advantage of his vulnerability. A local pastor was contacted whose congregation took an interest in befriending Tom and helping him seek more appropriate alternatives to jail and homelessness.

God's call for compassion used a variety of persons who went beyond their usual comfort zone and responded to this opportunity for ministry. The culture of the emergency shelter and this congregation was dramatically altered as they focused their passion and compassion with one otherwise homeless person with a serious mental illness.

F. Driven into Exile by Chronic, Extreme Stress: The Examples of Poverty and War

When disaster strikes, people who already live with serious mental illness often suffer more than people without. In addition, there is also ample evidence that chronically stressful life circumstances can result in more people developing a mental illness. Considering all mental illnesses, not just serious ones, a large study of more than 100,000 people shows that the poor are more vulnerable. Socioeconomic status affects "the development of mental illness directly, as well as indirectly through its association with adverse, economically stressful conditions among lower income groups."<sup>66</sup> The extreme stress of war also has negative effects on mental health. Time magazine reports, "about one third of the 103,788 returning veterans seen at Veterans Administration facilities between September 30, 2001, and September 30, 2005, were diagnosed with mental illness or a psycho-social disorder—such as homelessness and marital problems, including domestic violence."<sup>67</sup> Of this group, 56 percent had two or more diagnosed mental illnesses.<sup>68</sup> The same study shows that 13 percent of those returning veterans were diagnosed with Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), approximately the same proportion as veterans returning from the Vietnam War. However, young soldiers who had been on active duty in Iraq were three times as likely to be diagnosed with PTSD as those over forty.<sup>69</sup> While PTSD falls outside the definition of serious mental illness as defined in this paper, these findings establish the link between a stressful context and mental illness.

Research that focuses on the relationship between serious mental illness and the stress of a lower socioeconomic status is more challenging. It is more difficult to determine whether poverty is the result or the cause of all serious mental illnesses. However, research does show clearly that depression and a lower socioeconomic status are clearly associated.<sup>70</sup> Furthermore, the impact begins in the early years. "Low-childhood socio-economic status is associated with a higher lifetime risk of depression."<sup>71</sup> There is also a higher risk for schizophrenia when born into a poor family.<sup>72</sup> However, lower socioeconomic status and serious mental illness cannot always be correlated; there is also evidence that higher social class may be associated with increased risk for bipolar disorder.<sup>73</sup> Much research remains to be done to clarify the complex relationship between socio-economic status and serious mental illness.

G. Violence In Exile<sup>74</sup>

Perhaps the most damaging myth about people with serious mental illness is that they are dangerous, that their behavior can turn violent at any moment. Perhaps this widespread belief is chiefly responsible for their being exiled from the covenant community. Many people come to church seeking safety and comfort, and the presence of someone with a serious mental illness may threaten their sense of security. Yet, "the vast majority of people with mental illnesses are not violent," according to the National Mental Health Association (NMHA).<sup>75</sup> "In the cases when violence does occur, the NMHA continues, the incidence typically results from the same reasons as with the general public, such as when one feels threatened, or uses alcohol and/or drugs excessively."<sup>76</sup>

It is true that some persons suffering an acute episode of psychosis sometimes do become violent. In such cases churches are responsible for protecting those who might be vulnerable. Family members are at greatest risk for violence at the hand of someone with a serious mental illness.<sup>77</sup> Since the potential for violence may exist, it is important that churches develop and implement a plan for maintaining a safe environment. For congregations who are called to reach out to people whose psychotic symptoms may lead them to acts of violence, mental health professionals can provide advice for churches that wish to create times and places where the possibility of violence is minimized. These churches can have safety plans in place should they be needed.

Bill's Story

Bill is a forty-one year old male who appears in the church garden one day. He tells ladies working there that he has made and sold cakes before, and they invite him to worship. He soon becomes a regular attendee, and finally joins the congregation.

The pastor learns that Bill once served ten years in prison for robbery, petty crimes, and gang-related activity and is now on parole. He is known at the local outpatient mental hygiene clinic, where he has been diagnosed schizophrenic. He is being seen by a psychiatrist for medication, monitoring, and weekly psychotherapy. In addition to having schizophrenia, Bill is considered to have a character disorder, i.e., a psycho-pathology (personality problems which might prove harmful to other people). However, in the congregation Bill continues to be very polite, courteous, outgoing; and members seem to accept him. They encourage him in his cake baking and open the church to his family when an older brother dies. Later, the pastor encourages him to serve as a chaperone/bouncer for the Friday night teenage group.

During this time, however, Bill does not adhere to his medication regimen, and misses appointments with his therapist and parole officer. He gives out misinformation, uses illegal drugs, and becomes homeless when he can no longer live with his mother. Eventually his therapist and his case manager find a single room where he can lodge. The pastor learns of this turn of events from Bill, but most members of the congregation continue to have a completely different view of Bill. They consider him a "nice young man." For he is indeed charming, pleasant, congenial, and engaging.

After a while Bill returns to prison, and some church members learn the truth of Bill's life. The pastor and another church member are concerned about Bill, but he remains a model church member. Church involvement obviously was providing for Bill some of the love and affirmation that a family ordinarily would. Church had proven to be a stabilizing force in his life. The pastor and the personnel chairperson in whom the pastor confided remain concerned about the possibility that harmful aspects of Bill's personality might emerge in church.

How should Christians balance the moral duty to take some risks to help persons with mental illness over against the obligation to protect others whom they might harm?

Sometimes moral responsibility requires choosing not between a good thing and a bad thing, but between two goods that are in tension, as in this instance. How were the church leaders to balance the good of fully including persons with serious mental illness within the congregation over against the other good of protecting congregation members from possible harm? Sometimes achieving one good may require compromising, at least to some degree, another. The recent killings at one university are another case in point. The killer had a record of serious mental illness, but laws protecting the privacy of his medical information hindered it from being shared in a way that might have prevented the tragedy. In that instance, the values of communal security and individual privacy were in tension. When goods are in tension like this, we should strive to preserve as much of each as possible, instead of sacrificing one entirely to achieve the other.

Of course, the greater risk is that people with serious mental illness will be victims of violence themselves. Life in prison or on the streets makes them vulnerable to physical violence. Within families, they can also be victims of domestic violence, which includes both physical and emotional abuse. Not only are they at risk of being hit, punched, or kicked, but also being ridiculed, humiliated, and insulted. Some believe it is acceptable to sexually abuse people with serious mental illness. Again, congregations have a responsibility to protect people with serious mental illness from violence and abuse of any kind. This may require partnership with mental health providers, social services, lawyers, or the police.

H. Specific Peoples, Specific Exiles

Serious mental illness is closely linked to particular contexts. The impact of age, race, ethnicity, gender, acculturation stressors, and place of residence all affect the shape of the experience of serious mental illness. For that reason, we can say there is no one landscape of the exilic experience.

1. Children and Youth

Just as adults suffer from serious mental illnesses such as depression, bipolar disorder, and schizophrenia, so too do children. Children also have mental illnesses such as autism, Asperger's syndrome (AS), severe Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD), and reactive attachment disorder that severely disrupt basic life functions of living in a family, community, and a school. Clergy and church staff are in a unique position to help identify children at risk for mental illness, because they are often the first responders to crises, and they become involved in the lives of families in ways that other professionals do not. Identifying children and adolescents who are at risk or who have a mental illness is difficult, as the boundaries between normal and abnormal behavior are less defined in children than in adults. Further, normal behavior for children is age dependent. For instance, what is appropriate for a six-year-old may be inappropriate for a twelve-year-old. Identifying children who are having difficulties is often perceived as helpful, but it could also be seen as intrusive and stigmatizing.

When identifying children at risk, one needs to consider the circumstances of their development. For instance, children who experience disruptions in the family system, such as a death, exposure to trauma, a marital break-up, domestic violence, or acculturation stresses, are psychologically at risk. Behaviors that are associated with mental illness include isolation, excessive fears or worrying, physical complaints, school avoidance, changes in academic performance, and persistent sadness or rapid changes in mood. They also include oppositional behavior, inattention, impulsivity, difficulties with language, stereotypical or repetitive behavior, having a lack of social cues, literal thinking or confused thinking, and changes in one's peer group.

Because federal law requires that all students receive equal access to a public education, special attention must be given to children with educational disabilities. Schools are required to provide services to help each child compensate for disability so that each has a fair footing with other children. Such fairness is mandated by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) and its recent revisions.<sup>78</sup> Special education requirements pertain not only to children with learning disabilities, but also to those with mental conditions that impede their education. Major psychiatric illnesses such as major depression or bipolar disorder are covered, as well as less severe conditions.

The IDEA requires that treatment services be provided free to all families without regard to the level of their income. Such services can be delivered both in the school and at home. Services may include individual and family therapy, receiving guidance from an in-home behavioral specialist, respite care, and residential placement.

Unfortunately, many children eligible for such services are often overlooked or underserved. Sometimes eligible children are shortchanged because of governmental budget restraints. Although the IDEA requires schools to search out children in need, parents already have to advocate vigorously to get their children the help they need.

The No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 has generally made life harder for children with special educational needs. This is so because the No Child Left Behind legislation evaluates schools by how well all of their students do on standardized tests. Children in special education, children who speak English as a second language, and children from low-income families tend to bring down these scores.

Parents whose children have mental illness sometimes must contend with school staff and other parents who are ill-informed, resistant, and hostile. They may hold parents responsible for their children's odd or disruptive behaviors because they assume these ensue from poor parenting, not brain-based physiological diseases. Parents whose children suffer from mental illness often worry too that they will lose custody of them, or that they will lose their legal right to superintend their education. Ironically, special education programs guard against parents losing this right by putting them in charge of mandated educational teams. Custody of their children may have to be relinquished occasionally for parents to obtain residential health care for their children in some states. There is a critical shortage of child and adolescent psychiatric care and in-patient beds throughout the country.

2. Rural Populations

"Urban culture and its approach to delivering mental health services dominate mental health services. ... Rural America is shrinking in size and political influence. ... As a consequence, rural mental health services do not figure prominently in mental health policy," according to Mental Health: A Report of the Surgeon General (1999).<sup>79</sup>

This failure to understand and address the needs unique to rural populations has led to a vast number of persons with mental illness going untreated. Even when rural residents are able to procure treatment, they "enter care later in the course of their disease than their urban peers, enter care with more serious, persistent, and disabling symptoms, and require more expensive and intensive treatment response. For rural racial and ethnic minorities these problems are compounded by their minority status and the dearth of culturally competent or bilingual providers in medically under served areas."<sup>80</sup> Succinctly put, many rural Americans have inadequate access to care, and they face a shortage of highly trained care providers—85 percent of the 1,669 federally designated mental health professional shortage areas are in rural America. They must cope with lower incomes, and they are surrounded by a culture where the stigma associated with mental illness is entrenched and pervasive.<sup>81</sup> Fewer rural people have health insurance that covers mental illness than do urban residents. They also spend longer periods without insurance coverage, and they are far more reluctant than their urban counterparts to incur medical bills, including those for prescription drugs.<sup>82</sup>

Seeking help is a difficult step for many rural residents to take and it is nearly impossible to do so confidentially in small, rural communities. Stigma is particularly strong in rural settings. When it is coupled with a long tradition of self-sufficiency, it is difficult to bring issues surrounding mental illness into the public arena. In addition, this fear of stigma and desire for privacy adds to the isolation of those who are ill and their families and, in part, may explain why the suicide rate among rural men is significantly higher than in urban areas and why the suicide rate among rural women is approaching that of rural men.<sup>83</sup> Furthermore, the suicide rate for farmers and ranchers is usually twice the national population average. Given this pattern and the magnitude of the farm crisis in the past three or so decades, it is easy to understand why some call suicide “the most devastating mental health issue found in rural communities.”<sup>84</sup>

Because 45 percent of Presbyterian congregations are in rural areas, the mental health needs of rural communities and the scarcity of mental health resources in those communities should be a concern of all Presbyterians.<sup>85</sup> In the policy statement adopted by the 200th General Assembly (1988), Life Abundant: Values, Choices and Health Care, all members of the church are called to remember that, “Health and healing are central dimensions of the faith we profess. We must reclaim the power and promise of God’s gifts of wholeness for our life ... Our understanding of ourselves and God is mirrored by the way we do or do not seek health and wholeness for ourselves, our communities and the world.”<sup>86</sup>

3. Veterans and Serious Mental Illness

In most congregations, there will be a percentage of veterans or families of veterans. This places the church in an optimal position to identify veterans with severe mental illness and the opportunity to make appropriate referral. This population group transcends race, ethnicity, gender, and age.

Veterans have a high incident rate of PTSD, paranoid schizophrenia, and bipolar disorder, which may contribute to substance abuse and homelessness. In addition, the suicide rate is three times the general population. According to NAMI, “nearly one third of homeless persons are veterans ... approximately 43% of homeless veterans have a diagnosis of severe and persistent mental illness, and 69% have a substance abuse disorder.”<sup>87</sup> Some have estimated that 15,000 (or more) Vietnam veterans have committed suicide since returning home.<sup>88</sup> After being released from jail or prison, “67 % of Vietnam veterans diagnosed with PTSD received their diagnosis.”<sup>89</sup>

Seeking help is difficult for veterans. They have been instilled with a “can do” attitude and fear the stigma of appearing weak to their peers. Fortunately, there are many resources to assist veterans. Unfortunately, many churches are unaware of them. Veteran Administration Hospitals can channel veterans into the proper area for treatment. When there are financial concerns, the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) office can assist in explaining what benefits are available. In addition, such volunteer service organizations such as the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW), Disabled American Veterans (DAV) and the Military Order of the Purple Heart (MOPH), will advocate for the veteran individually and politically.

4. Genders and Serious Mental Illness

Gender matters in mental illness. For example, there are twice as many women diagnosed with depression than there are men.<sup>90</sup> Men experience the onset of schizophrenia earlier in life than women.<sup>91</sup> Men with bipolar disorder abuse drugs and alcohol at greater rates than women. Researchers believe that a complicated interaction between biological and psychosocial factors determines such differences.

It is clear that the disparity in access to social power renders women more vulnerable to some mental illnesses. “Gender is a critical determinant of mental health and mental illness,”<sup>92</sup> states the World Health Organization. “Gender determines the differential power and control men and women have over the socioeconomic determinants of their mental health and lives, their social position, status and treatment in society and their susceptibility and exposure to specific mental health risks.”<sup>93</sup> For example, the physical, mental, and sexual abuse of women and girls render them more vulnerable to depression, one study showing that over half of depressed women are survivors of domestic violence.<sup>94</sup> Therefore, advocacy for the rights of women and girls is a step toward improving their mental health.

While some claim issues related to women’s reproductive capacity are related to differences in mental illness incidence, it remains unclear how physiological differences between men and women affect the disparities between their vulnerability to and experience of serious mental illness. Regardless of how mental illness is manifest in males and females, the church should strive to give comfort and support as wisely and ably as possible, to both women and men, girls and boys.

5. Race and Serious Mental Illness

Concerted and continued efforts to promote greater access and culturally responsive mental health services are critical for racial and ethnic groups. Race and ethnicity in addition to other cultural diversity considerations like language, gender, geographic location, and physical ability affect mental health and care. Addressing mental health challenges is influenced by how individuals from various groups understand and make sense of their social world.<sup>95</sup> In addition, individuals classified in the lowest socioeconomic income level, education, and occupation categories are about two to three times more likely than those in the highest stratum to have a mental disorder.<sup>96</sup> Many of these individuals identify as racial and ethnic people. Culturally proficient delivery of mental health services takes into account social risk and cultural factors, incorporating these considerations in assessment, diagnosis, and analyses of the mental health of racial and ethnic group members.<sup>97</sup> More research is necessary in order to clarify the role that social and cultural factors have had and continue to have in the mental health of racial and ethnic populations in the United States. The following paragraphs contain data about specific racial and ethnic populations.

a. Asian Americans/Pacific Islanders

Asian Americans/Pacific Islanders are one of the fastest growing racial and ethnic groups in the United States. The Asian American population alone was about 3 percent of the total population in the United States in 2000.<sup>98</sup> Understanding the cultural differences that exists within this growing population is important for the purposes of planning appropriate mental health care services.<sup>99</sup> However, research studies conducted with Asian refugees and immigrant populations have revealed that the portion of this population most acculturated to the U.S. culture more frequently shows western types of disorders.<sup>100</sup>

b. Black/African Americans

According to the 2000 United States Census Bureau, 12.9 percent of the total United States population identified themselves as Black/African Americans.<sup>101</sup> This group of Americans is ethnically diverse; and its size and ethnic diversity is increasing as more immigrants arrive from the continent of Africa and Caribbean Islands.<sup>102</sup>

From a historical point of view, living in the United States has been particularly stressful for most Black/African Americans, who have experienced egregious social prejudice and segregation perpetuated by negative attitudes and beliefs related to racial and ethnic group membership. Today, many Black/African Americans still experience a variety of health challenges, and bear a disproportionate burden of mental health problems related to historical and present day life experiences. In addition, some research has revealed gender differences in rates of mental illness for Black/African Americans. For example, the prevalence rates of depression, phobias, and anxiety disorders are higher among Black/African American women than Black/African American men. Black/African American women reported higher incidents of medical, psychiatric, family-social, and employment problems than did Black/African American men. Black/African American men reported higher incidents of legal and alcohol-related problems than did Black/African American women.<sup>103</sup> However, the higher incidents reported by Black/African American men may be attributed in some cases to self-destructive mental disorder behaviors such as alcoholism, drug abuse, and criminal activities that increase the probability of their encounter with law enforcement and the judicial system.<sup>104</sup>

c. Hispanic/Latino/a Americans

Hispanic/Latino/a Americans represented about 12.5 percent of the total United States population in the year 2000.<sup>105</sup> Like most of the other racial and ethnic groups living in the United States, Hispanic/Latino/a Americans do not always receive the quality health care services they need. Language barriers often limit this group's ability to utilize major mental health services. In addition, increasing evidence suggests that Hispanic/Latino/a Americans are less likely to receive evidence-based care in accordance with professional treatment guidelines in clinical settings in the United States.<sup>106</sup> However, there are social and cultural patterns that can promote mental health within the Hispanic/Latino/a community (i.e., the value of families, which provide support and act as a preventive factor for serious mental illness).

d. Native Americans/Alaskan Natives

Comprising 0.9 percent of the U.S. population, many Native Americans/Alaskan Natives suffer an unequal burden of mental health problems as compared to white Americans.<sup>107</sup> In addition, some Native Americans/Alaskan Natives suffer from considerable health disparities as compared with the general United States population, including drastically higher incidence and prevalence of preventable diseases such as diabetes, substance abuse disorders, particularly alcoholism, and complications. The under funding of health-care programs, such as the Indian Health Service, and socioeconomic factors have contributed to the health disparities cited above among Native Americans/Alaskan Natives.<sup>108</sup> There is an extreme demand for culturally sensitive health-care programs and providers that can address this group's physical and mental health care needs.

In summary, Native Americans/Alaskan Natives, Hispanic/Latino/a Americans, Black/African Americans, Asian American/ Pacific Islanders, and Middle Eastern Americans are more likely to experience inadequate mental health services due to social, cultural, and economic issues. Not only do biological, spiritual/religious and psychological factors affect the incidence and prevalence of one's mental illness, social conditions such as poverty, unemployment, and racial and ethnic oppression and discrimination inform whether individuals will seek mental health services and the availability and quality of services received.

6. Pastors and Seminarians

Through the committee on preparation for ministry (CPM), the Book of Order directs presbyteries to become acquainted with candidates for ministry specifically (G-14.0305). In order to fulfill this mandate, presbyteries should offer education for sessions, congregations, and ministers about serious mental illness, and support when necessary. This mandate to maintain these “ongoing relationships takes seriously the unique background, experience, and personal attributes of each candidate for pastoral ministry.”<sup>109</sup>

For ministers just beginning their pastoral work, their first call is a time both of challenge and stress, “a time when one can benefit greatly from the continuing, planned support of one’s congregation and presbytery.”<sup>110</sup> For pastors with a serious mental illness, stress can reveal needs that are not always apparent at first, nor well understood. Presbytery staff who are well-equipped to pastor to pastors are crucial for the health of every minister, but particularly for pastors who have a mental illness. Pastors who face mental illness should be encouraged that such illness, when adequately addressed, can enhance their ministerial effectiveness. The 2006 Presbyterian Panel Survey on Mental Illness revealed that 50 percent of pastors who reported having mental illness indicated that they were more empathic and compassionate to those with burdens, and more knowledgeable about mental illness and treatment options. This was in contrast to only a small portion (7 percent) who responded that having mental illness negatively affected their ministry.<sup>111</sup>

The 200th General Assembly (1988) noted: “All the people and structures of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are called to ministry and mission with those afflicted with serious mental illness. ... In fulfilling this ministry and mission, the church at all levels should ... support increased understanding and the development and training of leadership ... through education and training in seminaries, consultations and network-building at national and regional levels, through workshops and continuing education events, and through intentional use of church periodicals and both regular and special educational resources.”<sup>112</sup> Pastors and seminarians should be included in the church’s care for people with mental illness.

Although the church calls pastors to minister to persons with serious mental illness, results from the 2006 Presbyterian Panel Survey on Mental Illness indicate that seminaries do not adequately equip pastors in this respect.<sup>113</sup> For example, a large majority of pastors responded that their seminary training equipped them “not too well” or “not well at all” in:

- developing church programs for people with mental illness (92 percent of respondents);
- providing therapy (77 percent of respondents);
- understanding mental illness (67 percent of respondents);
- relating to those with a mental illness (61 percent of respondents); and
- recognizing and making an appropriate referral (53 percent of respondents).

The survey also shows that seminaries often do not adequately train future pastors to handle crisis situations. This finding is a serious concern because pastors are often first responders in crises. Slightly more than 60 percent of clergy respondents indicated that their seminary training prepared them poorly to respond to trauma, child abuse, and domestic violence. Almost half indicated they were not well-equipped to respond appropriately to suicidal or homicidal persons.

One way for church members’ needs to be addressed is for seminaries to require that students study mental health, and in their fieldwork interact with people with mental illness, and their families. Seminaries have already been encouraged “to consider expanding opportunities for such learning in M.Div., D.Min., and continuing education programs.”<sup>114</sup> These programs would greatly benefit not only seminarians but pastors as well.

It is important for pastors to identify a referral network when first arriving at a new call. Referring a church member to a mental health professional is not a substitute for rendering good pastoral care; rather it may be the most effective way to do so. Ongoing relationships and ongoing education between the pastor-seminarian and presbyteries, committees and schools to which they relate, is an essential component in addressing the issue of serious mental illness in the church.

V. God’s Call to Comfort

Come to me, all you that are weary and are carrying heavy burdens, and I will give you rest. (Matt.11:28, NRSV)

For many who live with serious mental illness, life in exile can include homelessness, addiction, suicidal thoughts, discrimination, families in pain, violence, and barriers to employment and mental health services, as outlined above. These aspects of exile are shaped by gender, race, and age, and are especially challenging for people seeking ordination or who are already ordained. Yet God does not abandon us, God is with us still. We can proclaim to people living with serious mental illness the words of the prophet Isaiah, “The people who walked in darkness have seen a great light; those who lived in a land of deep darkness—on them light has shined” (Isa. 9:2, NRSV). Many congregations have found fruitful and faithful ways to respond in ministry to people with serious mental illness.

A. Many Congregational Responses

When the church welcomes individuals who have been in exile, the church itself moves closer to the covenant community we are called to be. As we offer comfort, we ourselves move closer to God. By the grace of God, churches have responded to God’s call to comfort the exiles in many different ways. In so doing, they are extending Jesus’ invitation to the weary and heavily laden to come to him for comfort and rest.

Results from the 2006 Presbyterian Panel Survey on Mental Illness indicate that about half of lay respondents and most ministers would like their congregations to do more to welcome people with mental illness.<sup>115</sup> Approximately 80 percent responded that people with serious mental illness “have gifts to bring to the church.” Yet, although there is clearly an interest in ministering to and with people with serious mental illness within the church, this interest is not acted upon very often. For example, only 16 percent of elders stated that their congregation provided space for a support group for people living with mental illness. Even less, 7 percent of elders, report that their churches are providing space for support groups for family members or caregivers of people with mental illness. Furthermore, 7 percent or less stated that they had heard a sermon about mental illness; 10 percent had held a prayer or healing service for people with mental illness; and 5 percent had a class on the topic. Even more disconcerting, only 4 percent stated that their congregations advocated for public policy on behalf of those with mental illness.<sup>116</sup> In contrast, there is a keen interest, especially voiced by pastors and family members of people with mental illness, to obtaining resources to help them minister in this area. Such resources include guides for ministry with people who have a mental illness, for conducting Bible studies on mental illness, and for setting up support groups.<sup>117</sup>

Although services currently provided by congregations to persons with serious mental illness are insufficient, the members of the Task Force on Serious Mental Illness met with members of several PC(USA) churches that are ministering in exemplary ways. The following paragraphs describe these ways.

1. Hospitality

In many instances, churches said that they did not have a program in mind when they first got involved in ministry with persons with serious mental illness. They simply wanted to be hospitable. They felt compassion for people who were hungering for acceptance and fellowship; and so, they began to eat with them, go to a movie with them, or bowling. Camaraderie paved the way for these new friends to attend church. As more and more people with serious mental illness attended, the next step in hospitality was for a congregation to change some of the ways that it worshiped, in order to make the newcomers more welcome

Some congregations expressed hospitality with no particular emphasis on the uniqueness of people with serious mental illness—they were simply folded into the life of the congregation without special attention to their illness. Other churches articulated their special commitment to hospitality for people with serious mental illness. Still others created specific programs such as support groups or special classes for people living with serious mental illness and their families. All of these have been found to be equally faithful ways to show hospitality.

2. Prayer-based Support Groups

One notable form of hospitality is providing spiritual support groups based on prayer. Such groups recognize the genetic, biological, and social aspects of mental illness, yet keep their focus on the redemptive and restorative work of Christ to help people heal from life’s wounds. While many different kinds of groups can help people with mental illness, prayer groups offer a spiritual balm that others cannot provide. Prayer groups include a time for sharing in confidence and a time for praying for each other. Through these gatherings many have found healing for body, soul, and spirit. Prayer groups enable the church to proclaim hope for the despondent, clarity for the confused, and a peace that passes understanding, all through the power of the living God.

Fred’s Story

Twenty-three years ago our son, Andy, was well into his college training to be a missionary aviator. At age twenty-one he had his first major episode of bipolar disorder. It was very traumatic for our whole family. He quite quickly became very paranoid, delusional, and hallucinatory. We went to our pastor for support. He said, “Well, that’s the end of his missionary career” and didn’t even offer to pray with us. We badly needed support and understanding, but we did not find it then in our church.

This ultimately led Jane and me to a different church where we became involved with its mental illness support ministry, which was just beginning. In the past six years that ministry has grown and developed in unbelievable ways. We feel that this growth has been the result of much prayer.

For the first two and a half years the support group consisted of just persons in caregiving roles. However, when two of these caregivers disclosed that they had a mental illness themselves, we decided to invite those coping with a mental illness, “copers,” to become members of our group. With the addition of “copers,” our support group took off, both in vitality and numbers! The sharing and prayer times became a real blessing to both copers and supporters. More than an hour of each meeting was devoted to prayer with a person who had shared. We continue to have both Christians and non-Christians in our group. In times of great need people are most open to the gospel message that the love of Jesus saves.

Our blessing comes from having a large number of wonderful copers in our fellowship. We found that a large percentage of our copers maintain control over their behavior with medication. They are sensitive and articulate.

We also learned quite early that a copers’ biggest need is to have a friend, and then, to have a fellowship that is understanding, caring, loving, and supportive, and one where it is safe to be honest, and where one feels valued, and accepted as a first class member.

We were led to meet every Thursday night, and to provide our own simple dinner, which adds additional time of relaxed fellowship. Our worship time includes a short devotional led by a copers. A guitarist leads us in singing a couple hymns or praise songs. Our current attendance runs about twenty-five.

One of the reasons that our meetings run smoothly is that we read our guidelines in unison. Those guidelines commit us to confidentiality, not dominating in the sharing time, not interrupting, and not giving advice. Also, we commit to being available to each other for praying.

We call our group H.E.L.P., which stands for Hope, Encouragement, Love, and Prayer. People affected by mental illness can be helped in their recovery by: developing faith in a loving God; hoping for improvement; praying for guidance; living in a community of acceptance, love, and encouragement; and knowing that others care, that we all count and have a purpose in life to carry out.

3. Education

Some churches have been inspired to be involved in ministry with persons with serious mental illness through sermons, Bible studies, or Sunday school discussions. Their pastors and teachers have informed them of various kinds of mental illness, and related this psychological information to biblical mandates for compassion, tolerance, and justice. This education encouraged many people to share stories of their own experience of mental illness, or that of loved ones or friends. Education sometimes moved church members to become activists, reformers in the field of mental health, because it awakened them to how widespread mental illness is. They began to see that they would have allies in this ministry, and experienced new enthusiasm for it.

In this sense, education is a transforming experience. It involves the transformation of the stranger with serious mental illness into a neighbor, a friend, a sister, a brother, a member of the Body of Christ. Education is much more than the transfer of information; it is rather an invitation to a relationship with someone with a serious mental illness. It is an experience of the scales falling from our eyes so that we see the full humanity of all who live with serious mental illness. (Acts 9:18) In fact, according to an analysis of the 2006 Presbyterian Panel Survey on Mental Illness results, those who were educated regarding serious mental illness were more willing to personally relate to them.

4. Providing Services

Some congregations have been engaged in direct delivery of basic services for people with mental illness. Churches serve meals to the hungry, provide shelter for the homeless, house clinics for health-care delivery, and offer church-based counseling services staffed by mental health clinicians. Some provide space in their buildings for support groups or recreational activities for people with mental illness. Such direct services are a vital link to God’s comfort for many who live with mental illness every day. Not only do they provide specific forms of care, but they do so in the name of Christ, and thus offer a sign of his resurrection power to those in pain.

5. Collaboration and Advocacy

Many Christians find that the more deeply they are involved in relationships with the dispossessed, the outcasts, the invisibles of any locale, the more they realize that there are systemic reasons for their plight. People with serious mental illness struggle not only with their various symptoms; they also struggle with judicial, criminal justice, social service, and healthcare systems that make it much more difficult to get their needs met. Church members who persist in ministry with persons with serious mental illness are likely therefore to act in the role of advocate, and do so in collaboration with citizens outside their circle of faith who are trying to move social systems toward more effective caring. Hospitality the deeper it goes leads to solidarity with those who are advocating for badly needed reform.

Churches can collaborate with other advocacy and service delivery groups in at least two ways. First, churches can make sure that people with serious mental illness receive what the law entitles them to, such as Social Security checks, and low-income housing. Secondly, churches can work with groups advocating changes in public policy in such areas as insurance parity and alternatives to incarceration. Several groups who met with the Task Force on Serious Mental Illness emphasized the importance of forming coalitions with them in their advocacy work. (Refer to Appendix C for Models of Ministry.)

B. A Ministry Both Challenging and Rewarding

1. Patience and Perseverance

Many people with serious mental illness who attend church elect not to disclose their illness. They participate in church life without any church members knowing of their illness. When a church welcomes persons who struggle more openly with a serious mental illness and whose symptoms may be more apparent, there will be both blessings and difficulties. Persons with cognitive and emotional problems can be trying. For example, a Bible class that feels held back by a member who almost continually complains about his inadequacies must learn to consider their relationship with him or her just as important as the chapter they are attempting to cover. At the same time, some people with mental illness can benefit from loving and constructive feedback regarding appropriate group behavior. Churches have often found that the gospel of Jesus Christ becomes less doctrinal and more incarnational as they persevere in the deeply compassionate way of their Lord.

2. Mixed Feelings

While church members often have positive feelings when they get involved in ministry with people with serious mental illness, they may have negative ones too; and sometimes they deny the negative ones. Denial is likely to weaken ministries for people living with serious mental illness. Tasks first undertaken with alacrity and enthusiasm can devolve into laborious obligations. Then energy flags and ministries and people suffer.

Mixed feelings are a normal part of many human experiences. Ministry with people with serious mental illness is no exception, especially when one chooses deeper levels of involvement. When these mixed feelings are acknowledged and carefully examined, they enhance both the personal growth of the person providing the ministry as well as the one receiving it. For instance, ministering with a person with severe depression can evoke awareness of one's own grief, or ministering with a person with severe panic attacks may bring up one's hidden anxieties. Recognition and deeper understanding of these feelings can bring healing and wholeness to both the one ministering and to the one receiving care. The following are typical feelings that can hamper ministry.

a. Fear

Some church members find that they must deal with their fear of persons with mental illness. Such fear often decreases with greater understanding of mental illness. The fear can also be addressed by remembering that persons with mental illness rarely physically harm others. Also, churches can assuage this fear by making sure that experienced staff is present when support groups for people living with mental illness are meeting in church buildings. Often people do not know what to say to a person with mental illness. To treat persons who have a mental illness with kindness and compassion will help, but hearing their life stories will greatly reduce one's anxiety. The more familiar people are with each other the more comfortable they will be.

b. Discomfort

Discomfort is a common response to persons with mental illness. It may lead to feelings of repulsion that result in rejection. People with mental illness may act differently, speak differently, dress differently, appear disheveled and have poor personal hygiene. They may also have unusual mannerisms, idiosyncratic behaviors, and unconventional habits. While many people cannot be expected to just overlook these marked differences, seeing people as individuals can lead to an acceptance of some differences and create greater openness to a fuller range of human experience.

c. Anger

Anger is another common response. Those who perceive people with mental illness as lazy and "just looking for a hand out" will often respond with frustration or even anger. It is important to separate the person from the illness, by getting frustrated with the illness and not the person. Setting firm and appropriate interpersonal boundaries can also help to reduce frustration and anger, because boundaries give caregivers personal space. Healthy boundaries also train people with mental illness to gauge how their behavior affects others, so that they can develop more positive habits.

d. Powerlessness

In an ongoing relation with a person who suffers with serious mental illness, a common impulse is to try to “fix” the problem, to make the suffering go away. However, because it is not possible for human beings to eliminate the problem of serious mental illness, caregivers often feel powerless and helpless in the face of such suffering. This feeling of powerlessness can be very painful. The challenge, then, is to learn to tolerate these feelings in order to be able to stay present and to offer the gift of friendship. When one’s powerlessness is accepted, and the pain of it is tolerated, then the caregiver may find a source of power that is beyond the realm of the human and from the realm of the divine. The paradox of powerlessness is such that only in recognizing one’s powerlessness does one embrace the Source of all Power.

e. Joy

In Faith & Mental Illness, Harold Koenig, M.D. writes, “Persons with mental illness challenge faith communities by providing members of those communities with an opportunity to live out their faith in a meaningful way. . . . If the faith community responds by loving, supporting, and including the mentally ill, then it can say with pride that it is carrying out the great commandment.”<sup>118</sup> Faith can become dry and dreary, theology can become abstract, and expressions of faith can become mere routine. But in demanding and sometimes difficult service to others, faith is made vividly alive and particularly relevant. Through active service to those with serious mental illness the lives of both the giver and receiver of that service are enriched and both draw closer to God. Ministering to others can fill life with love and joy, even with excitement. When a brother or sister with a serious mental illness is recognized and greeted by name, the joy of that simple act is equally experienced by both. Kindness is contagious. Individuals, families, and faith communities all grow when the stranger becomes friend.

C. The Church and the Concept of Recovery

One way to understand the church’s role regarding serious mental illness is in terms of “recovery.” For centuries serious mental illness was considered to be relentless and lifelong by both the medical community and the general public. It was believed that serious mental illness, particularly schizophrenia, was an illness from which one never recovered. This perception greatly influenced plans of treatment for persons with serious mental illness, the community’s regard for these individuals, and the public and private systems designed to treat and care for them. However, with new drug therapies and the organized voices of people with mental illness, their families, and members of the medical community, there emerged a challenge to the notion of permanent incapacity. The focus turned to recovery.<sup>119</sup>

To understand the concept of recovery it is important not to confuse it with the concept of cure. Illnesses can be cured, but one can be in recovery without achieving a cure. Dr. Mark Ragins, a pioneer in the field of integrated services for the mentally ill, writes, “My present conceptualization is that recovery has four components: (1) hope, or a positive vision for the future, (2) empowerment, (3) self-management, and (4) a meaningful role or niche in life.”<sup>120</sup> According to Ragins, these four steps are the way we recover from all of life’s traumas and they are the same four steps that can be utilized in recovery from mental illness. The recovery concept was also fully embraced by the President’s New Freedom Commission on Mental Health. In their 2003 report they proclaimed recovery, which they defined as “. . . a process in which people are able to live, work, learn and participate fully in their communities . . .”<sup>121</sup> as the goal of a transformed mental health care system. It is also important to note that the commission emphasized, in particular, the role of hope in the recovery process.<sup>122</sup>

Churches enable recovery when we welcome people with serious mental illness into our fellowship. While churches cannot cure mental illness, they can work with a person with mental illness toward his or her unique recovery goals. One such way of walking with individuals who have mental illness is to offer a service for wholeness and healing that is in accordance with the Scriptures, such as James 5:13–16, and the Directory for Worship, Book of Order, W-3.5400. In addition, the Pastoral Liturgies section of the Book of Common Worship describes services for wholeness that may be provided within community and to individuals in conjunction with appropriate (medical and psychological) clinical treatment. One advocacy group states, “While serious mental illness impacts individuals in many challenging ways, the concept that all individuals can move towards wellness is paramount.”<sup>123</sup>

Grasping the concept of recovery is fundamental to understanding the role of Christian communities in welcoming those with mental illness and working to meet their needs. Well prior to the current emphasis on recovery, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s 1988 policy, Life Abundant: Values, Choices and Health Care,” proclaimed: “Health and wholeness . . . are not dependent on the absence of impairment or on physical perfection. One can be injured, possessed of a disabling condition, malformed of body, and yet be ‘healthy,’ quite able to function well if given assistance and opportunity by the community” (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 536). The Christian community is clearly called to provide that assistance and opportunity to those with mental illness and we are a unique source for that critical component in recovery—hope.

VI. Conclusion

Sing for joy, O heavens, and exult, O earth; break forth, O mountains, into singing!
For the Lord has comforted his people, and will have compassion on his suffering ones. (Isa. 49:13, NRSV).

Though millions still live in the exile of mental illness, God's call to comfort still stands. God goes before us to bring nurture, companionship, healing, and justice in the lives of all people who cry out for comfort. Like all of human life, there are many aspects of serious mental illness that are beyond our control. Together we pray for the courage, patience, and grace to forbear what we cannot change.

There are also arenas where God's people can exercise the extraordinary power of love, compassion, and hospitality. We can do the work of justice where there is discrimination, inhumane treatment, and callous disregard for the humanity of people with serious mental illness. We can trust the power of God to do more than we can ask for or conceive as we wait and watch for signs of God's Reign. We can proclaim the good news that neither pain of body or mind, nor social stigma and discrimination, nor confinement in prison or life on the streets, nor rejection by family and friends, nor any aspect of serious mental illness can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord.

We offer our gratitude to God for the gifts that people with serious mental illness bring to the church and to the world. We are grateful for ministries with people with serious mental illness, for medications and psychotherapies that offer a healing balm, for the skill and compassion of mental health care professionals, for advocates in the areas of the law, health-care benefits, and public policy, and for the love of families for their members with serious mental illness. We are grateful for the wonders of God's love for all people, especially for God's children with serious mental illness. We give thanks for God's redeeming love in Jesus Christ, whose reach is without bounds.

Out of gratitude for all that God has done, we call the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through this policy, "Comfort My People," to go into the diverse places of exile to find God's children with a mental illness or a serious mental illness. We welcome them home to the love and care of full participation, and representation in this branch of the Body of Christ as described in G-4.0403 of the Book of Order:

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition, as well as different marital conditions (married, single, widowed, or divorced) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church. (G-9.0104a)

The Journey of the Task Force on Serious Mental Illness

The Coordinating Committee and staff of the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) reviewed more than one hundred names and resumes submitted by presbyteries, synods, agencies, and individuals in order to select members for the task force wisely. We, the members of the task force, felt, though, that the Holy Spirit selected us and prepared us for this work long before ACSWP appointed us. We approached our labors with varied backgrounds and perspectives, which helped us to work in complimentary ways. We are pastors, clinicians, family members of persons with mental illness, persons who have suffered from mental illness ourselves, and—all save one who is Roman Catholic—Presbyterians. We all advocate for individuals and families affected by serious mental illness, so we were very grateful for this opportunity to serve.

The ACSWP instructed us to draft a serious mental illness report that we would present to the committee, which would take ownership of the report and consider its readiness for submission to the 218th General Assembly (2008). We convened for the first time in Louisville, Kentucky, in May 2005. We learned about our accountability to ACSWP and the process of getting a proposed policy before the General Assembly. Brenda Gales was elected moderator. Tom Davis agreed to record minutes and moderate the list serve to facilitate our online collaboration.

We heard from representatives from the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA) and the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and the Presbyterian Serious Mental Illness Network (PSMIN). We organized to complete several early writing assignments: a panel survey, a study guide to educate churches and solicit their feedback; and finally—a rather small project that seemed simple at first, but proved more difficult than we had supposed—a working definition of "serious mental illness." The task force then set its calendar and agenda for the remaining five meetings.

In November 2005, the task force met in Rosemont, Illinois. Lee Butler, associate professor of Theology and Psychology, Chicago Theological Seminary, led us in a Bible study. Joan Blundall, director of the Community Based Initiatives: The Higher Plain, Inc., West Branch, Iowa, informed the task force about issues which rural Americans face who have serious mental illness. The task force heard reports from several Presbyterian congregations engaged in ministry with persons living with serious mental illness: Edgewater Presbyterian Church, Chicago; Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago; and, North Presbyterian Church, Kalamazoo, Michigan. Patricia Gleich, associate for National Health Ministries of the PC(USA) described the work of this office. The task force received reports regarding the panel survey used by the Research Service Office of the PC(USA), and also the study and feedback booklet that was sent to every presbytery and distributed to their member churches.

In February 2006, we convened in Washington, D.C. Some of our sessions were held in the Presbyterian Washington Office (PWO). A paper, "Korean American Perspective on Mental Illness," was presented by task force member, Dr. Kum Ock Kim. The work of the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI) was outlined, especially the issues of legislative and governmental concern. The executive director of the American Association of Pastoral Counselors (AAPC) discussed issues with us, as did the director of Communications and Public Affairs of the American Psychiatric Association (APA). We met with a legislative aid to Senator Barbara Boxer about proposed legislation, particularly regarding medical insurance parity for mental illnesses. We learned that Senator Boxer had introduced legislation regarding mental health care for returning Iraq veterans.

The task force heard from representatives of the Mennonite Central Committee Washington who informed us of resources produced and available through their offices. We viewed a moving video entitled Shadow Voices.

Michael Stoops, director of the National Coalition for the Homeless (NCH), and David Harris, a formerly homeless person with serious mental illness, spoke to us about the interrelatedness of homelessness and mental illness. Carolyn Race, former associate for Domestic Poverty and Environmental Issues in the Presbyterian Washington Office, discussed some of the current pertinent legislative issues and anticipated federal budget allocations.

Cynthia Abrams, director of the Alcohol, Other Addictions and Health Care Program of the General Board of Church and Society of the United Methodist Church, addressed the group as a Native American. She spoke about addictions and mental illnesses in various tribes, and how the availability of resources for alleviating these problems varies from tribe to tribe. She spoke of the impact of gaming upon some reservations, and the high rate of suicide among young Native American men.

The task force also heard from L. William Yolton, a retired PC(USA) minister and chair of the local Human Rights Committee in Virginia. He had been a member of PSMIN. The task force then began a lengthy task of writing and rewriting. Assignments were made for our next meeting.

In August 2006, the task force met in San Francisco. A report from Jack Marcum, then the associate for survey research of the General Assembly Council, regarding the results from the Mental Illness: The Report of the February 2006 Presbyterian Panel Survey indicated that the returned response was better than usual. The task force heard from representatives of Menlo Park Presbyterian Church, San Francisco, who are members of Hope, Encouragement, Love and Prayer (H.E.L.P.); also from a representative from FaithNet; and a retired National Health Ministries associate of the PC(USA).

We continued to edit drafts of the policy statement. We settled on a unifying theme for the report: "Comfort My People: A Policy Statement on Serious Mental Illness." An outline of the proposed policy was developed. A schedule for materials to be submitted was established and writing assignments made.

In November 2006, the task force gathered in Decatur, Georgia. We met with doctors, nurses, and chaplains in the psychiatric unit of Grady Hospital and discussed spiritual concerns of people living with serious mental illness. We also discussed some cultural dimensions of serious mental illness experienced by racial and ethnic minorities. Finally, we began to consider recommendations to follow from our proposed policy statement, recommendations for various entities with our church and society.

In late February/early March 2007, the task force gathered in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Representatives from the Synod of Puerto Rico and the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico served as hosts for this major review of the proposed policy paper.

Members of the task force shared in a presentation of their work to ACSWP at its summer meeting in 2007 in Louisville, Kentucky. The ACSWP received it with gratitude and commendation, but also recommended suggestions for strengthening the report. In addition, members of the task force shared in presentations of their work to the Synod Consultation on Comfort My People in the fall of 2007 in Louisville, Kentucky, and to the commissioners to the 218th General Assembly (2008) in San Jose, California.

The members of the task force are most grateful to God, the PC(USA), ACSWP, and each other for the opportunity to serve our neighbors in this way. We pray that our work may provide greater comfort, community, and celebration for all God's people.

The members of the Task Force on Serious Mental Illness included:

Robert Butziger, clergy, Presbytery of San Jose; certified pastoral counselor; president, California Counseling Association;

Ethel Charles, elder, Presbytery of New York City; director, Police Athletic League Senior Center;

Mary Helen Davis, M.D., Roman Catholic, Diocese of Louisville; associate clinical professor, University of Louisville School of Medicine; private practice psychiatrist, Integrative Psychiatry;

Thomas C. Davis, Ph.D., retired pastor, New Castle Presbytery; former pastoral psychotherapist and professor of Ethics and Pastoral Care and Counseling, Florida Center for Theological Studies;

B. Gordon Edwards, pastor, Presbytery of Cimarron; ACSWP chair and liaison to the task force;

10 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON HEALTH ISSUES

Timothy Engelmann, Ph.D., layperson, Presbytery of San Francisco; licensed psychologist (Calif.), private practice, First Presbyterian Church, Burlingame, California;

Brenda Gales, elder, Presbytery of Greater Atlanta; retired coordinator, Activity Therapy, Grady Hospital, Atlanta, Georgia, volunteer, health clinic coordinator, Clifton Sanctuary Ministries, Atlanta, Georgia;

Leslie Klingensmith, clergy, Presbytery of National Capital; ACSWP liaison to the task force, resigned from ACSWP and the task force early in the process due to family and professional responsibilities;

Kum Ock Kim, M.D. and pastor, Presbytery of New York City; practicing psychiatrist;

Matt Morse, pastor, Presbytery of Detroit;

José R Rodríguez-Gómez M.D., M.P.H., Ph.D., elder, Presbytery of San Juan, Puerto Rico; professor of Socio-Transcultural Psychology, Carlos Albizu University; professor of Statistics and Research Methods, University of Puerto Rico;

Alyce Woodall, elder, Presbytery of Northern New England, retired university vice president, instructor of the National Alliance on Mental Illness “Family to Family” course.

Consultant: Susan J. Dunlap, Ph.D., clergy, Presbytery of New Hope; assistant adjunct professor of Pastoral Theology, Duke Divinity School.

Staff resource person: Belinda M. Curry, clergy, Presbytery of St. Andrew, associate, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

Suggested Resources

This list of resources includes materials that the Task Force on Serious Mental Illness gathered through its speakers’ presentations, referrals received from individuals and groups, and from the members’ research on this subject.

Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Resources:

Book of Common Worship. Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 1993. This resource provides guidelines for preparation for public worship, which include a service for wholeness. Copies of this publication are available through The Presbyterian Marketplace at <http://www.pcusa.org/marketplace/item.list.jsp>, or by calling the Presbyterian Distribution Service (PDS), 1-800-524-2612. Specify Item # 219918 when placing your orders.

Living into the Body of Christ: Towards Full Inclusion of People with Disabilities. Louisville: Office of the General Assembly (OGA), 2006. This policy approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006) encourages ongoing advocacy with and on behalf of people with disabilities in local, national, and international contexts. It provides a substantial theological understanding of living with disabilities. COGA AND GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 10-05

Comment on Item 10-05—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC).

In order to be good stewards of our resources, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council urge the 218th General Assembly (2008) not to make exceptions to Standing Rule H.2.a.(12).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council remind commissioners and advisory delegates of Standing Rule H.2.a.(12), which reads: "(12) As soon as practicable after the adjournment of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish the assembly's proceedings and other documents as the assembly may direct in an appropriate format (i.e. print or electronic) to be determined by the Stated Clerk."

This rule was added to Manual of the General Assembly several years ago to help control expenses and maximize distribution of documents.

If the General Assembly decides to make an exception to the rule, it will be necessary for the assembly to suspend the Standing Rules, which requires a 2/3 affirmative vote of the total enrollment of commissioners.

On Supporting Single Payer Universal Healthcare Reform—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh.

The Presbytery of Pittsburgh overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. ~~[Advocate for, educate about, and work toward]~~ [Endorse in principle the provision of] single-payer universal health care reform [in which health care services are privately provided and publicly financed.] ~~[through national health insurance that is privately provided (improved Medicare for all in principle) and publicly financed.]~~

2. Direct the General Assembly Council, through appropriate offices including the National Health Ministries, the Washington Office, and the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA), to ~~[actively]~~ [advocate for, educate about, and otherwise] pursue the goal of obtaining legislation that enacts single-payer, universal national health insurance as the program that best responds to the moral imperative of the gospel; ~~[and that the General Assembly Council monitor]~~ [monitoring] progress toward this goal ~~[without regard to political party]~~ and ~~[report]~~ [reporting] back to the ~~[church on an annual basis]~~ [next two General Assemblies (2010 and 2012)].

3. Direct the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to send a copy of this resolution to the appropriate committee chairs of the U.S. Congress and to the Washington and United Nations offices of the PC(USA).

4. Direct that $25,000 from the Mission budget of the PC(USA) be sent to the PACT Network of PHEWA for the purpose of holding ten regional, one-day seminars supporting single payer universal healthcare reform, moneys to be allocated on a first-come, first-served basis.

[Original Financial Implications: (2008): $0; (2009) $25,000; (2010): $0 (Mission)]

Rationale

Jesus Christ, who has reconciled us to God, healed all kinds of sickness (Mt. 4:23, par) as a sign of God's rule.

Isaiah speaks God's word to say "No more shall there be ... an infant that lives but a few days, or an old person who does not live out a lifetime" (Isa. 65:20a).

We, as Reformed Christians, bear witness to Jesus Christ in word, but also in deed.

As followers of our Great Physician Jesus, we have a moral imperative to work to assure that everyone has full access to health care.

Our nation is in a crisis in health care, which presents an unprecedented opportunity for our nation to provide healthcare affordable for all.

In this country there is a baby born every fifty-one seconds to a family with no health insurance.<sup>1</sup>

In this, the wealthiest nation in the world, our infant mortality rate is second highest in the industrialized world.<sup>2</sup>

Forty-seven million Americans are uninsured<sup>3</sup> (50 percent employed; 25 percent children; 20 percent out of labor force as students, disabled, et.al.; 5 percent unemployed).<sup>4</sup>

The U.S. spends nearly twice as much per capita as than any other country on health care, but we rank poorly in the thirty-seven categories of health status measured by the World Health Organization.<sup>5</sup>

The rise in childhood obesity, asthma, diabetes, and other chronic diseases indicates that the overall health status of people of this country is declining.<sup>6</sup>

We are warned by the prophets not to heal the wounds of God's people lightly; yet in 2006 the aggregate profits of the health insurance companies in the United States were $68 billion. During that same year more than 15,000 families were forced into bankruptcy because of medical expenses.<sup>7</sup>

Our business employers operate at a competitive disadvantage internationally because health care costs are assumed by the governments of other industrialized nations.

The General Assemblies of the PC(USA) and its predecessors since 1971 have called for reform of health delivery systems in the United States to make them accessible to the entire population.<sup>8</sup>

Our federal government already operates efficiently and with low overhead<sup>9</sup> the health delivery programs of Medicare and Medicaid; and yet at the same time insurance companies spend nearly one third of every premium dollar on marketing and other administrative costs and in fact, several such companies spend less than 60 percent of premium dollars they receive on health-care services.

The American College of Physicians, the nation's second largest physician group, has endorsed a single payer healthcare system.<sup>10</sup>

Only a single-payer system of national healthcare coverage (privately provided; publicly financed; not socialized medicine) can save what is estimated to be $350 billion wasted annually on medical bureaucracy and redirect those funds to expanded coverage.<sup>11</sup>

And single-payer universal healthcare reform would increase coverage from the 60 percent of Americans already covered by Medicare (over 65) or Medicaid (severely limited wealth) to 100 percent of Americans, a net increase of only 40 percent.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 10-06
Advice and Counsel on Item 10-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the overture be approved as amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“1. ~~Advocate for, educate about, and work toward~~ [Endorse in principle the provision of] single-payer universal health care reform through national health insurance that is privately provided (improved Medicare for all in principle) and publicly financed.

“2. ~~Direct the General Assembly Council~~, through appropriate offices including the National Health Ministries, the Washington Office, and the Presbyterian Health, Education, and Welfare Association (PHEWA), ~~to~~ [actively] ~~advocate for, educate about, and otherwise~~ pursue the goal of obtaining legislation that enacts single-payer, universal national health insurance as the program that best responds to the moral imperative of the gospel; ~~and that the General Assembly Council monitor~~ [monitoring] progress toward this goal ~~[without regard to political party]~~ and ~~report~~ [reporting] back to the ~~church on an annual basis~~ [next two General Assemblies (2010 and 2012)].”

[No changes to Recommendations 3 and 4.]

Rationale

The Presbytery of Pittsburgh’s overture documents the tragedies and inefficiencies of our current medical system, the most expensive in the world and one that leaves out approximately one sixth of the population of the United States. On the basis of cost efficiency as well as inclusion, national medical plans are the preferred method of healthcare provision throughout the developed and much of the developing world. The proponent presbytery grounds its concerns strongly in the biblical witness and notes other calls for reform, including calls from several organizations of medical professionals. Current political proposals chart several economically credible ways to fund universal health insurance, and corporations burdened by high medical costs are shifting to support such national medical solutions. If enacted, universal health insurance would affect the nature of private plans, including the Medical Plan related to the Board of Pensions.

The General Assembly has spoken in favor of universal access to healthcare since 1946, including statements in 1960, 1969, 1971, 1988, 1991, and 1999, yet not with the focus and forcefulness of this overture. Commissioners may wish to reflect on whether the highest ever numbers of uninsured Americans (not including undocumented immigrants) and the data on increasing differences in life expectancy among Americans confirm the need for forthright new advocacy by the church. The allocation of moneys recommended for a decentralized advocacy initiative by the Presbyterian Association for Community Transformation (PACT) (point four) has not been analyzed by ACSWP, but would clearly magnify the impact of the assembly's statement. In addition, concern for universal health insurance is widespread within other churches, as can be seen in its inclusion in the Social Creed as a goal for the whole society.

The theological and ethical links between salvation and health are explored most substantially in the book-length collection of papers by Presbyterian medical professionals, ethicists, and economists done in preparation for the 1988 General Assembly policy, Life Abundant: Values, Choices, and Health Care. That book, Health Care and Its Costs: A Challenge for the Church, edited by Walter E. Wiest (1988), was followed in 1990 with an emerging issue paper, Universal Access to Health Care, adopted by the General Assembly, which in turn led to the 1991 Resolution on Christian Responsibility and a National Medical Plan. All expenditures of funds include economic trade-offs; these previous assembly resources also underline the faith-value that adequate healthcare provides.

Item 10-A

[The Assembly Committee on Health Issues approved Item 10-A as amended. See pp. 58, 59.]

~~[The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008), Assembly Committee on Health Issues, receive a presentation from the Cameron House Healing Task Force on therapeutic activities for sexual abuse victims/survivors.] [That the Cameron House Healing Task Force DVD be shown as a part of the Assembly Committee on Health Issues report to the entire 218th General Assembly (2008).]~~

Rationale

At the request of the Cameron House Task Force, the GAC approved $187,500 for therapy for survivors and $62,500 for retreats for victims of sexual abuse at the Cameron House in San Francisco. The report will update the church on the effect of these therapy sessions.

Item 11-01

[In response to Item 11-01, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See pp. 45, 46.]

On Peace and Justice in Palestine and Israel—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta, having held dialogues with members of the Atlanta Israeli, Palestinian, Islamic, and Jewish communities and with representatives of Israeli and Palestinian human rights organizations, and having an ongoing concern for peace and justice in Palestine/Israel, respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Produce a video and study guide—including participants from the Jewish, Islamic, Palestinian, Israeli, and human rights communities (both Israeli and Palestinian)—addressing the questions: “What is your vision for a just peace in Israel/Palestine and how do we achieve it?” and “What can the PC(USA) do to make that vision a reality?”
2. Request Peace and Justice, through the Mission Responsibility Through Investment Committee (MRTI), to produce a guide for congregations and individuals to reflect on their investments in light of biblical and theological principles and to suggest possible actions persons might take in light of those reflections. Such a guide would include the careful process of principled corporate engagement that MRTI has undertaken with regard to peace and justice in Israel/Palestine (the Sept./Oct. 2002 issue of Church & Society’s article, “The Presbyterian Church as Investor,” is a helpful starting point).
3. Request World Mission, through its Office for Interfaith Relations and its Office of the Middle East to produce a guide to help Presbyterian congregations and members seek out and live into intentional friendships with Jews, Muslims, and Middle Eastern Christians who reside in their communities.
4. Continue to lift up the plight of the dwindling Christian community throughout the Middle East, recognizing that there are various reasons for the churches’ difficult circumstances, and expressing special concern for those in areas of active military violence. Thus, we will continue to seek ways to support and pray for the Church in the lands of its birth.
5. Urge the president of the United States to appoint a special envoy for Israel/Palestine, based in Jerusalem, to begin immediately as a sign of active, principled U.S. engagement toward solving Israeli-Palestinian abuses and conflicts.

Alternate Resolution Approved

The 218th General Assembly (2008):

1. Affirms the obligation of the church to speak to the governments of the United States and all other nations where it sees those governments violating the commandments of God. In the words of The Theological Declaration of Barmen, which speaks to the dependence of the Church on the Word of God and its independence from any state or ideology, “we reject the false doctrine, as though there were areas of our life in which we would not belong to Jesus Christ, but to other lords ... . The state has by divine appointment the task of providing for justice and peace ... [The church] calls to mind the Kingdom of God, God’s commandment and righteousness, and thereby the responsibility both of rulers and of the ruled. ...” (The Book of Confessions, 8.15, 8.22). The sovereignty of God thus judges all claims of sovereign nationhood, all boundaries, all exercises of force, and all uses of resources by human beings. The Church is thus called to help discern where the Spirit is working in the world, guided by Scripture and its confessions.
2. Endorses the “Amman Call” regarding Arab-Israeli peace, issued by the World Council of Churches’ conference, “Churches Together for Peace and Justice in the Middle East,” at Amman, Jordan, June 18–20, 2007, including its affirmation of the UN resolutions that are the basis of a projected “two-state” solution, a shared Jerusalem, and the human rights of refugees and occupied peoples, its call to resist extremism and push for reconciliation, and its commitment to imperatives of ecumenical solidarity in action for Just Peace, directing that the Amman Call be printed in the Minutes of the General Assembly and considered in any study processes of the church.
3. Directs appropriate offices of the General Assembly Council to provide video, cyber, and print resources on the church’s historic concern for justice and peace in Israel and Palestine, such as those proposed by the Presbytery of Atlanta, using existing materials whenever possible, including back issues of Church & Society as suggested, to interpret such matters as Mission Responsibility Through Investment, the status of Jerusalem, the impact of the security barrier (or “wall”), etc.

4. Commends the nonviolent witness of the Christians in Palestine and Israel with whom we share membership in the one Body of Christ, joining them in prayer and mutual remembrance, advocating for fair treatment for them and their neighbors.

5. Encourages Presbyterian individuals, congregations, and councils to take pilgrimages and trips to Israel and Palestine that are in harmony with our principles, specifically that include: significant time visiting local Christians and church leaders, significant time in the Occupied Territories (witnessing conditions, helping sustain isolated and impoverished local economies), opportunities to meet Israeli and Palestinian peacemakers, and opportunities to engage in interfaith discussion of a range of perspectives; such travel to be assisted and resourced as feasible by the General Assembly Council, mission personnel, the Israel/Palestine Network, and our ecumenical partners in the region, as outlined by the Presbytery of East Iowa, all with the goals of helping the church grow in solidarity, mercy, and peacemaking.

6. In continuing the process of corporate engagement with companies supporting or profiting from the occupation of Palestine and/or other violence in the region, instructs the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to report regularly to the General Assembly Council on its communication and the compliance, or lack thereof, by Caterpillar, Motorola, and other corporations involved with regard to General Assembly guidelines and concerns for justice and human rights.

7. Requests that the full texts of all overtures submitted on the Middle East be considered in the report on the Middle East recommended by the General Assembly Council to be prepared for 2010.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-01.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-01 be answered by approving the following alternate resolution:

“1. Affirms the obligation of the church to speak to the governments of the United States and all other nations where it sees those governments violating the commandments of God. In the words of The Theological Declaration of Barmen, which speaks to the dependence of the Church on the Word of God and its independence from any state or ideology, ‘we reject the false doctrine, as though there were areas of our life in which we would not belong to Jesus Christ, but to other lords . . . . The sovereignty of God thus judges all claims of sovereign nationhood, all boundaries, all exercises of force, and all uses of resources by human beings. The Church is thus called to help discern where the Spirit is working in the world, guided by Scripture and its confessions.

“2. In accordance with resolutions approved by the General Assembly in 2004 and 2006, the General Assembly Council is authorized and encouraged to act on this information, and as it deems appropriate and timely, to implement divestment procedures.

“7. Requests that the full texts of all overtures submitted on the Middle East be considered in the report on the Middle East recommended by the General Assembly Council to be prepared for 2010.”

Rationale

The presbyteries involved, including those concurring, have provided the church valuable service that we believe could be consolidated for effective action by commissioners. These actions are all consistent with existing General Assembly policy and program, much of which is noted in the helpful comments of the General Assembly Council. Other concerns are noted in Advice and Counsel on Items 11-02, 11-06, and 11-07.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-01

Several of our partner Christian and interfaith organizations and institutions in the Middle East have produced statements, resources, and other materials that have been helpful in their own efforts to promote mutual understanding and to build healthy and cooperative relations between Christians and other faith communities in the Middle East. Such materials could be exceedingly helpful to our own congregations and members in reaching out in friendship to Jewish and Muslim neighbors, as they model both intentionality and commitment to build communities that seek justice and pursue peace.

The Office for the Middle East (World Mission) works collaboratively with various other GAC offices, along with constituency entities such as Mission Networks (for Egypt, Israel/Palestine, Iraq, etc.) and task groups to raise awareness of the Christian presence and witness in the Middle East, paying particular attention to the crisis of dwindling numbers of Christians and the increasing difficulties our partner churches are facing, due to a variety of causes. It is noteworthy that this alarming reality pervades the consciousness of our partners in the region as a primary challenge not only for themselves but also for many of their non-Christian neighbors, and certainly for the world’s Christian community.

As one example of our church’s response to this crisis, this office—in cooperation with colleagues offices of the General Assembly Council—worked closely with the Israel/Palestine Network for the production of the widely circulated illustrated booklet, The Cradle of Our Faith: The Enduring Witness of the Christians of the Middle East. Now in its second printing, this resource was produced in partial response to an action overwhelmingly passed by the 217th General Assembly (2007) inviting all of our 11,000 congregations to join in “a Week of Prayer and Witness with Christians in the Middle East” during the season between Easter and Pentecost 2007. Many congregations did.

The Middle East Office, together with others, plans to continue to lift up and facilitate awareness of this issue through all available means (e.g., the church’s Website, mission to the U.S.A. opportunities, missionary itineration, etc.), and within the limitations of staff time and financial resources.

Item 11-02

[The assembly disapproved Item 11-02. See pp. 45, 46.]

On Pursuing a Culture of a Just Peace in Israel and Palestine—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2006) to do the following:

1. Call for a culture of a just peace in the Holy Land for Israeli Jews and Arabs, and for residents of the West Bank and Gaza. Such a peace was described on December 10, 1948, by the United Nations General Assembly in the “Universal Declaration of Human Rights,” and subsequently in the Fourth Geneva Convention 1949, and includes provision for:

- equal access to a violence-free life,
- rights of citizenship,
- honoring of property rights,
- freedom of movement,
- preservation of homes and granting of building permits,
- maintaining family relationships,
- equitable benefits of natural resources,
- access to health care and education and economic livelihood,
- free flow of information,
- due process under law, and
- freedom of worship.

2. Call upon the president of the United States, the Congress, and all elected officials, to support actions in Israel and Palestine that are in accordance with these internationally agreed-upon principles.

3. Approve a two-year period of study of the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights and encourage study with appropriate study guides for the churches, colleges and universities, women’s and men’s associations, and youth ministries during 2008–2010.

4. Call on our fellow Presbyterians to work together towards pursuing a culture of a just peace in 2008 and beyond in several ways:

a. Call for end to occupation and its conditions in accordance with international law to

(1) stop home demolitions and other forms of collective punishment against civilian populations;

(2) end the expansion of illegal settlements and withdraw from those established throughout the occupied territories;

(3) relocate the wall/separation barrier on the 1967 green line;

(4) End the violence by all parties.

b. Talk honestly about and encourage an open and honest discussion of the two-state solution with a shared Jerusalem, the right of return of Palestinian refugees and related issues, oppose military solutions to what is essentially a political problem, and encourage diplomacy and other nonviolent methods.

c. Inform and mobilize leaders at all PC(USA) judicatory levels to support actions in Israel/Palestine that are in accordance with these internationally agreed upon principles and make them known to U.S. elected officials.

d. Support the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) Committee recommendations to the General Assembly, as established through previous General Assembly resolutions (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 976).

Rationale

“... [And] they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more; but they shall all sit under their own vines and under their own fig trees, and no one shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts has spoken” (Mic. 4:3–4).

In the face of the abiding need for a faithful response to Jesus’ call that we be peacemakers, following the vision of God’s shalom/just peace, and aware of the changes that constantly occur in Israel-Palestine, the Presbytery of Chicago made the above recommendations.

Consideration of Israel-Palestine through the lens of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is appropriate because the principles were adopted shortly after the creation of the state of Israel; in fact, Israel's creation provided the impetus for the Universal Principles. The PC(USA) has supported the Fourth Geneva Conventions and the applicability of human rights and international law to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict since its initial resolutions on the Middle East in 1948.

Further, the Book of Order, Chapter III, "The Church and Its Mission," directs the Church to be Christ's faithful evangelist" in G-3.0300c(3):

- (3) participating in God's activity in the world through its life for others by
  - (a) healing and reconciling and binding up wounds,
  - (b) ministering to the needs of the poor, the sick, the lonely, and the powerless,
  - (c) engaging in the struggle to free people from sin, fear, oppression, hunger and injustice,
  - (d) giving itself and its substance to the service of those who suffer,
  - (e) sharing with Christ in the establishing of his just, peaceable, and loving rule in the world.

and G-3.0400

The Church is called to undertake this mission even at the risk of losing its life, trusting in God alone as the author and giver of life, sharing the gospel, and doing those deeds in the world that point beyond themselves to the new reality in Christ.

Within the body of international and human rights law<sup>1</sup> that have been adopted by the United Nations General Assembly are the following:

- The Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948): "no one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his/her property; [Article 17, 2].

- UN General Assembly Resolution 194 (December 11, 1948): Proposes that refugees wishing to return to their homes and live at peace with their neighbors should be permitted to do so at the earliest practicable date, and that compensation should be paid for the property of those choosing not to return and for loss of or damage to property.

- Fourth Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War (1949): Note: Both Israel and the U.S. are High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention.

—"Protected persons...shall at all times be humanely treated, and shall be protected especially against all acts of violence." (Article 27)

—"No physical or moral coercion shall be exercised against protected persons, in particular to obtain information from them or from third parties." (Article 31)

—"No protected person may be punished for an offence he or she has not personally committed. Collective penalties and likewise all measures of intimidation or of terrorism are prohibited." (Article 33)

—"Protected persons who are in occupied territory shall not be deprived, in any case or in any manner whatsoever, of the benefits of the present Convention by any change introduced, as the result of the occupation of a territory, into the institutions or government of the said territory. (Article 47)

—"Individual or mass forcible transfers, as well as deportations of protected persons from occupied territory to the territory of the Occupying Power or to that of any other country occupied or not, are prohibited, regardless of their motive...The Occupying Power shall not deport or transfer parts of its own civilian population into the territory it occupies." (Article 49)

—"The Occupying Power shall, with the cooperation of the national and local authorities, facilitate the proper working of all institutions devoted to the care and education of children." (Article 50)

—"Any destruction by the Occupying Power of real or personal property belonging individually or collectively to private persons, or to the state, or to other public authorities, or to social or cooperative organizations, is prohibited." (Article 53)

—"To the fullest extent of the means available to it, the Occupying Power has the duty of ensuring and maintaining...the medical and hospital establishments and services, public health and hygiene in the occupied territory. ... Medical personnel of all categories shall be allowed to carry out their duties." (Article 56)

—“The Occupying Power shall permit ministers of religion to give spiritual assistance to the members of their religious communities.” (Article 58)

—“Accused persons who are prosecuted by the Occupying Power shall be promptly informed in writing, in a language which they understand, of the particulars of the charges preferred against them, and shall be brought to trial as rapidly as possible. (Article 71)

—“High Contracting Parties undertake to enact any legislation necessary to provide effective penal sanctions for persons committing, or ordering to be committed, any of the grave breaches of the present Convention as defined in the following Article.” (Article 146)

—“Grave breaches ... shall be those involving any of the following acts, if committed against persons or property protected by the present Convention: willful killing, torture or inhuman treatment, including biological experiments, willfully causing great suffering or serious injury to body and health, unlawful deportation or transfer or unlawful confinement of a protected person, compelling a protected person to serve in the forces of a hostile Power, or willfully depriving a protected person of the rights of fair and regular trial prescribed in the present Convention, taking of hostages an extensive destruction and appropriation of property, not justified by military necessity and carried out unlawfully and wantonly.” (Article 147)

—“No High Contracting Party shall be allowed to absolve itself or any other High Contracting Party of any liability incurred by itself or by another High Contracting Party in respect of breaches referred to in the preceding Article.” (Article 148)

- Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions of August 12, 1949 ‘Protocol 1’: “Journalists engaged in dangerous professional missions in areas of armed conflict shall be considered as civilians.”(Article 79)

- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of 1966

—“Everyone lawfully within the territory of a State shall, within that territory, have the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose his residence.” (Article 12:1)

—“Everyone shall be free to leave any country, including his own.” (Article 12:2)

- International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of 1966

—“All peoples have the right of self-determination. By virtue of this right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development.” (Article 1:1)

—“All Peoples may, for their own ends, freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources without prejudice to any obligations arising out of international economic cooperation, based upon the principle of mutual benefit and international law. In no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence.” (Article 1:2)

—“The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right to work, which includes the right of everyone to the opportunity to gain his living by work which he freely choose or accepts, and will take appropriate steps to safeguard this right.” (Article 6)

—“The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health.” (Article 12)

—“The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to education. They agree that education shall be directed to the full development of the human personality and the sense of its dignity, and shall strengthen the respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.” (Article 13)

- UN Security Council Resolution 242 of November 22, 1967, —Emphasizes “the inadmissibility of the acquisition of territory by war and the need to work for a just and lasting peace in which every State in the area can live in security.”

—Affirms that the fulfillment of Charter principles requires the establishment of a just and lasting peace in the Middle East which should include the application of both the following principles: (i) Withdrawal of Israeli armed forces from territories occupied in the recent conflict; (ii) Termination of all claims or states of belligerency and respect for and acknowledgement of the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of every State in the area and their right to live in peace within security and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force...

—Affirms further the necessity...”For achieving a just settlement of the refugee problem.”

- UN Security Council Resolution 267 of July 3, 1969: “The Security Council... reaffirming the established principle that acquisition of territory by military conquest is inadmissible...censures in the strongest terms all measures taken to change the status of the city of Jerusalem; confirms that all legislative and administrative measures and actions taken by Israel which purport to alter the status of Jerusalem, including expropriation of land and properties thereon, are invalid and cannot change that status.”

- UN Security Council Resolution 338 of October 22, 1973

—Calls upon the parties concerned to start immediately after the cease-fire the implementation of Security Council resolution 242 (1967) in all of its parts; (Item 2)

—Decides that, immediately and concurrently with the cease-fire, negotiations shall start between the parties concerned under appropriate auspices aimed at establishing a just and durable peace in the Middle East. (Item 3)

- Applicability to Israel-Palestine:

—UN Security Council Resolution 465 of March 1, 1980:

- Affirms once more that the Fourth Geneva Convention relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Times of War, of August 12, 1949, is applicable to the Arab territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem,

- Deplores the decision of the Government of Israel official (to) support Israeli settlements in Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967,

- Takes into account the need to consider measures for the impartial protection of private and public land, property, and water resources,

- Bears in mind the specific status of Jerusalem and, in particular, the need for protection and preservation of the unique spiritual and religious dimension of the Holy Places in the city,

- Draws attention to the grave consequences which the settlement(s) policy is bound to have on any attempt to reach a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East,

- Strongly deplores the continuation and persistence of Israel in pursuing those policies and practices and calls upon the Government and people of Israel to rescind those measures, to dismantle the existing settlements and in particular to cease, on an urgent basis, the establishment, construction and planning of settlements in the Arab territories occupied since 1967, including Jerusalem.

- Calls upon all States not to provide Israel with any assistance to be used specifically in connection with settlements in the Occupied Territories.

- Expresses grave concern at the dangerous deterioration of the situation in all the Palestinian territories occupied by Israel since 1967, including Jerusalem, and at the violence and rising tension in Israel...

- Calls upon the High Contracting Parties to the Fourth Geneva Convention of 1949 to ensure respect by Israel, the occupying Power, for its obligations under the (Fourth Geneva) Convention.

Endnotes

1. The information explaining the import of each Resolution or Document of the United Nations was provided by the Rev. Alex Awad, Dean of Students at Bethlehem Bible College, in Bethlehem, Occupied Territories. Rev. Awad is a Palestinian Christian.

2. UN Security Council Resolutions also presented, but vetoed by the U.S.A.:

UN Security Council draft Resolutions vetoed by U.S.A. pertaining to Israeli settlements and land confiscation. From 1976 to 2001 there were seven Resolutions; the U.S.A. veto was the only “no” vote.

UN Security Council draft Resolutions vetoed by U.S.A. pertaining to implementation of Fourth Geneva Convention (protection of civilians in time of war, where settlements are illegal). From 1982 to 2001, there were twelve resolutions, all vetoed by the U.S.A. and no other country.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the overture be approved as amended below:

“3. [~~Approve a two year period of study of the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights and encourage study with appropriate study guides for the churches, colleges and universities, women’s and men’s associations, and youth ministries during 2008–2010.~~] [Encourage the inclusion of the UN Declaration of Human Rights in study materials produced by the General Assembly Council (GAC) related to human rights, Israel/Palestine, and other countries where rights are being denied, and direct the GAC’s own study process, if approved, to include consideration of this historic statement, the 60th anniversary of which is celebrated this year (2008)..]”

2. Add new Recommendations 4.e. and 5. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“[e. Support measures to ensure academic freedom within colleges, universities and seminaries to allow professors and students to examine justice issues related to Israel and Palestine.”

“[5. Commend the presbytery for assembling relevant humanitarian law and direct that it be printed with the overture in the Minutes and considered in any GAC study process.]”

Rationale

The Presbytery of Chicago, in forwarding this overture, appends documents that in a way parallel the testimony and social policy of the church over the past sixty years. The church’s witness has been based in the message of Jesus of Nazareth, expressed in solidarity with Christians in the Middle East, in great sympathy for the Jewish community so often victimized in history, and in an insistence on the full humanity of Muslims as well as Christians and Jews. At the same time, our faith is a universal faith and sees points of contact with the universal elements of human rights law and its search for application in every country where human beings are treated on a differential basis.

The amendments recommended relate to the overture’s realistic Recommendation 4.b., “talk honestly about and encourage an open and honest discussion of the two-state solution with a shared Jerusalem . . .” Talking honestly is difficult when there is fear of retaliation or political pressure, from any angle. Most Presbyterians are undoubtedly aware of the role of organized pressure groups of varying strengths on all sides of issues in the Middle East, including support or opposition to the Iraq war. A recent case, out of a number that could be listed, is that of anthropologist Nadia Abu El-Haj having her tenure at Barnard contested on the basis of her Palestinian background and misrepresentations of her work. She was in fact awarded tenure in a rigorous process, but faced large-scale, organized opposition from nonacademic sources, as detailed in these two articles: www.nytimes.com/2007/11/03/nyregion/03barnard.html, and www.newyorker.com/reporting/2008/04/14/080414fa\_fact\_kramer.

Challenging powerful interests is always controversial, but voices inside and outside the church have been increasingly raised to wonder whether the “two-state” solution is still viable at all. In the most recent period, the U.S. government has begun to recognize the destructive role played by the continued “impasse” between Israel and Palestine, an impasse hardened by the cut off of Hamas-run Gaza and the continued construction of settlements and the “wall,” or security barrier that largely follows their footprint. This economic stranglehold has led to shocking levels of malnutrition among Palestinians in the fragmented West Bank as well as in Gaza, which is still affected by a cycle of rocket-firing, assassinations, food and power cut-offs, and incursions. Putting these matters in the context of international law does not answer all questions about how the church itself should proceed, especially when the interfaith nature of the conflict most requires informed Christian voices, persons seeking God’s presence even in places of suffering and hatred.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-02

Comment on Item 11-02—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council affirms the concern shown by the Presbytery of Chicago for the people of Israel and Palestine. The overture brings together two significant themes within General Assembly statements on Israel and Palestine.

General Assemblies have consistently affirmed the right of Israel to exist as a sovereign state within secure, internationally recognized borders and the right of the Palestinians to self-determination, including the right to the establishment of a neighboring independent, sovereign state, toward the end of establishing a just and durable peace in the region.

General Assemblies have also consistently expressed concern for the human rights of Palestinians and Israelis, affirming the role of the United Nations and international community as well as international documents and United Nations declarations, conventions, and resolutions in achieving that just peace.

In response to referral Item 11-01, Recommendation #5, by the 217th General Assembly (2006), the General Assembly Council is forwarding to the 218th General Assembly (2008) a report that includes a recommendation for a study that would address matters raised by this overture.

Item 11-03

[The assembly answered Item 11-03 by the action taken on Item 11-01. See pp. 45, 46.]

On Endorsing the “Amman Call” Regarding Arab-Israeli Peace—From the Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley.

The Presbytery of Susquehanna Valley overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008), as a constituent member church of the World Council of Churches, to endorse the World Council of Churches’ “Amman Call,” regarding Arab-Israeli peace, issued at the World Council of Churches’ International Peace Conference, entitled “Churches Together for Peace and Justice in the Middle East,” at Amman, Jordan, 18–20 June 2007, and keep other actions consistent with the Amman Call’s recommendations.

[The complete statement is found below.]

This document contains ideas that are basic to the Church’s efforts to be faithful to the Gospel call that we be peacemakers, with specific interest in that region where the events central to our faith took place. For instance, it begins with the following statement of “imperatives.”

1. Almost sixty years have passed since the Christian churches first spoke with one voice about Arab-Israeli peace. For the last forty years the Christian churches have called for an end to the Israeli occupation of Palestine. In the very place where Jesus Christ walked upon the earth, walls now separate families and the children of God—Christian, Muslim and Jew—are imprisoned in a deepening cycle of violence, humiliation and despair. The Palestinian Christians from Gaza to Jerusalem and to Nazareth, have called out to their brothers and sisters in Christ with this urgent plea: “Enough is enough. No more words without deeds. It is time for action.”
2. We welcome the timely and prophetic statement of the Heads of Churches in Jerusalem. We affirm that “the Churches are part of the conflict, because the Churches cannot remain silent while there is still suffering. The role of the Churches is to heal and to bring all sides to reconciliation.” Our belief in God reminds us “that all God’s children of all religions and political parties are to be respected.” We assure the Churches of Palestine and Israel of our prayers, collaboration and resources.
3. Thus, in Amman, Jordan 18–20 June 2007, days that have witnessed a deepening of the crisis in the occupied Palestinian territories, and also includes the United Nations World Refugee Day, we representatives of Christian churches and church-related organizations from every corner of the earth, affirm the decision of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches and launch the “Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum” as an instrument to “catalyze and co-ordinate new and existing church advocacy for peace, aimed at ending the illegal occupation in accordance with UN resolutions, and demonstrate its commitment to inter-religious action for peace and justice that serves all the peoples of the region.”
4. This action has been taken in response to three fundamental imperatives that call us to action:
  - The ethical and theological imperative for a Just Peace
  - The ecumenical imperative for unity in action
  - The Gospel imperative for costly solidarity

Among the “challenges” that come from the Churches of Palestine and Israel and to which the statement calls us to respond are these:

9.1 Act with us to liberate all peoples of this land from the logic of hatred, mutual rejection and death, so that they see in the other the face and dignity of God.

***

9.6. Add your hope to ours in the knowledge that evil and despair have been overcome through the death of our Lord on the Cross and through His Resurrection.

9.8. Partner with us as we seek peace and pursue it. Peace is possible. Christians and Muslims and Jews have, can and will understand one another and live together as neighbors.

The General Assembly would do well to endorse this statement as furthering the long-standing efforts of the PC(USA) for a just peace in the Middle East, and to be informed especially of activities of the Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum, and about any other ecumenical or interfaith initiatives that would complement the goal of a just and lasting peace.

The Amman Call

Issued at WCC International Peace Conference “Churches together for Peace and Justice in the Middle East”
Amman, Jordan, 18–20 June 2007

Amman imperatives:

1. Almost sixty years have passed since the Christian churches first spoke with one voice about Arab-Israeli peace. For the last forty years the Christian churches have called for an end to the Israeli occupation of Palestine. In the very place where Jesus Christ walked upon the earth, walls now separate families and the children of God—Christian, Muslim and Jew—are imprisoned in a deepening cycle of violence, humiliation and despair. The Palestinian Christians from Gaza to Jerusalem and to Nazareth, have called out to their brothers and sisters in Christ with this urgent plea: “Enough is enough. No more words without deeds. It is time for action.”

2. We welcome the timely and prophetic statement of the Heads of Churches in Jerusalem. We affirm that “the Churches are part of the conflict, because the Churches cannot remain silent while there is still suffering. The role of the Churches is to heal and to bring all sides to reconciliation.” Our belief in God reminds us “that all God’s children of all religions and political parties are to be respected.” We assure the Churches of Palestine and Israel of our prayers, collaboration and resources.

3. Thus, in Amman, Jordan 18–20 June 2007, days that have witnessed a deepening of the crisis in the occupied Palestinian territories, and also includes the United Nations World Refugee Day, we representatives of Christian churches and church-related organizations from every corner of the earth, affirm the decision of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches and launch the “Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum” as an instrument to “catalyze and co-ordinate new and existing church advocacy for peace, aimed at ending the illegal occupation in accordance with UN resolutions, and demonstrate its commitment to inter-religious action for peace and justice that serves all the peoples of the region.”

4. This action has been taken in response to three fundamental imperatives that call us to action:

- The ethical and theological imperative for a Just Peace
- The ecumenical imperative for unity in action
- The Gospel imperative for costly solidarity

5. The premises of this action are the following:

5.1. That UN resolutions are the basis for peace and the Geneva conventions are applicable to the rights and responsibilities of the affected people.

5.2. That Palestinians have the right of self-determination and the right of return.

5.3. That a two-state solution must be viable politically, geographically economically and socially.

5.4 That Jerusalem must be an open, accessible, inclusive and shared city for the two peoples and three religions.

5.5 That both Palestine and Israel have legitimate security needs.

- 5.6. That the Israeli settlements in the occupied Palestinian territories are illegal, and constitute an obstacle to peace.
  - 5.7. That the “Separation Barrier” constructed by Israel in the occupied Palestinian territories is a grave breach of international law and must be removed from the occupied territory.
  - 5.8. That there is no military solution for this conflict. Violence in all its forms cannot be justified whether perpetrated by Israelis or Palestinians.
  - 5.9. That comprehensive regional peace is indivisible from a just peace in Israel and Palestine.
  - 5.10. That the life and witness of local churches is at the center of worldwide church advocacy for a just peace.
6. We understand the mandate of the Palestine Israel Ecumenical Forum to be a space where we will develop comprehensive strategic approaches to the two processes of peace making and peace building. An inclusive core group convened urgently by the WCC should be mandated to facilitate this and also ensure improved coordination between all actors. The core group will be informed by the reports of the working groups of the Amman conference, and that its composition and mechanism be designed and announced by the WCC.
7. Peace building will include the following:
- 7.1. Furthering theological and biblical perspectives and Christian education resources around those issues central to the conflict.
  - 7.2. Developing strategies that will support the processes of justice and reconciliation, including inter-religious dialogue and cooperation.
  - 7.3. Strengthening the churches’ responses to the occupation.
  - 7.4. Recognizing, encouraging and cooperating with all efforts of Israeli and Palestinian civil society that are in accord with the vision and goals of the PIEF.
8. Peace making will include the following:
- 8.1. Defining and promoting measures, including economic ones, that could help end the occupation and enhance sustainable growth and development.
  - 8.2. Strengthening existing efforts and identifying new models of church solidarity in action. Supporting local churches and church related organizations not only to survive and continue their powerful ministries, including educational, health, cultural and social services, but also to thrive and be witnesses of hope.
  - 8.3. Developing a long-term advocacy strategy in order to mobilize all of our constituencies and influence change.

Amman challenges:

9. We have heard the voices of the Christian churches of Palestine and Israel challenging and saying to us:
- 9.1. Act with us to liberate all peoples of this land from the logic of hatred, mutual rejection and death, so that they see in the other the face and dignity of God.
  - 9.2. Pray with us in our efforts to resist evil in all of its guises.
  - 9.3. Raise your voices along with ours as we speak “truth to power” and name with courage the injustices we see and experience. The illegal occupation has stolen two generations of lives in this tortured place, and threatens the next with hopelessness and rage.
  - 9.4. Risk the curses and abuse that will be aimed at you and stand in solidarity with us and with our Palestinian brothers and sisters of all faiths as we defiantly reject the possibility that occupation will continue.
  - 9.5. Help us to tear down walls and build and rebuild bridges among all peoples in the region. Extremism on all sides produces chaos. It threatens to divide us and to destroy bridges among peoples that would lead to reconciliation and peace.
  - 9.6. Add your hope to ours in the knowledge that evil and despair have been overcome through the death of our Lord on the Cross and through His Resurrection.
  - 9.7. Insist with us that all dispossessed peoples, all refugees, have the right to return.

9.8. Partner with us as we seek peace and pursue it. Peace is possible. Christians and Muslims and Jews have, can and will understand one another and live together as neighbors.

10. And we representatives of Christian churches and church-related organizations from every corner of the earth, we respond:

11. Yes, we will. Together we will act and pray and speak and work and risk reputations and lives to build with you bridges for an enduring peace among the peoples of this tortured and beautiful place—Palestine and Israel—to end these decades of injustice, humiliation and insecurity, to end the decades of living as refugees and under occupation. We will work with you to seek peace and pursue it. We have allowed too much time to pass. Time has not served the cause of peace but has served the cause of extremism. This is our urgent cause that cannot wait.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-03.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-03—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-03 be answered by the action taken on Item 11-01.

Item 11-04

On Travel to Israel and Palestine—From the Presbytery of East Iowa.

Now it is as important as it has ever been for Christians to make an intentional faithful pilgrimage to Israel and Palestine, therefore, the Presbytery of East Iowa overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to renew and elaborate the call made by the 215th General Assembly (2003), namely:

1. To exhort Presbyterians to take trips that are in harmony with our principles, specifically trips that include
  - a. Significant time visiting local Christians and church leaders. As a connectional church, we do mission in partnership. Our Christian partners in Israel and Palestine are asking us to deepen our commitment and involvement by visiting them. The PC(USA) mission workers assigned to Israel and Palestine can assist in this effort.
  - b. Significant time in the Occupied Territories (West Bank, East Jerusalem, Gaza) as well as Israel. In addition to being a request of our partners, visits into the Occupied Territories also address poverty, another grave concern of our denomination. Time spent in the West Bank, East Jerusalem, and Gaza should translate to financial benefits accruing to an impoverished economy through hotels, restaurants, tour guides, taxis and buses, and souvenir shops.
  - c. Opportunities to meet Israeli and Palestinian peacemakers.
  - d. Opportunities to hear a variety of perspectives from Israelis and Palestinians—including Jews, Muslims, and Christians. The PC(USA) is committed to just peacemaking and interfaith dialogue throughout the world, including Israel and Palestine. Dialogue and intentional listening are essential to true peacemaking.

[Presbyterians should not necessarily be discouraged from taking trips that do not fulfill every one of these points, but they should be aware that they are missing out on important aspects of faithful visits.]

2. To direct appropriate offices of the General Assembly Council to develop more trips to Israel and Palestine, in particular, to investigate sending presbytery teams in regionally organized trips. For example, presbytery teams from four synods might go every other year, over a period of eight years. In addition, they should plan for continued communication with the teams after their return.

3. To make Presbyterians aware of denominational networks and resources available to them for planning local group trips of their own—(these networks include the Israel/Palestine Network Pilgrimage Team and PC(USA) mission workers serving Israel/Palestine, part of whose function is to link travelers with our partners there)—and of the many ecumenical trips that do follow the guidelines.

Rationale

Conditions under Israel's occupation to which past General Assemblies (1988, 1990, 1992, 1996, 1998, 2002, 2003, 2004) have objected have worsened in the intervening years. Walled enclosures and military checkpoints on Palestinian land arbitrarily cut off Palestinians from employment, agricultural lands, education, and medical care on which their lives depend.

Citizens are imprisoned without due process. Laws are imposed denying Palestinians the right to build homes on their own land, justifying the bulldozing of thousands of homes. The confiscation of Palestinian land for Israeli settlers has continued unabated during ceasefires and diplomatic overtures. Palestinian communities are vulnerable to cut-offs of water and electricity, and control of their aquifers has been diverted to Israel. Thousands of their olive trees have been destroyed, and the environment degraded. Inequitable enforcement of law permits violence by settlers. Palestinian travel and export vital to the economy is severely restricted by complete control of Palestinian borders.*

As Presbyterian policy makes clear, in addition to remedying Palestinian suffering, our concern is also to assist Israelis to enjoy a future of peace and security, and, in pursuit of that, to hear their hopes and fears. In that cause, we deplore violence perpetrated against the Israeli people by elements of Palestinian society.

The hope and direction offered by Israeli and Palestinian peacemakers, our Christian partners among them, too often go unheeded. Presbyterians can help with their loving presence and their faithful witness when they return.

We recommend trips that not only inspire by historical associations, but also help the church grow in mercy and peace-making. We recommend the continued organization of trips for regional teams because our 2006 Israel/Palestine denominational trip showed that the most effective witness and agent for change is a community working together.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-04.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-04—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-04 be answered by the action taken on Item 11-01.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-04

Comment on Item 11-04—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly has often encouraged Presbyterians to travel to the Middle East, and especially to Israel/Palestine. The 215th General Assembly (2003) asked pastors, lay leaders, sessions, and individual members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to:

Travel to the region, as may be feasible and opportune, to visit with Christian partners and others, to gain firsthand experience in understanding of the issues and dynamics behind the conflict, as well as possibilities for peace and good will, making sure to take advantage of the contacts and travel resources produced by the PC(USA) and its partners, as well as PC(USA) mission workers and others in the region, who are able to introduce visitors to a wide spectrum of perspectives and opinions within the communities of people in the Holy Land. (Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 636)

The 209th General Assembly (1997) had also adopted a recommendation that “urge[d] all Presbyterians who visit the region, whether for pilgrimage, business, or pleasure, to seek out the Christian communities, join with them in worship, and become acquainted with their human-rights struggles, and to seek ways to express Christian love, peace and justice” (Minutes, 1997, Part I, p. 562)

The 216th General Assembly (2004) urged conducting a feasibility study for compassionate economic development for the Palestinian people. That study's recommendations, which were presented to and approved by the General Assembly Council, encouraged more travel by Presbyterians to Israel/Palestine on the premise that tourism (and, in this case, intentional travel and responsible tourism) is a major source of livelihood for Palestinians who work in travel agencies, hotels, restaurants, transport, art and craft production, and merchandising, etc.

The GAC's Middle East Office, Interfaith Relations Office, and the Peacemaking Program have in the past offered annual travel seminar opportunities that helped Presbyterians gain insights into the area. Due to reductions in staff capabilities and budgets, such opportunities are now greatly diminished and would require staff time and financial allocations to be resumed. However, these offices, with the assistance of the Israel/Palestine Mission network, are now studying possibilities of offering training opportunities for would-be travel seminar leaders who can resource ways to fulfill the intent of the General Assembly's urging.

Item 11-05

On Temporary Suspension of Military Aid to the State of Israel—From the Presbytery of Detroit.

[WITHDRAWN]

Item 11-06

[The assembly approved Item 11-06. See pp. 45, 46.]

On the 218th General Assembly (2008) Being a Voice for the Victims of Violence in Israel and Palestine—From the Presbytery of National Capital.

The Presbytery of National Capital overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

- 1. Be a voice for the victims of violence in both Israel and Palestine. We ask PC(USA) members, congregations, committees, and other entities to become nonpartisan advocates for peace. As such, we will not over-identify with the realities of the Israelis or Palestinians. Instead we will identify with the need for peacemaking voices in the midst of horrific acts of violence and terror.
- 2. Focus our energy on the United States government, demanding that it assume an intensive and unrelenting role as a peacemaker, bringing together the opposing parties in forums where reasonable people can reach reasonable compromises about highly complex issues.
- 3. Condemn all acts of violence against innocent civilians. We will avoid taking broad stands that simplify a very complex situation into a caricature of reality where one side clearly is at fault and the other side is clearly the victim.

Rationale

This overture represents a humble confession of the very limited role the PC(USA) can play in solving the problems in the Middle East. Seeking to be part of the solution rather than inflaming the problems, we will join with and support any and all others in the world who seek a solution that creates two states, Israel and Palestine, living side-by-side in peace and justice. We will call on all who, clinging to narrow self-interests, stand in the way of such a solution to consider the interest of all God's children in the region.

Concurrence to Item 11-06 from the Presbytery of Sierra Blanca.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-06

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-06—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) agrees with the concerns of Item 11-06 calling for fairness and for concern for victims.

The ACSWP advises that Item 11-06 be answered by approving the following alternate resolution:

“1. Expresses its concern for the victims of violence in Israel and Palestine by affirming that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) does have a prophetic role to be the voice of the voiceless and all victims.

“2. Observes that in the current dynamics of the Palestinian/Israeli situation, the voices of our Arab brothers and sisters, both Christian and Muslim, are muted, thus creating distorted perceptions of the reality on the ground.

“3. Calls for the United States government, in increasing its role as a peacemaker, to examine its policies and agreements with the Israeli government, the elected leaders of the Palestinians, and other regional nations and actors in light of justice and human rights for all people.

“4. Calls upon the United States government to be respectful of international policies and decisions and to seek to dialogue with all parties within the political dynamics of Israel, Palestine, and other regional nations and actors. Similarly, representatives of the church are also called to seek to establish lines of communication and understanding across all barriers, remembering Jesus’ words that we should ‘love your enemies,’ even if we do not agree with them.

“5. Lifts up the example of President Jimmy Carter, as a person of faith, for his efforts to promote peace in the Middle East by opening channels of communication, and recalls that The Confession of 1967 challenges the church as it seeks to embody the reconciliation obtained in Christ: ‘This search requires that the nations pursue fresh and responsible relations across every line of conflict, even at the risk of national security, to reduce areas of strife and to broaden international understanding’ (The Book of Confessions, 9.45). A dialogue in which all voices are heard is essential for justice to become reality and human dignity to be restored and reconciliation to be achieved among all peoples.”

Rationale

The ACSWP makes several observations regarding language within the overture:

1. “non-partisan advocates for peace” (Recommendation 1.)—When issues of justice and human rights are the concerns being addressed, Christians must be advocates for the Gospel, for the victims of injustice, and for those denied human rights.

2. “the very limited role the PCUSA can play” (paragraph in the Rationale section)—We believe that the prophetic role calling for justice is not to be regarded in the diminished way the overture seems to imply. Despite dismissals and limited voices, the prophets of the Old Testament confronted the powers of injustice and inequality in the name of God.

3. The Christian Gospel calls us and compels us to be attached to “the least among us,” to be the incarnation of God’s transforming redemptive grace and love, and to be partners of God in the creation of a new world in prophetic promise and hope. Christ sends us into the world, as he had been sent, to be advocates for the oppressed, the victims of injustice and those denied human rights, in service to the “abundant life” he promises.

The ACSWP is concerned about establishing a balance in the understanding of the relationship between Palestine and Israel. In order to develop this balance, ACSWP encourages the 218th General Assembly (2008) to urge all entities within the PC(USA) to study the relative conditions present in Palestine and Israel in these areas:

- economic levels of people;
- access to medical, water, food, and other essential life-resources;
- extent of suffering of innocents and deaths within each population;
- funding from the United States government;
- security resources for independence within Palestine and Israel; and,
- mobility and access to Jerusalem, an international city with religious significance for three major faith communities.

Item 11-07

[The assembly disapproved Item 11-07. See pp. 45, 46.]

On Supporting Israel’s Right to Exist, But Calling for Temporary Suspension of Military Aid to the State of Israel—From the Presbytery of Newark.

The Presbytery of Newark respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Reaffirm the right of Israel to exist.
2. Deplore suicide bombings and other terrorist attacks.
3. Urge the Arab nations and the United States to do all possible to prevent arms smuggling into the Palestinian occupied territories.
4. Call for the U.S. government to temporarily suspend military aid to the State of Israel until the Israeli government complies with the requirements of
  - a. the U.S. Arms Export Control Act, which prohibits using U.S. weapons against civilians or civilian infrastructure, and
  - b. the U.S. Foreign Assistance Act, which prohibits giving assistance to the government of any country which engages in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights.
5. Direct that the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) communicate these recommendations to all members of the U. S. Congress and to all of the appropriate members of the U. S. Administration, including the president, vice president, secretary of state, and the secretary of defense.

Rationale

The Church is called to heed the voices of the prophets and of Jesus:

- “He shall judge between the nations, and shall arbitrate for many peoples; they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more” (Isa. 2:4).
- “But be glad and rejoice forever in what I am creating; for I am about to create Jerusalem as a joy, and its people as a delight. I will rejoice in Jerusalem and delight in my people; no more shall the sound of weeping be heard in it, or the cry of distress. ... They shall not labor in vain, or bear children for calamity ... . The wolf and the lamb shall feed together ... . They shall not hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain” (Isa. 65:18–25)
- “You have heard that it was said, ‘You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.’ But I say to you, ‘Love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you’ ” (Mt. 5:43–44).
- “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called children of God” (Mt. 5:9).

“The Church is called to be Christ’s faithful evangelist ... participating in God’s activity in the world through its life for others by

- “(a) healing and reconciling and binding up wounds,
- “(b) ministering to the needs of the poor, the sick, the lonely, and the powerless,
- “(c) engaging in the struggle to free people from sin, fear, oppression, hunger, and injustice,
- “(d) giving itself and its substance to those who suffer,
- “(e) sharing with Christ in the establishing of his just, peaceable, and loving rule in the world.” (Book of Order, G-3.0300 c (3))

General Assemblies since 1948 have expressed their concern for peace and justice for Israelis and Palestinians and all who live in the Holy Land. A summary of General Assembly statements and actions about the State of Israel, the Occupied Palestinian Territories, and the Middle East since 1948 are available from the PC(USA)’s Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. Annually, the General Assembly also publishes Human Rights Updates for the Middle East generally and Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories specifically. Over the years, General Assembly statements have specifically addressed U.S. military aid to Israel:

- “denying all forms of aid to Israel” (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 796);

- “make continuation of U.S. aid to State of Israel contingent upon an end to further settlements ... and an end to human rights violations” (Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 105–6)
- “renew efforts to make U.S. aid to Israel conditional upon cessation of appropriation of Palestinian land” (Minutes, 1995, Part I, pp. 688–89)
- “make continued aid and military assistance to Israel contingent on its fulfilling the terms of the Oslo Accords” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, pp. 655–56). [Source: A Brief Summary of General Assembly Statements Resource Sheet 17 of 27 Feb. 2005 Updated March 2006. <http://www.pcusa.org/worldwide/israelpalestine/resources/17gastatements.pdf> ]

Since 1948, Israeli government policy has caused enormous pain and suffering to the Palestinians in their own land by continual, unrelenting human rights violations. Examples of these include:

- driving Palestinians from their homes, lands and towns;
- confining them to life in refugee camps for sixty years;
- destroying their commerce and economy with blockades and checkpoints;
- building the separation wall that separates family members from each other, children from their schools, and people in need of medical care from hospitals;
- demolishing homes of civilians;
- arresting and imprisoning adults and youth without trial;
- creating fear and loss of life and limb through the continued presence of armored tanks, armed soldiers, and random attacks on civilians.

These policies are also eliminating the Christian communities in the Holy Land. <http://www.openbethlehem.org>.

Israeli, U.S., Palestinian, and international human rights organizations as well as the U.S. government and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have all documented these gross violations of internationally recognized human rights by Israel against Palestinians living under Israel’s illegal military occupation. <http://www.btselem.org/English/Publications/Index.asp>

The U.S. provides Israel with more than 10 million dollars a day in military aid; Israel relies almost exclusively on this U.S. military aid to continue these human rights violations in East Jerusalem and the Occupied Palestinian Territories. <http://www.ifamericansknew.org>

The State of Israel has also used U.S.-provided banned weapons, i.e. cluster bombs, against civilians in Lebanon during the 2006 war there. The remains of these weapons continue to kill children and other civilians. In January 2007, the State Department sent a report to Senator Joe Biden, chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, claiming that Israel violated the U.S. Arms Export Control Act by indiscriminately dropping cluster munitions in civilian areas in Lebanon during last year’s war.

<http://www.state.gov/r/pa/prs/dpb/2007/79467.htm>

Notable calls for suspension or conditionality of aid to Israel have been made from several organizations. Among these are:

Jewish Voice for Peace (JVP): “U.S. military aid to Israel has a dramatic effect on Israel’s policies towards the Palestinians. It has increasingly been used not to pay for defense but to finance the Israeli occupation of Palestinian lands. It keeps Israel from facing the difficult but necessary challenges of building a more democratic society, and encourages solving deep-rooted problems by military rather than peaceful and more effective means” (http://www.jewishvoiceforpeace.org/publish/article\_17.shtml).

Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA): “to encourage Congress to help stop Israel’s settlement building by placing conditions on Israel’s request for loan guarantees, and new military aid” (<http://www.elca.org/middleeast/archived.html> March 2003).

Churches for Middle East Peace (CMEP): “Israel’s military siege of the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem should not be rewarded by praise or additional military aid” (<http://cmep.org/Alerts/2002May3.htm>); and “The United States should condition special funds—grants, loans and loan guarantees—on Israel’s compliance with its Road Map obligations, such as removal of outposts” (<http://cmep.org/Alerts/2005Sept7.htm>).

The U.S. Arms Export Control Act prohibits foreign countries from using U.S. supplied weapons against civilians or civilian infrastructure and limits their use to “legitimate self-defense.”

The U.S. Foreign Assistance Act states that “No assistance may be provided under this part of the law to the government of any country which engages in a consistent pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights.”

The Presbyterian church has repeatedly affirmed the right of Israel to exist.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) declared that “any suicide bombing, no matter who is the perpetrator or the target, constitutes a crime against humanity” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 891).

We deplore all violence, including suicide bombings and other terrorist acts, as well as violence perpetrated by an occupying army. From September 2000 to February 2008, 1,031 Israelis and at least 4,528 Palestinians have been killed, including 119 Israeli children and 982 Palestinian children. All human life is precious. The cycle of violence must stop.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-07

Advice & Counsel on Item 11-07—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the approval of Item 11-07 as amended below: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“1. ~~[Reaffirm the right of Israel to exist.]~~ [Express its enduring commitment to the security of Israelis, an equal commitment to justice for Palestinians, and to an enduring peace between Israel and a viable, contiguous Palestinian state. This entails an end to the cycle of violence and the shifting of funds away from military occupation and to negotiation and normalization of relations in accordance with international law, guaranteeing a State of Israel within internationally recognized borders and an end to further militarization and subsidy to all agents of violence, including targeted assassinations, suicide bombings, and measures that violate the human rights and potential for livelihood for Palestinians and Israelis.]

“2. ~~[Deplore suicide bombings and other terrorist attacks.]~~ [Encourage the United States and all parties to the current ‘Annapolis’ Peace Talks to negotiate in good faith, mindful of the enormous disparities in power and economic capacity between Israel and the Palestinians and the injustice, despair, and violence that has followed sidelining of previous peace agreements.]

“3. Urge the Arab nations and the United States to do all possible to prevent arms smuggling into the [occupied] Palestinian ~~[occupied]~~ territories.”

[Recommendations 4. and 5. remain unchanged.]

Rationale

The concerns and actions proposed in this overture are not new, although worsening humanitarian conditions in the occupied territories may add weight to its argument for a conditional suspension of our country’s proportionately massive military subsidies to Israel. Clearly there are other forms of subsidy to Israel not addressed in these recommendations.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) notes that the 209th General Assembly (1997) specifically called on the government of the United States “to adhere to U. S. law concerning the denial of foreign assistance to any country engaged in a consistent pattern of gross violations of human rights,” (Resolution on the Middle East, Chapter “Concerning Human Rights,” Recommendation [4]). It also notes that, in a number of recommendations, the 215th General Assembly (2003) addressed related issues of United States economic assistance to the Middle East. It urged taking “steps to restructure and reallocate its present annual aid ... to enable and support strategies for development of the region as a whole,” assuring that U.S. policies, strategies, and economic assistance would result in human advancement, a more equitable distribution of resources, economic growth, and contribute to the improvement of the quality of life, and ensuring that sufficient resources and economic aid are made available to the Palestinian people in order to help build and modernize Palestinian schools, create effective vocational training programs, resuscitate the Palestinian economy, ... etc.”

In approving this overture—urging temporary suspension of military aid to Israel until the United States government is satisfied and can demonstrate that Israel adheres to both international law and to laws the U.S. Congress has passed with regard to terms and conditions for military assistance or the sale of arms—the General Assembly would be faithful to the vision of an Israel at peace with its neighbors and consistent with historic Presbyterian commitment to international law. So far, the United Nations and various human rights organizations, including those of Israel itself, give clear evidence that the government of Israel continues to disregard international laws and UN resolutions, and violates international norms of human rights, as detailed in the overture’s rationale.

When applied to Israel, the measure of temporary suspension of military aid would not be a “punishment” to Israel, already one of the strongest nuclear-equipped militaries in the world. On the contrary, we owe it to Israel to be concerned about its long-term security and peace. Furthermore, the Presbyterian church has advocated for similar limitations on military or security assistance in relation to other countries, particularly in relation to human rights, and has used its own investment policies to reflect its moral concerns.

Above all, it is for the sake of the security of Israel, as a sovereign state and as citizens, that such suspension of military aid would arguably be beneficial. If indeed Israel is “our best ally in the region,” and if it is the “strongest democracy in the area,” then we should first expect compliance from our allies, the most democratic of states in the region, in order to be able to challenge those who may be less committed to us or to democracy.

Finally, the issue ultimately confronts our own government with the question of whether it is upholding its own laws, or is in fact violating them. For many nations in the world, particularly Muslim nations, there is a pervasive belief that the U.S. is not consistent in its human rights practice.

On the Withdrawal of U.S. Troops From Iraq—From the Presbytery of Greater Atlanta.

The Presbytery of Greater Atlanta overtures the 218th General Assembly to do the following:

1. Call upon individual Presbyterians, member congregations, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels urgently to raise their voices for peace in the nation of Iraq and an end to the United States military presence there.
2. Commend to the church the call of the 216th General Assembly (2004) for the church to express its pastoral concern for and offer pastoral care to members of the United States armed forces serving their country in the war in Iraq and their families as well as for veterans of the war who have returned home (Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future, Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 864ff).
3. Direct the General Assembly Council to continue and expand the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)’s commitment to relief efforts in Iraq in cooperation with our ecumenical partners, to ministries that address human needs in Iraq caused by the war, and to long-term development efforts to assist in the rebuilding of the country.
4. Call upon the United States government to develop and implement a specific timetable for the withdrawal of United States military forces, and reaffirms the call of the 216th General Assembly (2004) for the United States government to engage with the international community through the United Nations and other international agencies to cooperate with the government of Iraq in providing security, peacekeeping forces, and funding for the rebuilding of the country (Ibid).
5. Direct the appropriate offices of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to advocate, and to assist Presbyterians to advocate with the United States government for the complete withdrawal of United States military forces and for engagement with the international community to support the government of Iraq, providing resources for peacekeeping and long-term development needs.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through its General Assembly and many of its member congregations, has affirmed a commitment to peacemaking<sup>1</sup> as an essential and faithful way to witness to the heart of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Psalmist calls us to seek peace and pursue it<sup>2</sup>; the prophet Isaiah calls the faithful community to beat swords into plowshares, spears into pruning hooks, and study war no more<sup>3</sup>; our Lord Jesus blesses the peacemakers<sup>4</sup>; and the apostle Paul calls the church to a ministry of reconciliation as the body of Christ in the world<sup>5</sup>.

The war in Iraq and the United States' military involvement in it challenges the church of Jesus Christ and individual followers of our Lord to engage in a ministry of reconciliation<sup>6</sup> with the goal of bringing violence and military conflict in that nation to an end.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) declared that the Iraq war was “unwise, immoral, and illegal” in its statement “Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future”<sup>7</sup> and urged that the United States take steps to cooperate with the international community, especially the United Nations, in an effort to rebuild Iraq.

There is a preponderance of evidence that the principal justifications made by the government of the United States to its people for unilaterally initiating war in Iraq were based on erroneous assumptions.

The presence of United States military forces in Iraq has itself become the impetus for violent resistance by many of the groups engaging in the war of attrition against the United States military, as well as the government and people of Iraq.

The Presbytery of Lake Huron respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

- recognize, support, and applaud the efforts of all United States government employees now assisting Iraqi refugees and displaced persons to the extent possible in Iraq and neighboring countries;
- strongly advocate the United States government to act more quickly to provide haven in the United States for threatened Iraqi refugees and displaced persons regardless of their religious faith, after screening for public health and security risks;
- strongly advocate the United States government to provide adequate staff, resources, and simplified procedures to rapidly implement an improved Iraqi refugee resettlement program;
- encourage churches and presbyteries to welcome Iraqi refugees within their region, sponsoring and assisting in their resettlement; and

- direct the Washington office of PC(USA) to advocate for legislation supporting resettlement of Iraqi refugees in the United States.

Rationale

Christians are called to have compassion and to aid the injured, the lost, and the dispossessed. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a long history of policies and actions to aid refugees in stressed regions. Our nation has grown over the centuries from the influx of refugees from many nations. Since 1940, the United States has provided special refugee status to many thousands of refugees from military conflicts in which the United States participated.

The continuing conflict in Iraq has resulted in millions of refugees and internally displaced persons, yet very few Iraqis have been granted requested refugee status and resettlement in the United States. Attempts by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to aid the resettlement of Iraqi refugees, including Iraqi church leaders, have revealed this refugee crisis:

- Very few visas to enter the United States have been authorized or issued for Iraqi refugees
- Processing of refugees is extremely slow, apparently due to complex procedures and inadequate personnel resources
- Most Iraqi refugees and internally displaced persons, now in the millions, are in appalling, desperate situations in Iraq and the neighboring countries.

We believe that the church must urge our government to address these humanitarian concerns by taking the actions recommended in this overture and that the church itself must respond to the crisis by encouraging congregations to participate in resettlement efforts.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the overture be approved with the following amendments: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“● confess the responsibility the United States bears for creating the current crisis in which, according to the Office of the United Nations high commissioner for refugees, 4.7 million Iraqis have left their homes, including 2.7 million Iraqis who have been internally displaced and 2 million Iraqis who have fled to neighboring states, particularly to Syria and Jordan;”

“● recognize, support, and applaud the efforts of all United States government employees now assisting Iraqi refugees and displaced persons to the extent possible in Iraq and neighboring countries;

“● strongly advocate the United States government and the United Nations to work with the government of Iraq to increase its capacity to respond to the needs of its people;”

“● strongly advocate that the United States government increase the resources it provides to address the unstable situation of Iraqi refugees and displaced persons in the region, lead an international initiative to support Middle Eastern countries hosting Iraqi civilians, and increase direct bilateral assistance to countries hosting Iraqi refugees;”

“● strongly advocate the United States government to act more quickly to provide haven in the United States for threatened Iraqi refugees and displaced persons regardless of their religious faith, after screening for public health and security risks;

“● strongly advocate the United States government to provide adequate staff, resources, and simplified procedures to rapidly implement an improved Iraqi refugee resettlement program;

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-09

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-09—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 11-09 regarding assistance to Iraqi refugees.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that this item be approved.

Rationale

As the U.S. has provided refugee status to thousands displaced by war in the past, we should continue to do at least this much for Iraqi refugees.

Our church has historically advocated for compassion and hospitality for refugees of war. In the 1960s we welcomed Cuban refugees. In the 1980s, when Presbyterians acted to help political refugees from Central America, General Assemblies supported them in what was called “The Sanctuary Movement.” Likewise, prior assemblies called for compassionate and lenient U.S. immigration policies toward Southeast Asian refugees in the wake of wars in Vietnam and Cambodia.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-09

Comment on Item 11-09—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council (GAC) affirms the Christian concern demonstrated by the Presbytery of Lake Huron for Iraqis who have fled their home country. The GAC commends the Presbytery of Lake Huron for bringing this issue before the General Assembly.

Groups working on refugee issues report that more than 1 million displaced Iraqis are living in Jordan, and 1.5 million in Syria. The vast and still-growing numbers of Iraqis fleeing their home country with no permanent place to go has laid a growing burden on the governments, societies, and churches of neighboring countries in the region. For example, providing education for displaced Iraqi children poses a significant challenge.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through the Office on the Middle East, the Iraq Partnership Network, and other programs, continues to lift up the plight of Iraqi refugees and displaced persons. Through the Peace Fund for Solidarity with the Churches of Iraq (Extra Commitment Opportunity account #E051722) and the Jinishian Memorial Program, the PC(USA) has also assisted the churches of the region, through the Middle East Council of Churches, as they address this crisis.

The GAC supports the call to the United States government to alleviate the suffering of Iraqi refugees. Part of that effort could involve working with other nations, particularly Iraq, and supporting the work of the Office of the UN high commissioner for refugees and other agencies.

Item 11-10

On Building Peace in Iraq—From the Presbytery of Baltimore.

The Presbytery of Baltimore overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Pray, in a spirit of deep [~~sorrow and confession~~] [humility], for God's justice and peace to prevail in Iraq; and recognizing and heeding God's call to love all persons as made in God's own image, and even to pray for our enemies, encourage all Presbyterians to be in intentional and regular prayer for everyone in and of Iraq: for Iraqi civilians, Christian, Muslim, Jew, Yezidi; for soldiers and armed actors; for the refugees and the displaced; for the tortured and their torturers; and for insurgents, kidnapers, and terrorists, for all are God's beloved, all are in need of the transformation of God's love and God's peace.

2. Commend and thank the peacemakers who have worked nonviolently to end the war in Iraq through prayers, vigils, and acts of resistance and witness such as the actions organized by the Christian Peace Witness for Iraq; and encourage all Presbyterians to participate enthusiastically in peacemaking efforts to end the occupation of Iraq.

3. Commend and thank members of the armed forces, and their loved ones, for their service and sacrifice.

4. Call upon the United States government to support our military personnel by granting speedy discharges to conscientious objectors; fully funding veterans' benefits; ensuring that injured service personnel and veterans have the best medical, mental health, and rehabilitation care available; and providing generous benefits to surviving family members.

5. [~~Call upon the government of the United States to end its military presence in Iraq by withdrawing all troops, hired soldiers, and contractors, and permanently closing all military bases in Iraq.~~] [Call upon the United States government to develop and implement a lasting peaceful solution, responsibly bring the troops home, and reaffirm the call of the 216th General Assembly (2004) for the United States government to engage with the international community through the United Nations and other international agencies to cooperate with the government of Iraq in providing security, peacekeeping forces, and funding the rebuilding of the country.]

6. Call upon the United States and all member states of the United Nations to establish and fully fund a United Nations peacebuilding mission for Iraq to work in partnership with Iraqi leaders, neighboring nations, and appropriate international governmental and nongovernmental organizations to establish security in Iraq, rebuild institutions and infrastructure, resettle and assist refugees, and initiate a process of truth and reconciliation to promote healing and forgiveness.

7. Call upon the United States and other responsible nations to voluntarily make restitution in an amount adequate to repair war damage; to fully investigate, and where appropriate, in accordance with the principles of due process recognized in U.S. and international law, to prosecute all charges of war crimes including torture and mistreatment of prisoners; and to cooperate completely with any international investigations of war crimes committed by any party to the conflict in Iraq.

8. Call upon the United States to remove all weapons, mines, depleted uranium, and other military waste products from Iraq; to repair other damage to the environment, including priceless archaeological sites.

9. Call upon the United States to return full direct control of Iraq's oil resources and oil revenues to Iraq.

10. Direct the Stated Clerk to communicate this action to the president of the United States, members of the U.S. Congress, and the secretary-general of the United Nations.

[11. Receive the study paper (as found in Item 11-24), “To Repent, Restore, Rebuild, and Reconcile” and direct that it be posted on the Website of the Office of the General Assembly and be commended for study throughout the church.]

[12. Commend to the church the call of the 216th General Assembly (2004) for the church to express its pastoral concern for and offer pastoral care to members of the United States armed forces serving their country in the war in Iraq and their families as well as for veterans of the war who have returned home (Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future, Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 864ff).]

[14. Call upon all presbyteries, congregations, and members within the PC(USA) to intentionally, personally, and concretely work to bring healing, peace, justice, and care to all affected by the war in Iraq, not only through our prayers but through the giving of our resources, time, money, and very selves to improve the lives and future of all involved, especially the hurting, the poor, the oppressed, and those whose lives have been damaged by the war.]

[15. Pray for, call for, and work for a just and peaceful future for the nation and people of Iraq, which includes the establishing of a just, stable, and democratic government and the timely departure of U.S. military forces and their contractors as soon as it is possible to leave the nation in an appropriately stable, just, and self-sustaining form.]

Rationale

Most of the sixth chapter of the book of Luke is dedicated to Jesus’ teachings about the act of courage that it will take to strive for right relationships even with our enemies or those who hate us. Toward the end of the chapter, Luke recounts Jesus’ exasperation with his followers, “Why do you call me ‘Lord, Lord,’ and do not do what I tell you? I will show you what someone is like who comes to me, hears my words, and acts on them” (Luke 6: 46–47). The call to act on Jesus’ radical notion of security based on loving one’s enemies is clear.

In the two thousand years since the time of Jesus, Christians have often wrestled with these difficult teachings of Jesus. The ethical questions regarding how we respond to evil have always been difficult, and people of good will and solid faith conviction have often disagreed with one another. Still, Jesus’ words remain, beckoning us into an act of faith that challenges us to defy our deepest fears.

In Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling, the 192nd General Assembly (1980) declared, “The church is faithful to Christ when it is engaged in peacemaking. . . . To deny our calling is a disservice to the church and the world.” Although a just resolution to the conflict in Iraq requires finding solutions to complex and challenging problems, we accept our responsibility to be advocates for nonviolence and reconciliation as those solutions are developed and implemented.

Fortunately, some consensus has begun to emerge from qualified groups studying strategies for ending the war and occupation in Iraq. The first, and most important, conclusion is that the U.S. military operations in Iraq have failed to provide security for citizens and have motivated an extremely violent civil-war-like conflict, and therefore must be ended. This overture includes suggestions from the proposals of several of these groups: “Towards Peace in and with Iraq,” from The Transnational Foundation for Peace and Future Research (www.transnational.org); “The Iraq Study Group Report: The Way Forward—A New Approach,” from the United States Institute of Peace (www.usip.org); “Pastoral Message on the War in Iraq,” from The General Assembly of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the USA (www.nccusa.org); and “Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future,” from the 216th General Assembly (2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (available with other excellent resources at www.pcusa.org/peacemaking/iraq/).

Two groups of people deserve the special concern of the General Assembly: the civilian population of Iraq and U.S. military personnel and their families. This overture takes the position that the best leadership for the Iraqi people is an elected government free of any U.S. influence and that the best channel for international assistance is the United Nations. The problems of adequately equipping our troops and providing the best medical care for the injured have been well covered in the U.S. press. A good exploration of the mental health problems caused by long and uncertain deployments, insufficient rest, and prolonged exposure to combat may be found in the May 2007 Pentagon mental health survey of troops in Iraq.

Many Presbyterians have been called to the work of peacemaking in this time of war. Christian Peace Witness for Iraq (CPWI) is a network of Christian churches and organizations that coordinates national and local actions that incorporate spirituality with public witness. Rick Ufford-Chase, a former Moderator of the PC(USA), and other Presbyterians are part of the CPWI leadership team. The CPWI has organized worship services, public vigils and fasts, and nonviolent direct actions to give voice to its message: end the U.S. war and occupation, support our troops, support an Iraqi-led peace process, say NO to torture, and say YES to justice. More information on the Christian Peace Witness for Iraq may be found on its Website, christianpeacewitness.org and on the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship website, www.presbypeacefellowship.org.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-10—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-10 from the Presbytery of Baltimore, with concurrences from the Presbytery of Chicago, the Presbytery of Santa Fe, and the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area, requests that the 218th General Assembly (2008) pray for peace and justice in Iraq; encourage all Presbyterians to be in intentional and regular prayer for everyone in Iraq; commend and thank the peace-makers who have worked nonviolently to end the war in Iraq; commend the members of the armed forces and their families for their service and sacrifice; and, call upon the U.S. government to end its military presence in Iraq and fully fund a UN peacebuilding mission for Iraq.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-10 be approved with the following amendment to Recommendation 6: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“6. Call upon the United States and ~~[all]~~ member states of the United Nations to ~~[establish and fully fund a United Nations peacebuilding mission for Iraq to work in partnership with Iraqi leaders, neighboring nations, and appropriate international governmental and nongovernmental organizations to establish security in Iraq, rebuild institutions and infrastructure, resettle and assist refugees, and initiate a process of truth and reconciliation to promote healing and forgiveness]~~ [place Iraq on the agenda of the UN Peacebuilding Commission at the earliest opportunity in order to encourage sustainable peace, security, and development by rebuilding institutions and infrastructure, resettling and assisting refugees and internally displaced persons, and initiating a process of truth and reconciliation that promotes healing and forgiveness].”

Rationale

Item 11-10 is consistent with the General Assembly policies such as the Resolution on Just Peacemaking and the Call for International Intervention for Humanitarian Rescue (Minutes, 1998, Part I, pp. 74–75, 455–59). Many of the recommendations here are similar to those in the proposed resolution, “Costly Lessons of the Iraq War,” which also provides a teaching resource, while this focuses on the advocacy of the church. Parts of Recommendations 4 (on Conscientious Objectors: see item X), 7 (specifying “war crimes” prosecution), 8 (specifying weapons and military waste removal and archeological restoration), 9 (specifying control of oil) add to the more general and comprehensive recommendations in the resolution. Item 6 is rephrased in conformity with current UN assignment of responsibilities as noted below.

In response to a growing recognition that international peacebuilding efforts have lacked an overall strategic approach and coherence, world leaders at the 2005 World Summit agreed to establish the Peacebuilding Commission (UN General Assembly resolution 60/1). The Peacebuilding Commission (PBC) is an intergovernmental advisory body of the United Nations that supports peace efforts in countries emerging from conflict.

The Peacebuilding Commission plays a unique role in (1) bringing together all of the relevant actors, including international donors, the international financial institutions, national governments, troop contributing countries; (2) marshalling resources; and (3) advising on and proposing integrated strategies for post-conflict peacebuilding and recovery and, where appropriate, highlighting any gaps that threaten to undermine peace.

Peacebuilding is a long-term process that occurs after violent conflict has come to a halt. Peacebuilding initiatives cannot substitute for peacekeeping or peacemaking efforts, but must be planned for sequentially out of hope and in the promise of God’s shalom.

On Addressing the Violence and Suffering Inflicted on Iraqi Women During the Current Prolonged War—From the Presbytery of Providence.

The Presbytery of Providence overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to address the pain, violence, and suffering being inflicted upon many Iraqi women during the current prolonged war by

1. Communicating to the Iraqi government~~], through their ambassadors in Washington and the United Nations,~~ our concern for equal rights and justice for women in Iraq; deploring the dramatic increase in abuses since ~~[the changes to the Iraqi Constitution in] 2004; and urging [immediate and speedy correction of these inequities of oppressive radical abuses of basic human rights be taken to improve women's status in all areas of Iraqi society] [steps be taken to improve women's status in all areas of Iraqi society];~~

2. Communicating to the United States government, through letters to the president, the members of Congress, and to the secretary of state, our concern for equal rights and justice for women in Iraq and urging that the U.S. government ~~[devote significant attention to working]~~ [work] with the Iraq government toward correcting inequities and lost civil rights by Iraqi women<sup>1</sup>;

3. Encouraging all sessions and presbyteries, as well as women's and men's organizations within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), to engage in study, prayer, and dialogue about the issues of violence against and suppression of women in Iraq;

4. Expressing our ~~[concern]~~ [solidarity] ~~[through communications with our partner churches in Iraq as well as within the World Council of Churches, the Middle East Council of Churches, and the World Association of Reformed Churches, seeking their active participation in support for Iraqi women]~~ [with our partner churches in Iraq as well as with the World Council of Churches, the Middle East Council of Churches, the fellowship of Middle East Evangelical Churches, the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, and leaders of the Muslim world assisting them in attempts to address the issue and the difficult conditions under which they are living.]

5. Affirming our belief in the value, dignity, and rights of every human being;

6. Asserting our conviction that demands for justice by Iraqi women require efforts to bring their situations before fair tribunals, especially when extreme actions silence those who are oppressed<sup>2</sup>;

~~[7. Appealing to leaders of the Muslim community in the U.S.A. and in the world that they intervene in Iraq by standing against those who are oppressing women and who deny them basic human rights.<sup>3</sup>]~~

Rationale

Numerous reliable news reports document the beatings, rapes and killings of women in many parts of Iraq, particularly throughout southern Iraq, with more than one hundred women killed in Basrah during the last half of 2007. Such abuse frequently is directed toward women who wear makeup or "western" style clothing.<sup>4</sup>

Political Islamists and religious extremists have been using rape, acid, and assassination to force Iraqi women, and those who defend them, to conform and submit to fundamentalist views of the Qur'an, and thus becoming subservient, non-public, and unequal partners in their lives, actions contrary to the United Nations "Universal Declaration on Human Rights" adopted in 1948.<sup>5</sup>

The United Nations Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW)<sup>6</sup> was ratified by the UN General Assembly in 1979, and by 2005 180 countries, including Iraq, had acceded to it and become "states parties" to it. The CEDAW's Article 1 defines discrimination against women as any "distinction, exclusion, or restriction made on the basis of sex which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, irrespective of marital status, on the basis of equality between men and women, of human rights or fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field."

Isobel Coleman, “Women, Islam and the New Iraq,” Foreign Affairs, January/February 2006 Summary: Although questions of implementation remain, the new Iraqi constitution makes Islam the law of the land. This need not mean trouble for Iraq’s women, however. Sharia is open to a wide range of interpretations, some quite egalitarian. If Washington still hopes for a liberal order in Iraq, it should start working with progressive Muslim scholars to advance women’s rights through religious channels.
2. “To be reconciled to God is to be sent into the world as [God’s] reconciling community. This community, the church universal, is entrusted with God’s message of reconciliation and shares [the] labor of healing the enmities, which separate men [and women] from God and from each other. . . .” (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.31); “We trust in God, whom Jesus called Abba, Father. ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-11

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-11—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 11-11 asks the 218th General Assembly (2008) to address the pain, violence, and suffering being inflicted upon many Iraqi women during the current prolonged war.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that this item be approved with amendments. The ACWC suggests that the following language be added and become Recommendation 1 and all other recommendations (1.–7.) be renumbered as 2.–8.: [Text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“[1. Accepting humbly the responsibility the United States bears for creating the current humanitarian crisis in Iraq which increases the vulnerability of Iraqi women to exploitation, violence and suffering:]”

The ACWC suggests that Recommendation 4., renumbered as 5., be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“[4.] [5.] Expressing our [concern through communications] [solidarity] with our partner churches in Iraq as well as within the World Council of Churches, the Middle East Council of Churches, [the Fellowship of Middle East Evangelical Churches,] and the World [Association] [Alliance] of Reformed Churches, [assisting them in attempts to address the issue and the difficult conditions under which they are living] [seeking their active participation in support for Iraqi women];”

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) speaks often against violence in all forms, especially directed at women. Wartime is no exception. Women in Iraq are being targeted for kidnapping and violence. It is important to call attention to and stand against violence specifically to women. Globally, the church has done this, in part, through repeated calls on the U.S. government to ratify the United Nation’s Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), which was ratified by the U.N. General Assembly in 1979 and has been acceded to by 185 countries—more than 95 percent of the member nations of the U.N. At this assembly, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) brings a report on Iraq—“Costly Lessons of the Iraq War”—that gives further context to this Item 11-11.

On Preventing the Trafficking of Women, Internationally and Nationally—From the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks.

The Presbytery of Plains and Peaks respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to remind the government of the United States of America of the provisions of its own Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) signed into law by President Clinton in 2000, and to request that it be conscientiously enforced by doing the following:

1. Instructing the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate with the United States Justice Department

a. to urge law enforcement agencies to work together to close loopholes in the investigation, arrest and prosecution of human traffickers;

b. to urge the targeting of exploiters, not their victims;

c. to urge the development of more efficient law enforcement training programs to aid in identifying human traffickers and their victims.

2. Instructing the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to communicate with the United States Department of Homeland Security

a. to urge the development of methods to recognize and arrest traffickers;

b. to urge the development of methods to identify forged passports and visas in order to limit the number of trafficked victims brought into the United States.

3. Instructing the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly to find ways to urge agencies in other countries to stop traffickers from enticing women with the promise of good jobs in other countries, and by promoting false marriage.

4. Instructing the ~~[Executive Director of]~~ General Assembly Council to direct the ~~[Office of Relief and Development]~~ [appropriate offices of the General Assembly Council (GAC)] to work to strengthen laws that prohibit trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children.

5. Instructing the ~~[Executive Director of]~~ General Assembly Council to direct [and promote] the appropriate ~~[entity within GAC's mission structure]~~ [offices of the General Assembly Council (GAC)] to create educational materials on the trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children for use by presbyteries and congregations, and to promote the use of the adult curriculum entitled Sex Trafficking by Martha Bettis-Gee (available at <http://www.thethoughtfulchristian.com>)."

Rationale

As Christians we have a biblical mandate both to establish justice, and to care for the powerless. For example, Micah 6:8 tells us that we are to do justice and love kindness; Amos 2:6 speaks of God's judgment on those who "sell the righteous for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes"; and the story of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10: 29ff) reminds us of our responsibility to those who need our help.

As Presbyterians, we have a constitutional imperative to promote social righteousness (cf. The Great Ends of the Church, G-1.0200).

The goal of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) of 2000 is to help victims of trafficking through the prevention of human trafficking overseas, the protection of victims, and aid to victims in helping them to rebuild their lives ( United States Department of Health and Human Services, Rescue & Restore: Victims of Human Trafficking fact sheet <http://www.acf.hhs.gov/trafficking>).

Although thirty-six states have human trafficking task forces, the Polaris Project (funded by TVPA) reports:

1. a failure to identify victims;
2. a failure to prosecute traffickers;
3. a failure to provide rehabilitation services to victims;
4. a failure to educate the public about human trafficking.

Many victims are trafficked into the United States through failure to address immigration issues such as forged passports and visas.

Human trafficking is tied with the illegal arms industry as the second largest and fastest growing criminal industry in the world (United States Department of Health and Human Services, Rescue & Restore: Victims of Human Trafficking fact sheet. <http://www.acf.hhs.gov/trafficking>).

Each year, approximately 600,000 to 800,000 victims are trafficked across international borders, and 14,500 to 17,500 of those are transported into the United States (United States Department of Health and Human Services Rescue & Restore: Victims of Human Trafficking fact sheet <http://www.acf.hhs.gov/trafficking>).

The majority of sex trafficking victims are women and underage children who are lured into situations of sex trafficking with the promise of a good job in another country or the promise of (false) marriage.

In May 2006, a free trade agreement with Jordan resulted in tens of thousands of foreign “guest workers” from Bangladesh, China, India, Sri Lanka, and Pakistan being stripped of their passports and trapped in involuntary servitude (<http://www.nlcnet.org/article.php?id=10>).

Traffickers use force and coercion in the form of threats of serious harm, physical restraints, rape, beatings, and confinement to control their victims (United States Department of Health and Human Services Rescue & Restore: Victims of Human Trafficking fact sheet) <http://www.acf.hhs.gov/trafficking>.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-12—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-12, from the Presbytery of Peaks and Plains, overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to remind the government of the United States of America of its own Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) and to request that the TVPA be conscientiously enforced by instructing the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of General Assembly Council to urge government and other agencies to act to prevent the trafficking of women, internationally and nationally.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) commends the Presbytery of Peaks and Plains for bringing this issue forth, provides a comment in support, and advises that the overture be approved with the following amendments to Recommendations 4. and 5.: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and an underline.]

“4. Instructing the [~~Executive Director of~~] General Assembly Council to direct the [~~Office of Relief and Development~~] [appropriate offices of the General Assembly Council (GAC)] to work to strengthen laws that prohibit trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children.

“5. Instructing the [~~Executive Director of~~] General Assembly Council to direct the appropriate [~~entity within GAC's mission structure~~] [offices of the General Assembly Council (GAC)] to create educational materials on the trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children for use by presbyteries and congregations, and to promote the use of the adult curriculum entitled Sex Trafficking by Martha Bettis-Gee (available at <http://www.thethoughtfulchristian.com>)”

Comment: The ACSWP concurs with the Rationale supporting Item 11-12; cautioning, however, that Recommendation 2.b. not be interpreted as a political statement regarding illegal immigration of Mexican Nationals.

Rationale

Item 11-12 is consistent with the following General Assembly policies:

1. The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved Item 11-25, with amendment, “On Condemning the International Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation of Children,” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 43, 45, 994–97).
2. The 215th General Assembly (2003) approved, with amendment, Report of Research Team, The Review of the Situation of Prostitution Around Military Bases,” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 39, 585–87).
3. The 214th General Assembly (2002) approved the “Sisters of Mercy, Daughters of Grace: Presbyterians and Prostituted Women” report (Minutes, 2002, Part I, pp. 75, 604–20).

There are numerous reports on the trafficking of children, but we must be reminded that national and international trafficking of persons for sexual exploitation also includes the trafficking of women. Not only are these women coerced or forced into prostitution but often held in involuntary servitude and sometimes lose their lives. The teachings of the Gospel compels us to speak out for those who have no voice against injustices and to urge the government of the United States and other agencies to act in ways to prevent the trafficking of women.

Therefore, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve Item 11-12 as amended and with comment.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 11-12 requests that the U.S. government be reminded of the provisions of its own Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA), and that it be conscientiously enforced.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that item 11-12 be approved.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) is called to be a voice of justice and advocacy for women in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the world. Sex trafficking and prostitution has been a prominent issue of concern for several years. The following is a list of related reports approved by recent General Assemblies:

210th General Assembly (1998)	The Plight of Women and Children Forced into Prostitution
210th General Assembly (1998)	The Military and Sexual Exploitation and Abuse of Women
211th General Assembly (1999)	Prostitution in the United States
214th General Assembly (2002)	Sisters of Mercy, Daughters of Grace: Presbyterians and Prostituted Women

Since 2006, ACWC has focused on human trafficking and its effect on women and children. As a result, ACWC submitted a resolution (see Item 11-13, Recommendation 2) to the General Assembly for expanding PC(USA) understanding and increasing efforts that focus on programmatic responses and communicating to the larger church. The church must work diligently in its efforts to combat trafficking through its work together and in cooperation with ecumenical partners. It also must monitor the work being done by the U.S. government to assure that legislation and funds already approved are used to combat this violence against women and children. It is encouraging that congregations and presbyteries also raise this concern.

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-12

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-12—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)

Item 11-12 on preventing the trafficking of women, internationally and nationally.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) concurs with the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC)’s advice and counsel.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-12

Comment on Item 11-12—From the General Assembly Council.

The General Assembly Council (GAC) affirms the deep concerns expressed by the Presbytery of Plains and Peaks for victims of human trafficking and is grateful that the presbytery is bringing this serious matter to the assembly.

In response to previous General Assembly action on this matter, the GAC has created a coordination team made up of staff from across Mission Ministries of the General Assembly Council and from the Office of the General Assembly. This team has worked in the past two years specifically on the issue of sex trafficking and has included staff from Child Advocacy, Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), Social Welfare Organizations/ PHEWA; the Presbyterian United Nations Office, the Hunger Program, (Compassion, Peace and Justice Ministries), Women's Advocacy (Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries/Presbyterian Women), International Health HIV/AIDS Initiative (World Mission Ministries); Sexual Misconduct Ombudsperson (Legal Service/ Risk Management); and Immigration Issues (Office of the General Assembly). Advocating on behalf of this issue in the public arena is facilitated through staff in the Washington Office.

Additionally, Mission Responsibility Through Investment is communicating with corporations in the tourism industry, asking them to sign the Code of Conduct for the Protection of Children from Sexual Exploitation in Travel and Tourism.

The GAC appreciates that education about human trafficking is critically important. Child Advocacy, MRTI, and the United Nations Office have all provided workshops and seminars on this issue. The staff person from Child Advocacy has helped design the curriculum that is mentioned in the overture.

At this time funds are not available for additional educational resources. The GAC suggests that the General Assembly affirm the overall guidance of this overture but amend Recommendation 5 to read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“5. Instructing the Executive Director of General Assembly Council to direct the appropriate entity within GAC's mission structure to ~~create~~ promote educational materials on the trafficking and sexual exploitation of women and children for use by presbyteries and congregations, and to ~~promote~~ encourage the use of the adult curriculum entitled Sex Trafficking by Martha Bettis-Gee (available at <http://www.thethoughtfulchristian.com>).”

A Resolution to Expand the Church's Ministry with and Advocacy Against Human Trafficking

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Direct the General Assembly Council and the Office of General Assembly to expand their ministry with and advocacy against human trafficking to include adults, especially women, by supporting the Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry area to work with the ministries of Compassion, Peace, and Justice in providing resources to the wider church for education and advocacy.

2. Urge the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to regularly include trafficking of persons in its human rights updates.

3. Encourage the Presbyterian Hunger Program, Self-Development of People, Presbyterian Women, and other grant making entities in the PC(USA) to fund partner congregations, presbyteries, and synods, in order to

- a. provide safe housing, medical and psychological help for trafficked persons;
- b. support efforts to obtain appropriate documentation; and/or,
- c. assist trafficked persons, especially women, in safely returning to their country of origin.

4. Direct the Presbyterian Washington and the United Nations Offices to

- a. express concern for the escalation of trafficking within the U.S. and use the public witness channels available to them to raise issues with appropriate national and international representatives; and,
  - b. partner with ecumenical and interfaith entities to build coalitions against trafficking and participate in activities such as the National Day of Human Trafficking Awareness (January 11) and the Global Initiative to Fight Human Trafficking (UN).
- 5. Direct the General Assembly Council ministries of World Mission and Compassion, Peace, and Justice, in consultation with Racial Ethnic and Women’s Ministries, to work with appropriate offices and partners, to
- a. gather data on initiatives that respond to the terror of human trafficking and provide materials on the Web or in its interpretation resources, which lift up the PC(USA) efforts to combat trafficking systemically, in the United States and around the world; and
  - b. report its findings to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Rationale

Even on the male and female slaves, in those days, I will pour out my spirit. (Joel 2:29)

The ACWC continues to study and monitor the trafficking of women and to seek ways to inform PC(USA) congregations of the immediacy of this problem. Trafficking is escalating globally and is inextricably linked with migration and is the second largest criminal industry in the world following the illegal arms trade.<sup>1</sup> No one program area or committee can sufficiently address all aspects, we do not have sufficient resources. The PC(USA) needs to work collaboratively to connect the ministries of compassion and advocacy to positively impact this terrible reality.

The General Assembly has historically acted to condemn trafficking, sexual exploitation, and slavery of women and children. Since 1983, the General Assemblies of PCUS, UPCUSA, and PC(USA) have approved reports and statements condemning sexual exploitation, prostitution, and abuse of women and children. Most recently, the 217th General Assembly (2006) approved the overture from the Synod of the Northeast, On Condemning International Human Trafficking In and Sexual Exploitation of Children (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 994ff). Recognizing that 80 percent of sex trafficking involves females, the scope of the focus on sex trafficking of children needs to be expanded. Including women in our targeted ministries will ultimately impact and improve the lives of children.

Every day people worldwide are coerced into bonded labor, bought and sold in prostitution, exploited in domestic servitude, enslaved in agricultural work and in factories, and captured to serve as child soldiers. The US government recently reported that 800,000 people are trafficked across international borders each year and almost half are minors.<sup>2</sup> The international and diplomatic communities continue to recognize the threat of trafficking. In 2000, the nations of the world developed the United Nations Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, (commonly referred to as the Trafficking in Persons Protocol). Globally, nations recognize the increased vulnerabilities of women and children and agree to name it in efforts to combat trafficking. The protocol defines the term “trafficking in persons” as meaning the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Exploitation shall include, at a minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labour or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude or the removal of organs.<sup>3</sup>

This definition makes it clear why the church must bring its prophetic voice and particular actions to work against trafficking. There are many forms of trafficking and there are many estimates for the scope and magnitude.

The International Labor Organization (ILO)—the United Nations agency charged with addressing labor standards, employment, and social protection issues—estimates there are 12.3 million people in forced labor, bonded labor, forced child labor, and sexual servitude at any given time; other estimates range from 4 million to 27 million.<sup>4</sup>

These numbers are overwhelming, almost too large to comprehend. Yet each of these numbers is a person—a child of God. Each of these numbers has a story to tell—a story we need to hear. One story in the “Trafficking of Persons Report, 2007” follows:

14-year-old Jenny left her native Nigeria for the United States to work in the home of a couple, also originally from an African country. She thought she would be paid to look after their children, but the reality was very different. For five years Jenny was repeatedly raped by her employer and his wife physically assaulted her, sometimes with a cane, and on one occasion with a high-heeled shoe. Tipped off by a local NGO [non-governmental organization], law enforcement officials rescued Jenny and prosecuted the perpetrator.<sup>5</sup>

The U.S. Government's Trafficking Victims Protection Act, passed in 2000, intended to prevent trafficking overseas and protect and rehabilitate victims. This legislation has led thirty-six states to create task forces using funds provided by the Protection Act. However, evaluations of results have revealed failure either to identify or protect victims to any significant degree.<sup>6</sup> The responses explored so far have not ended trafficking but lessons have been learned and we are called to follow a God of Hope who will not let us fail the least of these.

Traffickers use force and coercion to control victims. Rape, beatings, restraints, and confinement are just some of the techniques used in efforts to control.<sup>7</sup> We stand with the Prince of Peace and declare the amazing love for each and every child of God. We Presbyterians have resources. The voices of these least (long silenced) beseech us to employ our resources to witness to the injustices of human trafficking and actively work toward its eradication in the family of God.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-13

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-13—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-13 from the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) calls on the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the entities of the General Assembly Council (GAC) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to expand their ministry with and advocacy against human trafficking to include adults, especially women.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve Item 11-13.

Rationale

Item 11-13, "A Resolution to Expand the Church's Ministry with and Advocacy Against Human Trafficking," is consistent with current General Assembly gender justice policies for women. The 198th General Assembly (1986): "Declare[d] that sexual exploitation of women in any form is not to be condoned, disregarded, or treated lightly" (Minutes, 1986, Part I, pp. 79, 653). In addition, the 204th General Assembly (1992) and the 210th General Assembly (1998) called on the United States Senate to ratify the "Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women<sup>1</sup>" adopted by the United Nations in 1979 (Minutes, 1992, Part I, pp. 74, 80, 871; Minutes, 1998, Part I, pp. 77, 478).

Therefore, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve Item 11-13, A Resolution to Expand the Church's Ministry with and Advocacy Against Human Trafficking.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-13—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC).

Item 11-13. Resolution to Expand Ministry: Human Trafficking.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) advises that Item 11-13 be approved.

Item 11-14

[The assembly approved Item 11-14 with amendment. See pp. 45, 47.]

On Endorsing the “Publish What You Pay” Campaign—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to

- 1. endorse the Publish What You Pay Campaign<sup>1</sup> (PWYP);
- 2. direct the Stated Clerk and the Moderator to support in writing and sign the PWYP campaign appeal<sup>2</sup> [on behalf of the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)];
- 3. call synods, presbyteries, and congregations to advocate for the mandatory disclosure of net taxes, fees, royalties, and other payments made by extractive industry companies, both multinational and state-owned enterprises, to all national governments on a disaggregated and country-by-country basis; and
- 4. join worldwide efforts to curb the current threats posed by the destructive practices of the extractive industries.

Rationale

Central Africa is a global reserve of resources with its enormous assets in oil and other minerals.

If revenue payments of this lucrative sector were effectively and transparently disclosed by the extractive industry companies (mining, gas, oil) and well managed by the national governments, it could serve as a basis for growth and poverty reduction.

The state and other institutions that manage these resources are often, in practice, unaccountable to the parliaments and ordinary citizens of their countries.<sup>3</sup>

This lack of accountability facilitates embezzlement, corruption, and revenue misappropriation.<sup>4</sup>

There is a subsequent breakdown of democratic processes and aggravation of civil strife.

As a result of all of the above, Central Africa has seen a lowering of living standards and increased poverty in spite of its assets.<sup>5</sup>

In the example of the Chad Cameroon Oil and Pipeline Project<sup>6</sup>, not even the World Bank has been able to hold the Chad government to the signed agreement for utilization of revenues for poverty reduction programs and for its future generation's fund.<sup>7</sup>

The new compromise between the World Bank and Chad sparks fears that the cash will be spent by the Chad government on guns and not development projects as initially intended.<sup>8</sup>

Nongovernmental organizations identified mandatory, comprehensive, and global measures at transparency as a necessary response to the mismanagement of billions of dollars' worth of oil, gas, and mining revenues paid to many developing country governments, and launched the Publish What You Pay (PWYP)<sup>9</sup> appeal.

The PWYP seeks to establish an international framework requiring transnational extraction companies to publish net taxes, fees, royalties, and other payments made.<sup>10</sup>

The PWYP focuses on countries where natural resources provide a major proportion of state income, where corruption associated with state income is of concern, and where companies are not fully transparent about their payments to national governments.

The leadership of our Cameroonian partners, the Presbyterian Church of Cameroon (PCC), the Eglise Presbytérienne Camerounaise (EPC), and the Network for the Fight Against Hunger (RELUFA) developed a declaration on current trends in the region's extractive industries, which was presented at the 2004 General Council of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC) in Accra.<sup>11</sup>

Building on earlier declarations from WARC's General Council in Debrecen, our partners invited the World Alliance of Reformed Churches and its individual denominations to take a series of actions, among others:

“To endorse the ‘Publish What you Pay’ public advocacy campaign [...] for transparency and fairness in extractive industries. . . .”

Since the elaboration of this declaration, the Publish What You Pay Campaign has expanded to Central Africa.<sup>12</sup>

Transparency potentiates sustainable development in poor but resource-rich countries.

This transparency would give civil society the opportunity to monitor government revenues effectively.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has historically responded to the biblical call for justice on behalf of the poor and the oppressed. Addressing merchants who value profit over honesty and justice, the biblical witness in Lev. 19:36 says, “You shall have honest balances, honest weights, an honest ephah, and an honest hin: I am the Lord your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt.”<sup>13</sup>

The PC(USA) Confession of 1967 states: “[E]nslaving poverty . . . is an intolerable violation of God’s good creation. . . . The church cannot condone poverty, whether it is the product of unjust social structures, exploitation of the defenseless, lack of natural resources, absence of technological understanding, or rapid expansion of populations.”<sup>14</sup> “For Presbyterians, the task of ending global poverty is a matter of confessional status that requires action.”<sup>15</sup>

For all Christians, “Economic policies and systems must be evaluated by how they affect the dignity of all individuals in communal solidarity, particularly, ‘the least, the lost, and the left-out.’”<sup>16</sup>

In light of this, the PC(USA) has said, “Economic policies and systems must be evaluated socially and ecologically on the basis of their benefits and harms to the well-being of all in our interdependent relationships.”<sup>17</sup>

Through the approval of the Africa Resolution by the 215th General Assembly (2003), the PC(USA) affirmed the need for ecumenical efforts that further human rights in Africa; that increase transparency, accountability, and fiscal responsibility; and that prevent natural resources to be used to fund conflicts around Africa and the world.<sup>18</sup>

The Presbytery of Chicago and the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area have a formal relationship with RELUFA through the Joining Hands Program, a partnership involving many congregations in each presbytery.<sup>19</sup>

Several congregations in these presbyteries also maintain ecclesiastic relationships with our Cameroonian church partners, the PCC, and EPC.

3. Revenues from resource extraction are disclosed neither by the governments nor the companies involved.
4. Recent extractive resource governance problems have been cited in Algeria, Angola, Chad, Congo-Brazzaville, Democratic Republic of Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Nigeria, and Sudan.
5. Presented by stakeholders as an opportunity for poverty alleviation, statistics actually reveal the inverse association between the export of natural resources and development. The direct link with the exploitation of the region's natural resources has been well established, and is now widely recognized by the international community.

6. Developed by an international consortium made up of Exxon, Chevron, and Petronas, the Chad Cameroon Oil and Pipeline Project is the largest private investment in Africa with a total cost of US $3.7 billion. The World Bank backing for the project, in the form of a restricted loan and of a “political risk assurance,” was touted as a model for making African natural resources work for the African people by providing guidelines and restrictions on how the oil money could be spent.
7. The project has been troubled from the start when the first $3 million (U.S. dollars) of oil proceeds were spent on guns in 2003. In April 2006, the World Bank ended a six-month spat by agreeing to a compromise deal that would allow the government of Chad to access 30 percent of oil revenues, compared to the previous limit of 10 percent, on condition that the remaining 70 percent go on priority poverty programs. The Future Generations Fund, a special account to guard 10 percent of oil income for future development projects, has been scrapped, too.
8. Chad, an arid desert country in north-central Africa, is the fifth poorest nation in the world, according to the UN. It has chronic development problems and has been fractured by civil war for most of the forty-six years since its independence from France. As recent as April 2006, the Chad government thwarted a coup attempt and fought off a rebel attack on the capital N’jamena.
9. On 13 June 2002, Save the Children, Global Witness, Catholic Association AFOD, Oxfam, Transparency International UK and the Open Society Institute launched the Publish What You Pay (PWYP) appeal to achieve transparency in the countries that most need it. This campaign has since expanded in a worldwide coalition of more than 280 ecumenical and secular organizations.
10. The disclosure of these data will allow civil society to more accurately assess the amount of money misappropriated, and to lobby for full transparency in local government spending.
11. The declaration accumulated into the following call for action:

“We, Cameroonian member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, brought together by the Network for the Fight Against Hunger in Cameroon (RELUFCA) to discern our role in the face of rising economic injustice and increasing ecological destruction in Cameroon and other countries in Central Africa, refuse to remain deaf to the appeals and cries of our people. Convinced that joint strategies within the larger global Christian community are needed to curb economic injustice and environmental degradation in our region, we invite all our sister churches in Cameroon, in Central Africa and throughout the world to join efforts to curb the current threats posed by the destructive practices of the extractive industries.” (p.2).

12. RELUFCA was one of the non-governmental organizations that launched the Cameroonian branch in December 2005. The National Council of Churches in Cameroon, CEPCA, is also a signatory of the campaign.
13. The witness of scripture calling for equity and justice is vast.

Addressing merchants who value profit over honesty and justice the biblical witness says:

- “... When will the new moon be over so that we may sell grain; and the sabbath, so that we may offer wheat for sale? We will make the ephah small and the shekel great, and practice deceit with false balances ...” (Amos 8:5).

Amos’ clarion witness to justice rings clearly:

- “But let justice roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream” (Amos 5:24).

The prophet Isaiah is a particularly profound witness to economic accountability.

- “Ah, sinful nation, people laden with iniquity, offspring who do evil, children who deal corruptly, who have forsaken the Lord, who have despised the Holy One of Israel, who are utterly estranged!” (Isa. 1:4).
- “learn to do good; seek justice, rescue the oppressed, defend the orphan, plead for the widow” (Isa. 1:17).
- “Why do we fast, but you do not see? Why humble ourselves, but you do not notice?” Look, you serve your own interest on your fast day, and oppress all your workers.

“Is not this the fast that I choose: to loose the bonds of injustice, to undo the thongs of the yoke, to let the oppressed go free, and to break every yoke?” (Isa. 58:3, 6).

And it is Isaiah who witnesses to the repentant Judah:

- “Your ancient ruins shall be rebuilt; you shall raise up the foundations of many generations; you shall be called the repairer of the breach, the restorer of streets to live in” (Isa. 58:12).

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-14

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-14—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-14, overture from the Presbytery of Chicago with concurrences from the Presbytery of Los Ranchos and the Presbytery of San Francisco, requests that the 218th General Assembly (2008) endorse the Publish What You Pay Campaign (PWYPC) against corruption in international trade. In addition, it calls upon the Stated Clerk and Moderator of the General Assembly to support and become signatories to this campaign.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve Item 11-14.

Rationale

The Publish What You Pay Campaign (PWYPC)<sup>1</sup> is a worldwide initiative designed to hold both the organizations doing business with “resource-rich” developing nations and the leaders of these nations accountable for how income obtained through the sale of natural resources are used. This initiative is supported by the PC(USA)’s Joining Hands Against Hunger African partners. By holding both of these parties accountable, PWYPC supporters believe people living in poverty in these regions may benefit from moneys obtained through the sale of natural resources, such as oil, extracted from their communities. Currently, corrupt governmental practices are contributing to the suffering of thousands of women, men, and children in these regions, including Africa as highlighted in the rationale of Item 11-14.

The actions called for in Item 11-14 are consistent with the current General Assembly trade policies. As stated in Item 11-14, through the approval of the Resolution on Africa, the 215th General Assembly (2003):

Direct[ed] the State Clerk and appropriate entities of the General Assembly Council to urge the U.S. government to ensure that no oil, diamonds, or other natural resources and commodities are used to fund conflicts around Africa and the world, and also to ensure that such items and commodities so used are prohibited from entering the U.S. (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 37, 593).

Seven years earlier, the 208th General Assembly (1996) spoke out against corrupt business and government practices. That assembly

[R]ecogniz(ing) that the level and extent of corruption in some governments may preclude the advisability of extending assistance, encourage(d) the United States government and private multinational firms doing business with governmental agencies to adopt policies that require disclosure of corrupt practices as a condition of completing transactions; and endorses the objective of Transparency International, an association of private and public officials calling for greater openness in cross-boarder transactions . . . (Minutes, 1996, Part I, pp. 107, 110, 532).

For the reasons cited above and in the Rationale of Item 11-14, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve this item.

[The assembly approved Item 11-15 with amendment and with comment. See pp. 45, 47.]

On Support for the Presbyterian Church in Zimbabwe—From the Presbytery of Denver.

The Presbytery of Denver overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the PC(USA) to do the following:

1. Call upon the Southern African Development Community (SADC)[, the African Union] heads of state and government to
  - a. establish concrete measures for addressing the political, economic, and humanitarian crisis in Zimbabwe; [~~and to~~]
  - b. vigorously advocate for free and fair elections in Zimbabwe[-] [;]
  - [c. ensure that the will of the Zimbabwean people is respected.]
2. [~~Encourage~~] [Urge] the president and Congress of the United States to increase humanitarian aid to Zimbabwe and continue support for the Zimbabwean people via legislation[, and to condemn the human rights abuses that have occurred in Zimbabwe].
3. Support the work of individual congregations, church governing bodies, and ecumenical groups within Zimbabwe as well as the Presbytery of Zimbabwe and The United Presbyterian Church in Southern Africa.
4. [Call upon the members of the World Council of Churches and the World Alliance of Reformed Churches to call to awareness the situation in Zimbabwe and to] establish a Day of Prayer for the people of Zimbabwe.
- [5. Direct the office of the General Assembly and the Presbyterian United Nations Office to communicate the concerns, prayers, and the work of the Presbyterian Church (USA) for justice in Zimbabwe to the United Nations.]

Comment: Commend the South African dockworkers for having the courage to refuse to unload a shipment of arms from China for Zimbabwe. Commend the various religious and secular organizations working to restore peace and order in many countries in Africa and around the world.

Rationale

Presbyterians in Zimbabwe struggle for their existence. They share that struggle with their whole country. With an economy in turmoil and a political environment ruled by intimidation and greed, every day brings a new crisis and drives Zimbabwe closer to complete collapse. Once a thriving example of growth, well-being, and stability, Zimbabwe now has become a country known for:

- The highest rate of inflation in the world.
- The largest percentage of orphans according to UNICEF.
- One of the highest HIV infection rates in the world.
- The fleeing of millions of educated citizens that has created a catastrophic “brain drain.”
- A collapse of the health system resulting from a severe lack of health professionals, supplies, and drugs.
- Land reforms badly managed by the government with 90 percent of farm land left idle or underutilized.
- Life-threatening shortages of food, clean water, electricity, and fuel. Estimates by the United Nations World Food Program indicate that at least three million people, a quarter of the population, will need emergency food aid this year.
- A political system that is choking its country with a government that suppresses the free formation of a multiple party system, uses legislation, harassment, and violence to silence the independent media, and grossly abuses its power and the people to subvert free elections.

One of the primary instruments for change is the Southern African Development Community. Its current member states are Angola, Botswana, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Lesotho, Madagascar, Malawi, Mauritius, Mozambique, Namibia, South Africa, Swaziland, United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia, and Zimbabwe. The SADC promotes a vision “that will ensure economic well-being, improvement of the standards of living and quality of life, freedom and social justice and peace and security for the peoples of Southern Africa.”

The United States government has extended compassion and support for the people of Zimbabwe via humanitarian aid and legislation. Augmented funding for shipments via the U.S. Department of Defense would allow for increased delivery of desperately needed commodities like food and clothing to the people of Zimbabwe. Through legislation such as the Zimbabwe Democracy and Economic Recovery Act of 2001, the United States stands beside the people of Zimbabwe while publicly denouncing the actions of the current Zimbabwe government.

The church in Zimbabwe has been one of the strongest and most significant voices calling for justice and reconciliation. In its ministry, it continues to hold to the saving power of Jesus Christ and to serve its people in the face of overwhelming crisis and poverty. On March 22, 2007, the Uniting Presbyterian Church in Southern Africa (UPCSA), which includes the Presbytery of Zimbabwe, strongly urged the governments of Zimbabwe and South Africa to seek proactively a multiparty dialogue to strive for a peaceful solution to the protracted, life-threatening problems in Zimbabwe. The UPCSA emphasizes that as a transnational church, it shares the pain and suffering of its community in Zimbabwe and can no longer endure seeing the pain and violence that dismembers the body.

As a partner church of the Uniting Presbyterian Church of Southern Africa, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes a unity in our common tradition, in our commitment to the justice, peace, and compassion of Jesus Christ, and in the abiding Spirit of God. We dare not remain silent. We seek to share in the struggle of our partners and of all the people of Zimbabwe, and to join with them in giving voice, especially when their voices are muted or ignored, to calling for a new future.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-15—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-15 requests that the 218th General Assembly (2008) call upon the Southern African Development Community (SADC),<sup>1</sup> and U.S. elected officials to support efforts addressing the political, economic, and humanitarian crisis in Zimbabwe.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve Item 11-15 with the following comments.

“Comment: 1. Commend the South African dockworkers for having the courage to refuse to unload a shipment of arms from China for Zimbabwe.<sup>2</sup>

Comment: 2. Commend the various religious and secular organizations working to restore peace and order in many countries in Africa, and around the world.

Rationale

The refusal of officials in Zimbabwe to release the 2008 presidential results has contributed to an increase in political tension in this region. In light of this impasse, the South African Transport and Allied Workers Union backed the South African dockworkers’ position to refuse to unload a shipment of arms from China to Zimbabwe. The dockworkers were concerned that these arms (mortar bombs, rockets, and ammunition) ordered before the presidential election would be used to repress Zimbabweans who did not support President Robert Mugabe. South Africa’s High Court, after hearing an appeal from the Anglican archbishop on behalf of the dockworkers, ruled in favor of their position.<sup>3</sup>

The economic situation in Zimbabwe is heartbreaking. Economic policies put in place by the current Zimbabwean government have created devastating hyperinflation for the people in this region. The Zimbabwean dollar is practically worthless. Zimbabwe’s citizens who are poor must spend their hard earned dollars as quickly as they earn them. Reports released in the beginning of 2008 indicated that two pounds of chicken cost about fifteen million Zimbabwean dollars.<sup>4</sup> In addition, the removal of more than sixty white farmers, and two black farmers off their property has contributed to the economic instability in this region.<sup>5</sup> Through the mining of platinum and gold natural resources, the government, however, continues to find hard currency to pay military and political leaders.<sup>6</sup>

In April 2008, the general secretary of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches (WARC), the Reverend Dr. Setri Nyomi, called on the members of the Reformed family to pray for the people of Zimbabwe. The president of the WARC, Stated Clerk Reverend Dr. Clifton Kirkpatrick, communicated the general secretary's request to the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and others.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has partnerships in this African nation through the Zimbabwe Council of Churches, the Uniting Presbyterian Church in Southern Africa—Presbytery of Zimbabwe and the Church of Central Africa Presbyterian (CCAP)—Synod of Harare. Therefore, it is appropriate for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to address the political, economic, and humanitarian turmoil in this region. Furthermore, the 215th General Assembly (2003) affirmed “the participation of congregations, presbyteries, synods, General Assembly entities, and individual Presbyterian in ecumenical efforts that encourage and further human rights in Africa ...” (Minutes, 2003, Part I, pp. 38, 593).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises approval of Item 11-15.

Item 11-16

[The assembly approved Item 11-16. See pp. 45, 47.]

On Peacemaking and the Pursuit of Justice and Fairness of Shalom—From the Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area.

The Presbytery of the Twin Cities area overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to:

- 1. Stand for constructive national and international policies based on peacemaking and the pursuit of justice and fairness of shalom;
- 2. Stand for international communication and cooperation, for conflict resolution by non-violent means, and for the enforcement of international law as formulated in the United National Charter, international treaties, and agreements;
- 3. Support efforts to abolish war and to oppose the doctrine of preemptive war;
- 4. Promote civil liberties and rights to due process; and
- 5. Oppose torture and degrading treatment of human beings, and support efforts for the promotion of human rights.

Rationale

In view of the circumstances we face today in the life of our planet since:

- Warfare and violence is spreading locally, and on a global scale because governments and nongovernmental organizations increasingly rely on force to achieve their unilateral ends.
- There are problems and concerns of global nature which call for appropriate global action.
- The community of human beings has an obligation to work for a better future, free of the deadly threats by human policies and technology.
- The teaching of Jesus as recorded in the New Testament emphasizes nonviolence, peacemaking, fairness, and justice now.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-16

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-16—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)

Item 11-16 calls on the 218th General Assembly (2008) to stand for constructive national and international policies based on peacemaking and the pursuit of justice and fairness of shalom.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises the 218th General Assembly to approve Item 11-16.

Rationale

The concerns raised in Item 11-16 are consistent with General Assembly peacemaking policies. These policies include:

1. The 192nd General Assembly (1980) affirmed that: “The church bears witness to Christ when it nourishes the moral life of the nation for the sake of peace in our world. The church’s faithful obedience to its calling means active participation in the formation of the values and beliefs of our society. It means seeking peace in personal and social relationships of our culture and exercising our citizenship in the body politic to shape foreign policy ...” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1980, Part I, p. 203).
2. The 195th General Assembly (1983) “Encourage[d] the various branches of Christianity and other faiths around the world to come together in councils and coalitions presently existing, and those which may be called, to effect a climate of peace among our nations ...” (Minutes, 1983, Part I, p. 100).
3. The 217th General Assembly (2006) “Affirm[ed] that the ... Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) opposes the use of torture and all forms of ‘cruel, inhuman, or degrading’ interrogation by all agencies, employees, or agents of the United States government, and all foreign governments and/or combatants ...” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 50–51, 867).

In light of these policies, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) to approve Item 11-16. Through its approval of this item of business, this assembly can encourage the entities of this denomination to continue to pursue discussions on the peace and justice concerns contained in this item, accept our Christian responsibility of being peacemakers and peacekeepers, and take appropriate actions within our rights as citizens of the United States of America.

Item 11-17

Overture on War, Mercenaries, and Profiteering—From the Presbytery of Scioto Valley.

The Presbytery of Scioto Valley respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Opposes the use of ~~mercenary soldiers or~~ [armed private] military contractors paid to ~~fight~~ [perform security, intelligence, training, and military operational services traditionally rendered by U.S. military and other U.S. government personnel] in wars, military conflicts, or any type of military operations because it is immoral to wage war or kill ~~[for money, even assuming the war or conflict is just]~~ [essentially for private gain, even if the war, occupation, or potential use of force is justifiable, and because of the additional costs and lack of accountability of these forces].

2. ~~Direct the Stated Clerk [to petition the Congress of the United States to prohibit the use of mercenary soldiers and military contractors for any type of military operation, war, or conflict at home or abroad. In no way should the objection to the use of mercenaries and armed military contractors in this overture be interpreted as tacit approval of an expansion of the military or of a military draft.]~~ [, and appropriate offices of the General Assembly Council, to support the development and enforcement of laws to prohibit the use of such private military/security forces, whose work closely resembles that of mercenaries in earlier historical periods.]

3. Direct the Stated Clerk to petition the Congress of the United States [and enter into “Friend of the Court” requests] to review and revise the law[s] applicable to military contractors [and other civilian employees] of the United States in order that human rights abuses and criminal acts committed abroad by military contractors [and other civilian employees fall within] ~~[be covered by]~~ the jurisdiction ~~[and the law of the United States,]~~ [of U.S. criminal law when the Uniform Code of Military Justice does not apply], and that Congress further [be urged to] review past instances of human rights violations and serious violations of law by military contractors.

4. Direct the Stated Clerk ~~[to petition]~~ [and appropriate General Assembly Council offices to petition and otherwise advocate that] the Congress and the attorney general of the United States ~~[to]~~ investigate war profiteering [in the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan], both by private military contractors and others. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) further requests that, as in the American Civil War, World War I, World War II, and the Korean War, an excess profits tax be assessed against any company found to be engaged in war profiteering, recognizing that it is immoral to use a time of war or national emergency to expand profits [while many soldiers’ families live in poverty and all official U.S. personnel bear the primary risks and sacrifices of the war].”

Rationale

The war in Iraq has greatly increased two types of private businesses that operate under contract to the Defense Department. The first is private military companies. The second involves businesses that provide military support services, such as cleaning, maintenance, and food preparation. By far, the largest market for private military companies today is in Iraq. These private soldiers are neither civilian nor military, although they perform traditional military functions.

There are few legal restrictions on the activities of private military companies. United States courts have held that they lack jurisdiction over them and that international law does not apply to these contractors. The military has implemented little oversight. Iraqi and other civilians have discovered that laws protecting them from mercenary soldiers are virtually nonexistent.

The massacre of seventeen Iraqi civilians by military contractor Blackwater USA is a case in point. None of the mercenary soldiers involved can be tried for crimes in Iraq, which, under pressure from Washington, was stripped of jurisdiction over mercenary soldiers. None of them can be court-martialed since United States military law does not apply to them. United States courts have no jurisdiction over mercenary soldiers and international law cannot touch them because, technically, they do not work for a state. They are in a virtual law-free zone. Numerous incidents of abuse and even murder by contractors in the Iraq War have been reported but not a single one has been charged with a crime. None of the military contractors implicated in the Abu Ghraib prison abuse have been charged in any crime although most of the military enlisted personnel involved in that abuse are now in prison.

Moral considerations arise when for-profit companies have explicit interest in the continuation of war and violence. These companies are directly benefiting from war and suffering. It is immoral to wage war or kill for money, even assuming that the war or conflict is just.

Moreover, the use of highly paid mercenaries working alongside soldiers performing the same tasks for dramatically less money undermines morale. Some private military companies pay up to ten times the salary of a United States soldier for the same work. Soldiers hired from poor countries are paid far less. When they are killed, their private American employers take no responsibility for compensating their families.

There are concerns over the human trafficking involved in private companies that provide military support services. Some workers have charged that they were recruited from their home countries under false promises and lack the means to return home.

The use of private contractors has escalated the cost of the current Iraq War. These private companies advertise cost savings to the Pentagon, but their claims have never been proven. Further, even when war profiteering is apparent, these companies appear to operate in a law-free zone. After military contractor Custer Battles was found guilty of contract fraud, the verdict was overturned on appeal because the appellate court ruled that federal law has no provisions to charge military contractors with fraud.

As Presbyterians and Christians, and in light of our commitment to wholeness in all of God's creation, we are concerned about the human rights abuses, war profiteering, and lack of accountability that permeate the outsourcing of military tasks.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-17

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-17—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-17 calls for opposition to the use of mercenary soldiers or military contractors paid to fight in any type of military operations.

The [~~Presbytery of Seio to Valley respectfully overtures the~~] 218th General Assembly (2008) [~~to do the following~~]:

“1. Opposes the use of [~~mercenary soldiers or~~] [armed private] military contractors paid to [~~fight~~] [perform security, intelligence, training and military operational services traditionally rendered by U.S. military and other U.S. government personnel] in wars, military conflicts, or any type of military operations because it is immoral to wage war or kill [~~for money, even assuming the war or conflict is just~~] [solely for private gain, even if the war, occupation, or potential use of force is justifiable, and because of the additional costs and lack of accountability of these forces].

“2. Direct the Stated Clerk [~~to petition the Congress of the United States to prohibit the use of mercenary soldiers and military contractors for any type of military operation, war, or conflict at home or abroad. In no way should the objection to the use of mercenaries and armed military contractors in this overture be interpreted as tacit approval of an expansion of the military or of a military draft.~~] [, and appropriate offices of the General Assembly Council, to support the development and enforcement of laws to prohibit the use of such private military/security forces, whose work closely resembles that of mercenaries in earlier historical periods].

“3. Direct the Stated Clerk to petition the Congress of the United States [~~and enter into ‘Friend of the Court’ requests~~] to review and revise the law[s] applicable to military contractors [~~and other civilian employees~~] of the United States in order that human rights abuses and criminal acts committed abroad by military contractors [~~and other civilian employees fall within~~] [be covered by] the jurisdiction [~~and the law of the United States,~~] [of U.S. criminal law when the Uniform Code of Military Justice does not apply], and that Congress further [be urged to] review past instances of human rights violations and serious violations of law by military contractors.

“4. Direct the Stated Clerk [~~to petition~~] [and appropriate General Assembly Council offices to petition and otherwise advocate that] the Congress and the attorney general of the United States investigate war profiteering [~~in the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan~~], both by private military contractors and others. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) further requests that, as in the American Civil War, World War I, World War II, and the Korean War, an excess profits tax be assessed against any company found to be engaged in war profiteering, recognizing that it is immoral to use a time of war or national emergency to expand profits [while many soldiers' families live in poverty and all official U.S. personnel bear the primary risks and sacrifices of the war].

Rationale

This overture identifies new and troubling aspects of U.S. State Department and military policy that have subsidized the growth of large private security forces and, according to some reports, weakened morale and retention of experienced U.S. military personnel tempted by higher salaries in those private military forces. Beyond the fundamental issue of morality identified by the presbytery, they cite tragic cases of legal impunity by contractors. We note that Senators Lindsay Graham and John Kerry have sponsored legislation to put all security contractors under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

The General Assembly may determine to use the term “mercenary” to characterize private soldiers and the companies that hire them, though the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy provides substitute language. The rise of citizen armies after the Renaissance generally marked the end of large-scale mercenary usage as military affairs came gradually more under control of democratic governments. (Machiavelli himself, in The Prince (1515), says “Mercenaries do nothing but harm.”) International law sought to eliminate the problems associated with mercenaries, and the definition below is taken from a Protocol to Article 47 of the Geneva Conventions. In the late 1980s, for example, U.S. support for the “Contra’s” in Nicaragua was determined by twelve of the fifteen judges of the International Court of Justice to have “violated the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of a sovereign state.”

Here is the definition for individual mercenaries quoted by the Congressional Research Service (CRS) from Protocol 1, Article 47, to the Geneva Convention (1977):

A mercenary is any person who:

- (a) Is specially recruited locally or abroad in order to fight in an armed conflict;
- (b) Does, in fact, take a direct part in the hostilities;
- (c) Is motivated to take part in the hostilities essentially by the desire for private gain and, in fact, is promised, by or on behalf of a Party to the conflict, material compensation substantially in excess of that promised or paid to combatants of similar ranks and functions in the armed forces of that Party;
- (d) Is neither a national of a Party to the conflict nor a resident of territory controlled by a Party to the conflict;
- (e) Is not a member of the armed forces of a Party to the conflict;
- (f) Has not been sent by a State which is not a Party to the conflict on official duty as a member of its armed forces. (See CRS Report for Congress: Private Security Contractors in Iraq: Background, Legal Status, and Other Issues. Updated July 11, 2007. Order Code: RL32419.9)

The General Assembly has long acknowledged the legitimacy of service in the military and of resistance to such service in conscience-driven pacifism. The need for sincerity of purpose in military service is also affirmed in the confessions; for example, along with a version of the Just War theory, in the Second Helvetic Confession: “And if the public safety of the country and justice require it, and the magistrate of necessity wages war, let them [the citizens] even lay down their life and pour out their blood for the public safety ... in the name of God willingly, bravely and cheerfully” (The Book of Confessions, 5.258).

Report on Human Rights in Colombia—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program (PPP) recommend that the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) do the following:

- 1. Call on the members and congregations of the PC(USA) to study the situation in Colombia, diligently pray for the work of the Presbyterian Church of Colombia, and advocate with senators, representatives, and the president of the United States to lay down the weapons of violence and support the nonviolent struggle of the churches and civil society of Colombia and those in the U.S. who stand beside Colombians to end the violence by:
  - a. Withdrawing military support to the government of Colombia.
  - b. Reorienting U.S. policies toward Colombia in such a way as to encourage a more equitable distribution of that country’s immense wealth, and to protect the rights of groups threatened by the interests of large corporations, including indigenous people, Afro-Colombians, labor leaders, human rights workers, and many campesinos.
  - c. Ending the aerial fumigation for coca crops and focusing on programs that provide higher levels of support for farmers to convert to alternative crops and that reduce demand for drugs in the United States.
  - d. Transferring U.S. support to the growing civil society committed to democracy and nonviolence.
  - e. Providing aid to strengthen health care, education, and nutrition, especially among the displaced.
  - f. Increasing aid for resettlement of displaced persons in their homelands.
  - g. Channeling aid through nongovernmental organizations.
  - h. Supporting the commendable work of the United Nations in Colombia, especially the work of the high commissioner of refugees with internal refugees, displaced women, and threatened indigenous communities.
  - i. Ratifying and urging Colombia to also ratify, the United Nations Convention Against Corruption.

2. Direct the World Mission's ministry area, in consultation with the appropriate entities of the General Assembly Council (GAC) and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), to continue to monitor the situation in Colombia, and to keep the whole church abreast of these findings; and to offer advice and counsel, as needed, about how this denomination can continue to support the peacekeeping efforts of our partners in Colombia.

3. Direct the Presbyterian Washington Office (PWO) to continue to educate the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and their representatives in the Congress of the United States of America about the effect of American legislation on the lives of individual Colombian citizens with particular emphasis on Plan Colombia and the Free Trade Agreement.

4. Direct the Presbyterian United Nations Office (PUNO) to continue to represent the concerns of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the committees and delegates of the United Nations.

5. Affirm and further encourage the work of the Accompaniment Program of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that watches over and shadows vulnerable and threatened Colombia citizens as they seek justice for their most threatened and needy populations.

~~[6. Direct the General Assembly Council (GAC) through appropriate offices, including World Mission, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA) to continue to communicate support to the United Church of Christ in the Philippines and to advocate for full respect for human rights, including the suspension of military aid to forces associated with the death, brutal treatment, and arbitrary imprisonment of ministers, other church members, and other Philippine citizens.]~~

[7-] [6.] Direct the appropriate entities of the General Assembly Council (GAC), in consultation with the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), to continue to monitor and address human rights violations in the United States, and in other nations brought to their attention by the members of this denomination and/or the partner churches.

[7. Direct the Stated Clerk to write to the members of Congress of the United States of America, urging them not to ratify the Free Trade Agreement with Colombia, which would have grave consequences for workers, indigenous and Afro-Colombian populations, and the environment.]

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: 2006 Referral: Item 07-09. Commissioners' Resolution. On the Presbyterian Accompaniment Program in Colombia, Recommendation 5. The 217th General Assembly (2006) Referred Recommendation 5 to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Peacemaking Office with a Request to Include a Report in Their Next Human Rights Update Report—From the 217th General Assembly (2006) (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 16–17, 580–81).

Recommendation 1, above, is taken verbatim from Recommendation 5 of Item 07-09 (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 580–81).

The 217th General Assembly (2006) commended the bravery of the accompaniment teams in Colombia who, by their ministry of presence, have reduced the number of church workers targeted by paramilitary forces. That assembly, however, wanted more study of the situation in Colombia to support further recommendations.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program (PPP) consulted with the World Mission's South America Office and individual members involved with the Presbyterian Accompaniment Program in Colombia on the assembly's referral. These consultations found that the actions called for are consistent with previous policy positions taken by the PC(USA) on Colombia and with the church's general human rights policy. Therefore, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program (PPP) make the above recommendations.

A. Introduction

In this report the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program respond primarily to the specific human rights concerns cited in Item 07-09, Recommendation 5—the directive from the 217th General Assembly (2006) concerning the country of Colombia. Among the many countries suffering from outright war, ethnic and religious “cleansing” or persecution, and grievous poverty and disaster, Colombia unfortunately continues to be marked by long-term military stand-off with rebels who occupy 40 percent of the country.<sup>1</sup> Although groups within the rebel “party” are responsible for kidnappings, the larger source of violence has been paramilitary forces linked to large landowners and the owners of factories. As this brief assessment indicates, these forces are responsible for much of the internal displacement of approximately four million persons and the consistently terrifying practice of killing labor union leaders who seek better working conditions.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program (PPP) notes the significant parallels between the pattern of violence in Colombia and the pattern in the Philippines, another major recipient of U. S. antiterrorism training and technology. In both cases, official military forces have used counterinsurgency techniques against innocent civilians and have been linked to paramilitary death squads by Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch. In the Philippines, the ministers and members of the United Church of Christ in the Philippines (UCCP—our partner denomination) have become a particular target.<sup>2</sup> Of twenty-five persons and lay workers killed since 2001, most have been from the UCCP, though Methodists and Catholic priests have also been killed.<sup>3</sup> Others have been tortured, and several held in prison without due process. The government of President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo has moved at times toward martial law.

The issue in Colombia and the Philippines (and elsewhere) is whether U. S. policy is relying too much on military assistance and slighting the development aid, human rights support, and democratic example that has been at the core of our good reputation in the world. In 2008, the sixtieth anniversary of the UN Declaration of Human Rights, it is important to re-emphasize this basic area where international and domestic rule of law come together.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) called on the Philippine government to “bring to justice the killers of ... pastors, other church workers, and other Filipinos similarly executed and/or tortured by paramilitary forces” (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 584). We also are aware that within the last two years the World Mission’s Asia-Pacific area and the Office of the General Assembly (OGA), in consultation with other entities of the General Assembly Council (GAC), have monitored and responded to human rights concerns in the Philippines.

In July 2006, the Asia-Pacific Office sent a letter to members of the UCCP with the action approved by the 217th General Assembly (2006) on Commissioners’ Resolution. On the Denial of Human Rights in the Philippines (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 584–86). That assembly expressed this denomination’s support for the efforts of the UCCP to address the human rights violations in that region and its witness and ministry with and to the families affected by this violence. In 2007, the Reverend Clifton Kirkpatrick, Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), sent letters to President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, and to members of the United States Congress expressing this denomination’s concern about human rights violations in this region. In April 2007, the Reverend Joan Gray, Moderator of the 217th General Assembly (2006) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), visited the Philippines. Moderator Gray met with Bishop Eliezer Pascua, general secretary of the UCCP, and others and assured them that amid the violence they are experiencing, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) stands in solidarity with the UCCP.

B. An Overview of the Presbyterian Church’s Mission Partnership in Colombia

For more than 152 years, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and its predecessors have been engaged in ministry with our Christian sisters and brothers in Colombia. In 1856, the first Presbyterian church was founded in Bogotá. The early Presbyterian missionaries established schools that have educated generations of respected citizens. Today, the educational advocacy efforts of this denomination in this region are moving forward through the dedicated service of this denomination’s World Mission’s area personnel and other agencies. (For more information on the ministry performed by the World Mission’s areas on behalf of the whole church, visit <http://www.pcusa.org/worldwide>.)

The Presbyterian Church of Colombia gives strong and vital witness to the teachings and ministry of Jesus Christ and this church has called on us for support in its ministries with the displaced and most impoverished communities. Its assembly has made declarations that warn of the damages from the Plan Colombia and the grave consequences that approval of a free trade agreement would have for broad sectors of Colombia’s population. Pastors and members of the church continue to put themselves at risk. Some have been martyred in order to witness faithfully to the demands of the gospel by serving those most in need and the victims of the violence.<sup>4</sup> (For more information about the ministry and witness of the Presbyterian Church in Colombia, visit the PC(USA)’s Colombia web site at <http://www.pcusa.org/worldwide/colombia>)

C. Recent General Assembly Statements in Support of the Human Rights of the Colombian People

Within the last decade, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has reaffirmed this denomination’s efforts to support the human rights of the Colombian people. These actions include:

- The 210th General Assembly (1998) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) called upon the Colombian government to “make strenuous efforts to curtail the violence and provide protection and assistance to those affected” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 663). In addition, the assembly encouraged “access for international human rights organizations and the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and humanitarian assistance” (Minutes, 1998, Part I, p. 663).

- The 213th General Assembly (2001) responded to the United States involvement in the crisis in Colombia. Specifically, the assembly “declare[d] it morally repugnant for the U.S. and its allies to grant large amounts of aid to a military with Colombia’s grievous human rights record, while waving the obligation of the Colombian government to meet acceptable standards of human rights as a condition of continued aid (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 54, 471).
- The 216th General Assembly (2004): “Join[ed] with the Presbyterian Church in Colombia, other Christian churches, and other Christian organizations in calling for the redirection of United States Military aid into social, educational, health, and developmental assistance in the hope that peace would be restored. ... Decr[ied] the characterization of human rights workers as terrorists” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 70–71, 861).

Through the Accompaniment Program in Colombia, actions taken by the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) regarding this area are being implemented. The Accompaniment Program in Colombia is a joint ministry supported by the World Mission’s area, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, and the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship. It includes teams of volunteers that are giving bodily representation to the PC(USA)’s concern for the suffering of the Colombian people, and lending protection to threatened communities and a church that has been a victim of surveillance and has experienced threats to its leaders and pastors invested in working for human rights. (For more information about the accompaniment program, visit the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship Website at <http://www.presbypeacefellowship.org/colombia/>; for more information about the ministry of the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, visit <http://www.pcusa.org/peacemaking/>.)

D. Specific Human Rights Issues

1. Plan Colombia: Flawed Anti-drug Policy

The foreign policy of the United States has a major impact on developments within Colombia. The United States government has identified this region as a key strategic ally in the Western Hemisphere. In the year 2000, Plan Colombia was developed by the Colombian and United States governments in an attempt to address major challenges: to eradicate the coca crops in order to reduce the flow of cocaine to the United States, and to seize control from the guerilla forces that controlled about 40 percent of Colombia’s land mass. Plan Colombia has been financed by $5.4 billion from the United States<sup>5</sup>, distributed until this year with approximately 80 percent for military aid (which includes the coca eradication efforts) and 20 percent divided between alternative development, human rights programs, aid to displaced persons, and judicial reform.<sup>6</sup>

This well-intentioned plan has not resulted in any decrease in the cultivation of coca or the supply of cocaine to the United States,<sup>7</sup> and it has had unforeseen consequences. The practice of aerial fumigations intended to diminish coca cultivation has only caused an ecological crisis and harm to civilians.<sup>8</sup> In recent years, the conflict that Colombia has endured for nearly fifty years has intensified with the military aid provided by the United States. Paramilitary groups estimated to be responsible for 70 percent of human rights violations in the country established themselves with the support of large landholders and sectors of the armed forces.<sup>9</sup> Guerrilla groups have maintained their war tactics, with the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) currently holding about fifty hostages, three of them citizens of the United States who worked for Plan Colombia.

Since the implementation of Plan Colombia, more than two million Colombians have been displaced from their homes. This number, when added to those previously reported displaced in this region, is nearly four million, giving Colombia the third largest internally displaced population worldwide. The displaced seek refuge in slums, which surround many of the major cities,<sup>10</sup> occasioning the greatest humanitarian crisis in the hemisphere, according to the United Nations.<sup>11</sup>

2. Free Trade Agreement: Will It Protect Factory Workers, Small Landholders, and the Environment?

While the current appropriations for Plan Colombia enacted by the U.S. Congress for 2008 (56.6 percent military and police aid and 44.4 percent for humanitarian work, most of this shift due to the reduction of harmful aerial fumigation)<sup>12</sup> are a major improvement over previous versions, another problem is taking center stage—the potential for a United States-Colombia Free Trade Agreement. This free trade agreement has not been ratified due to pressure from religious, labor, and political organizations in the United States and Colombia. Colombia continues to be the most dangerous country in the world for trade unionists. In 2006 alone, seventy-two trade unionists were assassinated in Colombia, out of 136 killed globally. That same year, 244 Colombian union members received death threats, in addition to forced displacement, violent intimidation, arbitrary detention, kidnapping, harassment, and torture. Witnesses in Colombia have linked U.S. corporations to violence against unionists, who have initiated lawsuits against such U.S. companies as Coca-Cola, Chiquita Brands, and Drummond Coal.<sup>13</sup> These forms of violence not only victimize workers, but families and entire communities.

The agreement also poses major threats to the rights of indigenous and Afro-Colombian groups, particularly around issues of land control.<sup>14</sup> Afro-Colombians, 30 percent of Colombia’s population, began to settle in free-towns as escaped slaves by the year 1600. They settled in isolated territories of the Pacific and Caribbean coasts—considered undesirable at the time—further populating them after winning liberation in the 1860s. Legally, their right to their collectively titled lands is recognized, but it is ineffectively enforced. In recent years, the value of this land's vast natural resources has become apparent to multinational companies, which, through dubious or outright illegal means, take possession of the land. Some of the most bio-diverse, old growth forests in the world are found in Afro-Colombian territories. But since 1997, they are being forcibly seized, clear-cut of centuries-old hardwoods, and cultivated into large-scale plantations of African palm for the production of palm oil for biofuel. Afro-Colombians are dispossessed of the lands that they have cared for and held for hundreds of years, and irreplaceable biodiversity is destroyed. The Free Trade Agreement privileging multinational companies will intensify this violence and destruction.

The Free Trade Agreement limits itself to demanding that Colombia comply with its own very lax environmental laws, which have been aggressively weakened in recent years. Moreover, the agreement's stipulations override the democratic processes of both the United States and Colombia. With corporations permitted to sue for damages when local regulations and laws are considered to diminish their profits, either nation might be required to ignore its own sovereign laws and even provisions of its constitution. Only those who possess money and power benefit under this current model of trade: international corporations and government elites.

Perhaps the most alarming aspect of this particular agreement is the ongoing collusion between the administration of President Alvaro Uribe and the criminal apparatus in Colombia. Collaboration between paramilitary groups, narco-traffickers, the Colombian military, and the political establishment has been extensive, as has been demonstrated in recent months by the arrests of members of the Colombian Congress and President Uribe's cabinet.<sup>15</sup> Ratification of a trade agreement with Colombia will send a clear signal that the United States is willing to support a government linked with narco-traffickers and human rights abusers.

3. Justice and Peace Law: Needs a Reassessment

The government of President Alvaro Uribe has attempted to address the injustices committed by the paramilitary forces by enacting the Justice and Peace Law in 2006. This law creates a legal framework for the demobilization of armed paramilitary groups within the country, and large numbers have taken part. However, the framework has been widely criticized by international human rights groups because, after disarming paramilitary personnel, it fails to ensure that they do not rearm themselves.

There is evidence that paramilitary leaders continue their involvement in narco-trafficking from their places of confinement. They also control armed groups with new names composed of the same former members. The Justice and Peace Law created for the paramilitary demobilization process leaves intact the structures of these armed criminal groups that have caused so much violence.<sup>16</sup> It does not guarantee reparations to the victims who continue to suffer persecution and assassinations when they dare to denounce the crimes committed against them.

4. Conclusion

As Christians we are called to respond to injustices, wherever they may occur: healing the sick, feeding the poor, denouncing injustice, and ministering to those in need are values set before us in the teaching and actions of Jesus Christ (Refer to Mt. 25:31–40, NRSV and the Book of Order, G-3.0300c(3)). Therefore, while it is fitting that we recommit to assist beleaguered Colombia, now more than ever it is important that we work with the religious, political, and social networks within our own country to contribute to a future that is just and fair for all of Colombia's citizens. The World Mission's South America Office, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, and the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship are three resources available to the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) who want to join with our sisters and brothers in Colombia as they work to end the patterns of internal violence that are tearing this country apart.

Finally, as stated in the introduction of this report, the World Mission's ministry areas and the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, in consultation with the Office of the General Assembly and other entities of the General Assembly Council, are available to help the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in exploring ways to respond effectively to human violations around the world. Some of these concerns may be similar to the human rights violations occurring in Colombia—such as the paramilitary violations in the Philippines. Some may be as complex as the ongoing ethnic conflicts taking place in parts of the African continent. Others may be as enduring as the struggle to achieve lasting peace with justice in the Middle East. Regardless of the human rights issue, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is committed to “sharing with Christ in the establishing of his just, peaceable, and loving rule in the world” (Book of Order, G-3.0300c(3)(e)).

Item 11-19

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the Commitment to Peacemaking:

1. Commends those sessions, presbyteries, synods, and other entities that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”

2. Recognizes that the office of the Stated Clerk sends a certificate of commendation to the stated clerk of the presbytery in which the congregation is located for presentation at a stated meeting of presbytery for those sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”
3. Requests stated clerks of presbyteries who receive the certificates for sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” to present them at a stated meeting of presbytery in such a way as to adequately commend the congregation for this achievement.
4. Urges presbyteries to find ways to share and celebrate the experiences of congregations where sessions have adopted and implemented the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”
5. Urges presbyteries and synods also to consider adopting the “Commitment to Peacemaking” in forms appropriate to those governing bodies and commends those governing bodies that have done so.
6. Commends the sixty-four presbyteries and six synods that have 50 percent or more of their congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”
7. Commends the five presbyteries that have 75 percent or more of their congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”
8. Urges peacemaking committees of the presbyteries to contact the sessions in their presbytery that have not adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” to express the importance of this commitment and to urge their adoption of it.
9. Recognizing that the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program maintains a list of those sessions, presbyteries, synods, and other entities that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” in order to serve them in their peacemaking efforts, requests that a report be made to the 219th General Assembly (2010) on the number of sessions that have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”
10. Requests the 218th General Assembly (2008) to commend publicly those presbyteries that have actively incorporated peacemaking into their ministry; including acknowledging and supporting those congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking.”
11. As requested by the 217th General Assembly (2006), the 218th General Assembly (2008) honors those presbyteries that have reached 50 percent or more of their congregations whose sessions have adopted the “Commitment to Peacemaking” since the 217th General Assembly (2006).

Rationale

The “Commitment to Peacemaking” equips Presbyterians as they seek to implement the Mission Work Plan justice and compassion goal, “Advocate for peace and nonviolence in accord with General Assembly policy and direction, and aid other governing bodies in peacemaking efforts.”

As of February 5, 2008, 4,514 congregations have made the “Commitment to Peacemaking.” Additionally three presbyteries have made the “Commitment to Peacemaking” since the 217th General Assembly (2006). This information will be updated and reported to the 218th General Assembly (2008) Assembly Committee on Peacemaking and International Issues.

On Ending the War in Iraq—From the Presbytery of Heartland.

The Presbytery of Heartland overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Call upon individual Presbyterians, member congregations, and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at all levels urgently to raise its voice for peace.

2. Reaffirm the 216th General Assembly (2004)'s call for the church to express its pastoral concern for and offer pastoral care to members of the United States armed forces serving their country in the war in Iraq and their families as well as for veterans of the war who have returned home (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 864).

3. Direct the various mission program agencies engaged in relief efforts in Iraq to continue and expand the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s commitment, in cooperation with our ecumenical partners, to ministries that address human needs in Iraq caused by the war and long-term development efforts to assist in the rebuilding of the country.

4. Call upon the United States government to develop and implement a lasting peaceful solution and reaffirms the 216th General Assembly (2004)'s call for the United States government to engage with the international community through the United Nations and other international agencies to cooperate with the government of Iraq in providing security, peacekeeping forces, and funding for the rebuilding of the country (Ibid, p. 865).

5. Direct the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through its Washington Office and all other means available, to advocate with the United States government for a lasting peace and for engagement with the international community to support the government of Iraq, providing resources for peacekeeping and long-term development needs.

Rationale

God is constantly giving us opportunities to define who we are as individuals and collectively as Presbyterians. As the people of God and the followers of Christ, our position needs to reflect what has been taught.

For God so loved the world, that [God] gave [the] only Son, so that everyone who believes in him may not perish but have eternal life. [For] God did not send the Son into the world to condemn the world, but in order that the world might be saved through him. (John 3:16–17)

The key aspect for this situation is that God loves the whole world and God sent God's son to give God's message to the whole world. (John 3:16–17) We need to take a worldview. Even on a practical basis, an isolationist position is not feasible. Every day we see the evidence of life intertwined with countries throughout the world. Dealing with the situation in the Middle East and Iraq in particular is an opportunity to define us as followers of Christ. The Presbytery of Heartland believes that as God cares about those people so we also are to care about them.

“On that day you will know that I am in my Father, and you in me, and I in you” (John 14:20).

Christ teaches us unity: unity with Christ, the Father, and humanity. The unity of the church is also expressed on numerous occasions by Paul. It is not too presumptuous to believe this speaks of a desire by God for the oneness of all people. On that basis, all the acts of love, compassion, hope, justice, and peace that Christ taught us should be extended to all those around the world. This includes those who do not confess Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior.

“By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another” (John 13:35). “This is my commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you” (John 15:12).

What is the greatest expression of our love to others as Christ's disciples? Although that may be difficult to describe in this situation, we do know what Jesus taught. Clearly it is not to abandon people to chaos, terrorism, hatred, and civil war. If we really love our neighbors as ourselves, then we should stand with them in their time of trial, come to their defense when their lives are threatened, intercede to strive for peace, and support their efforts to attain freedom.

Overtures sometimes deceive us into thinking that the proclamation of words completes our responsibility. By choosing to get involved in this, we must go forward and take a stand to support those who are striving for peace even if the form of that peace would not be the one of our choosing. We may not have the information or expertise within the Presbytery of Heartland or possibly even the General Assembly to determine viable solutions. Therefore, we put forth our hope and prayers for those whom we believe to be accountable to solve the problem.

Therefore, Heartland Presbytery commends to the church:

—Starting a massive prayer effort for peace in Iraq;

—Studying all General Assembly actions and educational materials concerning peacemaking; and —Working within ecumenical efforts to develop creative solutions for world peacekeeping.

Item 11-21

[The assembly answered Item 11-21 by the action taken on Item 11-18. See pp. 45, 47.]

On Peacemaking in Colombia—From the Presbytery of Chicago.

The Presbytery of Chicago requests that the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

1. Urge the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program to continue to educate the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) about the importance of supporting Presbyterians and other churches in working for peace and for the displaced, the victims of violence, and the poor and dispossessed in Colombia.
2. Affirm and further encourage the work of the Accompaniment Program of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in Colombia, which lends protection to displaced communities and threatened leaders and allows us to walk together with the Presbyterian Church of Colombia in defense of human rights and in search of justice for the victims of violence and poverty.
3. Call upon individual congregations, presbyteries, synods, and entities of the General Assembly to advocate, establish, and strengthen partnerships with the Presbyterians of Colombia and with ecumenical organizations that work for the victims of violence and in search of peace.
4. Encourage Presbyterians to join church-sponsored study tours in order to familiarize themselves with the problems and possibilities inherent within Colombian society and to support the ministries of the churches and communities seeking peace.
5. Direct the World Missions ministry area to continue to work with Presbyterians and other ecumenical bodies to address the social, health, economic, and educational issues inherent to the armed conflict in Colombia.
6. Direct the Stated Clerk to write to the members of Congress of the United States of America, thanking them for the changes to Plan Colombia for 2008, which reduce military aid for fumigations and increase funds for humanitarian aid, justice, and social development; and insisting on the need to redirect all military aid and funding for fumigation funding to strengthening the Colombian judicial system and development programs for the poor and for victims of the violence.
7. Direct the Stated Clerk to write to the members of Congress of the United States of America, urging them not to ratify the Free Trade Agreement with Colombia, which would have grave consequences for workers, indigenous and Afro-Colombian populations, and the environment.
8. Direct the Presbyterian Washington Office (PWO) to continue to educate the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and their representatives in the Congress of the United States of America about the effects of U.S. legislation on the lives of individual Colombian citizens with particular emphasis on Plan Colombia and the Free Trade Agreement.
9. Direct the Presbyterian United Nations Office (PUNO) to continue to represent the concerns of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the committees and delegates of the United Nations, regarding human rights violations, lack of care for the displaced, impunity, the need for a humanitarian agreement for the release of kidnapping victims, and the need to reach a dialogued solution to the armed conflict in Colombia.

Rationale

Plan Colombia

Colombia has been identified by the United States government as a key strategic ally in the Western Hemisphere. The foreign policy of the United States has a major impact on developments within that country. In the year 2000, Plan Colombia was developed by the Colombian and United States governments in an attempt to address major challenges: to eradicate the coca crops in order to reduce the flow of cocaine to the United States, and to seize control from the guerilla forces that controlled about 40 percent of Colombia's land mass. Plan Colombia has been financed by $5.4 billion from the United States,<sup>1</sup> distributed until this year with approximately 80 percent for military aid (which includes the coca eradication efforts) and 20 percent divided between alternative development, human rights programs, aid to displaced persons, and judicial reform.<sup>2</sup>

This well-intentioned plan has not resulted in any decrease in the cultivation of coca or the supply of cocaine<sup>3,4</sup> to the United States, and it has had unforeseen consequences. The practice of aerial fumigations intended to diminish coca cultivation has only caused ecological crisis and harm to civilians.<sup>5</sup> The conflict that Colombia has endured for nearly fifty years has intensified with the military aid provided by the United States: Paramilitary groups estimated to be responsible for 70 percent of human rights violations in the country established themselves with the support of large landholders and sectors of the armed forces.<sup>6</sup> Guerrilla groups have maintained their war tactics, with the FARC currently holding about fifty hostages, three of them citizens of the United States who worked for Plan Colombia.

Since the implementation of Plan Colombia, more than two million Colombians have been displaced from their homes, who when added to those previously displaced leave a total of nearly four million, giving Colombia the third-largest internally displaced population worldwide. The displaced seek refuge in slums that surround many of the major cities,<sup>7</sup> occasioning the greatest humanitarian crisis in the hemisphere, according to the United Nations.<sup>8</sup>

Free Trade Agreement

While the current appropriations for Plan Colombia enacted by the U.S. Congress for 2008 (56.6 percent military and police aid and 44.4 percent for humanitarian work, most of this shift due to the reduction of harmful aerial fumigation)<sup>9</sup> are a major improvement over previous versions, another problem is taking center stage—the potential for a United States/Colombia Free Trade Agreement. This free trade agreement has not been ratified due to pressure from religious, labor, and political organizations in the United States and Colombia. Colombia continues to be the most dangerous country in the world for trade unionists. In 2006 alone, 72 trade unionists were assassinated in Colombia, out of 136 killed globally. That same year, 244 Colombian union members received death threats, in addition to forced displacement, violent intimidation, arbitrary detention, kidnapping, harassment, and torture. Witnesses in Colombia have linked U.S. corporations to violence against unionists, who have initiated lawsuits against such U.S. companies as Coca-Cola, Chiquita Bananas, and Drummond Coal.<sup>10</sup> These forms of violence not only victimize workers, but families and entire communities.

The agreement also poses major threats to the rights of indigenous and Afro-Colombian groups, particularly around issues of land control. Afro-Colombians, 30 percent of Colombia's population, settled in palenque free-towns as escaped slaves in isolated mountain and coastal zones of the Pacific and Caribbean coasts—considered undesirable territories at the time—further populating them after winning liberation in the 1860s. Afro-Colombians make up 80–95 percent of the population in these regions. Legally, their right to their ancestral, collectively titled lands is recognized, but it is ineffectively enforced. Amid rapid globalization, the value of their territories' vast natural resources has become apparent to multinational companies that, through dubious or outright illegal means, take possession of the land. Some of the most bio-diverse, old-growth forests in the world are found in Afro-Colombian territories. But since 1997, they are being forcibly seized, clear-cut of irreplaceable centuries-old hardwoods, and cultivated into large-scale plantations of African palm for the production of palm oil for bio fuel, dispossessing Afro-Colombians of their territories, which they have had for 500 years. The Free Trade Agreement privileging multinational companies will sharply intensify this physical and economic violence, forced displacement, and natural resource depletion.

The Free Trade Agreement limits itself to demanding that Colombians comply with its own very lax environmental laws, which have been aggressively weakened in recent years. Moreover, the agreement's stipulations override the democratic processes of both the United States and Colombia. With corporations permitted to sue for damages when local regulations and laws are considered to diminish their profits, either nation might be required to ignore its own sovereign laws and even provisions of its constitution. Only those who possess money and power benefit under this current model of trade: international corporations and government elites.

Perhaps the most alarming aspect of this particular agreement is the ongoing collusion between the Uribe administration and the criminal apparatus in Colombia. Collaboration between paramilitary groups, narcotraffickers, the Colombian military, and the political establishment has been extensive, as has been demonstrated in recent months by the arrests of members of the Colombian Congress and President Uribe's cabinet. Ratification of a trade agreement with Colombia will send a clear signal that the United States is willing to support a government linked with narcotraffickers and human rights abusers.

Justice and Peace Law

The government of President Alvaro Uribe has attempted to address the injustices committed by the paramilitary forces by enacting the Justice and Peace Law in 2006. This law creates a legal framework for the demobilization of armed paramilitary groups within the country, and large numbers have taken part. However, the framework has been widely criticized by international human rights groups because, after disarming paramilitary personnel, it fails to ensure that they do not rearm themselves.

There is evidence that paramilitary leaders continue their involvement in narcotrafficking from their places of confinement. They also control armed groups with new names composed of the same former members. The Justice and Peace Law created for the paramilitary demobilization process leaves intact the structures of these illegal armed criminal groups that have caused so much violence.<sup>11</sup> It does not guarantee reparations to the victims who continue to suffer persecution and assassinations when they dare to denounce the crimes committed against them.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a longstanding relationship with Colombia. Early Presbyterian missionaries established schools that have educated generations of respected citizens. As a result of this effort, the Reformed University established by the Presbyterian Church of Colombia flourishes today as an important peace initiative and gives strong and vital witness to the words and work of Jesus Christ. This church has called on us for support in its ministries with the displaced and most impoverished communities. Its assembly has made declarations about the damages from Plan Colombia and the grave consequences that approval of a free trade agreement would have for broad sectors of Colombia's population. Pastors and members of the church frequently put themselves at risk and some have even been martyred in order to witness faithfully to the demands of the gospel by serving those most in need and the victims of the violence.<sup>12</sup>

The 210th, 213th, and 216th General Assemblies (1998, 2001, 2004) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have expressed our rejection of this cycle of violence. The Accompaniment Program has been formed, with teams from the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) giving bodily representation to our concern for the suffering of the Colombian people, and lending protection to threatened communities and a church that has been the victim of surveillance and threats to its leaders invested in working for human rights.

While it is fitting that we express appreciation for our past and present contributions to this beleaguered country, it is even more important that we work with the religious, political, and social networks within our own country to contribute to a future that is just and fair for all of Colombia's citizens.

As Christians we are required to respond to injustices, wherever they may occur: healing the sick, feeding the poor, denouncing injustice, and ministering to those in need are values set before us in the words and actions of Jesus Christ. Large numbers of Colombians suffer from injustices caused by the indifference and/or greed of their own government. This suffering is exacerbated by the well-meaning but often counterproductive policies of the United States. Let us support the work of Presbyterians in the United States and in Colombia who labor to create a more just society, according to the demands of the Gospel.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-21

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-21—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-21, overture from the Presbytery of Chicago, requests that the 218th General Assembly (2008) urge the members and entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to continue to work for peace and justice in Colombia.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Answer Item 11-21 by the action taken on Item 11-18 “Report on Human Rights in Colombia;” and
2. Commend the Presbytery of Chicago for its support of the peace efforts of the Presbyterian Church of Colombia.

Rationale

The recommendations contained in Item 11-21 and in Item 11-18 entitled, “Report on Human Rights in Colombia,” are consistent with current General Assembly policies on Colombia. Many of these policies are cited in the rationale sections of these documents. Both of these business items call on the members and entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to work to strengthen our partnerships with the Presbyterian Church of Colombia, and other ecumenical organizations working to end the horrendous human rights violations in this region. In addition, both of these business items call on the members and entities of the church to continue to communicate these human rights concerns to the appropriate officials serving in the U.S. Congress and the United Nations. Therefore, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the 218th General Assembly (2008) answer Item 11-21 by the action taken on the “Report on Human Rights in Colombia,” and commend the Presbytery of Chicago for its efforts to bring about peace in this region.

On Supporting Those Who Feel Called to Seek Status as Conscientious Objectors—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Approve the following policy:

The 218th General Assembly (2008) reaffirms the church’s position on the freedom of conscience, especially as it relates to a person’s status as a conscientious objector against participating in the armed services, (cf. the 215th General Assembly (2003) statement: On Strengthening Our Christian Peacemaking Vision and Witness in Wartime, Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 651).

2. Therefore, the 218th General Assembly (2008)

- a. Encourages the Peacemaking Program to produce and identify study guides and discernment materials for individuals, congregations, and presbyteries to help church members and their friends be able to articulate God’s calling on their lives in regard to participating in the armed forces, and war. Such materials will be made available on the denomination’s Website, with notice of its accessibility sent to every congregation and presbytery in the denomination.

- b. Encourages presbyteries to provide education opportunities for ministers, military chaplains, and sessions on how to fulfill their responsibility of educating young people about issues of faith, conscience, and war, including civic alternatives to serving the country through the armed forces.

- c. Encourages presbyteries and sessions to create a structure to document and support those who feel called to seek status as conscientious objectors to participation in the armed forces, or war. Active members of the church can now register with the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly for conscientious objector status, and certificates are sent to the church for their records and for the church member (G-5.0202) (2003 Statement—Minutes, 2003, Part I, p. 651, Recommendations 2, 3. Also found in “Presbyterians and Military Service—PDS #7027005035). Encourages the d. Directs the Stated Clerk of the PC(USA) to communicate the denominational stances and policies to members of the U.S. Administration, the Department of Defense, each branch of the armed forces, military chaplains, and others to include those Presbyterians who have discerned that they are conscientious objectors with all the rights and responsibilities of official conscientious objector status.

[Financial Implication: (2008): $0; (2009): $3,000; (2010): $0 [Mission]]

Rationale

The people of God, in various times and places, are called to be the voice of peace and nonviolence in a world of war and conflict, even in the hardest of times (Gen. 44:17, 1 Sam. 20:42, Esth. 8:3-8, Isa. 52:7, Mt. 25:31-46, Mk. 9:50, Jn. 14:27, Rom. 14:19, Gal. 5:22-23, Eph. 2:14-17, Heb. 12:14).

As followers of Christ, church members are called to be people of conscience (G-1.0301, G-1.0307). Presbyteries and congregations are called to fulfill their role as communities of discernment and reconciliation surrounding issues of calling, hunger, poverty, war, and violence (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.21-26, 9.31-32, 9.38, 9.43-.47, 9.53-.56) "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called the children of God" (Mt. 5:9) Broadening this ministry to baptized, but unconfirmed members and attending non-members of the church is a natural extension of our church's common pastoral ministry.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-22

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-22—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-22, from the Presbytery of San Francisco, overtures the General Assembly to ask congregations, presbyteries, and General Assembly programs to support members and friends of Presbyterian congregations who feel called to seek conscientious objector status and to make it possible for non-confirmed baptized members and attending nonmembers of the congregation to register their conscientious objector status with the Stated Clerk.

"2. Therefore, the 218th General Assembly (2008)

At the present time, almost all male U.S. citizens regardless of where they live, and male immigrant aliens residing in the U.S., are required to be registered with Selective Service if they are at least 18 years old but are not yet 26 years old. See www.sss.gov/must.htm for information on who must register.

There is no draft in the United States at the present time. The draft can be reinstated at any time by an act of Congress. If Congress does authorize a draft, the first draftees may be inducted as quickly as within two weeks following the authorization. Therefore, it is important that those who discern themselves to be conscientious objectors begin documenting their position before a draft is authorized.

Item 11-23

On Divestment from Caterpillar, Inc., and Motorola, Inc., for Profiting from the Israeli Military Occupation of Palestinian Territories—From the Presbytery of San Francisco.

The Presbytery of San Francisco respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to instruct MRTI to report to the General Assembly Council on the compliance, or lack thereof, by the Caterpillar and Motorola corporations with regard to General Assembly guidelines on responsible investment. In accordance with previous resolutions approved by the General Assembly in 2004 (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 64–66) and 2006, the General Assembly Council is authorized and encouraged to act on this information, and as it deems appropriate, implement divestment procedures.

Rationale

1. Current Status of Corporate Engagement

Since the 216th General Assembly (2004), the committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) has implemented a process of principled corporate engagement with Caterpillar, Inc., Motorola, Inc., and several other corporations that are profiting from Israel’s military occupation of the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem and contributing to the escalating humanitarian crisis among Palestinians. This process of corporate engagement has thus far failed to produce any changes in the military-related activities of these corporations in the Occupied Territories.

2. Resolutions On Divestment: 2004, 2006

The 216th General Assembly (2004) approved an alternate resolution to an overture on the Geneva Accords involving Israel and Palestine (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 64–66), and urged both parties to revive negotiations toward a just and peaceful resolution of the dispute that would result in two states: an Israel within safe and secure borders, and an economically and geographically viable Palestine within safe and secure borders. The assembly also directed MRTI to initiate a process of phased, selective divestment of companies doing business in Israel that contribute to violence and/or profit from the occupation of territory in the West Bank. The MRTI developed a set of six criteria focused on General Assembly concerns about violence against Palestinians and Israelis alike, the occupation, Israeli settlements in the occupied territories, and the Separation Barrier. Five companies were identified for engagement according to the criteria: Caterpillar, Citigroup, ITT Industries, Motorola, and United Technologies.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) said that investments in companies doing business in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem and the West Bank, should be only in companies engaged in peaceful pursuits. The General Assembly also said that the customary MRTI process of corporate engagement is the proper vehicle for determining whether or not a company is involved in peaceful pursuits (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 944–45).—MRTI, Priority Issues Work Plan, 2006–2007

Corporate engagement is the process whereby the church researches the companies, determines their compliance with its standards, and then pressures them to change. Divestment refers to the ultimate termination of investments from the targeted corporations, and is the next step in the process of morally responsible investment to be implemented when and if engagement fails to produce positive change.

3. Past Resolutions on Israel and Palestine

Presbyterian General Assemblies have repeatedly addressed issues involving Israel and Palestine, in 1948, 1967, 1974, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1987, 1988, 1990, 1992, 1995, 1997, 1998, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, and 2006.

“The consistent Presbyterian position has been to affirm the right of Israel to exist as a sovereign state within secure, internationally recognized borders and the right of the Palestinians to self-determination, including the right to the establishment of a neighboring independent, sovereign state, toward the end of establishing a just and durable peace.”—A Brief Summary of General Assembly Statements, February 2005

“In statements of successive assemblies since 1967, the General Assembly has decried the cycle of escalating violence—carried out both by Palestinians and Israelis—which is rooted in Israel’s continued occupation of Palestinian territories. Presbyterians have continued to be concerned about the loss of so many innocent lives of Israelis and Palestinians as evidenced by the Resolution on the Middle East, approved in 1997, and the Resolution on Israel and Palestine: End the Occupation Now, approved in 2003.”—The Social Justice Actions of the 216th General Assembly 2004.

4. MRTI Mission Guidelines/Divestment Criteria

“The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) believes that church investment is more than a practical question. It is also ‘an instrument of mission and includes theological, social and economic considerations.’ This belief flows from our understanding of the stewardship of God’s resources entrusted to the church. Thus, ‘we confess that the Lord is really the acknowledged Master of our entire life—moral, physical and material.’”—MRTI, A Christian Call to Faith-Based Investing

“The General Assembly of the PC(USA) urges divestment and/or proscription of some corporations due to their involvement in military-related production, tobacco, or human rights violations. This policy is an outgrowth of the General Assembly’s adoption of Peacemaking: A Believer’s Calling, which asked the entire church to review its witness and seek additional ways to promote peacemaking.”—MRTI, 2007 G.A. Divestment List

“As a result of this policy, investments would be used to promote the church’s mission goals in society, as well as to bring integrity to the church’s ethical and moral values as they were applied to the policies and values of the private sector.”—William Somplansky-Jarman, The Presbyterian Church As Investor

5. The Israeli Occupation and Related Human Rights Violations

Israel routinely engages in gross patterns of human rights violations in its military occupation of the Palestinian West Bank, East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip. The killing and injuring of civilians, torture, extrajudicial assassinations, the deliberate destruction of civilian infrastructure, acts of collective punishment, and economic warfare are but a few examples of Israel's human rights violations. Below are some of the elements of the "matrix of control" (ICAHN) that Israel uses to dominate, humiliate, impoverish, and transfer Palestinians.

The Security/Separation/Apartheid/Annexation Wall/Fence/Barrier: Although the officially stated purpose for the wall is security for Israel, only 11 percent of the structure is actually located on the pre-1967 border or "Green Line," the internationally recognized boundary between Israel and the West Bank. The other 89 percent cuts deep into the West Bank, effectively annexing some of the most fertile and productive Palestinian land. Fourteen percent of West Bank lies between the border and the wall, land that is currently home for more than 274,000 Palestinians living in closed enclaves surrounded by the wall. Another 400,000 Palestinians live on one side of the wall while their farms, jobs, and services are on the other side. The effect is to cripple the Palestinian economy, prevent economic development and foreign investment, and hobble the ability of the Palestinians to maintain security or govern their territories. The International Court of Justice declared the wall illegal in July 2004, and the PC(USA) has joined the overwhelming international community calling for the immediate removal of the barrier from Palestinian land.

Checkpoints: According to the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, 528 checkpoints and roadblocks have been recorded in the West Bank, choking its roads every few miles. Israel's daily Haaretz newspaper puts the figure even higher: 75 permanently manned checkpoints, some 150 mobile checkpoints, and more than 400 places where roads have been blocked by obstacles.

"As a result, moving goods and people from one place to the next in the West Bank has become a nightmare of logistics and costly delays. At the checkpoints, food spoils, patients die, and children are prevented from reaching their schools. The World Bank blames the checkpoints and roadblocks for strangling the Palestinian economy."—Jonathan Cook, "Daily Indignities and Humiliations: Watching the Checkpoints," Counterpunch, Feb. 22, 2007.

One of the main purposes of the policy to restrict Palestinian movement is to protect Israeli settlers. Given that the settlements are illegal, the policy only aggravates the situation: it comprehensively and disproportionately impedes the freedom of movement of an entire population in order to perpetuate an illegal policy. If the restrictions were intended to prevent attacks inside Israel, and not in the settlements, the policy would still be illegal because it is sweeping and disproportionate, giving it a semblance of collective punishment which is forbidden.

Furthermore, Israel's policy is based on the assumption that every single Palestinian is a security threat, thereby justifying restrictions on his or her freedom of movement. This assumption is racist and leads to the sweeping violation of the human rights of an entire population on the basis of national origin. As such, the policy flagrantly violates international law. —B'Tselem, The Israeli Information Center for Human Rights in the Occupied Territories

"Checkpoints serve to humiliate Palestinians and create feelings of deep hostility towards Israel ... In this respect they resemble the 'pass laws' of apartheid South Africa, which required black South Africans to demonstrate permission to travel or reside anywhere in South Africa."—John Dugard, United Nations, Report of the Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in the Palestinian Territories Occupied Since 1967

Israeli settlements: Under Article 49 of the 4th Geneva Convention, Israel is prohibited from establishing settlements: "The Occupying Power shall not transfer parts of its own civilian population into territories it occupies."

During the Oslo negotiations, when the status of the occupied territories was supposedly being negotiated, Israel expropriated 200 square kilometers of farm and pasture land for its own exclusive settlements and infrastructure. Since 1967, Israel has declared 73 percent of the West Bank "state lands," thus annulling Palestinian deeds going back generations. This unilateral and non-negotiated policy set the stage for massive expropriations for settlements, military facilities, highways and bypass roads, industrial areas, closed military areas, and nature reserves.

Since 1967, Israel has established at least 214 settlements in the West Bank, and another 18 in the Gaza Strip. During the Oslo negotiations, the settler population doubled. Thirty new settlements were established, including entire cities such as Kiryat Sefer and Tel Zion. As of May 2002, more than 400,000 Israelis lived beyond the "Green Line": 200,000 in the West Bank, and another 200,000 in East Jerusalem. Israel has approved almost 20,000 new homes in illegal Jewish settlements in the West Bank during the past seven years. In defiance of the current "Roadmap Towards Peace," plans have resumed for further settlement expansion in East Jerusalem and elsewhere in the West Bank. —Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions

House demolitions: Since 1967, 18,000 Palestinian homes have been demolished in the occupied territories, including East Jerusalem. The majority of house demolitions are conducted for "administrative" reasons and are generally because the house was built without a permit. However, permits are almost impossible to obtain by Palestinians living under occupation. Israel has denied 94 percent of Palestinian building permit requests over the last seven years, granting only ninety-one requests.

More than 628 Palestinian homes have been demolished during the second Intifada as collective punishment and “deterrence” affecting families of people known or suspected of involvement in attacks on Israeli civilians. On average, twelve innocent people lose their home for every person “punished” for a security offense—and in half of the cases the occupants had nothing whatsoever to do with the acts in question. The Israeli government insists its aim is to “deter” potential terrorists, although 79 percent of the suspected offenders were either dead or in detention at the time of the demolition.

Under the Fourth Geneva Convention, Occupying Powers are prohibited from destroying property or employing collective punishment. Article 53 reads: “Any destruction by the Occupying Power of real or personal property belonging individually or collectively to private persons... is prohibited.” Under this provision the practice of demolishing Palestinian houses is banned, as is the wholesale destruction of the Palestinian infrastructure.—Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions

Land and Water expropriation: Israeli settlers and the State of Israel have taken the richest Palestinian agricultural land. Even the Jordan River Valley, well within the West Bank, is used primarily for Israeli farming enterprises. Israelis control all the aquifers that supply water to Palestinian lands. Palestinians are charged four times more for potable water than Israeli settlers.

Destruction of fruit orchards and olive groves: The olive tree is a primary source of food and income for Palestinian farmers. Since 1967, more than one million Palestinian olive trees have been uprooted or cut down by the Israeli military and settlers.

Ethnic cleansing: As a direct result of the occupation, the livelihood of many Palestinians has been destroyed and they are thus expelled from their historic homelands. As documented by the highly respected Israeli human rights organization, B’Tselem, in a case study of the city of Hebron, “Israel has brought about over the years the expulsion of thousands of Palestinians residents and merchants from the center of the city. The ‘separation policy,’ constitutes, therefore, a policy of expulsion of Palestinians. The army acts according to similar principles throughout the West Bank.”

The “two-state solution” advocated repeatedly by past General Assembly resolutions is most seriously threatened by the ongoing construction of Israeli settlements and bypass roads: without a halt to such construction, a two-state solution may be impossible to implement. Indeed, a growing number of academics and intellectuals throughout the world argue that Israel will never allow the Palestinians to have a viable state and Palestinians should instead focus their efforts on obtaining equal rights as Israeli citizens.

6. Corporate Complicity

Caterpillar: The company that best exemplifies the interest of U.S. corporations in the occupation and the complete refusal to address human rights concerns in the region is Caterpillar. The most destructive weapon of the occupation may not be an F-16 or helicopter gunship, but rather an armor-plated D-9 or D-11 bulldozer. In 2001, Israeli Defense Minister Shaul Mofaz declared, “The D-9 is a strategic weapon here.” The Israeli military adds its own armaments, including machine-gun mounts, grenade launchers, and bulletproof windows, bringing the machine’s weight up to approximately 60 tons.

These are the machines that have demolished thousands of homes, uprooted countless olive trees, and carved gaping holes in roads, making them impassable. Even when used in the construction of settlement housing or bypass roads, CAT equipment is being used daily in violations of international law, playing a central role in clearing Palestinian agricultural land for the 450-mile-long Separation Barrier.

Article 147 of the Fourth Geneva Convention deems the “extensive destruction and appropriation of property carried out unlawfully and wantonly” to be a war crime. The sale of Caterpillar bulldozers to the Israeli military is subject to the U.S. Arms Export Control Act, which prohibits the use of U.S. made machinery or weapons against a civilian population.

Despite years of corporate engagement by investors, Caterpillar is expanding its role in the occupation by its joint venture with InRob Tech. Ltd. to develop unmanned remote-controlled bulldozers for Israel.—US Campaign to End the Occupation

Motorola: Motorola Israel—a fully owned subsidiary of Motorola Incorporated—produces the 980 Low Altitude Proximity Fuse for the MK-80 series of high explosive bombs. On July 30, 2006, during its war on Lebanon, the Israeli Air Force dropped an MK-84 high-explosive bomb on an apartment building in Qana, Lebanon, killing at least twenty-eight civilians, many of whom were children.

The $100 million contract used to develop and supply the “Mountain Rose” secure cell phone communication system to the Israeli military directly enhances the coordination and monitoring capabilities of the occupying forces in their illegal military operations in the Palestinian territories.

Motorola Israel supplies Israel with the Wide Area Surveillance System (WAAS) to monitor and maintain the illegal wall/fence barrier it has constructed in violation of the July 2004 International Court of Justice (ICJ) advisory opinion.

Motorola Incorporated set up advanced radar detection devices and thermal cameras in forty-seven Israeli settlements. According to the Fourth Geneva Convention, Article 49, it is considered a war crime for an occupying power to transfer its civilian population into an occupied territory. The Motorola WASS equipment helps entrench Israeli settlers on expropriated Palestinian territory, in direct violation of international law.—US Campaign to End the Occupation

7. PC(USA) Relations with the Jewish Community

Since the overwhelming approval of the 2004 “Divestment Resolution,” the PC(USA) has experienced a significant backlash in the form of pressure and public criticism from certain pro-Israel organizations, such as the Anti-Defamation League, the American Jewish Council, and others, with accusations of anti-Semitism and unfair bias against Israel. We join with Israelis and Palestinians and most of the world in condemnation of targeting of civilian populations.

However, many pro-peace Jewish and interfaith groups, including Jewish Voice for Peace, the American Friends Service Committee, Tikkun, the U.S. Campaign to End the Israeli Occupation, and the Israel/Palestine Mission Network of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) have actively supported the church’s position. The New York City-based Jews Against the Occupation wrote in a letter to the PC(USA) that divestment was “an important step forward for peace and justice in Israel and Palestine.”

“Economic sanctions against Israel are not invoked against Israel per se, but against Israel until the occupation ends. With this proviso it is Israel’s policy of occupation that is targeted, its status as an occupying power, not Israel itself.”—Dr. Jeff Halper, an American-Israeli Jew and director, Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions (ICAHD)

8. Precedent for Divestment: South Africa

No less an authority on human rights than Anglican Archbishop Desmond Tutu has said that he believes the Israeli government is in some respects worse than the South African apartheid government. At an October 2007 conference in Boston, the South African Nobel Peace Prize laureate cited what he described as the Israeli government’s use of “collective punishment” of Palestinians, and criticized the Israeli government for brutality and what he described as “gross violations of human rights.”

Tutu, who has condemned suicide terrorism against Israel and recognized the Jewish state’s right to secure boundaries, and was even honored in 2003 by Yeshiva University’s law school with an award for promoting world peace, also wrote an op-ed in the Boston Globe in which he stated:

What do I see and hear in the Holy Land? Some people cannot move freely from one place to another. A wall separates them from their families and from their incomes. They cannot tend to their gardens at home or to their lessons at school. They are arbitrarily demeaned at checkpoints and unnecessarily beleaguered by capricious applications of bureaucratic red tape. I grieve for the damage being done daily to people’s souls and bodies. I have to tell the truth: I am reminded of the yoke of oppression that was once our burden in South Africa.

While his comments attracted substantial criticism from some within the Jewish community, Abraham Foxman, national director of the Anti-Defamation League, had the following reaction: “Tutu has certainly been an outspoken, sometimes very harsh critic of Israel and Israeli policies, but certainly is not an anti-Semite and should not be so characterized.”

Within this context, it is important to remember the history of past General Assembly actions: in 1985, MRTI proposed a policy of phased, selective divestment from corporations doing business in South Africa. The purpose of this approach was to keep the focus on the corporations involved, to permit other shareholder strategies to bear fruit if possible, and to make more feasible a “sustained and widening strategy of interpretation and education of church members and the general public.” The policy also acknowledged that total divestment might be impossible for large portfolios, and that the fiduciary responsibility of trustees might limit such actions as well. Clearly, some divestment was feasible, and MRTI felt that a phased, selective approach would permit the church to test whatever limits might exist while proceeding with an approach that promised more public and corporate impact.

“The policy named four companies that year as the first to be divested, and in subsequent years through 1991, twelve others were added to the divestment list. As companies pulled out of South Africa they were removed from the list, and finally, after apartheid was ended in 1993, the policy was rescinded and all remaining companies were removed from the divestment list.”—William Somplansky-Jarman, The Presbyterian Church as Investor

Archbishop Tutu concludes: “If Apartheid ended, so can the Occupation. But the moral force and international pressure will have to be just as determined. The current divestment effort is the first, though certainly not the only, necessary move in that direction.”

9. Peacemaking: A Believer's Calling

We live in a time of kairos when humanity stands on the border of a promised time, when God's people are summoned to obedience and faithfulness to preserve God's creation, to stand with the poor and oppressed everywhere, and to stand together as the people of the earth;
 when with confession and with humility we repent of our blindness to the division and war in our own hearts and in our own land, our obsession with money and our pursuit of power, our irrational belief in security through weaponry, and our worship of secular gods.

We are called to be obedient to Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, who loves the whole world and who invites us to be stewards of the earth and servants of his people, to be co-workers in the new Creation.

Let us be peacemakers.

Let us be called the children of God, speaking boldly with moral conviction to the nation and to the world, building, with God's grace, a new moral order in the world community; and acting now for world peace, an enterprise of justice, an outcome of love.

10. Conclusion

"Enough is enough. No more words without deeds. It is time for action." This was the message that Christians in Palestine and Israel delivered to the WCC International Peace Conference "Churches Together for Peace and Justice in the Middle East" held in Amman, Jordan, in June 2007. "Risk the curses and abuse that will be aimed at you and stand in solidarity with us and with our Palestinian brothers and sisters of all faiths...."

Our church provided great hope to many Christians, Jews, and Muslims in the Middle East when we began a process of corporate engagement with American companies profiting from the occupation. After four years, corporate engagement with Caterpillar and Motorola has produced no results. If we fail to take the next step of actual divestment, we lose credibility and dash the hopes of those who languish under Israel's oppressive military occupation. Now is the time to divest from these two companies.

Costly Lessons of the Iraq War: Resolution with Recommendations and Study Paper—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the resolution and recommendations, "Costly Lessons of the Iraq War," and receive the study paper, "To Repent, Restore, Rebuild, and Reconcile."

Resolution: Costly Lessons of the Iraq War

Introduction

This resolution is accompanied by the study paper, “To Repent, Restore, Rebuild, and Reconcile.” This resolution summarizes the theological grounding and position of the church, raises open questions about important matters of context, puts forward “lessons learned” from the Iraq conflict, and makes recommendations for both pastoral and prophetic response. The sheer number of deaths (estimates from 100,000–1,000,000 Iraqi; 4,250 U.S. combat; 307 allied coalition; 1,000 U.S. contractor, est.), an unknown number of civilians and approximately 29,000 U.S. wounded, the destruction of the physical, cultural, and civic bases of Iraqi society, and vast expenditure of U.S. funds (approximately $600 billion, not counting long term health and reconstruction costs and relatively limited Coalition funds), are each grievous moral challenges.<sup>1</sup> With the additional losses to U.S. national purpose, credibility, and reputation, all make it impossible for the church to keep silent. At the same time, recognizing that the tragic pattern of military intervention going back well before Vietnam has continued in the post-Cold War period, the recommendations section includes several long-range proposals for Presbyterian and ecumenical peacemaking witness.

The pursuit of “social righteousness” inevitably calls the church to serve as conscience in society. Just as the Holy Spirit speaks to our moral sense, convicting us of sin and drawing us to the good, so the example and witness of the church point to the way of Christ. That path of discipleship is rooted in salvation, demonstrated in love, and experienced as fullness of life. In communities of any size, that way of love is expressed in justice, and justice itself is a linchpin of peace. In the Reformed tradition, the non-violent peace of Jesus does not rule out all protective uses of force, but Jesus’ reign stands against all forms of domination. In Gethsemane, Jesus warns that those who live by the sword will die by it; in Colossians, the victory of the cross and resurrection reveals the “powers” or false gods of the world to be exposed and disarmed.

The church’s position as described below is neither pursuit of an unclear victory (“stay the course”) nor immediate withdrawal (“cut and run.”) As the study document affirms, even though the U.S. invasion was effected without adequate planning or international legitimacy, the U.S. should not withdraw in the same unilateral manner, without taking into account its continuing moral responsibilities for the condition of Iraq. Nor, above all, should the United States respond to the ironic strengthening of Iranian and Shiite influence in Iraq and elsewhere by another unilateral bombing or invasion, especially since the 2007 National Intelligence Estimate revealed the absence of an ongoing nuclear weapons program in Iran.

The position here proposed may be termed: Repent, Restore, Rebuild, and Reconcile. These goals are:

1. To repent of engaging in an unnecessary war, to express remorse for the suffering, and to change the disposition to exercise power without understanding the lasting effects of coercion on both occupying and occupied peoples.
2. To restore responsibility for sovereignty and security to Iraqi civil authorities bolstered as necessary by international troops under UN auspices, with U.S.-built bases contributed to the multilateral effort and control.
3. To rebuild a battered Iraq through serious, well-managed, and accountable foreign aid, including massive healthcare assistance for the wounded and maimed.
4. To reconcile political, ethnic, and religious groups through diplomatic and peace-building measures based in truth-seeking, mutual respect, and peace with neighbors, including the supervised return of as many as three million refugees from Syria, Jordan, and other area countries and two million who have been internally displaced.

Lessons from the Second Iraq War (March 20, 2003–)

In Luke 14:25ff, Jesus gives various images of the need to count the cost: in following Jesus himself, but also in building a tower or going to war, lest one not have the resources to complete the task. Jesus recommends that an outnumbered king sue for peace, and then changes images to suggest giving up everything to be a disciple. This is realism combined with a framework of repentance. In its prophetic work, the Church is not only called to tally and mourn the dead, Iraqi as well as American and British, soldier and civilian, terrorist and contractor. The church is also called to help society to do the moral math about the basic effectiveness of war and of relying on overwhelming military force and massive weapons sales to one-party regimes as the basis for a foreign policy. Drawing on both Christian ethical and pragmatic judgments, we draw these conclusions for future deliberation by General Assemblies, ecumenical and public bodies:

1. The consequences of the initiation of the second Iraq war by the Executive branch of the United States government reaffirm the Constitution’s wisdom of requiring that Congress declare war, and that only after the Just War/Just Peace criteria of just cause, legitimate authority, proportionality, protection of noncombatants, likelihood of greater peace and justice, and proactively exhausting all alternatives have been met. Preventive or preemptive wars violate international law and Just War principles, particularly the criterion of “last resort,” as they involve the unilateral choice of one nation or coalition to invade another before a last resort of defensive necessity is established.<sup>2</sup>

2. The Christian church, by distinguishing patriotism from nationalism, and refusing to be stampeded through fear of terror, thereby prevents the false demonization of other societies and the false sanctification of our own, defends the civil liberties guaranteed by the Bill of Rights, and maintains its own faithful resistance to idolatry and tyranny.

3. Unless United Nations peacekeeping forces are strengthened, or the UN authorizes humanitarian intervention, there can be no legitimate occupation, exploitation of resources by private companies, or exemption of military and contractors from civil or human rights law.

4. Democratic institutions cannot be imposed by violence on any people or nation. Democracy is not simply a matter of freedom but of “covenantal responsibility” based in equality before law and cannot be sustained in conditions of great inequality of power or wealth or physical security.

5. War requires a national consensus and can never be a regular act of governance. Without shared sacrifice through realistic taxation and other means, the human costs of war are borne by a limited sector of the population and the financial costs by borrowing, the first weakening the military and the second weakening the economy. Even humanitarian interventions approved by international authorities need to meet Just War/Just Peace criteria and be declared by the Congress of the United States of America.

6. a. Without effective civilian and judicial oversight, human rights violations will occur.

b. Without effective executive branch and congressional oversight, military contractors will profit from no-bid contracts and insufficient performance.

c. Even with cultural awareness and oversight by a free press, even temporary occupation oppresses the subject population.

7. Those parties and lobbies favoring war deserve particular scrutiny; with regard to targets in the Middle East, such as Iran, these parties would include military contractors, oil companies, other nations in the region, and civilian contractors that profit from occupation, security, and reconstruction.

8. “A superpower that insists on absolute security for itself makes all other nations insecure.”<sup>3</sup> This affirms a realist argument for multilateral cooperation and “collective security” in an interdependent world where security interests transcend national boundaries.

9. The role of the United Nations as chief agent for multilateral cooperation would be enhanced by the existence of a significant NATO-like security alliance on each continent; rather than stretching NATO from the Balkans to Afghanistan, regional alliances, stronger than the African Union peacekeepers in Sudan for example, could help organize stabilizing international forces in places like Iraq.

10. The struggle against terrorism should return to the model of police work, as Britain has done, rather than be carried on as a “war.” “The police model views terrorists as criminals, refusing them the status of combatants,” and prosecutes them according to accepted traditions of international law, using techniques of detection and prevention rather than universal surveillance and indefinite detention.<sup>4</sup>

Recommendations

In light of the Gospel of peace and the lessons learned from the second Iraq war, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008):

1. Approve this resolution and receive its study paper, and direct that both be posted for study and action on the Website of the Office of the General Assembly and be given limited printing for councils, peacemaking and educational programs, and educational institutions related to the church.

2. Encourage congregations and individual Presbyterians to continue praying for the people of Iraq and all occupation forces, particularly those who have been wounded or who have lost loved ones, and to support adequate healthcare and rehabilitation, including psychiatric care, for those affected.

3. Commend the Reformed principle that “God alone is Lord of the conscience,” and that in evaluating U.S. actions in Iraq every Presbyterian has the right to arrive at their own judgment, even if, after prayerful consideration, that places them in opposition to the position of the General Assembly.
4. Direct the General Assembly Council, through its Peacemaking Program and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to convene a seminary- and college-wide review of peace studies and peacemaking opportunities appropriate to the major shifts needed in the approach of U.S. international relations, and to report the results of this study to the 220th General Assembly (2012).
5. Commend support for the UN Declaration of Human Rights on its sixtieth anniversary, the Geneva Conventions, and the International Criminal Court, and make widely known its conviction that all U.S. military and covert operations should comply with the highest human rights standards.
6. Urge the World Mission program of the General Assembly Council to offer material, moral, and spiritual support to the Presbyterians of Iraq, whether in country or in dispersion, in conjunction with regional ecumenical bodies, and urge the whole church to keep them in our prayers.
7. Direct the Office of Interfaith Relations, in cooperation with ecumenical partners and other offices of the General Assembly Council, and in addition to dialogue and study assignments, to participate in shared Muslim and Christian peace-making efforts and assist other efforts designed to improve understanding between these two families of faith, proposing public statements, worship events, and other actions as necessary between assemblies.
8. Direct the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, the Presbyterian Washington and UN Offices, and other appropriate offices of the General Assembly Council, in conjunction with ecumenical partners, to communicate and advocate the following positions derived from this and other resolutions:
  - a. the swiftest possible internationalization of the occupation of Iraq under UN aegis, to improve security (removing U.S. troops as a focus of violence), prevent further religio-political cleansing, and assist return of refugees and persons internally displaced;
  - b. the provision of a truly generous reconstruction fund, to be administered under international auspices with full transparency and accountability, using internationally accepted standards for procurement, attention to human rights of recipients, and high environmental standards;
  - c. a full and honest accounting for the funds expended and to be expended upon on the war, including the costs of recruitment, rehabilitation, covert operations, and interest on debt;
  - d. a plan to conclude major military operations in a responsible and expeditious manner, leading to the withdrawal of virtually all U.S. forces and the international use for peace and reconstruction of fourteen bases built by U.S. contractors;
  - e. the tabulation of casualties among all parties and general inventory of destruction so that the human and material costs of the war may be assessed and the moral obligations of reconstruction and restitution be kept before the conscience of the nation;
  - f. the completion of investigations of intelligence failures, human rights abuses, and contractor scandals so that accountability may be restored to U.S. government agencies;
  - g. the significant increase of funding for United Nations, international development, and diplomatic operations and the corresponding decrease in the funding of the military, consistent with the development of “collective security” measures and the abandonment of the doctrines of “full spectrum dominance” and unilateral regime change;<sup>5</sup>
  - h. the re-adoption of the “police model” for dealing with international terror and the development of greater awareness and understanding in dealing with Muslim and Arab nations; and
  - i. a confirmation of the endorsement of congressional and judicial remedies for the use of all forms of torture (including waterboarding)<sup>6</sup>
9. Direct the Stated Clerk and ecumenically involved offices of the General Assembly Council to encourage consideration of a panel of peace and security experts on the model of the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace in the post-World War II period, funded by church and foundation sources, to foster the sharing of Christian peace understandings among church bodies and with policy makers in government, universities, and the private sector.

Rationale

A. The Grounding of the Position of the Presbyterian Church

As Christ's kingdom or reign cannot be gained by violence, so the Christian faith is not a religion of war and does not trust in violence to establish peace. The church's resistance to war has been expressed over the centuries in a minority commitment to pacifism, in the development of Just War doctrine, and more recently in proactive Just Peace thinking. Increasingly, biblical scholars recognize the place of nonviolent resistance in the New Testament, heightening the contrast between early Christianity and the Roman Empire. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and many other churches have supported the establishment of the United Nations and international laws to minimize the horrors of war and enlarge the concept of human rights. Based upon this historic Christian skepticism about war and empirical warnings heeded by many nations, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), most other ecumenical churches, and the Roman Catholic Church opposed the current Iraq war. This was done well before its vastly tragic and costly mismanagement and the steep decline in international respect for our country, out of a judgment that the administration was repudiating time-honored moral restraints on violence. The 216th General Assembly (2004), building on the concerns of the 215th General Assembly (2003) and a study of "Religion, Violence, and Terrorism," termed the Iraq war "unwise, illegal, and immoral."<sup>7</sup> It urged that Iraqi sovereignty be restored and hence the occupation end as swiftly as possible, a position that was held unchanged by the 217th General Assembly (2006).

B. The Policy Direction

In calling for the termination of a primarily military role for the United States, the four broad goals bear resemblance to those of the Iraq Study Commission (or Baker-Hamilton) Report. The first goal addresses a motivational context within the United States, while the next three are processes in which the United States would help or support a genuine work of the international community that has been largely kept at arms length. Reconciliation also has spiritual and relational dimensions and is linked to rebuilding since the refugees are disproportionately a "brain drain" of the most educated citizens. The recommendations also focus on the very difficult situation of the already small Christian community in Iraq, whose situation (like those of Christian minorities elsewhere in the region) has been made more difficult by the actions and statements of the U.S. government. In general, the last twenty years have shown the increasing importance of addressing religious dimensions in international politics, perhaps especially in the Middle East.

The study paper provides some assessment of the effects of the multiparty civil war in "the Arab world's Yugoslavia," which has always made the number of troops deployed into Iraq a secondary (though important) matter. It is the basic assumption that the U.S. has the right to "transform" the Middle East, starting with Iraq, that is challenged by a belief in democracy and self-determination. Opinion polls in Iraq regularly show majorities favoring U.S. withdrawal.<sup>8</sup> The effects of tactical decisions like the "surge" or the alliance with once-hostile Sunnis can be debated. Advocates of withdrawal maintain that residual U.S. garrisons will continue to focus resentment while not furthering our two main strategic interests in the region: protecting allies and oil interests, which they see achievable through naval and air power from bases outside Iraq.<sup>9</sup> In the long term, Arabic and Muslim cultures need to be far better understood, alternative energy sources must be developed, and the role of inter-religious cooperation for peace much more respected. The long occupation of Palestine by Israel, as the Baker-Hamilton report notes, is widely associated with the occupation of Iraq and remains an undeniable source of radicalization throughout the Middle East, and indeed a matter of concern for most U.S. allies as well.

Any substantial increases in reconstruction funds for Iraq need to be seen in light of current war costs, which include some reconstruction efforts, primarily in Iraq. Using nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office numbers, Reuters reports: "All of the Iraq and Afghanistan war money—about $11 billion a month—is effectively being put on a government credit card at a time when U.S. government debt has skyrocketed to more than $9 trillion, up from around $5.6 trillion when Bush took office. . . ."<sup>10</sup> The recession, reinforced by the net trade deficit ($811.5 billion in 2006) and increased oil costs, may eventually put pressure on military spending, although the Pentagon budget request has now "reached its highest level since World War II," excluding "supplementals" for the wars.<sup>11</sup>

C. The Study Paper and Continuing Questions for Christians in the United States

After a theological introduction, the study paper reviews the arguments for the war and the facts that have been revealed concerning the pre-9/11 ambitions of some top U.S. officials to remove Saddam Hussein, as well as over-optimistic dreams of establishing democracies throughout the Middle East, and understated interests in maintaining access to oil and markets. Clearly, many false statements were made about the existence of weapons of mass destruction and about purported linkages between the Sunni extremists responsible for 9/11 and the secular Baathist regime of Iraq.<sup>12</sup> This resolution does not answer the question, however, of whether the patterns of deception that have been revealed approach the level of impeachable offenses. Neither does this report focus on the pattern of counterterrorism measures that have led to large-scale indefinite detention and mistreatment of alleged combatants in Iraq, Afghanistan, Guantanamo Bay, and in secret prisons acknowledged by President George W. Bush. The 2006 assembly spoke strongly against torture and government surveillance and called for an investigation of apparent violations of U.S. Constitutional and Geneva protections. The question of whether military and/or political leaders should be prosecuted is left open—only low level military personnel have been imprisoned so far.

In addition to those questions concerning the rule of law, there are questions concerning the governmental choices before Iraq and the United States. This report does not specify a level of federal devolution or even partition of Iraq on religious or ethnic lines. As in the Balkans, Somalia, the Sudan, and more recently Kenya, political pressures can open up ethnic, religious, and tribal tensions. We caution against exaggerating religious differences, and lift up instances of inter-confessional and ethnic harmony, as well as the uses of truth and reconciliation commissions, demonstrating the role of what Presbyterian ethicist Donald Shriver (in his book, An Ethic for Enemies) terms, “forgiveness in politics.”<sup>13</sup> In the United States, the growing unpopularity of the war in Iraq has underlined the massive powers of the presidency to establish policy through administrative fiat, but we leave it an open question whether the three branches of our own government are out of balance.

In terms of the role of the church, it must be noted that the already small Presbyterian community of five congregations has been severely reduced by flight and death and functions largely underground. The Christian community overall, which had been allowed freedom of worship and relative security under Saddam Hussein, has been reduced by fundamentalist Muslim “jihadis” and driven from some areas, as have other religious minorities. With these refugees, as with others associated with the U.S. occupation, the U.S. government faces a choice of whether to allow immigration to the U.S. or to push repatriation into hostile areas.<sup>14</sup>

As this resolution is finalized in February, the “frontline” in dealing with terror seems to be Pakistan, following the assassination of Benazir Bhutto, followed closely by the resurgence of the Taliban in Afghanistan. It lies beyond the scope of this resolution to analyze the fragility of “nation-building” in Afghanistan and the dangers of subsidizing a military dictatorship in Pakistan. Alliances with military governments or other dictatorships are inherently unstable, and high levels of military assistance do not assure that U.S. national interests or purposes will be served. Humanitarian assistance can also strengthen one party regimes, but offers greater possibility for the growth of civil society and voluntary institutions and lessens the appeal of religious and other extremism—if it is administered with competence, commitment, and international coordination.

In Iraq, despite the highest yearly U.S. death toll in 2007 (899), a “surge” in the number of U.S. troops (130,000 to 160,000), a ceasefire by the Mahdi army, plus alliances with Sunni tribal groups and de facto ethno-religious cleansing, contributed to a decline in levels of violence in late 2007. The almost-entirely Shiite government of Prime Minister Maliki opposes the arming of new militias once allied to insurgents, but these Sunni groups have helped reduce the role of Al Qaeda in Mesopotamia (a domestic Sunni group now estimated at ten thousand that did not exist in Iraq prior to 2003). The lack of progress in meeting most “benchmarks” and moving forward politically in the time bought by the “surge” partly reflects the religious and communal polarization of Iraqi parties. Yet there remains a continuing commitment to national unity by a majority of Shiites and Sunnis, though not Kurds. And in this commitment to be Iraqis, despite all suffering and destruction, there is perhaps hope of a peaceful reconstruction without further civil war. But that remains an open question as well.

To Repent, to Restore, to Rebuild, and to Reconcile
A Study Paper on Lessons Learned and Directions Toward Peace in Iraq

I. Introduction

The purpose of this study paper is to state more fully the Christian basis for the “costly lessons” affirmed in the resolution and for the directions signaled in its title, “to repent, to restore, to rebuild and to reconcile.” In practical terms, repentance can simply mean changing the direction of our policy, but it means here changing assumptions about how international relations are done. Similarly, the bipartisan Iraq Study Group (Baker-Hamilton Commission) speaks frequently of the need for “national reconciliation” in Iraq, building on dialogue, equitable sharing of oil and other resources, and even-controversial “amnesty” for those who participated in the horrific violence of the past five years.<sup>15</sup> Beyond this emphasis on retaining national coherence through hard compromise and international support—goals we support and see no need to duplicate in many cases—this paper sees the response to Iraq as a major test for how the international role of the U.S. may be revised. In this, it is influenced by the work of Donald W. Shriver Jr., on both forgiveness and repentance as faith-inspired approaches to reconnect power and morality in international affairs. Its primary author is Edward L. Long Jr., a prolific scholar well-versed in Just War and Just Peace thinking, with significant insights from Gary Dorrien, a third well-known ethicist whose assessments of foreign policy appears regularly in the Christian Century and other periodicals.

Many observers have bemoaned the fact that the United States did not build an international consensus after 9/11 to address the causes and cures of terrorism in a way that would bridge cultural and religious divides. But the bigger missed opportunity came when the Cold War ended. Rather than redirecting the enormous military expenditure toward human needs in a “peace dividend,” the United States continued to build its military power as the “indispensable nation” in a “unipolar” new world order.<sup>16</sup> Beyond this, a number of influential policy thinkers believed it was time for the “one remaining superpower” to reshape the world. Some of this was idealism, some was ideology, but the combination resonated with Americans who already saw their nation as an “exception” to the destiny of normal nations. After the deeply disturbing attack on September 11, 2001, the proponents of a plan to remove Saddam Hussein through regime change—first publicly proposed in the United States in January 1998—were positioned to carry out that reshaping plan, ostensibly to “democratize” the Middle East. Of the eighteen members of the neoconservative “Project for a New American Century” who signed the 1998 public letter urging that “removing Saddam Hussein . . . needs to become the aim of American foreign policy,” eleven gained high-level appointments in George W. Bush’s administration.<sup>17</sup> Afghanistan became the acknowledged initial war focus to remove the Taliban who sheltered Al Qaeda, but virtually immediately, as then-counter-terrorism director Richard Clarke reports, links were sought between Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein.<sup>18</sup>

At this time, the United States may be faced with another “mythic” or deeply formative moment, as its capacity to maintain a military budget larger than those of all other nations combined, and to exercise “full spectrum dominance” in the world, may now be severely curtailed by the costs and consequences of the Iraq war. If the United States is, in fact, moving into a time of relative decline as a world power, it will be all the more important to understand how this situation came about, and what wiser role this country may yet play in helping establish a “just and durable peace.” And if such a redirection is to take place, it seems likely to require a Christian vision much bigger than nationalism, a reconciling patriotism, or “prophetic realism” explored in studies such as this one.

To call on one’s own nation to “restore, rebuild, reconcile,” much less “repent,” requires a deep conviction that there is a better way. That way is not simply a distillation of lessons, however wise, or a list of recommendations as the resolution in part provides. We find the fundamental way of redirection in the peace of Christ, whose “way, truth, and life” reveal a basic coherence of means and ends that brings violent means and peaceful goals into sharpest contradiction. The way, the truth, and the life preached and lived by Jesus of Nazareth is to Christians a summary of salvation: that God acts through the love of Christ to save and that only by responding in love of God and neighbor do we experience that salvation fully.

The Confession of 1967 affirms that “God’s reconciling act in Jesus Christ is a mystery which the Scriptures describe in various ways” (The Book of Confessions, 9.09). The Bible presents many images of salvation, and many of these involve the making of peace and sharing material blessings through the sacrificial yet abundant life in Jesus Christ. Calling our nation (and others) to repent and to contribute as lavishly to restoration and reconstruction as we have to war is a necessary part, in our view, of the long-term work of reconciliation to overcome the mistrust and frequent hatred of the United States expressed by the Iraqi people. Perhaps for all of the Middle East, we might say that Iraq has become the frontline in the struggle for reconciliation.

Because the Confession of 1967 speaks so clearly about the linkage of peace and justice with reconciliation, it was influential in the major 1980 policy, Peacemaking: The Believers’ Calling. Notice how it describes the place of peace in the work of the Holy Spirit:

God the Holy Spirit fulfills the work of reconciliation in human life. The Holy Spirit creates and renews the church as the community in which human beings are reconciled to God and to one another. The Spirit enables us to receive forgiveness as we forgive one another and to enjoy the peace of God as we make peace among ourselves. In spite of our sin, the Spirit gives us power to become representatives of Jesus Christ and his gospel of reconciliation to all. (9.20). (Inclusive Language Version in Church & Society, Vol. 92:5; May/June 2002, p. 206).

The peace of Christ is neither easy nor cheap, neither for God, nor for us. It is a call to sacrifice, to take up one’s cross, to be converted and led by God’s Spirit. As in everyday life, where our faith helps us order the goods of life and avoid idols, so in community the church must stand for truths that put even nations in their place. The peace of Christ is powerful as the truth is sometimes divisive: God’s questions echo in our minds and hearts, from God’s question to Cain about Abel’s fate to Jesus’ basic question, “what does it profit a person to gain the whole world and lose his soul?” (Luke 9:25) In national terms, what does it profit a country to become an empire and lose its character?

This is not the place for a full theology of peace, but it is necessary to indicate that the words chosen to title this background paper refer to fundamental movements of God’s redemption, even if none—such as reconciliation of Shia and Sunni—are likely to be fully achievable.

We ourselves must repent for confusing comfort and even security with being centered in God’s promise. The sacrifices of dead and wounded soldiers need to be honored, but not used to justify the slaughter of innocents as if they were terrorists. To take the lives of others, to limit the fulfillment of others’ lives for the enrichment of our own, this is to be in a foreign land, far from the path of righteousness. The Reformed Church never denies that there is a terrorist threat; we know that each of us, and even great nations, can be guilty of terror, torture, and casual cruelty. The memory of the innocent 9/11 victims, invoked so often, is truly honored when it points to peace.

In Ulrich Mauser’s The Gospel of Peace (WJKP, 1992), there is a careful survey of the way peace is portrayed in Scripture. Mauser shows how peace in the Old Testament is often pictured as coming after violent struggle, and that struggle is often related to idolatry. Idolatry, the worship of false gods, is itself linked to greed and injustice, so that the establishment of peace also restores justice. In the New Testament, Jesus famously says, “blessed are the peacemakers,” (Matt. 5:9), the only time the word “peacemaker” appears. But peace is pervasive in the blessing of well-being, or shalom, that is repeatedly proclaimed by Jesus and the disciples. Acts 10:36 sums up the whole story of Jesus as “the good news of peace.”<sup>19</sup>

A basic link between the peace of Christ, restoration, and rebuilding, can be seen in the way the proclamation of peace and the announcement of the kingdom or reign of God go with Jesus’ healing power. Mauser summarizes the element of struggle with evil in the healings, the way some are seen as exorcisms, expelling satanic spirits and breaking accursed conditions. When Jesus is said to have healed “every disease,” Mauser sees a universalizing of Jesus’ healing. The peace of God does not use violent methods, even or especially in the Garden of Gethsemane; the cross and resurrection show a struggle and victory over illegitimate powers.

On a personal level, repentance leads to a restoration of inner connection with God and new or renewed growth in the Spirit: sanctification, regeneration. This is not the work of nations of themselves, but it has a communal dimension sometimes seen in national policy. In the biblical history of Israel, we see prophets repeatedly calling on their nation and others to repent. Exile is partly punishment for national sinfulness; the restoration and rebuilding of Zion, described in Ezra and Nehemiah, requires new dedication, though it also shows continued struggle over the land and identity of its inhabitants. That the exiles are allowed to return and that relative peace is maintained are attributed to changes in the attitude of a Persian emperor in which God’s hand is seen. (Many commented early in the war about the Bible’s frequent references to places in what is now Iraq; Baghdad as Babylon, Mosul as Nineveh, etc. Now so many of those inhabitants are in exile and their cultural heritage in jeopardy.)

The material aspect of restoring peace and justice can be heard sharply in James, which is so much a call to repentance for those who have much. “If a brother or sister is naked and lacks daily food, and one of you says to them, ‘Go in peace; keep warm and eat your fill,’ and yet you do not supply their bodily needs, what is the good of that?” (James 2:15–16). A chapter later James returns to “peaceable” wisdom with moral force: “But the wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, willing to yield, full of mercy and good fruits, without a trace of partiality or hypocrisy. And a harvest of righteousness is sown in peace for those who make peace” (3:17–18). Then James looks at “what causes wars” and murderousness and names covetousness, vanity, pride, and doublemindedness or inner conflict rather than humble faith. “Friendship with the world,” or the world’s standards, functions as idolatry and makes one “an enemy of God” (James 4:4).<sup>20</sup>

Reconciliation as overcoming social divisions cannot, again, be extrapolated directly from the personal focus of James, despite the emphasis on righteousness or justice. But James is addressing the roots of violence and naming idols. In the early Church, as Walter Wink describes in Engaging the Powers, violence and idolatry were closely associated and pacifism was resistance to both. Killing for Rome was sacrificing to a false god. Wink’s work provides an analysis of how the New Testament does speak of systems in the sometimes apocalyptic language of “principalities and powers.” More importantly, the kingdom or reign of God is itself an intrinsically social reality and provides the link between personal redemption and communal participation.

In a short book, When the Powers Fall: Reconciliation in the Healing of Nations, Wink looks at God’s reign as God’s sovereignty in the world and in the believer, both outside and inside. In symbolic shorthand, he refers to the “Domination system: a social system characterized by hierarchical power relations, economic inequality, oppressive politics, patriarchy, ranking, aristocracy, taxation, standing armies, and war. Violence became the preferred means for adjudicating disputes and getting and holding power.”<sup>21</sup> This echoes what James was warning against. Wink looks at the ways Jesus refused to exalt himself, the ways he “took the form of a servant,” unlike the rulers of the Gentiles, who “lord it over each other.” To proclaim the “kingdom of God,” then, is to practice a different politics, to proclaim an alternative order based in equality and nonviolence rather than domination.

When dictatorships fall, Wink looks to the Church to live out its alternative politics through forgiveness and reconciliation. Though forgiveness is for reconciliation, the former can be unilateral; the latter is inherently mutual. Wink distinguishes between true and false forgiveness and reconciliation: the key is the role of truth, and this leads him to examine the truth and reconciliation commissions in many Latin American countries, South Africa, and Namibia. In almost all cases, former military dictators and torturers declared amnesty and gave themselves impunity, effectively refusing repentance. Yet still the power of truth worked to heal in those who had suffered. By the way of biblical application, Wink comes to a position similar to that developed in social ethics and history by Donald W. Shriver Jr.

In An Ethic for Enemies: Forgiveness in Politics (1995), Shriver examines the key ways forgiveness has played a role in the relations between the United States, Germany, Japan, and between white and black Americans. Though forgiveness is seen as distinctive and freeing by Christians and non-Christians, such as Hannah Arendt, Shriver describes the way it had been privatized in what he calls “the sacramental captivity of forgiveness, 500–1500,” where forgiveness took particular ritual and institutional forms of confession, absolution, and penance, usually with specific gradations.<sup>22</sup> Shriver goes on to look at historic moments and leaders, such as Lincoln, who was able to say, “with malice toward none, and charity toward all,” looking to reconciliation after the Civil War, just days before his death. Here is a key conclusion that may speak to the political leadership needed in our time:

... only in a context of perceived interconnectedness between participants in great traumatic political injustice can one go on to assert the symbolic, representative role of politicians in the enactment of a political form of forgiveness. An indefinite but real network of victims and agents calls for that role. Whether leaders accuse an enemy of crime, confess to crimes of their own people, or hold out hopes for a future reconciliation, they do all of this on behalf of one collective in addressing another. To deny this representative, symbolic role to politicians is to impoverish their service to a society's dealing with its past wrongs and its present corrective responsibility to the future.<sup>23</sup>

In Honest Patriots: Loving a Country Enough to Remember Its Misdeeds (2005), Shriver develops the theme of political-social repentance more fully. His book is a form of listening and reflecting deeply on the moral experiences of Germany, South Africa, and the United States, in our case with particular attention to African American and Native American relations with the European American majority. If he were to have chosen proof-texts, they would be from the book of Lamentations. Shriver, too, looks at the Truth and Reconciliation process in South Africa and the painful stripping away of official denial that it involved, even when its official amnesty did not produce repentance. A rare few Afrikaner leaders made public confessions that revealed what Shriver calls, honest patriotism rather than a nationalism that favored only part of the nation. In turning to race relations in the United States, he is eloquent about his own past as a Southerner, and about the ironies of American history. He ends with a look at the Iraq war, and “the question presses upon Americans now as seldom before in our history: for what displays of hubris, in our current collective stance in the world, may the American government one day have to consider apologizing?”<sup>24</sup>

When the paper moves to consider the rationales stated and unstated for the invasion of Iraq, the question of hubris, pride, or what the psychologists call, grandiosity, will return.<sup>25</sup> Shriver looked at long-term periods of arrogance and amnesia; a reporter on the conduct of the Iraq war, Robert Woodward, titled a book, State of Denial, for a governing style that tried to impose ideology on reality.<sup>26</sup> It is not necessary to understand the United States as an empire, to see at least some of the use of its power as imperial.

Much of the work of peacemaking is not done on the national level by political leaders, but by citizens engaging in a whole range of activities that show a more peaceful reality is possible. Political organizing can help change a country's motivation and address its fears, particularly if it can appeal to both patriotism and moral empowerment—even to the spiritual empowerment that Christian faith provides. Yet we are also aware that there will be resistance to having U.S. forces pull back to allow Iraq to regain its sovereignty and reluctance to provide funds for rebuilding a nation that is no longer a threat. Thus we turn to examples of peacemaking that also show reactions, lest we think reconciliation will not be costly.

The role of religious peacemakers is lifted up in Peacemakers in Action: Profiles of Religion in Conflict Resolution, edited by David Little, which describes interfaith work, including joint Muslim-Christian peacemaking in Nigeria and Palestine/Israel. Little writes, “... the experience of most of the Peacemakers in this volume ... proves that even those figures most consistently devoted to the principles of conciliation and amity are not in fact strangers to conflict and violence. Those who seek peace by peaceful means are, despite their intentions, often the objects of hatred and retaliation; they predictably heighten tension rather than relax it, because they denounce what they believe is injustice and abuse.”<sup>27</sup>

Little outlines “four general types of peacemaking that apply to the work of religious peacemakers ... enforcement, peacekeeping, institution-and-capacity building, and agreement-making.” The first two functions can be backed up by force of arms, but the second two involve the particular diplomatic and participatory strategies of religious peacemakers. “The first is occupied with the design and creation over time of an array of institutions and practices capable of increasing and sustaining the balance of social harmony and civil unity over hostility and violence. This entails broadening and strengthening commitment to and training in multireligious and multiethnic respect and tolerance, along with the management and reduction of violence, human rights compliance, rule of law, empowerment of women and minorities, advancement of educational and vocational opportunities, expansion of health care, reduction of inequities in wealth and power...” Agreement-making is the process of sustained interaction by which hostile parties are brought to work out and accept a peace settlement. “Track One” diplomacy involves official governmental and third party representatives; “Track Two” is unofficial diplomacy by non-governmental groups and individuals. One example of the latter is Presbyterian minister William Lowrey's “creative work in helping facilitate agreements between the Nuer and Dinka peoples in Southern Sudan.”<sup>28</sup>

In light of the particulars summarized by Little, it should be clear that “nation-building” involves rebuilding relationships within a given nation among its peoples, and among neighboring nations who may rightly fear the contagion of chaos or the burden of refugees. This section has moved from the peace given us in Christ to the ways we share that peace, without false innocence or arrogance, to those who are in conflicts—and that includes ourselves.

II. Summary of Previous Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Resolutions on the Iraq War (2003 and 2004) and “Violence, Religion, and Terrorism” (2004)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has studied the situation in Iraq for more than five years and has issued a number of background papers, policy recommendations, and study guides to foster thoughtful deliberation about the moral issues raised by American policy. There is no doubt but what the war in Iraq has created enormous disagreement as to whether or not it constitutes a wise undertaking. The members of our church are not all agreed as to what can or should be done. However complex, the issues do not go away nor can they be ignored. A great deal is at stake—militarily, politically, diplomatically, interreligiously—and anyone who cares about basic humanitarian concerns must address the problem.

The first document in which the Presbyterian church dealt with Iraq was presented to the 215th General Assembly (2003) (Denver) and was entitled “Iraq and Beyond.” This document raised serious doubts about the moral legitimacy of preventive wars and the national policy of full spectrum dominance that was coming to be the operative basis of national policy, especially the action taken against Iraq. It acknowledged the unresolved differences between opponents of all armed conflict and those who acknowledge the legitimacy of military action under just war principles. It pointed out that it is possible to support U.S. military personnel as persons without linking that support with approval of national policy. It emphasized the importance of keeping noncombatants, especially civilians, from harm; highlighted the need to maintain the viability of economic life and public order in taking any action; and urged cooperation with the United Nations in creating and implementing all strategies.

It also pointed to the importance of religious communities for the humanitarian renewal of Iraq. The Worldwide Ministries Division of the church provided reinforcing considerations that emphasized the importance of maintaining good relationships with Christian churches in the Middle East and with the Muslim community in our country, and underscored the commitment to love enemies and that is at the heart of our Christian peace-seeking.<sup>29</sup>

One year later, the General Assembly meeting in Richmond accepted another study about Iraq with the title “Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future.” The study paper was more explicit in looking at just war principles and drew moral distinctions between various kinds of military intervention—concluding that strategic intervention for the purposes of regime change was the most difficult to defend on moral grounds, if not indeed impossible. This paper also affirmed our solidarity with Iraqi Christians and their churches, called for pastoral support for U.S. military personnel and their families, encouraged continued prayer for peace and stability in Iraq, condemned in the strongest possible terms torture and the abuse of prisoners, and called for a mission plan to respond to the needs and concerns of our brothers and sisters in Iraq. The most pointed aspect of the action taken in 2004 was to concur in the judgment of many church leaders around the world, that the invasion of Iraq has been “unwise, immoral, and illegal.” It called upon the United States government to speedily restore sovereignty to Iraq. The General Assembly also declared with equal seriousness that the “United States bear(s) a legal and moral burden for the reconstruction of Iraq.”<sup>30</sup>

The doubts and criticism of launching military action against Iraq that are expressed by the actions of the General Assemblies of 2003 and 2004 were made when there was somewhat greater support for the war among the public-at-large than has come to be the case. These criticisms embodied a moral judgment that the military action failed the tests of moral legitimacy commonly posed by just war thinking. An entirely different kind of criticism would later develop in other circles—criticism that reflected disillusionment with how the war was being carried out and a judgment that it has been badly managed rather than ill conceived.<sup>31</sup> Both kinds of criticism were to combine by early 2006 to provide increasingly widespread support in the general public for bringing the military action to an end, though no consensus developed as to just how this should be accomplished. The administration has rejected all such calls for abandoning its military venture and mounted a so-called “surge” designed to provide time for political progress among Iraqi leaders and to demonstrate the possibility of a more promising outcome from the military effort. This has further intensified the public debate but not alleviated public concern about the war.

While pressure to end America’s military involvement in Iraq is likely to gain increasing support, this does not necessarily mean that the moral issues have come to be more fully understood or that the premises that led to taking military action in the first place have been repudiated. To withdraw because of fatigue or disillusionment would be quite different from seeking to redress the action on moral grounds, as we recommend. This does not preclude combining these impulses to end the war, but it does recognize that they may be quite different reasons for the same actions and different judgments about what are appropriate subsequent responses. It is the role of the church to insist that the moral reasons not be overlooked irrespective of whether or not opponents of the war are successful in bringing some cessation to the military action. It is important, then, not merely to add whatever influence we can exert to the public calls for changing a policy, but to think about the implications of what has already been done and the moral dimensions of any possible future actions.

III. Reconsideration of War Motivations, Objectives, and Decision-Framework

A. Issues Related to the Decision to Initiate Military Action Against Iraq

The wisdom of taking military action in Iraq had been a source of debate from the very beginning. Several reasons have been advanced for taking such action and each has been scrutinized at length. The result is that each proposed justification for taking such action has tended to lose credibility as the debate has progressed and as more and more information has shown the inadequacy of those justifications.

1. One of the reasons, which figured prominently in the beginning, was a belief that Iraq was in possession—or would soon be in possession—of weapons of mass destruction. Saddam Hussein had used chemical weapons against the Kurds, and he had resisted efforts of inspectors from the United Nations to have clear and unencumbered access to all parts of his country. There was ambivalence among members of the United Nations as to how rigorously to hold Iraq accountable and the resulting hesitation created a situation that seemed to invite more stringent action by the United States acting as the chief world power.

It has subsequently been learned that the intelligence reports implying there was a serious threat from weapons of mass destruction held by Iraq were either faulty or deliberately misinterpreted in order to bolster the case for making a preventive strike. Extensive investigative reporting has since cast doubts on the presence of such weaponry and even on the intentions of those who used this argument to legitimize the attack on Iraq. Of particular relevance has been the “Downing Street Memo” made public July 23, 2003, which indicated that the decision to go to war against Iraq was well crystallized before the putative evidence of weapons of mass destruction was fully assessed.<sup>32</sup> And it may have been possible, with longer time, that Hussein’s acquiescence to weapons inspections would have continued.

2. A second alleged reason for taking preventive military action against Iraq was the awareness that Saddam Hussein was a ruthless and evil ruler who had little concern even for the welfare of Iraq’s people (especially the Kurds and Shiites). The fact that Saddam Hussein was a brutal ruler has never been significantly contested; but there has been a difference in judgment as to what should have been done about this horror.

A traditional assumption governing the use of military action has been to regard self-defense as legitimate whereas aggression is not. However, more recently a body of thought has been gaining acceptance approving intervention for humanitarian reasons.<sup>33</sup> There has also been a school that believes American power should be used to bring about free and democratic regimes where they do not now exist. Humanitarian intervention to alleviate suffering has the widest support, followed by intervention to establish minimally functional order in cases where no such order is operative. But intervention to overthrow a particularly cruel regime, which was the situation in Iraq, is far more problematic, particularly if carried out unilaterally. The action was essentially unilateral despite the largely nominal commitment of forces by nations belonging to what was called “the coalition of the willing.” There is little warrant in international law to support the view that a single nation is entitled to delegate to itself the right to judge another nation “evil” and on that basis initiate military action against it.

Moreover, as the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has indicated in studying this matter, any intervention, even if undertaken for humanitarian purposes, must be governed by measures similar to those used in just war thinking, one of which is that it must be a last resort and another that it must have a reasonable chance of success. The military action against Iraq did not meet either test. It was taken before the international community had exhausted all diplomatic remedies and with limited regard for the incipient tensions and rivalries among religious factions in Iraq that would stymie any constructive outcome from the simple removal of an oppressive leader. Many students of the Muslim world and Iraq in particular were aware of the potential pitfalls in this kind of preventive maneuver but their wisdom, like much of a State Department study process, was disregarded.

3. A third alleged reason, not entirely distinct from the previous humanitarian concerns, was to help create a democratic example in the region. Idealistic in a way, the idea of exporting democracy is to some a form of soft intervention. Yet it has support, particularly if any military occupation by the United States can be an exception to the imperial rule, and if the U.S. is a chosen exception in itself. This agenda is even more triumphalist than the effort during World War I to make the world “safe for democracy” (an effort that was anything but successful). Saddam Hussein was removed from power rather quickly following the beginning of the Iraq war and elections were held to symbolize movement toward democratic governance of the nation. But the rise of bitter hostilities between political and sectarian factors within a power vacuum undercut the confidence that Iraq was either willing or able to cohere in an adequate way to make democracy possible. Democracy depends, not merely on freedom, but upon the acceptance of covenantal responsibility between the members of a society who agree to accept majority decisions as having a claim on their behavior. It will not arise simply from the removal of a tyrannical regime.

4. Another reason advanced for taking military action against Iraq was to combat terrorism. It was alleged that Iraq either was already, or could soon become a central actor in the support of terrorism even if it seemed to have no role in the attacks of 9/11. The trauma associated with those attacks, plus fear from an anthrax scare, prompted a strong clamor for decisive response. But careful inquiry, such as the work of the Kean-Hamilton Commission, showed that there was little, if any, connection between Saddam and Al Qaeda. Unfortunately, when the commission came to that conclusion its judgment continued to be questioned by the advocates of the Iraq war. Indeed, the connection has been alluded to repeatedly by the president and spokespersons for the administration despite the well-substantiated evidence to the contrary. This attempt to project the existence of Al Qaeda in Iraq back onto the time of Saddam Hussein’s regime has no legitimacy yet is used to bolster support for having taken the military action against Iraq.

5. Yet another reason for taking military action against Iraq has been proposed, not so much by the proponents of such action, but by its critics. It is suggested that the primary motivations for the use of military force to establish American dominance has been to protect American's access to oil, of which Iraq has a considerable supply. In his memoirs Alan Greenspan indicates this is the most operative underlying reason.<sup>34</sup> And certainly it has great plausibility, from the protection of the oil fields initially in the invasion (as chaos was allowed elsewhere) to the efforts by U.S. corporations and contractors to lock in favorable oil extraction agreements. Paradoxically, however, as the invasion has helped drive the price of oil up, the international thirst for oil did not seem as great five years ago.

Obviously, the first four reasons have greater appeal than the concern about oil. They have more positive sounding moral implications, either because they bear some similarity to self-defense or to the idealistic spread of freedom in the Middle East. While the anti-war slogan, "blood for oil," may thus point to a big part of the truth, there is another understated rationale for the war that has also come out more with time.

6. Starting before the 1998 open letter urging President Clinton to remove rather than simply "contain" Saddam Hussein, many of the "neoconservative" policymakers had been expressing ideas about how the United States should consolidate its power in the "unipolar," post-Cold War moment that opened up with the Soviet Union's implosion in 1989.<sup>35</sup> Influential beyond their numbers, though supported by various Washington-based "think tanks," neoconservative policymakers provided key direction for the Iraq war and remain among its key backers. Books on the group are many, and it is beyond this paper's scope to attempt a full assessment of their influence.<sup>36</sup> A flavor comes through from Charles Krauthammer: "The form of realism that I am arguing for—call it the new unilateralism—is clear in its determination to self-consciously and confidently deploy American power in pursuit of those global ends [of maintaining world peace and stability]" ... The new unilateralism argues explicitly and unashamedly for maintaining unipolarity, for sustaining America's unrivaled dominance for the foreseeable future. ... This in itself will require the aggressive and confident application of unipolar power rather than falling back, as we did in the 1990's, on paralyzing multilateralism. ... To impiously quote Benjamin Franklin: 'History has given you an empire, if you will keep it.'<sup>37</sup>

Gary Dorrien describes how some of the self-described neoimperialist elements had to be soft-pedaled in public, though they were vigorously debated by historians like Niall Ferguson (pro) and Paul Kennedy (con). America in this sense was an "empire in denial," though to the neoconservatives it was almost always "a benign hegemon." The (first) Gulf War showed the effectiveness of force but left unfinished business. William Kristol, Robert Kagan, and the Project for a New American Century, after Afghanistan, made "the case for extending the war to Iraq, Iran, and Hezbollah, usually in that order."<sup>38</sup> Other lists of potential targets were developed: the "axis of evil" that ended up in President Bush's 2002 State of the Union included Iraq, Iran, and North Korea. In military terms, this meant a steady build-up of forces, one that would be able to carry on more than one war at a time. And in terms of planning within the White House, this meant preparing for the Iraq war through much of 2002.

In the next subsection, on the management of the war, it is important to remember that the State Department began a "Future of Iraq Project" only one month after 9/11, convening seventeen working groups of varying sizes and producing a thirteen-volume study, now declassified and available on-line.<sup>39</sup> This project did warn against wholesale de-Baathification (that purged skilled middle managers throughout Iraqi society and helped feed the Sunni insurgency), the disbanding of the army, the possible need for a "five to ten year" occupation, and of the need for immediate security. Yet a sample from the "Democratic Principles" working group carries echoes of the neoconservatives' unrealistic realism (really a form of idealism):

Nothing in this report, however, requires of the UN or the U.S. to police or manage into existence the new and budding democratic institutions. That is a challenge that the people of Iraq must and will face on their own. A historic opportunity that is as important as anything that has happened in the Middle East since the fall of the Ottomans and the entry of British troops into Iraq in 1917 presents itself. Once the regime of Saddam Hussein is removed from power, Iraq can be remade out of the ashes. ...<sup>40</sup>

As it turned out, the Department of Defense's Office of Reconstruction and Humanitarian Assistance took over from the State Department would-be planners, and then the Coalition Provisional Authority took charge; an unnamed Defense official said the recommendations were "mostly ignored."<sup>41</sup>

Whatever the relative weight ascribed to the elements above, there is yet an additional matter that deserves to be considered in the debate over responsibility for the war. It concerns the role of the president in relationship to Congress. The Constitution places the decision to begin war in the hands of Congress. In the case of both the war in Vietnam and the war in Iraq, instead of actually declaring war Congress has passed resolutions delegating the authority to initiate military action to the president, to use at a time and under circumstances the executive branch deems strategically appropriate. This has been tacitly accepted as conforming to the spirit if not the letter of the Constitution, but leaving war to the discretion of the president may have the unintended consequence of adding to both presidential power and secrecy.

It would seem unwise that a decision to begin military action should rest in the hands of any single person, rather than be a matter on which the representatives of the people come to a common mind in face of a broadly acknowledged threat. That may well have been the reason why the founding framers wrote the Constitution as they did, and a strict constructionist reading of the Constitution would hew to their judgment. Congress is the ongoing body most representative of the people. To vest the president with the power to determine when to initiate military action—which advocates of a strong executive role clearly desire—may militarize the role of the president from commander-in-chief responsible for policy to someone more involved in implementation. Is there a connection between the futility and unpopularity of both the Vietnam and Iraq wars and the fact both were undertaken on the authority of resolutions rather than specific declarations by a body representative of the people?

B. Issues Stemming Out of the Conduct of the War

The foregoing discussion focused on the question whether or not the decision to take military action against Iraq was morally warranted and who is best qualified to make such a decision. We must now consider questions as to whether or not that action has been carried out in an operationally productive or a morally responsible manner. These questions are not, of course, entirely insulated from the previous considerations. If the manner in which a war is carried out involves strategic blunders, logistical inadequacies, procedural malfeasance, and/or monetary opportunism, then Christians would be called to oppose a particular military venture even if the reasons for taking it were morally compelling.

Of course, we are never likely to know in advance whether or not the implementation of a military effort will be marred by bad judgments and operational short-sightedness. Therefore, the problems that are about to be discussed in this section were not immediately obvious when the action to go to war was taken or even when the Presbyterian General Assembly voted shortly thereafter to oppose doing so. The appearance of the following problems means that we must come back to the moral issue of the war in Iraq with new concerns.

1. The most striking and troubling aspect of the war's conduct has been the way in which alleged enemies have been treated. It has been generally (and questionably) portrayed as part of the struggle against terrorism. Because terrorism is often outside the traditional restraints of international behavior, it seems to many that those restraints need not be observed in dealing with it. Although there has been some difference of judgment about how great and how widespread the violations of traditional international standards have been, the use of interrogation techniques that cross the line into torture, the rendition of prisoners to other jurisdictions so they may be subject to more stringent and unacceptable treatment, and the detainment of individuals without access to legal counsel and redress have been far too prevalent to overlook. These practices are notoriously disturbing. They have been condemned by military and civilian leaders with impeccable standing as patriots as well as people with deep concerns for human rights.

The 217th General Assembly (2006), meeting in Birmingham, expressed its profound dismay at these developments.<sup>42</sup> This action was separate and distinguishable from the opposition to the military action in Iraq taken two years earlier. Opposition to the use of torture (or to any excessively stringent means of extracting information from prisoners that violates humane standards) is an extension of the commitment to human rights that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has long espoused. Members of our church have been active in saying "No to Torture," and have held conferences, conducted demonstrations, given speeches, and used channels of civil protest to make their feelings known.

The attitude of the administration toward the criticism of torture has not been reassuring. The president flatly denies we employ torture but meanwhile his subordinates write memos (not always made public until ferreted out by investigative journalists) that allow for highly unusual and strenuous treatments that deeply offend the sensibilities of most Americans and other people in the world. The duplicity involved creates the same damage to credibility that attends the misuse of intelligence information in order to justify going to war and is perhaps far more serious. Sometimes with a straight face and often with unconvincing denials our leaders have given this nation a reputation for barbarism: Abu Graib, Guantanamo Bay, ghost detainees, waterboarding. ... In light of the judgment of most professional interrogators that torture is an unreliable way to extract information, this continuing tendency to embrace it is evidence of how deeply rooted in the thinking of many leaders is belief in the efficacy of violence. Although there is no explicit condemnation of the use of torture in the usual versions of just war teaching, it is a practice so far removed from the behavior expected of civilized communities that it would seem hardly necessary to state the prohibition. Yet now it needs to be emphasized. To flout the Geneva conventions, to make a false trade off between national security and civil liberties, and to imply all critics of doing so are somehow either weak or unpatriotic: these are alarming developments against which the most sober and vehement protest is needed.

2. Another feature in the conduct of the war against Iraq that needs to be scrutinized is the attempt to carry it out without a general mobilization of the country's human and economic resources. This means that the war has been carried out so as to raise the least resistance from the public at large and in a manner than allows the average citizen to avoid its impact or feel its costs. There has been no draft and no wartime tax. The Army, Marines, and Navy went to war; the country didn't.

Shrewd as this strategy may seem to have been as a way of avoiding the domestic turmoil that might result from conducting military operations that do not have widespread support it raises serious issues. In this first place this has placed inordinate obligations on the professional military, whether regulars or reserves. These have been ordered into combat on a repeated basis, tour after tour, often with only short respites between engagements. The price paid by their families, and in the case of reservists by the disruption of their ongoing life plans, has been very high. This is more than a country should ask of them.

In the second place, pursuing warfare almost as if it is but one function of government—an ordinary and customary function rather than something extraordinary and unusual—undercuts the assumption that war should always be an extraordinary undertaking that requires special efforts by everyone in a society and that it should be ended as soon as a specific danger has been eliminated. While maintaining an appropriate defense is a continuous task, actual military operations shouldn't be. If the conduct of war is so construed as to seem to be normal, this can have a tendency to permanently militarize a society, however unintentionally.

3. Coupled with a strategy to conduct military operations without imposing sacrificial obligations on all members of society, the use of private contractors to supplement the military operations in Iraq raises serious moral concerns. These contractors have been employed for both quasi-combat roles—such as the protection of State Department staff—and in reconstruction efforts that can be carried out only under armed protection. Early on their conduct was specifically exempted from ordinary legal restraints so they do not necessarily feel the need to adhere to customary standards of behavior—particularly with regard to the use of force. Therefore, at times they have become an embarrassment and the government of Iraq has demanded that some of them be removed. According to some reports the number of persons serving in such roles may equal or exceed the number of properly designated and carefully disciplined members of the armed forces. Without being called such, some of these contractors are essentially mercenaries, often paid extraordinary sums for hazardous duty, but nevertheless sums that exceed their normal earning potential in other lines of work. Just war criteria have never specifically addressed the moral issues raised by such strategies. That may be simply because they are so egregious that moralists would not suppose they would even have to be explicitly condemned.

The use of contractors to rebuild the infrastructure destroyed by violence (whether from military action of our forces or by the violence of insurgents) poses another moral issue. Many of these contracts have been let without competitive bidding—presumably because of time constraints—and often to persons with close connections to those in high official positions in the government. This process has created a whole new industry that depends for its profit on the existence of warfare. In World War II, when it was recognized that many industrial firms stood to make unprecedented profits from supplying military-related needs, they were subject to an excess-profits tax that kept them from reaping inordinately high returns from providing war materials. There was a moral fairness in that which seems altogether lacking today. If firms are allowed to gain extraordinary remuneration from supplying military needs, this can create consequent pressures through lobbying and other means of exerting influence—to keep warfare going because it is financially attractive. Military operations involve too much tragedy, both to members of our own armed forces and to the soldiers and citizens of other nations, to be allowed to serve as the occasion of making particularly high private profit. That the moral issue incipient in the widespread use of contractors for quasi-military operations has not been raised more is a judgment on the extent to which as a nation we have become morally numb.

What has been noted is the lack of body armor and sufficiently armored vehicles, both for U.S. troops and also for Iraqis. At the same time, facilities like schools and police stations, touted as unheralded good effects of the occupation, have in too many cases been revealed to have been shoddily constructed by contractors of contractors in an environment rife with corruption. But especially if one is advocating “rebuilding” Iraq, how is the environment changed? “The Bush administration’s favors to oil-services company Halliburton alone were enormous, beginning with a no-bid federal contract for Iraqi reconstruction projects that was signed six months before the invasion. By the time that American troops entered Baghdad, Cheney’s former company held $425 million in work orders for troop support projects ...; $28 million for POW camps ...; $50 million to fight oil well fires. ...”<sup>43</sup>

IV. The Problem of Assessing Consequences and Responsibility

Acknowledging the limits of our social location and the ideological warp that affects all judgments, especially about historical events near to us in time, we must thus look at the way decisions and developments in Iraq are presented.

In assessing the current situation in Iraq this problem was especially evident in the use of General David H. Petraeus as a congressional witness asked to assess the policy of the administration and particularly the success of the surge. His appearance prompted much scrutiny, even skepticism, and one group opposed to the continuing military operations in Iraq highlighted the issue with an advertisement impugning the general’s integrity by dubbing him “General Betray Us.” This tactic was regrettable and produced a backlash—doing something to discredit the group’s cause. But a respectful treatment of the problem needs to be offered. General Petraeus, as an active duty military officer charged to carry out a policy, should not have been placed into the position of being a policy advocate. Regardless of his personal integrity and well-regarded competence, to expect him to offer testimony in support of a policy was simply unfair—to him and to his listeners. To be sure, the technical expertise of military officers must be factored into the making of policy, but this may be jeopardized by increasing the politicization of military leadership. Thus it seems wrong to make the general a party to policy controversies.

The use of General Petraeus stands in an instructive contrast to the manner in which the Bush administration treated the recommendations of the Iraq Study group chaired by Messrs. Baker and Hamilton. That group, composed of distinguished persons with great experience in both military and political affairs, reached the conclusion that the war should be terminated—albeit with certain safeguards—because it had relatively little chance of achieving the alleged purposes for which it was undertaken. Group deliberations tend to mitigate the problem of ideological bias more than do individual judgments and, therefore, presumably deserve to be taken more seriously than individual points of view. The use of one person directly committed to taking orders from the administration as an advocate for its policies and the tacit dismissal of the suggestions offered by a thoughtful and distinguished group provide a worrisome contrast. It is a contrast between an image of authority and the actuality of careful deliberation.

The problem of knowing and presenting information affects not only government policymaking, but how information is presented in newspapers, magazines, and broadcasts. Respect for the sacrifices made by the military should not make hearers, or even “embedded” journalists, cease to be careful to distinguish reporting from editorializing. The media in general are not immune from partisanship; hence the need to be clear about patterns of ownership, interests served, and conflicts of interest.

The particular perspective of the church always seeks insight from sisters and brothers abroad, aware at the same time that links to U.S. Christians can bring danger. What then, can we learn from our church connections about this troublesome war and controversial policy? As Presbyterians, we are connected by history and ecumenical unity with a small and minority Christian community in Iraq. Leaders from Iraq tell us things about their experiences and even venture to come to our shores and share such experiences with us. In most cases, our correspondents and visitors have expressed great grief over the consequences of American policy and described the extent to which the present turmoil in that country is particularly hard on them. Their suffering and risk are part of their testimony, though they also have limited views of a complex reality. When Younan Shiba, ecumenical delegate to the 216th General Assembly (2004) in Richmond was asked by a commissioner whether or not Christians in Iraq were better off than before the coming of the Americans, his answer was a resounding “No!” That was a shock to some of his audience who were accustomed to hearing more favorable reports and efforts by the administration to put a positive spin on information.

Similarly, in November of 2007, a delegation from the United States visited Jordan and was told Jordan had taken in between 500,000 and a million Iraqis—greatly straining the resources of the country without much, if any, help from the United States. Speaking to the delegation, Wade Fawzy Gouissous, director of the Middle East Council of Churches, decried the impact of the war in Iraq on church life in the Middle East and noted that whereas America once sent doctors and teachers to the area it now sends soldiers. He said that the Bush administration “has made our job as Christians very difficult in a Muslim region. The U.S. government needs to revise its message as a Christian nation in the world because, rightly or wrongly, the U.S. represents Christianity in the world.”<sup>44</sup>

With rare exceptions, Christians do not regard the use of armed conflict as the most appropriate instrument of social transformation, even if some of them do admit that in some cases it may be a tragic necessity to be undertaken only as a last resort and primarily for defensive purposes. Christians are bound to have misgivings about what is happening in Iraq. To marshal evidence to show how and why this is the case is a form of social witness. For example, in September of 2007, Professor Dorrien provided a study paper for use along with the bulk of this paper written by Professor Long. His conclusions were blunt: “America’s debacle in Iraq has reached a crossroads. Iraqi society has been ripped part by ferocious insurgent and sectarian violence; the Maliki government is paralyzed by its sectarian bias; there is no military solution to the insurgency or the civil war; and by next spring the U.S. Army will be tapped out, necessitating reductions in troops levels.”

Dorrien goes on to discuss the Sunni/Shiite hostility, the presence of militia groups, the extent to which those Iraqis who can do so are fleeing the country, the move by the United States to arm Sunni groups within the triangle of Baghdad, Ramadi, and Tikrit to attack Al Qaeda, with a result that groups that hate each other are readied to create a seeming unending maelstrom. Dorrien’s analysis indicates how much American policy is deeply rooted in the acceptance of violence as the solution to the turmoil in Iraq and why it is bound to fail.<sup>45</sup>

It is hard to predict what the Sunni militias in Anbar province will do once they displace Al Qaeda of Mesopotamia and begin to focus on their Shiite opponents in both the militias (like the Badr Organization) and the military. Many remember that funding conservative Sunnis to fight the Soviet Union in Afghanistan did not prevent them from turning against the West.

V. Reconciliation and Its Alternatives

As public opinion turns increasingly against the war, so opinion in churches that supported the war is also shifting in ways that are welcome to “mainline” churches whose voices were literally disregarded at the start of the war. A number of evangelicals, generally associated with the religious right and supportive of the president on other matters, are now expressing reservations about the wisdom of U.S. policy.<sup>46</sup> This may help open up the moral deliberation of our whole society, because the zeal with which the administration embraced its policy was reinforced by both Christians and Jews on the Religious Right.

There are various suggestions for dealing with the situation in Iraq, with multiple versions of each. Each possible alternative has potential strengths and unavoidable liabilities. It is frequently said, “There are no good solutions to the problem of Iraq,” but that must not be used as an excuse for not attempting to arrive at thoughtful judgments as to which of the imperfect suggestions is most deserving of support. Very little would ever happen in political life if people acted only when assured of making perfect decisions! Nor would political life be tolerable if people used the excuse that no good solutions are possible to continue to support obviously bad existing conditions. The overview of alternatives that follows is, like each of the options examined, imperfect and in need of refinement—but we believe it illustrates the kind of analysis that is needed and supports the substantially different strategy of multilateral reconciliation.

1. Continuing the reliance on military force: Those who believe that the use of superior American military power to create a different world is both feasible and legitimate are likely to suggest strategies that further that goal. With respect to Iraq, even if the mantra, “stay the course,” is not used for describing what is needed, we will see a commitment to the dominance of American power. These so-called “hawks” argue that we need to dedicate even greater resources to succeed militarily in Iraq than anything attempted up to now. Moreover, they are likely to urge the extension of this approach to other areas. For example, in the neoconservative camp, Norman Podhoretz would not only stay the course in Iraq but employ aerial bombing to prevent Iran from developing nuclear weaponry. He considers this as part of taking a firm stand and decisive action against all versions of Islamofascism—a term deliberately devised to conjure up analogies to the rise of dictatorships before World War II.<sup>47</sup> Podhoretz hurls charges of cowardice and anti-Americanism at opponents of current administration policy, and attacks even political realists as defeatists. He decries the media’s portrayal of the present situation as misguided and sees the world as sharply divided between good and evil forces.<sup>48</sup> This view is likely to sneer at all other proposals as failure of nerve, defeatism, or recipes for disaster. It sees little, in any, place for traditional diplomacy in settling disputes, and foresees decades of conflict that will eventually recast the political configuration of the world into American terms. We have suggested that the cost of this “rule by bayonet” is as high as its likelihood of success is low—but our goal is peace with justice.

This neoconservatism and the unilateralism it advocates is very radical. It is at odds with the social teaching of the Presbyterian and most other churches. Despite the crypto-idealism with which it seeks the eventual triumph of democracy, this is a view that depends almost entirely on a cynical trust in brute force. It is a reductionist rather than prudential form of political realism. It depends on instrumental reasoning that is opaque to any concerns about the misuse of power and disregards the value of moving as an international community toward peace achieved through cooperation and mutual endeavor. Although it does not seem possible to sustain democracy at home with such an imperial approach abroad, we acknowledge that this position is still influential.

2. Immediate withdrawal: The sharpest contrast to the proposal to extend and intensify the use of American power in Iraq—ratcheting up the pressure in order to succeed—is the proposal to withdraw our troops with the most feasible and logistical dispatch. This proposal is often dubbed “cut and run.” Those who suggest such action tend to see the turmoil in Iraq to be primarily the consequence of American presence and believe that removing that presence would prompt various factions in Iraq to face the necessity of arriving at a viable way to work together. They also believe that since America is the target of the insurgent activity that has arisen in Iraq, withdrawing the target would decrease the extent to which terrorists may use Iraq for staging future activities.

It is simply impossible to know what would happen if American forces were withdrawn from Iraq with the greatest possible dispatch. Those who advocate withdrawal may be correct but they have not convinced the majority of people this is the best course of action to take. Even though a majority of people are anxious to find some solution to the present situation, they sense that there would be something irresponsible in simply walking away from a situation that has developed in large measure from actions our nation has taken. If using military power preventively to overcome tyrannies and advance the cause of democracy is problematic, to begin such action and then abandon it if unsuccessful would seem to be even more so. That being said, without serious planning for orderly withdrawal, it could be that this will become the only possible option—however reminiscent of the U.S. exit from Vietnam, the French exit from Algeria, and even the British exit from India. If overhasty exit becomes the case, the trauma associated with having created turmoil and leaving people to suffer it unaided could be very grave.

3. Gradual departure—prolonged occupation: Most of the other proposals for dealing with the situation in Iraq stand somewhere between the poles just described. One of them, which employs the slogan “We’ll stand down as they stand up,” foresees phased withdrawal taking place as conditions improve. This proposal, which is probably closer to what the administration has in mind than simply staying put, might seem to be procedurally realistic. However, it still puts too much reliance on military means of establishing order and it is too often pursued as a unilateral strategy. Moreover, it fails to take into account the tremendous power of religious outlooks in the Muslim world—outlooks that sometimes conflict with one another.

This approach is not likely to be fruitful unless it has the candor to acknowledge the taking of military action was premature and begun without any apparent awareness of the sectarian problems in Iraq that might develop. To take action in the world, whether military or diplomatic in nature, without careful inquiry into the historical, political, and religious circumstances that will be encountered is naïve at best and culpable at worst. Without acknowledging that fact, any attempts to deal with a situation through incremental change are likely to be unsuccessful. As the resolution and this paper maintain, those who have gravely erred must repent before they can attain newness of life or undo the consequences of the actions they have taken.

Helping the Iraqis to “stand up” will have moral legitimacy only if accompanied by diplomatic and restorative efforts, including an effort to demilitarize the situation and a clear declaration of the intention to withdraw from Iraq in the foreseeable future. It is far from clear this is what is being contemplated by some of those who use this descriptive phrase. For instance, the Americans have been arming Sunni insurgents in order to attack terrorist insurgents. This has offended the Shi’ite dominated government and is likely to intensify the possibility of intergroup conflict rather than reduce it.<sup>49</sup> It represents a manipulation of armed force that is highly opportunistic and hardly leads to “standing up” in ways that will result in peaceful security in the region. Moreover, despite legislation disclaiming permanent bases, presidential signing statements indicate that the administration sees “enduring” bases, hardly convincing evidence of an intention to withdraw.

4. Inter-religious Understanding and Joint Christian Muslim Peacemaking: With regard to the religious factors, no strategy will ever be successful unless it is undertaken with a clear awareness of the ways in which religion functions in Mid-Eastern societies. Much more is needed than a bland disclaimer that Islam is not an evil religion. Ways must be found to reach out to those elements in Islam that are dedicated to dialogue and interaction with other groups—both within their own heritage and beyond—which are engaged in peacemaking. To utilize religious forces constructively in a situation like Iraq may be the greatest challenge of all—but the situation will never improve until ways are found to do this. The Pentagon is hardly the most qualified agency to undertake this task. “Standing down” must consist of much more than diminishing military force; it must include changing attitudes and building structures of peaceful existence.

We must respond thoughtfully, humbly, and with great appreciation for the initiative taken on October 11, 2007, by a group of 138 Muslim leaders to seek common ground between their tradition and the Christian West. The preparation of that document was coordinated by Jordan’s Royal Institute of Islamic Thought. It “acknowledges that some Muslims ‘relish conflict and destruction for their own sake or reckon that ultimately they stand to gain’ from violence ...” and urges the two traditions to work together to seek peace.<sup>50</sup> For any such interchange to be fruitful, it will be necessary for Christians to be as candid about the belligerency sometimes expressed in their name as the Muslims have been about the problems they face in their group. The great challenge is to have such dialogue affect the general public in ways that eventually have positive consequences in the political sphere.

5. The Partition Option—Extreme De-centralization: Still another suggestion for dealing with the turmoil in Iraq is to partition the country into three sections according to the ethnic/religious identity dominant in each. Some observers of the situation in Iraq believe this is an eventual necessity. The U.S. Senate in an early October 2007 action sponsored by Senators Biden and Brownback has by a vote of 75–33 given weight to this idea by declaring Iraq is broken beyond repair. This suggestion seems plausible on the surface and obviously attracts support. But other persons familiar with Iraq doubt this course of action is either possible or wise. Joshua Holland, a writer on the AlterNet staff, and Raed Jamar, consultant on Iraq to the American Friends Service Committee, have sharply criticized this proposal. They argue that most Iraqis still desire to live in mixed neighborhoods rather than in neat enclaves, that an attempt to divide the area would produce great hardship and also open the way to even more ethnic conflict than has already happened in the area.<sup>51</sup> While the Kurds have effectively adopted this strategy in much of “their” territory, to embrace this idea without the benefit of careful scrutiny and debate may be to grasp at straws. In the name decreasing violence it may lead to even more violence and the virtual removal of religious minorities—like Christians, Mandeans, and Yadhzis.

6. Transition toward UN-linked internationalization: This approach to dealing with the turmoil in Iraq would use the United Nations in an expanded way. The United Nations has already had a role in Iraq. On August 10, 2007, the UN Security Council adopted resolution 1770 extending the mandate of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Iraq (UNAMI) for twelve months and de-linking UNAIM from the resolution authorizing the use of multinational force in Iraq (the current coalition arrangement—though the U.S. is virtually the only country now represented). The UN is authorized to facilitate efforts at dialogue and reconciliation between groups dealing with border issues, energy, and refugees, to help the Iraqi government provide essential services, and to aid in the implementation of humanitarian assistance. Providing such relief services is an enormous task, and may not be adequate but nevertheless it might affect the political situation even if not deliberately intending to do so.

Asking the United Nations to deal with the turmoil would possibly remove the United States from being viewed as the primary actor without merely withdrawing and dumping the entire task of overcoming the turmoil onto a fledgling government. This approach would not be easy to implement because it would require the admission that the largely (if not essentially total) unilateral action by the United States has been wrong and that our nation has done a number of things to weaken the United Nations—though we advocate precisely that difficult repentance and truth-telling. Clearly, only by strengthening and bolstering the resources of the United Nations would such a policy be feasible. It would most likely also require the creation of an international peace force acceptable to the Iraqi people to replace the approximately 160,000 American and less than 7,000 British troops in the area. Some people think that the creation of such a force and its acceptance by groups in Iraq is possible; others do not. It would also involve launching a Global Marshall Plan to rebuild Iraq and other areas that have suffered—a plan that would be very costly. For awhile Iraq might even be a protectorate of the United Nations.

Much of what has happened in taking military action against Iraq has represented a repudiation of internationalism, replacing the role of the United Nations with a “coalition of the willing.” The latter, as a creation of the United States, was not a genuine international group. To take action under the pervasive influence of one or two countries is not to advance international responsibility. To move toward a much more decisive role for the United Nations would be neither easy nor cheap. Many pressures on the United Nations make this difficult. But to move in this direction would be consistent with policies long supported by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and ignored or neglected by the current American administration. This would be a major challenge to the United Nations itself, but to accept such a challenge might provide a significant opportunity for this international body to demonstrate its potential value for solving a very major matter.

To the extent that making policy involves moral considerations, it can be fruitful only if done by persons self-critical of their own limitations, and able to interact respectfully with others. Thus, while the resolution and study paper favor this last approach, we do not minimize its difficulties.

VI. Resources for Further Christian Witness

There are several ways in which Christian faith can help to create the conditions that make it possible to act with wisdom and poise in dealing with public issues such as the turmoil in Iraq. As Christians we recognize that all forms of domination, whether deliberately intended or simply the consequences of being in a position of preeminence, create the potential for resentment and have the power to corrupt those who possess them. We, therefore, witness to a concept of responsible ser-vanthood that eschews the use of power as a club with which to make others conform to our conception of righteousness. On our best days we know that empire building—even if done with noble intentions and professions of compassion—is contrary to the proper role of nations within the global community. We reject the premise that the chief vocation of the strong is to compel others to conform to their will. We are committed to cooperative internationalism despite the difficulties it faces. We know that evil cannot be quashed once and for all by some heroic venture—a stance that tempts the strong rather than the weak, those who are morally earnest rather than those driven by doubts or even by cynicism. This basic conviction informs important stances for dealing with the troubling vicissitudes of history.

1. In the first place, mature faith helps to counter fear. Fear is a normal human experience but it often throws responses to threatening circumstances off balance and can be used to prompt people to act against perceived dangers with inordinate zeal and even catastrophic excess. Most resorts to violence are prompted by fear. In the case of preventive uses of military power, fear of what might happen overrides the assessment of what is actually taking place. Judicious caution is legitimate—nobody is compelled to be foolish—but to engage deliberately in the creation of fear, to imagine scenarios that are artificially dire, and to suggest that such threats can only be eliminated by the use of violence, is to set aside all of the wise cautions that make interactions between human being potentially creative. A major contribution of religion to social well-being is to enable people to deal with circumstances without being blinded by fear. By urging believers to “Be Not Afraid,” the Scripture helps to counter the pressures that so readily escalate into paranoid behavior. In this we echo the 2003 statement of the General Assembly responding to the instrumental use of “9/11,” understanding that any new instance of terrorism will tempt our society to seek immediate retaliation by military means, however focused or justified.

It is because people are afraid that they may, for example, accept the suspension of freedoms and invite governmental action that violates cherished liberties. It is because politicians are afraid of being soft on defense that they vote for belligerent actions they may well understand to be dangerous. The inability of the American political system to come to some decisive program for dealing with Iraq may well be a result of the fear that many politicians have of being charged with being soft-headed about dealing with troublemakers in the world. Those who purvey fear work the system to their advantage as long as such fears are present and as long as the public has acquired no source of confidence with which to offset them. We believe the Christian faith is that source.

2. A second contribution that faith can make to the creation of a culture that can deal with antagonism and hostility is to keep communication open—even when it simply reveals the persistence of disagreements and the depth of hostilities. Nothing is resolved by a posture of apartheid that deems all interchanges with enemies as weakness and all diplomatic communication as futile. The tensions of the world cannot be relieved by not engaging in conversations with those whose actions are regarded as contemptible. Refusal to talk is not an effective way of exercising power or influence but a form of petulant behavior. To be sure, such interchanges are never likely to be easy and are often bound to be futile. They often demand inordinate patience and great care not to make unjustified concessions to the viewpoint of the antagonists. As children we were advised to heed the ditty, “Sticks and stones will break my bones, but words will never hurt me.” In the current situation we find great scorn heaped on those who engage certain parties verbally and are condemned for doing so. If we are able to talk only with our friends, what reward have we? Do not even the most malicious actors in the world do the same?

Genuine dialogue does not depend on scrubbing out differences. It does, however, require care not to use inflammatory words, like World War Three (or World War Four). It is hindered by language that categorizes groups or nations under the rubric “good” or “evil.” Policy differences must be fairly described and dangerous intentions identified, but with a care that avoids bombast and a courtesy that is a distinguishing quality of mature diplomacy. Neither is keeping conversations open aided by shifting treatments of other groups—utilizing them as allies in one set of circumstances and castigating them as enemies at another time. The record of the United States in dealing with the Arab world is replete with such vacillation, not least in the case of both Iraq and Iran. We must aim to treat others with long-range consistency that does not provoke them to regard our motives as opportunistic. Doublespeak is about as bad as not being willing to talk at all.

3. A third contribution of mature religious faith to international affairs is a willingness to acknowledge that our actions have been wrong—that we must repent and act differently. The examples that Donald Shriver identifies on the national level and that David Little and colleagues identify on a personal level, both give us encouragement. We think the truth is that we are citizens of a nation that has been guilty of miscalculation and of illegitimate self-confidence bordering on arrogance. We are all participants in tragic consequence even if from the beginning we have opposed what has happened. The means that the major need of the present is to acknowledge the wrong that has resulted from what we have done even though we have not intended those consequences to happen. We need to seek forgiveness, pursue attempts at reconciliation, and repudiate the central premises of a policy that has pursued domination under the cloak of idealistic intentions. Going through this process is essential to any newness of life, but however painful and difficult it may be for us, it will many times more so for the Iraqis—and we owe them more than we know. A logistical withdrawal of troops will be difficult and hazardous enough, but it may turn out more possible than the task of reconsidering America’s national destiny. Yet unless we begin to do the latter, we may not do the former seriously—in which case, there will be the stronger possibility that our nation will go down in history as another ignoble empire that reaps the consequences of pretending to be invincibly strong and morally unique.

1. John Tirman, “Counting Iraqi Casualties—and a Media Controversy,” posted on www.johntirman.com, February 14, 2008. Tirman is Executive Director and Principal Research Scientist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology’s Center for International Studies. It is well known that the U.S. military and Provisional Authority determined not to count civilian deaths. Tirman’s article and departmental website, <http://mit.edu/humancostiraq>, review several ways of calculating the Iraqi death toll, from “Iraqi Body Count,” which uses English language reports and tends to smaller numbers (47,668 persons up to June 2006, for example), to a survey by “the private UK firm, Opinion Business Research (ORB), (which) found more than one million dead Iraqis” (by January 2008). He backs the work of the Johns Hopkins epidemiologists over criticisms of their work in the National Journal: “Their survey of 1,850 households resulted in a shocking number: 600,000 dead by violence in the first 40 months of the war. The survey was extensively peer reviewed and published in the British medical journal, The Lancet, in October 2006.” Prof. Tirman also critiques the 400,000 figure produced by the Iraqi Health Ministry (then controlled by Moktada al Sadr), which “shows a flat rate for killings throughout the war” (inconsistent with news reports). The World Health Organization, however, conducted a study of the period from March 2003 to June 2006, a similar period to the Hopkins study. The New York Times said that its study “indicated with a 95% degree of certainty that between 104,000 and 223,000 civilians had died” (“W.H.O. says Iraq Civilian Death Toll Higher Than Cited,” by Lawrence K. Altman and Richard A. Ooppel Jr., January 10, 2008, p. A12.). As for the U.S. decision not to count Iraqi casualties, “Soon after the formal end of the short 2003 invasion, the surviving Iraqi Ministry of Health proposed investigating the number of Iraqi dead, but on December 10, 2003, the American authority in Baghdad ordered a stop to the investigation...” in Honest Patriots: Loving a Country Enough to Remember its Misdeeds by Donald W. Shriver, Jr. (New York: Oxford Univ. Press, 2005), p. 270.

Military action often aims at eliminating wrongdoers, wiping them off the face of the earth rather than limiting or changing their behavior. Law enforcement does not seek “victories” in the same sense as does warfare,” p. 84.
5. The concept of “full spectrum dominance” comes from the Department of Defense’s mid-2002 publication, Joint Vision 2020 (www.dtic.mil/jointvision), “the creation of a force that is dominant across the full spectrum of military operations—persuasive in peace, decisive in war, preeminent in any form of conflict.” The General Assembly’s 2003 Resolution, “Iraq and Beyond,” includes an assessment of this significant change in U.S. military doctrine, with its determination, “given the global nature of our interests and obligations, [that] the United States must maintain its overseas presence forces and the ability to project power worldwide...” (cited in the 2003 Resolution, reprinted as Appendix A in booklet, “Iraq: Our Responsibility and the Future,” op.cit. at note 10.)

The study of "Violence, Religion, and Terrorism" also resulted in a resolution of that name in 2004 (PDS #70-270-04-025), building on papers published in Church & Society magazine by a working group of Presbyterian ethicists, pastors, and two military officers (back issues of the magazine remain available on the Web: www.pcusa.org/church&society).

Their July 19, 2006, data shows "seventy-eight percent strongly disagree or disagree with the idea of segregating Iraq according to religious or ethnic sects." The Global Policy Institute presents a survey of poll results on the occupation from 2003–2007, with some interpretation as to events affecting fluctuations in public opinion (<http://www.globalpolicy.org/security/issues/iraq/pollindex.htm>). The Iraq Study Group Report, p. 29, gives perhaps the most graphic poll number, that 61% of respondents supported attacks on U.S. forces, though the desire for restored Iraqi sovereignty is not always linked to a national unity government.
9. Gary Dorrien, "After the Surge," The Christian Century, Oct. 30, 2007, p. 9. Dorrien summarizes the position of the major Democratic candidates following the Baker-Hamilton model: "the U.S. to pull back, leaving air, ground and naval deployments in Kuwait, Bahrain and other bases in the Middle East while maintaining some residual U.S. forces in Iraq to fight terrorism and stabilize the Kurdish region." Dorrien himself favors a return to the main 1980's policy of relying on naval power and bases outside the Middle East.

"War funding, which averaged about $93 billion a year from 2003 through 2005, rose to $120 billion in 2006 and $171 billion in 2007 and President George W. Bush has asked for $193 billion in 2008, the nonpartisan (Congressional Budget) office wrote." The role of oil in the recession is emphasized in "Barreling into Recession: How Oil Burst the American Bubble," by Michael T. Klare, also in TomDispatch.com, February 1, 2008: "In 1998, the United States paid approximately $45 billion for its imported oil; in 2007, that bill is likely to have reached $400 billion or more. That constitutes the single largest contribution to America's balance-of-payments deficit and a substantial transfer of wealth from the U.S. economy to those of oil-producing nations. This, in turn, helped weaken the value of the dollar in relation to key foreign currencies, especially the euro and the Japanese yen, boosting the cost of other imported foreign goods and so threatening to fuel inflation at home."
12. In the research databank, False Pretenses, Charles Lewis and Mark Reading-Smith of the Center for Public Integrity (www.publicintegrity.org/warcard) summarize, "President George Bush and seven of his administration's top officials, including Vice President Dick Cheney, National Security Advisor Condoleeza Rice, and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, made at least 935 false statements in the two years following September 11, 2001, about the national security threat posed by Saddam Hussein's Iraq ... . The case for intervention out of a "responsibility to protect," in the UN's language, reflects experiences of the failure to protect Tutsis in Rwanda and the relative success of even late intervention in Bosnia and Kosovo. Concern for genocide in "failed states" continues to offer an argument for armed intervention, but this has not come to pass in the Sudan.

Volume 29, Number 20 (October 8, 3007). According to Holt, the administration actually hopes that the war will continue as a means of legitimizing continued American presence in the region in order to safeguard the availability of the oil and the economic interests of American corporations in obtaining it.
35. "If the Bush administration's agenda meshes almost completely with that of the Israeli right's, it's partly because the same thinkers laid the foundations for both governments' policies. ... some of the Bush Administration's current ideas about military preemption and regime change in Iraq echo a 1996 policy paper called "A Clean Break: A New Strategy for Securing the Realm," authored by a group including Richard Perle, currently a Pentagon advisor, and Douglas Feith, now undersecretary of policy at the US Department of Defense. Written for the incoming government of Benjamin Netanyahu, the paper argues that Israel should scrap the peace process, work to subdue its neighbors by force, and overthrow the Iraqi government in order to reshape the region's dynamics." #### COGA AND GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-24

Comment on Item 11-24—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC).

In order to be good stewards of our resources, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council urge the 218th General Assembly (2008) not to make exceptions to Standing Rule H.2.a.(12).

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council remind commissioners and advisory delegates of Standing Rule H.2.a.(12), which reads: "(12) As soon as practicable after the adjournment of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish the assembly's proceedings and other documents as the assembly may direct in an appropriate format (i.e. print or electronic) to be determined by the Stated Clerk."

This rule was added to Manual of the General Assembly several years ago to help control expenses and maximize distribution of documents.

If the General Assembly decides to make an exception to the rule, it will be necessary for the assembly to suspend the Standing Rules, which requires a 2/3 affirmative vote of the total enrollment of commissioners.

Item 11-25

[The assembly answered Item 11-25 by the action taken on Item 11-06. See pp. 45, 47.]

On Becoming Non-Partisan Advocates for Peace—From the Presbytery of Santa Barbara.

The Presbytery of Santa Barbara overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to

1. Be non-partisan as we seek peace and freedom from violence for those living in both Israel and Palestine.
2. Ask the General Assembly governing bodies, entities, networks, staff, members, and congregations to refrain from the self-righteous comfort of taking sides and rather to become non-partisan advocates for peace.

Rationale

At its 416th Stated Meeting on May 3, 2008, the Presbytery of Santa Barbara voted to overture the 218th General Assembly (2008) to be non-partisan as we seek peace and freedom from violence for those living in both Israel and Palestine. We ask PC(USA), our GA governing bodies, entities, networks, staff, members, and congregations to refrain from the self-righteous comfort of taking sides and rather to become non-partisan advocates for peace. As such, we ask that our church not be caught up in the propaganda whirlwind, which invites us to take sides in the conflict between the Palestinians and their supporters and Israel and their supporters. Instead, let us identify with the voices for peace in the midst of horrific acts of violence and terror.

As followers of Jesus we will condemn all acts of violence against innocent civilians. We will not take a stand that tries to over-simplify a very complex situation into a convenient but false view of reality where we accuse one side as clearly at fault and the other side as clearly the victim.

This overture invites a humble confession of our false starts in the past and invites us to regain our historic role of reconciliation. We wish that the PC(USA) might be involved in solving the problems in the Middle East yet recognize our past statements have hurt our friends rather than helped. We also realize our role in the region needs to maintain a humble disposition. We will try to be part of the voice for dialog and peace and refrain from giving false support to one side over and against the other.

We ask that the United States government take on an unflagging role as a peacemaker, bringing together the opposing parties in forums where reasonable people can reach reasonable compromises about highly complex issues.

We will support any and all others who seek a solution that creates two states, Israel and Palestine, living side by side in peace and justice. We ask that all who cling to narrow self-interests avoid statements or actions that stand in the way of such a solution.

Item 11-26

[The assembly answered Item 11-26 by the action taken on Item 11-01. See pp. 45, 47.]

On Middle East Peacemaking—From the Presbytery of Santa Barbara.

The Presbytery of Santa Barbara overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to answer all overtures concerning Israel and Palestine with the following statement:

“The Arab/Israeli conflict presents an unprecedented level of complexity amid constantly changing political conditions in the region. Thus, the best course of action for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is to defer from positions or policy statements that appear to favor either side in the conflict.

“Therefore, we call upon the leadership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to use our limited resources and influence to direct our specific involvement as peacemakers to:

- “● Offer our prayers to God for the success of all peaceful efforts;
- “● Support peacemakers who encourage tolerance and reconciliation;
- “● Advocate for the process of establishing a step-by-step, negotiated, two-state Israel/Palestine solution;
- “● Condemn all acts of terrorism and unwarranted violence;
- “● Provide humanitarian assistance to innocent victims of the conflict.

“As we witness for peace in this manner, we will defer from taking actions or making statements that align the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with unilateral support for any of the specific parties involved in the struggle.

“The General Assembly also appeals to the General Assembly Council to ensure that employees, entities, affiliated organizations, and networks abide by these directives.

“We pledge our constant prayers and conscientious support for the overall welfare of all the peoples in the region, and indeed for the world.”

Rationale

The 217th General Assembly overwhelmingly approved an approach to Middle East peacemaking that singled out neither the Palestinian Authority nor Israel for condemnation.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) resolution as approved rejected a process of divestment that singled out the State of Israel. Instead, it encouraged affirmative investment and engagement as the most constructive means to achieve “positive outcomes” when peace and stability has returned to the region.

The goal, as approved, would result in the “creation of a socially, economically, geographically, and politically viable and secure Palestinian state, alongside an equally viable and secure Israeli state, both of which have a right to exist.”

The resolution delegated to the church’s Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) committee the task of some aspects of implementing this policy, in full recognition of the complexities and the difficulties confronting peacemakers on both sides in a rapidly evolving situation in the region.

Since then, Hamas and Hizbollah continue to advocate the destruction of Israel and continue to reject a two-state solution advocated by, among others, the United Nations, the United States, the European Union, and Fatah. The prospect for an early peace in the region greatly deteriorated with tragic consequences in both Israel and Lebanon following the initiation of military combat operations by Hizbollah from its base in Lebanon, the continuation of military operations of Hamas and Fatah in Gaza against each other, and military operations of Hamas against the Israelis, the latter primarily in the form of thousands of increasingly destructive rocket attacks on Israeli cities and towns.

The cumulative effect has been one of an escalation of violence in the region, further isolation of the Gaza Strip by Israel, military retaliation strikes by Israel against terrorists, an increase of internecine Palestinian fighting, and the creation of a humanitarian and health crisis for the residents of the region. There has also been a concomitant increase in risk of life for Palestinian Christians residing in the Gaza Strip.

Any statement of Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) policy or action by its entities that has the appearance of unilateral alignment/and or support with either side in the Arab/Israeli conflict will be counterproductive toward achieving the positive peacemaking results we all desire. It may instead, set back the efforts of those committed to working for lasting peace in the region.

Therefore, by this action, the 218th General Assembly (2008) seeks to provide continued encouragement for all peacemakers and persons of good will who desire and support constructive efforts to achieve a negotiated peace.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-26

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-26—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 11-26 be disapproved.

Rationale

“Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.” This is the commonly phrased moral law that is grounded for Christians in Jesus’ summary of the commandments: “Love the Lord your God with all your heart, mind, and soul, and love your neighbor as yourself.”

The basic truth in Palestine and Israel is that this is not happening.

The basic concern with this overture is that it seeks to split this moral perception of how a relatively powerless people is being treated from the means by which the church can help move the situation towards fairness. The overture calls for balance in a situation that is not balanced, and it seeks to silence the church’s witness for peace and the justice necessary to achieve it. At the same time, General Assemblies have since 1948 been in favor of achieving a fair balance between Palestinians and Israelis, consistently supporting the two-state solution, opposing terrorism in all its forms (using the FBI definition, in fact), and applying human rights standards in an even-handed (even Presbyterian) manner.

Like all real-life struggles for justice, the situation has complexity, which the church has never addressed in a “unilateral” manner. There are two main stories of victimization, Jewish and Arab or Israeli and Palestinian, narratives that in the minds of extremists make legitimate the taking of land, lives, and livelihoods. (The team writing this memorandum includes the son of a holocaust survivor: we understand something of the force of that experience on the U.S. Jewish community in particular as it influences support for Israel’s policies). Part of the complexity is that violence does not always involve overt force: in 1997, for example, the assembly called “for greater attention to the underlying causes of tension, conflict, and violence in the Middle East, realizing that violence will not cease until the causes are appropriately addressed.”

There are multiple political perspectives, from the support for settlements and “transfer” of all Arabs out of a claimed biblical Israel, to the denial of Israel’s right to exist and the use of terror against its occupying power. Both sides demonize each other, but this is not an adequate reason not to seek reconciliation. The overture never mentions the fundamental fact of the occupation of Palestine, nor the constant expansion of settlements and economic strangulation, nor even the “suppressive” measures of the Israeli government that contribute to further the de-Christianization of Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Nazareth (example: “Christians Harassed in Jerusalem during Orthodox Easter Celebrations,” April 26, 2008, www.miftah.org).

The Presbyterian church’s long and steadfast role as a witness for justice and peace is, for some, illegitimate due to the history of Christian anti-Semitism in which we as Christians are implicated. However, it has long been the position of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that the commitment “never again to participate in, to contribute to, or [insofar as we are able] to allow the persecution or denigration of Jews or the belittling of Judaism” (1987) must be joined with the commitment to seek peace and pursue it. Neither of these two commitments is optional, nor can we sacrifice one for the other. This is not one-sidedness.

The last two hundred plus years of our Reformed history, in fact, give us many examples of resisting authoritarian power and at the same time standing up for toleration and religious liberty. The fundamental role of the churches in supporting the concept of universal human rights has also been backed by prophetic action, such as investment pressure for the peaceful end of apartheid in South Africa that involved criticism of policies of Reformed people much like the majority of U.S. Presbyterians. The overture seems to posit that one cannot criticize the policies of a given nation and at the same time fully support its peace and security.

For those in Israel intent on annexing more land unilaterally, and for extremist Palestinians and their allies, it has been good to have no peace process and no unity among the Palestinians. In the eyes of most of the international community, the United States has consistently confused its support for Israel with uncritical silence on policies that have made the possibility of a “two-state” solution virtually inconceivable—especially since the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin. The “land for peace” option supported by the PC(USA) and many others is fundamentally jeopardized by the virtually completed “security barrier”—fragmenting the West Bank, protecting “Israeli-only” access roads and settlements, and built predominantly on Palestinian land, according to the borders of 1967. To call for a two-state solution without addressing the real obstacles to it is hypocrisy. In this regard, the debate within Israel itself is far more vigorous and multisided than it is in the United States, and the word, “apartheid,” is increasingly used to denote the reduced situation and prospects of the Palestinians.

The overture mischaracterizes a number of positions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and interprets other developments in highly questionable ways:

1. The statement of the 217th General Assembly (2006) did not reverse the position of the 216th General Assembly (2004); it clarified the full process of corporate engagement through which any divestment recommendation would be made. That 2006 assembly clearly stated that the church would not profit from corporate activities that do not serve the cause of peace. As for “singling out” Israel, the church has since 1972 addressed corporate responsibility issues in many countries and has divested of its holdings in a variety of human rights violators, nuclear arms manufacturers, and others over the years.

2. The 217th Assembly (2006) also received a report on the very limited economic prospects of the occupied territories, given literal obstacles to regular communication, transportation, electricity, water, etc. Still, the assembly voted to pursue “positive investment opportunities,” but not at the cost of denying real obstacles, widely recognized by European nations and international bodies seeking to build up the Palestinian economy.

3. The overture suggests that Hezbollah’s capture of a Jewish soldier was cause of Israel’s invasion and massive bombing of Lebanon, disregarding previous border incursions and the large numbers of Arab combatants and noncombatants held by Israel (for which Hezbollah allegedly sought to bargain). As in that case, it can be argued that it has been the abandonment of a real peace process that has led to the increased radicalization of Muslim groups. In the case of Hamas, Israel initially helped fund the group to offset the influence of Fatah. The group’s rhetoric (and splinter group behavior) deteriorated when the results of a free election were suppressed.

4. The steady witness of the Presbyterian and other churches has not been “counterproductive,” as it has both encouraged Palestinian moderates, especially in the Christian community, and has helped prompt renewed U.S. efforts for peace, however limited they may be, despite regular allegations of anti-Semitism by defenders of Israel’s occupation.

In evaluating these real differences in approach, commissioners to the General Assembly need to weigh the church’s need for its own voice on matters of justice, the witness of Christians in the Middle East, and the heritage of Jesus and the prophets which invites us, in the Spirit, “to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace” (The Book of Confessions, Brief Statement of Faith, 10.4, Lines 70–71).

ACREC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-26

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) concurs with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s advice and counsel.

Item 11-27

[The assembly approved Item 11-27. See pp. 46, 47.]

The General Assembly Council, upon recommendation from Mission Responsibility Through Investment, recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) do the following:

1. Receive the report of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) of its engagement with corporations involved in Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank.

2. Call upon all corporations doing business in the region to confine their business activity solely to peaceful pursuits, and refrain from allowing their products or services to support or facilitate violent acts by Israelis or Palestinians against innocent civilians, construction and maintenance of settlements or Israeli-only roads in East Jerusalem and the West Bank, the Israeli military occupation of Palestinian territory, and construction of the Separation Barrier as it extends beyond the 1967 “Green Line” into Palestinian territories.

3. Urge all corporations doing business in the region to seek proactive ways to promote respect for human rights, peacebuilding, and equal employment opportunity.

4. Direct the General Assembly Council, through its Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI), to continue the corporate engagement process, and report on its status with any recommendations to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Rationale

These recommendations are in response to the following referral: Alternate Resolution to 2006 Referral: Item 11-01. On Rescinding and Modifying Certain Actions of the 216th General Assembly (2004) Regarding the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict, Recommendations 2.a.–d. Direct Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to Ensure That Its Strategies for Engaging Corporations with Regard to Israeli and Palestinian Territories—From the 217th General Assembly (2006) (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 44, 943–54).

1. 2004–2006

The 216th General Assembly (2004) instructed the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) to begin a process of “phased, selective divestment” related to corporations doing business in Israel. Following the assembly, MRTI initiated a process consistent with General Assembly policy.

First, MRTI reviewed the 196th General Assembly (1984) policy on the use of divestment as a strategy for socially responsible investing, and the criteria for consideration of any recommendation for divestment. Also reviewed was the 197th General Assembly (1985) policy describing the process of phased, selective divestment. At its first meeting following the General Assembly, MRTI identified General Assembly policy positions on the obstacles to a just peace in Israel and Palestine. These included the ongoing violence perpetrated by Israelis and Palestinians against innocent people; the Israeli occupation of the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem in violation of the Fourth Geneva Convention and United Nations resolutions; the presence of Israeli settlements in the occupied territories; the construction of the separation barrier; and the need for a viable Palestinian economy to enhance the possibility of a successful Palestinian state. These General Assembly policies were incorporated into criteria to focus the research into corporations that may be profiting from involvement in any of the obstacles to a just peace. The MRTI also adopted a clear statement on the process of progressive engagement of any such companies that affirmed the cycle of dialogue, shareholder resolutions and proxy voting, and more dialogue before MRTI would be in any position to consider recommending possible divestment action to the General Assembly. This was reported to the GAC, and publicized widely.

The MRTI conducted research to determine which corporations, if any, met the criteria. In August 2005, MRTI reviewed the research to select from among the identified companies an initial group to engage. These were Caterpillar, Citigroup, ITT Industries, Motorola, and United Technologies. The MRTI also maintained contact with various ecumenical partners that were committed to engaging companies on the issue of their involvement in Israel and Palestine. These included the Episcopal Church, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, and the United Church of Christ.

The MRTI began the process of contacting and meeting with the five companies (meetings were held with Citigroup, ITT Industries, and Motorola), communication with the presbyteries where the companies are headquartered, and continued interpretation of the process to the church and the general public. The MRTI also worked ecumenically on strategies for proactive investment in Israel and Palestine by churches and corporations in consultation with James Wolfensohn, special envoy for the Quartet (the United States, the European Union, the United Kingdom, and Russia), whose charge included helping to rebuild the Palestinian economy.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) responded to numerous overtures regarding corporate engagement on Israel-Palestine issues, and approved a statement urging that “... financial investments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), as they pertain to Israel, Gaza, East Jerusalem, and the West Bank, be invested in only peaceful pursuits, and affirm that the customary corporate engagement process of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment of our denomination is the proper vehicle for achieving this goal.”

The MRTI continued its work with considerable time devoted to fostering ecumenical cooperation on engagement. To that end, an informal table called the Ecumenical Action Group: Investment for a Just Peace in Israel /Palestine was created. As a result, corporate dialogues were expanded to include participation by representatives of other Protestant denominations and Roman Catholic religious orders. These have included the Episcopal Church, Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, United Church of Christ, United Methodist Church (General Board of Global Ministries, General Board of Church and Society, General Board of Pensions and Benefits, and the New England Conference), United Church of Canada, Mercy Asset Management, Ursuline Sisters, and the Dominican Sisters. Also participating has been KAIROS Canada and the World Council of Churches.

Additional dialogues were held with Motorola and Citigroup. These dialogues were the first step of the corporate engagement mandated by the 216th and 217th General Assemblies (2004) and (2006). Corporate engagement is a deliberate process outlined in the basic policies of the General Assembly on socially responsible investment, dating to 1971, 1976, and 1984. Elements of this process include research, correspondence, dialogue, proxy voting, and the possible filing of shareholder resolutions. Only after all other options fail to achieve the desired results, the Committee on MRTI, through the General Assembly Council, may recommend to the General Assembly divestment from particular corporations.

The Citigroup dialogue was highly productive. The primary concern with Citigroup involved an allegation that Citigroup had provided insufficient controls to prevent the transfer of funds to Palestinian organizations supporting violence. In conversation with MRTI representatives, the company provided assurance that the bank had robust controls in place to monitor and prevent questionable money transfers. There have been no subsequent reports alleging inappropriate funds transfers by Citigroup. In addition, Citigroup expressed willingness to assist the religious community with exploring how to increase micro-credit lending in the region to address the lack of adequate investment opportunities in Palestine. Therefore, in June 2007, MRTI removed Citigroup from its focus list of companies for corporate engagement.

The Motorola dialogue focused on human rights standards and conventions, and explored the company's involvement in the occupation through sales of military communications products, fuses for bombs, and security technology for Jewish Israeli settlements on the West Bank. Motorola denied that any of its activities implicate it in the Israeli occupation, or raise human rights concerns. A shareholder resolution addressing broader human rights issues was filed by several religious shareholders in the fall of 2007. In response, Motorola requested a follow-up meeting, which occurred in January 2008. The company indicated its intent to review and amend its policies but would not specify the particular changes under consideration and made clear that its human rights policies would not be applied to their business relationships with foreign governments. This lack of clarity and limited scope led the religious investors, including MRTI representatives, to decline to withdraw their resolution, which will go before the annual shareholders meeting on May 5. Although the conversation with Motorola has been less productive than hoped, religious shareholders agree that more in-depth dialogue on corporate social responsibility and human rights may potentially create a more productive arena for analyzing the Israel-Palestine conflict and other world situations and ought to be continued.

Shareholder resolutions for consideration at the 2008 annual meetings were also filed with Caterpillar, ITT Industries, and United Technologies. The resolution at Caterpillar requests the board of directors to review the company's human rights policies and amend them where applicable. Caterpillar also received a resolution on foreign military sales from a coalition of shareholders including several Roman Catholic religious orders and Jewish Voice for Peace. The resolutions at ITT Industries requested a report on foreign military sales, and at United Technologies requested that ethical criteria be applied to foreign military contracts. The United Technologies resolution was supported by 23.8 percent of shareholders voting at the annual meeting; a very strong showing, considering resolutions of this nature submitted to major defense contractors routinely receive 3 to 5 percent of the shareholder vote. The vote was sufficient to qualify the resolution for automatic reconsideration at next year's annual meeting, should the shareholders decide to resubmit it.

In the case of Caterpillar, there were two developments. First, several religious shareholders sent a letter to the company requesting a meeting to discuss non-military sales of company products in Israel and Palestine. The company replied by letter on December 13, 2007. While not responding to the request for a meeting, the company said for the first time that "As an industry leader, Caterpillar advocates responsible use of our equipment. We expect our customers to use the products they purchase from us in environmentally responsible ways and consistent with human rights and requirements of international humanitarian law."

Secondly, the resolution submitted by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Dominican Sisters produced a dialogue on January 30, 2008. Caterpillar representatives reviewed their Worldwide Code of Business Conduct. Discussion focused on the human rights dimensions of the code, what it included or omitted, and who beyond the company's employees it affected or not. Religious shareholders, including MRTI representatives, raised the need to address the end-use of company products, particularly in countries with human rights challenges. After further discussions, the shareholders agreed to withdraw the resolution from consideration at the 2008 annual meeting in exchange for an ecumenical dialogue with the company on human rights and the end use of Caterpillar products. It is hoped that this dialogue will begin in May or June 2008.

On March 4, 2008, religious shareholders, including MRTI representatives, met with ITT Industries. The company wanted to discuss its new corporate ethics program rather than foreign military sales. The position of ITT is that it will not disclose its foreign military sales claiming that all the information is publicly available. ITT had challenged the resolution at the Securities and Exchange Commission. The SEC's decision upholding the shareholders was announced later in March. The resolution will be considered at the ITT Industries annual meeting on May 13, 2008.

The Episcopal Church is the primary shareholder proponent with United Technologies, and had a brief phone conversation with company officials.

The process of corporate engagement will be evaluated by the ecumenical participants, and strategic adjustments made for the next round of engagement.

In sum, momentum has increased, participation has broadened, and issues with companies are clearer and sharper. Although major changes in corporate policies and practices remain elusive to date, MRTI believes that the engagement process is on track and ought to be continued and completed in accordance with regular General Assembly policies governing our engagement process and in response to the 2004 and 2006 mandates. The committee is not prepared to make a final recommendation at this time regarding the corporations described above but intends to pursue its assignment with all due diligence and persistence.

Item 11-28

[The assembly approved Item 11-28 with amendment. See pp. 45, 47.]

~~[The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) direct the General Assembly Council (GAC), working with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP),] [The 218th General Assembly (2008) requests that the Moderators of the 218th, 217th, and 216th General Assemblies (2008), (2006), and (2004) select a nine-member committee from a broad spectrum of viewpoints from PC(USA) members] to prepare a comprehensive study, with recommendations, that is focused on Israel/Palestine within the complex context of the Middle East. The study should include an evaluation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s mission and relationships, including an assessment of the future for the Christian presence and witness in the Middle East, an overview of the complex interactions among religions, cultures, and peoples that characterize the region, an analysis of U.S. policies that impact the area, and steps to be taken with our partners in the Middle East and the United States to foster justice, improve interfaith relations, and nurture the building of peace toward a secure and viable future for all, and report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010)].~~

Original Financial Implications- (2008): $7,340; (2009): $29,960; (2010): $5,240 [Per Capita-GAC]
Committee Action Financial Implications- (2008): $8,455; (2009): $27,925; (2010): $5,380 [Per Capita-OGA]

Rationale

Given that the last “comprehensive study” on the Middle East was approved (with background) by the 209th General Assembly (1997), Resolution on the Middle East, (Minutes, 1997, Part I, pp. 560–584) and, in order to discern what all of this means for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in our time, a process of study, reflection, and action is imperative.

Item 11-30

[The assembly approved Item 11-30 with amendment. See pp. 45, 47.]

Commissioners' Resolution. On Mobilizing Presbyterians for a Significant Response to the Global Food Crisis.

That the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) urgently take the following steps in response to the global food crisis:

1. Launch a general appeal to all Presbyterians to donate to a special fund set up by the General Assembly Council to enable the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to provide better support to and accompaniment of our overseas partners trying to step up their response to the global food crisis.
2. Step up and speed up mission personnel deployment, in response to overseas partners who so request, to advise and accompany them as to the kinds of actions that could be undertaken to alleviate hunger in the short term without creating new dependencies and/or compromising their countries' sovereignty and economy.

3. Invite all Presbyterians to join in the church-wide practice of spiritual disciplines, such as monthly fasting for repentance and reflection, which may lead to meaningful coordinated actions to accompany those who are poor and hungry around the world.

4. Produce relevant resources, using all available communications means, to raise the awareness of Presbyterians about the current food crisis, including the dangers for the U.S. government, the European Union, and other international entities who want to use the current food crisis as an opportunity to offer more direct food aid exports and genetically modified (GMO) seeds to affected countries, instead of offering economic and financial assistance to enable them to increase the production and marketing of their own traditional food commodities.

5. ~~[Call on the Stated Clerk and on the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council (GAC) to contact the U.S. government, the World Bank, and other relevant institutions, to call for the immediate cancellation of the foreign debt of the countries most affected by the food crisis.]~~ [Call on the Stated Clerk and on appropriate entities of the General Assembly Council (GAC) to contact the U.S. government, the World Bank, and other relevant institutions, to call for the continued pursuit of debt relief as well as an immediate increase in their financial assistance for food aid and agricultural development in developing countries.]

Rationale

While people are talking about the food crisis, thousands are dying every day. Millions of children and elderly people in Africa, Asia, and South America are suffering from malnutrition and some in Haiti are literally eating dirt to try and survive. High-food-price-related riots and violence are breaking out in numerous cities around the world, compounding the sufferings of poor people.

The spread and depth of the crisis are such that important resources will need to be mobilized in order to bring a relevant response to this situation in any given country. Hopefully, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) will be able to provide leadership to all Presbyterians who want to help in this crisis. However, it appears that the Presbyterian Hunger Program and Presbyterian Disaster Assistance Program, as well as other ministry offices able and willing to act, are generally hampered by the lack of human and financial resources necessary for a significant level of response.

At the same time, PC(USA) partners around the world and some local government institutions are at a loss on how to organize an adequate response to local situations of hunger. Our partners are asking for help and we need to bring assistance in a way that will not hurt their countries further, now and in the future.

Already some aspects of this situation are the result of bad policies implemented by local governments under advisement by international institutions. It is well documented that fragile economies like Haiti, Lesotho, and others who were forced to lower tariffs could not resist the onslaught of cheap foreign commodity imports in the 1980s, 1990s, and in the first half of the 2000s. The result was the collapse of their local food production. It is important that the food production capacity of local economies be restored, as well as the food security capability of the most affected countries.

Furthermore, it is also well documented that the famous structural adjustment policies imposed on third world countries by the International Monetary Fund (IMF)—with the approval of the U.S. government—have worsened conditions of poverty. Large-scale migrations from rural areas to the slums of cities have increased the pressure on local social service delivery systems, particularly schools and hospitals. The result has been the resurgence of diseases like tuberculosis and malaria, the deepening of the HIV-AIDS epidemic, and a sweeping loss of hope for the poorest people. With inflation and devaluation of local currencies, citizens see their purchasing power melt away, while prices of basic food necessities are climbing beyond their reach.

It is quite disconcerting that in this disastrous context, some major U.S. seed and agro-chemical industries are pushing GMO seeds to many affected countries in Africa and Latin America. In El Salvador, in conjunction with USAID, the local government is actively promoting a farmer's assistance program offering genetically modified seeds and technical support for their use. Yet, the impact of such GMOs on the local environment and on local indigenous seeds is not known and may be very detrimental. We know already that, if not well-managed, even well-intended agricultural experiments may lead to further food catastrophes in future years.

Jesus' disciples had to confront the inadequacy of their attitudes as well as their resources when, in Mark 6, the hour was late, the crowd large, and stomachs were empty. They insisted that Jesus send the hungry thousands away. Jesus replied with a command, "You, yourselves, give them something to eat." As disciples in this time, we are called to answer the cries of the hungry with compassion and justice.

"We who belong to the church of our Lord Jesus now pledge to become the conscious instruments of Christ's judging and renewing action, praying that God's kingdom may come, God's will may be done that all the earth's children may be given daily bread” (Common Affirmation of Global Hunger, approved as amended by the 203rd General Assembly (1991), Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); Minutes, 2001, Part I, p.727).

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-30

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-30—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 11-30 requests the 218th General Assembly (2008) to respond to the global food crisis by setting up a special fund to support the efforts of overseas partners to address the crisis; speed up the deployment of mission personnel to work on hunger alleviation activities; invite Presbyterians to join church-wide spiritual disciplines such as monthly fasting; to raise the awareness of Presbyterians concerning the current food crisis; and call on the U.S. government, the World Bank, and similar institutions to cancel the foreign debts of countries most affected by the crisis.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-30 be approved with the following amendments:

“1. Launch a general appeal to all Presbyterians to donate to a special fund set up by the General Assembly Council to enable ~~the~~ [existing] Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) [programs] to provide better support to ~~[and accompaniment of]~~ our overseas partners, [most immediately in North Korea, in their efforts] ~~[trying]~~ to step up their response to the global food crises.”

2. Retain Recommendation 2. as it is.

3. Retain Recommendation 3. as it is.

“4. ~~[Produce relevant resources]~~ [U]sing all available communication means, to raise the awareness of Presbyterians about the current food crisis, including ~~[the dangers for the U.S. government, the European Union, and other international entities who want to use the current food crisis as an opportunity to offer more direct food aid exports and genetically modified (GMO) seeds to affected countries, instead of offering economic and financial assistance to enable them to increase the production and marketing of their own traditional food commodities.]~~ [its origins in the rising costs of petroleum products used in agricultural production and distribution, global warming which increases heat stress on crops and shifts rainfall patterns in agricultural areas, bio-fuel incentives that have reduced the food surpluses available for food aid, worldwide speculation in petroleum and commodity markets, the deficit-driven declining value of the U.S. dollar which reduces the amount of food aid that can be provided with currently budgeted programs, as well as associated justice issues such as efforts by the U.S. and other governments to link the provision of genetically modified (GMO) seeds to their direct food aid.]”

5. Amend Recommendation 5. as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“5. Call on the Stated Clerk and on ~~[the Executive Director]~~ [appropriate entities] of the General Assembly Council (GAC) to contact the U.S. government, the World Bank, and other relevant institutions, to call for ~~[the immediate cancellation of the foreign debt of the countries most affected by the food crisis]~~ [the continued pursuit of debt relief as well as an immediate increase in their financial assistance for food aid and agricultural development in developing countries].”

Rationale

General Assembly concern with world hunger is longstanding, as indicated particularly by policy statements approved in 1954, 1956, 1969, 1974, 1976, 1977, 1979, 1985, 1995, 2001, 2002, and 2006. Its 1979 statement defined five priorities for the church’s response to “Global Hunger”—direct food relief, development assistance, public policy, education, and responsible lifestyle. In 1981 the Presbyterian Hunger Program was established to provide a vehicle for the church to address hunger issues at home and abroad.

As a result of the Jubilee 2000 campaign, supported by PC(USA), substantial progress has been achieved in the cancellation of the foreign debts of the poorest developing countries, especially in Africa. For example, the World Bank's Highly Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative has so far led to the cancellation of $96 billion in debts in forty-one countries. Bilateral debts and those owed to regional development banks have been similarly reduced. But at the same time, international financial support for agricultural development in Africa declined by 63 percent between 1992 and 2002 and has rebounded only slightly since then. Consequently, a call for an increase in donor funding for agricultural development, food processing, and storage capacities would seem an appropriate complement to the ongoing process of debt cancellation.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-30

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-30—From the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC)

Item 11-30 urges the 218th General Assembly (2004) to mobilize Presbyterians for a significant response to the global food crises.

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) advises referring Item 11-30 to the General Assembly Council (GAC).

Rationale

The cost of basic food necessities has doubled and tripled in recent months, creating economic desperation for many families around the world. This has become a life and death situation, as parents, once barely (but still able) to provide sufficient food for their children are no longer able to provide the basic daily bread needed for sustenance. Referring this item to the GAC is the best way to ensure that effective action takes place to address this crucial need in our world.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 11-30

Comment on Item 11-30—From the General Assembly Council (GAC).

The GAC welcomes Item 11-30 because it addresses a critical need identified by our church's global partners.

It is supportive of the 2009–2010 GAC Mission Work Plan, which states:

The General Assembly Council will join God in transforming societies to reflect God's intention for a just, peaceful, and compassionate world by:

- ❖ Equipping and supporting congregations, mission initiators, global partners, and mission personnel as they bear witness to God's intentions;
- ❖ Working to alleviate injustice, poverty, hunger, and the effects of illness, disaster and suffering;

The GAC will "step up and speed up mission personnel deployment" through short-term (up to six months) mission volunteers, that can be managed using existing budgets and would have no financial implications.

Item 11-31

Commissioners' Resolution. Concerning Human Rights Violations in the Philippines.

In light of the numerous and well-documented human rights violations committed against church leaders and civil society groups in the Philippines since 2001, and to affirm new measures of solidarity with Philippine church partners, the 218th General Assembly (2008) does the following:

1. Calls upon the members and congregations of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to become more aware of the suffering and injustice—including murder, abduction, torture, and other gross human rights—endured by the leaders of churches and other civil society groups at the hands of elements of the Philippine military, and to pray faithfully for the safety, wisdom, and courage of the leadership of the Philippine churches and other civil society groups as they face state violence and oppression.

2. Calls upon the appropriate agencies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to encourage presbytery partnerships, joint projects, and immersion experiences in the Philippines, in cooperation with the United Church of Christ of the Philippines, providing copies of this resolution (coordinated with the resolution on human rights in Colombia and others), and requesting participants to provide updates upon returning regarding the violence and oppression aimed at church leaders and other civil society groups.

3. Directs the appropriate agencies within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to advocate that the United States Congress and the Department of State reduce U.S. funding of the Philippine military and to condition all future aid on: (a) concrete signs that the human rights of unarmed citizens and groups within civil society are respected by all levels of government, including the Philippine military; and (b) evidence that those elements of the Philippine military that are implicated in murder, abduction, torture, and other gross human rights violations are held accountable by the government.

4. Calls upon the members and churches of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to help provide, through special offerings, for the material needs of church leaders and their families who suffer because of murder, abduction, torture, and other gross human rights violations, channeling such aid through the appropriate offices of the United Church of Christ of the Philippines.

5. Directs the appropriate agencies within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to advocate with committees and delegates of the United Nations to review, continually and diligently, through the proper agencies of the United Nations Human Rights Commission, the improvement or decline of respect for human rights by all branches of the Philippine government.

6. Directs the Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to write the president of the Philippines about these concerns, urging her to use her authority as commander-in-chief of the armed forces of the Philippines to stop the abuse of human rights by elements of the Philippine military and encouraging her to give greater energy and resources to ensure that all branches of the government honor human rights in every sector of Philippine society.

Rationale

“If one member suffers, all suffer together with it ...” (1 Cor. 12:26).

“American Christians, who live under the mandates of the gospel and who share the rights and privileges of constitutional government and the freedoms attached thereto, must speak out to defend human rights everywhere, particularly when their taxes and their leaders support oppression and tyranny...” (Minutes, UPCUSA, 1974, Part I, p. 595).

Most Americans believe that human rights abuses in the Philippines ended with the fall of the Ferdinand Marcos dictatorship in 1986. But, unfortunately, human rights violations have reemerged as a major issue under the presidency of Gloria Arroyo, who took office in 2001. Since that time, hundreds of cases of extrajudicial murder, abduction, illegal detention, and torture have been documented. The victims are members of civil society, such as labor leaders, land reform activists, journalists, judges, lawyers, and church workers, including pastors. Credible evidence compiled by both Filipino and international human rights organizations indicates that elements within the Philippine military are responsible for these abuses. The United Nations special investigator for extra-judicial killings and the United States Department of State have also expressed concern over these abuses and have attributed most of them to the Philippine military.

Different organizations list different numbers for the victims of extrajudicial murder, according to the varying levels of evidence required by reporting agencies to meet the definition of extrajudicial murder. Some list, for instance, 300 murder victims, and others as many as 900. No matter which number is correct, the evidence points to an overwhelming abuse of human rights by the Philippine military.

Among the victims of human rights abuses by the Philippine military since 2001, more than thirty church workers and pastors have been killed, abducted, or tortured. The majority of these are from the United Church of Christ of the Philippines (UCCP), but also included are members of the United Methodist Church and the Independent Philippine Church.

The UCCP has had a long-standing partnership with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Through the Young Adult Volunteers Program and other mission arrangements, the UCCP has helped to train leaders in our denomination. Individual churches and presbyteries have had partnerships with churches and conferences in the UCCP, which have further developed and strengthened the connection between our two churches.

The killing and abduction of pastors and church workers in the Philippines has had a profound impact on churches and individuals in our denomination who have known and worked with many of the victims through the years. The 217th General Assembly (2006) responded with a resolution expressing its deep concern for the UCCP and its leaders who have been killed, calling upon the Philippine government to “bring to justice the killers of the pastors, other church workers, and other Filipinos similarly executed and/or tortured by military forces.”

Presbyterian churches in the Presbytery of Sacramento were responsible for bringing the general secretary of the UCCP to the United States in 2007 to speak out against these human rights abuses and to testify before a hearing on human rights abuses in the Philippines conducted by California Senator Barbara Boxer, chair of the Senate Foreign Relations East Asia and Pacific Islands Concerns Committee.

Earlier this year, the Presbyterian Peace Fellowship’s Philippine Solidarity Project sponsored a nine-person delegation to the Philippines, February 19–27, which was hosted by the UCCP. Asked how Presbyterians in the U.S. could be most helpful to the UCCP, five suggestions were offered:

- Tell the stories of the victims of empire to churches and communities in the U.S.
- Pray and stand strongly with the UCCP as we exercise our prophetic ministry in the Philippines.
- Lobby your country and government for fairer and more humane policies toward the Philippines.
- Join in the movement toward global peace and against U.S. interventionist wars.
- Organize regular and frequent immersion trips to the Philippines for pastors and leaders of the PC(USA).

This resolution presented to the 218th General Assembly (2008) builds on a long history of standing with our brothers and sisters in the Philippines who are being oppressed and abused.

The government of the United States gives millions of dollars every year to the Philippine military. This has increased dramatically since 2001. In 2000, the Philippines was the 47th largest recipient of U.S. military aid in the world; in 2006 it was the 11th largest. While some of this money is meant to help the Philippine military fight terrorism and insurgency, it is more often used to silence those elements in society who call for land reform, labor rights, and fair treatment of indigenous peoples. Pastors and church workers often become victims when they stand up on behalf of church members who are being oppressed.

Last year members of church and human rights groups in the U.S.A. attempted to limit the money going to the Philippine military until certain human rights conditions were met. The efforts were partially successful in getting, for the first time in Philippine-American relations, human rights conditions placed on appropriations to the Philippine military. It was, however, attached to only a small part of the appropriated money.

This year the U.S. State Department has reduced the amount of money it is asking for the Philippine military and has channeled some of the funding into human rights training for military personnel. This is a welcome change. However, the murders and abductions continue, and the Philippine military refuses to cooperate with investigations into human rights violations by those in authority over the military. It is imperative that the Philippine government know that the American people do not support the killing of unarmed civilians and that the United States Congress restrict all military aid given to the Philippines under the Foreign Operations Appropriations Bill with the human rights conditions that were only applied to part of the money in last year’s bill.

Meanwhile, church leaders in the UCCP and other churches are under siege. While maintaining a faithful witness to biblical principles of justice for the poor and the oppressed, the churches in the Philippines are faced with threats of violence. As long-time partners of the UCCP and its ministry, we are called to stand with them in solidarity through our faithful prayers, financial support, political advocacy, and continual encouragement.

The Reverend Roger Powers, Presbytery of Baltimore

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-31

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-31—From the Advisory on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 11-31 be approved.

Rationale

Over the last thirty years, the Presbyterian church has consistently expressed concern and compassion for our sisters and brothers in the Philippines. The General Assembly has expressed support for the Philippine people and their quest for democracy and human rights (Resolution on the United States and Its Asia-Pacific Relations, Minutes, 1994, Part I, p. 310).

The 217th General Assembly (2006) expressed its concerns for the denial of human rights in the Philippines and insisted on the maintenance of the rule of law and an open civil society in the Philippines (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 17, 585). The proposed report on Human Rights in Colombia, Item 11-18, includes a section reflective of this concern.

Item 11-32

[The assembly approved Item 11-32. See pp. 45, 47.]

Commissioners' Resolution. On Emergency Food Aid to North Korea.

That the 218th General Assembly (2008) resolve that the General Assembly Council, through its appropriate offices, be instructed to provide immediate food assistance to alleviate the sufferings of the people in North Korea.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) proclaimed the Gospel of Jesus Christ in the Korean peninsula more than a century ago through our missionaries, and our partner churches in South Korea have grown and continue to grow.

There existed a strong Christian community in North Korea, once known as “Jerusalem of the East” because of its strength in witness and service; since the division of Korea into North and South and the tragic war in Korea in the 1950s, the Christian presence in North Korea had been drastically decreased.

There has been a reemergence of Christian communities in North Korea since the 1980s, and there are two Protestant churches and one Catholic church in the capital city of North Korea, Pyongyang. Our church has assisted them in many ways, particularly when they faced severe food crisis in 2007 because of damaging floods.

During the harvest season of 2007, a devastating rainstorm and floods again destroyed 75 percent of the crops, farmlands, and houses in Hwanghae Province of North Korea, a major farm sector in the nation, and created a severe food crisis. The news of death by starvation in North Korea is increasing and there will be at least three months before the harvest season in North Korea.

Many people of North Korea now live on eating water-like porridge once or twice a day, and many of them cannot even go to work nor to school. Unless they are helped right away, many more face death by starvation. They need immediate food assistance.

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-32 —From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy advises that Item 11-32 be answered by the action taken on Item 11-30.

[The assembly approved Item 11-33 with amendment. See pp. 46, 47.]

Commissioners Resolution. On Peace with Iran.

[~~That the 218th General Assembly (2008) resolves:~~]

[The 218th General Assembly (2008) directs the Stated Clerk to send the following resolution to the president of the United States of America and the United States Congress:]

1. That the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) supports a peaceful, diplomatic means to resolve the tensions developing as a result of Iran's pursuit of its nuclear program, between the United States and Iran.
2. That the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) calls for direct, unconditional negotiations between the United States and Iran with the goal of finding and implementing a peaceful resolution.
3. [~~That the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is opposed to military action against Iran.~~] [That the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is opposed to preemptive military action by any nation against Iran.]
4. That the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) calls for a renewed effort at all levels—people-to-people, interfaith groups, nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), and government—to help the United States and Iran eliminate the tensions that have existed between our two nations and to unite the American and Iranian people in a common effort to solve the problems of poverty, illness, and climate change.

Rationale

Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ has called upon us to be peacemakers: “Blessed are the peacemakers, for they will be called children of God” (Mt. 5:9).

The people of the United States and Iran want to live in peace. They do not want war. A visit last year by a citizen peace delegation showed that there is much goodwill on the part of Iranians toward Americans.

A war between the United States and Iran could quickly spin out of control, causing the deaths of millions.

United States or Israeli military action against Iran would likely cause increased terrorism throughout the world, including here in the United States.

War with Iran could result in a partial or complete shutdown in the flow of Persian Gulf oil, causing a massive increase in the price of fuel and a major economic crisis.

With a weakened economy and consumer and investor confidence already shaken by a series of financial crises, another major shock such as war with Iran and the shutdown of Persian Gulf oil could be the straw that breaks the camel's back and sends the world into a prolonged recession or even a depression. Millions of people would suffer greatly if this comes to pass.

A successful peaceful, diplomatic solution to the U.S.-Iran issues would give humanity renewed hope that lasting peace and justice are indeed possible and plant the seeds of future peacemaking endeavors all over the world.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 11-33

Advice and Counsel on Item 11-33—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) generally supports Item 11-33. The ACSWP advises that Recommendation 3. be amended as follows: [Text to be added is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“3. That the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is opposed to [preemptive] military action [by any nation] against Iran.”

The ACSWP offers the following points of rationale in addition to those given in the commissioners' resolution:

1. This commissioners' resolution is in harmony with the peacemaking principles of the PC(USA) as recognized by the 210th General Assembly (1998), including "the promotion and preferential use of nonviolent means for conflict resolution and age," "the strengthening of international cooperation through the United Nations, including its peacemaking and peace-keeping roles;" "the use of unilateral peacemaking initiatives to reduce risks of conflict;" and the importance of self-examination and repentance in international relations as steps in the healing of conflict and the promotion of reconciliation (Minutes, 1998, Part I, pp.75, 457).

2. We are convinced that collateral damage and loss of innocent civilian life would be severe and unjustified in any such attack, let alone the possible deaths of "millions" of civilians should the war escalate or become nuclear.

3. Such a war would likely cause Iran to strike against U.S. interests in the Middle East and especially in Iraq, thereby indefinitely delaying the withdrawal of our troops from the latter country.

4. Such a war could lead to moves by Iran through its surrogates Hamas and Hezbollah that would greatly complicate the process of finding a basis for peace in Israel-Palestine.

5. We are not confident, judging from past experience, that the U.S.A. has given sufficient thought and planning to the consequences of such an attack in Iran itself and across the Middle East.

6. Such an attack, and military actions following upon it, would further overstretch our armed forces. In short, we may not have the military means to open up or sustain another "front."

It is our prayer that the present U.S. administration will not embark on a further military adventure likely to make peacemaking even more difficult for the next administration than it already will be.

Item 12-01

[The assembly approved Item 12-01. See p. 12.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the Strategy for Church Growth for African American Congregations from the Task Force to Develop a Strategy for African American Church Growth Within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and do the following:

1. Approve the report on “Developing an African American Church Growth Strategy” within the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
2. Encourage the General Assembly Council (GAC), specifically the Racial Ethnic & Women’s Ministries/Presbyterian Women ministry areas, to appoint a task force to monitor the progress of African American Church Growth and report to the 219th General Assembly (2010).
3. Encourage the General Assembly Council to partner with the National Black Presbyterian Caucus, presbyteries, and synods so that the strategies outlined below for African American Church Growth become a reality in the church at large. These strategies were approved at the 39th Annual Convention of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus (NBPC), held in Society Hill, Philadelphia, on July 11–15, 2007.
4. Encourage presbyteries and synods to help the church to reach the goals established by the 1998 Racial Ethnic Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy.

Rationale

The above recommendations are in response to the 2004 Referral: Item 10-01. Recommendation 8. To Direct Racial Ethnic Ministries to Assist the National Presbyterian Black Caucus to Develop a Strategy for Church Growth For African American Congregations—From the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 56, 683).

In light of the General Assembly mandate to increase racial ethnic membership in the PC(USA) by 20 percent by the year 2010,<sup>1</sup> the National Black Presbyterian Caucus recognizes the critical necessity to take the lead in developing a strategy for African American evangelism and church growth.

We recognize that a disservice is done when focusing on models from the “mega-church” movement and trying to make those models adaptable and relevant for smaller churches. We also recognize that models which are successful for Anglo American congregations and for non-African American congregations of color are not applicable to the African American church context.

For these reasons, it is crucial that NBPC, working in concert with the Office of Black Congregational Enhancement (BCE), take the initiative and provide the impetus for transformation and growth of Black Presbyterian congregations.

Despite the issuance of the aforementioned mandate, we have not realized significant net growth in African American membership in the PC(USA).

African Americans have been a strong witness in the Presbyterian church for more than 200 years, which is testimony to our strength, resolve, and commitment in spite of seemingly insurmountable odds.

African Americans have given voice and shape to the denominational structure. As it strives to do what God requires of us: “to do justice, [love mercy], and to walk humbly with [our] God” (Mic. 6:8), and in light of our Christian witness, the task force, on behalf of the National Black Presbyterian Caucus, invites the 218th General Assembly (2008) to partner with us as we continue to celebrate our faith journey within our denomination.

Following are strategies that we encourage presbyteries, synods, and General Assembly offices to implement in order to ensure that the 1998 Racial Ethnic Immigrant Evangelism Church Growth Strategy achieve the objective of increasing African American membership in the Presbyterian Church U.S.A.:

1. New Church Development and Transformation: Create a congregational-based educational resource and initiative.

Rationale: This initiative will be designed to assist African American congregations to develop alternative ways of initiating and promoting New Church Developments and Transformation churches. This will include churches in transition in their respective presbyteries, with an emphasis on restoring what we perceive as a lost connection with our communities.

2. Leadership Development

- a. Create an evangelism and missional church institute for African American pastors and congregational members to train and equip pastors for a missional approach to church growth.
- b. Develop a uniform standard for training commissioned lay pastors.
- c. Sponsor annual discernment events with prospective African American youth and young adult inquirers.
- d. Establish teaching congregations.

Rationale: Missional theology maintains that the mission of the church is the mission of God. God is a missionary God Who sent Jesus Who sends us to carry out the missio dei. The evangelism and missional church institute will serve as a repository of talent and knowledge for pastors and congregational leaders. The institute will provide workshops, lectures, and seminars in the missional approach to church growth.

The future of African American Presbyterians is dependent upon a deep reserve of talented and gifted pastors, clergy, and lay profession. Discernment events will allow young and old alike to explore the various ministry tracks in which they may serve the church and fulfill God's call in their lives.

An emersion experience in a nurturing environment would provide pastors a fresh and challenging transformational setting for both a spiritual and vocational encounter. It is a sabbatical event and an opportunity to fine-tune old skills and learn new insights for personal, community, and ecclesiastical transformation. Such a sabbatical experience will allow pastors to retool, refresh, and provide creative time to envision innovative strategies.

3. Youth and Young Adults

- a. Provide leadership development institutes.
- b. Host annual gatherings to help shape their Christian witness within the Body of Christ, i.e., education and discipleship training.
- c. To develop youth and young adult networks.
  - (1) Encourage the use of electronic media.
  - (2) Exchange of youth and young adult ministry models.

Rationale: Without the youth and young adults, the church will die. Youth and young adults will only stay with the church if they have a meaningful leadership voice and role, positions where they are able to see where their decisions take effect.

The institute needs to establish a future leaders component of the institute to help those who hear God's call and are inquiring of next steps. Youth and young adults need a place beyond the church's immediate environment to explore and nurture their sense of call. They need a place where the approach is realistic and practical.

Fellowship and training opportunities are needed for young adults who have already answered the call to serve God. Many of our churches have a small segment of young adults for whom these gatherings will also create opportunities for networking with the larger body of Christ. As a vital part of the church today, youth and young adult options and dreams must be explored.

Youth and young adults communicate through electronic media. Their gifts in this area can be used as the vehicle to network and promote Christian witness in intergenerational ministry.

4. Clergy Women:

- a. Develop an accountability strategy for the calling of African American women as senior pastors.
- b. Promote the call of women to viable and validated ministries.
- c. Design and create resources to emphasize and enhance awareness of the gifts of African American clergy women in the PC(USA).

Rationale: The PC(USA), for the last thirty-three years, has acknowledged the gifts of Black women in ministry and has authenticated the call of Black women to serve in validated calls. However, the church still does not have an organized and systematic means to address the entrenched resistance in presbyteries and congregations to call Black women to validated ministries.

In several cases where females have been called to African American congregations, they are offered minimal salary, poor working conditions, and have to prove themselves in ways that are unthinkable by male pastors. Women pastors still have to settle for small, disgruntled congregations who, in many instances, only extend the call to a woman because a male pastor was not available.

The above reasons have resulted in a disparity in the number of women called to validated ministries. Resources are needed (i.e. pamphlets) to highlight successful African American ministry models that can be used by presbyteries, committees on preparation for ministry (CPM), committees on ministry (COM), and pastor nominating committees (PNC) for the purpose of supporting clergywomen in their call.

5. Evangelism:

a. Design creative ministries that attract our target population and encourage the development of a relationship with our faith community.

b. Provide gatherings for ministers of music and worship leaders.

c. Encourage partnerships between African Heritage Presbyterian Association of Musicians and congregations.

Rationale: There is a need to create a network to research and develop creative ministry ideas to be shared among congregations. Each of these ministries will be designed to provide opportunities to share the gospel with the persons who participate in these ministries. The focus is to move beyond the expectation that new persons will primarily enter our faith communities through traditional ministries (i.e. worship, Bible study, Sunday school, and special events).

Equipping congregations with resources to deepen their appreciation for music ministry, and the diversity of options that are available to them, is the by-product of this effort.

Item 12-02

[In response to Item 12-02, the assembly approved an alternate resolution. See p. 12.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) Grow God's Church—Deep and Wide by

1. Declaring a church-wide commitment to participate in God's activity in transforming the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) during the 2009–2010 biennium.

2. Encouraging synods, presbyteries, sessions, and all agencies, entities, and networks of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to commit to grow the church deep and wide in the following areas:

a. Grow the Church: Invite persons to attend. Baptize children and adults. Increase our congregations.

b. Grow in Discipleship: Rediscover Scripture. Nurture spirituality. Affirm our Reformed heritage. Embrace Stewardship in all of life.

c. Grow into Diversity: Welcome everyone. Learn from others. Reflect the world.

3. Encouraging the General Assembly Council to support the whole church's commitment to grow God's Church—Deep and Wide in its ministries and mission.

4. Inviting the whole church to commit their prayers, gifts, resources, and time during 2009–2010, to discern God's call to grow the church.

Alternate Resolution Approved

In response to this recommendation, that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following resolution:

The 218th General Assembly (2008) strives to help Christ's Church Grow Deep and Wide under the guidance of the Holy Spirit by:

1. Declaring a churchwide commitment to participate in God's activity through Jesus Christ in transforming the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) during the 2009–2010 biennium in keeping with Jesus words, "... Just as the branch cannot bear fruit by itself unless it abides in the vine, neither can you unless you abide in me" (John 15:4) and the Great Commission found in Matthew 28:18–20, "... All authority in heaven and on earth has been given to me. Go therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them to obey everything I have commanded you. And remember, I am with you always, to the end of the age."

2. Encouraging synods, presbyteries, sessions, and all agencies, entities, and networks of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to commit to foster the growth of Christ's Church Deep and Wide in the following areas:

a. Grow in Evangelism: Share the good news of Jesus Christ. Invite persons to join in the church's worship and fellowship. Baptize children and adults.

b. Grow in Discipleship: Rediscover Scripture, including daily reading and study. Nurture relationships with Jesus Christ in the context of our Reformed heritage.

c. Grow in Servanthood: Stand alongside the wider community to promote the well-being and love of neighbor. Embrace stewardship in all of life.

d. Grow in Diversity: Welcome everyone. Learn from others. Reflect the cultural and ethnic diversity of God's peoples in the world.

3. Encouraging the General Assembly Council to support the whole church's commitment to foster the growth of Christ's Church Deep and Wide in its ministries and mission.

4. Inviting the whole church to commit their prayers, gifts, resources, and time during 2009–2010, to discern God's call to foster the growth of Christ's Church.

Rationale

The persistent decline in membership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) over the past forty years is a concern to the church at large and to the General Assembly Council. While membership has declined, many congregations and PC(USA) ministries are flourishing. As Christians, we are called to "make disciples of all peoples." Rather than give in to a climate of decline, the General Assembly Council believes that a more faithful stance is to take affirmative steps that renew our commitment to advance Christ's gospel in word and deed in our churches, our communities, and throughout the world.

In addition, it is important that we keep all aspects of church growth in biblical and theological perspective. In this regard, it is worth noting that if the opposite of our current situation in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) were true—if we were growing exponentially in attendance and members—our situation might be no more satisfying. This is because church growth for its own sake is never the aim of the Christian Church. Instead, our growth as Christians, whether quantitative or qualitative, is to take place so that God may be glorified as the body of Christ is drawn into ever-closer communion with God. ("But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and to the day of eternity. Amen" 2 Peter 3:18.)

Growth is the natural consequence of the Christian life. In the Epistle to the Ephesians, Paul identifies growth in the church as the necessary process of spiritual health: "... we must grow up in every way into him who is the head, into Christ, from whom the whole body, joined and knit together by every ligament with which it is equipped, as each part is working properly, promotes the body's growth in building itself up in love" (Eph. 4:15b–16).

Rightly understanding growth in the life of the church is as important as the growth itself. When growth occurs in any aspect of the church, we may be tempted to take credit for it. Scripture makes clear, however, that God is the ultimate giver of growth and life. Jesus said, "Just as the branch cannot bear fruit by itself unless it abides in the vine, neither can you unless you abide in me" (John 15:4b). Being a part of God's family and abiding in Christ is a necessary aspect of spiritual growth. A multiplicity of human ministries contributes to spiritual growth in people's lives, thus emphasizing God's ultimate role in the gift of spiritual life. Paul wrote to the Corinthians saying, "I planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the growth" (1 Cor. 3:6).

Conversely, history has shown that religious organizations or groups may experience rapid and large growth in adherents, even though the wider Church may not affirm that God was behind that growth or that the growth was based on dubious theological motivations.

Finally, growth is a central aspect of our Reformed heritage. Together with the Scots Confession, “We most surely believe that God preserved, instructed, multiplied, honored, adorned, and called from death to life his Kirk in all ages ...” (The Book of Confessions, The Scots Confession, 3.05). Thus, although we are unable to determine growth, and unable to affirm in all circumstances exactly where and when God will cause growth, we do have a role in the healthy, spiritual growth of our members, attendees, churches, and programs. Indeed, in the same way that we feed our children and ourselves to engender greater physical health and growth, the Scriptures are filled with examples and admonitions urging us to nurture, foster, and cultivate spiritual health and growth within the community of Christ’s church (1 Sam. 2:26; Mt. 13:31–33; 2 Cor. 10:15; Col. 1:10; 2 Pet. 3:18). Stating our desire and intention to nurture healthy spiritual growth is the first step in contributing toward that result.

Rationale

The Deliverance* of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., assigns to the General Assembly Council responsibility for election of directors to the PC(USA) Investment and Loan Program’s Board of Directors, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Directors are nominated by various agencies, i.e., the General Assembly Nominating Committee, the General Assembly Council Nominating Committee, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, and by the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc.*

*Note: Nominations are pending the General Assembly approval of the Presbyterian Deliverance Sections 2.(b) (ii) and (vi).

Short Bios for New Nominees

Stephen Bacon: A retired seminary development officer and a fund raising consultant, Stephen Bacon serves part time as a director of the Lilly Pastoral Residency Program. Bacon has had pastoral experience as well as a background as an interim presbytery executive.

William Nelson: Before his retirement, Nelson was a commercial banker for almost thirty years. He worked as a relationship manager to commercial banking customers in his beginning career and for the last seventeen years served in credit and risk management capacities, approving commercial loans among other duties.

Catesby Woodford: A lawyer, Mr. Woodford has been involved in a variety of ways at the congregational, presbytery, and General Assembly levels of the church. He has a great knowledge of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and as a former member of the General Assembly Council served as the chairperson of the Mission Support Services Committee.

Agnes Young: A retired social worker, Agnes Young served as the director of the Hearing Division of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Welfare Department. She has experience in administrative law, working in labor relations and the rights of persons with disabilities. Young has chaired the Committee on Ministry of the Presbytery of Boston and has served on the Synod Mission Council and the Board of Trustees of the Synod of the Northeast.

Alice Okazaki: Alice Okazaki is a retired quality control and forms supervisor for California Casualty Insurance Company. She has been the moderator of the Presbytery of San Francisco and a member of the General Assembly Council.

Item 12-04

[The assembly approved Item 12-04. See pp. 12, 13.]

The Board of Directors of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) confirm the election of James L. Hudson to the office of president of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., for a four-year term.

Rationale

The 1995 Deliverance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (PILP), as well as its bylaws, provide that its board of directors elect the president to a four-year term subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. On July 31, 2003, the board of directors elected James L. Hudson to a four-year term as president of the corporation, effective September 2, 2003. The 216th General Assembly (2004) confirmed his election.

During 2007, the Personnel/Nominating Committee of the PILP Board of Directors undertook an extensive end-of-term review working with the Human Resources Office of the General Assembly Council. Upon review of the president's performance and comments from staff, officers, and directors, as well as colleagues from other General Assembly agencies, middle governing bodies, and churches, the Personnel/Nominating Committee recommended that the president should be reelected to a new four-year term. The PILP Board of Directors elected Hudson president on October 27, 2007.

Hudson is a resident of Prospect, Kentucky, and worships as part of the congregation at Crescent Hill Presbyterian Church. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Chicago and has served congregations in River Forest, Illinois, and Springfield, Missouri. He served on the staff and as co-executive of the Synod of Lincoln Trails during twenty-two years.

Hudson earned a Bachelor of Arts degree from Grove City College in Pennsylvania, a Masters of Divinity degree from Princeton Theological Seminary, and a Masters of Business Administration degree from Indiana University.

During his tenure as president and chief executive officer, Hudson has worked with the PILP Board of Directors to grow the program to meet the financing needs of Presbyterian congregations and entities to expand and improve their facilities, while meeting all of the guidelines of the North American Securities Administrators Association. He has led the staff in coordinating the Church Loan Program and PILP into a seamless program for borrowers.

*Item 12-05

[The assembly approved Item 12-05. See pp. 12, 13.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following revisions to the 1995 Deliverance of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc., as amended by the 209th General Assembly (1997) and the 215th General Assembly (2003), to be effective on the date of such approval.

1. Shall the 1995 Deliverance be amended as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown in italics.]

“Section 1. (a) Corporation established—There shall be established at the close of business on July 31, 1995, as a separate corporate agency of the General Assembly a corporation, which shall be incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and shall be known as Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (‘the Corporation’). The Corporation shall be a membership corporation and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation shall hold the sole membership (which shall be nonvoting) in the Corporation.

“(b) Forms of Articles—The articles of incorporation of the Corporation shall be in substantially the form submitted to and approved by the 207th General Assembly (1995), with such changes therein as may be approved by the General Assembly Council or by an authorized committee thereof. The initial board of directors shall consist of six directors, who shall serve as the board of directors of the Corporation until another board is chosen under the provisions of Section 2(b) herein below.

“Section 2. (a) Corporate charter—The articles of incorporation of the Corporation shall provide for its governance and subordination to the General Assembly Council to substantially the following effect:

“The management and disposition of the affairs and property of the Corporation shall be vested in directors, who shall be selected from time to time in such number and manner and for such terms as the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the ‘General Assembly’) may determine. All the business and affairs of the said corporation shall be conducted by the directors under and subject to the direction of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or any agency thereof thereunto duly authorized, so far as such direction shall be lawful and in accordance with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and of the United States of America. No material change shall be made in these articles of incorporation without the prior approval of the General Assembly.

“(b) Governing board—(1) Until further action of the General Assembly or of any officer or agency thereof thereunto duly authorized, the board of directors of the Corporation shall consist of fifteen members. Employees and staff of General Assembly-level entities are ineligible to serve on the board of directors. The board shall be selected as follows:

“(i) Six at-large members shall be nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and elected by the General Assembly Council. Such at-large members shall be elected by the General Assembly Council for a four-year terms, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Each person so elected shall be eligible to serve up to a maximum of two terms. No director may serve more than two terms, full or partial.

“(ii) ~~Four~~ Two members shall be elected by the General Assembly Council from among its own membership. One member shall be selected from the membership of the Stewardship Committee and one member shall be selected from the membership of the Evangelism Committee. Such members shall be elected by the General Assembly Council for one, four-year, non-renewable terms, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Each person so elected shall be eligible to serve ~~up to a maximum of two terms~~, so long as such person continues to serve as a member of the General Assembly Council on the above-specified committees. No director may serve more than ~~two~~ one terms, full or partial. Membership on the board of directors shall in any event end at the end of the term of service on General Assembly Council and/or on the above-specified committees.

“(iii) Two members shall be nominated by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation and ~~shall be~~ elected by the General Assembly Council. Such members shall be elected by the General Assembly Council for a four-year term, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Each person so elected shall be eligible to serve up to a maximum of two terms. No director may serve more than two terms, full or partial.

“(iv) One member shall be nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee from among the synods of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and ~~shall be~~ elected by the General Assembly Council. Such member shall be elected by the General Assembly Council for a four-year term, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Each person so elected shall be eligible to serve up to a maximum of two terms. No director may serve more than two terms, full or partial.

“(v) One member shall be nominated by the General Assembly Nominating committee from among the presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and ~~shall be~~ elected by the General Assembly Council. Such member shall be elected by the General Assembly Council for a four-year term, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Each person so elected shall be eligible to serve up to a maximum of two terms. No director may serve more than two terms, full or partial.

“(vi) Upon recommendation of the Corporation’s Personnel/Nominating Committee, three ~~One~~ at large members shall be nominated by the ~~National Ministries Division Committee of the General Assembly Council or its successor board of directors of the Corporation~~ and ~~shall be~~ elected by the General Assembly Council. Such at large members shall be elected by the General Assembly Council for a four-year term, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. Each person so elected shall be eligible to serve up to a maximum of two terms. No director may serve more than two terms, full or partial.

“(c) By-laws—The by-laws of the Corporation shall state that in making selections and nominations, consideration shall be given to the need for individuals having experience and skill relevant to the purposes and activities of the Corporation. The by-laws will contain a mechanism for the General Assembly Council to coordinate the review and selection of members of the board of directors.

“(d) Executives—As provided by G-9.0703 of the Book of Order, the board of directors of the Corporation, ~~with the concurrence of the General Assembly Council,~~ shall elect a president for a term of four years, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly. ~~With the concurrence of the General Assembly Council,~~ The board of directors may elect vice presidents, a treasurer, and a secretary for terms of up to four years. The board of directors may elect other assistant executives. Such executives shall be eligible for reelection. The board of directors of the Corporation shall cause the president, who shall be the chief executive officer of the Corporation, to be accountable to the board of directors for carrying out its policies and directives, and for maintaining an effective partnership with ~~Corporate and Administrative Services and National Ministries Division~~ Shared Services and Evangelism and Church Growth Ministry as set out in this Deliverance, particularly Section 2.(e)(3). The board of directors of the Corporation shall ensure that the president maintains an appropriate partnership with the General Assembly Council through the Office of its Executive Director.

“(e) Functions—Subject to any inconsistent provision of the Articles of Agreement or the Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and subject to the lawful directions from time to time of the General Assembly or the General Assembly Council or of any agency thereof thereunto duly authorized, the Corporation shall:

“(1) Sell and issue certificates, notes, or any other financial instruments approved by its board of directors in order to raise capital for the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

“(2) As to the investment funds received by the Corporation, set the underwriting standards and loan criteria for loans to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations, governing bodies, theological institutions, and educational institutions related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) to enable them to acquire or improve real property. ~~All such loans shall be processed and administered by the National Ministries Division, pursuant to such underwriting standards and loan criteria as may be established from time to time by the board of directors of the Corporation.~~

“(3) Contract with existing Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) entities, or outside parties, for various services. These include, but are not limited to, marketing of investments, management of assets, and record keeping, and processing and servicing of loans. In so doing, a collaborative relationship shall be maintained with ~~Mission Support Services Shared Services, and the National Ministries Division and its associate director for Evangelism and Church Development~~ Evangelism and Church Growth Ministry to avoid the duplication of services already performed by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) entities.

“(4) Train and orient volunteers, committees, employees, and others within synods and presbyteries who have responsibilities related to the work of the Corporation.

“(5) Provide accounting and reporting with respect to all of the foregoing.

“(6) Provide such other mission, finance, and related services as the General Assembly or the General Assembly Council may direct or approve.

“(f) Personnel policies—The board of directors shall develop position descriptions and personnel procedures for all positions. In so doing, the General Assembly Churchwide Compensation Guidelines ~~and the Personnel Policies for General Assembly Entities and Guidelines for Governing Bodies of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)~~, or successors to such documents, shall apply.

“(g) Reporting responsibility—The Corporation shall report to the General Assembly through the General Assembly Council.”

Rationale

The 1995 Deliverance that created the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. (Corporation), sets forth the board of director’s nomination and election process as well as length and number of terms. Modifications to the GAC’s size and procedures will result in a reduction in the number of board members to be nominated from among the GAC’s membership. Additional revisions are recommended to clarify GAC committee and ministry area names and otherwise update the 1995 Deliverance. A change in the 1995 Deliverance must be approved by the GAC and the General Assembly.

Item 12-07

[The assembly disapproved Item 12-07. See pp. 12, 13.]

On Encouraging the Observation of Children's Day on the Second Sunday in June—From the Presbytery of Blackhawk.

The Presbytery of Blackhawk overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take specific steps to encourage the promotion and observation of Children's Day on the second Sunday in June, instructing the General Assembly Council, Congregational Ministries Division, and all other appropriate entities of PC(USA) to do the following:

- Encourage PC(USA) churches to adopt a Children's Day observation.
- Promote Children's Day by print publications, video, Internet, and all other communication means on an annual basis.
- Align with other individuals, groups, organizations, and denominations promoting the second Sunday in June as Children's Day.

Rationale

Our denomination has a history of caring for children and the observation of Children's Day.

Children are our future and they need our Christian love and nurture. Jesus said, "... 'Let the little children come to me, and do not stop them; for it is to such as these that the kingdom of heaven belongs'" (Matt. 19:14).

A special day for children helps accent the needs of children: education, health care, spiritual guidance, adoption, protection, and love.

Children are in need of their own special day, as parents have their own days, i.e. Mother's Day and Father's Day.

Children's Day can be used by the church for the promotion and recognition of youth and those who are in ministry to youth. The church is a great source of encouragement for youth.

Children's Day confirms PC(USA) witness to the world and to its most vulnerable.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 12-07

Comment on Item 12-07—From the General Assembly Council.

Item 12-07 calls on the PC(USA), through the General Assembly Council, to encourage the promotion and observance of Children's Day on the second Sunday in June.

As part of the programmatic work of the PC(USA), the General Assembly Council participates in the ecumenical observance of "Children's Sabbath," usually the third Sunday in October.

The addition of "Children's Day" in June would have financial and programmatic implications depending on the level of promotion. A listing on the program calendar and Web-based promotion would require minimal financial investments. The annual creation of print and video resources would require significant staff and financial resources.

It is not clear what the GAC would be required to do in order to “align with other individuals, groups, organizations, and denominations” regarding Children’s Day. Currently, the two denominations that promote Children’s Day are the African Methodist Episcopal Church and the Church of the Nazarene.

Item 12-08

[The assembly approved Item 12-08 with comment. See pp. 12, 13.]

On Directing the GAC to Produce Adolescent Human Development Resources—From the Presbytery of Grace.

The Presbytery of Grace overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the General Assembly Council to produce adolescent human development resources based upon Scripture and the Reformed theological tradition. These resources would explore all facets of adolescent development including human sexuality.

Comment:* We choose to plant the seed of peace. We set aside our individual desires to “win” and to further our own agendas and put our faith in God, and send this overture on without trying to advocate one position or another, trusting not only God, but our fellow Presbyterians to do what is right not only for our children but for our denomination. We send this overture on in the hope that the next step of the process will cultivate the seed we have planted, faithfully stepping out in mutual trust.

Rationale

Due to the action of the 217th General Assembly (2006), our denomination currently offers no sexuality curriculum at all for our youth. If we take no action to provide such curriculum, our youth will be deprived of guidance to help them navigate, with the eyes of faith, the challenging waters of our culture.

We live in a culture that constantly bombards its young people with confusing messages through the media and music about sex and sexuality. The issues of sexual activity among teens, teen pregnancies, and sexually transmitted diseases are vital ones to discuss with our youth. It is incumbent upon the church to speak to and educate our youth in this area of life, offering them sound teaching that is faithful to our biblical understanding, faithful to our Reformed heritage, and relevant to their lives today.

One of the basic struggles of youth is identity formation. Families and the church help Christian youth wrestle with “Who am I?” and “To whom do I belong?” These identity questions cannot be separated from their sexuality. Yet currently the church has no voice, with respect to curriculum, that will equip youth to deal with the reality that sexuality is a major developmental factor of adolescence as teens come to know who they are and what it means to be responsible as one who belongs to God.

Through the ages the Reformed church has dealt with important issue of the day, asking what the Holy Spirit would have us see and do about it. The 21st century is no different. Sexuality curriculum needs to be available to help the youth become informed people, as life and faith collide in their day-to-day world. It is imperative to address this important issue so that the church can empower our youth in the process of maturing faith and wisdom as they continue to develop into Christ’s beloved and responsible disciples.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 12-08

Advice and Counsel on Item 12-08—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 12-08 asks the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the General Assembly Council to produce adolescent human development resources based upon Scripture and the Reformed theological tradition. These resources would explore all facets of adolescent development including human sexuality.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) advises that this item be approved as amended: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“The Presbytery of Grace overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the General Assembly Council to produce adolescent human development resources based upon Scripture and the Reformed theological tradition. These resources would explore all facets of adolescent development, including [~~human sexuality~~] [comprehensive, culturally proficient instruction about the full range of human sexuality issues].”

Rationale

The ACWC welcomes Item 12-08 calling for development of a sexuality curriculum. The PC(USA) currently has no denominational materials to provide adolescents and their families with information and guidance about their development as maturing sexual persons in the context of our faith tradition. Reliable studies make us aware that young people live in a sexually saturated society in which their decisions and behaviors make them vulnerable to a number of emotional and physical challenges. Data on teenage sexuality also reflect gender, racial, and ethnic differences that must be addressed in culturally appropriate materials.

The data is sobering. According to “Facts on American Teens’ Sexual and Reproductive Health,” (September 2006) Guttmacher Institute:

- Most young people have sex for the first time at about age 17, but do not marry until their middle or late 20s. This means that young adults are at risk of unwanted pregnancy and sexually transmitted infections (STIs) for nearly a decade.
- By their 18th birthday, 6 in 10 teenage women and more than 5 teenage men have had sexual intercourse.
- A sexually active teen who does not use contraceptives has a 90% chance of becoming pregnant within a year.
- Of the approximately 750,000 teen pregnancies that occur each year, 82% are unintended. More than one-quarter ends in abortion.
- Young African American women have the highest teen pregnancy rate, followed by Latinas and non-Latina whites.
- The pregnancy rate among black teens decreased 40% between 1990 and 2000, more than the overall U.S. teen pregnancy rate declined during the same period (36%).
- The majority of the decline in teen pregnancy rates is due to more consistent contraceptive use; the rest is due to higher proportions of teens choosing to delay sexual activity.
- Despite a decline in teen pregnancy rates between 1995 and 2002, the United States teen pregnancy rates are twice as high as those in England, Wales, and Canada, and 8 times as high as The Netherlands and Japan.

The Center for Disease Control reported in March 2008 that:

- At least 1 in 4 teenage girls in the U.S. has a sexually transmitted disease, or 3 million teens.
- The HPV (Human Papillomavirus) that causes cervical cancer is by far the most common sexually transmitted infection in teen girls aged 14 to 19, with the highest overall prevalence among black girls (nearly 50%). That rate is 20 percent among both whites and Mexican American teens.

However, studies also show that the availability and the quality of sexuality education are important factors in the decisions that young people make about their health and sexuality. A September 2007 resource, “Facts on Sex Education in the United States” (Guttmacher) reports that:

- By 2002, one-third of teens had not received any formal instruction about contraception.
- There is currently no federal program dedicated to supporting comprehensive sex education that teaches young people about both abstinence and contraception.
- More than 9 in 10 teachers believe that students should be taught about contraception, but 1 in 4 are prohibited from doing so.
- Despite years of evaluation in this area, there is no evidence to date that abstinence-only education delays teen sexual activity. Moreover, recent research shows that abstinence-only strategies may deter contraceptive use among sexually active teens, increasing their risk of unintended pregnancy and sexually transmitted infections (STIs).
- Evidence shows that comprehensive sex education programs that provide information about both abstinence and contraception can help delay the onset of sexual activity among teens, reduce their number of sexual partners and increase contraceptive use when they become sexually active. These findings were underscored in “Call to Action to Promote Sexual Health and Responsible Sexual Behavior,” issued by former Surgeon General David Satcher in June 2001.

The ACWC lifts up Item 12-08’s rationale that states a “sexuality curriculum needs to be available to help the youth become informed people, as life and faith collide in their day-to-day world.” The data on teenage sexuality reflect the lives of American teens that are struggling to understand the development of their bodies and make decisions about their sexuality. Presbyterian teens are a diverse population and they look to their church for resources that will help them know God’s love and guidance as their bodies develop and they grow into mature adults.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) directed the General Assembly Council (Congregational Ministries Division) and all other PC(USA) entities to use the biblical and confessional teachings that sexual relationships belong only within the bond of marriage of a man and a woman as the standard for the development of any future materials or recommendations for materials. It added that the curriculum should include information on reproductive health to allow for an open discussion between teachers and youth in light of our understanding of God's plan for sexuality. Given the data on teenage sexual behavior, there is a need for an adolescent curriculum on sexuality that provides comprehensive information and encourages the open conversation between leaders and youth in diverse communities.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 12-08

Item 12-08 asks the General Assembly to direct the General Assembly Council (GAC) to produce resources that would explore all facets of adolescent development including human sexuality.

Congregational Ministries Publishing previously produced a human sexuality curriculum that was withdrawn at the direction of the 216th General Assembly (2004). Currently, the PC(USA) does not produce, promote, or make available curricular resources that address issues of human sexuality.

Development of new adolescent development resources that deal with human sexuality would be a multiyear process, necessitating significant additional staff and funds beyond those included in Congregational Ministries Publishing's current staffing rationale and budget.

A. *Sam and Helen Walton Awards for 2007

The General Assembly Council reports the recipients of the Sam and Helen Walton Awards for 2007 for outstanding new church developments:

- 1. Montgomery Ministries, Presbytery of New Brunswick, Synod of the Northeast;
- 2. Kaw Prairie Community Church, Presbytery of Heartland, Synod of Mid-America;
- 3. Word of Life Presbyterian Church, Presbytery of Santa Barbara, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii;
- 4. Dripping Springs Presbyterian Church, Presbytery of Mission, Synod of the Sun;
- 5. Spanish Springs Presbyterian Church, Presbytery of Nevada, Synod of the Pacific;
- 6. Presbyterian Church of the Springs, Presbytery of Salem, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic;
- 7. Iglesia de la Comunidad, Presbytery of San Fernando, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii;
- 8. Hot Metal Bridge Faith Community, Presbytery of Pittsburgh, Synod of the Trinity.

B. *Sam and Helen Walton Awards for 2008

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) recognize the recipients of the 2008 Sam and Helen Walton Awards:

- Sherwood Presbyterian Church, Synod of the Pacific, Cascades Presbytery; Sherwood, Oregon;
- First United Presbyterian Church of Lackawanna Valley, Synod of the Trinity, Lackawanna Presbytery; Olyphant, Pennsylvania;
- Nuevo Amanecer Hispanic New Church Development, Synod of the Pacific, San Joaquin Presbytery; Bakersfield, California;
- Mission Bay Community Church, Synod of the Pacific, San Francisco Presbytery; San Francisco, California.

Rationale

In late December 1991, Sam and Helen Walton made a generous gift through the Presbyterian Foundation of $6 million dollars that included $3 million to be used for new church developments that have placed an emphasis on site acquisitions. All nominees meet the qualifications as set forth in the application. The General Assembly Council Executive Committee, acting on behalf of the General Assembly between meetings, approved the above recipients during its conference call meeting of June 12, 2007.

Item 12-C

[The Assembly Committee on Church Growth and Christian Education approved Item 12-C. See pp. 11–12.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) recognize the following Women of Faith award recipients at the 218th General Assembly (2008):

The Reverend Magdalena I. Garcia

The Reverend Ann L. Hayman

Theodora Jackson

RationaleWomen of Faith Awards “Her-Story”

The Women of Faith awards were established in 1986 to honor female members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) whose lives exemplify their Christian commitments.

Each year a theme is designated. Nominations are received from throughout the church and honorees are selected by a committee of representatives from groups officially related to the Women’s Ministries area.

Awards are presented at the Women of Faith Breakfast during the General Assembly. This breakfast is an annual celebration of God’s activity in the lives of women and their response to God’s presence.

The theme for the 2008 Women of Faith Awards is “Visionary Women Transforming the Church and Society.”

The 2008 selection committee included Cynthia Joe, Presbyterian Women Gathering Committee, moderator; Monica Ajak, National Network of Presbyterian College Women; Sarah Colwill, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns; Ann Moe, General Assembly Council; Ruth-Aimée Belonni-Rosario, Racial Ethnic Young Women Together; and Florence Vargas, Presbyterian Women.

Selection committee members were instructed to consider the following in reviewing the thirty nomination forms and in making their selection of three women to receive this award:

- How have the women transformed the church?

- How have the women transformed society?
- Strive for racial ethnic diversity in selecting the three women.
- Strive for geographic diversity in selecting the three women.
- The women must be living.
- GAC staff members are ineligible.
- This is a once-in-a-lifetime award; a woman cannot be selected more than once.

It was the responsibility of the General Assembly Council Leadership and Vocation Goal Area Committee to approve the selection of these three women to be the recipients of the 2008 Women of Faith awards.

Biographical sketches of these three women are as follows:

1. The Reverend Magdalena I. Garcia

The Reverend Magdalena I. García is a member of the Presbytery of Chicago where she has lived for more than thirty-five years and where she was ordained to the ministry of Word and Sacrament in 1993.

García is pastor of Ravenswood Presbyterian Church, a multicultural and bilingual congregation in Chicago. The church is one congregation with two ministries and one pastor. It has combined boards (session and deacons) and committees. There are language-specific worship services and Bible studies. She is also a member of the presbytery's Multicultural Church Committee and the Hispanic Ministries fellowship.

The Coordinating Team of Hispanic Latin National Presbyterian Women says that Rev. Garcia is certainly a positive role model for this generation of Hispanic women and for generations to come.

Formerly, García was managing editor for ¡Exito!, a Spanish-language weekly published by the Chicago Tribune, which was replaced by the daily Hoy. She was previously associate director of Funds Development at McCormick Theological Seminary, where she received a master of divinity degree in 1989. García has served as preacher, keynote speaker, and worship leader for several national and regional church events, including the Presbyterian Women Gathering (2000) and Encuentro—the national conference of Hispanic Latin Presbyterian Women (1998, 2001, and 2007). During academic year 2007–2008, she is serving as adjunct faculty for a ministries course at McCormick Theological Seminary, and teaching pastor at the University of Chicago Divinity School.

García is the author of the compendium Toward a Liberating Faith: Introduction to Mujerista Theology, published by the Women's Ministries program area of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). She also has served as a freelance writer and translator for denominational resources.

Born in Cuba, García has been married to Augusto Torres, from Ecuador, for seventeen years, with whom she shares the joy and challenge of raising their ten-year-old son, Miguel Ángel.

2. The Reverend Ann L. Hayman

The Reverend Ann L. Hayman is the director of development (formerly the program director) of the Mary Magdalene Project, which is a long-term residential program that provides alternatives to women involved in street prostitution in southern California. She founded this program.

Born and raised in Caldwell, Idaho, Ann Hayman graduated from the College of Idaho in 1971 with a B.A. in music education and German. Following college, she taught typing and journalism for a year at Wasatch Academy in Mount Pleasant, Utah, and managed a retirement community (the PEO Chapter House, Caldwell, Idaho) for three years. She attended San Francisco Theological Seminary, graduating in 1978. Hayman was ordained a Presbyterian minister on Epiphany Sunday, January 6, 1979. She served as an assistant pastor at First Presbyterian Church, El Centro, California, from 1978 to 1980.

In June 1980, Ann accepted the position of program director for the Mary Magdalene Project (MMP), a long-term residential program that provides alternatives to women involved in street prostitution in Southern California. She served in that capacity until July 2006 when she became director of development for the MMP.

3. Theodora G. Jackson

Theodora G. Jackson (Thea) was born on October 25, 1923, in Richmond, Virginia. In 1943, she graduated from Hampton University, Hampton, Virginia, and married the day after graduation. Jackson founded the Jamaica Service Project in Queens, New York. The adult center is named for her. She visits numerous women in the local women's prisons.

Jackson has been the recipient of numerous awards and recognitions, including the 2002 New York State Martin Luther King Jr. Humanitarian Award. Jackson was the designer and director of the Older Adult Program in the First Presbyterian Church in Jamaica, New York, from 1969 until 1972. The Jamaica Service Project became one of two "Administration on Aging" national models for developing comprehensive and coordinated systems of services for the aging. Thea Jackson served as executive director of that multi-service agency until 1980, when she was appointed deputy director of the New York State Office for the Aging.

After leaving state service in 1991, Jackson served as consultant on a variety of aging and educational projects. She also became a volunteer at the Bedford Hills Correctional Facility in the children and parenting programs. In 1996, she provided the community, civilian leadership for the re-establishment of a college degree program at that facility.

Jackson and her husband, Bailey W. Jackson, became the proud parents of three children and now have seven grandchildren and seven great grandchildren.

Item 12-Info

Report of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Investment and Loan Program, Inc. for the Years 2006 and 2007 to the 218th General Assembly (2008)

In gratitude for God's bounty, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Investment and Loan Program, Inc (PILP), promotes the growth of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) by bringing together the dreams of church developers and the resources of Presbyterian investors and financial partners. The PILP offers investments providing a competitive financial return plus the opportunity to participate in the expansion of the Kingdom of God through Presbyterian congregations, governing bodies, and mission agencies. The PILP offers loans to Presbyterian congregations and middle governing bodies to purchase, renovate, and expand worship and mission space and to promote the growth of the church. Guided by the best practices of the financial industry, PILP is committed to faithful stewardship of the resources entrusted to us for the support of the mission of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

The PILP began 2006 with a disbursed loan portfolio of $47.9 million and an additional $8.8 million in commitments pending close and construction loans not yet disbursed. At the end of 2007, PILP had a disbursed loan portfolio of $56.3 million and an additional $8.4 million in commitments pending closing and construction loans not yet disbursed. That represents growth of 14 percent over the two-year period. In 2006, PILP disbursed $10.6 million in new loans from investor funds; in 2007 PILP disbursed $7.1 million. We began 2006 with just under $50 million in investments from individual Presbyterians, Presbyterian congregations, middle governing bodies, and General Assembly agencies. We ended 2007 with $61.8 million in investments. That is a 23.6 percent increase in two years.

In 2007, PILP experienced its seventh consecutive year with an annual surplus. The surplus of $467,895 in 2007 was our largest annual surplus and represents a 42 percent increase over the 2006 surplus of $330,340. The combined surpluses from 2006 and 2007 have given us a significant push toward our goal of rebuilding our capital base back to the $5 million we were given as start-up capital.

The Uniform Securities Act determines who regulates PILP's investment products. The North American Securities Administrators Association establishes program guidelines for denominational investment and loan programs. The PILP is expected to maintain a capital adequacy ratio of net worth to total assets of 5 percent. At the end of 2007 our capital adequacy ratio was 6.2 percent. The PILP is expected to maintain a liquidity ratio of liquid assets to Term Notes and Denominational Account Receipts ("DARs") of at least 8 percent. At the end of 2007 our liquidity ratio was 19.1 percent. The PILP is required to limit senior secured debt to no more than 10 percent of total assets. At the end of 2007 PILP had no senior secured debt.

Some commercial lenders may offer low rates or waive certain fees, but PILP is the only lender who gives money back to borrowing congregations. Through the "Get the Point" program, borrowing congregations earn rebates based on supporting investments. For 2007, PILP returned $194,330 to borrowing congregations. The PILP provides consulting services to congregations and presbyteries to help them determine the timing, size, construction plans, fundraising, and financing requirements for capital projects. Each congregation benefits from the experience of the PILP staff in working with hundreds of congregations.

Also, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program administers the Church Loan Program (CLP) for the General Assembly Council. The CLP is the result of many gifts, campaigns, and bequests to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) since 1840. The total endowment for church loans has grown to almost $200 million. The Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., is working with the General Assembly Council to explore a capital grant program to supplement the existing loan program. As part of a larger discussion between the General Assembly Council and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, concerning endowment funds, we are engaged in conversations with the Foundation staff regarding changes in expectations, use of funds, administration, and reporting. We have made recommendations that would make new capital grant programs available for church development, as well as securing Mission Program Grants for the foreseeable future.

The CLP began 2006 with a disbursed loan portfolio of $96.7 million and an additional $9.2 million in commitments pending close and construction loans not yet disbursed. At the end of 2007, CLP had a disbursed loan portfolio of $98.5 million and an additional $12.4 million in commitments pending closing and construction loans not yet disbursed. That represents growth of 4.7 percent over the two-year period. In 2006, PILP disbursed $13.6 million in new loans from endowment funds and in 2007, PILP disbursed $12.8 million from endowment funds.

Together PILP and CLP represent the Coordinated Loan Program of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The Coordinated Loan Program is dedicated to providing low cost loans to Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) congregations and mission agencies. At the beginning of 2006, the Prime lending-rate was 7.5 percent. The base interest rate for existing congregations was 6.7 percent from investor funds and 5.7 percent from endowment funds. By the end of 2007 the Prime lending-rate had dropped to 7.25 percent. The base interest rate for existing congregations was 7.0 percent from investor funds and 6.0 percent from endowment funds. Interest rates for new church developments are even lower. Rates are further reduced for congregations with strong mission giving to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The PILP has remained competitive in an interest rate environment that has experienced large increases and decreases.

The maximum loan from CLP is currently $450,000. The maximum project in which CLP participates is $2.5 million. Larger loans are funded by investor funds or participations with synod loan programs or banking partners. Many loan applications received by PILP qualify for funds from both PILP and CLP. These loans are offered to churches as one loan with a blended rate.

The following are just four examples of how endowment and investor funds are helping the church grow:

- Fountain Park Presbyterian Church in Cranberry Township, Pennsylvania in Beaver Butler Presbytery purchased and renovated an existing building from an Episcopal church with the proceeds of a loan from PILP.
- In 2007, Project Vida in El Paso, Texas, purchased a building to house the Project Vida Health Center using funds from PILP. Project Vida is a mission supported by the churches of Tres Rios Presbytery. The health center is a full-service medical complex serving the immigrant community.
- With the help of Presbyterian investors, the Korean Presbyterian Church of Boston, Massachusetts, will be breaking ground on a new education and cultural community center. This congregation is a valuable link between new immigrants and the established citizens of the area.
- Crosswinds Presbyterian Church in Phoenix, Arizona, is building a new facility to enhance their music ministry and outreach to the community with a loan from PILP.

The PILP collaborates with the four synods that maintain their own investment and loan programs. We administer the investment and loan program of the Synod of Lincoln Trails and we are in a multi-year process of transferring this ministry of the synod into the Coordinated Loan Program of the General Assembly.

The Board of Directors of PILP is elected by the General Assembly Council and confirmed by the General Assembly. The 2007 Board of Directors was John H. Shannahan, chair; Nancy Muth, vice chair; Frank R. Adams III; Mary C. Baskin; Frank Fisher Jr.; Lavert Jones; Douglas Kenney; Carolyn Knight; Marcy M. Moody; Alice Okazaki; James B. Rea Jr.; Connia Watson Jr.; Kim I. Williams; Jim Dave Wilson.

The officers of the corporation in 2007 were James L. Hudson, president and CEO; James G. Rissler, senior vice president and treasurer; Ben W. Blake, vice president, sales and marketing; Martha E. Clark, secretary; Eric J. Graninger, assistant secretary.

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the new trustees elected by Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) theological institutions in 2006–2007:

2. Columbia Theological Seminary: Richard Oglesby, Buz Wilcoxon, and Sue Williams.
3. University of Dubuque Theological Seminary: Charles Daoud.
4. Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary: Tyler Allen, Elaine Barnett, Lant Davis, Daniel Ellinor, Bridgett Green, Jill Hudson, Anna James, Walk Jones IV, Charles Larsen III, Rick Nutt, Robert Orders Jr., Larry Palmer, and Paul Schaap.
5. McCormick Theological Seminary: Jocelyn C. Cadwallader, Anna Case-Winters, Christine Chakoian, Eric J. Edwards, Sunok Chun Pai, Laura Brookens Reason, Christopher Valentine, and Gordon Zerkel.
6. Pittsburgh Theological Seminary: Kimberly Merrell, Bryan Miller, Sue Sterling Montgomery, and Jack vanHartesvelt.
7. Princeton Theological Seminary: William Bowers, Craig Huff, and Max Reddick.
8. San Francisco Theological Seminary: George Abdo, Esther Aguilar, Browne Barr, Rosario de Lugo Battle, Jerilynn Blackstone, Janet Doak, Bernie Hindman, Matthew Lin, Earle Robbins, Bill Saul, Marion Stanton, and Joanne Whitt.
9. Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary: None.
10. Union Theological Seminary and Presbyterian School of Christian Education: Brian Blount.

Rationale

A list of the entire board of trustees of each of the ten seminaries, as well as biographical information about trustees to be approved will be made available by COTE for review by the appropriate committee during the 218th General Assembly (2008). Similar information will also be made available about those currently serving on the boards of Auburn Theological Seminary and the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico that are related to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) through covenant agreements.

As required by vote of the 209th General Assembly (1997), the following information is offered in regard to racial ethnic, gender, and clergy/lay representation on the various seminary boards.

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve Brian K. Blount as president of Union Theological Seminary and Presbyterian School of Christian Education.

Rationale

General Assembly approval of Dr. Blount's appointment as president of Union Theological Seminary and Presbyterian School of Christian Education is required by "A Plan for the Governance and Funding of the Theological Institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.);" approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986) and by the seminary's current bylaws.

The Reverend Brian K. Blount was named president of Union Theological Seminary & Presbyterian School of Christian Education, becoming the first African American to head Union or the Presbyterian School of Christian Education. Blount, an ordained minister in the PC(USA), will be the second president since the two schools were joined in 1997. Blount, 50, assumed the presidency July 1, 2007. The seminary's board of trustees announced the selection of Blount, the Richard J. Dearborn Professor of New Testament Interpretation at Princeton Theological Seminary, on March 30, 2007. He succeeded the Reverend Louis B. Weeks.

A native of Smithfield, Virginia, Blount served as pastor of Carver Memorial Presbyterian Church in Newport News, Virginia, from 1982 to 1988. He taught New Testament at Princeton Seminary from 1992–2007. Rev. Blount is the author, co-author, editor or associate editor of nine books, including The New Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, Can I Get A Witness? Reading Revelation Through African-American Culture, and Struggling with Scripture.

Blount holds a bachelor of arts degree in religion and psychology from the College of William and Mary, a master of divinity degree from Princeton Theological Seminary and doctor of philosophy degree from Emory University.

*Item 13-03

[The assembly approved Item 13-03. See p. 18, 19.]

The Committee on Theological Education recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) grant permission to the following theological institutions to celebrate the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in 2009–2010: Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Columbia Theological Seminary, University of Dubuque Theological Seminary, Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary, McCormick Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, Princeton Theological Seminary, San Francisco Theological Seminary, Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary in cooperation with the Inter-denominational Theological Center, and Union Theological Seminary & Presbyterian School of Christian Education.

Rationale

Beginning in 1989, the General Assembly became the governing body that grants permission to celebrate the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper at Presbyterian theological institutions. The 217th General Assembly (2006) granted permission for celebrations in 2007–2008.

[The assembly answered Item 13-04 by the action taken on Item 13-06. See p. 19.]

On Restoring the Heidelberg Catechism to Its Historic Form—From the Presbytery of Northern Kansas.

The Presbytery of Northern Kansas, in accordance with G-18.0200, overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to take appropriate steps toward the following amendment of The Book of Confessions, and to appoint a committee to fulfill the requirement of G-18.0201b:

To restore The Heidelberg Catechism to an authentic and reliable English version of the historic document by replacing the 1962 translation, The Heidelberg Catechism, 1563--1963. 400th Anniversary Edition. Copyright 1962. United Church Press, with a translation that more faithfully renders the original text.

[Original Financial Implications: (2008): $0; (2009): $28,050; (2010): $3,050 (Per Capita-OGA)]
[Committee Action Financial Implications: (2008): $0; (2009): $0; (2010): $0 (Per Capita-OGA)]

Rationale

The Heidelberg Catechism was formally adopted as a confessional document of the UPCUSA when the denomination adopted The Book of Confessions in 1967. The version of the Heidelberg Catechism approved at that time was a 1962 translation prepared for and published by United Church Press. However, according to the later recollections of Professor Edward Dowey of Princeton Theological Seminary, who chaired the committee of the General Assembly that drew together the confessions, thorough checking of this version was never undertaken and certain “illicit” changes made to the text of the Heidelberg in this translation went undetected.<sup>1</sup> A comparison of the text of the Heidelberg Catechism in the version included in The Book of Confessions with the original German and the early Latin version reveals five passages in which the original text is not faithfully rendered and key theological meanings are obscured:

1. 4.019: “... the holy gospel, which God himself revealed in the beginning in the Garden of Eden, afterward proclaimed through the holy patriarchs and prophets and foreshadowed through the sacrifices and other rites of the Old Covenant, and finally fulfilled through his own well-beloved Son” [emphasis added]. The phrase “rites of the Old Covenant” is a loose translation that is not well supported by either the German or the Latin; “ceremonies of the law” is a traditional rendering which is well supported by the German (ceremonien des gesetzes) and the Latin (ceremoniis legis).<sup>2</sup> This flawed rendering is significant for three reasons. First, substituting “Old Covenant” for law obscures a traditional Reformed interest in biblical law per se. Second, it misleadingly suggests to readers and students that the catechism’s writers invoked here an explicitly covenantal image. Third, it suggests that the writers were working with a scheme of biblical interpretation that contrasted Old Covenant to New Covenant, a hermeneutic which is not very well represented in the Reformed theological tradition and not supported by the text of the catechism in its original form.

2. 4.033: “... Christ alone is God’s own eternal Son, whereas we are accepted [by God] for his sake as children of God by grace” was traditionally rendered “Christ alone is the eternal natural Son of God, but we are adopted to be children of God through grace for His sake” [emphasis added]. The significance of this change is that it obscures the authors’ use of the image of adoption—an important theme in Reformed reflection on Christ, Christ’s work, and the justifying and regenerating work of the Holy Spirit. The translation “adopted” is very well supported by the original German (angenommen) and the Latin (adoptati).

3. 4.055: “...believers one and all, as partakers of the Lord Christ, and all his treasures and gifts, shall share in one fellowship. ...” [emphasis added]: The future tense is not indicated in the original text, which has the present tense. This translation differs from traditional versions which indicate that sharing or fellowship with Christ is a present reality.

4. 4.074: "... This was done in the Old Covenant by circumcision. In the New Covenant baptism has been instituted to take its place" [emphasis added]. The original German supports "Old Testament" and "New Testament." The Latin has in Veteri foedere and in Novo foedere, which could support "Old Covenant" and "New Covenant," although the German has generally been preferred as the text from which translations are to be made. (The German text was the basis of the translation of 1962.) The difference between "covenant" and "testament" may seem subtle or insignificant to some readers. But in fact there was a significant difference in connotation through theological use in the sixteenth century. The Reformed tended to emphasize the singularity and antiquity of God's covenant with God's people; thus they tended not to emphasize a distinction between two covenants. On the other hand, they emphasized that a single covenant had somewhat different applications in two distinct times or epochs: the time of the law and the time of the gospel, or (to use an alternative designation) the time of the Old Testament and the time of the New Testament. The use of the word "Testament," then, resonates with other Reformed allusions to a distinction in times, which is not the same thing as a distinction in covenants.

5. 4.087: Two elements in the answer to Question 87 are supplied by the translators and do not appear in the original text (nor in any translations produced prior to 1962). Neither the original German nor the Latin have texts corresponding to the following phrases:

"Surely you know that the unjust will never come into possession of the kingdom of God. Make no mistake:"

"or of homosexual perversion."

The remaining items in the vice list supplied in the answer to Question 87 have equivalents or rough equivalents in the original text (although some singular nouns have been rendered as plural nouns). This innovation was created by the translators' decision to ignore a portion of the Heidelberg Catechism Answer 87 and instead to replace it with the New English Bible translation of 1 Corinthians 6:9–10. In 1997, one of the translators, Professor Eugene Osterhaven, disclosed that this replacement was entirely intentional. In light of the sexual revolution of the 1960s, "it would be well to be more specific [about sexual practice] ... than [the author of the Heidelberg Catechism] had been in his day."<sup>3</sup> This "amendment" to a traditional Reformed document was the creation of two translators and was never deliberated upon by a body of the church before The Book of Confessions was adopted.<sup>4</sup>

Every ordained minister, elder, and deacon is required to answer in the affirmative the following question: "Do you sincerely receive and adopt the essential tenets of the Reformed faith as expressed in the confessions of our church as authentic and reliable expositions of what Scripture leads us to believe and do?" (Book of Order, W-4.4003c). In so doing, church leaders trust that the translated versions of the historic confessions are, as far as humanly possible, authentic transmissions of the faith of our forbearers and reliable expositions of what they understood Scripture leading them to believe and do. That the 1962 translation of The Heidelberg Catechism has proven to be unreliable casts a shadow on all the translations in The Book of Confessions. Trust in all these historic documents can be restored by replacing that translation of The Heidelberg Catechism with a version that is more authentic and reliable. The 1988 translation in Ecumenical Creeds and Reformed Confessions (CRC Publications) is one such version.<sup>5</sup>

1. The Special Committee on a Brief Contemporary Statement of Faith presented a report to the 1965 General Assembly of the UPCUSA to include the 1962 translation of the Heidelberg Catechism in a Book of Confessions. Presumably the committee chose this translation because it was the most recent edition. Professor Dowey acknowledged (in a letter to Professors Christopher Elwood and Johanna Bos of Louisville Seminary, dated October 21, 1996) that both he and the committee as a whole were "guilty of negligence": "there should have been thorough editorial work on all the documents" but, because of time pressures, the committee settled for some brief spot-checking of the translation.
2. All references to the German and Latin texts come from Catechismus oder Christliche Unterricht, wie der Kirchen und Schulen der Churfürstlichen Pfaltz getrieben wirdt (Heidelberg: Johannes Mayer, 1563) and the first Latin edition of 1563: Catechesis religionis Christianae: quae traditur in ecclesiis et scholis Palatinatus. These have been published together in a facsimile edition published by Theologischer Verlag of Zurich in 1983. The German original has been compared with the modern critical edition by Wilhelm Niesel in Bekanntnisschriften und Kirchenordnungen der nach Gottes Wort reformierten Kirche (Zurich, 1938).

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 13-04

Comment on Item 13-04—From the General Assembly Council.

Items 13-04, 13-05, and 13-06 seek to restore the Heidelberg Catechism to its “historic form” by substituting a more recent translation for the translation currently in The Book of Confessions.

Section G-2.0100a describes the role of our confessions in the life of the Presbyterian Church:

- a. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) states its faith and bears witness to God’s grace in Jesus Christ in the creeds and confessions in The Book of Confessions. In these confessional statements the church declares to its members and to the world
- who and what it is,
  - what it believes,
  - what it resolves to do.

The verbs in this section are all present tense. The confessions, rooted in particular historical contexts, declare our contemporary church’s identity, belief, and action. Thus the confessions are more than historical documents. While they grow out of particular contexts and speak to them, they have been adopted into The Book of Confessions because the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes that they are authoritative for the church’s current faith and life.

The confessions are not static documents, but living witnesses to our theological tradition. Therefore, the constitutional form of each confession is that which is printed in The Book of Confessions, not the texts in their original forms and in their original languages. The clearest example of this is the Westminster Confession, amended over time by both northern and southern streams of the church. Nevertheless, Presbyterians have a long history of appreciation for historical and textual scholarship. Questions about translations are appropriate in determining the church’s confessional stance.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has the right to determine its confessional stance and can consider amendments to The Book of Confessions, guided by “The Assessment of Proposed Amendments to The Book of Confessions” (BOC, xxxi-xxxvi) and following the process outlined in the Book of Order (G-18.0200).

However, because the confessions constitute a living tradition that expresses the church’s beliefs, the decision to amend The Book of Confessions is a normative decision, not simply a historical decision. The primary purpose of the confessions is not to enshrine a historical perspective, but to shape the ongoing faith and life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Therefore, the question before the General Assembly is whether a different translation of the Heidelberg Catechism would better declare to its members and the world who and what it is, what it believes, and what it resolves to do.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 13-04

Comment on Item 13-04—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

That should the 218th General Assembly (2008) determine that it is wise and timely to create a special committee (G-18.0201b) to consider whether to recommend approval of the Belhar Confession and a new translation of the Heidelberg

Confession, the COGA urges the 218th General Assembly (2008) to utilize one special committee to undertake the required study of both potential confessional documents.

None of these requests require the process of creating an entirely new confession, nor the drafting of new language amending a current confession. The requested study of Belhar would focus on whether it should be included in The Book of Confessions as it has been by a number of our Reformed ecumenical partners. Items 13-04, 13-05, and 13-06 ask the PC(USA) to approve a different translation of the Heidelberg Confession, and again do not request any significant redrafting of the confession itself.

Further, the COGA concurs with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution that the use of one special committee would be entirely constitutional. The COGA also believes it wise to consider these two proposed changes to The Book of Confessions jointly and concurrently, as each proposal would each affect both the content and tone of our current The Book of Confessions. Finally, the COGA notes that the tasks required are different in kind than creating an entirely new text, which the PC(USA) last undertook in creating and approving A Brief Statement of Faith following reunion. The cost saving of one, rather than two committees would be substantial. (See financial implication.)

Item 13-05

[The assembly answered Item 13-05 by the action taken on Item 13-06. See p. 19.]

On Restoring the Heidelberg Catechism to Its Historic Form—From the Presbytery of Boston.

The Presbytery of Boston respectfully overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to direct the Stated Clerk to do the following:

1. Request permission from the Christian Reformed Church in North America to print their 1988 translation of the Heidelberg Catechism in The Book of Confessions of the PC(USA).
2. If such permission is granted, to use that text as the official text of the Heidelberg Catechism until such time as directed otherwise by the General Assembly.
3. If such permission is not granted, to make a recommendation to the 219th General Assembly (2010) regarding the choice of an appropriate translation of the Heidelberg Catechism to be the official text in The Book of Confessions.

Rationale

Our Form of Government, in G-1.0501, specifies the documents that are to form The Book of Confessions and in G-2.0500b expresses that these “creeds and confessions of this church reflect a particular stance within the history of God’s people.” Thus, the precise original text of these documents should be respected and understood in the context of their place in history.

And, indeed, we would not seriously consider “fixing” the texts of native English documents to adapt them to current insights or circumstances. They were written in English and can be understood with reasonable study.

That is not the case with documents that have their origins in foreign languages. To make these accessible they need to be translated into English first. But, in order to treat them with the same respect that, for instance, the Westminster or the Scots Confessions command, such translations should follow as closely as possible the original texts, without embellishment or adaptation. Regrettably, this is not the case with the translation<sup>1</sup> of the Heidelberg Catechism that is printed in The Book of Confessions. One or two other overtures enumerate in their rationales the shortcomings of this translation. Suffice it here to quote one of the translators, Professor Eugene Osterhaven, and the chair of the committee that redacted The Book of Confessions, Professor Edward Dowey. Professor Osterhaven, commenting in 1997 on the changes in the text of the answer to Question 87, asserted that that change had been entirely intentional. In the light of the sexual revolution of the 1960s, “it would be well to be more specific [about sexual practice] . . . than [the author of the Heidelberg Catechism] had been in his [sic!] day.”<sup>2</sup> Professor Dowey expressed in 1996 that he was “dumbfounded that I and such careful scholars as Trinterud, Hendry, Smart, et al., failed to discover the illicit change.”

As indicated above, our Form of Government specifies that the Heidelberg Catechism is to be included in The Book of Confessions. However, it does not specify a particular translation and neither does the 1967 action of the General Assembly that established the UPCUSA Book of Confessions nor any subsequent action of the General Assembly, including the Articles of Agreement, which established the current version of The Book of Confessions. What this indicates is that, although the addition or deletion of a confessional document would clearly be considered an amendment to the Constitution, the choice of a specific translation (and in particular when a translation is chosen that is more faithful to the original text) should be considered an editorial matter that the General Assembly has authority to decide.

There are various translations available that would constitute a marked improvement over the current one. For a reliable and dependable choice, we may turn to a sister denomination that is to be counted among those that most respect the Heidelberg Catechism, the Christian Reformed Church. In their own words:

The 1968 Synod of the Christian Reformed Church appointed a committee to prepare “a modern and accurate translation ... which will serve as the official text of the Heidelberg Catechism and as a guide for catechism preaching.” A translation was adopted by the Synod of 1975, and some editorial revisions were approved by the Synod of 1988.

The English translation follows the first German edition of the catechism except in two instances explained in footnotes to questions 57 and 80. The result of those inclusions is that the translation therefore actually follows the German text of the third edition as it was included in the Palatinate Church Order of November 15, 1563. This is the “received text” used throughout the world.

This translation is faithful and reliable, providing the text of the first, second, and third editions of the Heidelberg Catechism as they have been used in the Reformed churches for more than four centuries. Alternatively, one might consider adopting the translation authorized by the Canadian and American Reformed Churches, as posted on the website of Westminster Theological Seminary.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) answer Item 13-05 with its response to Item 13-04.

Rationale

As noted in its response to Item 13-04, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that the alteration or replacement of the English translation of one or more of the statements in The Book of Confessions constitutes an amendment to The Book of Confessions and requires the use of the process outlined in G-18.0201a–b. This may have been the intent of the Presbytery of Boston in its overture, but the text of the overture is not clear on this point.

On Correcting Translation Problems of the Heidelberg Catechism—From the Presbytery of Newark.

The Presbytery of Newark overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to correct translation problems in five responses of the Heidelberg Catechism as found in The Book of Confessions and to add the original Scripture texts of the German Heidelberg Catechism. The following changes are proposed: [The process to amend The Book of Confessions can be found in the Book of Order, G-18.0200.]

1. Amend the answer to 4.019 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A. From the holy gospel, which God himself revealed in the beginning in the Garden of Eden, afterward proclaimed through the holy patriarchs and prophets and foreshadowed through the sacrifices and other ~~rites of the Old Covenant ceremonies of the law~~, and, finally, fulfilled through his own well-beloved Son.”

2. Amend the answer to 4.033 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A. Because Christ alone is God’s ~~own eternal Son~~ natural son, whereas we are ~~accepted~~ adopted for his sake as children of God by grace.”

3. Amend the answer to 4.055 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A. First, that believers one and all, as partakers of the Lord Christ, and all his treasures and gifts, ~~shall~~ share in one fellowship. Second, that each one ought to know that he is obliged to use his gifts ~~freely~~ willingly and with joy for the benefit and welfare of other members.”

4. Amend the answer to 4.074 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A. Yes, because they, as well as their parents, are included in the covenant and belong to the people of God. Since both redemption from sin through the blood of Christ and the gift of faith from the Holy Spirit are promised to these children no less than to their parents, infants are also by baptism, as a sign of the covenant, to be incorporated into the Christian church and distinguished from the children of unbelievers. This was done in the Old ~~Covenant~~ Testament by circumcision. In the New ~~Covenant~~ Testament baptism has been instituted to take its place.”

5. Amend the answer to 4.087 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“A. ~~Certainly not! Scripture says, “Surely you know that the unjust will never come into possession of the kingdom of God. Make no mistake: no fornicator or idolater, none who are guilty either of adultery or of homosexual perversion, no thieves or grabbers or drunkards or slanderers or swindlers, will possess the kingdom of God. Certainly not; for as Scripture says no unchaste person, idolater, adulterer, thief, greedy person, drunkard, slanderer, robber, or anyone like that shall inherit the kingdom of god.”~~

Rationale

Concerns have been raised regarding five answers in the present translation of the Heidelberg Catechism in The Book of Confessions. We believe these four responses can be amended in a way that makes them both more accurate and faithful to the original text of the catechism. We believe this will satisfy concerns that have been raised by the Presbytery of Pittsburgh and others without the need of a major redoing of the present translation. As the original German text included Scripture texts, we ask that those also be included in The Book of Confessions.

Drawing on the German and Latin original texts of the Heidelberg Catechism, we propose the above changes.

Rationale

The Belhar Confession speaks to the persistent reality of racism today—in its call for unity and reconciliation as marks of faithfulness in the church, and its challenge to make manifest the unity of God’s people in the prophetic witness of the gospel by confronting the sin of racism, working for justice in the church and in society.

The 216th General Assembly (2004) called all Presbyterians to confront the sin of racism—to confess a heritage of injustice that continues to distort human relationships in the church and in our nation. The assembly commended the Confession of Belhar to the church as a resource for beginning a transformative dialogue, “a means of deepening the commitment of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to dealing with racism and a means of strengthening its unity” (Minutes, 2004, Part I, p. 701).

Despite decades of prophetic witness in policy and proclamation for racial justice and reconciliation, the membership of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) remains overwhelmingly white and middle class. As the U.S. culture in which we are called to minister becomes increasingly diverse, the church today must learn to confront the barriers to change within itself.

The Belhar Confession speaks to the global realities of racism. It calls the church to a deeper appreciation of the values of unity in diversity in relation to the divisions of race and culture and many other facets of the human condition. In the U.S. and around the world, the divisions of race too often determine who receives the greatest benefits in employment, education, housing, healthcare, criminal justice, and civil rights. At the core of almost every militarized conflict in the world today are divisions of race, ethnicity, and religion.

Including the Belhar Confession in The Book of Confessions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would also make an important witness to the unity of the global church and a global ecumenical movement. The Belhar Confession makes a significant contribution to our understanding of the unity of the church, honoring God’s gift of diversity in the human family and speaks to a hunger in the church for deep theological reflection on matters that have a direct impact on our lives.

As the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) seeks to become a multiracial, multicultural community of faith, the Belhar Confession adds an important voice to the expressions of our faith contained in our Book of Confessions, one that does not come through the historical experience of European and North American Church life. With the center of Christianity now being in the global south, and as Christians from the global south migrate to the U.S. and seek fellowship in our midst, adding the Belhar Confession to our confessional documents would reflect a new awareness of the global nature of our faith and our unity with the global church.

At its 2007 General Synod, the Reformed Church in America voted to adopt the Belhar Confession on a three-year provisional basis. Speaking to the General Synod, Piet Naude of the Dutch Reformed Church in South Africa said,

You have taken a small voice from the South seriously enough to say: “We see in your faith our faith too.” Thank you for doing that, and therewith strengthening the church in South Africa.

If the churches in the world do not demonstrate that we are counter-societies where there is no longer Jew and Greek, man and woman, boss and slave, how will the world believe in the power of reconciliation in Christ?

The proclamation of Belhar that reconciliation is possible in Christ and that cultural and other “natural” differences are gifts for the upbuilding of church and society should be heard loudly and clearly all across America. (<http://www.rca.org/NETCOMMUNITY/Page.aspx?pid=3037&srcid=2552>)

Including Belhar in the confessional documents, in the worshipping life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) would provide a strong prophetic witness to the world. It would connect us in a tangible way to the global Reformed movement, strengthening the witness of the church in the U.S., in South Africa, and everywhere racism divides peoples and nations.

The Book of Order defines the process by which the confessional documents of the church may be amended:

- The first step, if approved at this assembly, is the appointment of a committee of elders and ministers to consider the proposal and report its recommendation to the next ensuing General Assembly (G-18.0201(b)) which would be the 219th General Assembly (2010).
- If the committee recommends to the 219th General Assembly (2010) that the confessional documents of the church be amended to include the Belhar Confession, and if the assembly approves that recommendation, it would go the presbyteries for a vote.
- Two-thirds of the presbyteries would be required to approve the recommendation. Approval would become effective at the 220th General Assembly (2012).

An Introduction to the Belhar Confession

The Belhar Confession was born in a climate of racial hatred, social upheaval, political turmoil, xenophobia, ideological terrorism, economic exploitation, and intense violence. Apartheid, the political system adopted by the South African government in 1948, mandated racial division that resulted in the creation of unjust laws, an exploitative economy, and rapacious violence against people of color. Sadly, the Dutch Reformed Church (DMC) laid the moral and spiritual foundation for the formation of an apartheid form of government both by being quietist on the question of slavery that was introduced to South Africa by the Dutch in 1652 and later, by mandating separate services for white and “coloured” congregants in 1857. Even when the Dutch Reformed Mission Church (DRMC) was formed in 1881 the DRC retained the right to veto all decisions made by the DRMC. There was no real effort to embrace racial unity until after 1951 when the Dutch Reformed Bantu Churches (DRBC) began to unite with DRMC congregations. For nearly three hundred years many Christians of the Reformed theological tradition looked the other way as racial injustices were visited on millions of people—many of whom themselves were adherents to the Reformed tradition. Worse still is the reality that there were some people in the Reformed tradition, both clergy and lay, who attempted to justify racial separation spiritually and morally, biblically and theologically.

By 1986, when the Belhar Confession was written and adopted by the Dutch Reformed Mission Church, the apartheid government of South Africa was feeling the full weight of the pressure being applied by liberationists within South Africa, sanctions levied by the international community, and countless rallies, boycotts, and protest marches by advocates for justice around the world. Simultaneously, denominations of the Reformed tradition were looking for ways to unify under a common denominational banner and to join the righteous endeavor to break the back of the apartheid government. Dr. Allan Boesak, a black South African minister and theologian of the DRMC wrote, “it is not the perpetrators of injustice, but those who resist it, who are the true representatives of the Reformed tradition.”<sup>1</sup> Boesak’s assertion reveals the attitude and commitment of many communicant members of the Reformed family in South Africa at that time. There was a Spirit driven righteous indignation coupled with a soulful weariness that gave rise to an ecclesial call for unity and reconciliation.

The reader might ask what all of this has to do with the American context and the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). In the General Assembly’s Report of the Task Force to Study Reparations, which was received by the 216th General Assembly (2004), two statements were made that bear repeating here. The first has to do with Native Americans.

While it is appropriate to remember and to celebrate our Presbyterian witness in America, it is also appropriate to remember and acknowledge that our witness has not always been honorable. The “New World” was already inhabited when the Puritans from England, some of whom were Presbyterians, arrived on the northeast coast of the North American continent. They, along with other Europeans, participated in the displacement and slaughter of thousands of native peoples. Furthermore, in our efforts to reach native peoples with the gospel of Jesus Christ, we also pursued programs and policies which contributed to the virtual destruction of Native American and Alaskan Native cultures.

The second statement pertains to African Americans. Both statements lend insight into the ways that the Presbyterian church, like the DRC, has been quietist about and sometimes participated in, racial injustice.

Indeed, Portugal began to transport enslaved Africans to Europe as early as 1492.<sup>2</sup> The European slave trade lasted for more than 400 years. During that time Africa lost nearly forty million people. Approximately twenty million of those women and men were brought to the “New World.” Millions more died during capture, at sea, or soon after arrival.<sup>3</sup> Families were torn asunder, cultures were destroyed, whole nations were decimated, women, children, and men were forced to spend their lives as chattel in the homes and fields of good Christians all over Europe and the Americas, yet our Presbyterian fore-parents made no definitive statements about such sordid and inhumane activities until 1818.<sup>4</sup> Even then, Presbyterians made strong condemnatory statements against the sin of slavery, but invoked no sanction against members of its constituency who owned slaves.<sup>5</sup>

There is evidently a sense in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), like the DRC, needs to adjust its moral and spiritual compass. The Belhar Confession is an instrument God is providing to help guide the church back onto the path of true justice and righteousness where unity and reconciliation can be found.

While it is true that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has acted benevolently and graciously toward aggrieved groups of peoples within and outside of the church, and often in very practical ways, it is also true that such actions rarely served to repair and restore relationships with those groups in any meaningful way.

We Presbyterians sing songs written in Native American languages, Spanish, and Korean; we have included Negro spirituals in our primary hymnbook; and in our prayers of confession we often rehearse our sins of racism, sexism, social and economic injustice, and political collusion with the dominate consciousness of the country. Yet statements about our “common” Scotch-Irish heritage are repeatedly made in governing bodies, conferences, workshops, committee and commission meetings throughout the church as if no other ethnic heritages were represented at the table. Our congregations remain racially divided due in no small part to the yawning cultural divide that continues to separate “whites” from “coloureds” and whites and peoples of color from the poor. We choose to live not in racially mixed, but in racially segregated communities and neighborhoods; and in our meetings we typically fail or refuse to truly struggle with the real life political, economic, social, and military policies that negatively impact people of color and the poor. Is it possible that we have grown all too comfortable with a paternalistic way of being in relationship with aggrieved groups of people—a relationship based on a “doing for” rather than a “doing with” mentality?

The unity and reconciliation called for in the Belhar Confession require the confessor(s) to actively engage the struggle for moral and spiritual transformation; to get into the personal and communal fight against deeply embedded racial attitudes and behaviors; to at least acknowledge, accept, and confess, our sinful history in regard to race and racial attitudes as together we push forward to repentance, reconciliation, and unity.

Confession of Belhar September 1986<sup>1</sup>

1. We believe in the triune God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, who gathers, protects and cares for the church through Word and Spirit. This, God has done since the beginning of the world and will do to the end.
2. We believe in one holy, universal Christian church, the communion of saints called from the entire human family.

We believe

- that Christ’s work of reconciliation is made manifest in the church as the community of believers who have been reconciled with God and with one another;
- that unity is, therefore, both a gift and an obligation for the church of Jesus Christ; that through the working of God’s Spirit it is a binding force, yet simultaneously a reality which must be earnestly pursued and sought: one which the people of God must continually be built up to attain;
- that this unity must become visible so that the world may believe that separation, enmity and hatred between people and groups is sin which Christ has already conquered, and accordingly that anything which threatens this unity may have no place in the church and must be resisted;
- that this unity of the people of God must be manifested and be active in a variety of ways: in that we love one another; that we experience, practice and pursue community with one another; that we are obligated to give ourselves willingly and joyfully to be of benefit and blessing to one another; that we share one faith, have one calling, are of one soul and one mind; have one God and Father, are filled with one Spirit, are baptized with one baptism, eat of one bread and drink of one cup, confess one name, are obedient to one Lord, work for one cause, and share one hope; together come to know the height and the breadth and the depth of the love of Christ; together are built up to the stature of Christ, to the new humanity; together know and bear one another's burdens, thereby fulfilling the law of Christ that we need one another and upbuild one another, admonishing and comforting one another; that we suffer with one another for the sake of righteousness; pray together; together serve God in this world; and together fight against all which may threaten or hinder this unity;

- that this unity can be established only in freedom and not under constraint; that the variety of spiritual gifts, opportunities, backgrounds, convictions, as well as the various languages and cultures, are by virtue of the reconciliation in Christ, opportunities for mutual service and enrichment within the one visible people of God;
- that true faith in Jesus Christ is the only condition for membership of this church;

Therefore, we reject any doctrine

- which absolutizes either natural diversity or the sinful separation of people in such a way that this absolutization hinders or breaks the visible and active unity of the church, or even leads to the establishment of a separate church formation;
- which professes that this spiritual unity is truly being maintained in the bond of peace while believers of the same confession are in effect alienated from one another for the sake of diversity and in despair of reconciliation;
- which denies that a refusal earnestly to pursue this visible unity as a priceless gift is sin;
- which explicitly or implicitly maintains that descent or any other human or social factor should be a consideration in determining membership of the church.

3. We believe

- that God has entrusted the church with the message of reconciliation in and through Jesus Christ; that the church is called to be the salt of the earth and the light of the world, that the church is called blessed because it is a peacemaker, that the church is witness both by word and by deed to the new heaven and the new earth in which righteousness dwells.
- that God's lifegiving Word and Spirit has conquered the powers of sin and death, and therefore also of irreconciliation and hatred, bitterness and enmity, that God's lifegiving Word and Spirit will enable the church to live in a new obedience which can open new possibilities of life for society and the world;
- that the credibility of this message is seriously affected and its beneficial work obstructed when it is proclaimed in a land which professes to be Christian, but in which the enforced separation of people on a racial basis promotes and perpetuates alienation, hatred and enmity;
- that any teaching which attempts to legitimate such forced separation by appeal to the gospel, and is not prepared to venture on the road of obedience and reconciliation, but rather, out of prejudice, fear, selfishness and unbelief, denies in advance the reconciling power of the gospel, must be considered ideology and false doctrine.

Therefore, we reject any doctrine

- which, in such a situation sanctions in the name of the gospel or of the will of God the forced separation of people on the grounds of race and color and thereby in advance obstructs and weakens the ministry and experience of reconciliation in Christ.

4. We believe

- that God has revealed himself as the one who wishes to bring about justice and true peace among people;
- that God, in a world full of injustice and enmity, is in a special way the God of the destitute, the poor and the wronged

- that God calls the church to follow him in this; for God brings justice to the oppressed and gives bread to the hungry;
- that God frees the prisoner and restores sight to the blind;
- that God supports the downtrodden, protects the stranger, helps orphans and widows and blocks the path of the ungodly;
- that for God pure and undefiled religion is to visit the orphans and the widows in their suffering;
- that God wishes to teach the church to do what is good and to seek the right;
- that the church must therefore stand by people in any form of suffering and need, which implies, among other things, that the church must witness against and strive against any form of injustice, so that justice may roll down like waters, and righteousness like an ever-flowing stream;
- that the church as the possession of God must stand where the Lord stands, namely against injustice and with the wronged; that in following Christ the church must witness against all the powerful and privileged who selfishly seek their own interests and thus control and harm others.

Therefore, we reject any ideology

- which would legitimate forms of injustice and any doctrine which is unwilling to resist such an ideology in the name of the gospel.

5. We believe that, in obedience to Jesus Christ, its only head, the church is called to confess and to do all these things, even though the authorities and human laws might forbid them and punishment and suffering be the consequence. Jesus is Lord.

To the one and only God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, be the honor and the glory for ever and ever.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 13-07

Advice on Item 13-07—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) that Item 13-07 from the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns presents an issue that the assembly should consider. If the 218th General Assembly (2008) believes that the intent of Item 13-07 is appropriate, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises that the proposed language is clear and consistent with that intent.

Rationale

Item 13-07 was in response to the following referrals:

2004 Referral: Item 10-03. Report of the Task Force to Study Reparations, Recommendation 4.d., That the Office of the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council, Office of Theology and Worship, Receive Responses, Prepare a Summary, and Report Results to the 218th General Assembly (2008), Together with Possible Recommendations for Further Engagement with the Belhar Confession—From the General Assembly Council Task Force to Study Reparations (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 57, 701).

2004 Referral: Item 10-03. Report of the Task Force to Study Reparations, Recommendation 4.b., That the General Assembly Council, Office of Theology and Worship Prepare Materials to Facilitate Churchwide Reflection and Study of the Belhar Confession—From the General Assembly Council Task Force to Study Reparations (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 57, 701).

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution offered the following advice to the 198th General Assembly (1986) as it considered a proposal to include the “Declaration of Faith” in The Book of Confessions:

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution believes that clarity with regard to these options will be helpful to the Assembly as it considers the proposal to amend the confessional documents presented in Overture 84-86. These options depend upon the judgment of the Assembly in relation to a proposed amendment and are as follows:

1. The General Assembly may decide that the proposal to amend the confessional documents presented in an overture, communication, report, or resolution does not merit further consideration. In this case, the Assembly should respond to the proposal in the negative or with no action.

2. The General Assembly may be unsure about the merit of a proposal. It is not ready to answer in the negative or to proceed toward amendment as described in action three (3) to follow. In this case, the Assembly should refer the proposal to some group for further study and report to the next Assembly. Good stewardship suggests that this group be a committee or agency already in place with meetings scheduled and budgeted. Whereas a special committee is not precluded for this purpose, it would not be the committee described in G-18.0201.

3. The General Assembly may determine that the proposal for amendment merits adoption strongly enough to trigger the steps of G-18.0201. In this case, the Assembly must “appoint a committee of elders and ministers, numbering not less than fifteen, to consider the proposal, of whom not more than two shall be from anyone synod. . .”(G-18.0201).” (Minutes, 1986, Part I, p. 807)

The process of the adoption of “A Brief Statement of Faith” was somewhat more direct than that outlined in the 1986 advice. In 1984, the General Assembly created a committee to draft a new confessional statement. That statement was delivered to the 202nd General Assembly (1990), which then formed a new special committee of fifteen to consider the delivered statement under the provisions of G-18.0201b (see Minutes, 1990, Part I, pp. 68 and 216, paragraph 15.008).

In light of the church’s recent practice, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) that it has two pathways by which it may proceed. It may find the recommendation of its Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Office of Theology, Worship, and Education sufficient to ascertain its readiness to proceed toward amendment of The Book of Confessions by the process outlined in G-18.0201. If so, it should create or authorize the creation of the special committee contemplated in G-18.0201b. If not, it should refer the proposal to amend The Book of Confessions to another committee or entity already in place.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution notes that Item 13-04 from the Presbytery of Northern Kansas and Item 13-05 from the Presbytery of Boston recommend that the General Assembly initiate the process to amend The Book of Confessions by replacing the current English translation of the Heidelberg Catechism with a different translation. Both the present action and that contemplated with regard to the Heidelberg Catechism would require the composition of a special committee of at least fifteen persons to consider the action (G-18.0201b). The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the General Assembly that it may wish to appoint a single special committee to consider both actions, and that such a committee might be larger than the minimum fifteen to allow for adequate personnel for both tasks.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 13-07

Advice and Counsel on Item 13-07—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 13-07 asks to study the Belhar Confession.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns advises Item 13-07 be approved with amendment.

The ACWC is concerned about the excluding language used for God in Section 4 of the Belhar Confession. God is not male nor female and ascribing God a gender erroneously puts human limits on who God is. In order to give credence to all qualities and characteristics of God and not just those that are masculine, we advise amending to using expansive language for God in Section 4 of the Belhar Confession so it would read as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with brackets and with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown with brackets and with an underline.]

“4. We believe

“● that God has [been] revealed [~~himself~~] as the one who wishes to bring about justice and true peace among people;

“● that God, in a world full of injustice and enmity, is in a special way the God of the destitute, the poor and the wronged;

“● that God calls the church to follow [~~him in this~~]; for God brings justice to the oppressed and gives bread to the hungry; [the rest of Section 4 remains unchanged]”

Rationale

The church has a wonderful opportunity to enhance and deepen our understanding of who God is and how God is at work in the world by experiencing different cultural expressions of worship and praise. Our growing racial and cultural diversity in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is truly a gift from God that helps the church be faithful to its calling. We rejoice that the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) claims a commitment to being a fully inclusive body of Christ. The church stands as a faithful witness in the midst of global crises. Faith statements also lift up this witness.

The ACWC supports this overture to study the Belhar Confession. Within this confession is an honest reflection of the sin of racism that has plagued the Christian church. What is most helpful is how it recognizes the urgent need to act for justice as evangelism. Studying this confession gives our church the opportunity to recognize that diversity is a gift and that we have failed to live this out. When we fall and fail as a body, we need to confess our brokenness.

GAC COMMENT ON ITEM 13-07

Comment on Item 13-07—From the General Assembly Council.

Item 13-07 recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) initiate the process to include the Belhar Confession in The Book of Confessions, and commends the Belhar Confession to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for further study.

The recommendation from the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns suggests that the Belhar Confession, in its powerful words that emerge from a difficult context, may be able to help Presbyterians live out the unity of the church while confronting issues of race.

Section G-2.0100a outlines and describes the role of our confessions in the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) states its faith and bears witness to God’s grace in Jesus Christ in the creeds and confessions in The Book of Confessions. In these confessional statements the church declares to its members and to the world who and what it is,

what it believes,
what it resolves to do.

The verbs in this section are all present tense. The confessions, rooted in particular historical contexts, declare our contemporary church’s identity, belief, and action. Thus, the confessions are more than historical documents. While they grow out of particular contexts and speak to them, they have been adopted into The Book of Confessions because the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) recognizes that they are authoritative for the church’s current faith and life. The confessions are not static documents, but living witnesses to our theological tradition.

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has the right to determine its confessional stance and can consider amendments to The Book of Confessions, guided by “The Assessment of Proposed Amendments to The Book of Confessions” (The Book of Confessions, pp. xxxi–xxxvi) and following the process outlined in the Book of Order (G-18.0200).

A principle question will be whether Belhar’s powerful witness, embedded in the South African narrative, can aid the North American church in confronting our own racism. There are remarkable similarities and significant differences between the two situations. The Theological Declaration of Barmen has served the Presbyterian church in an analogous way in regard to the confessing church’s mixed struggle against National Socialism. Can Belhar become our confession in the same way that Barmen has become our confession?

Because the confessions constitute a living tradition that expresses the church’s beliefs, the decision to amend The Book of Confessions is an identity-forming decision. The primary purpose of the confessions is to shape the ongoing faith and life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Therefore, the question before the General Assembly is whether the Belhar Confession declares to our members and the world who and what we are, what we believe, and what we resolve to do.

COGA COMMENT ON ITEM 13-07

Comment on Item 13-07—From the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA).

That should the 218th General Assembly (2008) determine that it is wise and timely to create a special committee (G-18.0201b) to consider whether to recommend approval of the Belhar Confession and a new translation of the Heidelberg Confession, the COGA urges the 218th General Assembly (2008) to utilize one special committee to undertake the required study of both potential confessional documents.

None of these requests require the process of creating an entirely new confession, nor the drafting of new language amending a current confession. The requested study of Belhar would focus on whether it should be included in The Book of Confessions as it has been by a number of our Reformed ecumenical partners. Items 13-04, 13-05, and 13-06 ask the PC(USA) to approve a different translation of the Heidelberg Confession, and again do not request any significant redrafting of the confession itself.

Further, the COGA concurs with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution that the use of one special committee would be entirely constitutional. The COGA also believes it wise to consider these two proposed changes to The Book of Confessions jointly and concurrently, as each proposal would each affect both the content and tone of our current The Book of Confessions. Finally, the COGA notes that the tasks required are different in kind than creating an entirely new text, which the PC(USA) last undertook in creating and approving A Brief Statement of Faith following reunion. The cost saving of one, rather than two committees would be substantial. (See financial implication.)

Item 13-08

[This item has been move to 12 Assembly Committee on Church Growth and Christian Education as Item 12-07.]

Item 13-09

[This item has been move to 12 Assembly Committee on Church Growth and Christian Education as Item 12-08.]

Item 13-10

[The assembly answered Item 13-10 by the action taken on Item 13-06. See p. 19.]

Changes to Translated Documents in The Book of Confessions—From the Stated Clerk, Presbytery of Winnebago.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) answer Item 13-10 with the following response:

With respect to the question presented, the Advisory Committee on the Constitution finds that the question does not present a question requiring interpretation of the Constitution.

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution agrees with the reasoning advanced in the request in defense of the position that a change in the translation of a confession or creed is a substantial change in The Book of Confessions. As such, a change in the English translation of a confession or creed requires the use of the amendment process in G-18.0200 of the Book of Order.

The approval of a new translation of the Heidelberg Catechism would not be the first time that the General Assembly has employed the amendment process outlined in G-18.0201 to consider the approval of a confessional translation. The 209th General Assembly (1997) approved an action to direct the Stated Clerk to initiate the process described in G-18.0201b to appoint a committee to consider proposing to the 210th General Assembly (1998) that it act to send the following proposed amendment to The Book of Confessions to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes: "Shall The Book of Confessions be amended so that the 'Ecumenical Version' of the Nicene Creed be included (Minutes, 1997, Part I, p. 42, Overture 97-20)."

At no time since the adoption of The Book of Confessions have the original Greek, Latin, or German versions of the various confessional statements been regarded as authoritative for the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The English versions of the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds, the Heidelberg Catechism, the Second Helvetic Confession, and the Theological Declaration of Barmen, as presented in the current edition of The Book of Confessions, are the authoritative versions for constitutional purposes.

The committee is aware that translation from one language to another is, at best, an inexact art and subject to difference of opinion. Languages are not static. Not only does our understanding of the source language change over time, but English usage itself is in transition. It is thus essential for both our ecclesiology and our polity that creedal and confessional statements be rendered into English as accurately and understandably as possible, and that from time to time reviews and revisions of the translations in The Book of Confessions be conducted. Such reviews are beneficial to the theological health of the church. Changes that result from such reviews should receive the widest possible and most careful discussion on the part of the church before they are received as authoritative. It is precisely this broad and careful discussion that the amendment procedures outlined in G-18.0200 are designed to provide.

Question Received

Item 13-10 from Stated Clerk Michael Lukens of the Presbytery of Winnebago presents the following question upon which it seeks constitutional interpretation:

Is a change in the translation of a confession or creed a substantial change in the nature of the Constitution/The Book of Confessions or is it rather only a derivative change in the communication or medium of the document in the Constitution?

*Item 13-11

[The assembly approved Item 13-11. See pp. 18, 19.]

In regards to the 500th anniversary of the birth of John Calvin, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) call upon the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and all of its governing bodies and congregations to actively participate in the Calvin Jubilee in 2009 and to do the following:

- 1. Use this occasion to rediscover and reclaim Calvin's theological vision so that we may more faithfully be a church reformed and reforming in our own time.
- 2. Participate in conferences and study events around the Calvin Jubilee including the North American Calvin Jubilee conference to be held at Montreat at the time of Calvin's birthday in July of 2009.
- 3. Respond positively to the call of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches to make a fresh commitment to three causes that were central to Calvin's vision and ministry—the unity of the church, the honoring of creation, and the commitment to justice.
- 4. Make use of the resources made available from Reformed churches around the world through the Calvin Jubilee Patronage Committee and its Website, www.calvin09.org.
- 5. Focus on Reformation Sundays in 2008 and 2009 to lift up to our churches the gifts and challenges of sharing in Calvin's legacy and vision for faithful witness.
- 6. Encourage all appropriate PC(USA) agencies, institutions, and governing bodies to take advantage of this jubilee to lift up John Calvin's heritage for the contemporary church.

Rationale

One of the great treasures of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is our Reformed heritage and theological tradition.

The year 2009 is the 500th anniversary of the birth of John Calvin, who in so many ways is the "father" of the Reformed tradition and one of its greatest theologians.

The World Alliance of Reformed Churches has called upon Reformed churches all around the world to join in a celebration of the Calvin Jubilee with an eye toward what it means to be a church "reformed and always reforming" in our own time and place.

This celebration is not only an occasion to look backward but also an occasion to discover anew with Reformed churches around the world the unique gifts and insights of the Reformed tradition for the renewal of our churches and our world in the 21st century.

*Item 13-12

[The assembly approved Item 13-12. See pp. 18, 19.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) approve the following nominees to the Mountain Retreat Association, Inc.'s Board of Directors:

Class of 2010:

1. John W. Smith T—Synod of the Living Waters (New)
2. Margaret Corbin Scheu—Synod of South Atlantic (New)
3. Brandon Wert—Synod of the Southwest (Re-nomination)
4. Kaye Eggleston—Synod of Lincoln Trains (Re-nomination)
5. David Quattlebaum—Synod of South Atlantic (Re-nomination)
6. Gilmour Lake—Synod of Mid Atlantic (Re-nomination)

Class of 2011:

- LaVert Jones—General Assembly Council
Manley Olson—General Assembly Council

Item 13-13

[The assembly approved Item 13-13 with comment. See p. 19.]

The General Assembly Council recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) commend for study in PC(USA) congregations a study guide and accompanying DVD for “The Trinity: God’s Love Overflowing.”

Comment: It is the desire of the assembly committee that future resources on theological issues include leaders and teachers that fully represent the diversity of the church (G-4.0403).

Rationale

This is in response to Alternate Resolution to 2006 Referral: Item 13-05. Report, The Trinity: God’s Love Overflowing. Recommendation 3. Instruct the Office of Theology and Worship, and Congregational Ministries Publishing and Christian Education, to Prepare Study Materials for “The Trinity: God’s Love Overflowing”—From the General Assembly Council (Minutes, 2006, Part I, pp. 11–12, 1108).

The reception and commendation for study of “The Trinity: God’s Love Overflowing” by the 217th General Assembly (2006) caused concerns in some parts of the Presbyterian Church U.S.A. Therefore, the Office of Theology and Worship developed a more robust study process than might ordinarily be used. The Office of Theology and Worship has made available a video resource as a general introduction to the Trinity with a comprehensive study guide for “The Trinity: God’s Love Overflowing” to assist churches in deepening their understanding of and practices in response to the Trinity.

Item 13-Info

Committee on Theological Education Agency Summary

1. Assigned Responsibilities

The Committee on Theological Education (COTE) has the responsibility for developing and maintaining a comprehensive plan for theological education from the perspective of the whole church. The committee seeks to identify, develop, and propose strategies for a denomination-wide approach to theological education. The committee serves as an advocate for theological education, seeking to support the seminaries and to strengthen them for their mission in the world. The Committee on Theological Education can be seen as a two-way communication link between the denomination and its graduate theological institutions. Voting members of the committee include thirteen people elected to represent the church at large and a representative from each of the ten seminaries related directly to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Corresponding members of COTE, who serve with voice but no vote, include representatives from Auburn Theological Seminary and from the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico (both institutions related to the General Assembly through covenant agreements negotiated every five years); a representative of the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation; and representatives of two non-Presbyterian seminaries.

2. Accomplishments

a. Interschool and Seminary/Church Cooperation

(1) Seminary-Church Conversations

Lead staff persons and representative elected members of the COTE, the General Assembly Council, and the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly have met with senior staff and boards of eight of the ten PC(USA) seminaries beginning in April of 2006. These themed conversations, coordinated by COTE, have sought to foster partnership in particular areas of common mission including passing on the Reformed tradition, world mission, Christian education, pastoral formation, spiritual development, multicultural leadership, and commissioned lay pastor training. The academic deans of the Presbyterian-related seminaries and elected members of COTE met jointly with the GAC and COGA in February of 2008 to continue these conversations, especially around the issues of pastoral formation and leadership needs for the future church. The COTE continues to welcome two members of GAC as liaisons on COTE and COTE continues to send an institutional representative/seminary president to each of the GAC meetings as a way of fostering communication and cooperation.

(2) Cooperative Courses

The Office of the General Assembly, San Francisco Theological Seminary, and COTE continue to sponsor a class for seminarians entitled “Presbyterianism: Principles and Practices” during General Assembly. Each January COTE sponsored, in cooperation with Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary and the General Assembly Council, a January-term course for seminarians entitled “Leaders for a Connectional Church: Congregations and the General Assembly.” With the help of presbyteries and seminaries, the Office of Theological Education has encouraged committees on preparation for ministry to urge candidates under their care to take advantage of these opportunities to learn firsthand about our denominational program and polity. Course tuition for courses may be paid via the committee’s Presbyterian Seminary Exchange Program.

(3) Staff and Faculty Cooperation

Some of the groups of faculty and staff representing the various schools that have come together for mutual planning and information sharing each academic year including the institutions’ presidents, deans of student affairs, financial aid officers, development officers, placement officers, communication directors, admission officers, field education directors, ethics and social witness faculty, mission professors, and academic deans.

(4) Other Cooperative Projects

► COTE, through Theological Education Fund special project funds, sponsored a grant request for a May 2008 gathering of Presbyterian theological scholars around the theme of “Pedagogies of African-American Presbyterians.”

► COTE endorsed a 2007–2008 Lilly Endowment funded project that matches three PC(USA) seminaries with three Presbyterian-related colleges to work with congregations on “Globalization and Cultural Diversity.”

► COTE encouraged and participated in a March 2008 gathering of the presidents of PC(USA) seminaries and the presidents of Rabbinical Schools in the Conservative, Reform, and Orthodox Jewish Movements.

b. Funding for Seminaries Related to the PC(USA)

Implementation and interpretation of the Theological Education Fund (1% Plan), which is the sole source of denomination-wide support for the ten PC(USA) seminaries and the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico, continues to be an important task for COTE and the Office of Theological Education. The fund was established by the 198th General Assembly (1986). In 2006, approximately 20 percent of PC(USA) congregations made voluntary contributions to the Theological Education Fund (TEF). As a result, $2,374,492 in TEF moneys were distributed to eligible schools in 2007 according to a formula developed and monitored by the COTE Institutional Review Sub-committee on which only members-at-large sit. In 2007, giving declined as just over $2,000,000 was received and sent to support our schools in 2008. We anticipate receiving and distributing a similar amount in 2008. The TEF helps underwrite quality theological education at our seminaries for students who return to serve our churches in desperate need of pastors equipped for service.

“Seminaries and Churches Together—For Generations to Come” is the theme for interpretation of the seminaries on behalf of the Theological Education Fund. A Seminary Support Network includes more than 140 enthusiastic volunteers and representatives from presbyteries and synods that advocate on behalf of the seminaries. Participation at annual network training conferences continues to grow. The 2007 event was held in conjunction with the stated meeting of the COTE to foster communication and cooperation. Sixteen network synod-level representatives continue to work on a contract basis to make possible improved regional coordination for the Seminary Support Network. Pastors, clerks of sessions, and designated contact persons in PC(USA) congregations received interpretive materials about our seminaries and requests for support of the Theological Education Fund.

In cooperation with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, active promotion of the Theological Schools Endowment Fund has continued to grow at a modest pace. The Theological Schools Endowment Fund provides opportunity for individuals to contribute moneys to benefit our Presbyterian seminaries through gifts and bequests. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation manages this fund.

c. Charter Changes in Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Theological Institutions

One of the governance functions assigned to COTE by the Report of the Special Committee on Theological Institutions approved by the 198th General Assembly (1986) is the reporting of charter changes by the individual schools to the General Assembly. Two seminaries reported changes in their charter or other constitutional documents since the 217th General Assembly (2006).

(1) Princeton Theological Seminary

On May 16, 2006, the Board of Trustees of Princeton Theological Seminary approved the following changes to the institutional charter in their “Amendment and Restatement of the Certificate of Incorporation” printed in full below.

ARTICLE I. The name of this Corporation (“Corporation”) shall be PRINCETON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY (“Seminary”). An alternative name by which the Corporation sometimes has been and is recognized is THE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

ARTICLE II. The Corporation is organized to provide graduate, graduate professional, and continuing education programs in such fields and disciplines of Christian ministry and theological scholarship as the Board of Trustees (“Board”) may from time to time determine; and to promote the advancement of knowledge through the conduct and nurture of theological research.

ARTICLE III. The corporation shall have no members.

ARTICLE IV. The geographic address of the registered office of the Corporation shall be 64 Mercer Street, in Princeton, in the State of New Jersey. The postal designation of the Corporation's registered office shall be Box 821, Princeton, NJ 08542-0803. The current registered agent of the Corporation is John W. Gilmore.

ARTICLE V. The officers of the Corporation shall be a President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and such others as the Board may from time to time determine. The terms and procedures of their appointment, and the use of alternative titles for any of them, shall be specified in the by-laws. The President of the Corporation shall be an ordained minister of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

ARTICLE VI. Unless otherwise limited by this certificate, the Corporation shall have all of the general powers granted to not-for-profit corporations by Title 15A of the Revised Statutes of the State of New Jersey, and such other powers as the laws of the State of New Jersey may confer, except those that are expressly inapplicable to corporations without members.

ARTICLE VII. There shall be a Board of Trustees ordinarily consisting of between twenty-five (25) and thirty-five (35) persons, with the actual number serving at any particular time to be determined by the Board. Approximately one-half of the trustees shall be ordained ministers of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and approximately one-half shall be communicant (lay) members of that Church. If, however, a lay member of the Board should change his or her place of residence, creating in the judgment of the Board an undue hardship for him or her to retain participatory membership in a congregation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Board at its discretion may permit that person to retain membership on the Board, provided he or she shall assume and continue affiliation with a congregation of another reformed denomination in correspondence with the General Assembly of said Church; but not more than two (2) persons shall serve simultaneously under this exception. The number, names and addresses of the Trustees constituting the current Board are as set forth on Schedule A, attached hereto.

ARTICLE VIII. The Board shall be divided into classes approximately equal in size, and the term of office of one such class shall expire each year. Other qualifications for the office of Trustee, procedures for the election and removal of Trustees and for their assignment to classes, and provisions for the selection of officers of the Board and for the conduct of the business shall be specified in the by-laws.

ARTICLE IX. When a person is elected President of the Seminary, or when a Trustee is first elected to the Board of Trustees, his or her name shall be presented for endorsement to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). If the General Assembly to which this presentation is made votes not to endorse the person so elected, and provides in writing reasons for its judgment, the Board of Trustees, at its next meeting, shall review those reasons and report its response thereto to the next said General Assembly.

13 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON THEOLOGICAL ISSUES AND INSTITUTIONS

ARTICLE X. Trustees, together with the President, Secretary, Treasurer, Deans, Vice Presidents, and Head Librarian of the Corporation, shall not be personally liable to the Seminary for damages for breach of any duty owed to the Seminary, except to the extent the New Jersey Nonprofit Corporation Act, as amended from time to time, otherwise requires.

ARTICLE XI. The Corporation is not organized for profit and is to be operated exclusively for one or more of the purposes specified in Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, including, for such purposes, the making of distributions to organizations that qualify as exempt organizations under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, or the corresponding section of any future federal tax code, and in the promotion of the Corporation's purpose as set forth in Article II hereof. The net earnings of the Corporation shall be devoted exclusively to educational and charitable purposes and shall not inure to the benefit of any private individual. No trustee or person from whom the Corporation may receive any property or funds shall receive or shall be entitled to receive any pecuniary profit from the operation thereof, and in no event shall any part of the funds or assets of the Corporation be paid as salary or compensation to, or distributed to, or inure to the benefit of any member of the board of trustees; provided, however, that (a) reasonable compensation may be paid to any trustee while acting as an Agent, including consultant, contractor or employee of the Corporation for services rendered affecting one or more of the purposes of the Corporation; and (b) any trustee may, from time to time, be reimbursed for her or his actual and reasonable expenses incurred in connection with the administration of the affairs of the Corporation.

Notwithstanding any other provision of the Amended and Restated Certificate of Incorporation, the Corporation shall not engage in any activities that are not permitted (1) by a non-profit corporation exempt from federal corporate tax under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, or (2) by a non-profit corporation, contributions to which are tax deductible under Section 170(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code.

ARTICLE XII. This Corporation may be voluntarily dissolved upon adoption of a plan of dissolution, which plan must receive an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the membership of the Board of Trustees at two successive stated meetings of the Board, or meetings specially called for the purpose, in accordance with Title 15A of the Revised Statutes of the State of New Jersey. In the event this Corporation should be dissolved, either voluntarily or involuntarily, any assets of the Corporation thus dissolved shall be disposed of by the Board in a manner that it deems consistent with the purpose of the Corporation as set forth in Article II above.

ARTICLE XIII. Amendments to this certificate may be made by the Board of Trustees of the Corporation pursuant to Title 15A of the Revised Statutes of the State of New Jersey. Any amendment so enacted shall be promptly reported to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

(2) Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico

(a) Number of members of the Board of Directors

Former composition of the Board:

- 30 Directors
- 1 Ex officio—President of the Seminary
- 1 Alumni Representative
- 1 Student Representative
- 1 Faculty Member
- Total 34 Members of the Board of Directors

New composition of the Board

- 22 Directors
- 1 Ex officio—President of the Seminary
- 1 Alumni Representative
- 1 Student Representative
- 1 Faculty Member
- Total 26 Members of the Board of Directors

(b) Work Committees' mergers

There was a reduction on work committees from nine committees to four, including the Executive Committee.

d. Reports from Individual Institutions

The Committee on Theological Education brings to the assembly a narrative report from each of the ten seminaries related to the PC(USA), Auburn Theological Seminary, the Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico, and the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation.

(1) Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary

With more than $8.8 million raised from generous supporters of Austin Seminary, charitable foundations, and friends of longtime Presbyterian leaders John and Nancy Anderson, for whom the building is named, groundbreaking on the first of a new generation of student housing took place November 12, 2007. Construction, which began in early spring, will take approximately one year. When completed, the four-story Anderson House will accommodate students and their families in twenty-four 1-, 2-, and 4-bedroom apartments. A committee comprised of administrators, trustees, and students worked with the contractor on various energy-saving strategies and earned a one-star rating from Austin Energy's Green Building program. In other news, the Lilly Endowment Inc. awarded a continuance grant of $781,803 to the College of Pastoral Leaders, and president's colloquia were held each spring and fall on topics such as the requirements of church membership, immigration, and the church's struggle with homosexuality.

(2) Columbia Theological Seminary

Three distinguished pastor/scholars have joined the faculty: Paul Huh, assistant professor of worship and director of Korean American ministries; Kim Long, assistant professor of worship and coordinator of worship resources for congregations; and Jeffery Tribble, assistant professor of ministry. Brian Wren retired and has been named professor emeritus. Educational and information technology systems are being upgraded to enhance the classroom experience, streamline administrative processes, and facilitate communication on campus and with alumni/ae and lifelong learners. Planning is underway for a new energy-efficient residence hall for single students. The library now includes a special section devoted to collections of manuscripts, books, and artifacts received from the Montreat branch of the Presbyterian Historical Society. A new program in Presbyterian and Reformed history and theology is being developed.

(3) University of Dubuque Theological Seminary (UDTS)

On Saturday, August 4, 2007, a full cohort of students representing three denominations and twelve presbyteries of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) enrolled as the inaugural class of the University of Dubuque Theological Seminary's Distance Master of Divinity degree program. The UDTS is the first seminary of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to offer a Master of Divinity distance education program. This five-year program allows participants to take the majority of classes via the Internet. Two-thirds of the courses are taught online, while the remaining credits are earned in residency at the Dubuque campus. The combination of online and residential instruction enables the close integration of theological education and congregational life. For more information please visit www.udts.dbq.edu.

(4) Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary (LPTS)

Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary began its 155th academic year in a process of campus renewal. Our commitment to theological excellence has been enriched by the contributions of five new faculty: Douglas Gragg, library director, professor, and coordinator for our current re-accreditation process; Johnny B. Hill, who is teaching theology constructed on a framework of reconciliation; Elizabeth Johnson Walker, who is helping us expand pastoral care and counseling in multicultural contexts; Debra Mumford, who is leading students to develop their voices for progressive and relevant preaching; and Claudio Carvalhaes, whose global understanding of worship is energizing many aspects of theological education at LPTS. In a similar fashion, the seminary is renewing its campus infrastructure through board redevelopment, new student housing, classrooms, faculty offices, a student lounge, and a $5 million overhaul of the forty-year-old campus mechanical networks, the most comprehensive project since the campus was established in 1963. In many ways, Louisville Seminary is experiencing a renaissance as we seek to help reshape theological education for the twenty-first century.

(5) McCormick Theological Seminary

McCormick Theological Seminary's academic progress since the 217th General Assembly (2006) was highlighted by the appointment of the Reverend Dr. Jennifer Ayres as assistant professor of Christian ethics. The Office of Student Affairs has been reconfigured to focus more resources and attention on spiritual formation for and pastoral presence to seminarians. The Reverend Dr. Christine Vogel was appointed as the new dean of students and vice president of student affairs. Both are ministers of Word and Sacrament. Philanthropic achievements since 2006 included a $165,000 grant from the Henry Luce Foundation for the Center for the Study of Latino/a Theology and Ministry, a grant of $200,000 from the Arthur Vining Davis Foundations for information technology enhancements, and a gift of $1,000,000 from Fourth Presbyterian Church of Chicago for the general endowment fund.

(6) Pittsburgh Theological Seminary

Pittsburgh Theological Seminary has adopted the following mission statement: "On a dynamic and challenging global stage Pittsburgh Theological Seminary plays its part in God's redemption of the world through Jesus Christ by preparing leaders who proclaim with great joy God's message of good news in both word and deed!" This mission statement is providing the platform upon which the seminary has developed a new vision statement and a long-range plan that grows out of the mission and vision. The plan includes strategies for new facilities, strengthening an already excellent faculty, enhancements for special programs, increased emphasis on lifelong learning and spiritual formation, and additional funding for scholarships and financial aid.

(7) Princeton Theological Seminary

Since June 2006, Princeton Theological Seminary has agreed to a revised curriculum and a changed academic calendar, providing for both a January and a May term. The belief is that this will provide completely new opportunities for teaching and learning and improve diversity in the seminary as a whole. The seminary has developed a full program for commissioned lay pastors and appointed a full-time director of Hispanic lay leadership. The seminary has committed to a new Office of Multicultural Relations. The seminary has increased its field education staff and appointed a full-time pastor as minister of the chapel. The seminary has, for the first time, granted tenure to an African American woman scholar.

(8) San Francisco Theological Seminary

San Francisco Theological Seminary is consolidating its mission of “preparing whole leaders for the whole church” through a number of exciting new emphases. Spiritual, theological, and practical formation for ministry are intentionally integrated in a curriculum that emphasizes learning both in and beyond the classroom. Southern California students from a variety of cultures earn their degrees through evening and Saturday coursework in several languages. The majority of San Anselmo students live on campus with professors in an intentional community of Christian formation, and share together in daily worship. Both campuses are now significantly focused on ministry preparation for 1.5 and second generation leaders for immigrant congregations, notably from Pacific Rim cultures. New faculty include the Reverend Stan Wood, Ford Associate Professor of Congregational Leadership and Evangelism; the Reverend Dr. Sam Hamilton-Poore (Programs in Christian Spirituality); the Reverend Laurie Garrett-Cobbina (Clinical Pastoral Education); the Reverend Dr. Scott Sullender (director of the Lloyd Pastoral Counseling Center); Dr. Annette Schellenberg (Old Testament); and Dr. Annette Weissrieder (New Testament).

(9) Johnson C. Smith Theological Seminary

(10) Union Theological Seminary and Presbyterian School of Christian Education

The Reverend Dr. Brian Blount was named president of Union Theological Seminary and Presbyterian School of Christian Education in March 2007. He succeeds Louis Weeks, who served from 1994–2007. A powerful preacher and leading New Testament scholar, Dr. Blount returns to Virginia after fifteen years as a professor at Princeton Theological Seminary. He previously served as a pastor and director of youth. An exciting renovation is under way at Union-PSCE. The Allen and Jeannette Early Center for Christian Education and Worship will enhance teaching through advanced technology classrooms. A new chapel will permit students to lead and participate in worship in non-traditional settings. Growth continues at Union-PSCE’s extension campus in Charlotte, North Carolina. Nearly 100 students are enrolled in the weekend theological program serving the Carolinas.

(11) Auburn Theological Seminary

In the face of escalating conflict in the church, country, and world, Auburn has placed special emphasis on its bridge-building programs. It has expanded its effort to teach teenagers from diverse religious traditions about each other’s religious faith. One version of the program works with participants from zones of conflict around the world in a yearlong program and another is offered for New York City young people. In response to the controversy over possible divestment in Israel, Auburn and the New York Chapter of The American Jewish Committee convened a group of Presbyterian and Jewish leaders to explore issues of land and covenant and to travel to Israel and the West Bank. A forthcoming program, Repairers of the Breach, will bring groups from presbyteries to explore ways to live together with continuing difference.

(12) Evangelical Seminary of Puerto Rico

Some of the most significant events in our institution during 2006–07 academic year includes the beginning of a new program on theological education training (in partnership with the New Immigrants Office of the PCUSA) for a diverse group of twelve immigrants originally from Africa (Sudan, Ghana, and Liberia), Asia (China and Pakistan), Latin America and the Caribbean (Colombia, Venezuela, and Haiti); the appointment of the Reverend Dr. José R. Irizarry, dean of doctor of ministry programs and associate professor of cultural studies in religion and education now at McCormick Theological Seminary at Chicago as our new academic dean and professor of Christian education; and the appointment of a new professor of theology as faculty member, Dr. Javier Goitia.

(13) Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation (OPSF)

The Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Omaha, which closed at the request of the General Assembly’s Committee to Study Theological Institutions in 1943, continues as the Omaha Presbyterian Seminary Foundation in 2008. The purpose is similar to that of the former teaching seminary, though OPSF has no resident faculty, student body, or campus. The foundation provides grants and scholarships for Presbyterian seminary students, sponsors continuing education programs for clergy, commissioned lay pastors, and other leaders in the Presbyterian church. The foundation also conducts an annual School for Pastors at Hastings College (NE) and is exploring new avenues such as distance education in cooperation with our seminaries. The mission of the foundation remains to seek, develop, and support excellence in Christian leadership through the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

In 2007, the foundation continued to contribute significant funds to leadership development programs for the broader church. Continuing education programs sponsored by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) totaled $140,000. In addition, students attending Presbyterian seminaries received $115,000; grants to seminaries and other church entities were $4,000; for a total of $259,000.

For most of its history the foundation funded its programs with income derived from its endowment. Those funds are now supplemented with mission gifts from local congregations and the generous donations of individuals. Our hope is to expand the ministries of the foundation with an increasing financial base to ensure the vitality of the Presbyterian church in our region and beyond.

Item 14-01

The Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008)

[The assembly approved Item 14-01, Recommendation 1., with amendment. See p. 36.]

1. Approve the following descriptions of each of the ordination examinations:

“(1) Bible Content. This examination shall assess the candidate’s knowledge of the form and content of the Bible.

“(2) Open Book Bible Exegesis. This examination shall assess the candidate’s ability to interpret an assigned passage of Scripture by demonstrating attention to the original language of the text, an understanding of the text’s historical [and literary] context, and an ability to relate the text effectively to the contemporary life of the church in the world.

“The candidate shall have access to Hebrew and Greek texts, translations, commentaries, and other exegetical tools.

“(3) Theological Competence. This examination shall assess the candidate’s capacity to make effective use of the Reformed theological heritage, including the church’s confessional documents, in relating the gospel to the church and the world today.

“(4) Worship and Sacraments. This examination shall assess the candidate’s understanding of the meaning and purpose of corporate worship and the Sacraments, familiarity with the Directory for Worship and The Book of Confessions, and their application to the life of worshipping communities.

“(5) Church Polity. This examination shall assess the candidate’s working knowledge of the constitutional structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the method by which differences are properly resolved and programs to fulfill the mission of the church are determined.”

Rationale

[See also the PCCEC Self-Study, Section V.A.] The Book of Order directs the General Assembly to approve descriptions of the ordination examinations (G-14.0432). The following language (formerly G-14.0310d in the Book of Order, until condensation of Chapter 14 in 2007) currently guides the PCC:

(1) Open Book Bible Exegesis. This examination shall assess the candidate’s ability to find and state the meaning of an assigned passage of Scripture, demonstrating working knowledge of the original language of the text and ability to understand its historical situation.

The candidate shall have access to any or all of the following:

Hebrew and Greek texts, translations, commentaries, and other exegetical tools, including those which presuppose knowledge of the biblical languages. Using these, he or she shall be asked to state the meaning of the passage, show how he or she arrived at this interpretation, and suggest how this passage might be used in the contemporary life of the church.

(2) Bible Content. This examination shall assess the candidate’s knowledge of the form and content of the Bible.

(3) Theological Competence. This examination shall assess the candidate’s capacity to make effective use of the classical theological disciplines and of the confessional documents of the church in relating the gospel to the faith of the church in the contemporary world.

(4) Worship and Sacraments. This examination shall assess the candidate’s understanding of the meaning and purpose of corporate worship and the Sacraments, familiarity with the Directory for Worship and The Book of Confessions and their application to the life of worshipping communities.

(5) Church Polity. This examination shall assess the candidate’s working knowledge of the constitutional structure of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the method by which differences are properly resolved and programs to fulfill the mission of the church are determined.

The PCCEC suggests that

- the description of the Bible Content Examination be placed first, since it is normally the first examination that candidates take;
- the description of the Bible Exegesis Examination be revised to move the emphasis away from finding “the meaning” of the text (a term not widely used in seminaries today), to interpreting the text for the sake of the church and the world;

- the description of the Theological Competence Examination be revised to remove unclear language about “the classical theological disciplines” and to emphasize that the purpose of the examination is interpretation of the church’s shared theology in the Reformed tradition, for the sake of relating the gospel to the church and the world;
- descriptions of the other examinations remain identical to those in earlier versions of the Book of Order.

[The assembly approved Item 14-01, Recommendation 2. See p. 36.]

2. Direct the Stated Clerk to send the following amendment to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes:

Amend the first paragraph of G-14.0431 as follows: [Text to be deleted is shown with a strike-through; text to be added or inserted is shown as italic.]

“G-14.0431 Five Ordination Exams

~~“Inquirers or candidates are encouraged to take the Bible Content Examination in their first year of seminary. The other four examinations may be taken by inquirers or candidates after completion of two full years of theological education. These four examinations shall only be taken upon approval by the committee on preparation for ministry of the inquirer’s or candidate’s presbytery. Inquirers and candidates are encouraged to take the Bible Content Examination in their first year of seminary. The other four examinations shall ordinarily be taken by inquirers or candidates only after completion of two full years of theological education, or its equivalent, and shall be taken only upon approval by the committee on preparation for ministry of the inquirer’s or candidate’s presbytery, which shall first attest that the inquirer or candidate has completed adequate academic preparation in each examination area and adequate supervised experience in the practice of pastoral ministry. The areas of examinations are:”~~

Rationale

[See also the PCCEC Self-Study, Section V.C.] The PCCEC is concerned that many candidates take the examinations before they are sufficiently prepared. Too often the result is unsatisfactory grades and unnecessary frustration with the examination process. The examinations are meant to be comprehensive and integrative, and for this reason, the PCCEC encourages candidates to take them together (rather than one by one at different times of year) and in the middle of the senior year of seminary or later.

The PCCEC, however, affirms the need for presbyteries to have flexibility in determining when candidates take the examinations, given candidates’ diverse circumstances and in order to guard against imposing undue burdens on candidates (especially in their senior year of seminary when many wish to receive a call). The Book of Order currently provides this flexibility in the following way:

Inquirers and candidates are encouraged to take the Bible Content Examination in their first year of seminary. The other four examinations may be taken by inquirers or candidates after completion of two full years of theological education. These four examinations shall only be taken upon approval by the committee on preparation for ministry by the inquirer’s or candidate’s presbytery. ... (G-14.0431)

The PCCEC believes that this language should be revised so as to retain presbytery flexibility, while emphasizing that the examinations are best taken after candidates’ completion of necessary academic work and supervised ministry experience.

ACC ADVICE ON ITEM 14-01

Advice on Item 14-01—From the Advisory Committee on the Constitution

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly regarding Item 14-01 with the following comment.

Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates submitted two items for approval by the 218th General Assembly (2008). Both items result from the group’s self-study being reported to the 218th General Assembly (2008). The first item reflects the fact that the revision to Chapter XIV of the Form of Government removed specific provisions regarding ordination examinations and instead directs the General Assembly to approve descriptions of the ordination examinations (G-14.0432). The request is consistent with this revision to the Form of Government.

In its second request, the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) send to the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative vote an amendment modifying the current language of G-14.0430 in two ways.

First, the amendment would replace "may" with "shall ordinarily" in the sentence describing when the Open Book Exegesis, Theological Competence, Worship and Sacraments, and Church Polity examinations are taken. In the context of this sentence, which modifies "only be taken," the proposed amendment increases the flexibility of the presbyteries' committees on preparation for ministry in determining when such examinations are appropriately taken.

Second, the recommendation sets a new standard for the approval of candidates to take these examinations by replacing the requirement that committee on preparation for ministry give approval to a candidate to take the examinations with requirement that it "attest that the inquirer or candidate has completed adequate academic preparation in each examination area and adequate supervised experience in the practice of pastoral ministry."

The Advisory Committee on the Constitution advises the 218th General Assembly (2008) that the proposed language is clear and accomplishes the stated intent of the recommendation.

Impact of the proposed revisions to the proposed revised Form of Government before the assembly: To the extent the 218th General Assembly (2008) wishes to make amendment to the current G-14.0430, the comparable provision in the proposed Form of Government is found at G-2.0407d. The 218th General Assembly (2008) may place this proposal before the presbyteries for their affirmative or negative votes as alternative language to the proposal in the proposed revised Form of Government.

14-Self-Study ACREC

Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) Self-Study Report for the 218th General Assembly (2008)

In a broken and fearful world
the Spirit gives us courage
to pray without ceasing,
to witness among all peoples to Christ as Lord and Savior,
to unmask idolatries in Church and culture,
to hear the voices of peoples long silenced, and to work with others for justice, freedom, and peace. (The Book of Confessions, A Brief Statement of Faith, 10.4, lines 65–71)

I. INTRODUCTION

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), along with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC), was created by the 205th General Assembly (1993) to ensure representation and an active voice for advocacy at the General Assembly level for people of color in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The goal of this committee is to ensure the full access and participation of people of color within the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the maintenance of a strong prophetic witness of the church on issues of racial justice in our nation and the world.

In each time and place, there are particular problems and crises through which God calls the church to act. The church, guided by the Spirit, humbled by its own complicity and instructed by all attainable knowledge, seeks to discern the will of God and learn how to obey in these concrete situations. ... (The Book of Confessions, The Confession of 1967, 9.43; the inclusive language version can be found at the following Web site: <http://www.pcusa.org/theologyandworship/confession/confess67.pdf>)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition, as well as different marital conditions (married, single, widowed, or divorced) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decisions making of the church (G-9.0104a). (Book of Order, G-4.0403)

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has a deep commitment to the work of racial justice as an expression of our Christian witness in the world. The church also recognizes that as an institution where the vast majority of its members are white, it continues to seek to be inclusive with equity, as it also seeks to increase the diversity of its members. The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns was created in response to these hard realities. We are not yet where we want to be.

The first class of ACREC members was elected by the 207th General Assembly (1995) and met for the first time in the fall of the same year. Its charter is large—to be a vigilant voice for racial justice in the church, and in the world. Throughout its life, the committee has worked hard to carry both mantles.

II. WHO WE ARE

The ACREC has twelve voting members nominated and elected through the General Assembly Nominating process, with the exception of one, who is elected by the General Assembly Council (GAC). Members are elected to four-year terms and may serve a total of eight years. The composition of the committee is outlined in the (GAC) Manual of Operations, as follows:

- 2 African Americans
- 2 Asian Americans
- 2 Hispanic/Latino Americans
- 2 Middle Eastern Americans
- 2 Native Americans
- 1 Member-at-Large elected with consideration for special expertise, fast-growing racial ethnic communities, geographic diversity, and ethnic balance.
- 1 General Assembly Council Executive Committee member

The General Assembly Council member is ordinarily nominated to serve a two-year term, as long as they continue to serve as a member of the General Assembly Council Executive Committee. They serve as a voting member on ACREC and fulfill the responsibility of liaison between the General Assembly Council Executive Committee and the advocacy committee.

Members of the five racial ethnic caucuses recognized by the General Assembly select a member from their caucus to be nominated through the General Assembly Nominating Committee (GANC) process. The remaining six vacancies are filled through at-large nominations from the GANC—with one representative in each of the five racial ethnic groups identified above. Additionally, ACREC works with the caucuses and the GANC to try to maintain gender balance and diversity in age and geographic representation. The racial ethnic caucuses that nominate members to ACREC are:

- National Asian Presbyterian Council
- Native American Coordinating Council
- National Black Presbyterian Caucus
- National Hispanic/Latino Caucus
- National Middle Eastern Presbyterian Caucus

The ACREC receives liaisons from other entities to provide for communication, coordination, and representation. Liaisons serve on the committee with full voice, but not vote. These include the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC), the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), and Racial Ethnic Young Women Together (REYWT). The ACREC sends liaisons to ACWC and ACSWP.

The ACREC also appoints one member to sit on the Mission Responsibility Through Investment (MRTI) committee. That person is a full voting member of MRTI.

III. MISSION AND PARTNERSHIPS

In order to respond to its mandate, the committee is designed to have direct access to the General Assembly (GA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC) to provide advice and counsel on matters it deems appropriate. This access is provided for in a number of ways:

- ◇ The chair of ACREC sits as a corresponding member of both GA and GAC.
- ◇ The committee provides advice and counsel on new business.
- ◇ The committee provides reports and resolutions to introduce new business.
- ◇ The committee holds regular consultations with the executives of the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly.

The ACREC works in close partnership with the ACWC and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly through written comments on overtures and reports to the General Assembly and a briefing session for commissioners at the assembly. The committee has advocated on critical issues impacting communities of color on a wide range of issues, including:

- ◇ Voting Rights and Election Reform
- ◇ Affirmative Action, Equal Employment, and Minority Vendor policies
- ◇ Reparations
- ◇ Public Education

- ◇ Immigration policy
- ◇ Farm Worker Rights and Labor rights

The committee has urged the church to examine its own policies and practices, such as:

- ◇ Employment
- ◇ Purchasing
- ◇ Developing cultural proficiency
- ◇ Representation and leadership in governance
- ◇ Candidacy, examination, call, and ordination processes
- ◇ Response to the Women of Color consultation
- ◇ Antiracism training and other strategies

The ACREC's chairperson attends the GAC meetings as a corresponding member to provide similar advice and counsel. The ACREC provides a written report to the GAC on an annual basis and directs written correspondence to the council as needed.

A. Racial Ethnic Constituencies

The ACREC is structured through its membership, to ensure that the racial ethnic constituencies that it represents in the church have a voice at the General Assembly level, through the nomination of members to the committee by the racial ethnic caucuses. The at-large positions on the committee also allow the committee, in partnership with the GANC, to recruit members who reflect the interests and perspectives of the various racial ethnic communities, with particular expertise in the wide array of social justice issues about which the committee is concerned.

The committee has further sought to develop and maintain relationships with the racial ethnic caucuses, to educate and inform committee members of the diverse experiences, issues, and concerns of the constituencies it represents, and to communicate its work through:

- Joint meetings with the National Cross Caucus;
- Forum on Church and Race at the ecumenical multicultural event;
- Meeting in diverse locations and including opportunities for education and dialogue in its meetings;
- Regular consultation with Washington Office, Project Equality, ACWC, ACSWP, and MRTI;
- Forum on Church and Race, July 11, 2007, as a pre-conference event at the National Multicultural Ecumenical Event in Los Angeles, California; and
- meeting with various staff offices as it monitors the work of the church in particular areas of interest or concern to people of color in the church.

B. General Assembly Committees

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns meets jointly at least annually with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns and the Advisory Committee for Social Witness Policy. The advice and counsel teams of the three committees meet prior to each General Assembly to coordinate their work in providing advice and counsel to the General Assembly.

The ACREC and the ACWC formed a joint working group to respond to the Women of Color Consultation report and other issues where the interests of the two committees intersect. At the 217th General Assembly (2006), ACREC and ACWC submitted a joint resolution on the Women of Color Consultation to the assembly, which was approved. This resolution created a joint task force that included representation from both committees, along with representatives from Presbyterian Women and the National Cross Caucus. The report of the task force to this assembly is recommending the Joint ACREC/ACWC working group become a permanent entity, incorporated in their Manual of Operations, with funding to include additional representatives and/or consultants for an annual consultation.

Through its relationship with MRTI, ACREC has examined issues of predatory lending and divestment, and will be working in partnership to address concerns about exorbitant fees charged to persons who wire money to their families outside the U.S.

IV. ACCOMPLISHMENTS AND CHALLENGES

The ACREC has worked on a wide variety of issues during the review period, addressing critical social justice issues in our nation and focusing attention on the need for change within our denomination as well. In 2001, the committee sent a resolution to the 213th General Assembly (2001) requesting the GAC to create a task force to Study the Disenfranchisement of People of Color in the U.S. Electoral System, and to consider whether the church should make a policy statement on this matter. The assembly approved this action. The task force, formed in 2002 with representation from ACREC, worked in consultation with the committee. It reported to the 216th General Assembly (2004).

The 2004 report included a recommendation directing ACSWP to develop a resolution to address the need for electoral reform and present options for practical engagement to ensure greater participation, equality, and fairness in the electoral process. A study team was created in consultation with ACREC, and is presenting its report, Lift Every Voice: Democracy, Voting Rights, and Electoral Reform to 218th General Assembly (2008).

A second action submitted by ACREC to the 2001 assembly called for the creation of a Task Force to Study Reparations. The committee asked that the task force examine the issue as it related to all racial ethnic communities, with a theological framework. The assembly approved this recommendation. The task force, formed in consultation with ACREC and staffed by the Presbyterian Peacemaking Program, reported to the 216th General Assembly (2004). The report called for the creation of a study guide on their report and a Website, to further assist Presbyterians in learning about and engaging this issue. The report originally called for the creation of a new confession. This recommendation was amended by the General Assembly. The amendment called for Presbyterians to study the Belhar Confession, directing the Office of Theology and Worship to prepare a study guide for this purpose. The ACREC has consulted with both Peacemaking and Theology and Worship on the implementation of these recommendations.

The ACREC has studied the Belhar Confession itself and is sending action to the 218th General Assembly (2008), recommending the assembly initiate process to include it in The Book of Confessions by creating a committee to study it and make a recommendation to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

In a third recommendation from ACREC to the 213th General Assembly (2001), the assembly created the Task Force to Examine General Assembly Entities. This task force examined the Affirmative Action/Equal Employment Opportunity (AA/EEO) and Minority Vendor policies and programs of the Board of Pensions, the General Assembly Council, the Office of the General Assembly, the Presbyterian Foundation, the Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program, Inc., and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation. The task force reported to 216th General Assembly (2004). The recommendations approved by the assembly:

- ◇ initiated the implementation of the tools of cultural proficiency, or similar program, in all six entities related to the General Assembly;
- ◇ implemented a process of regular, recurring face-to-face consultations between ACREC and the corporate executives of the six entities; and
- ◇ called for renewed effort in developing nationwide recruitment strategies to develop a more diverse pool of candidates for employment.

Even before the task force reported to the General Assembly in 2004, their work led to the implementation of cultural proficiency in the GAC. Cultural proficiency is an approach to diversity in organizations that provides language to describe, and standards to assess, both healthy and nonproductive policies, practices, and behaviors. It acknowledges that change does not happen overnight, that people and organizations move on a continuum from highly exclusive and oppressive organizations and behaviors to highly inclusive organizations and behaviors. It is built on a foundation that aligns the principles of inclusivity in diversity with the core values and mission of the organization. It also acknowledges that organizations are resistant to change and that the causes of resistance must be taken into account and addressed openly in order to bring about cultural transformation within an organization.

The ACREC held its first consultations with executives in 2005 and made its first assessment report to the 217th General Assembly (2006). The report to 218th General Assembly (2008) will introduce more formal planning, assessment, and reporting requirements for the agencies, strengthening the consultation process. It also requests the assembly to create a task force to review and update AA/EEO and Minority Vendor policies for consistent application and incorporation of cultural proficiency.

In 2002, ACREC responded to an earlier referral regarding guidelines for delivering health care to people of color, with emphasis on what the church could do. This response endorsed the Culturally and Linguistically Appropriate Services Standards (CLAS) as minimum guidelines for all church-operated, church-related, and church-contracted health-care services.

In 2004, ACREC submitted a special report to the assembly, assessing the church's efforts to combat racism. This document was a five-year status report on the Facing Racism: A Vision of the Beloved Community, which was approved by the 211th General Assembly (1999).

In 2006, the committee submitted a joint resolution with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns requesting a task force to assess the church's response to the Women of Color Consultation and develop a mechanism to monitor implementation. The resolution was approved and the task force formed, including representation from ACREC. That task force is reporting to the 218th General Assembly (2008). The committee has had ongoing consultations with the task force, providing input to their work.

The ACREC also submitted the Fair Food Resolution to the 217th General Assembly (2006). This resolution, which was approved by the assembly, called for support of the Fair Food Campaign, which grew out of the Taco Bell Boycott, and authorized the elected GAC to authorize a boycott on McDonalds, in the event that the campaign called for one and waiting for the 218th General Assembly (2008) would impede the church's ability to respond in a timely manner.

For each assembly in the review period, the committee prepared advice and counsel on overtures and other items of business before the assembly. The committee provided a briefing for commissioners at each assembly, with lunch provided, and published a briefing booklet distributed at the briefing and the exhibit area of the assembly. In addition to commissioners and advisory delegates, the commissioners briefing has also been well attended by representatives of the racial ethnic caucuses in attendance at the assembly.

In addition to its work related to the General Assembly, ACREC has monitored the GAC's implementation of AA/EEO and Minority Vendor policies, including advocating for the use of the Project Equality Buyer's Guide. The ACREC held regular consultations with the director of Project Equality through 2006. The ACREC also advocated for better recruitment strategies in the GAC. In 2001, the GAC hired a recruiter in Human Resources, at least in part as a result of their advocacy. The committee monitored development of the ACSWP Resolution Calling for a Comprehensive Legalization Program for Immigrants Living and Working in the United States, and advocated for its approval by the assembly in 2004. This document was initiated by a commissioners' resolution in 2001.

The committee has addressed issues relating to its own staffing, and revised its Manual of Operations in 2004 to reflect changes necessitated by the shift to biennial assemblies. They have worked to strengthen communication with the caucuses. Joint meetings with the National Cross Caucus began in 2003 as part of this effort. They have also worked actively to strengthen joint efforts with ACWC. In addition to responding to the Women of Color Consultation, the committees have found a common interest is working on issues related to immigration. In 2006, at its Spring meeting, ACREC hosted a consultation with representatives of the Korean Council on a proposal submitted to the General Assembly to create a non-geographic synod. This was a joint session with the National Cross Caucus. The discussion helped inform ACREC's advice and counsel on a sensitive matter of great significance to the Korean Council and the church as a whole.

The committee has engaged in a number of education and information gathering activities to inform and equip its members for their work. They have had speakers on:

- ◇ Project Equality;
- ◇ Corporate responsibility and the Equal Credit Opportunity Act;
- ◇ 2000 Census;
- ◇ Various aspects of immigration policy and experience—undocumented immigrants, refugee and asylum issues, and new immigrant ministries;
- ◇ The intersectionality of race, gender, and class;
- ◇ Cultural Proficiency; and
- ◇ Issues in the Middle East.

The committee has toured Menaul School and Cook College, becoming more familiar with the challenges facing the racial ethnic schools of the PC(USA). It met at Villa International in Atlanta and learned about their ministry with international students. In Albuquerque, the committee met with presbytery and synod executives and learned about the challenges and rewards of being a multicultural church in the unique cultural context of the Southwest. In Atlanta, they met with presbytery staff and pastoral leadership engaged in new immigrant ministry. In October of 2001, the committee met in New York City and toured the site of the destruction of the Twin Towers. The committee sent representatives to the Women of Color Consultation in 2004 and the No More Deaths Border Consultation in 2005. At its Fall 2006 meeting, ACREC met on the campus of McCormick Seminary where they heard from seminary representatives, the Committee on Theological Education, and Office of Vocations staff on the challenges and some of the strategies to address the needs of racial ethnic seminary students and candidates for ordination.

Challenges

One of the challenges facing ACREC is the need to actively recruit younger leadership to the committee. It has communicated its concern to the caucuses that nominate members to the committee and has consulted with REYWT, in particular, to attempt to recruit younger representatives through the at-large vacancies on the committee. The four-year terms and significant time commitment are perceived by the committee as partial barriers, but the committee has also noted that older members have faced difficulties with these commitments as well.

The National Cross Caucus was inactive in 2007. The ACREC has relied on the National Cross Caucus, which is made up of caucus chairs and young adult representatives of the five national caucuses recognized by the GAC and the Korean Council. The future of the National Cross Caucus is not clear. If this entity is not going to be active in the future, ACREC will need to find other means of maintaining an active relationship with the caucuses.

The ACREC faces a continuing challenge to balancing the urgency of a wide array of social justice issues and the need to monitor the work of the church on an on-going basis, with the limitations of a twelve-member committee with part-time staff support. The use of a strategic planning process has helped the committee to discern priorities for its work in a two-year cycle. However, it is still challenged by events in the church and in society that cannot always be anticipated and can impose on the time and concerns of the committee. For example, in 2006 a Supreme Court decision to overturn voluntary school desegregation plans in Louisville and Seattle put an issue on ACREC's agenda that had not appeared on its Strategic Plan. The committee's discussion following that action led to a resolution to the 218th General Assembly (2008).

V. PLANNING, COMMUNICATION AND EVALUATION

The ACREC holds three meetings in a non-assembly year and four meetings in an assembly year. New member orientation is normally held in the summer meeting immediately following the assembly. The committee has two subcommittees: Resource and Referral (R&R), and Study and Comment (S&C).

The R&R subcommittee is responsible for reviewing reports, recommendations, and overtures to General Assembly, analyzing the actions of the assembly and making recommendations to the committee, identifying areas of concern and preparing appropriate reports and recommendations to the assembly, coordinating with ACWC and ACSWP in the preparation of advice and counsel memoranda for the assembly, and preparing resources such as the briefing booklet.

The S&C subcommittee is responsible for consultation and communication with the racial ethnic caucuses and other networks in the church, planning and coordination of the committee's work to monitor implementation of racial justice policies within the church; the church's commitments to increasing diversity in employment, and support for programs that strengthen and enrich the church's ministry with people of color.

The committee initiated a Strategic Vision Plan in 2003, to assist it in setting goals and prioritizing its work. The committee normally reviews the Strategic Vision Plan in the Summer and Fall meeting following an assembly. It assesses on-going work, new work assigned by the assembly, and new areas of concern it wants to address based on input from committee members, liaisons, and staff. These priorities are taken into consideration as it selects locations and sets agendas for its meetings. In the next two-year cycle, the committee will also have input from the Forum on Church and Race held at the ecumenical multicultural event in July 2007.

The Strategic Vision Plan has identified areas of concern, including:

- The support and success of racial ethnic and immigrant seminary students, and candidates for the ministry of Word and Sacrament;
- High percentage of racial ethnic/immigrant urban and rural congregations without pastoral leadership;
- Strengthening relationships of ACREC with other units of the GA to ensure that goals of ACREC are implemented;
- Strengthen relationship with racial ethnic caucuses in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with that of ACREC;
- Explore possibilities for greater investment by PC(USA) to build housing for the poor, providing the guarantee of credit to mortgage companies advancing money needed for the construction of the housing (working with PILP and/or Foundation); and

- Monitor the GAC's adoption of the cultural proficiency tools, commend it to congregations, presbyteries, and synods for their use in all aspects of their ministry of justice and cultural inclusiveness.

Dialogue with the racial ethnic caucuses has also provided valuable input. Dialogue with the National Cross Caucus in the March 2006 meeting led to a consultation at its joint meeting with ACWC in January 2007 with GAC staff, and Jean Marie Peacock, former Vice Moderator, representing the Presbytery of South Louisiana. That consultation resulted in a joint resolution with ACSWP to this assembly, Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future.

Much of ACREC's work is addressed to the General Assembly, communicated as new business and in the minutes of the assembly itself. The committee's briefing booklet and commissioner's briefing provide additional communication of their work at the assembly. In 2004, the committee approved a new logo and developed a brochure for distribution at General Assembly and conferences and gatherings, where appropriate. It is available through the Office for Racial Justice and Advocacy where it is also displayed for visitors at the Presbyterian Center. The Office for Racial Justice and Advocacy has also assisted with placement of articles on the work of ACREC in the newsletter, the TORCH. In 2004, the committee also launched a Website with support from the GAC staff. The Website is linked to the Office for Racial Justice & Advocacy, Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries, ACWC, ACSWP, Peacemaking, and the Washington Office. The Website is designed to give the committee more visibility on an on-going basis. In the six-month period preceding the assembly, it focuses on communicating with commissioners and others interested in assembly business.

VI. CONCLUSION

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns is an important voice for racial justice in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It has advocated faithfully for change within the church and for the church's prophetic witness in the nation. Through its active partnerships with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and Mission Responsibility Through Investment, ACREC works to equip the whole church to attend to the intersections of race, gender, and class in its public witness.

This self-study report is based on the work of the committee for the five-year period from 2001–2006. Sources for the report include minutes, agency summaries, reports, resolutions, and advice and counsel submitted to the General Assembly, and briefing booklets prepared for commissioners. The self-study team met July 11, 2007, for planning purposes, and consulted by email and conference call in the preparation of the report.

Members of the self-study team are:

- ◇ Judith Armour Pingel (chair of self-study team), current member of ACREC
- ◇ John Spangler, current member
- ◇ Mauricio Chácon, current member and former chair of ACREC
- ◇ Noushin Framke, current member and chair of ACREC
- ◇ Evelyn Kelly, former member
- ◇ Fahed Abu Akel, former member

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns expresses its gratitude to the self-study task force for their work in preparing this report.

Appendix A

Excerpt from the General Assembly Council Manual of Operations (June 2006)

VIII. General Assembly Advocacy and Advisory Committees

The 205th General Assembly (1993) approved the creation of two advocacy committees and one advisory committee. They are:

- Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns
- Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns
- Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy

Beginning at the close of the 207th General Assembly (1995), the above named committees shall have members as detailed below; elected for a four-year term with a maximum of eight years. For those who continue from the similar committees, continuous service is counted.

14 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY PERMANENT COMMITTEES

The General Assembly Nominating Committee shall nominate the members, and shall monitor the rotation of committee members among the synods.

The chairs of the advocacy committees and of the advisory committee shall be elected in the same manner as the chairs of the GAC Ministries Division and MSS committees, i.e., elected by the members of the respective committees.

The funding for the meetings of these advocacy committees and advisory committee comes from the per capita budget and is the responsibility of the General Assembly Council.

Staff responsible for the planning and coordination work of the committee shall be accountable to the Office of the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council in consultation with the appropriate Advisory or Advocacy Committee.

A. Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC)

This advocacy committee shall consist of the following persons:

- 2 African American (*)
- 2 Asian American (*)
- 2 Hispanic (*)
- 2 Middle Eastern (*)
- 2 Native American (*)
- 1 at-large member elected with consideration for special expertise, fast-growing racial ethnic segments, geographic diversity and ethnic balance
- 1 General Assembly Council Executive Committee Member nominated by the Executive Committee and elected by the General Assembly Council to serve a two-year term so long as such person continues to serve as a member of the General Assembly Council Executive Committee. This voting member fulfills the responsibility of liaison between the General Assembly Council Executive Committee and the advocacy committee.

(*) Members of the five racial ethnic caucuses (African American, Asian American, Hispanic, Middle Eastern, and Native American ) shall select one member from each caucus to be elected through the General Assembly Nominating process to serve a four year-term with eligibility for one additional term.

1. Accountability and Lodgement:

Staff responsible for the planning and coordination work of the committee shall be appointed by the General Assembly Council Executive Director in consultation with the Advocacy Committee. The staff shall be lodged within the office of the General Assembly Council Executive Director, unless the Advocacy Committee consents to staff being lodged outside that office. Such staff shall be accountable for the work of the committee to the office of the General Assembly Council Executive Director.

2. Budget

Funding for the work of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns comes from the per capita budget except for the staffing costs which are accounted for in the budget of the office where the staff is lodged. The Advocacy Committee shall propose a yearly budget to the office of the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council.

3. Access

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns shall have direct access to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council. Access shall be in the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, racial involvement reports, a yearly narrative report, Advice and Counsel Memoranda, and other appropriate correspondence. Advice and Counsel Memoranda shall be developed in consultation with other advisory and advocacy committees as appropriate. The yearly narrative report shall be forwarded to the General Assembly Council Executive Committee for possible comment.

4. Assigned Functions

- a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or on its own initiative.
- b. Advise the General Assembly Council on matters of racial ethnic concerns including statements concerning pressing issues, that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.
- c. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners' resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of racial ethnic concern.
- d. Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on racial ethnic concerns and provide information to the church as requested.
- e. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.
- f. Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies and programs relative to racial ethnic concerns.
- g. Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concern.

Appendix B.
ACREC Manual of Operation (2006)

I. Introduction

As required by The Book of Order, G-9.0405, this Manual of Administrative Operations and Procedures has been developed by the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns in conformity with commitments of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to the diversity, inclusiveness, and full participation of all persons (G-4.0400), with particular attention to the paragraph (G-0403):

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition, as well as different marital conditions (married, single, widowed, or divorced) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decisions making of the church (G-9.0104ff).

This Manual of Operations and Procedures:

A. Describes and defines the organization of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and provides for its functioning during and between meetings.

B. May be revised (amended) by a majority vote of the ACREC members present and voting at any scheduled meeting of the Committee insofar as this action does not conflict with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

C. Shall not prevail when changes in the Book of Order occur which make any provisions of this manual contrary to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

D. May have any or all of its Standing Rules suspended temporarily at any time by a two-thirds vote of those ACREC members present and voting at any scheduled meeting insofar as this action does not conflict with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The period of time and the purpose of the rules suspension shall be specified by the member moving the suspension.

Note: The 205th General Assembly (1993) approved the creation of two advocacy committees, one of which is the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns. The 207th General Assembly (1995) elected the first class of ACREC members who met for the first time in the Fall of 1995.

II. Mission and Ministries*A. Mission Statement (Adopted January 16, 2000)

The mission and ministries of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) are to advocate for full access for all Racial ethnic/Immigrant groups to all programs, ministries, governing bodies, and congregations of the Presbyterian church (U.S.A.) by monitoring implementation of policy and corresponding actions, decisions, and issues of racial ethnic concern. ACREC shall have direct access to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council to provide advice and counsel assuring compliance with the Book of Order, section G-4.0403 and section 5.6. of the Articles of Agreement to ensure advocacy and monitoring functions in the areas of Racial Ethnic Ministries.

B. Purpose Statement (Adopted by the 206th General Assembly [1994])

To ensure advocacy and monitoring functions in the areas of Racial Ethnic Ministries and Women's Ministries the GA provides for the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns and the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns. These two advocacy committees work in close cooperation with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. All three groups have direct access in the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council, and the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns' work is coordinated through the Office of the General Assembly Council by the Deputy Executive Director of the General Assembly Council.

C. Organization for Mission (Manual of the General Assembly 2003–2004. Organization for Mission, VI. The General Assembly Council and Its Ministry Divisions, A. Office of the Executive Director, 1. Advocacy and Advisory Committees, page 12)

The Executive Director has the responsibility for the advocacy and advisory committees. All three groups have direct access to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council, and their work is coordinated through the Office of the Deputy Executive Director.

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns shall assist the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to give full expression of the rich diversity of its membership as specified in the Book of Order, G-4. 0403. The Committee shall be a prophetic voice for involving racial ethnic people in the formation of public policy, particularly where race is a factor that negatively impacts the quality of life of people of color. The committee will also monitor the implementation of policies adopted by the church which impact the quality of life of racial ethnic people in the church and in the world.

III. Membership*A. Elected Voting Members

Prior to the conclusion of the 207th General Assembly (1995), the membership of the elected voting members of ACREC was detailed, though terms of service have since been revised in view of the move to biennial assemblies in each even-numbered calendar year. Unchanged is the specification that the General Assembly Nominating Committee shall nominate the committee members, except for the General Assembly Council representative, and shall monitor the rotation of committee members among the synods.

1. Composition

Composition of the elected voting membership of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns shall consist of the following twelve (12) persons who shall be in classes upon their election:

- a. Two (2) African Americans*
- b. Two (2) Asian Americans*
- c. Two (2) Hispanic / Latino Americans*
- d. Two (2) Middle Eastern Americans*
- e. Two (2) Native Americans*
- f. One (1) Member-at-Large elected with consideration for special expertise, fast-growing racial ethnic communities, geographic diversity, and ethnic balance.
- g. One (1) General Assembly Council Executive Committee member nominated to serve a two-year term so long as such person continues to serve as a member of the General Assembly Council Executive Committee. This voting member fulfills the responsibility of liaison between the General Assembly Council Executive Committee and the Advocacy Committee.

2. Selection of Members from the Racial Ethnic Caucuses

Members of the five racial ethnic caucuses (African American, Asian American, Hispanic/Latino American, Middle Eastern American, and Native American) shall select one (1) member from each caucus to be elected through the General Assembly's nominating process to serve a full or partial four-year term with eligibility for one additional full term.

B. Liaison Members Assigned to ACREC by Other Church Entities

Liaison persons may be elected or appointed to serve with full voice, but no vote. Such liaison persons ordinarily will include representatives from such other key church entities as the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, and the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment.

C. Representatives

In addition to the 12 elected voting members and to the non-voting liaison members of ACREC, staff, consultants, and representatives from related entities may attend the ACREC meetings. Specifically, this will involve:

1. A representative from the General Assembly Nominating Committee shall attend an ACREC meeting at least biennially at the expense of the General Assembly Nominating Committee. This representative shall be given time on the agenda of the meeting and shall have voice but not a vote.
2. For purposes of communication and resources, staff from the Congregational, National, and Worldwide Ministries Divisions, as well as Mission Support Services, may be invited to meet at least biennially with ACREC. These representatives may be given time on the agenda of the meeting and shall have voice but not a vote, with expenses being paid by their respective staff travel budgets.

D. Responsibilities of ACREC Members (shall include but not be limited to):

1. Diligence
  - a. Maintain a commitment to the purpose of ACREC;
  - b. Accept and fulfill assignments as agreed to or requested by ACREC;
  - c. Accept an Office only if willing to assume duties of the office.
2. Meeting Attendance
  - a. Upon notice of scheduled meetings, promptly make arrangements to attend;
  - b. Be in attendance at all committee meetings. If unable to attend a scheduled committee meeting, promptly notify the chairperson or the office to request an excused absence;
  - c. Remain until the meeting adjourns, unless a timely request has been submitted to be excused early;
  - d. When conference calls are scheduled, immediately confirm participation or excused absence. At the start of scheduled conference calls, initiate phone connections a few minutes before the designated time of the call in order to begin promptly
3. Meeting Participation and Process
  - a. Be on time for all committee meetings, since a quorum is established on the basis of actual attendance;
  - b. Prepare to participate in all committee business by studying materials received before and at the meeting;
  - c. Prepare all reports to the committee in writing and, if requested, provide sufficient copy for distribution to all meeting participants;

14 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY PERMANENT COMMITTEES

- d. Give respectful attention to anyone speaking during meetings;
- e. direct all comments to the chairperson during plenary discussions. Submit motions in writing to the secretary. Note that the most recent edition of Robert's Rules of Order will generally be used to conduct the meeting;
- f. Conduct all personal business and visiting outside of scheduled meeting time.

E. Terms of Committee Membership

With the exception of the ACREC member elected by and from the General Assembly Council Executive Committee, the voting members of ACREC shall be elected to fill a full or partial four-year term, and shall be eligible for election to one additional term. No member may serve more than two terms, full or partial.

F. Vacancies in Committee Membership

1. For each elected term, two consecutive, unexcused absences, or three consecutive absences (excused or unexcused) may be the basis for declaring a vacancy in committee membership, which determination shall be made by the ACREC Executive Committee.
2. All committee membership vacancies that occur shall be filled by the General Assembly Nominating Committee in accord with established process and procedure.

IV. Officers

A. Composition

The ACREC officers shall be composed of five (5) persons, including the Chair, Vice-Chair, Secretary, and the chairpersons of the Study & Comment and the Resource & Referrals sub-committees, which five officers shall constitute the ACREC Executive Committee

B. Elections

1. *Ordinarily* the ACREC Chair and Vice-Chair shall be elected from the committee membership in rotation according to the alphabetical listing of the five racial ethnic groups named in section III.A.1. and 2. Should the person next scheduled in rotation for election decline to serve, then the ACREC Nominating Committee shall choose a nominee or, in the alternative, there may be nominations from the floor. Subsequently, the order of rotation shall be preserved and applied in the next election of officers.
2. The annual election of Officers ordinarily shall be conducted at a scheduled Summer meeting (July–August–September in even numbered years) or a scheduled mid-Summer to mid-fall meeting (August-September-October-November in odd-numbered years). Following the election of the Chair and the Vice-Chair, there shall be a slate presented by the Nominating Committee, or in the alternative, nominations from the floor, from which list nominees shall be elected to the offices of Secretary and Chairpersons of the Resource & Referrals and the Study & Comment sub-committees.
3. All ACREC Officers so chosen shall take office and be installed immediately thereafter at the same Summer or mid-Summer meeting when they are duly elected.

* * This means that the leadership of ACREC may be chosen from any elected members of the Advocacy Committee.

C. Terms of Officer Positions

The officers of ACREC shall be elected to serve for a one-year term, and they shall be eligible, if committee members so desire, for election to a second one-year term, for a maximum of two (2) years of service in the same office.

D. Vacancies in Officer Positions

Vacancies among elected officers of ACREC shall be filled promptly, in accord with specifications IV.A.B.C above, by a simple majority vote of ACREC members in attendance at a scheduled meeting or via e-mail, facsimile, of conference call.

E. Responsibilities of Officers

1. Chair and Vice-Chair

The Chairperson (or, in her/his absence, the Vice-Chairperson), shall convene and preside at the meetings of both ACREC and its Executive Committee, and shall have the authority to appoint the members and chairpersons of committees and task forces. The Chairperson shall be responsible for excusing any members who are unable to attend any scheduled meetings. The Chairperson and the Staff resource person(s) shall prepare the agenda for meetings of both ACREC and its Executive Committee, and shall ensure that the agenda is sent to all ACREC members two weeks prior to any scheduled meetings.

If for any reason(s) the Chairperson and Vice-Chairperson are unable to attend a scheduled meeting, a Chair pro tem shall be appointed by the Chair or committee members. When the Chairperson is unable to attend a scheduled meeting where his/her presence is required, the

14 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY PERMANENT COMMITTEES

Chairperson shall appoint an experienced member of the committee as Chair pro term, with such an appointment made in writing and with a confirmation memorandum being sent to the Staff for ACREC.

2. Secretary

The Secretary shall keep all written records of the meetings of ACREC and of its Executive Committee. In cooperation with the Staff of ACREC, the Secretary shall prepare and distribute copies of the minutes of ACREC and of its Executive Committee. The Secretary shall also, upon request and in cooperation with the rest of the Officers, prepare and/or disseminate official ACREC correspondence and other communications.

When needed and possible, the Secretary shall serve as Parliamentarian for all meetings.

The Secretary, in cooperation with the Staff of ACREC, shall also function as Treasurer, ensuring the timely and accurate reporting of ACREC finances at all scheduled meetings.

Further, the Secretary, in cooperation with the Staff of ACREC, shall maintain and monitor a record of ACREC members' Absences (excused and unexcused) and shall advise the ACREC Executive Committee of potential need to declare a vacancy in committee membership.

3. Chairpersons of Sub-Committees

The Chairpersons of ACREC's sub-committees (Resource & Referrals and Study & Comment) shall convene and preside at all meetings of their respective teams, ensuring that timely response is made to all assignments and that appropriate reports and recommendations are provided to ACREC and its Executive Committee.

4. Functions of ACREC's Executive Committee (shall be but are not limited to):

- a. Plan and coordinate Committee meeting dates with other committees and ACREC members;
- b. Arrange meetings and schedules related to work of the Committee;
- c. Serve as ACREC's budget committee;
- d. Assist with and coordinate the ongoing and special work of the sub-committees;
- e. Facilitate decision-making processes for assigned functions;
- f. Provide orientation of all new Committee members;
- g. On behalf of the General Assembly Nominating Committee, evaluate the performance of ACREC members and their contributions at the end of their first term so as to inform any re-nomination/re-election potential and process;
- h. Review drafts of minutes and financial reports before they are presented to the full Committee for approval;
- i. Serve at least in part, as a 3-member nominating committee (consisting of the chairpersons of the R&R) and S&C sub-committees, and one other non-officer person appointed by the Chair of ACREC which shall:
  - (1). propose a slate of Officer nominees and shall guide the election process of the Committee;
  - (2). propose a slate of Liaison persons (from ACREC to the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns, and the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment), which Liaison persons shall maintain multi-directional advocacy and communication between ACREC and their respective assigned committee;
- j. Complete and submit required annual and/or biennial reports to the General Assembly in accord with timelines of the General Assembly Council.

V. Organization for Mission and Ministries

A. Meeting Schedules

1. The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns ordinarily will hold at least three (3) scheduled meetings each year (spread out from the beginning, to the middle, to the end of each calendar year).
2. Given the current biennial meeting schedule of the General Assembly, it is likely that the following flow of scheduled ACREC meetings would best facilitate successful completion of the Committee's assigned tasks:
  - a. During odd-numbered, non-meeting years of the General Assembly, ACREC ordinarily will hold three (3) scheduled meetings as follows:
    - (1). During the Winter months of January-February-March;
    - (2). During the Spring months of April-May-June;
    - (3). During the mid-Summer to mid-Fall months of August -September-October-November.
  - b. During the even-numbered, stated meeting years of the General Assembly, ACREC ordinarily will hold four (4) scheduled meetings as follows:
    - (1). During the Winter months of January-February-March;

14 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY PERMANENT COMMITTEES

- (2). During the Spring months of April-May-June;
  - (3). During the Summer months of July-August-September;
  - (4). During the Fall months of October-November-December.
3. The ACREC Executive Committee shall recommend proposed dates, times, and locations of meetings of the Committee in a timely manner, and shall plan ahead for at least one or two year cycles. Subsequently and ordinarily, the specific dates, times, and locations of all one- and two-year cycles of meetings shall be determined by common consent of the ACREC members.
  4. Ordinarily, whenever possible, at least one regularly scheduled meeting in each two-year cycle shall be held jointly with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns and/or the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy. A shared agenda shall be planned by the chairpersons of the respective committees for portions of the joint meeting.

B. Meeting Flow and Foci

The flow and foci of the Committee's agendas will include but not be limited to the following:

1. During odd- and/ or even-numbered years:
  - a. Forward annual or biennial reports to the General Assembly, including recommendations, resolutions, and responses to referrals;
  - b. Prepare and coordinate annual calendar of meeting dates and work time lines for the year;
  - c. Review overtures to the General Assembly;
  - d. If scheduled, meet in joint session with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns and/or the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy;
  - e. Prepare analyses of all items and referrals acted on at General Assembly, with special attention to those of racial ethnic concerns.
2. During even-numbered years:
  - a. Notify the General Assembly Services of committee resource persons to attend General Assembly;
  - b. Prepare final Advice and Counsel Memorandum, and complete reports and resource materials for General Assembly;
  - c. Invite presenters as desired to discuss matters coming before the General Assembly;
  - d. Provide orientation for new members of ACREC.
3. During odd-numbered years:
  - a. Prepare budget requests for the next Per Capita Table funding cycle;
  - b. Notify each of the five racial ethnic caucuses of current needs for replacement of Committee members whose term is expiring.

C. Criteria for Meeting Locations

In determining ACREC's meeting sites, the following will be considered:

1. Meeting and overnight facilities must be barrier free.
2. If at all possible, facilities should be related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).
3. Project Equality's standards shall be used for selection criteria.
4. Facilities should have; easy access to airports and airport transportation.
5. Equipment on site for meeting purposes (e.g., audio-visual, copier, faxing, and computer hook-ups) should be available as needed.
6. Meeting space should comfortably accommodate fifteen to twenty persons.

D. Educational Sessions at Meetings

1. Topics will be an issue relevant to the work of ACREC.
2. Topics may be new or emerging issues as major foci at the next meeting of General Assembly.
3. Local advocates may be invited for educational and special expertise as appropriate.
4. Presentations are to be arranged in order to provide information on multiple perspectives and implications of issues.

E. Timelines

Meeting schedules and agendas shall be designated to prepare work in a timely manner for annual and/or biennial reporting to the General Assembly.

14 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY PERMANENT COMMITTEES

1. Comments and reports intended to provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly must be submitted forty-five (45) days prior to the convening of the General Assembly.
2. Narrative reports to the General Assembly must be submitted to the Office of the General Assembly one hundred and twenty (120) days prior to the convening of the General Assembly.
3. Issues, report, and overtures flagged for analysis must be referred to the Resource & Referral sub-committee in a timely manner for work schedules and conference calls prior to the convening of the General Assembly.

F. Sub-Committees

ACREC members are assigned to one of two sub-committees by way of designated responsibilities and/or priority interest areas:

1. Resource & Referral

a. Composition

There shall be six members of the sub-committee including, but not limited to, ACREC Liaison persons to the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, the General Assembly Council Executive Committee representative, and one caucus representative.

- (2). Receive annual or biennial summaries of data on vacancies, fulfillment of diversity needs, and nomination processes relevant to racial ethnic representation by the General Assembly Nominating Committee.
- (3). Maintain communication with constituency groups to exchange information about current and emerging issues.
- (4). Ensure connections with programs related to racial ethnic communities, including Racial Ethnic Congregational Enhancement, Racial Ethnic Schools and Colleges, Self-Development of People, the Washington Office, and the Presbyterian Health, Education and Welfare Association.
- (5). Consult with Equal Employment and affirmative Action Officers to identify and prioritize practices and policies affecting constituency groups.
- (6). Review and monitor the PC(U.S.A.)'s Minority Vendor Policy, focusing on procurement goals, regulations, cost analyses, and accountability.

VI. General Assembly Connections

A. Policies

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns shall function in accord with the policies of the General Assembly of the PC (U.S.A.), including the Open Meeting Policy (see Appendix) and the Conflict of Interest Policy.

B. Staff Accountability and Lodgement

Staff responsible for the planning and coordination of work of the Committee shall be appointed by the General Assembly Council Executive Director in consultation with the Advocacy Committee. The staff shall be lodged within the Office of the General Assembly Council

14 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY PERMANENT COMMITTEES

Executive Director, unless the Advocacy Committee consents to staff being lodged outside that office. Such staff shall be accountable for the work of the Committee to the Office of the General Assembly Council Executive Director.

C. Budget

Funding for the work of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns comes from the per capita budget, except for staffing costs that are accounted for in the budget of the Office of the Deputy Executive Director of the General Assembly Council.

1. The ACREC budget shall be developed, prepared, and recommended by the ACREC Executive Committee, unless it shall determine the need to establish a separate, representative Task Force composed of two (2) ACREC members elected by a simple majority vote of the Committee members in attendance, together with the ACREC staff person as an ex-officio member.
2. A report of the Advocacy Committee's financial status will be available at each meeting of the Committee. A full financial report will be distributed at the second scheduled meeting of the year.

D. Access

"The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns shall have direct access to the General Assembly and the General Assembly Council. Access shall be in the form of policy statements, resolutions, study papers, racial involvement reports, an annual or biennial narrative report, advice and counsel memoranda, and other appropriate correspondence. Advice and counsel memoranda shall be developed in consultation with other advisory and advocacy committees as appropriate. The annual or biennial narrative report to the General Assembly shall be forwarded to the General Assembly Council Executive Committee for possible comments." (GAC Manual of Operations, September 2000, p. 36)

E. Assigned Functions

1. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or on the Advocacy Committee's own initiative.
2. Advise the General Assembly Council on matters of racial ethnic concerns, including statements about pressing issues, which the Council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.
3. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its representative committees on overtures, commissioners' resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly which impact issues of racial ethnic concerns.
4. Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on racial ethnic concerns and provide information to the church as requested.
5. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.
6. Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies relative to racial ethnic concerns.
7. Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concerns. (GAC Manual of Operations. p. 37).

F. Relationships

1. In regard to the General Assembly, the Advocacy Committee shall do the following:
  - a. Prepare narrative reports to the General Assembly.
  - b. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or on ACREC's own initiative.
  - c. In consultation with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy and the Advocacy Committee on Women's Concerns, provide advice and counsel to General Assembly and its representative committee on overtures, commissioners' resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly which impact racial ethnic people.
  - d. The ACREC Chairperson shall be a corresponding member of the General Assembly and shall be prepared to speak to racial ethnic issues at General Assembly.
  - e. Provide advice and counsel to the Office of the General Assembly on matters of racial justice referred by the General Assembly.
  - f. Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies and programs implemented through the Office of the General Assembly.
  - g. Provide the Stated Clerk and the Moderator of the General Assembly information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic issues.

- h. Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concerns.
2. In regard to the General Assembly Council, the Advocacy Committee shall do the following:
  - a. Furnish the General Assembly Council a copy of the Advocacy Committee's narrative reports to the General Assembly.
  - b. Advise the General Assembly Council on matters of racial ethnic concerns, including statements concerning pressing issues, which the Council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.
  - c. Provide the Executive Director with information as she/he fulfills a responsibility to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.
  - d. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly Council on overtures, commissioners' resolutions, and other matters with racial justice implications that come before the General Assembly.
  - e. Correspondence related to policy matters will be addressed to the Moderator of the GAC with copy to the Executive Director. Correspondence related to program matters shall be addressed to the Executive Director of the GAC with copy to the Chair of the GAC as appropriate, or to division directors with copy to the Executive Director as appropriate.
3. ACREC Liaison Persons Assigned to Other Church Entities
  - a. ACREC members assigned as liaison persons with other church entities (General Assembly Council, the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns, the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Mission Responsibility through Investment. etc.) shall take an active stance to assure that the concerns, issues, goals, and responsibilities of ACREC are addressed at every meeting of the assigned church entity.
  - b. ACREC members assigned as liaison persons with other church entities should not assume roles or responsibilities given to those other church entities, unless doing so supports the ACREC's own focused goals and responsibilities as designated by the General Assembly.

G. Record Keeping

Minutes of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns shall be prepared using an acceptable format for General Assembly entities. In general, the minutes will include:

1. Dates and locations of meetings;
2. A record of attendance, including members present, excused, absent, and guests;
3. A record of action on all items considered by the Committee, identified using numeric sequence, synopsis of issues, and final decisions.
4. A brief description of all presentations and discussion items, including names of speakers.
5. Identification of persons assigned or appointed to specific tasks.

Appendix D Excerpt from ACREC Agency Summary, 216th General Assembly (2004)

What Is Cultural Proficiency?

Cultural proficiency acknowledges that patterns of oppression are embedded in the structures of organizations. Without direct intervention and intentional efforts to change, organizational cultures perpetuate systemic patterns of oppression, even where individuals within the organization do not intend to discriminate or marginalize those who do not belong or participate in the dominant culture.

Cultural proficiency is more than a diversity program or off-the-shelf training program. It is a process that focuses on organizational transformation and individual transformation. Cultural proficiency derives from the work of Terry Cross, a First Nation clinical social worker, who observed that European American clinicians in the center where he worked were not providing competent care to their Eskimo and First Nation clients because they were not taking into account the cultural perspectives and experience of the people they were working with. As a result, Cross developed a set of tools to help people understand and respond more effectively to the differences between them.

Thus, cultural proficiency is not diversity management, it is about valuing diversity in people for the gifts they bring to the culture of an organization and the interactions between individuals. The tools of cultural proficiency work towards better self-awareness, clear articulation of core values and a process that results in positive, effective interactions among the people and the systems of a diverse environment.

Cultural proficiency provides language to describe, and standards to assess, both healthy and nonproductive policies, practices and behaviors. It acknowledges that change does not happen overnight, that people and organizations move on a continuum highly exclusive and oppressive organizations and behaviors to highly inclusive organizations and behaviors. It is built on a foundation that aligns the principles of inclusivity in diversity with the core values and mission of the organization. It also acknowledges that organizations are resistant to change and that the causes of resistance must be taken into account and addressed openly in order to bring about cultural transformation within an organization.

Based on the initial assessment and report produced by Kikanza Nuri Robins, a project management team was formed to begin implementation. In addition to the GAC and OGA staffs, Presbyterian Investment and Loan Program (PILP) and the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) have joined the Cultural Proficiency Initiative. This incorporates the four entities with employees in the Presbyterian Center. The project team includes representatives of all four entities.

The goal of the Cultural Proficiency Initiative at the Presbyterian Center is to transform the organizational culture integrating the best of business practices and church values so that it becomes and serves as a model for a healthy church corporation.

For more information on Cultural Proficiency see: “Working for Justice,” Horizons, Jan./Feb. 2004, pp. 4–7. Kikanza Nuri Robins is part of the Cultural Proficiency Group, which has authored two books published by Corwin Press:

Item 14-Report 1

Report 1: Report on the Review of the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns

[The assembly approved Item 14-Report 1, Recommendations 1.–4. See p. 36.]

The Assembly Committee on Review of General Assembly Permanent Committees:

- 1. Commends the ACREC for its work, accomplishments, and insights gained in providing a self-study.
- 2. Supports the continued funding of ACREC and its mission.
- 3. Encourages both the General Assembly and ACREC to explore more descriptive language to identify and to better lift up the breadth of its ministry to our multicultural world.
- 4. That the following report on Review of the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns be approved.

Report on Review of the Advocacy Committee on Racial Ethnic Concerns

Introduction:

The review of General Assembly permanent committees was conducted according to the provisions in the Standing Rules and the standards in the Manual of the General Assembly.

Mission:

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC), along with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC), was created by the 205th General Assembly (1993) to ensure representation and an active voice for advocacy at the General Assembly level for people of color in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The goal of this committee is to ensure the full access and participation of people of color within the life of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the maintenance of a strong prophetic witness of the church on issues of racial justice in our nation and the world.

Membership:

The ACREC has twelve voting members nominated and elected through the General Assembly Nominating process, with the exception of one, who is elected by the General Assembly Council (GAC). Members are elected to four-year terms and may serve a total of eight years. The composition of the committee is outlined in the (GAC) Manual of Operations, as follows:

- 2 African Americans
- 2 Asian Americans
- 2 Hispanic/Latino Americans
- 2 Middle Eastern Americans
- 2 Native Americans
- 1 Member-at-Large elected with consideration for special expertise, fast-growing racial ethnic communities, geographic diversity, and ethnic balance.
- 1 General Assembly Council Executive Committee member

Process:

The ACREC provided a self-study based on their work for the past six years (2001–2006). The General Assembly Committee on Review of General Assembly Permanent Committees reviewed the self-study, examined the survey results, and interviewed the executive committee and the related staff of ACREC.

Findings:Fidelity to Mission and Partnership

1. Does the ACREC as it was created by the church serve and support the church's mission in a particular area? Does the ACREC exhibit a constant faithfulness to and fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA)?

The ACREC continues to do its work with passion and dedication. The committee has fulfilled its duties. It has been faithful to its mandate.

2. Does the basic process of the ACREC demonstrate fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its establishing deliverance, charter, or mandate from the assembly? Does the ACREC exhibit leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources in with the ACREC acts?

The ACREC has provided leadership and guidance for the General Assembly and its programmatic entities in their work in order to provide advocacy for racial ethnic concerns. The ACREC is held accountable through annual and regular reports to GAC, which also reviews its minutes. Further, ACREC submits a biannual agency summary to the General Assembly.

3. Does the ACREC exhibit practical cooperation with the other agencies or committees of the church in areas of overlapping responsibility and opportunity?

The chair of ACREC sits as a corresponding member of both General Assembly and GAC. The ACREC consults regularly with the Washington Office, Project Equality, ACWC (Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns), ACSWP (Advisory Committee for Social Witness Policy), MRTI (Mission Responsibility Through Investment), and the five racial ethnic caucuses, as well as other denominational groups.

4. Does the ACREC provide timely responses to directives and requests from the General Assembly?

The ACREC reports to each GA and the chair sits as a corresponding member of General Assembly and GAC.

Effectiveness of Services

1. Does the ACREC have a defined and consistent process for completing its work?

Yes. The ACREC has a clearly understood process by which the committee is able to respond to the variety of issues before it with flexibility.

2. Does the ACREC have a regular process of self-evaluation of its services?

Yes. The ACREC normally reviews the Strategic Vision Plan in the Summer and Fall meetings following an assembly. It assesses on-going work, new work assigned by the assembly, and new areas of concern it wants to address based on input from committee members, liaisons, and staff.

3. Does the ACREC employ a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large?

Yes. As an advocacy committee of the General Assembly, the ACREC communicates effectively with the church at large indirectly through its advocacy work with programmatic entities and the General Assembly, as well as through a print newsletter (The Torch) and through the PC(USA) Website.

4. Does the ACREC utilize current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission?

Yes. In 2004, the committee launched a Website with support from the GAC staff. The Website is linked to the Office for Racial Justice & Advocacy, Racial Ethnic and Women's Ministries, ACWC, ACSWP, Peacemaking, and the Washington Office. The Website is designed to give the committee more visibility on an on-going basis. In the six-month period preceding the assembly, it focuses on communicating with commissioners and others interested in assembly business.

5. Has the committee or commission developed a vision and plans for its work in light of its historic mandate and the emerging issues before and context of the PC(USA)?

Yes. The ACREC initiated a strategic vision plan, which identifies areas of concern, to assist it in setting goals and prioritizing its work. The committee normally reviews this plan annually.

CHAPTER I

CHURCH DISCIPLINE: BUILDING UP THE BODY OF CHRIST

“Christ calls the Church into being, giving it all that is necessary for its mission to the world, for its building up, and for its service to God. Christ is present with the Church in both Spirit and Word. It belongs to Christ alone to rule, to teach, to call, and to use the Church as he wills, exercising his authority by the ministry of women and men for the establishment and extension of his Kingdom” (G-1.0100 b.).

“Church discipline is the church’s exercise of authority given by Christ, both in the direction of guidance, control, and nurture of its members and in the direction of constructive criticism of offenders” (D-1.0101).

“Judicial process is the means by which church discipline is implemented within the context of pastoral care and oversight. It is the exercise of authority by governing bodies of the church for

“a. the prevention and correction of irregularities and delinquencies by governing bodies, the General Assembly Council, or an entity of the General Assembly (Remedial Cases, D-6.0000);

“b. the prevention and correction of offenses by persons (Disciplinary Cases, D-10.0000).” (D-2.0101).

A Brief History

This brief history is offered to give the Review Committee and other readers a taste of the broad sweep of the development of judicial process, a history which shapes current thinking and practice. The current pattern of church discipline is the continuation of centuries of development, which took a significant turn during the Reformation. As the Reformers reordered worship, so they also reordered church discipline. The establishment of church discipline was neither neat nor orderly as the Reformation developed. Early issues concerned use of excommunication as punishment, the location of jurisdiction for church discipline (with civil magistrates or ecclesiastical courts), and the relationship of the church to the civil community.<sup>1</sup> How these issues and their ramifications were resolved shaped church discipline in North American Presbyterianism.

As early as 1529, John Oecolampadius issued a directory of church discipline in Basel in which ecclesiastical discipline was separated from the civil magistrates. Huldrych Zwingli, on the other hand, thought that the government should enforce church regulations; therefore, in Zurich church discipline was interwoven with the life of the Christian state and prescribed by civil law.<sup>2</sup>

For John Calvin the purpose of church discipline was to guard the reverence of the Lord’s Supper. “The norm of membership in the Church is fitness to be admitted, without profanation, to the mystery of the sacrament, in which ‘we are made partakers of the body and blood of Jesus Christ, His death, His life, and all His benefits,’ and are ‘joined in true peace and fraternal unity’”<sup>3</sup> In a word, Calvin wanted to ensure baptismal discipline around the table. Reconciliation—living as faithful Christians mutually accountable to each other—was the goal of church discipline. A Consistory, a body of ministers and elders, exercised most cases of discipline in the church in Geneva.

The foundational nature of church discipline shows forth in the Scots Confession (1560), “The notes of the true Kirk, therefore, we believe, confess, and avow to be: first, the true preaching of the Word of God, in which God has revealed himself to us, . . . secondly, the right administration of the sacraments of Christ Jesus, with which much be associated the Word and promise of God to seal and confirm them in our hearts; and lastly, ecclesiastical discipline uprightly ministered, as God’s Word prescribes, whereby vice is repressed and virtue nourished.”<sup>4</sup> In the Kirk, the Presbyterian system of church courts exercised jurisdiction.

The 17th Century Westminster Confession of Faith, the bedrock of much of early American Presbyterianism, reads, “[Church] officers the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven are committed, by virtue whereof they have power respectively to retain and remit sins, to shut that kingdom against the impenitent, both by the word and censures; and to open it unto penitent sinners, by the ministry of the gospel, and by absolution from censures, as occasions shall require.” (6.170) “Church censures are necessary for the reclaiming and gaining of offending brethren; for deterring of others from like offenses; for purging out of that leaven which might infect the whole lump, for vindicating the honor of Christ. . .” (6.171). The goal of discipline was to ensure right conduct through mutual accountability. Punishments ranged from admonition to excommunication (6.172).

Predecessor bodies to the Presbyterian Church (USA) adopted and adapted the Westminster Standards and over the years refined their forms of government, directories for worship, and rules of discipline. Before the latter part of the 19th Century, full General Assemblies deliberated judicial cases; because of the press of business sometimes cases were carried over for several years. As early as the 1880s, General Assemblies had the power to delegate judicial matters to commissions. Throughout the church, it was understood that discipline is the responsibility of all governing bodies. Because General Assemblies, consisting of five hundred members or more, could not easily hear and deliberate cases, the General Assembly appointed commissions to do this work. Permanent Judicial Commissions have been prescribed since the mid-20th Century. Powers currently exercised by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission date from 1982. Since reunion in 1983, several amendments to the Rules of Discipline have been made with major revision adopted in 1995.<sup>5</sup>

Church discipline as exercised through the formal judicial process exists to uphold the integrity of the Body of Christ through mutual accountability. “Central to the Reformed tradition from its very inception is a commitment to the faithful living of Christian faith coupled with an admission that such faithfulness is not possible alone. In the church we need each other, with accountability to each other, to live faithful lives.”<sup>6</sup>

Organization and General Responsibilities

The Rules of Discipline describe the judicial processes of the Church, of which the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) is a part. The GAPJC has both original and appellate jurisdiction as prescribed in the Rules of Discipline. Primarily an appellate court, the Commission hears and decides both remedial and disciplinary cases; however, GAPJC may conduct trials in cases of original jurisdiction. The range of GAPJC responsibilities will become clearer in this self-study report which explores compliance with constitutional and non-constitutional standards.

The membership of the GAPJC is composed of ministers and elders (as nearly equal as possible) from each of the synods (D-5.0100). Thus there are sixteen commissioners from the sixteen synods; currently, however, there are two vacancies. Members are elected by the General Assembly and ordinarily serve for six years (D-5.0103). The change to biennial assemblies necessitated the adjustment of the terms of some of the current Commissioners.

The Commission elects its Moderator, Vice-Moderator, Clerk, and Assistant Clerk who constitute the Executive Committee. Officers serve terms of two years and may be reelected.<sup>7</sup> The responsibilities of the Executive Committee are delineated in the Manual of the GAPJC, which is appended to this self-study.

The Commission is scheduled to meet four times per year over a five-day period for each meeting (Thursday-Monday). Because of caseload and briefing schedules, meetings may be cancelled. In the 2002-2007 period covered by this self-study report, the Commission has met eighteen times (two by conference call).

Building Up the Body of Christ in Times of Turmoil

The GAPJC often hears and acts on cases that deal with issues which are vigorously debated in the Church today. In all our deliberations the Commission is reminded of the principles of church discipline, which have remained essentially unchanged since the Reformation:

Church discipline is the church's exercise of authority given by Christ. . . . The purpose of discipline is to honor God by making clear the significance of membership in the body of Christ; to preserve the purity of the church by nourishing the individual within the life of the believing community; to achieve justice and compassion for all participants involved; to correct and restrain wrongdoing in order to bring members to repentance and restoration; to uphold the dignity of those who have been harmed by disciplinary offenses; to restore the unity of the church by removing the cause of discord and division, and to secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings (D-1.0101).

It is of no small moment that the Commission hears the words from the Preamble to the Rules of Discipline before every hearing and trial and that this paragraph heads the Commission's Code of Ethics.

In every case before it, the Commission seeks to understand both the specific pleadings as well as the constitutional implications of the case. Because we are aware that our decisions set precedents which guide the whole Church, we undertake our work in a spirit of prayer and humility. During every meeting we worship together each morning and evening. On the morning of hearings or trials, we invite the parties to join our worship.

Cases before the Commission require balancing the tensions inherent in our polity and theology. Decisions are based on the particular facts of each case. For example, in two cases arising from interpretation of Book of Order language on per capita giving, we concluded that while the payment of per capita may not be compelled, we nevertheless are bound together as a covenant community. We noted "Withholding per capita as a means of protest or dissent evidences a serious breach of the trust and love with which our Lord Jesus intends the covenant community to function together" (Minihan and Richards, v. Presbytery Scioto Valley, 2003).

The very difficult issue of ordination standards has been central to several cases in which the Commission has set important precedents. These cases differ in their details and illustrate the complexity of the issues involved in the process of examination, ordination, and installation. All cases require careful attention to due process and sensitivity to scripture and confessional standards. While it might be desirable for the issue of ordination standards to be settled once and for all, the Commission realizes that this issue will not finally be decided by any one judicial proceeding, but instead must be decided on a case-by-case basis. See for example: McKittrick v. West End Presbyterian Church (2002) and Londonderry v. Presbytery of Northern New England. (2000)

The Report of the Task Force on Peace, Unity, and Purity has occasioned debate on what it means to be "reformed," more particularly whether the PC (USA.) is to define and enumerate "essential tenets of the Reformed faith." Some cases dealing with this issue have already been scheduled to come before the GAPJC in 2008.

As the highest court in the PC(USA), the GAPJC not only speaks to the Church, but also to the civil courts (for example: Jones v. Wolf (1979) 443 U.S. 595, 61 L.Ed.2d 775, 99 S. Ct. 3020).

In these days when the fabric of denominational trust is frayed, the Commission seeks ways to encourage resolution of disputes with means other than the judicial process. “The biblical duty of church people to ‘come to terms quickly with your accuser while you are on the way to court . . .’ (Matthew 5:25) is not diminished by the Rules of Discipline. Every church member is enjoined to try to resolve differences without resorting to judicial process” (D-1.0103). The process and decision in the Palos Park (2008) case illustrates this injunction.

The fabric of trust may be weak in some parts of the denomination at large, but it is not so among Commission members. Commissioners approach their work with deep integrity, respect for each other, and a love for the Church we serve.

Constitutional Mandate, Boundaries, Powers and Process

Constitutional Mandate: The GAPJC is a constitutionally mandated Commission of the General Assembly (D-5.101), charged “to serve in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline” (G-13.0103o).

Constitutional Boundaries: As a Commission, the GAPJC undertakes the judicial function of the General Assembly on behalf of the General Assembly, and considers and concludes judicial matters referred to it (G-9.0502). Its Commissioners are presbyters from each synod who are qualified to be commissioners to the General Assembly (D-5.0100).

Since the General Assembly is the highest governing body of the church, the decisions of the GAPJC are not subject to further review by appeal. Its decisions are Authoritative Interpretation of the Book of Order, and the “most recent interpretation of a provision of the Book of Order shall be binding” (G-13.0103r). The decisions of the GAPJC are reported to each General Assembly by the Stated Clerk as provided by D-7.0700 and Standing Rule M.2.b.(4).

Constitutional Powers and Process: “In the cases transmitted to it the [GA]PJC shall have only the power prescribed by and conduct its proceedings according to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (D-5.0202).

CHAPTER II SELF-STUDY PROCESS

Formulation of Self-Study Process

The General Assembly’s review process has given us to the opportunity to think deeply about our work in service to the Church. In 2006 the General Assembly approved the following action: “Consistent with the action of the 216th General Assembly (2004) (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 88, 339–41), the assembly committee’s review will be limited to the following questions:

1. Is the GAPJC fulfilling its constitutional mandate as specified herein?
2. Is the GAPJC in compliance with the Constitutional Standards as described herein?
3. Is the GAPJC in compliance with the Non-Constitutional standards as described herein?”

We have probed our constitutional framework and carefully considered our effectiveness in fulfilling our mandate under the Book of Order. The period reviewed in this self-study is 2002–2007.

The Commission believes that this self-study will demonstrate that GAPJC has indeed fulfilled its constitutional mandate and is in compliance with both constitutional and non-constitutional standards.

As we began this process, we realized there would be unusual challenges, not because we were reluctant to do a self-study, but because we are the only body of the General Assembly which acts as the Assembly in matters properly before us. Initially the GA set standards for review which included both committees and commissions; subsequently GA set standards which applied to GAPJC only. Unlike other bodies being reviewed, we are a commission, not a committee. Moreover, our deliberations are private (D-7.0402, 11.0403) and our decisions are final and are the decisions of the General Assembly.

Our participation in the GA review process necessarily requires respect for this Commission’s constitutional boundaries in order to uphold the integrity of the judicial process of the Church. With this understanding the Commission undertook its self-study process. Moreover, in order to insure that this understanding was carried forward, the Commission requested that the Stated Clerk involve Commission members in training the GA Review Committee in 2008, when our review will be conducted.

A Self-Study Task Force, composed of Fred Denson (chair), Catherine Borchert, Bill Carlough, and Wendy Warner, began its work in early 2004. They worked tirelessly and at length to specify all the constitutional provisions under which the Commission works; they also identified non-constitutional standards. They made their first extensive report to the full Commission at the January 2005 meeting.

The Task Force continued to work during 2005 and at the February 2006 meeting presented the Standards for Review of the GAPJC. Each constitutional and non-constitutional provision is accompanied by guidelines to evaluate the Commission's effectiveness in fulfilling its constitutional mandate. This document served as the blueprint for the work of the Self-Study Committee and is the framework for this Report.

In July 2006 the Commission named The Self-Study Committee: Fane Downs (chair), Sue Cornman, Gwen Cook, and Leon Fanniel (each from different classes). The committee met by conference call and in person over the next year and made an extensive report to the full Commission in May 2007. GAPJC acted on the full draft of the self-study in November 2007. Leon Fanniel resigned from the Commission for health reasons, and the remaining three members carried on the work of the committee.

Self-Study Process

From the beginning of this process the Self-Study Committee and the Commission as a whole were determined to provide a thorough portrait of the work of the Commission. We also wanted to provide a picture of the atmosphere of collegiality, trust, and respect in which the Commission works. Each Commissioner understands himself or herself to be engaged spiritually in building up the Church.

The Committee began by becoming familiar with the all standards and guidelines. Each member reviewed the minutes of all the meetings during the review period; each looked for certain actions, or lack of action, to gather information on the standards and guidelines. The Committee also reviewed case records from 2002 for information on the length of time elapsed from initial filing to final decision.

Simultaneously it became clear that the Commission's Manual needed revision and that the Commission needed to be intentional about using more advanced technology in our work. Thus, in true Presbyterian fashion, two more committees were named to accomplish these additional functions. The Revised Manual is appended to this Self-Study Report.

The Self-Study Committee drafted a set of survey questions for the Commissioners from 2002 to the present and questions for members of the Stated Clerk's staff. Responses to these surveys have informed this study as will be clear as the study unfolds. The Commission decided that parties who had appeared before the Commission would be surveyed for the GA Review Committee, in order to shed further light on our effectiveness and fidelity to our constitutional mandate. Research Services assisted with the distribution and analysis of this survey for the Review Committee.

The Committee prepared and revised drafts of portions of the report. The initial draft of the entire Self-Study Report was presented to the full Commission in November 2007 for comment and approval. Subsequently the Report was revised and submitted to the Stated Clerk for circulation to the GA Review Committee.

CHAPTER III COMPLIANCE WITH CONSTITUTIONAL STANDARDS

The purpose of this chapter is to demonstrate that the GAPJC is in compliance with its constitutional mandate as found in The Book of Order.

"The General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission is a constitutionally mandated commission of the General Assembly (D-5.0101), charged 'to serve in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline' (G-13.0103o)." The Commission adopted constitutional standards in order to verify compliance with the overall constitutional mandate as well as the particulars as defined by the Book of Order.

The following are the constitutional standards which the Book of Order requires, followed immediately by the findings of this committee as to the Commission's level of compliance:

1. To open and close all meetings with prayer (G-9.0301b). The minutes reveal that this standard was met without exception. Prayer is woven into the fabric of our meetings and our deliberations. Prayer is not simply a constitutional standard for the GAPJC, but a deliberate practice and spiritual discipline.

2. To secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings (D-1.0101). This Commission established the guidelines defined below.

a. Time between receipt of complaint or notice of appeal and final disposition should not exceed an average of one year.

(1) Determine average annual caseload for six years. GAPJC deals with an average of eleven (11) cases annually and of those cases half require hearings or trials.

(2) Determine average time between receipt of a complaint or notice of appeal and final disposition on merits. On the cases for which we have complete information, cases have taken from one (1) to fifteen (15) months from first notice (either complaint or notice of appeal) to final disposition (decision, dismissal, referral to lower court). The Commission notes that because of required process (submitting records, briefs, etc.), a typical case cannot be ready for hearing before a minimum of four months have elapsed (D-8.0303-305). The average time from first official notice to this Commission to disposition is 7.4 months. When briefing schedules conflict with meeting dates, the time from notice of appeal or complaint until decision is necessarily longer. GAPJC handles a wide variety of remedial and disciplinary cases, requests for reference, decisions on preliminary questions, responses to official communications from parties, etc. The Executive Committee tries to balance the cases so that the cases are distributed more or less evenly among the meetings (usually three meetings annually).

(3) Adequacy of frequency of meetings to meet standard. Both objective data and Commissioners' surveys affirm that the current number of meetings is adequate; however, vigilance in management of the docket must be maintained. More cases requiring GAPJC action may call for more meetings or longer meetings. Current caseload is manageable; however, even a small increase would necessitate changes in meeting frequency.

(4) Adequate size and structure of Commission to meet standard. The size and structure of the Commission are adequate for current caseload.

(5) Adequacy of staffing. Staffing is adequate for the current caseload.

(6) Adequacy of technical support. The current level of technical support is adequate. An increasing challenge is the lack of consistent access to current hardware and software for all Commissioners and staff.

(7) Proper utilization of available technology. Meeting by meeting the Commission is improving in this area.

(8) Efficiency of case committees. In general the case committee system works well to move cases forward. The degree of preparation may depend on the complexity of the case. For further information on case committees, see 14 b, on page 13 below.

3. Procedural safeguard and due process should be accorded to all parties. The minutes record that in every hearing or trial, parties were offered the opportunity to question process and raise concerns. When parties did so, the Commission addressed the issues and concerns in a manner consistent with due process. The Commission is careful to ensure fairness for all parties appearing before it.

4. Prompt determination of preliminary questions.

a. time between receipt of initial case filings by OGA and forwarding the same to moderator and clerk should not exceed average of 14 days.

(1) determine average of the above for three years.

b. time between receipt of initial case filings by moderator and clerk from OGA and decisions on preliminary questions should not exceed average of 30 days.

(1) Determine three-year average for moderator and clerk to file decision on preliminary questions.

(2) Search available information for evidence of patterns of delay.

(3) Adequate use of ways to expedite process.

There is not adequate data to make a judgment on the particulars of this standard; however, the average time for the Commission to dispose of its cases suggests that this standard is met. The Executive Committee meets often by telephone to determine preliminary questions; likewise the Stated Clerk's office is prompt in forwarding cases to the Moderator and Clerk for determination. The Administrative Assistant for the GAPJC has begun keeping a log of dates so that timeliness can be tracked more accurately in the future.

5. Stays of enforcement (D-6.-103)

a. time between receipt of OGA of request for stay and forwarding it to PJC members should not exceed average of 5 working days.

b. time between request for stay on preliminary questions by moderator and clerk and notification to Commissioners of their recommendation should not exceed an average of 5 working days.

Determine average time for a. and b.

Except in one case when a request for stay arrived when the Manager of Judicial Process was not available and was therefore delayed, the stays are handled promptly, then forwarded electronically to the Commissioners with a clear due date indicated. We have no data to show that the stay process prolonged the pendency of cases.

6. Rule on challenges

a. Parties should be given the opportunity to present evidence and arguments on any challenges made to findings of moderator and clerk on preliminary questions (D-6.0306, D-8.0302) When parties object to the findings of the moderator and clerk, the parties are invited to present evidence and argument to the GAPJC at hearing. In each case where a party has challenged findings at hearing, the Commission has addressed the challenge and ruled on it.

b. Parties should be given the opportunity to object to composition of the Commission. In the trial before this Commission, parties were given the opportunity to object to the participation of individual Commissioners (D-7.0401 b.2.) Although it is not required for hearings on appeal, the Commission offers parties the opportunity to object to the participation of commissioners for a particular case.

7. Issue citations (D-7.0201, .0202; D-11.0201, .0202). For the period covered by this for self-study there have been no requests for issuance of citations.

8. Appoint counsel (D-11.0302) In applicable cases, the GAPJC should appoint counsel for the accused. The Commission should have a process for providing counsel and minutes should show compliance if counsel is appointed. At the time of the preparation of this self-study the Commission did not have a process for appointing counsel, nor has the need arisen; however, the Manual Review Committee has been alerted to the need for this.

9. Conduct pre-trial and pre-hearing conferences in appropriate cases. In the time under review, one trial has been conducted. In another case, a pre-trial committee was appointed and the case was resolved through mediation instead of trial. In both cases, the Moderator appointed a pre-trial committee and a pre-trial conference was held.

10. Conduct trials and hearings with full decorum in a neutral and suitable place. The Commission intentionally schedules its meetings in neutral places; the Commission takes care prayerfully to conduct its proceedings as befits a court of the Church of Jesus Christ.

a. In appropriate cases use of Alternate Forms of Resolution (AFR) should be encouraged as part of pre-trial or pre-hearing procedures. In the period under study there has been one mediated case; GAPJC adopted a consent order based on the mediated agreement. In another case GAPJC ordered that a trial be conducted “unless an alternative resolution is achieved.” This case is still pending. By implication, judicial commissions have the authority to act on agreements made by mediation and Alternate Forms of Resolution.

b. The Commission should have guidelines for use of Alternate Forms of Resolution. The Manual Review Committee will be drafting guidelines for use of AFR.

c. Adequate time should be allocated at hearings for oral argument and for GAPJC to gather information needed to make fair and just determination. Ordinarily, a hearing is conducted in one and one-half hours, with each party having one half hour to present its case with the remaining half hour for the Commission to question the parties. Occasionally when the issues are unusually complex, the Commission may question parties for more than thirty minutes. This time allocation appears to be adequate.

d. Adequate time and resources should be available for GAPJC to prepare for trials and hearings. Post-meeting evaluations show that Commissioners have adequate time to prepare for cases. Sometimes the briefing schedule is such that the Commissioners do not receive the final briefs until a short time before the meeting.

e. Ongoing assessment should be conducted regarding need for changes in constitutional mandate for trials and hearings. This topic will be addressed in the context of our consideration of AFR. Current practice remains under review.

f. Determination should be made regarding impact of size of the GAPJC workload on its ability to conduct quality trials and hearings. Commissioners' surveys and data suggest that the size of GAPJC workload does not currently impose an undue burden.

g. Determination should be made regarding need to increase size of GAPJC or limit grounds for appeal to improve management of workload. Currently the workload is manageable. If circumstances change, it may be important for the entire Church to consider possible changes in the Rules of Discipline in this or other process issues.

11. Read aloud D-0101 and D.0102. The minutes demonstrate that the required portions of the Rules of Discipline are read without exception at the beginning of each hearing and trial.

12. Control conduct of trials.

a. GAPJC should exercise its authority and power to control conduct of trials and of all parties, witnesses, counsel and public, including removal of them, to the end that proper dignity and decorum are maintained. In the one trial conducted during the period under study, decorum and dignity were maintained. Commissioners consistently show impartiality and courtesy and respect to all parties.

b. Moderator should decide all questions as to procedure or the admissibility of evidence after parties are given the opportunity to be heard and Commissioners should be given opportunity to appeal decisions by the moderator with decisions by majority vote. These guidelines were fulfilled in the trial before the Commission.

c. Absences of any Commissioner after trial has begun should be recorded. This is done without exception.

13. Decide cases. In each case when a decision has been rendered there should be private deliberations, separate votes on each specification of error, and in the case of a trial, a separate vote on each irregularity or charge. These guidelines are fulfilled without exception. Meeting evaluations show that Commissioners are generally satisfied with the length of meetings. See 14. b. below for information on how the Commission conducts its deliberations. Obviously when the caseload is unusually heavy, there is greater pressure and Commissioners work longer hours.

14. Prepare and disseminate written decisions.

a. In each case a written decision should be prepared while GAPJC is in session. This guideline is fulfilled without exception. In one case, however, the Commission recessed without having written the decision and took it up at the next session of the recessed meeting.

b. Review adequacy of time for GAPJC to prepare well-written decisions. The Commission ordinarily meets three times per year over a five-day period. Case committees work prior to the meetings and generally prepare drafts of case histories and language for the specifications of error; the case committees report to the full Commission on the first evening, the night before the hearings are held. Following hearings and initial discussion by the full Commission, the case committee meets and begins drafting the decision. After the drafting and discussion process, the Commission finalizes the decision. The number and complexity of cases determines how much time is devoted to each case. The Commission and its Executive Committee have discussed the merits of the current length and number of meetings without recommending either one more meeting per year or longer meetings. Commissioners are urged to arrange their schedules in order to be in attendance from opening prayers through closing gavel.

c. A copy of the decision should be delivered to the parties by personal service or certified mail. This guideline is met by the Manager of Judicial Process; a certification of service accompanies each decision.

(1) The decision should be filed with the Stated Clerk within 30 days of the hearing/trial. The Manager of Judicial Process ensures that this guideline is met.

(2) Each written decision carries the proper certifications. This guideline is met without exception.

15. Prepare and process records. Following hearings and trials, the full record of the proceedings should be prepared, processed, and transmitted to the Stated Clerk for permanent preservation. The Manager of Judicial Process takes care of the record of the proceedings following the meetings. The records are transmitted to the Department of History in Philadelphia for permanent keeping.

CHAPTER IV

COMPLIANCE WITH NON-CONSTITUTIONAL STANDARDS

The purpose of this chapter is to demonstrate that GAPJC is in compliance with the Non-Constitutional Standards which guide its work.

Inasmuch as the administration of justice is “the church’s exercise of authority given by Christ” (D-1.0101), the GAPJC adopted non-constitutional standards which describe the spiritual dimension of the Commission’s work as a function of the church as the Body of Christ. Other non-constitutional standards deal with the effectiveness of the Commission’s work internally and externally.

The following are the non-constitutional standards guide the Commission in the conduct of its work, followed by the findings as to the Commission’s level of compliance.

1. To participate in daily corporate worship for the duration of GAPJC meetings. While prayer is constitutionally mandated (G-9.0301b), daily worship is not. The Commission adopted the practice of daily worship about a decade ago. The practice of daily worship and prayer has as its purpose the building up of the body and creation of community (koinonia, mutual partnership in Christ). Worship is offered everyday in which the Commission is in session, typically twice each day. Currently the vice-moderator of the Commission requests members to conduct daily worship; both elders and clergy Commissioners lead worship. These worship services are rich and varied and keep the Commission grounded in its ministry of Christ. Evaluations after meetings reveal the depth of the Commissioners’ appreciation of daily worship.

On Sundays the Commission ordinarily worships with a local Presbyterian congregation. Commissioners experience Presbyterian worship in a variety of settings and have the opportunity to speak informally with congregants. When the caseload is unusually heavy, the Commission plans and conducts a Service of Word and Sacrament at the meeting place.

2. To maintain and follow the Manual of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission, including its Code of Ethics. The Moderator of the Commission appointed a Manual Review Committee in July 2006 which has undertaken to review and recommend revisions of the Manual. The Manual has three parts: the first deals with the organization of the Commission, its officers and their responsibilities, case committee responsibilities, procedures for cases, practices in opinion writing, and staff support. The second, The Code of Ethics, was adopted in October 2004 and following a preamble deals with general expectations, public comment, conflicts of interest and appearance of impropriety, mutual accountability, and application. The third part of the Manual consists of The Standards of Review of the GAPJC. The most recent edition of the Manual is appended to this self-study report. The Commission conducts its business according to the Manual.

3. To build community among members of the GAPJC. The criteria for this standard is that the Commission will include time for sharing of personal joys and concerns, time for intercessory prayer for one another, and time for fellowship. The Commission is diligent in community building as shown in Commission minutes. Meetings convene with dinner on Thursday night, followed by a period in which Commissioners share the joys and concerns of their lives since the last meeting. Obviously Commissioners build relationships during the meeting—relationships marked by mutual respect and genuine affection. These sessions before the formal work of the Commission begins prepare Commissioners to work 12-hour days (or longer) on complicated and potentially divisive issues in a spirit of collegiality and cooperation. The Commission seeks always to be a community guided by the Holy Spirit.

4. To orient newly elected commissioners. The two criteria for this standard include letters sent by the GAPJC moderator to new Commissioners and orientation at the first meeting following the election of new Commissioners.

a. The Moderator of GAPJC welcomes new Commissioners by mail or email. The current and immediate past moderators sent such letters.

b. Commission minutes show that orientation is in fact conducted at the first meeting following the meeting of the General Assembly. Ordinarily the orientation is led by the Executive Committee, other Commissioners, and the Manager of Judicial Process. The Moderator urges returning Commissioners to arrive in time to participate in the orientation of new Commissioners. All Commissioners, no matter how long they have served, benefit from the orientation, which serves as continuing education.

c. Experienced mentors are assigned to new Commissioners to guide them as they become familiar with the work and procedures of the Commission.

5. To communicate with the greater church by various means including writing Headnotes for each decision; ensuring that decisions are disseminated in a timely manner.

a. Since 2002 the Commission has written headnotes which summarize the salient points of the decision. The Commission attempts to write its decisions in language understandable by all church members whether or not they have had legal training. Annotations in the Book of Order are not formulated by the GAPJC and are not part of the official decisions.

b. Case decisions are disseminated to parties within seven days after adjournment of each meeting. Decisions are proofread and signed before the Moderator and Clerk leave the meeting site; they are then given to the Manager of Judicial Process who distributes the decision to the parties by next-day air. Dates on the certification and transmittal forms attest that this standard is met.

c. The cases are thus transmitted to the OGA whose staff then post the decisions on the PCUSA website, after the decisions have been received by the parties. The commission has adopted a procedure by which the Clerk of the Commission will verify that the decisions have been posted on the website within the required time. The minutes of the following meeting reflect that the decisions were timely posted.

6. To implement an ongoing self-evaluation program, which will include (a) completion of evaluation forms by Commissioners at the conclusion of each GAPJC meeting, and (b) a triennial self-study by the Self-Study Review Team conducted in accordance with the Standards for Review as approved by the General Assembly.

a. Commissioners routinely complete evaluation forms which invite assessment of the flow of records, the work of case committees, conduct of hearings and trials, work of the moderator, meeting site (accommodations, food, meeting rooms, etc.), and worship. The Executive Committee reviews the evaluations and sometimes makes adjustments in the work of the Commission or meeting arrangements. One copy of the compilation of each meeting's evaluation is kept on file by the Manager of Judicial Process.

b. Since this is the beginning of the cycle of self-study, the Commission has not yet conducted a triennial self-study; the procedure for this process is detailed in the revised Manual of the GAPJC.

7. To engage in "continuing education" programs involving matters relevant to the work of GAPJC. This standard has proved difficult to accomplish; the agenda often calls for periods of continuing education (e.g., research using the Annotated Book of Order). On two occasions Commissioners met with members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution to discuss constitutional issues. In January 2005 the Commission "engaged in considerable and thorough review of the functions, procedures, and minimum requirements for operating as a permanent judicial commissions and conducting the judicial process of the PC (USA) during the report of the Self-Study Task Force." The Commission discussed the merits of adopting a specific plan of continuing education but came to no conclusion (Minutes, January 29, 2005, p 4). In November 2007 the Commission conducted a study meeting on two issues of immediate interest.

8. Maximize GAPJC meeting attendance through several means.

a. All members should attend all GAPJC meetings unless excused. Commissioners show a high degree of commitment to their work on GAPJC. Those who are unable to attend request excuses well ahead of the meeting date, unless, of course, unexpected events preclude their attendance at the last minute. Appendix A shows the attendance at all the meetings.

b. All members should be present at the time when the meeting is initially convened. Most Commissioners are present by dinner on Thursday evening; those who come late arrive either while the evening meeting is in session or in time for the hearing the following morning.

c. All members should remain in attendance until the meeting is adjourned and no members should leave before the meeting is concluded. Occasionally during the period under study, Commissioners have had to leave before the meeting was concluded. In these cases the minutes so noted that the Commissioners had departed. In no case was the Commission left without a quorum. The Commission makes every effort to complete its work in the time set for the meeting and Commissioners are urged to be present for the duration. Sometimes, however, the press of commitments at home demands that Commissioners leave early.

d. The GAPJC meetings should be scheduled at least one year in advance in order to provide Commissioners with adequate time to arrange their schedules. Meeting minutes reveal that the Commission does schedule its meetings one to two years in advance. Meeting dates are rarely changed once set.

e. The GAPJC meetings should be held at locations that minimize Commissioner travel time on a rotating basis while weighing the attendance or convenience of the parties and the funds available for meetings. Since 2002 meetings have been held at Dallas, Phoenix, Kansas City (three times), Louisville (seven times), St. Louis, Baltimore, Austin and Snowbird, UT. Obviously meetings are rare on the West Coast, though the Commission has considered such a location on a number of occasions. Commissioners and litigants from the westernmost synods generally have the most onerous travel schedules.

f. Travel arrangements should be made so as to facilitate the work of the Commission, while accommodating the health, safety, and reasonable personal needs of commissioners. Meeting evaluations show a general satisfaction with meeting sites and travel arrangements.

9. Meeting minutes: The Clerk keeps full and accurate minutes of all meeting; these are on file in the Office of the Stated Clerk.

CHAPTER V EFFECTIVENESS IN SERVING THE CHURCH

The General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission is a reactive body; that is, the Commission responds to cases referred to it. Our constitutional mandate is “to serve in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline,” thus the Commission is not a body which proposes mission initiatives, plans programs, or generates strategies.

GAPJC undertakes the judicial function of the General Assembly, in order that the other work of the General Assembly might move forward more expeditiously. In the past the entire General Assembly dealt with judicial matters as the highest court of the Presbyterian Church. Presently the judicial function is assigned to this Commission and it is on the basis of that assignment that its effectiveness must be judged. The GAPJC operates within strict constitutional boundaries, which were described and analyzed in Chapter III. The Commission also adheres to non-constitutional standards which were described in Chapter IV. In this chapter the Commission seeks to evaluate its effectiveness: that is, how well does it do that which it is assigned to do?

The Standards for Review list five areas of effectiveness of service within its constitutional mandate. The following paragraphs will deal with each in turn.

1. The Commission has a defined and consistent process for completing its work.

Much of the process for completing the work of a permanent judicial commission is outlined in the Rules of Discipline. When a case is referred to the GAPJC, first the Moderator and Clerk, in consultation with the Executive Committee, make determinations on preliminary questions deciding whether the case is properly before the body. These findings are reported to the parties and the full Commission. If they are challenged, briefs may be received and a hearing held; then the Commission will make a decision on the preliminary questions. If the Commission has established jurisdiction, the case is accepted. The Commission will then conduct a hearing or a trial on the main issues of the case. (See Rules of Discipline, Chapter VI: Remedial Cases, VII: Trial in a Remedial Case, Chapter VIII: Appeal in a Remedial Case, Chapters X: Disciplinary Cases; XI Trial in a Disciplinary Case).

Most cases before the GAPJC are on appeal from lower courts. When General Assembly entities or synods are parties to a judicial action, the GAPJC acts as the court of original jurisdiction.

GAPJC has defined process in the Manual of the GAPJC for the officers of the Commission to deal with matters which come before them. The most helpful process which has been refined over the years is the use of case committees. The Moderator appoints these committees which analyze the issues of the case, delineate the specifications of error, suggest lines of questioning for the hearing or trial, lead the questioning of parties, write the first draft of the decision (after discussion in the full Commission), and rewrite until the decision is accepted by the Commission. Those dissenting from the decision may write a dissenting opinion which must be heard by the full Commission and must be declared “decorous” before its inclusion in the decision.

The ability of the Commission to work effectively toward the decision is directly related to the quality of the work of the case committee. When the case committee has carefully analyzed the issues of the case, the rest of the Commission is better equipped to reach a decision. Because the cases before GAPJC are generally complex, clarity is not only desirable but necessary.

GAPJC acts on three to six cases per meeting; additionally there are always motions, correspondence, and other issues with which to deal. The number of hearings per meeting ranges from one to five (with the latter number occurring only once). The Book of Order requires that decisions be reached while the Commission is in session; therefore, Commissioners often feel rushed as the time for adjournment approaches. Management of the docket is essential if each case is to be carefully decided and written and edited; the Moderator’s job in moving the business along requires a deft touch and sometimes a sharp gavel.

Although this standard deals with process, the GAPJC is effective in fulfilling its constitutional mandate because of the spirit of collegiality and mutual respect among the Commissioners. As noted earlier, the Commission is careful to spend time at each meeting building community and sharing joys and concerns. The Commission is intentional about daily worship in the mornings and evenings and is regular in prayer for each other and the work before it. While there is not unanimity of opinion on issues before the body, there is unanimity that we are servants of the Church and seek to build up the Church. Commissioners decide cases on the basis of evidence and argument presented, and not on personal beliefs and views. The high personal regard with which Commissioners hold each other enables us to disagree with good grace; we work with an attitude of mutual trust. Commissioners depend on the leading of God's Spirit. Many Commissioners have noted that their service on the GAPJC was the most fulfilling work they had done for the Church.

In order to be effective, the Commission needs a careful balance of commissioners with vision and dedication to the Church as a whole. A consistent practice of this Commission has been to meet with representatives of the General Assembly Nominating Committee before commissioners rotate off.

Surveys of current and past commissioners revealed that in sum they think the Commission is effective in fulfilling its constitutional mandate.

2. The Commission has a regular process of self-evaluation of its services.

At the conclusion of each meeting, Commissioners complete an evaluation form covering the meeting arrangements, work of case committees, staff support, individual work before and during the meeting, conduct of the meeting, and worship. These surveys have resulted in adjusting adjournment time to Monday noon (rather than Sunday afternoon). The staff uses the evaluations to judge the meeting sites and arrangements. Meeting evaluations and discussion during meetings have led to a broader use of technology. Frequently the Commission now uses computer and projector to edit documents, rather than paper copies. As of the summer of 2007 some Commissioners are using a secure internet site to receive and work on documents. Other Commissioners without adequate computers and internet connectivity receive the documents in hard copy. Notwithstanding budgetary considerations, all GAPJC Commissioners should be provided with adequate computer hardware and software so that all Commissioners can work effectively online.

The other dimension of the self-evaluation is the triennial self-study which will be implemented for the period following the submission of this self-study. The Moderator will appoint a Self-study Review Team to conduct this triennial self-study with a report to the full Commission. Thus, there will be time for adjustments to be made prior to the six-year self-study prepared for the General Assembly. Ideally one of the members of the current Self-Study Committee will continue.

We anticipate that adjustments will be made in the work of the Commission as a result of this self-study.

3. The Commission employs a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large.

Following each meeting, the Executive Committee meets with the Stated Clerk. The Commission then formally forwards its decisions to the Clerk, who then posts them on the PC(USA) website within seven days of the conclusion of each meeting. The decisions are also sent by certified mail to the parties to each case immediately at the close of the meeting.

Since 2002 the Commission has written headnotes which summarize the major parts of the decision. Headnotes are designed to give readers the salient points of the decision.

Any other communication is out of the Commission's hands and therefore is not authoritative.

The Constitution requires that the deliberations of the GAPJC are closed and confidential. The Commission's Code of Ethics requires that Commissioners not comment publicly on decisions; only the Moderator or someone he/she designates shall speak for the Commission. Commissioners are free to comment on the procedures of the Commission, including the atmosphere of collegiality and trust which mark our work.

4. The Commission utilizes current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission.

As observed above, this standard is a work in progress. While we have made significant progress, there is still work to do to enable all Commissioners to utilize available technology fully. The staff of OGA and our technically proficient Commissioners have been particularly helpful to the GAPJC in exploring new ways in which to work more efficiently with new and emerging technologies. The Commission notes that a particular impediment is the fact that electronic resources such as the Annotated Book of Order are not available for the McIntosh operating system.

5. The Commission has developed a vision and plans for its work in light of its historic mandate and the emerging issues before and the context of the PC(USA).

GAPJC is not mandated to “develop a vision;” we are mandated to be faithful in upholding the Constitution of the PC(USA). When the Church changes the Constitution, we will change. We await with great interest the work of the Form of Government Task Force which will undoubtedly affect the work of permanent judicial commissions at all levels.

The Commission is aware of the limits of judicial process, which often results in winners and losers and no reconciliation. This Commission urges greater use of Alternative Forms of Resolution or other forms of mediation which “will provide justice and compassion for all parties” (D-2.0103, also D-10.201h (1-4), 10.0301). The biblical injunction “to conciliate, mediate, and adjust differences without strife” compels the Church to seek alternatives to judicial process. (See D-1.103.) Historically the purpose of church discipline was to reconcile individuals to each other and to the church. Although reconciliation should be at the center of all judicial process, the reality of a system which produces winners and losers does little to restore trust within our denomination.

Emerging issues before the Church demand that the Commission engage in regular continuing education. The Commission must take the time to consider and discuss emerging issues before these issues are before the body for decision.

The shared vision of the Commission is that we remain faithful to our work as described in the Constitution. We understand that “the purpose of discipline is to honor God by making clear the significance of membership in the body of Christ; to preserve the purity of the church by nourishing the individual within the life of the believing community; to achieve justice and compassion for all participants involved; to correct or restrain wrongdoing in order to bring members to repentance and restoration; to uphold the dignity of those who have been harmed by disciplinary offenses; to restore the unity of the church by removing the cause of discord and division, and to secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings” (D-1.0101). Therein lie our vision and our hope.

CHAPTER VI CHALLENGES AND STRENGTHS

This Commission’s review of the work of the past six years has offered valuable insights into the challenges and strengths of conducting the General Assembly’s judicial responsibilities. This backward look also provides guidance for the future as the Commission continues to serve the PC(USA) faithfully. As challenges have emerged, several corrective actions have begun. Likewise the identification of the strengths of our processes will enable us to continue to improve the way we work together for the strengthening of the church for work in the world.

We have identified five broad areas for improvement.

1. Continuing Education

In a wide-ranging discussion of issues which emerged from this self-study, the Commission identified the need for more consistent and timely continuing education. The judicial process deals with a wide variety of complex issues which demand that Commissioners be fluent in the Book of Order, Reformed theology, legal nuances and precedents, church history and confessions, and the scriptural foundations of all of the above. Obviously not every Commissioner will be fluent in all these ‘languages’ of our work; however, each Commissioner should be well schooled in the Book of Order, particularly the Form of Government and the Rules of Discipline.

While Commissioners need to be conversant in the general languages of our work, they also have to be specialists in the cases which come before them. There are several broad categories of remedial cases which come before the GAPJC: those dealing with ordination standards, relations within and among governing bodies, cases arising from actions of General Assembly, synods, or presbyteries; cases arising from within congregations. The GAPJC also handles a variety of disciplinary cases.

Two new areas of concern emerging in cases which will be heard early in 2008 are those regarding property issues, as well as those dealing with questions about the essentials of Reformed faith and polity. The Commission devoted an entire meeting to these two areas as they prepare for the cases which will be before them.

Another area for continuing education is in case precedents. It is rare for a case to come before the Commission dealing with issues which have never been considered before. Therefore, most cases come with issues which have a history of precedent. Since GAPJC decisions have the standing of Authoritative Interpretations of the Constitution of the PC(USA), the precedential history of the case must be carefully analyzed; and if the precedent is being overturned, the reasons should be clear and understandable to PJs at every level. Thorough interpretation of past precedents is difficult and complex. Case committees must be more helpful than in the past in identifying precedents.

2. Case Committee Process

When the case committees do their work well, the entire Commission benefits. A case committee can identify the salient points of the case before the hearing in order to sharpen the Commissioners' listening to the parties and asking their questions. Moreover, following the hearing, a well-prepared case committee will offer clearer drafts of the decision for the full Commission to discuss.

3. Management of the docket and meeting agenda

If the volume of cases increases even slightly, the Commission will have to meet more often or for a longer time at each meeting. The Preamble to the Rules of Discipline calls for "the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings" (D-1.0101). If a case is ready to be heard by the GAPJC, it should be timely docketed. Past experience, however, would suggest that the number of cases to be heard at any one meeting should not exceed three or four. Four cases with full records and hearings, deliberations and decisions are almost impossible to conclude in a meeting which lasts three full days and parts of two others. It is clear to all of us that we do not do our best thinking and writing toward the end of a long day of intense deliberation. Fortunately the Commission has never lost its sense of humor.

Commissioners' preparation time is another factor in management of the docket. Case records have ranged in length from 200 to about 3,000 pages. The expectation is that each Commissioner will be thoroughly familiar with the record, with the case committee being especially well prepared for its case. The demand on an individual commissioner's time before the meeting is obvious. One Commissioner characterized work on the commission as "challenging, frustrating, exhausting, inspirational and thoroughly rewarding."

4. Use of staff and technological resources

The Commission is exploring ways to use the knowledge and experience of the Manager of Judicial Process more effectively. The Manager and others in the Stated Clerk's office deal with the implementation of the Book of Order and Rules of Discipline daily; their contacts with governing bodies give them a perspective on the judicial process which individual Commissioners do not have. Moreover, briefing by the Manager on the implications of cases can be helpful and in no way compromises the Commission's independence.

GAPJC, as noted above, is moving into greater use of emerging technologies. This will continue to be a growing edge for us as a body and as individuals.

5. Use of Alternative Forms of Resolutions and other ways to "conciliate, mediate, and adjust differences without strife" (D-1.0103)

The GAPJC is moving into a new frontier in this arena. There is little guidance in Rules of Discipline about how the conciliation and mediation should take place. The Commission needs to analyze the processes for doing that which the Preamble and Scripture urge us to do. The Commission is currently working on guidelines for the use of mediation to be included in its manual.

The experience of this Commission leads us to urge the General Assembly to consider adopting revisions to the Rules of Discipline that would promote alternative forms of dispute resolution and consensus building in lieu of adversarial judicial process. The Church should strive to resolve disputes in a manner that minimizes divisiveness and expense and promotes consensus, leaving this Commission to resolve disputes by judicial process as a last resort.

Several strengths characterize the work of GAPJC.

1. Working together

In the period of this self-study the work of the GAPJC has been characterized by collegiality, trust, and respect. The GAPJC is intentional about creating community which is marked by mutual care for one another and a firm commitment to the work before us. Underlying this sense of community is a love for the Church and desire to serve the Head of the Church, Jesus Christ. The friendship and respect Commissioners have for one another transcends theological differences and creates an environment in which we work diligently on the tasks which are before us. As noted above, each meeting begins with a time of catching up with each other's lives and sharing of joys and concerns. Daily worship provides the spiritual foundation for our lives together. Inevitably when the hour grows late or the discussion intense, someone will provide just the appropriate amount of levity to keep us from taking ourselves (though not our work) too seriously. There is a healthy sense of playfulness which keeps us grounded in who we are.

Orienting new Commissioners and integrating them into the work of the Commission is an on-going task. We are intentional about re-forming our community as new Commissioners are elected and veterans retire.

2. Commitment to task

Commissioners rarely miss meetings. Commissioners come well prepared for the cases before them. Familiar with the record, they are ready for each hearing and/or trial and subsequent discussions; the debate is lively and spirited—and occasionally long-winded. Commissioners spend hours in session and in case committee meetings; this task is not for the faint-hearted. Often Commissioners have to use vacation and personal time sacrificially in order to serve the Church in this way.

3. Working with parties

The Commission shows respect for all parties. This respect is obvious in the preparation for the meetings and conduct during the hearings or trials. Parties have commented favorably on how familiar the Commissioners are with the record and the issues of their case. Commissioners exhibit courtesy and respect to all who appear before them. Inviting the parties to worship prior to hearings or trials, as well as extending the right hand of fellowship to all parties at the conclusion of each hearing or trial also shows the Commission's high regard for all who appear before them.

4. Openness to change

The GAPJC is open to changing its processes and ways of work, an example is the greater use of technology which has moved some Commissioners out of their comfort zone. We understand ourselves to be servants of the Church and seek to be helpful to the Church as we move into the future together. We seek to improve the quality of our decisions and to improve our ways of working together to accomplish that end.

Conclusion

We appreciate the work of the General Assembly Review Committee and are confident that this self-study will give the committee a helpful window into our work.

RULES OF THE PERMANENT JUDICIAL COMMISSION

A. ORGANIZATION OF THE COMMISSION.

- |                      |  |
|----------------------|--|
| AUTHORITY            | 1. The Commission shall have the powers prescribed by, and conduct its proceedings according to, the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) , the rules adopted by the Permanent Judicial Commission, and the most recent edition of Robert's Rules of Order .                             |
| OFFICERS             | 2. The officers of the Commission are a Moderator, a Vice-Moderator, a Clerk, and an Assistant Clerk, who shall hold office until their respective successors assume office.   |
| CONVENER             | 3. The officers, in the order stated above, shall convene the Commission. Should all of the officers be absent or unable to act, the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall appoint a convener from among the other members of the Commission.   |
| EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE  | 4. The officers named above shall constitute the Executive Committee.  |
| NOMINATING COMMITTEE | 5. The Moderator of the Commission shall appoint a nominating committee of at least three persons from among the members of the Commission. The committee shall nominate a slate from among the continuing members for election as officers, and shall nominate persons as needed to fill a vacancy in any office. |
| INTERNAL ELECTIONS   | 6. The Commission shall regularly elect officers at the Spring meeting in those years in which the General Assembly elects a new class of members to the Commission. If no meeting is otherwise required, election may be by conference telephone call or by mail ballot.  |
| CALENDAR             | 7. Meetings of the Commission shall be at such times and places as the Commission shall determine. Normally, at least thirty days notice of the date of meeting shall be given members of the Commission. (D-5.0203)   |
| QUORUM               | 8. The quorum of the Commission shall be a majority of its members. (D-5.0204)   |
| GENERAL ASSEMBLY     | 9. The Moderator, or a member of the Commission appointed by the Moderator, shall be the corresponding member representing the Commission at General Assembly meetings and shall advise the General Assembly and its Nominating Committee and any other General Assembly entities on behalf of the Commission.     |

D. CASE COMMITTEES

1. The initial organization of the material information in a case and drafting of a decision of the Commission shall be performed by the Case Committee, and the Case Committee shall have primary responsibility for managing the discussion and decision-making process of the Commission.
2. Pre-arrival Responsibilities:
  - a) at the request of the Executive Committee, recommend final determination of jurisdictional matters [D-6.0307 (Original jurisdiction) and D-8.0301 and D-13.0301 (Appellate jurisdiction)];
  - b) if directed to do so by the Executive Committee, participate in a jurisdictional hearing or pretrial conference;
  - c) conduct specific research on issues and undertake preliminary writing assignments;
  - d) identify in a memorandum:
    - 1) all basic issues,
    - 2) positions of the parties on those issues, and
    - 3) a preliminary history for the case;
  - e) make recommendations for the hearing of the case, procedure, and other related matters;
  - f) complete any assignments made in the initial conference call;
  - g) timeline prior to the hearing date:
    - 1) thirty (30) days prior:
      - complete review of the case materials;
    - 2) not later than thirty (30) days prior:
      - circulate among all the members of the Case Committee a draft of the memorandum in 2.d. above, with such comments as the chair (or designee) deems appropriate;
    - 3) not later than twenty (20) days prior:
      - by conference telephone call among the members of the Case Committee, the Moderator, and Vice-Moderator:
        - a) discuss recommendations for the hearing of the case, procedure, and other related matters,
        - b) make appropriate preliminary writing assignments, and
        - c) assign specific issues to members of the Case Committee, if appropriate;
    - 4) not later than twenty (20) days prior:
      - the Case Committee Chair will call the Office of the General Assembly regarding any “housekeeping” matters.
3. Post-arrival / Pre-trial or Pre-hearing Responsibilities:
  - a) review the memorandum of issues and the draft history of the case prepared in advance;
  - b) lead the Commission in discussion of the issues, history, and procedures recommended for the case.
4. Responsibilities at the Trial or Hearing on Appeal:
  - a) the Chair of the Case Committee will be recognized first to ask all the questions researched by the Committee;
  - b) other members of the Case Committee will then be recognized, followed by other members of the Commission.
5. Responsibilities after the Trial or Hearing on Appeal:
  - a) recommend disposition of the case to the Commission;
  - b) support that recommendation with Constitutional provisions and factual bases, with citations;
  - c) following a preliminary consideration of the Commission on the disposition, submit a draft or drafts of a decision to the Commission, until a satisfactory draft is approved.

[Rule C-4-d: Copies of names to both Moderator and Clerk.]

E. PROCEDURE FOR HEARINGS AND ADOPTION OF THE ORDER

1. The Moderator reads the case name and number.
2. The Assistant Clerk introduces all parties and counsel.
3. The Moderator introduces members of the Commission and indicates any who are absent or disqualified. (D-5.0205)
4. “The Moderator shall read aloud the first and second paragraphs of the Preamble to the Rules of Discipline (D-1.0101-.0102), shall announce that the governing body is about to proceed to trial, and shall enjoin the members to recollect and regard their high character as judges of a governing body of the Church of Jesus Christ and the solemn duty they are about to act.” (D-7.0401a for Trial; not required but good practice for appeals.)
5. A member of the Commission, ordinarily the Chair of the Case Committee, shall offer prayer.
6. For Trials, opportunity shall be given to the parties to challenge the organization and jurisdiction of the judicial commission, the eligibility of any member to sit in the hearing of the case, or any other substantial objection affecting the order and regularity of the proceedings. (Strictly, this procedure applies only to Trial. D-7.0401b)
7. For Trials, the Commission shall determine (D-6.0307a-d):
  - a) whether it has jurisdiction;
  - b) whether the complainant has standing to file the case;
  - c) whether the complaint was timely filed;
  - d) whether the complaint states a claim upon which relief can be granted.

8. For Appeals, the Commission shall determine (D-8.0301 or D-13.0301):
  - a) whether it has jurisdiction;
  - b) whether the appellant has standing to appeal;
  - c) whether the appeal papers were properly and timely filed;
  - d) whether the appeal states one or more of the grounds for appeal.
9. For Appeals, time limits:
  - a) 20 minutes - Opening statement of Appellant;
  - b) 30 minutes - Opening statement of Appellee;
  - c) 10 minutes - Closing (Rebuttal) statement of Appellant.
10. Trials (Original Jurisdiction)
  - a) arise under D-6.0202 or D-4.0000 (Reference)
  - b) arguments shall be recorded electronically, unless waived by all parties;
  - c) procedure is given by D-6.0000, D-7.0000
11. Questions in Hearings on Appeal
  - a) by the Chair of the Case Committee;
  - b) by other members of the Case Committee;
  - c) by other members of the Commission.
12. The Moderator
  - a) announces the hearing is completed;
  - b) thanks the parties;
  - c) excuses all persons who are not members of the Commission.
13. In closed session (D-7.0402, D-8.0404, D-13.0404), the Commission discusses the case, hears any minority opinions, and offers guidance to the Case Committee for the writing of drafts.
14. Approval of the Decision includes editorial authority for the Moderator, the Clerk, and the Chair of the Case Committee to conform the Decision to the standards of this Manual.

F. UNIFORM PRACTICES IN OPINION WRITING

PERMANENT JUDICIAL COMMISSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY
PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

To parties filing appeals with this Permanent Judicial Commission:

It is the responsibility of the Permanent Judicial Commission to decide your appeal promptly and fairly, and in accordance with the Book of Order.

In your brief please state the factual contentions about errors in the decision you are appealing on which you rely to establish your claim that the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission should review the proceedings and decision of the lower court and correct, modify, set aside, or reverse the decision (see D-8.0101 for a remedial case or D-13.0101 for a disciplinary case), and advise just where in the record of your case the Commission may find the information about these contentions.

Please state exactly what you are asking the Commission to do in your appeal to correct, modify, set aside, or reverse the decision and point out the paragraphs of the Book of Order or interpretations of the Book of Order by the Commission or the Advisory Committee on the Constitution that you believe give to the Commission the power to do so.

It is very important to your appeal that your brief addresses the issues noted above completely and concisely. THE COMMISSION'S REVIEW OF YOUR APPEAL WILL BE FOCUSED UPON THE ISSUES RAISED IN YOUR BRIEF.

After the Executive Committee of the Commission has reviewed the record of the trial or prior hearing on appeal (including your brief, if necessary), your appeal usually will take one of the following courses:

- (a) If it appears to us that your appeal does not meet the jurisdictional requirements for filing, including stating "one or more of the grounds for appeal" in D-8.0105 or D-13.0106, as required by the Book of Order, we will advise you that your appeal probably will have to be dismissed. In that event, you still will have an opportunity, in a jurisdictional hearing, to present your arguments on behalf of the sufficiency of your appeal (i.e., assuming your contentions as to the facts to be true, that you would be entitled to a hearing on the substance of the appeal).
- (b) If it appears that your appeal does meet the jurisdictional requirements for filing, including stating "one or more of the grounds for appeal" in D-8.0105 or D-13.0106, we will then review the documents in the case to determine if there is a genuine dispute as to any issues raised in the appeal, and consider (1) just what the previous Commission found to be the facts, and (2) whether there is sufficient information in the record of the proceedings to support that finding. Ordinarily, when there is a conflict in the evidence, the Permanent Judicial Commission will rely on the findings of the Commission that last heard your case, and will apply the principles of the Book of Order to the facts as found by that Commission -- without hearing new evidence, and without making a new determination of our own as to what the facts are.
- (c) If we find that there is no genuine dispute as to the facts of the case, the focus of the hearing will not be on the facts, but both sides will have an opportunity to present to the Commission their requests as to a proper disposition of the appeal.
- (d) If we find that there is a genuine dispute as to the facts of the case, ordinarily there will be no new hearing of the evidence relating to any such dispute, but you will have an opportunity to present to us your reasons why the findings of the last Commission that heard your case are not in accordance with the Book of Order, and why you are entitled to some relief that is within the power of this Permanent Judicial Commission to give.

PERMANENT JUDICIAL COMMISSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)

CODE OF ETHICS (Adopted on October 17, 2004)

PREAMBLE

“Church discipline is the church’s exercise of authority given by Christ, both in the direction of guidance, control, and nature of its members and in the direction of constructive criticism of offenders. Thus, the purpose of discipline is to honor God by making clear the significance of membership in the body of Christ; to preserve the purity of the church by nourishing the individual within the life of the believing community; to correct or restrain wrongdoing in order to bring members to repentance and restoration; to restore the unity of the church by removing the causes of discord and division; and to secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings. In all respects, members are to be accorded procedural safeguards and due process...” D-1.0101

Members of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission are charged to “recollect and regard their high character as judges of a governing body of the Church of Jesus Christ...” D-11.0402

The following constitutes a “Code of Ethics” for the members of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission and is intended to provide guidelines for their conduct:

GENERAL EXPECTATIONS

In relationship with others, members of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission shall strive to:

1. Be honest and truthful.
2. Regard all persons with equal respect and concern.
3. Recognize the gifts of others.
4. Work with others cooperatively and collegially.
5. Be diligent and dependable.
6. Speak the truth in love and bear witness without fear or favor.
7. Maintain critical self-awareness.
8. Conduct their lives with integrity so that they demonstrate consistently that they are disciples of Jesus Christ.

PUBLIC COMMENT<sup>1</sup>

1. Commissioners should exercise discretion in making public comment on decisions.
2. Commissioners should exercise discretion in commenting on decisions in casual or private conversations.
3. The deliberations of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission are confidential and are not to be divulged by any member of the Commission. Commissioners may not comment on decisions until the parties to the case have received the decision.
4. Once a decision has reached the parties and has been published by the Stated Clerk’s office, only the moderator or someone he/she designates shall speak for the Commission.
5. Commissioners will not misrepresent the position of the Commission even though personal opinions may conflict with the majority opinion of the Commission.
6. Commissioners may make public statements regarding the procedures of the Commission. While a proceeding is pending, Commissioners shall not make any public comment that might reasonably be expected to affect its outcome or impair its fairness.

14 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY PERMANENT COMMITTEES

[<sup>1</sup>For purposes of this code, “public” refers to any group or person not a member of this Commission, including members of the church and secular press, formal meetings of governing bodies or entities, educational or training events organized and conducted by entities of the church.]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST AND THE APPEARANCE OF IMPROPRIETY

1. Commissioners may be appointed to serve on committees and task forces at various levels of the church. Each commissioner must evaluate the risks of conflict of interest with his/her service on the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission.
2. “No person shall serve on the Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly who is a member of any other entity elected by the General Assembly until that person shall have resigned such membership” (D-5.0105). In the spirit of this provision of the Rules of Discipline, commissioners should carefully weigh service on task forces or committees that might present the appearance of impropriety.
3. Impropriety is understood as conduct that would create in reasonable minds a perception of the commissioner’s inability to carry out judicial responsibilities with integrity and impartiality.

MUTUAL ACCOUNTABILITY

1. Each commissioner is accountable to other commissioners and to the Church for maintaining the integrity and fairness of the judicial process. This requires mutual respect for each other and for those appearing before the Commission.
2. Commissioners are mutually accountable for their preparation for and participation in the meetings of the Commission and in carrying out responsibilities as outlined in the current Manual – The Permanent Judicial Commission of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

APPLICATION OF THE CODE OF ETHICS

1. All members of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission shall comply with this Code.
2. Staff related to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission shall be guided by this Code in their work with the Commission.
3. Any questions regarding the applicability of this code to specific situations shall be referred to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission Executive Committee or the Moderator.

ATTACHMENT B

Standards for Review of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission

A. Constitutional Mandate

The General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission is a constitutionally mandated commission of the General Assembly (D-5.0101), charged “to serve in judicial matters in accordance with the Rules of Discipline” (Book of Order, G-13.0103o).

B. Constitutional Boundaries

As a commission, the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission undertakes the judicial function of the General Assembly on behalf of the General Assembly, and considers and concludes judicial matters referred to it (Book of Order, G-9.0502). Its commissioners are presbyters from each synod who are qualified to be commissioners to the General Assembly (D-5.0100).

Since the General Assembly is the highest governing body of the church, the decisions of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission are not subject to further review by appeal. Its decisions provide authoritative interpretation of the Book of Order, and the “most recent interpretation of a provision of the Book of Order shall be binding” (Book of Order, G-13.0103r). The decisions of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission are reported to each General Assembly by the Stated Clerk as required by D-7.0700, D-11.0700, and Standing Rule M.2.b.(4).

C. Constitutional Powers and Process

“In the cases transmitted to it, the [General Assembly] Permanent Judicial Commission shall have only the powers prescribed by and conduct its proceedings according to the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” (Book of Order, D-5.0202).

D. General Assembly Review Process

1. Responsibilities of General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC)
  - a. The GAPJC will conduct a self-study of its work based on the Constitutional Standards and Non-Constitutional Standards (specified below) covering the previous six years.
  - b. The GAPJC will finalize its self-study and render a report at least 120 days prior to the General Assembly at which the self-study report will be reviewed.
  - c. The GAPJC will have representatives available at the assembly to serve as resources to the assembly committee.

14 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY PERMANENT COMMITTEES

- d. The GAPJC may include responses in the self-study and additional questions that explore the Constitutional Standards that apply to its work.
- e. The GAPJC may utilize former members to help conduct the self-study.

2. Responsibilities of Office of the General Assembly (OGA)

- a. The OGA, the GAPJC, and the Office of Research Services will jointly develop and agree upon the content, distribution, and processing of any survey instrument used in the GAPJC review.
- b. The OGA will conduct training of assembly committee leadership and members as needed, with the assistance of GAPJC leadership, to help the assembly committee to meet its responsibilities in accomplishing its work.
- c. The OGA will budget for development and implementation of the GAPJC self-study.

3. Work of the Committee of the General Assembly Committee for Review as Set Out in the Manual for Review of the General Assembly Permanent Committees and Commission

- a. The review assignment will be assigned to an assembly committee.
- b. As with other committees, OGA will conduct training of the review committee.
- c. Consistent with the action of the 216th General Assembly (2004) (Minutes, 2004, Part I, pp. 88, 339-41), the assembly committee's review will be limited to the following questions:
  - (1) Is the GAPJC fulfilling its Constitutional Mandate as specified herein?
  - (2) Is the GAPJC in compliance with the Constitutional Standards as described herein?
  - (3) Is the GAPJC in compliance with the Non-Constitutional Standards as described herein?
- d. The assembly committee may hold hearings, etc.
- e. The assembly committee will be in dialogue with the representatives of the GAPJC.
- f. The assembly committee may break into subgroups in conducting its work.
- g. The assembly committee will make a final report, possibly with recommendations.

E. Constitutional Standards: Fidelity to Constitutional Process

Compliance by the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission with the following standards is required by the Book of Order:

1. To open and close all meetings with prayer (Book of Order, G-9.0301b);
2. To secure the just, speedy, and economical determination of proceedings (Book of Order, D-1.0101);
3. To accord procedural safeguards and due process (Book of Order, D-1.0101);
4. To examine papers promptly upon receipt to determine preliminary questions (moderator and clerk only) (Book of Order, D-6.0305, D-8.0301, D-13.0301);
5. To respond to stays of enforcement in a timely fashion (Book of Order, D-6.0103);
6. To decide challenges to the findings of the moderator and clerk (Book of Order, D-6.0306, D-8.0302); rulings of the moderator (Book of Order, D-7.0303a, D-11.0304); and the composition of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (Book of Order, D-7.0303b, D-7.0401a and b, D-11.0402);
7. To issue citations as deemed necessary (Book of Order, D-7.0202, D-11.0201);
8. To appoint counsel when necessary (Book of Order, D-11.0302);
9. To conduct pretrial and pre-hearing conferences when necessary (Book of Order, D-6.0310, D-10.0405, D-8.0307, D-13.0307);
10. To conduct trials and hear appeals in remedial cases, and to hear appeals in disciplinary cases (Book of Order, D-4.0202, D-7.0101, D-7.0102, D-8.0403, D-11.0101, D-13.0403); [Note: The General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission would only hold a trial on a disciplinary case in the rare event of reference from a lower governing body, since a disciplinary case would ordinarily be tried by the presbytery or session of membership.]
11. To read aloud D-1.0101 and D-1.0102 at the beginning of each trial (Book of Order, D-7.0401 and D-11.0402a);

14 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON REVIEW OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY PERMANENT COMMITTEES

12. To control the conduct of trials and hearings (Book of Order, D-7.0303, D-11-0304);
13. To decide cases after private deliberations (Book of Order, D-7.0402, D-8.0404, D-11.0403, D-13.0404);
14. To write, amend, proofread, and finalize written decisions with the signatures of the moderator and clerk while in session, and immediately disseminate and timely file those decisions (Book of Order, D-7.0402, D-8.0404, D-11.0403, D-13.0404);
15. To prepare and process records of proceedings following a trial before the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (Book of Order, D-7.0600, D-11.0600).

F. Review Criteria for Constitutional Standards

Constitutional Standard	Review Criteria (The following review criteria provide an objective measure for determining compliance to Constitutional Standards.)
#1 Open and close with prayer	All meetings should be opened and closed with prayer.
#2 Just, speedy and economic determination of proceedings	a. Time lapse between receipt of complaint or notice of appeal and final disposition of case should not exceed an average of 1 year. b. GAPJC meeting arrangements should be made by staff in a manner that reflects the needs of the commission to do its work, as well as reflecting the stewardship concerns of the church.
#3 Procedural safeguards and due process	Procedural safeguards and due process should be accorded to all parties.
#4 Prompt determination of preliminary questions	a. Time between receipt of initial case filings by OGA and forwarding the same to the moderator and clerk of the GAPJC for their determination on preliminary questions should not exceed an average of 14 days. b. Time between receipt of initial case filings by the moderator and clerk from OGA and their determination on preliminary questions should not exceed an average of 30 days.
#5 Stays of enforcement	a. Time between receipt by OGA of a request for a stay of enforcement and forwarding the same by OGA to members of the commission should not exceed an average of 5 working days. b. Time between receipt of a request for a stay of enforcement by the moderator and clerk and the notification to commissioners of their recommendation regarding preliminary jurisdictional questions should not exceed an average of 5 working days.
#6 Rule on challenges	a. In each applicable case, parties should be given the opportunity to present evidence and arguments on any challenges made to findings of moderator and clerk on preliminary questions. b. In each applicable case, parties should be given the opportunity to object to the composition of the commission. c. In each applicable case, the GAPJC should address any challenges and/or objections raised by the parties.
#7 Issue citations	In applicable cases, the moderator or clerk should consider and act upon requests for the issuance of citations.
#8 Appoint counsel	In applicable cases, GAPJC should appoint counsel for an accused.
#9 Conduct pretrial and pre-hearing conferences	a. Pretrial or pre-hearing committees should be appointed in appropriate cases. b. Pretrial or pre-hearing conferences should be conducted in appropriate cases.
#10 Conduct trials and hearings	Trials should be conducted formally with full decorum in a neutral place suitable for the occasion.
#11 Read aloud D-1.0101 and D-1.0102	Sections D-1.0101 and D-1.0102 should be read at the beginning of each trial.
#12 Control conduct of trials and hearings	a. The GAPJC should exercise its authority and power to control conduct of trials and of all parties, witnesses, counsel and public, including removal of them, to the end that proper dignity and decorum are maintained. b. Moderator should decide all questions as to procedure or the admissibility of evidence after parties have been given an opportunity to be heard. c. In each case where applicable, all parties and commissioners should be given the opportunity to appeal from a decision of the moderator to the GAPJC. d. The GAPJC should decide by majority vote all appeals from decisions of the moderator. e. The absence of any member of GAPJC after trial has commenced should be recorded.
#13 Decide cases	For each case in which a decision has been rendered, there should be a. private deliberations by the commission; b. for an appeal, a separate vote on each specification of error, which may be combined or altered for clarity and efficiency; c. for a trial, a separate vote on each irregularity, delinquency, or charge.

- #14 Prepare and disseminate written decisions For each case in which a decision has been rendered:
- a. a written decision should have been prepared while the commission was in session;
  - b. a copy of the decision should have been delivered to the parties by personal service or certified mail;
  - c. the decision should have been filed with the Stated Clerk within thirty days of the hearing.
- #15 Prepare and process records Following trials before the GAPJC, the full record of the proceedings should be prepared, processed, and transmitted to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly for permanent preservation.

G. Non-Constitutional Standards

In addition to the standards mandated by the Constitution, the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission has established the following other standards as guidance in conducting its work:

1. To participate in daily corporate worship for the duration of GAPJC meetings;
2. To maintain and follow the Manual of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission including its Code of Ethics;
3. To build community among members of the GAPJC;
4. To orient newly elected commissioners;
5. To communicate effectively with the greater church by various means including:
  - a. writing headnotes for each decision;
  - b. ensuring that decisions are disseminated in a timely manner
6. To implement an ongoing self-evaluation program;
7. To engage in “continuing education” programs involving matters relevant to the work of the GAPJC;
8. To maximize attendance at GAPJC meetings;
9. To keep minutes of GAPJC meetings.

H. Review Criteria for Non-Constitutional Standards

Non-Constitutional Standard	Review Criteria(The following review criteria provide an objective measure for determining compliance to Non-Constitutional Standards.)
#1 Daily worship	Commissioners should participate in daily corporate worship.
#2 GAPJC Manual	The GAPJC Manual , including its appendices, should be reviewed and, if necessary, updated following each meeting of the General Assembly.
#3 Community building	Each meeting of the GAPJC will include time for sharing of personal joys and concerns, time for intercessory prayer for one another, and time for fellowship.
#4 New commissioner orientation	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a. The GAPJC Moderator should send welcoming letters to new commissioners at the conclusion of the electing General Assembly, which would include all scheduled GAPJC meetings.</li> <li>b. At the first GAPJC meeting following election by the General Assembly, newly elected commissioners shall participate in an orientation in matters pertaining to the GAPJC, held prior to the convening of the full commission.</li> </ol>
#5 Communicate effectively with the greater church	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a. Case decisions should contain headnotes as appropriate.</li> <li>b. Case decisions should be disseminated to the parties within 7 days after adjournment of the meeting.</li> <li>c. Case decisions should be forwarded to OGA within 7 days after adjournment of the meeting for immediate posting to the denominational website.</li> </ol>
#6 Ongoing self evaluation	The GAPJC should implement an ongoing self-evaluation program, which includes: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>a. completion of evaluation forms by commissioners at the conclusion of each GAPJC meeting;</li> <li>b. a triennial self-study by the Self-Study Review Team conducted in accordance with the Standards For Review as approved by the General Assembly.</li> </ol>

- #7 Continuing education for commissioners Each GAPJC meeting should include an allocation of time for continuing education as feasible and needed.
- #8 Maximize GAPJC meeting attendance
- a. All members should attend all GAPJC meetings unless excused.
  - b. All members should be present at the time when the meeting is initially convened.
  - c. All members should remain in attendance until the meeting is adjourned and no member should leave before a meeting is concluded.
  - d. The GAPJC meetings should be scheduled at least one year in advance in order to provide commissioners with adequate time to arrange their schedules.
  - e. The GAPJC meetings should be held at locations that minimize commissioner travel time on a rotating basis while weighing the attendance or convenience of the parties and the funds available for meetings.
  - f. Meeting arrangements should be made so as to facilitate the work of the commission, while accommodating the health, safety, and reasonable personal needs of commissioners.
- #9 Keep minutes The clerk shall keep adequate minutes of GAPJC meetings.

I. Review Process

The self-study will be conducted on a triennial basis by a four-person Self-Study Review Team composed of one person from each of the last four classes elected to the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission. The review team will accomplish its work in accordance with the Manual of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission and will render a report at the fall meeting of the commission in the year in which the review was conducted. The commission will act on the report, and thereafter, in applicable years, forward the report to the General Assembly in accordance with the Standing Rules of the General Assembly.

J. Effectiveness of Service

The services of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission are to be consistent with the constitutionally required process.

Appendix C

Budget Process

The General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission is housed in the Department of Constitutional Services in the Office of the General Assembly (OGA). Budget requests are submitted every two years. Budget approval is a three-step process:

1. Requests are submitted to a budget committee comprised of the budget director and at least one staff member from each department. This committee reviews each request to make sure that it complies with the funding formulas approved by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA), and negotiates any suggested changes with departments.
2. The requests are then submitted for Senior Coordinating Cabinet approval.
3. Once approved by the Senior Coordinating Cabinet, the budget is sent forward to COGA for approval.

The formula used to calculate travel, lodging and meals is $560.00 for the first day, and $160.00 for each additional day. The $560.00 is to include the cost of transportation. The budget does not take into account that some commissioners must arrive and/or stay a day later due to airline schedules and/or meetings. This formula has not increased since 2005. Additionally, to reduce cost of staff travel, COGA has requested that as much as possible, all meetings should be held in Louisville. In the past two years, the GAPJC has met in Louisville for five of six meetings.

The COGA budgets for three meetings of the GAPJC a year with the acknowledgement that there may need to be a fourth meeting if the caseload demands it. So far, this has not been necessary. COGA and the GAPJC are looking at providing for training at the current meetings or providing a fourth meeting for training purposes only.

The GAPJC requests funds for printing and mailing. Some case records are in excess of 1000 pages. Copies of these records are provided to 16 commissioners and both parties at a considerable expense for printing and mailing.

In an effort to contain costs of printing and mailing, the GAPJC is migrating to a paperless system of doing work. A web-based program, Base Camp/Project Path, is being phased in gradually. Although there will always be printing and mailing costs associated with getting business and information to parties, once the migration is complete, the GAPJC will significantly reduce this line item.

The GAPJC is mindful of the considerable budget crisis facing the Office of the General Assembly and is continually looking for ways to reduce expenses.

GAPJC Budget Allocation & Expenditures
2003–2008

Allocation	Spent
2003	$65,550	$78,990
2004	76,850	67,361
2005	76,965	66,965
2006	78,490	68,779

Item 14-Report 2

Report 2. Report on the Review of the Advisory General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission

[The assembly approved Report 2, Recommendations 1.–5. See pp. 36, 38.]

1. Commends the GAPJC for its work and insights gained in providing a self-study.
2. The GAPJC is cognizant of the importance of using new technology to communicate its work; however, case history is not currently recorded in electronic-digest form. Given that the GAPJC has identified in its self-study the importance of precedence in the adjudication of future cases, the Assembly Committee on the Review of General Assembly Permanent Committees recommends that the GAPJC and the Office of the Stated Clerk compile an electronic digest of all cases adjudicated from 1983 to the present.
3. The GAPJC should be encouraged to move forward to provide adequate information and technology support for the commission to do its work.
4. The self-study recognized the limits of judicial process and expressed concern for potential future increase in caseload; the commission therefore encouraged greater use of Alternative Forms of Resolution (AFR) beginning at the presbytery level. In keeping with Matthew 5:25, the review committee recommends that the Office of the General Assembly, in cooperation with the Office of the Stated Clerk, develop a process for using AFR starting at the presbytery level and present its recommendation to the 219 General Assembly (2010) for action.
5. That the following report on Review of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission be approved.

Report on Review of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission

Introduction

The review of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) was conducted according to the provisions in the Standing Rules and the standards in the Manual of the General Assembly as far as this committee is aware.

Mission

The GAPJC is a commission of the General Assembly and is a reactive body as opposed to a committee that generates its own work.

As quoted in their self study: “The Rules of Discipline describe the judicial processes of the Church, of which the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission (GAPJC) is a part. The GAPJC has both original and appellate jurisdiction as prescribed in the Rules of Discipline. Primarily an appellate court, the Commission hears and decides both remedial and disciplinary cases; however, GAPJC may conduct trials in cases of original jurisdiction.”

The mission of the GA PJC is stated as follows in the self-study:

“Judicial process is the means by which church discipline is implemented within the context of pastoral care and oversight. It is the exercise of authority by governing bodies of the church for

“a. the prevention and correction of irregularities and delinquencies by governing bodies, the General Assembly Council, or an entity of the General Assembly (Remedial Cases, D-6.0000);

“b. the prevention and correction of offenses by persons (Disciplinary Cases, D-10.0000).” (D-2.0101).”

Membership

As stated in the self-study:

The membership of the GAPJC is composed of ministers and elders (as nearly equal as possible) from each of the synods (D-5.0100). Thus there are sixteen commissioners from the sixteen synods; currently, however, there are two vacancies. Members are elected by the General Assembly and ordinarily serve for six years (D-5.0103). The change to biennial assemblies necessitated the adjustment of the terms of some of the current commissioners.

The commission elects its moderator, vice-moderator, clerk, and assistant clerk, who constitute the executive committee. Officers serve terms of two years and may be reelected. The responsibilities of the executive committee are delineated in the Manual of the GAPJC, which is appended to the self-study.

Process

The Assembly Committee on Review of General Assembly Permanent Committees received a self-study based on the work of the GAPJC for the last six years. The committee would like to commend the GAPJC for an excellent self-study, which was informative and thorough. The committee was disappointed that an external survey form, which the committee had prepared, had not been distributed and completed. The committee requests that a survey be included in the next GAPJC self-study.

Findings:Fidelity to Mission and Partnership

1. Does the GAPJC, as it was created by the church, serve and support the church's mission in a particular area? Does the GAPJC exhibit a constant faithfulness to and in fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA)?

In the presentation of the self-study, the committee was impressed by the commission's commitment to the task given to them by the GA and the quality of their faithfulness to the task. The GA PJC goes above and beyond its constitutional mandates to ensure this faithfulness (e.g., not only opening meetings with prayer but opening with daily corporate worship).

2. Do the basic processes of the GAPJC demonstrate fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its establishing deliverance, charter, or mandate from the assembly? Does the GAPJC exhibit leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources in which the GAPJC acts?

The GAPJC demonstrates fidelity to its mission and accountability to establishing deliverance by self-limiting its review of cases presented to it. It perceives itself as deliberately not legislating through judicial review.

3. Does the GAPJC exhibit practical cooperation with the other agencies or committees of the church in areas of overlapping responsibility and opportunity?

The GA PJC exhibits cooperation with those agencies with which it is mandated to work with and report (e.g., the Office of the Stated Clerk).

4. Does the GAPJC provide timely responses to directives and requests from the General Assembly?

Given the caseload, the GAPJC is timely in their responses to the General Assembly. It averages eleven cases per year and average 7.4 months from receiving a case to final adjudication. (2–3 cases per meeting ... 4 meetings).

Effectiveness of Services

1. Does the GAPJC have a defined and consistent process for completing its work?

Yes

2. Does the GAPJC have a regular process of self-evaluation of its services?

Yes. At the conclusion of each meeting the commissioners complete an evaluation form.

3. Does the GAPJC employ a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large?

Yes, through the office of the Office of the Stated Clerk. Since 2002 the commission has written Headnotes which summarize salient points of their decisions.

4. Does the GAPJC utilize current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission?

Yes, to the best of its ability given the budget constraints (see recommendations).

5. Does the GAPJC have a developed vision and plan for its work in light its historic mandate and the emerging issues before the PC(USA)?

Yes; however, because the GAPJC is a reactive body and the vision and scope of its work is proscribed by the Book of Order, the vision pertains only to its process and work.

I. Introduction to the Self-Study

Section IV.D., “Review of Agencies and Committees,” of the Organization for Mission mandates regular review of all General Assembly permanent, advocacy, and advisory committees. The Presbyteries’ Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) is being reviewed at the 218th General Assembly (2008).

The PCCEC has responsibility for the written examinations that are among the requirements for ordination to the office of minister of the Word and Sacrament in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (Book of Order, G-14.0430). The committee has twenty-four members, half of whom are elected by the General Assembly, and half of whom are elected by six regional reading groups that meet annually to grade the examinations. The committee recruits two additional, nonvoting members whose primary responsibility is preparation of the Bible Content Examination.

In preparation for General Assembly review, the PCCEC established a self-study subcommittee. Its members included: John Burgess, chair (professor at Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, member of Pittsburgh Presbytery, and member of the PCCEC’s theology task group); Chris Lenocker (pastor in San Diego Presbytery, member of the PCCEC’s Bible task group, and chairperson of the PCCEC); Leeann Scarbrough (pastor in Sheppards and Lapsley Presbytery and chairperson of the PCCEC’s worship and sacraments task group); Syngman Rhee (professor at Union-PSCE, member of Atlantic Korean American Presbytery, and member of the PCCEC’s polity task group); and Ernest Kimmel (stated clerk of New Brunswick Presbytery and chairperson of the PCCEC’s polity task group). Lesley Davies, manager of examination services and member of Utah Presbytery, provided staff support from the national offices (OGA/GAC).

The subcommittee met five times (August 28, 2006; February 5, 2007; April 24, 2007; September 8, 2007; and November 29–30, 2007), gathered information about the examinations and examination process, and asked a wide range of interested individuals and church entities to evaluate the effectiveness of the examinations and the examination process:

- The subcommittee reviewed statistics from the last ten years relating to pass rates in each examination area and of the examinations as a whole.
- With the help of the Office of Research Services, it surveyed in 2006 and 2007 readers of ordination examinations, current moderators of committees on preparation for ministry (CPMs), ministers of the Word and Sacrament who were ordained in 2003 or 2004, and inquirers and candidates who took examinations in January or August 2007.
- In October 2006, the chairperson of the PCCEC and the chairperson of the subcommittee sent a letter to deans of Presbyterian seminaries, asking them to comment on the current structure and administration of the examinations.

- The subcommittee reviewed results of a consultation in October 2005 of Presbyterian seminary faculty and representatives of the PCCEC.
- In February 2007, representatives of the subcommittee attended a national meeting of persons involved in PC(USA) programs that assist candidates in the transition from seminary to the first call.
- In April 2007, the subcommittee consulted with the entire PCCEC, as well as with each of its four task groups.
- In June 2007, the chairperson of the subcommittee met with members of the Core Cluster of the Re-Forming Ministry Initiative of the Office of Theology and Worship.
- In July 2007, representatives of the subcommittee attended a national meeting of moderators of committees on preparation for ministry and committees on ministry and consulted with them about the examinations.
- In September 2007, the subcommittee met with Marcia Myers, director of the Office of Vocation.
- In October 2007, the chairperson of the subcommittee met with the Committee on Theological Education (COTE).
- In October and November 2007, the subcommittee sent an initial draft of its report to CPM moderators, seminary representatives, recent readers of ordination examinations, and members of the PCCEC for review and response.

We have drawn gratefully on this reservoir of experience and insight in preparing this report.

II. The Ministry of the Word and Sacrament

Chapter III of the Book of Order, “The Church and Its Mission,” boldly calls the church to be “the provisional demonstration of what God intends for all humanity” (G-3.0200), to proclaim “in Word and Sacrament that ... the new age has dawned” (G-3.0300a), and to engage “in the struggle to free people from sin, fear, oppression, hunger, and injustice” (G-3.0300c(3)(c)). The Book of Order further declares that “the Church is called to undertake this mission even at the risk of losing its life, trusting in God alone as the author and giver of life, sharing the gospel, and doing those deeds in the world that point beyond themselves to the new reality in Christ” (G-3.0400).

The Reformed tradition has emphasized that the church sets aside certain persons as ministers of the Word and Sacrament to help “to equip and enable [the whole people of God] for their tasks within the church and their mission to the world,” including the church’s responsibility to reach out “in concern and service to the life of the human community as a whole” (G-6.0202b).

The Reformed tradition has also emphasized that those who would lead the church faithfully in its mission to the world must manifest certain personal gifts and character traits, and must receive adequate academic preparation. A significant report on “The Theology and Practice of Ordination in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.),” commended by the 204th General Assembly (1992) for church-wide study and response, carefully identifies and discusses these factors.<sup>1</sup>

The report notes that “the formal educational requirements for those preparing for ordination ... need to be properly rigorous, reflecting the key role these officers play in interpreting the church and its mission and equipping the church for its ministry to the world” (p. 78). “Ministers ... need to know the text of Scripture and principles for interpreting it that respect its integrity. They also need to know the theological tradition of the church ... and the challenges made to it by modern critical thinking” (p. 77).

The report argues, however, that “these kinds of knowledge and skills alone are, while necessary, insufficient. Ministers must also be able to discern where and how the promises and claims of God in Scripture intersect with human life in a particular context for ministry, and they must be able to communicate those promises and claims clearly and effectively to the whole company of God’s people” (p. 72). Seminary preparation must be supplemented by practical experience, for “some things can only be learned, and some skills only developed, in the exercise of ministry” (p. 78).

Intellectual preparation and practical experience are key areas in which the church assesses candidates’ readiness for ministry. Presbyteries evaluate seminary transcripts as well as candidates’ personal faith and ability to exercise appropriate pastoral wisdom, judgment, and imagination in the actual exercise of ministry.<sup>2</sup> The PCCEC assists presbyteries in this process of evaluation. By assessing candidates’ answers in written examinations, the PCCEC helps the larger church to make better judgments about candidates’ ability to relate the church’s biblical, theological, and constitutional resources to the church’s ministry in the world.

III. Discerning Readiness for Ministry

Five church bodies participate in discerning a candidate's call and readiness for ministry: (1) the session that recommends a person to come under care of the presbytery; (2) the presbytery in which the candidate is under care (through its committee on preparation for ministry (CPM) and in cooperation with the candidate's session); (3) the institution of theological education that a candidate attends; (4) the PCCEC, through the examinations that it prepares and administers; and (5) the receiving presbytery that confirms a candidate's call to a particular ministry within its bounds. The candidate's CPM plays the leading role in this process, and the principal purpose of the ordination examinations is to assist the CPM in determining its candidates' readiness for ministry.

The PCCEC administers five examinations, as outlined in the Book of Order (G-14.0431): a multiple-choice Bible Content Examination on major themes, events, and people of the Scriptures (normally taken in the first year of seminary); and four written examinations in the areas of Bible Exegesis, Theological Competence, Worship and Sacraments, and Church Polity (normally taken after two full years of seminary [G-14.0431]).

The written examinations are graded by minister and elder readers elected by the presbyteries (G-11.0103m, G-14.0432) regionally. Four groups meet in the fall, and two in the spring. Each group meets for three and a half days. Prior to each meeting, the PCCEC develops and distributes resource papers to readers and encourages them to undertake additional preparation on their own. When the reading group meets, the PCCEC provides additional orientation to each examination question and to the examination process as a whole.

Because readers seek to discern how well a candidate communicates in writing his or her ability to relate the church's biblical, theological, and constitutional resources to issues in ministry today, the perspective of both ministers and elders is important. In order to encourage readers to focus on the content of the examinations, candidates' names and personal information remain anonymous. Each examination is graded by at least two readers. In overseeing the process, the PCCEC works to ensure that readers' grades have a high degree of consistency, even though readers have diverse backgrounds and differing levels of formal theological training.

Pass rates on individual examinations in recent years have ranged between 63 percent and 71 percent. Approximately half of the candidates who take all four examinations at the beginning of their senior year of seminary satisfactorily complete them at that time. Another 15 percent or so of these candidates will complete the examination requirements in January of their senior year (see Attachment A).

Additional statistical evidence indicates that after a second attempt to complete an examination satisfactorily, the likelihood of success decreases substantially. The PCCEC believes that the presbytery of care should determine whether such a candidate could better demonstrate readiness for ministry through an alternate means of examination or is better suited for a form of service to the church different from the ministry of the Word and Sacrament.

The examinations of the PCCEC have a limited but distinct purpose. Seminaries are especially concerned to test a candidate's academic competence; presbyteries evaluate the adequacy of a candidate's theological views and his or her personal gifts for ministry. Ordination examinations focus on a third area of concern (shared by the seminaries and the presbyteries): a person's ability to integrate what he or she has learned in seminary and through practical church experience, with pastoral situations. The ordination examinations offer candidates a significant opportunity to move from thinking of themselves as students in an academic context, to thinking of themselves as pastors and leaders in the church and for the world.

IV. The Situation Today

Ordination examinations provide an important moment for candidates to integrate biblical and theological knowledge with pastoral wisdom. They are more than a requirement to be endured. At their best, they provide a unique opportunity for candidates to bring together what they have learned in seminary and in the church.

The examinations are vitally important in a second regard: they lift up common, church-wide standards of readiness for ministry in a time in which candidates for ministry come from a wide variety of personal backgrounds:

- Some have been lifelong Presbyterians, but many have moved through several denominational or religious traditions before joining a Presbyterian church, sometimes as late as during seminary.
- Some have been raised in a Christian church; others had a conversion experience in their college years during their participation in a campus ministry program or a parachurch organization.
- Some are members of racial and ethnic groups that have not been strongly represented previously in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

- Some have a strong college background in the liberal arts and took religion classes at the undergraduate level, but many have educational backgrounds in other areas and have difficulty meeting the demands of reading and writing that come with theological education.
- Some have a clear sense of call to pastoral ministry; others seek ordination to other forms of validated ministry or are uncertain of their vocational plans.
- Some come straight from college to seminary, but many are older, second-career students.
- Some come with basic Bible knowledge; others are reading the Bible almost for the first time.

Preparation for ministry also takes place in an ever-wider variety of ways:

- Some candidates for ministry in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) attend a Presbyterian seminary; others choose a seminary based on location or theological reputation, rather than Presbyterian affiliation.
- Some seminaries require a year-long internship; in other cases, students have a few hours of field work each week over the course of a year, while continuing their seminary studies.
- Some students never take a class in Reformed theology, worship, or polity (which are not necessarily required courses even at PC(USA) seminaries), while other students have several courses in these areas.
- While candidates must attend accredited theological institutions, the level of theological preparation in different institutions and under different instructors varies greatly.
- Some candidates have been closely guided and nurtured by their CPM; others feel disconnected from their presbytery and see Book of Order requirements as bureaucratic hurdles that stand in the way of their personal call to ministry.

The church acknowledges and at points welcomes this diversity of background and preparation, even as it affirms that ministers have a common responsibility to represent and transmit the church's biblical, theological, and ecclesiastical heritage faithfully. Knowledge of this heritage, and ability to work with it pastorally, are presupposed in several of the ordination vows (W-4.4003), which all candidates for ministry take:

- Ordination vow "b": to accept the Scriptures and their witness to Jesus Christ (Bible Content Examination, Bible Exegesis Examination).
- Ordination vow "c": to receive and adopt the essential tenets of the Reformed faith as expressed in the church's confessions (Theological Competence Examination, Worship and Sacraments Examination).
- Ordination vow "e": to be governed by the church's polity (Church Polity Examination).
- Ordination vow "i(3)": to proclaim the good news in Word and Sacrament (Bible Exegesis Examination, Worship and Sacraments Examination).
- Ordination vow "i(3)": to be active in the church's government and discipline (Church Polity Examination)

The five examinations of the PCCEC seek to ensure that candidates know the church's foundational documents (the Scriptures, The Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order, including the Directory for Worship, the Form of Government, and the Rules of Discipline) and are able to use them effectively in pastoral situations. The examinations encourage candidates, regardless of their personal or educational background, to familiarize themselves with the basic theology and polity of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and to relate this theology and polity to the diverse contexts of ministry in which they will be serving.

V. Strengthening the Effectiveness of the Examinations

The PCCEC has carefully reviewed approximately 1,200 surveys that were administered to readers of ordination examinations, moderators of CPMs, ministers who have taken the ordination examinations in recent years, and candidates who have taken examinations in the past year (see Attachment B). The PCCEC has also reviewed more than seventy written responses from seminary representatives, CPM moderators, and ordination examination readers. The surveys and written responses provide rich material for ongoing self-evaluation by the PCCEC.

Overall, presbyteries affirm the examinations and the current examination process. Forty-six percent of CPM moderators surveyed, and 62–63 percent of ordination examination readers, agreed that successful performance on the examinations reflects readiness for ministry “to a great extent” or “to a very great extent” (only 9 percent of CPM moderators and 1–5 percent of readers said, “to a small extent” or “not at all”). Recent ordinands were generally supportive of the examinations, though less enthusiastically so: 22 percent saw the examinations as reflecting readiness for ministry “to a great extent” or “to a very great extent”; 42 percent, “to some extent.”

Current candidates also offered generally positive responses when asked to what extent each examination accurately assessed their integration of academic learning and pastoral skills. Depending on the particular examination in question, 36–47 percent checked, “to a great extent” or “to a very great extent”; 29–37 percent, “to some extent”; and only 16–21 percent, “to a small extent” or “not at all.”

Extensive written comments on the surveys and in communications to the self-study subcommittee reflect strong feelings about the examinations. Some respondents strongly affirm the examinations as one of the things that the denomination does best, while others sharply criticize them. Among these critics are representatives of some seminaries, who argue that the examinations are composed and graded without sufficient sensitivity to the cultural context of many racial-ethnic candidates and are therefore a poor tool for assessing readiness for ministry.

In light of these responses, the PCCEC has identified four areas in which the examinations can and should be strengthened: examination content and format, grading procedures, timing of when candidates take examinations, and racial ethnic representation in the composing and grading of examinations.

A. Examination Content and Format

The PCCEC regularly reviews examination content and format, seeking to ensure that each examination meets the goal of asking candidates to draw on the church’s foundational documents to order to interpret and respond to pastoral situations wisely. The PCCEC is recommending that the current descriptions of the Open Book Bible Exegesis and Theological Competence Examinations be revised in order to align them more closely with these goals (see Item 14-01, Recommendation #1 to the 218th General Assembly [2008]).

The PCCEC is also actively rethinking the format of the Bible Exegesis Examination. The current examination takes four and a half days, and emphasizes detailed exegetical work that at points may duplicate assessments for which a candidate’s seminary and presbytery are already responsible. The Book of Order requires candidates to pass Hebrew and Greek exegesis classes in seminary. Presbyteries review the candidate’s seminary transcript, including this work in Hebrew and Greek, before certifying that the candidate is ready to receive a call (G-14.0450c). In addition, candidates normally provide an exegetical paper and sermon to their presbytery (G-14.0305j) in the 2005 Book of Order, now part of an Advisory Handbook [see 2007 Book of Order G-14.0402]).

In light of these seminary and presbytery requirements, the PCCEC believes that the Bible Exegesis Examination should be revised and perhaps shortened, and, while retaining the church’s concern for responsible exegesis, should place emphasis on the text’s application to the church and the world.

B. Grading Procedures

The examinations will be credible to candidates and the wider church only to the degree that grading is fair and reliable. The PCCEC must be confident that readers have adequate knowledge and training to make accurate judgments about candidates’ answers.

The PCCEC works with presbyteries to recruit competent readers. It prepares resource papers and provides training prior to each grading session. New technologies (such as DVD presentations about each of the examination questions) may help to improve this training.

The PCCEC is particularly concerned to improve the grading of the Bible Exegesis and Theological Competence Examinations, both of which presuppose a level of expertise that normally comes only through seminary training. Survey results indicate that readers feel less secure in grading these two examinations than the others; seminary representatives have also expressed concern about the grading of these two examinations. Recruitment of readers with specialized knowledge and experience in each examination area is essential, although the PCCEC also benefits from the insights of elder readers without specialized training who can help to judge a candidate’s ability to communicate to a general church audience.

Because the current grading format (three and a half days at a regional grading site) makes it difficult for some pastors and elders to participate who could otherwise make a vital contribution, the PCCEC is exploring changes to reading group schedules. New technologies may eventually allow readers to grade from home, but potential trade-offs in doing so would have to be carefully weighed, since the current reading group process provides for an intensity of focus and mutual learning and support.

C. Timing of When Candidates Take Examinations

Because the ordination examinations focus on readiness for ministry, they presuppose that candidates:

- have completed seminary work that familiarizes them with the church's foundational documents (such as courses in the confessions, Reformed worship, and church polity), and
- have sufficient practical experience in ministry to be able to relate this foundational material effectively to various kinds of pastoral situations.

The PCCEC is recommending that current language in the Book of Order be revised in order to encourage presbyteries to approve candidates to take the four written ordination examinations only after they have completed adequate academic work and practical experience in these areas (see Item 14-01, Recommendation #2 to the 218th General Assembly [2008]).

D. Representation of Racial Ethnic Persons in the Composing and Grading of Examinations

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is committed to increasing the membership and the participation of different racial and ethnic groups in the denomination. Ordination examinations must be sensitive to the church's racial and ethnic diversity, including new immigrant groups, while lifting up common, church-wide standards of theology and polity.

The PCCEC is deeply concerned that pass rates of racial ethnic candidates on the ordination examinations are significantly lower than those of white candidates. Pass rates of white candidates in recent years on each examination have ranged between 65 percent and 77 percent. Pass rates of other candidates have averaged between 27–54 percent.

The PCCEC has adopted several strategies to address this concern. It actively recruits people to be members of the PCCEC and readers who are familiar with the pastoral contexts of different racial ethnic groups and have cultural sensitivity in the formulation and grading of examination questions. In addition, the PCCEC provides for translation of the examinations into Spanish and Korean, and grading of those examinations by persons competent in those languages.

The PCCEC will work with the General Assembly Nominating Committee, the presbyteries, and the seminaries to increase the number of racial ethnic persons who serve on the PCCEC and as readers. Additional strategies, however, are necessary. The PCCEC commits itself to constituting by 2009 a panel of persons to assist the PCCEC in ensuring that examination questions do not have unintentional cultural biases but rather allow candidates to relate the church's foundational documents to diverse cultural contexts. The PCCEC also commits itself to exploring how the examinations can better serve all candidates to integrate theological, biblical knowledge with the particular pastoral contexts in which they will be serving, including racial ethnic contexts (a point that will be more fully discussed below, in Chapters VII and VIII).

The PCCEC believes that the presbyteries play an especially important role in guiding racial ethnic candidates through the examination process. First, presbyteries can interpret to all of their candidates, including racial ethnic candidates, the examinations' significant but limited role in discerning readiness for ministry. The perspective of examination readers from the wider church must supplement, not replace, the judgment of the CPM, which knows its candidates personally. Second, the results of ordination examinations offer a presbytery an opportunity to work with its candidates to discern what further steps are most appropriate to help them to demonstrate readiness for ministry: additional seminary studies or field experience, assistance with preparation for taking the examinations, or alternate means of examination administered by the presbytery itself.

VI. A Vision for the Future of National Ordination Examinations

Issues related to racial ethnic participation in the examinations point to deeper issues about how readiness for ministry is best discerned and by which church bodies. A key question to the PCCEC is: What kind of examinations will best help the church assess candidates' readiness for ministry?

In consulting with seminary faculty and students, the PCCEC has been concerned that many candidates see the examinations as just another hoop to jump, in what is already a long and involved road to ordination. Candidates sometimes wonder why they must take an ordination examination in an area for which they already passed a seminary course. Upon receiving their grades, candidates do not always understand readers' comments or what readers were looking for. The examinations may result in frustration rather than learning and spiritual discernment.

Imagine a different scenario: A candidate has completed basic seminary work in the foundational documents of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). He or she has extensive, supervised field experience in the church, and so has seen how biblical exegesis makes a difference for preaching; how Reformed theology and confessions inform a pastor's teaching and priorities personally and for the church; how a Reformed understanding of worship and sacraments shapes the liturgical life of a congregation; and how Presbyterian polity guides decision-making and life together in sessions, presbyteries, and the wider church.

The candidate is asked to take four written examinations. Each examination provides an opportunity for the candidate to exercise pastoral wisdom and imagination. Each asks the candidate to draw on the church's foundational documents in order to illuminate church life and to guide the decisions that pastors and congregations make.

The candidate comes to these examinations prayerfully, perhaps taking them in a church setting rather than in a seminary classroom, and beginning each examination period with worship rather than simply the distribution of examination booklets. The candidate prays not simply to pass the examinations but, more importantly, that the examinations might truly be a means by which he or she will grow in wisdom and faith. People throughout the denomination join the candidates in prayer on the days that the examinations take place.

Readers from the wider church provide an assessment of the completed examinations. Their goal is not simply to issue a grade but rather to provide insights that will enable a candidate and his or her presbytery to have an extended conversation about the candidate's readiness for ministry. The candidate values the examinations because they allow him or her to get a better sense of his or her strengths and weaknesses in pastoral ministry. The presbytery values the examinations because the readers provide a perspective from the larger church that helps the presbytery to see things about a candidate that might otherwise be overlooked or incorrectly interpreted.

The PCCEC now invites the church to capture this vision of the unique opportunity that ordination examinations present to candidates and their presbyteries. We invite all of the partners concerned with assessing candidates' readiness for ministry to work together for examinations and an examination process that better fulfill their promise. We call for a radical shift in thinking about the examinations, so that candidates and presbyteries alike will be able to affirm the positive role that examinations can play in strengthening pastoral leadership in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

VII. The Search for New Models

In contrast to this vision of the examinations' exciting possibilities, some respondents to the self-study subcommittee have argued that the time has come to eliminate national ordination examinations altogether, leaving the examination process solely in the hands of individual presbyteries. Other respondents have suggested that the PCCEC, while continuing to develop examination questions, could invite presbyteries to grade the examinations of their own candidates, aware of who they are and their personal contexts.

The PCCEC recognizes that the current system of nationally designed and graded examinations may tempt presbyteries to rely excessively on the judgments of readers from the wider church. Elimination of national examinations could encourage presbyteries to assume fuller responsibility for examination of their candidates. Presbyteries could tailor examinations to candidates with different backgrounds and in different contexts of ministry. Similarly, a system in which ordination examinations were nationally designed but locally graded could result in greater presbytery involvement in the examination process.

But elimination of national examinations could also have unintended negative consequences. The overture from San Francisco Presbytery in 1963 that led to a national system of ordination examinations noted that:

Presbyteries ... vary widely in the level of knowledge and ability they require for ordination so that candidates for the ministry often seek a less exacting presbytery to examine them.

The wide latitude in requirements for entrance into the ordained ministry in practice shifts the burden for setting ministerial standards to the seminaries rather than the presbyteries as constitutionally provided.

Such wide latitude in entrance lowers the esteem accorded to the ministerial vocation and makes it increasingly difficult to recruit the ablest [persons] for the ministry in competition with such exacting fields as science, medicine and law.

In view of the turnover of committee personnel and the rapid expansion of skills and knowledge required in the ministry, many candidates' committees feel the need for more specific guidelines in examination standards. (Minutes of the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, 1963, Part I, p. 36)

The PCCEC still finds these arguments to be persuasive. We believe that the current system of national ordination examinations continues on balance to be more helpful to the church than their elimination. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is a national, interdependent church characterized by ever-greater mobility of candidates and ministers from one part of the country to another and by a wide diversity of levels of academic preparation and church experience. In such a time, national ordination examinations play an important even if limited role in lifting up the church's core theology and polity. They represent the church's commitment to ordaining candidates for service to the whole church even as they minister in their particular and diverse contexts.

At the same time, the PCCEC affirms the wisdom in calls for the presbyteries to take the lead in assessing their candidates' readiness for ministry. Precisely because presbyteries know their candidates personally, national examinations should not replace presbyteries' judgments but rather should help to fill them out.

The ordination examinations are uniquely valuable as one place in the process of assessing readiness for ministry in which the presbytery learns from the perspectives of individuals representing the larger church. Ordination examinations resemble certifying examinations in professions like law and medicine. Or to use a different analogy: just as an attending physician may ask a partner who knows nothing about a particular patient to review the patient's charts and the attending physician's judgments, so too national ordination examinations offer a presbytery a valuable second opinion about a candidate's readiness for ministry.

Frustration may arise when the judgments of the ordination examination readers differ widely from those of the members of a candidate's CPM or his or her seminary teachers. The current process does allow a CPM to appeal a grade, but the PCCEC sustains such appeals only under extraordinary circumstances. A presbytery may provide alternate means of testing competence in an examination area (G-14.0472), but because this exception can come only after a candidate has twice failed to pass the national examinations, it may emotionally burden a candidate and a presbytery, especially when they together sense that the candidate has a clear call to the ministry of the Word and Sacrament.<sup>3</sup> The opposite situation is also possible: passing ordination examinations may actually hinder a candidate and a presbytery from asking necessary questions about whether the candidate is truly called to ordained ministry of the Word and Sacrament.

Concrete proposals for change to the examinations and examination process should come only after careful study. The current examinations and examination process have been carefully developed and refined over the years. Responses to the PCCEC indicate that presbyteries, through their CPMs and elected readers, are widely supportive of the current system. Nevertheless, more effective long-term partnerships among sessions, CPMs, presbyteries, seminaries, and the PCCEC are needed if the church as a whole is better to discern candidates' readiness for ministry. The time is right for the church to explore new models of assessing readiness for ministry that will help the church realize more fully the promise of national ordination examinations.

VIII. A Pilot Program

In light of these far-reaching concerns, the PCCEC commits itself to constituting a task force that will explore new models of national ordination examinations, so that they:

- better serve as a moment for a candidate to demonstrate integrative learning and pastoral wisdom and imagination,
- more fully invest presbyteries in providing gifted members to read ordination examinations,
- more fully enable racial ethnic participation in the examinations and examination process (see above: Chapter V, Section D).

This task force will:

1. be appointed by the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates;
2. have eight to twelve members, with representatives of the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates, at least one Presbyterian seminary, and at least three presbyteries;
3. study examination and certification processes in other denominations and profession;
4. determine how national ordination examinations can better enable candidates, including racial ethnic candidates, to relate the church's foundational documents to particular contexts of ministry;
5. Develop a pilot program in which candidates, including racial ethnic candidates, take ordination examinations only after completion of their seminary work and a significant internship in a supervised pastoral context; and
6. report its progress to the PCCEC by January 1, 2012.

As noted throughout this report, the PCCEC believes that the examinations best offer an opportunity for a candidate to demonstrate integrative learning and pastoral wisdom when they take place late in one's seminary education or after seminary, and after significant supervised church experience, such as an internship. New models of examination that better achieve these goals will require the PCCEC, seminaries, sessions, and presbyteries to avoid imposing undue hardship on candidates. The church must ensure that candidates have adequate financial support and pastoral mentoring as they make the transition from seminary, take ordination examinations, and seek a call.

The PCCEC has also noted that the examination process depends vitally on the readers, who give selflessly of their time and are strongly supportive of the current system. The PCCEC believes that increased presbytery investment in the examinations process will further strengthen the examination process. To the degree that presbyteries capture a vision of ordination examinations as a unique moment for candidates to demonstrate integrative learning and pastoral wisdom, their candidates will also capture this vision. New models that better lift up the promise of national ordination examinations will require new strategies for selecting readers, organizing reading groups, and coordinating the judgments of the presbytery and those of PCCEC readers.

IX. Concluding Reflections: Ordination Examinations as One Aspect of Assessing Readiness for Ministry

The self-review has reminded the PCCEC that readiness for ministry encompasses a host of academic and personal factors that go far beyond the parameters of the ordination examinations. But ordination examinations do play a distinct role in lifting up the significance of the church's shared legacy in the Scriptures, The Book of Confessions, and the Book of Order. The examinations help to ensure that all candidates for ministry, regardless of their personal background and their particular course of theological education, are well-grounded in these foundational documents and are able to use them effectively in pastoral situations.

The ordination examinations work from the premise that this grounding involves more than rote memory. What ministers need is a practical wisdom informed by the Bible and the constitutional documents that orient their ministry over a lifetime. Seminaries, presbyteries, sessions, and the PCCEC alike are committed to training ministers who will draw on this rich legacy "with energy, intelligence, imagination, and love" (W-4.4003h) to speak to the most urgent matters of faith and life in the church and the world today. The PCCEC trusts that its proposals will assist in realizing this goal and looks forward to advice and counsel from the wider church.

Attachment B: Summary of Survey Results

The ordination examination process of the PC(USA) is of interest and concern to several key groups. The PCCEC implements the process. The readers who grade the examinations are elected by their presbyteries, all of which are requested to elect readers although not all do so. The CPMs are prime users of the results, as are the examination-takers. As part of its self-study and with the valuable assistance of the Research Services of the General Assembly Council (GAC), the PCCEC surveyed all CPM moderators, readers at both the October 2006 and March 2007 reading sessions, inquirers and candidates who took the examinations in January and August 2007, and ministers of the Word and Sacrament who were ordained in 2003 and 2004. The number of returned surveys is shown in Table I.

Table I: Groups Surveyed by the PCC

Group	# of surveys sent	# of surveys returned	Response rate
CPM Moderators	192 <sup>5</sup>	106	55%
October 2006 Readers <sup>6</sup>	185	167	90%
March 2007 Readers <sup>7</sup>	99	76	77%
January 2007 Candidates	448	203	45%
August 2007 Candidates	573	320	56%
Ordinands of 2003-2004	616 <sup>8</sup>	372	64%

Responses from each group are summarized below.

CPM Moderators

Among the CPM moderators who responded, two-thirds (69%) were men and almost all (98%) were white. Eighty-five percent were ministers of the Word and Sacrament. Less than half (47%) of the CPMs had racial-ethnic members. The responding presbyteries all had inquirers or candidates who took examinations in 2006. About three in five (58%) CPMs discuss the situation of the inquirer or candidate before granting approval, while 41% automatically approve the taking of examinations if the person under care has reached a certain point in seminary study. Ninety percent of the CPMs reported offering help in preparation when requested, three-quarters offered tutoring, and 61% shared copies of old examinations.

About half of the CPM moderators (46%) judged that successful performance on the ordination examinations reflect candidates' readiness for pastoral ministry "to a very great extent" or "to a great extent." Only a quarter thought that the examinations reflect candidates' readiness for other forms of ministry to this extent.

Most of the presbyteries (92%) reviewed the results of the examinations—typically, the CPM moderator and, in 84% of the presbyteries, the CPM liaison to a particular examinee. Ninety percent of examination-takers who did not achieve a satisfactory grade indicated that a member of CPM reviewed the examination readers' comments with the inquirer or candidate and in most (70%) of the cases, advised the inquirer or candidate to "find a knowledgeable person to tutor him or her." A quarter of the CPM moderators reported that the committee "expected the inquirer or candidate to improve his or her knowledge of the content area without the committee's help."

One-fifth of the presbyteries used an alternate means of examination during 2006, typically for one candidate. The most common alternate means for assessing the candidate's competence were conducting oral examinations (77%), administering old examination questions with extended or no time limits (43%), and administering a written examination composed by the presbytery (33%).

The majority of CPM moderators (62%) thought that candidates should take the four examinations when they were partway through seminary study. Nineteen percent thought that the examinations should be taken after the completion of seminary or after a post-seminary supervised internship or licensure period.

Examination Readers

Forty-nine percent of the readers elected by their presbyteries served on their CPM, and most were white (94%). A total of 122 presbyteries (71%) provided readers to grade the examinations in either October or March. None of the readers responding to the survey were from the non-geographical presbyteries. In both groups, a high proportion (more than 80%) of the readers reported that they were motivated to serve because of their concern about the quality of future ministers, their concern for inquirers and candidates for ministry, and out of a desire to serve the denomination.

A plurality of readers (42-45%) thought that candidates should take the four examinations when they were partway through seminary study. A similar proportion (39-41%) thought that the examinations should be taken after the completion of seminary or after a post-seminary supervised internship or licensure period.

Several differences were evident between the readers elected by their presbyteries to serve in October and those elected to serve in March. In October, 72% of the readers were ministers of the Word and Sacrament and 28% were elders. Slightly more than half of the readers (55%) were men. The vast majority (94%) were white, and half (53%) served on their presbytery's Committee on Preparation for Ministry. In March, only 57% of the readers were ministers of the Word and Sacrament; 43% were elders. Slightly more than half of the March readers (52%) were women, but only 40% served on a CPM.

This group of presbyters, who are intimately familiar with the examinations and the range of examinees' responses, shared a strong consensus (60-75%) that the examinations, as presently structured, assess the examinees' integration of academic learning and pastoral skills "to a very great extent" or "to a great extent." Almost two-thirds of the October readers (63%) and half (52%) of the March readers judged that successful performance on the examinations reflect candidates' readiness for pastoral ministry, while about a third of each group judged that performance on the examinations reflects readiness for other forms of ministry.

This difference (63% versus 52%) may be attributable to the different composition of the two reading groups with regard to gender and office. Table II shows the results when the data are disaggregated by gender and office for each of the two reading groups. In both groups, about three-fifths of the ministers agreed that the examinations assess readiness for ministry. In each group, the male elders were least likely to agree with that judgment. The two groups of female elders were quite divergent in their views. Because of the small numbers of respondents, these differences can only be regarded as suggestive.

Table II: Proportion of Readers Agreeing that the Examinations Assess Candidates' Readiness for Pastoral Ministry "To a Very Great Extent" or "To a Great Extent"

	October		March		Pooled
	Ministers	Elders	Ministers	Elders	Ministers	Elders
Male	n=80 61%	n=10 50%	n=23 65%	n=12 25%	n=103 62%	n=22 37%
Female	n=39 62%	n=36 75%	n=17 53%	n=20 45%	n=56 59%	n=56 64%

Examination Candidates

Slightly over half of the responding examinees in both January and August 2007 were women (52%-54%); 85% of both groups were white, and 9% of the January group and 6% of the August group were African American. The median age of the January examinees was 42; the August group was slightly younger, with a median age of 38. Forty-five percent of the January group and 49% of the August group were in their third year of seminary and about two out of every five examinees had already graduated from seminary. Examinees from over three-quarters of the presbyteries (133) responded to the survey.

The majority of the responding examinees were satisfied with the timing of the examinations in August and January, and with the registration process.<sup>9</sup> However, in open-ended comments, there were many pleas that the examinations be offered more than twice a year, as well as a number of comments about the cost of the examinations.

The examinees brought a variety of learning experiences to the examinations (Table III). Surprisingly, a small proportion had no seminary classroom experience in the areas in which they were being examined. Similar proportions of the examinees did not have field education, an internship, or leadership in their home congregation to provide them practical church experience. Although the examinations seek to assess the integration of classroom knowledge with its application in the life of the church, a small but non-trivial proportion of the examinees appears not to have both kinds of learning experiences before attempting the examinations.

Table IV reports the degree to which particular learning experiences were helpful to candidates in preparation for each examination.

In addition to these learning experiences, examinees were asked about other methods of preparing for the examinations. Table V shows that virtually everyone prayed, and 80% or more reviewed previous examinations. About two-thirds of the examinees talked with a student who had taken the examinations, and similar proportions reviewed their class notes. About half of the examinees consulted with a professor or a pastor as they prepared to take the examinations. Only about one-fifth consulted with a CPM member as they prepared. The August candidates were somewhat more likely than the January candidates to study with other students or to participate in a seminary-sponsored review course. A high proportion of examinees taking the three examinations that require use of the Constitution of the PCUSA did read it in preparation.

Responses to the question of how well the examinations assessed the integration of academic learning and pastoral skills (Table VI) varied considerably among the four examinations and between the January and August examinees.

Table VI: Percent of Examinees Who Think That Each Examination Assesses the Integration of Academic Learning and Pastoral Skills to a “Great” or “Very Great Extent”

	January	August	Pooled
Biblical Exegesis	36%	40%	38%
Theological Competence	38%	48%	44%
Worship & Sacraments	47%	55%	52%
Church Polity	39%	55%	49%

Approximately half of the examinees thought that the Worship and Sacraments and Church Polity Examinations assessed the integration of academic learning and pastoral skills “to a great extent” or “to a very great extent.” Only about two-fifths of the examinees felt that the Biblical Exegesis and Theological Competence Examinations were this successful in assessing the integration of academic and pastoral skills.

Recent Ordinand

In an effort to understand how the examination process was perceived after beginning ministry, a survey was sent to those ordained to the ministry of the Word and Sacrament in the PCUSA in 2003 or 2004. The respondents were divided fairly evenly between women (47%) and men (53%). Eleven percent were under age 30 when they responded, 41% were between 30 and 40, 18% were between 41 and 50, and 29% were older than 50. Four percent identified themselves as Asian/Pacific Islanders, 2% as Latino, and 2% as African-American, while 92% were white.

The proportion of ministers who had to repeat an ordination examination varied among the four examinations: 24% of the respondents had repeated the Bible Exegesis Examination; a similar percentage repeated Theology; 18% repeated Church Polity, while 15% repeated Worship and Sacraments. For each examination, one percent or less of the respondents took the examination in either Korean or Spanish. For each examination area, four percent or fewer of the recent ordinands demonstrated competence through alternate means.

When asked the extent to which preparation for and taking the ordination examinations were helpful to their current ministry, 63% reported that the Worship and Sacraments Examination was “helpful” or “very helpful.” About the same proportion (60%) found the Polity Examination to be helpful to the same extent. The proportions were lower for Theology (55%) and for Biblical Exegesis (49%). This last figure may relate to many respondents’ open-ended comments that ministers, when they prepare sermons today, rarely consult the Scriptures in Greek or Hebrew. These respondents question the continued requirements both to study and to be examined on the biblical languages.

When asked the extent to which the examinations assessed the integration of academic learning and pastoral skills, the greatest number (38-42%) responded that each examination did so “to some extent.” Similar proportions (36-44%) responded that each examination did so “to a great extent” or “to a very great extent.” Twenty-two percent of the respondents thought that successful performance on the examinations reflected readiness for pastoral ministry “to a great extent” or “to a very great extent.” Only 11% made this same judgment regarding readiness for other ministry.

Forty-two percent of the respondents thought that candidates should take the four examinations “partway through seminary study.” Thirty-two percent indicated that the examinations should be taken after completing seminary or following a post-seminary internship or licensure period. A variety of other responses ranged from “not at all” to “when they’ve taken the appropriate seminary course” to “whenever they feel prepared.”

Differences among the Groups

Each of the four surveys had somewhat different emphases; consequently, data on particular questions are not available for all four groups. It is, however, helpful to compare cross-group data where they are available. Table VII presents the proportion of the combined groups of readers, the current candidates, and the recent ordinands who judged each of the examinations to assess the integration of academic learning and pastoral skills “to a very great extent” or “to a great extent.”

The most striking difference is between those who grade the examinations, where a majority judge each examination to assess the desired integration “to a great extent” or “to a very great extent,” and those who have just taken the examinations or took them within the past decade. How might this difference be explained? Readers’ experience in seeing a wide range of responses to the examination questions may lead them to view the examinations as successfully differentiating candidates’ ability to integrate academic learning and pastoral experience. By contrast, the candidates and recent ordinands have only their own experience to go by.

Table VII: Proportion of Respondents Judging that a Particular Examination Assessed the Integration of Academic Learning and Pastoral Skills to a “Very Great Extent” or to a “Great Extent”

	Pooled Readers	Pooled Examinees	Recent Ordinands
Biblical Exegesis	70%	38%	36%
Theological Competence	74%	44%	38%
Worship & Sacraments	71%	52%	44%
Church Polity	71%	49%	43%

Table VIII shows that recently ordained ministers are the most skeptical about the relationship of successful performance on the examinations and readiness to begin ministry. By contrast, almost two-thirds of the readers think that successful performance on the examinations reflects readiness for pastoral ministry.

All groups recognize that the examinations are not indicative of readiness to begin other forms of ministry. Readers and CPM moderators may recognize that the examinations cover only a limited scope of demands on ministers but feel that the examinations nevertheless reflect competence within those limits reasonably well.

Table VIII: Proportion of Respondents Judging that Successful Performance on the Four Ordination Examinations Reflected Readiness for Ministry to a “Great” or “Very Great Extent”

Readiness for:	CPM Moderators	Pooled Readers	Recent Ordinands
Pastoral ministry	46%	63%	22%
Other ministry	25%	34%	11%

Table IX reflects views about when the examinations should be taken. The differences may reflect the goal of CPM moderators to help candidates get through the process and receive a call, while a substantial portion of the readers and the recently ordained ministers recognize that candidates’ performance on the examinations would be better after the completion of course work or more experience in the ongoing life of a congregation.

Table IX: The Stage of the Preparation Process When the Examinations Should Be Taken

	CPM Moderators	Pooled Readers	Recent Ordinands
Mid-Seminary	62%	43%	42%
After seminary or internship	19%	40%	32%
At another time	3%	13%	17%

Clearly, one’s perception of the national ordination examinations is shaped by one’s role in the preparation process and by the experiences that one has had. Overall there is recognition of the important, though limited, role that the examinations play in the care and preparation process.

Endnotes

1. The report is available from Distribution Management Services (DMS #272-92-411), as well as in the Minutes of the 204th General Assembly (1992). Page numbers refer to the DMS version of the report.
2. The term candidate is used in this report to refer to all persons who are pursuing ordination in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), regardless of whether they are formally in the inquiry or candidacy stage of presbytery care. The examinations are also required of ministers of other denominations seeking membership in the PC(USA) (G-11.0404a(2)).

3. Candidates with disabilities that affect test-taking ability may also demonstrate competence in the examination areas by alternate means administered by the presbytery (G-14.0472).
4. Based on the last eight years, and with variation of plus or minus ten percentage points.
5. There are 173 presbyteries; this number reflects a number of co-moderators.
6. Reading sites in Raleigh, Pittsburgh, Oklahoma City, and San Francisco.
7. Reading sites in Chicago and Atlanta.
8. Thirty-nine returned as undeliverable to address of record with PC(USA).
9. In order to serve candidates even better, the PCCEC is working toward using computer technology to allow candidates to register for examinations on-line and receive their grades quickly. This technology will also allow the PCCEC to increase the number of times it offers the Bible Content Examination each year.

Item 14-Report 3

Report 3: Report on Review of the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations of Candidates

[The assembly approved Report 3, Recommendations 1.–2. See pp. 36, 39.]

1. This committee would like to commend the PCCEC for a thorough self-study. The committee wants to affirm the PCCEC commitment to the Theological Standard of The Reformed Faith while at the same time seeking to address the interpretative barriers of racial ethnic candidates. We recommend in the future that the communication links between the PCCEC and CPMs be continued and significantly strengthened. As the demographics of the denomination continue to change, we encourage the committee to engage in continual reassessment. We further recommend that the General Assembly continue to support the work of the PCCEC.

2. That the following report on Review of the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations of Candidates be approved.

Report on Review of the Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations of Candidates

Introduction:

The review of the General Assembly committees was conducted according to the provisions in the Standing Rules and the standards in the Manual of the General Assembly.

Mission

The Presbyteries' Cooperative Committee on Examinations for Candidates (PCCEC) has responsibility for the written exams that are among the requirements for ordination to the office of minister of Word and Sacrament.

Membership:

The committee has twenty-four members, half of whom are elected by the General Assembly, and half of whom are elected by six regional reading groups that meet annually to grade the exams. The committee recruits two additional, nonvoting members whose primary responsibility is preparation of the Bible Content Examination.

Process

The PCCEC provided a self-study based on their work and the General Assembly Committee on Review of General Assembly Permanent Committees reviewed the self-study, examined the survey results, and heard a presentation from the PCCEC.

Findings:

A. Fidelity to Mission and Partnership

1. Does the PCCEC exhibit a constant faithfulness to and in fulfillment of its servant role in the life of the PC(USA)?
Yes

2. Does the basic process of the PCCEC demonstrate fidelity to the mission and accountability procedures set forth in its establishing deliverance, charter, or mandate from the assembly? Does the PCCEC exhibit leadership in guiding the church in engagement with the work and resources in which the PCCEC acts?

Yes

3. Does the PCCEC exhibits practical cooperation with the other agencies or committees of the church in areas of overlapping responsibility and opportunity?

Yes, The PCCEC communicated its desire to cooperate with other agencies dealing with ordination such as seminaries and CPMs.

4. Does the PCCEC provide timely responses to directives and requests from the General Assembly?

Yes. The committee was realistic about their timeline. It expressed a willingness to expedite the process when possible.

B. Effectiveness of Services

1. Does the PCCEC have a defined and consistent process for completing its work?

Yes. The self-study reflects a thorough analysis of its work to date and a well-thought out pilot program to strengthen the program in four areas: (1) Examination content and format; (2) Grading procedures; (3) Timing of when candidates take examinations; (4) Racial ethnic representation in the composing and grading of examinations.

2. Does the PCCEC have a regular process of self-evaluation of its services?

Yes. The committee keeps track of their own internal statistics and evaluates the results.

3. Does the PCCEC employ a strategy for effective communication with the church-at-large?

Based on the self-study, it is unclear to us if and how the committee communicates with the church-at-large, including the CPMs, and especially racial ethnic sessions.

4. Does the PCCEC utilize current and emerging technologies to enable it to fulfill its mission?

Yes.

5. Does the PCCEC have a developed vision and a plan for its work in light of its historic mandate and the emerging issues before and within the context of the PC(USA)?

Yes.

14-Info

Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns Agency Summary

The committee is composed of twelve regular members representing African Americans, Native Americans, Latina/o Americans, Asian Americans, Middle Eastern Americans, and European Americans.

The 2006–08 membership of the committee is as follows: Noushin Framke, chairperson, Middle Eastern, at-large; Irvin Porter, vice chairperson, Native American Consulting Committee; Judith Pingel, secretary, Native American, at large; Eugene Turner, chair, Resource and Referral Subcommittee, National Black Presbyterian Caucus; John Spangler, chair, Study and Comment subcommittee, European American, at-large; Mauricio Chacón, National Hispanic/Latino Caucus, Adel Malek, Middle Eastern Caucus; Patricia Lee, liaison to ACSWP, National Asian Caucus; Adel Malek, National Middle Eastern Caucus; Jean Kim, liaison to ACWC, Asian, at-large; Dale Lindsay Morgan, GAC Executive Committee; Jacquie Lyman was appointed GAC representative to ACREC in September 2007.

As of December 2007, the committee had two vacancies.

Liaisons to ACREC are: Esperanza Guajardo, Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP); Jerri Rodewald, Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC); Ruth-Aimee Belonni-Rosario, Racial Ethnic Young Women Together (REYWT).

1. Assigned Functions

The Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) works to fulfill its General Assembly mandate to provide advocacy and monitoring on issues of concern to people of color in both church and society. The committee evaluates social trends in church and society, and provides advice and counsel to the General Assembly (GA) and the General Assembly Council (GAC). The committee addresses issues, including civil rights, racial justice, environmental justice, economic justice, public education, law enforcement, health care, employment, and housing, as they impact communities of color. The committee also monitors the implementation of programs and policies approved by the church that impact the participation and quality of life for people of color within the church. The committee works in close cooperation with other agencies and entities within the church, including the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) and the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP), to fulfill its responsibilities. The ACREC's assigned functions, as stated in the GAC Manual of Operations include:

- a. Prepare policy statements, resolutions, recommendations, reports, and advice and counsel memoranda on racial ethnic concerns to the General Assembly at the request of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, or on its own initiative.
- b. Advise the General Assembly Council on matters of racial ethnic concerns including statements concerning pressing issues that the council may wish to consider between meetings of the General Assembly.
- c. Provide advice and counsel to the General Assembly and its committees on overtures, commissioners' resolutions, reports, and actions before the General Assembly that impact issues of racial ethnic concern.
- d. Assist the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy in maintaining an up-to-date and accurate compilation of General Assembly policy on racial ethnic concerns and provide information to the church as requested.
- e. Provide the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council with information as they fulfill their responsibilities to communicate and interpret General Assembly policies on racial ethnic concerns.
- f. Monitor the implementation of racial justice policies and programs relative to racial ethnic concerns.
- g. Through advocacy maintain a strong prophetic witness to the church and for the church on existing and emerging issues of racial ethnic concern.

The work of the Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns (ACREC) is coordinated through the Office of the General Assembly Council by the Deputy Executive Director of the General Assembly Council. The committee has direct access to the General Assembly and its chair has corresponding member status with the General Assembly Council and with the General Assembly.

2. Accomplishments

a. The committee held four regularly scheduled meetings in 2006: January 19–22, in Louisville, Kentucky, a joint meeting with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns; March 30–April 1 in Louisville, Kentucky, a joint meeting with the National Cross Caucus; August 10–13 in Louisville; and November 16–19 at McCormick Seminary, Chicago, Illinois. Officers elected in January: chair—Adel Malek; vice chair—Evelyn Kelly; secretary—Judith Armour Pingel; Resource & Referral Subcommittee chair—Eugene Turner; and Study & Comment Subcommittee Chair—John Spangler.

b. The ACREC provided advice and counsel to the 217th General Assembly (2006), in accordance with its charter. The committee submitted two resolutions—one in support of the Fair Food Campaign, and a Joint Resolution on the Women of Color Consultation, with the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC). Both resolutions were approved by the assembly. The committee also submitted its first report on the Climate for Change assessment and consultation with the executives of the six corporate entities related to the General Assembly.

c. In the January 2006 meeting, ACREC continued its education to understand cultural proficiency with DeBorah Gilbert White, associate for Cultural Proficiency (GAC); and immigration issues with Julia Thorne, manager for Immigration Issues (OGA). In joint session with ACWC, the committees met with Joseph Small to discuss concerns related to the Study Guide on the Belhar Confession and the Trinity Paper. The committees also identified areas of common interest and concern.

The March 2006 meeting featured a forum with the National Korean Presbyterian Council on Overture 35, which proposed a nongeographic Korean synod. In joint session with the National Cross Caucus, the two groups discussed strategies to strengthen their relationships and possible responses to the disaster in New Orleans and the Gulf coast following Hurricane Katrina.

In August 2006, in accordance with Manual of Operations revisions to accommodate the new General Assembly biennial schedule, the committee elected officers: chair—Adel Malek; vice chair—Eugene Turner; secretary—Judith Armour Pingel; Resource and Referral Subcommittee chair—Eugene Turner; and Study and Comment Sub-committee chair—John Spangler. The committee held annual consultations with the executive director of Project Equality, Carlos Salazar, and with the director of the Washington Office, PC(USA), Elenora Giddings-Ivory; and heard a report on the GAC downsizing and reorganization. The committee voted to send correspondence to Stated Clerk Clifton Kirkpatrick, Moderator Joan Gray, and Executive Director Linda Valentine concerning ongoing issues in Israel/Palestine.

The November 2006 meeting, held at McCormick Seminary, featured a forum with representatives of the Committee on Theological Education, OGA and GAC staff, and representatives of the McCormick community, concerning issues related to theological education, candidacy, call, and ordination of people of color.

d. The committee held three regularly scheduled meetings in 2007: February 15–17 in Louisville, Kentucky; July 8–11 in Los Angeles, California; and November 16–19 in Merida, Mexico, in the Yucatan.

At the February 2007 meeting, ACREC hosted a forum exploring the church's response to the disaster in New Orleans and the Gulf Coast, and the continuing challenges facing the region. Participants included Jean Marie Peacock (former Vice Moderator, 216th General Assembly (2004)), representing the Presbytery of South Louisiana; Susan Ryan, director of Presbyterian Disaster Assistance (PDA); and John Robinson, regional PDA coordinator. Discussion following the forum provided framework for a joint resolution with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) to the 218th General Assembly (2008). The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC), meeting concurrently, also attended the forum, along with several other GAC staff. In preparation for the Fall meeting in Merida, the committee watched a DVD entitled Letters from the Other Side, which highlighted the plight of women left in Mexico when husbands and children migrate to the U.S.

In July 2007, the committee heard reports from the Climate for Change working group, the Joint Women of Color Consultation task force, and a report from ACSWP outlining their proposal for a joint resolution on Katrina. The ACREC agreed to send an action to the 218th General Assembly (2008) in response to the Supreme Court's decision striking down voluntary desegregation plans in Louisville and Seattle school districts.

The Fall 2007 meeting, a joint meeting with ACWC, was held in Merida, Mexico, which is located in the Yucatan. The primary purpose for this meeting was to support ACREC's ongoing education and information gathering on immigration issues, to understand the factors that push migration, the influence of globalization on the local economy, social environment, and culture. The committees met with seminary faculty and students, visited a Mayan community where they were welcomed by the local Presbyterian congregation, and heard from representatives of Indemaya, a state agency working to improve economic conditions for Mayan communities and protect indigenous Mayan culture. The committees also toured Chichen Itza and heard from representatives of grassroots organizations working on migration issues in the region. As an outcome of this meeting, ACREC voted to work with MRTI to address exorbitant remittance fees, specifically looking at the practices of Western Union.

e. Ecumenical Multicultural Conference—July 11–15, 2007, Los Angeles, California

(1) The ACREC held a pre-conference forum on July 11, 2007. The purpose was to inform participants about the role of the advocacy committee, to hear about the recent work of ACREC, and to share ideas/concerns in dialogue about key issues impacting people of color in the PC(USA). Facilitators were Virstan Choy, interim director of the Center for Asian American Ministries and visiting professor of ministry, McCormick Theological Seminary; and Barbara Campbell Davis, executive presbyter and stated clerk of the Presbytery of New Hope.

(2) The ACREC also hosted a workshop at the conference entitled "Race and Religious Pluralism: New Challenges for the 21st Century." This workshop examined some of the dynamics that are changing the cultural landscape of our society, explored the challenges of living in diversity, and offered modes for encouraging cross-cultural, cross-racial dialogue. This workshop was facilitated by Michael Livingston, executive director, International Council of Community Churches; president, National Council of Churches in the USA; and member of the Presbytery of New Brunswick.

f. The ACREC will be reviewed at the 218th General Assembly (2008). The following members and former members were appointed as the self-study team: Judith Armour Pingel, chair; Evelyn Kelly; Fahed Abu Akel; John Spangler; Mauricio Chacon; and Noushin Framke. The team met July 11, 2007, for planning purposes.

g. The ACREC is sending the following new items of business to the 218th General Assembly (2008):

- (1) Resolution to Create a Committee to Study the Belhar Confession;
- (2) Struck Down, But Not Destroyed: From Hurricane Katrina to a More Equitable Future—joint resolution with ACSWP;
- (3) 2008 Creating a Climate for Change, report and recommendations;
- (4) Public Education for the 21st Century Resolution.

3. The ACREC took the opportunity in its final meeting with Clifton Kirkpatrick, Stated Clerk of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), on January 23, 2008, to express its gratitude for his faithful service and his support for the work of the advocacy committees:

Cliff, how does one thank the “pope”?

I am speaking for the committees gathered here, and ACREC in particular. This is a wonderful opportunity for all of us to express thanks to you, Cliff, for having served the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) well.

We thank you for your generous spirit, your availability to these committees that carry a heavy duty in helping the PC(USA) live out its commitment to justice for all people.

Cliff, you have shown in your ministry as Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, that you care for the church and its ministry of justice. You are a loving person and it shows in your ministry.

Your influence is both national and international. You are well known throughout the ecumenical church world, and greatly appreciated by the way you have related to the church in the global community.

Your welcoming of all God’s people is admirable.

As part of your staff, we became friends and colleagues, and it was a joy and a privilege.

It is a great honor to present this small gift to you on behalf of ACREC expressing appreciation to you for the support you have given to the advocacy ministry of ACREC. [Comments prepared by Eugene Turner.]

Item 15-01

[The assembly approved Item 15-01. See p. 11.]

On Urging the Board of Pensions to Expand the Definition of Medical Necessity to Include Habilitative Services for Children with Congenital Developmental Disabilities—From the Presbytery of Central Nebraska.

The Presbytery of Central Nebraska overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to do the following:

1. Urge the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to expand the current definition of Medical Necessity as found in Article XIII, Section 13.1 (k) of the benefits plan to include habilitative services such as occupational therapy, speech therapy, and physical therapy, which seek to promote healthy growth and improve function for children with congenital developmental disabilities such as Down’s syndrome and autism and report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

2. Direct the PC(USA) office of Social Welfare Organizations, which encompasses the disability portfolio, Presbyterians for Disability Concerns, and the PC(USA) Disability Consultants to be in consultation with the Board of Pensions throughout this review.

Rationale

Health entails well-being in all facets of life, and all children, including children with intellectual or congenital developmental disabilities, have a right to achieve and maintain their full level of health. All children are entitled to nondiscriminatory, appropriate, cost-effective, informed, and sufficient health services and supports to achieve full levels of well-being. The services of health professionals, in every discipline and specialty (including mental health, physical and occupational therapists; speech-language pathologists; behavior analysts; assistive technologists), should be available to all children.<sup>i</sup>

The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) currently excludes children with congenital developmental disabilities such as Down’s syndrome from accessing the medically prescribed occupational, physical and speech therapies crucial to support healthy growth and development and to ameliorate the effects of a disabling condition. These therapies are available to children who have suffered illness, accident, or injury and lost skills, but children who have not yet developed skills can benefit from these same therapies as well. There is no moral, ethical, or medical justification for denying one group of children treatment. In fact, providing children with congenital developmental disabilities with therapeutic services provides cost savings to society.<sup>ii</sup>

This overture began in response to the case of a seven-year-old child, Martha, who has Down’s syndrome. The Board of Pensions denied Martha coverage for her prescribed occupational and physical therapy because the treatments are not “restorative” (rehabilitative). The Board of Pensions acknowledged the benefits of the therapies in relation to her development. However, because the treatment was not intended to restore lost functioning due to accident, illness, or injury but was intended to address needs related to Martha’s general physical condition and support developmental milestones the Board of Pensions defined the therapies as not medically necessary and labeled them educational rather than medical. The Board of Pensions covered these therapies for Martha for over two years, repeatedly stating that they did meet the guidelines for medical necessity but abruptly ceased coverage because the intent of the treatment was habilitative as opposed to rehabilitative.

Over the course of trying to understand the Board of Pensions’ reasoning, it was discovered that many parents of children with developmental disabilities faced the same frustration and sense of discrimination in insurance coverage. It also became clear that corporations and states were changing their policies and laws to remove the discriminations against children with developmental disabilities.

In 2005, the American Academy of Pediatrics published a policy statement titled Model Contractual Language for Medical Necessity for Children.<sup>iii</sup> The policy states that health insurers should define medical necessity to include interventions that “assist in achieving, maintaining, or restoring health and functional capabilities without discrimination to the nature of a congenital/development anomaly.” The states of Indiana and Maryland and the District of Columbia have recently passed legislation requiring health insurance companies to provide such habilitative services to children with disabilities. The state of Maryland estimates that the cost of these therapies is small, less than 0.1 percent of the average annual premium.<sup>iv</sup> Legislation to mandate that private insurance companies must cover habilitative services for children with developmental disabilities has been introduced in Illinois and Virginia. A study paper on the Virginia legislation notes that in a survey of parents whose children are not receiving these medically prescribed therapies, the two most common reasons are high cost and lack of insurance coverage. The paper goes on to say in Virginia as many as 28,000 children could be benefit from the proposed mandate.<sup>v</sup>

15 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BOARD OF PENSIONS,
PRESBYTERIAN FOUNDATION, AND PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING

Home Depot and Microsoft are two corporate citizens that have recently rewritten their health insurance policies to cover habilitative therapies for children with neurological or genetic disabilities including autism, Down's syndrome, and cerebral palsy.<sup>vi</sup>

Jesus said, "Let the children come unto me and forbid them not." The current definition of medical necessity in the benefits plan of the Board of Pensions is a barrier to children with congenital developmental disabilities accessing the same medical care that is available to others within the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The current definition of medical necessity and the limit it poses on access to habilitative services for children is not consistent with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)'s vision of empowering all children to participate fully in the life and ministry of the church. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is currently celebrating the Decade of the Child that calls the church to focus on the health and well-being of God's gift—children.

The 217th General Assembly (2006) approved the policy paper titled "Living into the Body of Christ: Toward Full Inclusion of People with Disabilities."<sup>vii</sup> This policy states that "We envision a church in which every child of God [may] realize his/her full potential ..." (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 920). The policy calls the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) "to work for justice with persons who have disabilities, both within the church itself and the wider social order" (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 919). It also envisions "the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A) as a leader in promoting and manifesting this vision of a just world, serving with and empowering people with disabilities to engage in this ongoing work" (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 920).

The policy urges the Board of Pensions to be "in partnership with employing organizations and national and local church leadership in coordinating the scope of the Medical Plan and the Assistance Program in order to offer appropriate care for all Plan members" (Minutes, 2006, Part I, p. 923). The rationale for the policy notes that there have been great advances in the field of medicine and therapeutic treatment that are improving the quality of life for people with disabilities, enabling them to live longer, fuller lives. Providing insurance coverage that supports children in achieving or restoring health and functional capabilities without discrimination to the nature of a congenital/developmental anomaly is a concrete step toward realizing the commitment made by the 217th General Assembly (2006) to be the Body of Christ in which every child of God may realize his or her full potential.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-01—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 15-01, from the Presbytery of Central Nebraska, with concurrences from the Presbytery of New Covenant, Presbytery of the Twin Cities Area, Presbytery of Mid-Kentucky, and Presbytery of Denver, overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to urge the Board of Pensions, in consultation with the disability-related units of the PC(USA), to expand the definition of “medical necessity” to cover therapies that improve growth and function for children with congenital development disabilities. In addition, Item 15-01 requests that the Board of Pension report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 15-01 be approved.

Rationale

The ACSWP concurs with the Rationale supporting this overture. In addition, the following points support the approval of the overture:

1. General Assemblies have defined health in an inclusive manner that extends beyond care for specific physical harms and rehabilitation. For example,

a. “Comprehensive health care for all persons includes at least these elements: aid in growth and development, nutrition, prevention of illness, periodic diagnostic evaluation, treatment of disease, extended and home nursing care, rehabilitation, long-term care for chronic disorders, and the appropriate social and economic provisions to make these feasible in the life of a person and his household . . .” (1971 Statement—Minutes, UPCUSA, 1971, Part I, pp. 585–90).

b. “The value of life gives persons the derivative right to acquire the therapy or care [needed] that they might enjoy the quality of life health makes possible. . . .” (1976 Statement—Minutes, PCUS, 1976, Part I, pp. 203–7)

2. The 213th General Assembly (2001) recognized the need to assure that the Board of Pensions treat care related to mental disabilities similarly to care related to physical needs: That assembly “urge[d] the Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to evaluate, on an annual basis, issues of parity between coverage for mental health and medical and surgical benefits under plans offered by the Board of Pensions and include their evaluation in their annual reports to future General Assemblies” (2001 Statement—Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 419–21).

3. Coverage decisions by the Board of Pensions of the PC(USA) should not be based solely on the standards of secular organizations. In fact, as the overture’s rationale notes, the “industry standard” is mixed. Within the church, however, decisions should rest on the church’s policies defining health and the Christian response to persons with disabilities. The policies of the PC(USA) noted above support this coverage.

4. To the extent that families faced with a pregnancy involving a congenital developmental disability take the additional costs involved in caring appropriately for the child into account, the knowledge that such care will be covered by insurance may support a family’s decision to continue the pregnancy. The 1992 policy of the PC(USA) on “Problem Pregnancies and Abortion” supports policies that would reduce the number of abortions by addressing economic issues (Minutes, 1992, Part I, paragraphs 27.120, 27.121). Providing coverage for habilitative therapies is consistent with these policies.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-01

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-01—From the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC).

Item 15-01 urges the Board of Pensions to expand the definition of medical necessity to include habilitative services for children with congenital developmental disabilities.

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns (ACWC) concurs with the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP)’s advice and counsel advising approval of this item.

Rationale

The Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns supports this overture. Parents of children with congenital developmental disabilities face additional complexities to care for these children and hold their family intact. When the parent is a single parent the struggle is often greater. Our systems need to support the value of life that we affirm. As a change in our insurance program this cost will be shared by all participants and therefore be minimal. As brothers and sisters in Christ we willingly share the cost as part of our supporting and sustaining families who serve with us. As ACSWP noted, this cost is covered in the public sphere by companies like Home Depot and Microsoft and is mandated by some states. The ACWC believes the PC(USA) should support a family's capacity to care for and welcome these gifted children from God.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 15-01

Comment on Item 15-01—From the Board of Pensions.

The Board of Pensions advises that Item 15-01 be referred to the Board of Pensions for study and report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

The Board of Pensions is currently studying the coverage issues that relate to children with congenital problems obvious at birth (e.g. neural tube defects, cerebral palsy), genetic problems (which may or may not be obvious at birth), and developmental problems (e.g. those problems with many potential causes picked up during early life care by screening).

Item 15-02

[The assembly approved Item 15-02 as amended. See p. 11.]

On Directing the Board of Pensions to Provide a Relief of Conscience Plan Report Annually—From the Presbytery of Pittsburgh.

The Presbytery of Pittsburgh overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the Board of Pensions (BOP) to do the following:

1. Provide annually a Relief of Conscience Plan Report, and to confirm annually with particular churches their participation in the Relief of Conscience Plan.

2. Beginning no later than June 2009, provide an annual Relief of Conscience Plan Report that includes a. specific details of the Relief Of Conscience (ROC) plan;

b. an explanation of the process for participation in the ROC plan;

c. an accounting of the total number of churches participating in the ROC plan in the previous calendar year;

d. an accounting of the total dollar figure ~~[spent on abortion procedures in the previous calendar year]~~ [paid under the relief of conscience program];

e. an accounting of the total dollar figure ~~[placed into funds to cover medical costs for adopted newborns in previous calendar year;]~~ [dispensed by the Board of Pensions for adoption programs.]

~~[f. an accounting of the total dollar figure distributed for medical costs of adopted newborns in the previous calendar year; and~~

~~[g. the specific process of application for plan members to request funds to cover medical costs of adopted newborns.]~~

3. ~~[Distribute this annual report to all PC(USA) congregations and Plan members, and post on the BOP web site.]~~ [Include this Relief of Conscience Plan report in the Annual Report of the Board of Pensions and make it available on the Board of Pensions' Web site.]

~~[4. Beginning no later than June 2009, send annual notification to each particular church participating in the ROC plan, confirming their inclusion in the Plan.~~

~~[5. Beginning with the 219th General Assembly (2010), include the Relief Of Conscience Plan Report with the Board of Pensions' annual report to the General Assembly.]”~~

Rationale

The current Relief of Conscience (ROC) Plan went into effect in 1998, without a process to assure implementation.

Many pastors and sessions are unaware of the plan and how to request the Relief of Conscience process of dues separation for their congregation. A single page in the Benefits Handbook gives little detail about the plan (see appendix below).

Remembering Paul's admonition in matters of conscience to “Do not seek your own advantage, but that of the other” (1 Cor 10:24), we ought to be more thorough and more consistent in our communication on the ROC plan. There are always new pastors and new sessions, unaware of the ROC plan. It is questionable whether a single reference in the handbook gives enough visibility to the availability of ROC dues separation.

There is no process established across presbyteries to provide consistency in the handling of session resolutions regarding ROC. Because this is a matter of deeply held conviction for pastors and congregations requesting the Relief of Conscience process, churches need to receive communication from the Board of Pensions acknowledging their request has been received and that indeed their dues are not being used to cover abortions.

Churches participating in the ROC plan are seeking evidence of the Plan's implementation, and contact with the BOP provides unclear information. (For example, a member of a church participating in the plan had several phone conversations with the BOP, seeking simple bookkeeping statistics of the plan for session discussions. No information was asked that would have breached any confidences, as names or localities were not requested. The BOP staff stated that specific financial statistics of abortion coverage are not even known, and are not directly related to the adoption funds.)

APPENDIX

Dues separation for Relief of Conscience employing organizations

The Board of Pensions distinguishes between employing organizations that have not sought relief and those certified by their presbyteries of jurisdiction to be Relief of Conscience employing organizations. Through the Relief of Conscience process, the Board of Pensions makes sure dues contributed by employing organizations that object to any medical coverage for abortion-related expenses will never be used to reimburse such expenses.

Relief of Conscience

The Board of Pensions has a process that recognizes differing views among participating employing organizations about the appropriate response to problem pregnancies. The intent is to make sure dues contributed by employing organizations that object to any medical coverage for abortion-related expenses will never be used to reimburse such expenses.

At the same time, reflecting the church's affirmation of each woman's right to make a moral choice when confronted by a problem pregnancy, the Medical Plan provides coverage for abortion-related services, funded by the dues of those employing organizations that have not requested relief.

Established in 1992 and revised in 1998, the Relief of Conscience process separates the incoming dues stream between employing organizations that have not sought relief and those certified by their presbyteries of jurisdiction to be Relief of Conscience employing organizations. Medical claims for abortion procedures are paid from the non-Relief of Conscience dues stream. A dollar amount equal to the cost of abortion claims from the prior year is set aside from the Relief of Conscience dues stream and helps to fund the Board of Pensions' Adoption Assistance Grant program. Then, the dues streams are merged and all other medical claims and costs are paid from the merged dues stream.

The presbytery of jurisdiction grants Relief of Conscience to the employing organization and notifies the Board of Pensions to implement it. Sessions representing their congregations as employing organizations and minister members of presbyteries who are self-paying Benefits Plan members may seek Relief of Conscience. Relief of Conscience is granted to the organization that pays the dues.

The action continues for any succeeding incumbent of the church granted Relief of Conscience. If the pastor of a Relief of Conscience church changes service, the Relief of Conscience status does not follow to the new position.

The full coverage protection of the Medical Plan is available to all Plan members whether or not the church of service is a Relief of Conscience church.

For more information, please call the Board of Pensions.

ACSWP ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-02—From the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP).

Item 15-02, from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh, overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the Board of Pensions to provide a report explaining the process for participating in the Relief of Conscience Plan, an annual confirmation to entities participating in the ROC Plan, and an account of expenditures related to abortion procedures and medical costs for adopted newborns.

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that the overture be disapproved.

Rationale

The Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy (ACSWP) advises that Item 15-02 be disapproved for the following reasons:

1. The overture misidentifies the judicatory responsible for the relief of conscience (ROC) plan.

a. Presbyteries grant relief of conscience to sessions representing their congregations as employing organizations and to minister members of presbyteries who are self-paying Benefits Plan members.

b. It is the responsibility of presbyteries to develop an appropriate process (if one does not exist) and communicate this process to each session and minister member in the presbytery, including a process of annual notification to ROC churches and members, if desired.

c. As the jurisdictions that grant relief of conscience, it is the responsibility of presbyteries to send the names of those participating in the ROC plan to the Board of Pensions. Presbyteries may choose to do this annually.

2. The overture requests information that, if provided, may violate members' right to privacy.

To protect members' privacy, the Board of Pensions does not release the number of nor the dollar amount spent on particular types of medical procedures. Particularly where the number of claims for a procedure is relatively small, such information could conceivably be used to attribute a procedure to a specific person.

3. Singling out abortion procedures' costs for reporting, or in other ways, implies a negative censure incompatible with the policy of the PC(USA) which states:

Problem pregnancies are the result of, and influenced by, so many complicated and insolvable circumstances that we have neither the wisdom nor the authority to address or decide each situation" (Minutes, 2002, Part I, paragraph 27.090, Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion).

We affirm the ability and responsibility of women guided by the Scriptures and the Holy Spirit, to make good moral choices in regard to problem pregnancies" (Minutes, 2002, Part I, paragraph 27.091, Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion).

4. The Board of Pensions' Adoption Assistance Program, financed through gifts, legacies, endowments, and half the Christmas Joy Offering, as well as the ROC set-aside (that is equal to the cost of abortion claims), provides additional monies for costs incurred in adoption. This program supports the church's policies to encourage adoption and to support alternatives to abortion for women and families facing problem pregnancies.

ACWC ADVICE AND COUNSEL ON ITEM 15-02

Advice and Counsel on Item 15-02—From the Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC).

Item 15-02 asks the 218th General Assembly (2008) to direct the Board of Pensions (BOP) to provide a Relief of Conscience Plan Report every year and annually confirm the participation of particular churches in the Plan. By passing this overture, the General Assembly would also instruct the Board of Pensions about data to be included in the Relief of Conscience Plan Report, distribution and publicity of the Report, notification of churches participating in the Plan, and inclusion of the Report with the Board of Pensions' annual report to the General Assembly.

The Advocacy Committee for Women's Concerns (ACWC) advises that this item be disapproved.

Rationale

Since 1998, PC(USA) has had a Relief of Conscience Plan. It is the appropriate responsibility of the presbyteries to develop a process that provides Relief of Conscience for churches that request it. Requests are sent from the presbyteries to the Board of Pensions.

Recommendation 2.d. directs the Board of Pensions to monitor and release data on particular medical procedures, specifically abortion, in order to report a dollar figure expended. Medical procedures are reported to the board by a code and are not reported in a way that can be conclusively determined if a pregnancy termination occurred. Additionally, Board of Pensions members trust the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to respect their privacy under the law. The BOP cannot monitor the incidence of particular medical procedures.

Abortion is a legal procedure in the United States, and is an available therapy for physicians and their patients to pursue. As an insurer, the board pays for services rendered. Presbyterian policy states “the considered decision of a woman to terminate a pregnancy can be a morally acceptable, though certainly not the only or required, decision” (Special Committee on Problem Pregnancy and Abortion, 204th General Assembly (1992) Minutes, 1992, Part I, paragraph 27.093). Women who are members of the Board of Pensions are entitled to make reproductive decisions with full confidence that health care providers and the Board of Pensions protect their privacy.

Where does this line of inquiry end? There are other medical procedures about which Presbyterians may have ethical concerns (involving reproductive technologies, plastic surgeries, erectile dysfunction, gastrointestinal procedures), but as long as medical treatments are within the law, members have a right to avail themselves of these procedures with an assumption of complete privacy. One person’s right to privacy should not be at risk to satisfy another’s relief of conscience. In order to protect complete anonymity, financial statistics on abortion coverage should not be maintained or released by the Board of Pensions.

BOP COMMENT ON ITEM 15-02

Comment on Item 15-02—From the Board of Pensions.

The Board of Pensions advises that the General Assembly disapprove Item 15-02.

Development and Implementation of Relief of Conscience

The General Assembly and the Board of Pensions (BOP) worked for years to establish an effective program to relieve the conscience of those dues-paying organizations that objected to the potential use of their dues to pay for medical costs that may be related to abortion procedures. The initial Relief of Conscience process was adopted in response to an overture in 1991. Since that time, the program was reviewed and revised through subsequent General Assembly actions until its current form was adopted in 1998. The BOP has always sought out the opinions and concerns of members representative of the broad spectrum of opinions on reproductive rights of women and moral opposition to abortion procedures present in the PC(USA).

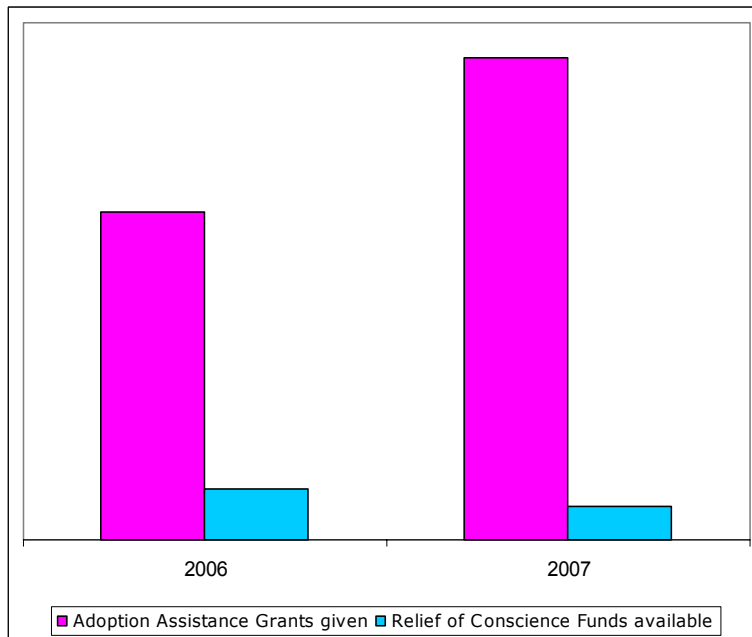

Based on those conversations and approved by General Assembly, the Relief of Conscience (ROC) administrative process allows a church<sup>1</sup> to take a position of conscience that it objects to the possibility that its Medical Plan dues may provide reimbursement for an abortion procedure and requests that its presbytery grant it ROC status. Once the presbytery grants that ROC status and notifies the BOP, the church is placed on the ROC roll. The Medical Plan dues of ROC status members are not used to pay abortion-related procedures; instead a proportionate amount of the ROC dues are diverted into an assistance program that provides adoption expense grants.

As shown on the following slide, incoming medical dues are separated into two streams. Those from ROC churches are carefully tracked to ensure that they are insulated from paying abortion claims.

Abortion claims are paid exclusively from the non-ROC stream and all other medical claims are then paid from the combined remainder.

As also demonstrated on the slide above, a dollar amount equal to the prior years' abortion claims is set aside as partial funding for the Adoption Assistance Grant program. More information about those grants is available here. This dollar amount provides a very small portion of the funding for the Adoption Assistance Grants, as shown below:

Figures and Statistics

As the administrator of the Medical Plan, the BOP does not publish statistics related to the number or cost of abortion related procedures covered under the Medical Plan. The BOP only uses Medical Plan information for the payment of claims and related health plan administration operations. This is a matter of policy and is based on a concern for the privacy of our Benefits Plan members.

Whose Conscience?

The BOP administers the Medical Plan uniformly based on the fact that the denomination, while expressing reservations about some abortion decisions that may be made, affirms the “ability and responsibility of a woman to make good moral choices” (Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 369). Plan members make their own personal choices in the face of a problem pregnancy, taking into account the church’s stance, their own conscience, their personal circumstances and health status, and the available medical options. Thus, the full benefits of the Medical Plan are available to all Plan members, including those serving at churches with ROC status.

Just as this administrative process insulates a ROC church from being forced to pay for an abortion, no Plan member’s medical treatment decisions are being restricted by the ROC status of their employer. Each church has the right to have its dues treated according to its conscience, and each Plan member has the right to seek medical care according to her/his conscience.

Final General Comments on Relief of Conscience

The 204th General Assembly (1992) that approved the Report of the Special Committee on Problem Pregnancies and Abortion, also considered a report from the BOP’s Committee on Conscience. In approving their report, the General Assembly commented:

Relief of Conscience is most appropriately seen in the ethical context of life together as a community of God’s people, rather than as a debate about the ethics of a particular issue like abortion. The overriding concern of relief of conscience issues has to do with the unity of Christ’s church and living out that unity in spite of different perceptions about what God, who alone is Lord of the conscience, would lead us to do or believe through our interpretation of Scripture. The ethics of life together are ignored, if not abused, when either of these conditions prevail:

- a. Those seeking relief of conscience more highly value the triumph of their particular position than they value finding a way by which they may live together peaceably with those from whom they seek to differentiate their belief;
- b. Those who hold the prevailing view of the community more highly value the complete triumph of their position than they value allowing those seeking relief of conscience to find a way to remain in community with them.

The Benefits Plan of the Board of Pensions is a highly visible and tangible expression of our commitment to life together as God’s people in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). It is a plan for the whole church, not a plan for a collective of individuals. [Minutes, 1992, Part I, p. 96–97].

The BOP values all efforts that seek to allow Presbyterians of every stripe to live and work in community.

Specific Provisions of Item 15-02

The overture requests several different categories of information be made available and that the BOP make specific communications related to the Relief of Conscience administrative process.

The first category of information, requested in Recommendations 2.a., 2.b., 2.f., and 2.g., is information already available.

- In the case of Recommendations 2.a. and 2.b., this information is available in the BOP Benefits Administration Handbook (an excerpt of which is the appendix to this overture). The complete description of the process for participation in the Relief of Conscience administrative process, found in the Administration Handbook is:

The presbytery of jurisdiction grants Relief of Conscience to the employing organization and notifies the Board of Pensions to implement it. Sessions representing their congregations as employing organizations and minister members of presbytery who are self-paying Benefits Plan members may seek Relief of Conscience. Relief of Conscience is granted to the organization that pays the dues.

It truly is no more complicated than that. A church or self-paying member requests Relief of Conscience from their presbytery. The presbytery grants it and notifies the BOP.

- On Recommendation 2.f., the total paid out to plan members in the form of Adoption Assistance Grants is already listed as part of the BOP reports to the General Assembly. It may be found in the agency summary.
- Considering Recommendation 2.g., there is no administrative paperwork required for application for an Adoption Assistance Grant. The complete process is described on the BOP Website as:

To be eligible for a grant, the parent must be an active member of the Benefits Plan and employed by a local church, governing body, General Assembly agency, or an organization under the control or operation of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) at the time of the adoption.

A grant of $3,000 for each adoption will be available when the Board of Pensions receives the final legal adoption decree. The program is effective for adoptions that occur on or after January 1, 2006.

The second category of information, requested in Recommendations 2.d. and 2.e., is information that may not be published. These points request the publication of information about medical claims. As mentioned in the background section above, the BOP does not publish statistics related to abortion or abortion-related procedures covered under the Medical Plan. This is a matter of policy and is based on a concern for the privacy of our Benefits Plan members.

Recommendation 2.c. requests an accounting of the number of churches that have been granted Relief of Conscience status. This figure is available upon request to the corporate secretary of the BOP. As of April 8, 2008, ROC status has been granted to 512 churches.

The fourth recommendation of the overture asks the BOP to directly verify the continuation of ROC status with each congregation each year. As noted above, the BOP does not grant relief, presbyteries do. As such, the BOP is willing to report to each presbytery's stated clerk the list of their constituent churches that the BOP has recorded as having been granted relief, but the presbytery should be the governing body that verifies a church's status.

As the overture requests a combination of information already available, information that may not be published, and information that should come from presbyteries not the BOP, the Board of Pensions advises it be disapproved.

Endnote

1. Throughout this comment, "church" should be understood to mean a particular church or another employing organization, such as a middle governing body, a validated mission organization or another dues-paying organization with a relationship to the PC(USA), whose staff are members of the Benefits Plan of the PC(USA).

Item 15-03

[The assembly approved Item 15-03. See p. 11.]

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) direct the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation to

- 1. continue its churchwide gifts program, as well as utilize the Foundation's subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, N.A., for the benefit of churches, church organizations, and individuals who wish to use the foregoing to make gifts as an expression of Christian faith and stewardship;
- 2. continue promoting appropriate investment in New Covenant Funds, a family of mutual funds organized with participation by the Foundation in July 1999, which are managed in a way that is consistent with the social-witness principles of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), through New Covenant Funds Distributors, Inc.; and
- 3. explore and initiate ways to enhance its expertise and capacity in support of planned and deferred giving (including wills emphasis) and to explore the services of New Covenant Trust Company, N.A. and New Covenant Funds, that will allow these programs and entities to be ever more effective contributors toward the fulfillment of the Great Commission for the Glory of God.

Rationale

Each year, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation trustees ask the General Assembly to endorse the Foundation's work in support of mission and ministry throughout the church. This unbroken series of affirmations allows the Foundation to confidently pursue its ministry among congregations, presbyteries, synods, related organizations, and individual Presbyterians. General Assembly validation of our vital work on behalf of mission and ministry is essential to our effectiveness throughout the church.

A total of 84.3 million dollars was made available through the Foundation for mission in 2007. Additionally, as a ministry of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), the Foundation's efforts to nurture the accumulated resources of Presbyterians to further the mission of the church, call us to grow the resources which support mission giving for the future. New gifts and accounts amounting to almost $ 40.9 million, including $ 13.8 million in life income plans, and $ 27.1 million in current gifts were received over the course of the year.

These striking results are a testament to the power of giving witnessed by the Foundation as it lives its goal of bringing people and mission together. Because of the generosity of faithful Presbyterians, over the past five years the Foundation has made available more than 381.1 million dollars for the work and mission of the church.

Offices and Fiscal Year

Section 1.01. Offices. The Fiduciary Corporation may have offices at such places within or without the United States of America as the Board of Trustees may from time to time appoint or the business of the Fiduciary Corporation requires.

Section 1.02. Fiscal Year. The fiscal year of the Fiduciary Corporation shall begin on the first day of ~~January~~ April in each year.

ARTICLE II
Trustees and Members

Section 2.01. Selection of Trustees; Members. The persons who shall be selected from time to time by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) ("General Assembly") to be the Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation, ("Fiduciary Corporation") shall by virtue of their offices, constitute the Board of Trustees of each Corporation listed in Annex A hereto (which Corporations so listed are referred to collectively in these bylaws as "Foundation Constituent Corporations") and, to the extent that these bylaws are applicable to Foundation Constituent Corporations incorporated under the laws of Illinois, shall also be the members of such Corporations; otherwise the Foundation Constituent Corporations shall have no members as such. The Fiduciary Corporation shall have no members, as such, except the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation, hereinafter sometimes referred to as the "Central Treasury Corporation", which shall be a member of the Fiduciary Corporation without vote.

Section 2.02. Number and Tenure of Trustees. The Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation shall be in such number, and for such terms, and may include such a number of ex officio trustees with voice and vote, who shall be elected in such a manner, as the General Assembly may determine. The permanent complement of the Board of Trustees shall consist of nineteen (19) members elected by the General Assembly for four-year terms plus the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council ex officio. An elected Trustee shall be eligible to serve two terms, for a total of eight (8) years. Beginning in 2006, no person may serve more than two terms, full or partial. The number of Trustees may be increased or decreased at any time, as determined by the General Assembly. Persons elected to the Board of Trustees shall begin their term of service immediately upon the adjournment of the General Assembly by which they are elected, and continue for one meeting following the election of their successors.

Section 2.03. Emeritus Trustees. Any individual elected as Emeritus Trustee prior to the date of this amendment shall continue to serve in such position with voice but not vote until the conclusion of that term, and will not be included in the total number of Trustees as set forth in Section 2.02 above. After the date of this amendment, no Emeritus Trustees shall be elected.

ARTICLE III
Board of Trustees

Section 3.01. Meetings of Trustees. Every meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation shall be, without further notice or action, a meeting of the Board of Trustees of each of the Foundation Constituent Corporations.

Section 3.02. Powers; Liability.

(a) The Board of Trustees shall have full power to conduct, manage, and direct the business and affairs of the Fiduciary Corporation; and all powers of the Fiduciary Corporation are hereby granted to and vested in the Board of Trustees.

(b) A Trustee of the Fiduciary Corporation shall not be personally liable for monetary damages as such for any action taken, or any failure to take any action, unless the Trustee has breached or failed to perform the duties of his or her office under 42 Pa.C.S. Section 8363 and the breach or failure to perform constitutes self-dealing, willful misconduct or recklessness. The provisions of this subsection shall not apply to the responsibility or liability of a Trustee pursuant to any criminal statute or the liability of a Trustee for the payment of taxes pursuant to local, state or Federal law.

Section 3.03. Organization. At every meeting of the Board of Trustees, the chair or, in the absence of the chair, the vice chair, or a chair chosen by a majority of the Trustees present, shall preside, and the secretary, or, in the absence of the secretary, an assistant secretary, or, in the absence of the secretary and the assistant secretaries, any person appointed by the chair of the meeting shall act as secretary.

Section 3.04. Place of Meeting. Meetings of the Board of Trustees may be held at such place within or without the United States of America as the Board of Trustees may from time to time appoint, or as may be designated in the notice of the meeting.

Section 3.05. Regular Meetings. Regular meetings of the Board of Trustees shall be held at such time and in such place as shall be designated from time to time by resolution of the Board of Trustees; and prior to the meeting designated as the annual meeting for organization, the chair and vice chair shall make recommendations for the appointment of members to committees and election of officers to be voted upon by the Board at the organizational meeting. ~~Members of the Advisory Leadership Team and officers~~ Officers may also be elected at any other meeting of the Trustees. At every regular meeting, the Trustees shall transact such business as may properly be brought before the meeting. Notice of regular meetings need not be given unless otherwise required by law or these bylaws.

Section 3.06. Special Meetings. Special meetings of the Board of Trustees shall be held whenever called by the chair of the Board of Trustees or by one-tenth or more of the Trustees by telephone or in writing at least 48 hours (in the case of notice by mail) before the time at which the meeting is to be held. Every such notice shall state the time and place of the meeting.

Section 3.07. Quorum, Manner of Acting and Adjournment. Twelve (12) Trustees shall be present at each meeting in order to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Every Trustee, whether elected by the General Assembly or ex-officio, shall be entitled to one vote. Except as otherwise specified in the Articles of Incorporation or these bylaws or provided by statute, the acts of a majority of the Trustees present at a meeting at which a quorum is present shall be the acts of the Board of Trustees. In the absence of a quorum, a majority of the Trustees present and voting may adjourn the meeting from time to time until a quorum is present. The Trustees shall act only as a Board of Trustees and individual Trustees shall have no power as such, except that any action which may be taken at a meeting of the Trustees may be taken without a meeting if a consent or consents in writing setting forth the action so taken shall be signed by all of the Trustees in office and shall be filed with the secretary of the Fiduciary Corporation.

Section 3.08. ~~Advisory Leadership Team and Other Committees.~~ The Board of Trustees shall, by resolution adopted by a majority of the Trustees in office, establish an Advisory Leadership Team of not less than five members, one of whom shall be the chair of the Board of Trustees, and may by like action establish an Executive Committee and may by like action establish one or more other committees, each such ~~other~~ committee to consist of two or more Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation. The Board may designate one or more Trustees as alternate members of any committee, who may replace any absent or disqualified member at any meeting of the committee. In the absence or disqualification of a member, and the alternate or alternates, if any, designated for such member, of any committee, the member or members thereof present at any meeting and not disqualified from voting, whether or not the member or members constitute a quorum, may unanimously appoint another Trustee to act at the meeting in the place of any such absent or disqualified member. Each committee of the Board shall serve at the pleasure of the Board.

The Board of Trustees shall function primarily as a body of the whole. In cases of emergency, when the full Board cannot be convened to act as a body of the whole, the Board chair, vice chair and the chairs of the Audit and Corporate Compliance,

Board Development and Human Resources, Investment, and Vision and Outreach Committees shall constitute an Executive Committee and ~~The Advisory Leadership Team~~ shall have and exercise all of the powers and authority of the Board of Trustees in the management of the business and affairs of the Fiduciary Corporation, except that the ~~Advisory Leadership Team~~ Executive Committee shall not have any power or authority as to the following:

- (1) The adoption, amendment or repeal of the bylaws, or the adoption of any amendment of articles or plan or merger, division or consolidation or the approving of the sale, lease or exchange of all or substantially all of the assets of the Fiduciary Corporation or of the dissolution of the Fiduciary Corporation.
- (2) The amendment or repeal of any resolutions of the Board.
- (3) Action on matters committed to a committee having responsibility for supervising or effecting securities transactions.

No committee of the Board of Trustees, other than the ~~Advisory Leadership Team~~ Executive Committee or a committee having responsibility for supervising or effecting securities transactions, shall, pursuant to resolution of the Board of Trustees or otherwise, exercise any of the powers or authority vested by these bylaws, the Nonprofit Corporation Law of 1988 or other applicable law in the Board of Trustees as such, but any other committee of the Board of Trustees may make recommendations to the Board of Trustees or ~~Advisory Leadership Team~~ Executive Committee or a committee having responsibility for supervising or effecting securities transactions concerning the exercise of such powers and authority.

A majority of the Trustees in office designated to a committee, or Trustees designated to replace them as provided in this section, shall be present at each meeting to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business and the acts of a majority of the Trustees in office designated to a committee or their replacements shall be the acts of the committee.

Each committee shall keep regular minutes of its proceedings in a book or books to be kept for that purpose and shall report such proceedings periodically to the Board of Trustees.

Sections 3.05, 3.06 and 3.07 shall be applicable to committees of the Board of Trustees.

Section 3.09. Compensation and Expenses. Except as permitted by the last sentence of Section 5.14 of these bylaws, no compensation of any kind shall be paid directly or indirectly by the Fiduciary Corporation to, and no loan or other extension of credit shall be made for the benefit of, any Trustee, as such, or as an officer or employee of the Fiduciary Corporation. Trustees may be reimbursed for expenses in a manner consistent with any applicable policies adopted by the General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (“General Assembly Council”) or the General Assembly.

Section 3.10. Personal Liability of Trustees. A Trustee of the Fiduciary Corporation shall not be personally liable, as such, for monetary damages for any action taken, or any failure to take any action, unless:

- (1) The Trustee has breached or failed to perform the duties of his or her office under ~~42 15 Pa.C.S. Section 8363~~ 5712; and
- (2) The breach or failure to perform constitutes self-dealing, willful misconduct or recklessness.

The provisions of this Section shall not apply to:

- (1) The responsibility or liability of a Trustee pursuant to any criminal statute; or
- (2) The liability of a Trustee for the payment of taxes pursuant to local, State or Federal law.

The provisions of this Section are cumulative of and shall be in addition to and independent of any and all:

- (1) Other limitations on the liabilities of Trustees of this Fiduciary Corporation, as such, whether such limitations arise under or are created by any statute, rule of law, provision of the articles of incorporation, agreement, vote of the General Assembly, disinterested Trustees or otherwise; and
- (2) Rights of indemnification existing under these bylaws or otherwise.

In any action, suit or proceeding involving the application of the provisions of this Section, the party or parties challenging the right of a Trustee to the benefits of this Section shall have the burden of proof.

Article IV
Notice - Waivers - Meetings

Section 4.01. Notice, What Constitutes. Whenever written notice is required to be given to any person under the provisions of the articles, these bylaws, the Nonprofit Corporation Law of 1988 or other applicable law, it may be given to such person, either personally or by sending a copy thereof by first class mail, postage prepaid, by telegram, charges prepaid, by overnight delivery, charges prepaid, by facsimile, with confirmation of delivery, or by electronic mail, to his or her address, fax number, or electronic mail address appearing on the books of the Fiduciary Corporation, or in the case of Trustees, supplied by the Trustee to the Fiduciary Corporation for the purpose of notice. If the notice is sent by mail, or by telegraph, or overnight delivery, it shall be deemed to have been given to the person entitled thereto when deposited in the United States mail or with a telegraph office or overnight delivery service for transmission to such person. If the notice is sent by facsimile, it shall be deemed to have been given when a written report of successful transmission has been received. If the notice is sent by electronic mail, it shall be deemed to have been given upon completion of transmission. A notice of meeting shall specify the place, day and hour of the meeting and any other information required by law or these bylaws.

When a meeting is adjourned, it shall not be necessary to give any notice of the adjourned meeting or of the business to be transacted at an adjourned meeting, other than by announcement at the meeting at which such adjournment is taken.

Section 4.02. Waiver of Notice. Whenever any written notice is required to be given under the provisions of the articles, these bylaws, the Nonprofit Corporation Law of 1972 or other applicable law, a waiver thereof in writing, signed by the person or persons entitled to such notice, whether before or after the time stated therein, shall be deemed equivalent to the giving of such notice. Except as otherwise required by this section and by Section 8.06 of these bylaws, neither the business to be transacted nor the purpose of a meeting need be specified in the waiver of notice of such meeting.

Attendance of a person at any meeting shall constitute a waiver of notice of such meeting, except where a person attends a meeting for the express purpose of objecting, at the beginning of the meeting, to the transaction of any business because the meeting was not lawfully called or convened.

Section 4.03. Modification of Proposal Contained in Notice. Whenever the language of a proposed resolution is included in a written notice of a meeting, the meeting considering the resolution may without further notice adopt it with such clarifying or other amendments as do not enlarge its original purpose.

Section 4.04. Conference Telephone Meetings. One or more persons may participate in a meeting of the Board or of a committee of the Board by means of conference telephone or similar communications equipment by means of which all persons participating in the meeting can hear each other. Participation in a meeting pursuant to this section shall constitute presence in person at such meeting.

ARTICLE V
Officers

Section 5.01. Number, Qualifications and Designation. The officers of the Fiduciary Corporation shall be a president, one or more vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, and such other officers as may be elected in accordance with the provisions of Section 5.03 of this Article. Any number of offices may be held by the same person. Officers may but need not be Trustees or members of the Fiduciary Corporation, and shall be natural persons of full age except that the treasurer or assistant treasurer may be a corporation. The Board of Trustees may elect from among the members of the Board a chair of the Board and a vice chair of the Board who shall be officers of the Fiduciary Corporation. ~~The chair of the Board shall be selected from among the members of the Advisory Leadership Team.~~

Section 5.02. Selection and Term of Office. The officers of the Fiduciary Corporation shall be selected and their terms of office shall be determined as follows:

- (1) The president, any vice presidents, the treasurer and other executive officers of the Fiduciary Corporation, except those elected by delegated authority pursuant to Section 5.03, shall be elected by the Board of Trustees ~~with the concurrence of the General Assembly Council~~. The president shall be elected for a term of four years, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly, and shall be eligible for reelection. Any vice presidents, the treasurer and other executive officers of the Fiduciary Corporation shall be elected for the term of their employment with the Fiduciary Corporation.
- (2) The office of secretary shall be comprised of a recording secretary and a corporate secretary. The recording secretary shall be the person for the time being in office as the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) with one or more associates in that office to serve as assistant recording secretary. The corporate secretary shall be the person for the time being in office as the General Counsel of the Fiduciary Corporation, with one or more associates in that office to serve as assistant corporate secretary.

(3) Subordinate officers elected by delegated authority pursuant to Section 5.03 shall be governed as to their duties and term of service by the terms and conditions of their election.

Section 5.03. Officers, Committees and Agents. The Board of Trustees may from time to time elect such officers and appoint such committees, employees or other agents as the business of the Fiduciary Corporation may require, including one or more assistant secretaries, and one or more assistant treasurers, each of whom shall hold office for such period, have such authority, and perform such duties as are provided in these bylaws, or as the Board of Trustees may from time to time determine. The Board of Trustees may delegate to any officer or committee of the Fiduciary Corporation the power to elect subordinate or other officers and to retain or appoint employees or other agents, or committees thereof, and to prescribe the authority and duties of such subordinate or other officers, committees, employees or other agents. ~~Administrative staff positions, including all officers specified in Section 5.02, may be authorized by the Fiduciary Corporation only with the concurrence of the General Assembly Council.~~

Section 5.04. Resignations. Any officer or agent may resign at any time by giving written notice to the Board of Trustees, or to the president or the secretary of the Fiduciary Corporation. Any such resignation shall take effect at the date of the receipt of such notice or at any later time specified therein and, unless otherwise specified therein, the acceptance of such resignation shall not be necessary to make it effective.

Section 5.05. Removal. Any elected or appointed officer, committee member, employee or other agent of the Fiduciary Corporation may be removed, either for or without cause, by the Board of Trustees or other authority which elected or appointed such officer, committee, employee or other agent whenever in the judgment of such authority the best interests of the Fiduciary Corporation will be served thereby, but such removal shall be without prejudice to the contract rights of any person so removed.

Section 5.06. Vacancies. A vacancy in any elective or appointive office because of death, resignation, removal, disqualification, or any other cause, shall be filled by the Board of Trustees (~~with, where appropriate, the concurrence of the General Assembly Council and,~~ in the case of the president, subject to confirmation by the General Assembly) or by the authority to which the power to fill such office has been delegated pursuant to Section 5.03 of this Article, as the case may be, and if the office is one for which a term is prescribed by or pursuant to these bylaws, shall be filled for the unexpired portion of the term. The refusal of the General Assembly to confirm the election of a president shall result in the creation of a vacancy in that office.

Section 5.07. General Powers. All officers of the Fiduciary Corporation, as between themselves and the Fiduciary Corporation, shall respectively have such authority and perform such duties in the management of the property and affairs of the Fiduciary Corporation as may be determined by resolutions or orders of the Board of Trustees, or, in the absence of controlling provisions in resolutions or orders of the Board of Trustees, as may be provided in these bylaws.

Section 5.08. The Chair and Vice Chair of the Board. The chair of the Board, or in his or her absence, the vice chair of the Board, shall preside at all meetings of the members of the Board of Trustees, and shall perform such other duties as may from time to time be requested of such officers by the Board of Trustees or the ~~Advisory Leadership Team~~ Executive Committee.

Section 5.09. The President. The president shall be the chief executive officer of the Fiduciary Corporation and shall have general supervision over the activities and operations of the Fiduciary Corporation, subject, however, to the control of the Board of Trustees. The president shall sign, execute and acknowledge, in the name of the Fiduciary Corporation, deeds, mortgages, bonds, contracts or other instruments, authorized by the Board of Trustees, except expressly delegated by the Board of Trustees, or by these bylaws, to some other officer or agent of the Fiduciary Corporation; and, in general, shall perform all duties incident to the office of president, and such other duties as from time to time may be assigned to the president by the Board of Trustees or the ~~Advisory Leadership Team~~ Executive Committee.

Section 5.10. The Vice Presidents. The vice presidents shall perform the duties of the president in the absence of the president and such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to them by the Board of Trustees, the ~~Advisory Leadership Team~~ Executive Committee, or the president.

Section 5.11. The Secretary. The recording secretary, or assistant recording secretary, shall attend all meetings of the Board of Trustees and shall record all the votes of the Trustees and the minutes of the meetings of the Board of Trustees in a book or books to be kept for that purpose. The corporate secretary, or an assistant corporate secretary, shall see that notices are given and records and reports are filed and shall be the custodian of the seal of the Fiduciary Corporation and see that it is affixed to all documents to be executed on behalf of the Fiduciary Corporation under its seal; and, in general, shall perform all duties incident to the office of corporate secretary, and such other duties relating thereto as may from time to time be assigned to the corporate secretary by the Board of Trustees, the ~~Advisory Leadership Team~~ Executive Committee, or the president.

Section 5.12. The Treasurer. The treasurer or an assistant treasurer shall have or provide for the custody of the funds or other property of the Fiduciary Corporation and shall keep a separate book of account of the same to his or her credit as treasurer; shall collect and receive or provide for the collection and receipt of moneys earned by or in any manner due to or received by the Fiduciary Corporation; shall deposit all funds in his or her custody as treasurer in such banks or other places of deposit (including the Central Treasury Corporation) as the Board of Trustees may from time to time designate; shall, whenever so required by the Board of Trustees, render an account showing his or her transactions as treasurer, and the financial condition of the Fiduciary Corporation; and, in general, shall discharge such other duties as may from time to time be assigned to the treasurer by the Board of Trustees, the ~~Advisory Leadership Team~~ Executive Committee, or the president.

Section 5.13. Officers' Bonds. Any officer shall give a bond for the faithful discharge of the duties of the office held by such officer in such sum, if any, and with such surety or sureties as the Board of Trustees shall require.

Section 5.14. Salaries. The salaries of the officers elected by the Board of Trustees shall be fixed from time to time or as may be designated by resolution of the Board. The salaries or other compensation of any other officers, employees and other agents shall be fixed from time to time by the authority to which the power to elect such officers or to retain or appoint such employees or other agents has been delegated pursuant to Section 5.03 of this Article. All salaries shall be consistent with any general salary structure established by the General Assembly Council. No full-time officer shall be prevented from receiving such salary or other compensation by reason of the fact that he or she is also a Trustee of the Fiduciary Corporation. See also Section 3.09 of these bylaws.

ARTICLE VI Indemnification of Trustees, Officers, Etc.

Section 6.01. Scope of Indemnification.

(a) The Fiduciary Corporation shall indemnify an indemnified representative against any liability incurred in connection with any proceeding in which the indemnified representative may be involved as a party or otherwise, by reason of the fact that such person is or was serving in an indemnified capacity, including without limitation any liability resulting from any actual or alleged breach or neglect of duty, error, misstatement or misleading statement, negligence, gross negligence or act giving rise to strict or products liability, except:

(1) where such indemnification is expressly prohibited by applicable law;

(2) where the conduct of the indemnified representative has been finally determined pursuant to Section 6.06(d) or otherwise to constitute willful misconduct or recklessness within the meaning of 42 Pa.CS Section 8365(b) or any superseding provision of law sufficient in the circumstances to bar indemnification against liabilities arising from the conduct;

(3) to the extent the liability is finally determined pursuant to Section 6.06(d) or otherwise to be based upon or attributable to the indemnified representative gaining any personal pecuniary profit to which such indemnified representative was not legally entitled; or

(4) to the extent such indemnification has been finally determined in a final adjudication pursuant to Section 6.06(d) to be otherwise unlawful.

(b) If an indemnified representative is entitled to indemnification in respect of a portion, but not all, of any liabilities to which such person may be subject, the Fiduciary Corporation shall indemnify such indemnified representative to the maximum extent for such portion of the liabilities.

(c) The termination of a proceeding by judgment, order, settlement, conviction or upon a plea of nolo contendere or its equivalent shall not, of itself, create a presumption that the indemnified representative is not entitled to indemnification.

(d) For purposes of this Article:

(1) "indemnified capacity" means any and all past, present and future service by an indemnified representative in one or more capacities as a Trustee, officer, employee or agent of the Fiduciary Corporation or a Foundation Constituent

15 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BOARD OF PENSIONS,
PRESBYTERIAN FOUNDATION, AND PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING

Corporation, or, at the request of the Fiduciary Corporation, as a director, officer, employee, agent, fiduciary or trustee of another Fiduciary Corporation, partnership, joint venture, trust, employee benefit plan or other entity or enterprise;

(2) “indemnified representative” means any and all Trustees, officers and employees of the Fiduciary Corporation, and any other person designated as an indemnified representative by the Board of Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation (which may, but need not, include any person serving, at the request of the Fiduciary Corporation, as a director, officer, employee, agent, fiduciary or trustee of another Corporation, partnership, joint venture, trust, employee benefit plan or other entity or enterprise);

(3) “liability” means any damage, judgment, amount paid in settlement, fine, penalty, punitive damages, excise tax assessed with respect to an employee benefit plan, or cost or expense of any nature (including, without limitation, attorneys’ fees and disbursements); and

(4) “proceeding” means any threatened, pending or completed action, suit, appeal or other proceeding of any nature, whether civil, criminal, administrative or investigative, whether formal or informal, and whether brought by or in the right of the Fiduciary Corporation, a class of its security holders, if any, or otherwise.

Section 6.02. Proceedings Initiated by Indemnified Representative. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Article, the Fiduciary Corporation shall not indemnify under this Article an indemnified representative for any liability incurred in a proceeding initiated (which shall not be deemed to include counter-claims or affirmative defenses) or participated in as an intervenor or amicus curiae by the person seeking indemnification unless such initiation of or participation in the proceeding is authorized, either before or after its commencement, by the affirmative vote of a majority of a quorum of the Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation. This section does not apply to reimbursement of expenses incurred in successfully prosecuting or defending an arbitration under Section 6.06(d) or otherwise successfully prosecuting or defending the rights of an indemnified representative granted by or pursuant to this Article.

Section 6.03. Advancing Expenses. The Fiduciary Corporation shall pay the expenses (including attorneys’ fees and disbursements) incurred in good faith by a Trustee or officer and may, by act of the Board of Trustees (including the votes or consents of interested Trustees), pay the expenses (including attorneys’ fees and disbursements) incurred in good faith by any other indemnified representative in advance of the final disposition of a proceeding described in Section 6.01 upon receipt of an undertaking by or on behalf of the indemnified representative to repay such amount if it shall ultimately be determined pursuant to Section 6.06(d) or otherwise that such person is not entitled to be indemnified by the Fiduciary Corporation pursuant to this Article. The financial ability of an indemnified representative to repay an advance shall not be a prerequisite to the making of such advance.

Section 6.04. Securing of Indemnification Obligations. To further effect, satisfy or secure the indemnification obligations provided herein or otherwise, the Fiduciary Corporation may maintain insurance, obtain a letter of credit, act as self-insurer, create a reserve, trust, escrow, cash collateral or other fund or account, enter into indemnification agreements, pledge or grant a security interest in any assets or properties of the Fiduciary Corporation, or use any other mechanism or arrangement whatsoever in such amounts, at such costs, and upon such other terms and conditions as the Board of Trustees shall deem appropriate. Absent fraud, the determination of the Board of Trustees with respect to such amounts, costs, terms and conditions shall be conclusive against all security holders, if any, officers and Trustees and shall not be subject to voidability.

Section 6.05. Payment of Indemnification. An indemnified representative who is entitled to indemnification shall be entitled thereto within 30 days after a written request for such indemnification has been delivered to the secretary of the Fiduciary Corporation.

Section 6.06. Indemnification Procedure.

(a) An indemnified representative shall use such indemnified representative’s best efforts to notify promptly the secretary of the Fiduciary Corporation of the commencement of any proceeding or the occurrence of any event which might give rise to a liability under this Article, but the failure so to notify the Fiduciary Corporation shall not relieve the Fiduciary Corporation for any liability which it may have to the indemnified representative under this Article or otherwise.

(b) The Fiduciary Corporation shall be entitled, upon notice to any such indemnified representative, to assume the defense of any proceeding with counsel reasonably satisfactory to the indemnified representative, or a majority of the indemnified representatives involved in such proceeding if there be more than one. If the Fiduciary Corporation notifies the indemnified representative of its election to defend the proceeding, the Fiduciary Corporation shall have no liability for the expenses (including attorneys’ fees and disbursements) of the indemnified representative incurred in connection with the defense of such proceeding subsequent to such notice, unless (i) such expenses (including attorneys’ fees and disbursements) have been authorized by the Fiduciary Corporation, (ii) the Fiduciary Corporation shall not in fact have employed counsel reasonably satisfactory to such indemnified representative or indemnified representatives to assume the defense of such proceeding, or (iii) it shall have been determined pursuant to Section 6.06(d) that the indemnified representative was entitled to indemnification to the benefits of this Article shall have the burden of proof. The Fiduciary Corporation shall reimburse an indemnified representative for such expenses under this Article or otherwise. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the indemnified representative may elect to retain counsel at the indemnified representative's own cost and expense to participate in the defense of such proceeding.

(c) The Fiduciary Corporation shall not be required to obtain the consent of the indemnified representative to the settlement of any proceeding which the Fiduciary Corporation has undertaken to defend if the Fiduciary Corporation assumes full and sole responsibility for such settlement and the settlement grants the indemnified representative an unqualified release in respect of all liabilities at issue in the proceeding. Whether or not the Fiduciary Corporation has elected to assume the defense of any proceeding, no indemnified representative shall have any right to enter into any full or partial settlement of the proceeding without the prior written consent of the Fiduciary Corporation (which consent shall not be unreasonably withheld), nor shall the Fiduciary Corporation be liable for any amount paid by an indemnified representative pursuant to any settlement to which the Fiduciary Corporation has not so consented.

(d) Any dispute related to the right to indemnification as provided under this Article shall be decided only by arbitration in the metropolitan area in which the principal executive offices of the Fiduciary Corporation are located at the time, in accordance with the commercial arbitration rules then in effect of the American Arbitration Association, before a panel of three arbitrators, one of whom shall be selected by the Fiduciary Corporation, the second of whom shall be selected by the indemnified representative and the third of whom shall be selected by the other two arbitrators. In the absence of the American Arbitration Association, or if for any reason arbitration under the arbitration rules of the American Arbitration Association cannot be initiated, and if one of the parties fails or refuses to select an arbitrator, or the arbitrators selected by the Fiduciary Corporation and the indemnified representative cannot agree on the selection of the third arbitrator within 30 days after such time as the Fiduciary Corporation and the indemnified representative have each been notified of the selection of the other's arbitrator, the necessary arbitrator or arbitrators shall be selected by the presiding judge of the court of general jurisdiction in such metropolitan area. Each arbitrator selected as provided in this subsection is required to be or have been a director or executive officer of a corporation whose shares of common stock were listed during at least one year of such service on the New York Stock Exchange or the American Stock Exchange or quoted on the National Association of Securities Dealers Automated Quotations System. The party or parties challenging the right of an indemnified representative to the benefits of this Article shall have the burden of proof. The Fiduciary Corporation shall reimburse an indemnified representative for the expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) incurred in successfully prosecuting or defending such arbitration. Any award entered by the arbitrators shall be final, binding and nonappealable and judgment may be entered thereon by any party in accordance with applicable law in any court of competent jurisdiction, except that the Fiduciary Corporation shall be entitled to interpose as a defense in any such judicial enforcement proceeding any prior final judicial determination adverse to the indemnified representative under Section 6.01(a)(2) or (3) in a proceeding not directly involving indemnification under this Article. This arbitration provision shall be specifically enforceable.

(e) Upon a payment to any indemnified representative under this Article, the Fiduciary Corporation shall be subrogated to the extent of such payment to all of the rights of the indemnified representative to recover against any person for such liability, and the indemnified representative shall execute all documents and instruments required and shall take such other action as may be necessary to secure such rights, including the execution of such documents as may be necessary for the Fiduciary Corporation to bring suit to enforce such rights.

Section 6.07. Discharge of Duty. An indemnified representative shall be deemed to have discharged such person's duty to the Fiduciary Corporation if he or she has relied in good faith on information, advice or an opinion, report or statement prepared by:

- (1) one or more officers or employees of the Fiduciary Corporation whom such indemnified representative reasonably believes to be reliable and competent with respect to the matter presented;
- (2) legal counsel, public accountants or other persons as to matters that the indemnified representative reasonably believes are within the persons' professional or expert competence; or
- (3) a committee of the Board of Trustees on which he or she does not serve as to matters within its area of designated authority, which committee he or she reasonably believes to merit confidence.

Section 6.08. Contract Rights; Amendment or Repeal. All rights to indemnification under this Article shall be deemed a contract between the Fiduciary Corporation and the indemnified representatives pursuant to which the Fiduciary Corporation and each indemnified representative intend to be legally bound. Any repeal, amendment or modification hereof shall be prospective only and shall not affect any rights or obligations then existing.

Section 6.09. Scope of Article. The indemnification of indemnified representatives, as authorized by this Article, shall not be deemed exclusive of any other rights to which those seeking indemnification or advancement of expenses may be entitled under any statute, agreement, vote of the General Assembly or disinterested Trustees or otherwise, both as to action in an official capacity and as to action in any other capacity. The indemnification provided by or granted pursuant to this Article shall continue as to a person who has ceased to be an indemnified representative in respect of matters arising prior to such time, and shall inure to the benefit of the heirs, executors, administrators and personal representatives of such a person.

Section 6.10. Reliance on Provisions. Each person who shall act as an indemnified representative of the Fiduciary Corporation shall be deemed to be doing so in reliance upon the rights of indemnification provided by this Article.

Section 6.11 Interpretation. The provisions of this Article have been approved and ratified by the General Assembly Council and are intended to constitute Bylaws authorized by Section 5746 of the Pennsylvania Nonprofit Corporation Law of 1988 and 42 Pa.C.S. Section 8365.

ARTICLE VII Investments

Section 7.01. Administration. ~~Unless otherwise specifically directed in the instrument by which any property, real or personal, is given, granted, conveyed, transferred, bequeathed, devised, assigned to or otherwise vested in the Fiduciary Corporation, including but not limited to its capacity as fiduciary or otherwise, and subject to the general investment policies, adopted from time to time by the General Assembly so far as consistent with the fiduciary responsibilities of the Board of Trustees, the appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees is authorized to invest and reinvest the property thus received or the proceeds of any property thus received and to retain property thus received and investments heretofore or hereafter made if done in the exercise of that degree of judgment and care, under the circumstances then prevailing, which persons of prudence, discretion and intelligence exercise in the management of their own affairs, not in regard to speculation, but in regard to the permanent disposition of their funds, considering the probable income to be derived therefrom as well as the probable safety of their capital. The appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees may employ such investment advisors and consultants as it desires to assist it in making investments, reinvestments and retention of investments.~~ Unless otherwise specifically directed in the instrument by which any property, real or personal, is given, granted, conveyed, transferred, bequeathed, devised, assigned to or otherwise vested in the Fiduciary Corporation, including but not limited to its capacity as fiduciary or otherwise, and subject to the general investment policies, adopted from time to time by the General Assembly so far as consistent with the fiduciary responsibilities of the Board of Trustees, the appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees is authorized to invest and reinvest the property thus received or the proceeds of any property thus received and to retain property thus received and investments heretofore or hereafter made if done in accordance with the Pennsylvania Prudent Investor statute, 20 PA C S 7201 et. seq. The appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees may employ such investment advisors and consultants as it desires to assist it in making investments, reinvestments and retention of investments.

Section 7.02. Certain Unrestricted Funds. With respect to investment of property and funds free of any standard of investment or over which the General Assembly has power of appropriation, the appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees may invest and reinvest such property and funds in such manner as the General Assembly or any body formed by the General Assembly thereto authorized may suggest or require, without reference to the standard provided by Section 7.01 of this Article.

Section 7.03. Restricted Funds. Where the terms of the gift or the instrument by which property or funds are received by the Fiduciary Corporation specify or limit the type of investments to be made with such property or funds, the investment or reinvestment of such property or funds shall be made in the discretion of the appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees in accordance with the terms provided or limited in the instrument by which such property or funds are received. In every case where a donor has specified that the principal of the gift be invested and that only the income be expended, the Fiduciary Corporation shall refrain from making any expenditure of principal, and in every case where a donor has specified the purposes for which principal or income may be expended, the Fiduciary Corporation shall refrain from making any expenditure inconsistent with the terms of the gift.

Section 7.04. Custodians and Nominee Registration. All investments and securities owned by the Fiduciary Corporation shall be held in the custody of a bank, or a trust company or other depositories as the Board of Trustees, the ~~Advisory Leadership Team~~ Executive Committee or another appropriate committee of the Board of Trustees may approve or designate. Investments and securities owned by the Fiduciary Corporation may be held in the name of a nominee which may be the nominee of a bank, or a trust company or other depository, provided the bank or trust company or other depository in the name of whose nominee investments and securities of the Fiduciary Corporation are held first gives a bond or letter to the Fiduciary Corporation where by it assumes full responsibility for the safe custody of the investments and securities and agrees to indemnify the Fiduciary Corporation and its Trustees and officers and employees against any loss or claims by reason of such nominee registration or default or infidelity of such nominee, and that all such investments and securities shall be so designated upon the records of the bank, or trust company or other custodian so that the ownership of the same in the Fiduciary Corporation shall clearly appear at all times.

ARTICLE VIII
Miscellaneous

Section 8.01. Corporate Seal. The Fiduciary Corporation shall have a corporate seal in the form of a design adopted by the 197th General Assembly (1985) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), together with the words: "PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.) FOUNDATION -- INCORPORATED 1799 PENNSYLVANIA". The Foundation Constituent Corporations shall each have a corporate seal in the form of a circle containing the words "CORPORATE SEAL".

Section 8.02. Checks. All checks, notes, bills of exchange or other orders in writing shall be signed by such person or persons as the Board of Trustees may from time to time designate.

Section 8.03. Contracts. Except as otherwise provided in these bylaws, the Board of Trustees may authorize any officer or officers, agent or agents, to enter into any contract or to execute or deliver any instrument on behalf of the Fiduciary Corporation, and such authority may be general or confined to specific instances.

Section 8.04. Deposits and Disbursements. All funds of the Fiduciary Corporation shall be deposited from time to time to the credit of the Fiduciary Corporation in such banks, trust companies, or other depositories as the Board of Trustees may approve or designate, and all such funds shall be withdrawn only upon checks signed by, or bearing the authorized facsimile signature of such one or more officers, employees or agents as the Board of Trustees shall from time to time determine. The name or accounts to which such deposits are made, and the name of the Fiduciary Corporation on checks drawn against such accounts may be "Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)", and may include such other words including the name of the Fiduciary Corporation and an appropriate designation to identify by purpose or otherwise. The Fiduciary Corporation shall designate the Central Treasury Corporation as attorney-in-fact of the Fiduciary Corporation and of each of the Foundation Constituent Corporations for the purpose of disbursing unrestricted income or unrestricted principal of invested funds (and restricted income or restricted principal to the extent specifically authorized by the Board of Trustees) pursuant to appropriations made by the General Assembly or any officer or agency thereof thereunto duly authorized. In the case of disbursements of unrestricted income or unrestricted principal, the personnel of the Central Treasury Corporation, and not the Board of Trustees of the Fiduciary Corporation and the Foundation Constituent Corporations, shall be accountable and responsible for such disbursements.

Section 8.05. Annual Report of Trustees; Accounting System. The Board of Trustees shall direct the president and treasurer to present at a regular meeting of the Board in every year a report, verified by such officers, showing in appropriate detail the following:

- (1) The assets, liabilities and fund balances, including the trust funds, of the Fiduciary Corporation as of the end of the fiscal year immediately preceding the date of the report.
- (2) The principal changes in assets, liabilities and fund balances, including trust funds, during the year immediately preceding the date of the report.
- (3) The revenue or receipts of the Fiduciary Corporation, both unrestricted and restricted to particular purposes, for the year immediately preceding the date of the report, including separate date with respect to each trust fund held by or for the Fiduciary Corporation.
- (4) The expenses or disbursements of the Fiduciary Corporation, for both general and restricted purposes, during the year immediately preceding the date of the report, including separate date with respect to each trust fund held by or for the Fiduciary Corporation.
- (5) The number of members of the Fiduciary Corporation as of the date of the report and a statement of the place where the name and address of the current member of the Fiduciary Corporation may be found.

The Central Treasury Corporation and the Fiduciary Corporation shall be subject to a single coordinated accounting system, the elements of which shall be compatible. Financial statements reported on by independent certified public accountants may be statements which have been combined with those of the Central Treasury Corporation.

15 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BOARD OF PENSIONS,
PRESBYTERIAN FOUNDATION, AND PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING

The annual report shall be filed with the minutes of the meeting of the Board and copies shall be transmitted to the Central Treasury Corporation, the General Assembly Council and the General Assembly.

Section 8.06. Amendment of Bylaws. These bylaws may be amended or repealed, or new bylaws may be adopted either: (1) by the action of a majority of Trustees present and voting at any regular or special meeting of the Board of Trustees at which a quorum is present, if ten days' written notice of such proposed amendment, repeal or new bylaws is given to each Trustee, or (2) by the action at any regular meeting of the Board of Trustees of a majority of all of the Trustees in office, where no notice of such proposed amendment, repeal or new bylaws has been given.

Any such amendment, repeal or new bylaws shall be consistent with the Form of Government of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and with the directions from time to time of the General Assembly. The substance of any proposed amendment, repeal or new bylaws shall first be approved by the General Assembly Council.

Item 15-05

[The assembly approved Item 15-05 with comment. See p. 11.]

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) confirm the reelection of Robert E. Leech by the Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation for a third, four-year term as Foundation president and chief executive officer.

Comment:* To commend Robert Leech and his staff for their leadership in the fiduciary stewardship of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation.

Rationale

At its February meeting, the trustees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation unanimously, and with gratitude to God, called and elected Robert E. Leech to a third term as president of the Foundation subject to confirmation by the General Assembly.

15 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BOARD OF PENSIONS,
PRESBYTERIAN FOUNDATION, AND PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING

Robert Leech is a resident of Louisville and a member of Second Presbyterian Church. A lifelong Presbyterian, he has served as an elder and deacon at five churches across the country.

Leech earned a Bachelor of Arts degree from Ursinus College in Pennsylvania, and a Masters of Business Administration degree from the College of William and Mary. He is also a graduate of the National Trust School and Trust Management School at Northwestern University. Prior to joining the Foundation, Leech spent thirty years in the banking industry.

During his tenure as president, Leech has worked with the Foundation Board to implement a plan to increase overall planned giving to local churches, institutions, and the national church. He has worked with the General Assembly Council to better respond to the stewardship and funds development needs of the church.

Additionally, Leech has improved the financial position of the Foundation by managing expenses and increasing reserves despite a difficult economy. He has coordinated the inclusion of the Foundation's new subsidiary, New Covenant Trust Company, for which he also serves as chief executive officer, with the overall operation of the Foundation. Leech also serves as the president of New Covenant Funds, a family of mutual funds invested in accordance with the social-witness principles of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

Finally, Leech worked with the board to create a strategic plan for the Foundation to ensure the organization serves the whole church by nurturing the stewardship of accumulated resources to fund the mission of the church.

Item 15-07

[The assembly approved Item 15-07. See pp. 11, 12.]

The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation Board of Directors recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) confirm the election of Marc Lewis as president and publisher of the Presbyterian Publishing Corporation.

Rationale

The Presbyterian Publishing Corporation (PPC) Board of Directors conducted an extensive search utilizing the services of an executive recruitment firm to identify potential candidates. The PPC Board of Directors unanimously elected Marc Lewis as the president and publisher at their meeting on February 27, 2008.

Lewis holds a marketing degree from the University of Tennessee and an MBA from Vanderbilt University's Owen School of Management. Prior to joining the PPC staff in 1999, Lewis had an extended career at the United Methodist Publishing House.

Item 15-D

[The Assembly Committee on Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Foundation, and Presbyterian Publishing approved Item 15-D. See pp. 11, 12.]

The Board of Pensions recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) receive the report of certain amendments to the Bylaws of the Board of Pensions (as set forth below).

Rationale

The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church is a Pennsylvania nonprofit corporation established by the General Assembly to administer the Benefits Plan and Assistance Programs for the benefit of the ministers and lay employees of the church. The General Assembly reserved the authority to elect the directors of the Board of Pensions and approve amendments to the articles and bylaws to the extent that they relate to the purpose of the Board of Pensions or the General Assembly's right to elect the directors. The Board of Pensions has the authority to approve any other amendments to the bylaws and report any such amendments to the next succeeding General Assembly.

In 2007, the Board of Pensions amended its bylaws to change the name of the Assistance and Retirement Housing Committee to the Assistance Committee, in recognition of the evolving focus of the committee from owning and maintaining retirement homes to providing financial assistance to Benefits Plan members with housing needs.

BYLAWS
THE BOARD OF PENSIONS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (U.S.A.)
As Amended June 23, 2007

ARTICLE I
BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Section 1.1. Number; Election; Term; Qualifications. The Board of Directors shall consist of not less than twenty-seven (27) persons and not more than thirty-six (36) persons nominated by or through the General Assembly Nominating Committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and elected by the General Assembly in accordance with the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Manual of the General Assembly.

Election shall be for a term of four (4) years and, except as provided below, a Director shall serve no more than eight (8) consecutive years. The Board may request that a special exception for a different term or extended service period be granted by the General Assembly Nominating Committee. The Board of Directors shall consist of not more than forty percent (40%) ordained ministers of the Church with the remaining Directors being, at all times during their respective terms, lay members of the Church.

Section 1.2. Annual and Regular Meetings. A regular meeting of the Board of Directors shall be held at least three (3) times a year, at such places and times as shall from time to time be fixed by the Board of Directors. The second regular meeting in the calendar year shall be the annual meeting of the Corporation.

Written notice of the annual and regular meetings of the Board of Directors shall be required to be given to each Director at least five (5) days before the day named for the meeting. Any business may be transacted at any regular meeting. At the annual meeting, in addition to any other business transacted, the President and Treasurer shall present a financial report for the fiscal year immediately preceding, which report shall be filed with the minutes of the annual meeting of the Board.

Section 1.3. Special Meetings. Special meetings may be called at any time by the Chairperson and shall be called by the Secretary at the written or oral request of any five (5) Directors of the Board. In each case, written notice of the call shall set forth the purpose of such meeting. Any special meeting shall be held not later than forty (40) days after the call thereof, at such particular date, time, and place as shall be fixed by the Secretary. The Secretary shall give not less than five (5) days notice of the date, time, place and purpose of special meetings. No business shall be transacted at a special meeting other than as set forth in the notice.

Section 1.4. Waiver of Notice of Meetings. Whenever written notice is required to be given to any person, it may be given to the person, either personally or by sending a copy by first class or express mail, postage prepaid, courier service, charges prepaid, or by facsimile or electronic mail transmission, to the address (or facsimile number or electronic mail address) supplied by him or her to the Corporation for purpose of notice. If notice is sent by mail or courier service, it shall be deemed to have been given when deposited in the United States mail or with a courier service for delivery to the person or, in the case of facsimile or electronic mail, when receipt has been confirmed. A notice of meeting shall specify the place, day and hour of the meeting and any other information required by law. Except as otherwise provided by law or these Bylaws, when a meeting is adjourned, it shall not be necessary to give any notice of the adjourned meeting, or of the business to be transacted at an adjourned meeting, other than by announcement at the meeting at which such adjournment is taken.

Whenever any notice is required to be given by law or these Bylaws, a waiver thereof in writing, signed by the person or persons entitled to such notice, whether before or after the time stated therein, shall be deemed equivalent to the giving of notice. Neither the business to be transacted at nor the purpose of a meeting need be specified in the waiver of notice of the meeting. Attendance of a person at any meeting shall constitute a waiver of notice of the meeting except where a person attends a meeting for the express purpose of objecting, at the beginning of the meeting, to the transaction of any business because the meeting was not lawfully called or convened.

Section 1.5. Quorum. A quorum consisting of one-third of the Directors of the Board then in office shall be necessary to commence a duly constituted meeting. Except as otherwise specifically provided by law or in these Bylaws, any action may be taken by a majority of the Directors present at a duly constituted meeting. Notwithstanding the foregoing sentence, any amendment to the Pension Plan of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), other than a benefit reduction or a dues increase (which amendments require the approval in advance of the General Assembly), shall require an affirmative vote of a two-thirds majority of Directors present at a duly constituted meeting.

The provisions of this section shall also apply to any action of the Corporation taken by a Committee under authority granted in these Bylaws. A quorum consisting of a majority of the Directors then assigned to the Committee shall be necessary to take such action.

Section 1.6. Absence. Absence from three (3) consecutive regular meetings of the Directors without excuse shall be considered equivalent to a resignation by a member of the Board of Directors. All such absences shall be reported to the Directors at any regular meeting by the Secretary.

Section 1.7. Presence by Telephone. With the permission of the Chairperson and for extenuating circumstances, one or more persons may participate in a meeting of the Board of Directors or of a committee thereof by means of a conference telephone or similar communications equipment by means of which all persons participating can hear each other. Such participation shall constitute presence in person at such meeting.

Section 1.8. Removal of Directors. At the recommendation of the Board Development and Governance Committee, a director may be removed from office, without assigning any cause, by an affirmative vote of the greater of 1) a two-thirds vote of the directors present at any duly called meeting of the Board or 2) a majority of the directors then in office and entitled to vote on the matter. If any director is removed, the resulting vacancy shall be filled in the manner provided in Section 1.1 of the Bylaws for regular election of directors.

ARTICLE II OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Section 2.1. Officers: Designation, Election and Compensation. The Officers of the Corporation shall be the Chairperson, two or more Vice Chairpersons, and the following Senior Officers (who shall not be Directors): President; one or more Vice Presidents; Treasurer and Secretary; together with such other officers as shall from time to time be elected by the Board of Directors which other officers may also be designated as Senior Officers. The Chairperson and Vice Chairpersons shall be elected by the Board of Directors from its own members to serve without salary. The President shall be elected by the Board of Directors with confirmation by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The President-elect may assume the position of president with full authority of that office upon election by the Board of Directors and before the next General Assembly at which confirmation will be sought. If the General Assembly declines to confirm the President-elect, the position will be declared vacant immediately with no further action required on the part of the Assembly. All Senior Officers shall be elected by the Board of Directors to serve at salaries to be fixed by the Board of Directors. All Senior Officers shall be corresponding members of the Board but without the right to vote.

Section 2.2. The Chairperson. The Chairperson shall preside at all meetings of the Corporation, the Board of Directors and the Executive Committee. The Chairperson shall-- --appoint all standing and special committees and the chairperson of each, except the Board Development and Governance Committee;

--nominate the Board Development and Governance Committee members and chairperson for election by the full Board;

--be a member ex officio of all committees;

--unless and until otherwise directed by the Board of Directors, designate from time to time who shall represent the Corporation and the Board of Directors at any meeting of any General Assembly, Synod, Presbytery, or any other Judicatory, Committee, Commission or Board of the Church or at any meeting of representatives or Boards of other denominations; and

--upon the recommendation of the President, appoint such officers of the Corporation as corresponding Directors, but without the right to vote, to such Committee or Committees to which they are assigned as staff support by the President.

Section 2.3. The Vice Chairpersons. The Vice Chairpersons shall, in an order determined by the Board of Directors, preside in the absence of the Chairperson, and shall perform all the duties of the Chairperson in the event of absence or disability of the latter.

Section 2.4. The President. The President shall be the chief executive officer of the Corporation and shall report to and be responsible to the Board of Directors for the overall management of the operations of the Corporation. The President shall --report to the Board of Directors at each regular meeting of the Board and to the Standing Committees of the Board whenever and in such form as requested;

--serve as a corresponding member of all committees of the Board of Directors, but without the right to vote;

--ensure that all rules, regulations, trusts and provisions applicable to all of the funds of the Corporation and their administration and all of the policies adopted by the Board, are complied with at all times;

--submit to the Board of Directors for its consideration, the Board's Report for presentation to the General Assembly each year;

--oversee the internal audit function of the Board; and

--perform such other duties as the Board of Directors may designate from time to time.

Section 2.5. The Treasurer. The Treasurer shall report to and be responsible to the President. The general responsibilities of this position shall include the following:

--the oversight, care and custody of all funds held by the Corporation;

--the care and custody of the financial documents of the Corporation; and

--the performance of such other duties as the President or the Board of Directors may designate from time to time.

Section 2.6. The Secretary. The Secretary shall report to and be responsible to the President. The records of the proceedings of the Corporation, the Board of Directors and the Executive Committee shall be kept by or under the supervision of the Secretary. The general responsibilities of this position shall include the following:

--the recording of all votes of the corporation and the preparation of the minutes of all Corporation, Board of Directors and Executive Committee meetings in a book kept for that purpose;

--the preparation, in consultation with the President, of the Board's Report to the General Assembly; and

--the performance of such other duties as the President or the Board of Directors may designate from time to time.

Section 2.7. Senior Officers. The Board of Directors may, upon the recommendation of the President, elect one or more Vice Presidents or other Senior Officers as may be deemed advisable. The duties and conditions of employment of any Senior Officer shall be confirmed by the Board of Directors.

Section 2.8. Assistant Officers. The Board of Directors may, upon the recommendation of the President, elect one or more Assistant Secretaries, Assistant Treasurers, Assistants to the President, or other Assistant Officers, as may be deemed advisable and the President may prescribe their duties, conditions of employment and compensation.

Section 2.9. Vacancies. Vacancy in any office or position, other than the office of Director or President, by reason of death, resignation, removal, disqualification or other cause shall be filled in the manner provided in Section 2.1, 2.7 or 2.8 of these Bylaws for regular election or appointment to such office or position. Upon notice that a vacancy in the office of the President will or has occurred, the Chairperson shall appoint a Search Committee for the Board of Directors, which committee shall consist of not less than five (5) members and shall include one elected member designated by the General Assembly Council.

ARTICLE III ADVISORS AND COUNSEL

Section 3.1. Designation, Selection and Compensation. The Officers and the Board shall be assisted in carrying on the business of the Corporation by Pension Actuarial, Medical Actuarial and Legal Counsel, and such other counsel as the Board of Directors may deem necessary from time to time for the proper conduct of the business of the Corporation. Counsel may consist of individuals, partnerships, corporations, or other entities.

Section 3.2. Actuarial Counsel.

(a) Pension Actuarial Counsel shall function as the Board's actuary for pension, death, disability, optional death, optional supplemental disability and optional retirement savings benefits under the direction of the Pension Committee or any Senior Officer designated by it. Such counsel shall submit an Annual Pension Actuarial Report to the Board of Directors through the Pension Committee and shall render such other actuarial services as may be requested by the Board of Directors or any Senior Officer.

(b) Medical Actuarial Counsel shall function as the Board's actuary for the medical plans and programs under the direction of the Healthcare Committee or any Senior Officer designated by it. Such counsel shall submit an Annual Medical Actuarial Report to the Board of Directors through the Healthcare Committee and shall render such other actuarial services as may be requested by the Board of Directors or any Senior Officer.

Section 3.3. Legal Counsel. Legal Counsel shall function under the direction of the Legal Committee and the President and shall render such legal services as may be requested by the Board of Directors or any Senior Officer.

ARTICLE IV COMMITTEES

Section 4.1. Executive Committee. The Executive Committee shall consist of not less than seven (7) Directors including the Chairperson, the Vice Chairpersons and the Chairperson of each of the following nine committees: Investment, Healthcare, Assistance, Pension, Social Responsibility, Legal, Personnel, Board Development and Governance, and Audit, together with such other Directors as may be appointed by the Chairperson. It shall meet at the call of the Chairperson of the Board of Directors. In the interim between the regular meetings of the Board of Directors, the Executive Committee shall perform the duties of and have all the powers vested in the Board of Directors. Any action of the Board taken by the Executive Committee pursuant to this interim authority shall be duly recorded in the minutes of the Corporation and reported to the full Board of Directors at the next meeting. A quorum consisting of a majority of the Directors of the Executive Committee shall be necessary to constitute a duly authorized meeting.

Section 4.2. Investment Committee. The Investment Committee shall consist of not less than five (5) Directors of the Board of Directors. The Investment Committee shall be responsible for the supervision of the investment of all funds held by the Corporation. The Investment Committee may select, review and terminate the engagement of one or more financial entities as investment managers as it deems appropriate and shall report such actions to the Board of Directors at its next meeting. Each such investment manager approved by the Investment Committee may be given the authority, under the supervision and approval of the Investment Committee and within such investment guidelines approved from time to time by the Board of Directors, to invest and reinvest the portion of the funds held by the Corporation, including trust funds, placed in its custody. All investments shall be made in accordance with the provisions of all applicable laws.

The investment of all funds held by the Corporation shall be subject to asset allocation policies and investment guidelines developed by the Investment Committee and approved by the Board of Directors.

Section 4.3. Social Responsibility Committee. The Social Responsibility Committee shall consist of those Directors serving as regular or alternate Directors of the General Assembly Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment, and any other Directors designated by the Chairperson of the Board of Directors. It shall advise the Board of Directors with respect to questions of social responsibility in investment.

Section 4.4. Healthcare Committee. The Healthcare Committee shall consist of not less than five (5) Directors of the Board of Directors. The Healthcare Committee shall be responsible for the oversight of the administration of the medical plans of the Benefits Plan and such other welfare plans and program as the Board determines appropriate. It shall also review studies of the Plan's effectiveness, consider possible Plan changes and recommend proposed Plan amendments to the Board of Directors for the aforementioned benefits. It shall confer with and receive advice from the Medical Actuarial Counsel of the Corporation in such actuarial matters as it deems necessary or as the Board of Directors or the President may designate from time to time for the aforementioned benefits.

Section 4.5. Assistance Committee. The Assistance Committee shall consist of not less than five (5) Directors of the Board of Directors. It shall develop for the Board of Directors' approval the policies according to which the Board's programs of financial aid and retirement housing supplements are to be administered. The Committee shall also be responsible for the oversight of the funds development and gift administration programs of the Board. The Committee shall regularly review the recommendations of the Board's staff for financial aid and/or retirement housing supplements to individuals in light of the established policies and recommend proper action to the Board of Directors.

The Committee shall also develop for the Board of Directors' approval the policies according to which such retirement housing units as may from time to time be owned by the Board shall be administered. It shall review and recommend to the Board of Directors proper action of the following: (1) the acquisition or disposition of retirement housing units; (2) the annual operating budget of each retirement housing unit; and (3) proposed expenditures for maintenance, repairs, alterations or improvement of retirement housing units which exceed an amount to be set by the Committee from time to time.

Section 4.6. Pension Committee. The Pension Committee shall consist of not less than five (5) Directors of the Board of Directors. The Pension Committee shall be responsible for the oversight of the administration of the pension, retirement savings, death and disability plans of the Benefits Plan and such other retirement plans and programs as the Board determines appropriate. It shall also review studies of the Plan's effectiveness, consider possible Plan changes and recommend proposed Plan amendments to the Board of Directors for the aforementioned benefits. It shall confer with and receive advice from the Pension Actuarial Counsel of the Corporation in such actuarial matters as it deems necessary or as the Board of Directors or the President may designate from time to time for the aforementioned benefits. It shall also be the Committee responsible for recommending any proposed Experience Apportionments to the Board of Directors.

Section 4.7. Legal Committee. The Legal Committee shall consist of not less than three (3) Directors of the Board of Directors. It shall consult with the Board of Directors and Legal Counsel to the Corporation, as it deems necessary, and discharge such duties in connection therewith as the Board of Directors or the President may designate from time to time.

Section 4.8. Board Development and Governance Committee. The Board Development and Governance Committee shall consist of not less than five (5) Directors of the Board of Directors. It shall provide leadership development to the Board of Directors, including succession planning, continuing education and periodic Board self-evaluations. It shall also recruit and propose candidates for election to the Board of Directors for presentation to the General Assembly Nominating Committee, nominate candidates to the Board of Directors for election to the offices of Chairperson and Vice Chairperson and perform such other duties in connection therewith as the Board of Directors may designate from time to time.

Section 4.9. Audit Committee. The Audit Committee shall consist of not less than five (5) Directors. It shall receive, review and report to the Board of Directors the results of the independent annual audit of the accounts of the Corporation and management letter and shall recommend to the Board of Directors proposed changes and other responsive actions based upon such review. It shall meet periodically with the Director of Internal Audit to assure that proper controls and security are being observed at the Corporation. It shall perform such other duties as the Board of Directors or the President may designate from time to time.

Section 4.10. Personnel Committee. The Personnel Committee, which shall be a subcommittee of the Executive Committee, shall consist of not less than three (3) Directors of the Board of Directors. The committee shall make recommendations to the Board of Directors on matters of personnel. It shall perform such duties in connection with personnel as the Board of Directors may designate from time to time. It shall confer with the President on personnel matters as the Board of Directors deems necessary, or as the President may designate from time to time.

Section 4.11. Informal Committee Action. If all the Directors of a committee shall severally or collectively consent, in writing, to any action to be taken by the Committee, such action shall be a valid committee action as though it had been authorized at a formal meeting of such Committee.

ARTICLE V STANDARD OF CARE

Section 5.1. Standard of Care: Justifiable Reliance. Director shall stand in a fiduciary relation to the Corporation and shall perform his or her duties as a Director, including duties as a member of any committee of the Board upon which the Director may serve, in good faith, in a manner the Director reasonably believes to be in the best interests of the Corporation and with such care, including reasonable inquiry, skill and diligence, as a person of ordinary prudence would use under similar circumstances. In performing his or her duties, a Director shall be entitled to rely in good faith on information, opinions, reports or statements, including, without limitation, financial statements and other financial data, in each case prepared or presented by any of the following:

- (1) One or more officers or employees of the Corporation whom the Director reasonably believes to be reliable and competent in the matters presented;
- (2) Counsel, public accountants or other persons as to matters which the Director reasonably believes to be within the professional or expert competence of such person; or

(3) A committee of the Board upon which the Director does not serve, duly designated in accordance with law, as to matters within its designated authority, which committee the Director reasonably believes to merit confidence.

A Director shall not be considered to be acting in good faith if the Director has knowledge concerning the matter in question that would cause his or her reliance to be unwarranted.

Section 5.2. Presumption. Absent breach of fiduciary duty, lack of good faith, or self-dealing, actions taken by the Board, committees of the Board, or by individual Directors, or any failure to take any action, shall be presumed to be in the best interests of the Corporation.

Section 5.3. Notation of Dissent. A Director who is present at a meeting of the Board, or of a committee of the Board, at which action on any corporate matter is taken shall be presumed to have assented to the action taken unless his or her dissent is entered in the minutes of the meeting or unless the Director files a written dissent to the action with the Secretary of the meeting before the adjournment thereof or transmits the dissent in writing to the Secretary immediately after the adjournment of the meeting. The right to dissent shall not apply to a Director who voted in favor of the action. Nothing in this Section shall bar a Director from asserting the minutes of the meeting incorrectly omitted his or her dissent if, promptly upon receipt of a copy of the minutes, the Directors notifies the Secretary, in writing, of the asserted omission or inaccuracy.

ARTICLE VI

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY, INDEMNIFICATION AND INSURANCE

Section 6.1. Limitation of Liability. A Director of the Corporation shall not be personally liable for monetary damages for any action taken, or any failure to take action, unless such Director has breached or failed to perform the duties of his or her office under Subchapter B of Chapter 57 of the Pennsylvania Nonprofit Corporation Law of 1988, as amended (the "Act"), as from time to time amended, or any successor provision, and the breach or failure to perform constitutes self-dealing, willful misconduct or recklessness. This provision shall not apply to the responsibility or liability of a Director pursuant to any criminal statute or the liability of a Director for payment of taxes pursuant to local, state or federal law. Any repeal or amendment of this Section shall be prospective only and shall not increase, but may decrease, a Director's liability with respect to actions or failures to act occurring prior to such change.

Section 6.2. Mandatory Indemnification of Directors and Officers. The Corporation shall indemnify and defend, to the fullest extent now or hereafter permitted by law (including but not limited to the indemnification provided by Subchapter D of Chapter 57 of the Act, each Director or officer (including each former Director or officer) of the Corporation who was or is made a party to or a witness in, or is threatened to be made a party to or a witness in, any threatened, pending or completed action, suit or proceeding, whether civil, criminal, administrative or investigative, by reason of the fact that he or she is or was an authorized representative of the Corporation, against all expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements), judgments, fines (including excise taxes and penalties) and amounts paid in settlement actually and reasonably incurred by him or her in connection with such action, suit or proceeding if he or she acted in good faith and in a manner he or she reasonably believed to be in, or not opposed to, the best interests of the Corporation and, with respect to any criminal proceeding, had no reasonable cause to believe his or her conduct was unlawful. The termination of any action or proceeding by judgment, order, settlement, or conviction or upon a plea of nolo contendere or its equivalent shall not of itself create a presumption that the person did not act in good faith and in a manner that he or she reasonably believed to be in or not opposed to, the best interests of the Corporation and, with respect to any criminal proceeding, had reasonable cause to believe that his or her conduct was unlawful.

Section 6.3. Mandatory Advancement of Expenses to Directors and Officers. The Corporation shall pay expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements) incurred by a Director or officer of the Corporation referred to in Section 6.2 hereof in defending or appearing as a witness in any civil or criminal action, suit or proceeding described in Section 6.2 hereof in advance of the final disposition of such action, suit or proceeding. The expenses incurred by such Director or officer shall be paid by the Corporation in advance of the final disposition of such action, suit or proceeding only upon receipt of an undertaking by or on behalf of such Director or officer to repay all amounts advanced if it shall ultimately be determined that he or she is not entitled to be indemnified by the Corporation as provided in Section 6.5 hereof.

Section 6.4. Permissive Indemnification and Advancement of Expenses. The Corporation may, as determined by the Board of Directors from time to time, indemnify to the fullest extent now or hereafter permitted by law, any person who was or is a party to or a witness in or is threatened to be made a party to or a witness in, or is otherwise involved in any threatened, pending or completed action, suit or proceeding, whether civil, criminal, administrative or investigative, by reason of the fact that he or she is or was an authorized representative of the Corporation, both as to action in his or her official capacity and as to action in another capacity while holding such office or position, against all expenses (including attorneys' fees and disbursements), judgments, fines (including excise taxes and penalties), and amounts paid in settlement actually and reasonably incurred by him or her in connection with such action, suit or proceeding. The Corporation may, as determined by the Board of Directors from time to time, pay expenses incurred by any such person by reason of his or her participation in any action, suit or proceeding referred to in this Section 6.4 in advance of the final disposition of such action, suit or proceeding only upon receipt of an undertaking by or on behalf of such person to repay such amount if it shall ultimately be determined that he or she is not entitled to be indemnified by the Corporation as provided in Section 5.5 hereof.

Section 6.5. Scope of Indemnification. Indemnification under this Article shall not be made by the Corporation in any case where a court determines that the alleged act or failure to act giving rise to the claim for indemnification is expressly prohibited by law or any successor statute in effect at the time of such alleged action or failure to take action.

Section 6.6. Insurance. The Corporation shall purchase and maintain insurance on behalf of each Director and officer against any liability asserted against or incurred by such Director or officer in any capacity, or arising out of such Director's or officer's status as such, whether or not the Corporation would have the power to indemnify such Director or officer against such liability under the provisions of this Article. The Corporation shall not be required to maintain such insurance if it is not available on terms satisfactory to the Board of Directors or if in the business judgment of the Board of Directors, either (i) the premium cost for such insurance is substantially disproportionate to the amount of coverage, or (ii) the coverage provided by such insurance is so limited by exclusions that there is insufficient benefit from such insurance. The Corporation may purchase and maintain insurance on behalf of any person referred to in Section 6.4 hereof against any liability asserted against or incurred by such person in any capacity, whether or not the Corporation would have the power to indemnify such person against such liability under the provisions of this Article.

Section 6.7. Funding to Meet Indemnification Obligations. The Corporation may, in lieu of or in addition to the purchase and maintenance of insurance referred to in Section 5.6 hereof, establish and maintain a fund of any nature or otherwise secure or insure in any manner its indemnification obligations, whether arising under or pursuant to this Article or otherwise.

Section 6.8. Miscellaneous. Each Director and officer of the Corporation shall be deemed to act in such capacity in reliance upon such rights of indemnification and advancement of expenses as are provided in this Article. The rights of indemnification or advancement of expenses provided by this Article shall not be deemed exclusive of any other rights in which any person seeking indemnification or advancement of expenses may be entitled, shall continue to a person who has ceased to be an authorized representative of the Corporation, and shall inure to the benefit of the heirs, executors and administrators of such person. Indemnification and advancement of expenses under this Article shall be provided whether or not the indemnified liability arises or arose from any threatened, pending or completed action by or in the right of the Corporation. Any repeal or modification of this Article by the Board of Directors of the Corporation shall not adversely affect any right of protection existing at the time of such repeal or modification to which any person may be entitled under this Article.

Section 6.9. Definition of Corporation. For purposes of this Article, references to the "Corporation" shall include, in addition to the resulting corporation, any constituent corporation absorbed in a consolidation or merger which, if its separate existence had continued, would have had power and authority to indemnify its authorized representatives so that any person who is or was an authorized constituent corporation shall stand in the same position under this Article with respect to the resulting or surviving corporation as he or she would have with respect to such constituent corporation if its separate existence had continued.

Section 6.10. Definition of Authorized Representative. For purposes of this Article, the term "authorized representative" shall mean a Director, officer, employee or agent of the Corporation or of any subsidiary of the Corporation, or a trustee, custodian, administrator or fiduciary of any employee benefit plan established and maintained by the Corporation or by any subsidiary of the Corporation, or a person serving another corporation, partnership, joint venture, trust or other enterprise in any of the foregoing capacities at the request of the Corporation.

ARTICLE VII MISCELLANEOUS

Section 7.1. Execution of Documents. All documents requiring official signatures under the seal of the Corporation shall be signed by the Chairperson, a Vice Chairperson, the President, or any Vice President with the affixation of the seal attested by the Secretary, Treasurer, an Assistant Secretary, or an Assistant Treasurer. All checks, drafts, acceptances, endorsements (other than for deposit) and all properly authorized notes, guarantees and evidences of indebtedness of the Corporation whatsoever shall be signed by such one or more officers or agents of the Corporation, subject to such requirements as to countersignatures or other conditions as the Board of Directors from time to time may determine. Facsimile signatures on checks may be used as authorized by the Board of Directors.

Section 7.2. Audit of Accounts. There shall be an annual audit of accounts of the Corporation by certified public accountants to be selected by the Board of Directors.

PRESBYTERIAN FOUNDATION, AND PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING

Section 7.3. Seal. The common or corporate seal of the Corporation is and shall be an impression approved by the Board of Directors bearing the words “The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Incorporated 1876, Pennsylvania.”

Section 7.4. Deposits. Monies deposited in banks or trust companies shall be in the name of the Corporation.

Section 7.5. Loans. No loans shall be made to any member of the Board of Directors or any officer or employee of the Corporation.

Section 7.6. Legacies and Gifts. Legacies and gifts not specifically designated to be endowment or trust funds, may be used for the general purposes of the Corporation.

Section 7.7. Borrowing; Disposition of Real Estate. The Board of Directors shall have authority to approve the borrowing of money or the purchase, sale, lease, or other disposition of any real estate of the Corporation.

Section 7.8. Conflict of Interest. The Board of Directors shall adopt a policy establishing a process for identifying and avoiding potential conflicts of interest among the elected directors, senior management and the business of the Board.

Section 7.9. Filing of Shareholder Resolutions. The General Assembly Council of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (which body has been authorized by the General Assembly of that Church to receive and act upon recommendations of the Committee on Mission Responsibility Through Investment pertaining to the filing of shareholder resolutions) is authorized to file for and in the name of the Corporation shareholder resolutions with corporations in which the Corporation owns stock and in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) Foundation does not own stock provided that pursuant to instructions from the General Assembly, said Council has agreed to assume full responsibility for such filing, including any and all expenses and liabilities incident thereto and has agreed to reimburse and indemnify the Corporation, its officers, and its Directors against any and all expenses, judgments and other liabilities arising out of or pertaining to any and all legal actions initiated in response to such filing by the corporation with which the resolution is filed, the shareholders of such corporation, the members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and by any other party, and provided further that such filing shall be done only in those situations where the said Council decides that the facts so warrant. The authorization to file shareholder resolutions for and in the name of the Corporation shall include the authority and responsibility for performing the requisite research, correspondence, visitation with corporate officials, filings with government agencies, and participation in shareholder meetings in support of such resolution.

ARTICLE VIII AMENDMENTS

Section 8.1 Subject to the limitations set forth herein, these Bylaws may be amended by a majority of the Directors in office at any regular meeting or any special meeting provided written notice of any amendment or amendments is given to each Director at least fifteen (15) days prior to such meeting. The Board of Directors shall not have the power to amend these Bylaws so as to change 1) the provisions in the first paragraph of Article 1.1 providing for the nomination of Directors by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and the election of those Directors by the General Assembly and 2) the provision in Article 2.1 that requires General Assembly confirmation of the President-elect, without prior approval of the General Assembly. Whenever these bylaws require a specific number or percentage of votes to approve an action, the provision of the bylaws setting forth that requirement shall not be amended or repealed by any lesser number or percentage of votes. Any amendment to these Bylaws adopted by the Board of Directors shall be reported to the next General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Any amendment of the bylaws shall take effect when adopted unless otherwise provided in the resolution adopted to effect the change.

Item 15-E

[The Assembly Committee on Board of Pensions, Presbyterian Foundation, and Presbyterian Publishing approved Item 15-E. See pp. 11, 12.]

The Board of Pensions recommends that the 218th General Assembly (2008) receive the report regarding the following amendments to the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) (the “Plan”) that the Board of Pensions’ adopted since the 217th General Assembly (2006):

1. The following experience apportionments in the Pension Plan and the corresponding amendments of Appendix B of the Benefits Plan (the History of Experience Apportionment table):

a. For Plan Year 2006 (Effective July 1, 2007)

- A 3.7 percent (3.7%) increase in retirement and survivor’s pension benefits for members and eligible survivors receiving benefits as of July 1, 2007; and

- A 3.7 percent (3.7%) increase in accrued pension credits as of December 31, 2006, for active, disabled, and terminated vested members in the Pension Plan as of July 1, 2007.

b. For Plan Year 2007 (Effective July 1, 2008)

- A 3.8 percent (3.8%) increase in retirement and survivor’s pension benefits for members and eligible survivors receiving benefits as of July 1, 2008; and

- A 3.8 percent (3.8%) increase in accrued pension credits as of December 31, 2007, for active, disabled, and terminated vested members in the Pension Plan as of July 1, 2008.

2. The following disability benefit increases in the Death and Disability Plan and the corresponding amendments of Appendix C of the Benefits Plan (the History of Disability Benefit Increases table):

a. For Plan Year 2006

- A four percent (4.0%) increase in disability benefits for those receiving such benefits on December 31, 2006, beginning July 1, 2007.

b. For Plan Year 2007

- A four percent (4.0%) increase in disability benefits for those receiving such benefits on December 31, 2007, beginning July 1, 2008.

3. Section 2.1 of the Pension Plan, effective January 1, 2008, as described below.

4. Section 8.1(b) of the Pension Plan, effective January 1, 2007, as described below.

5. Section 13.4(b)(1) of the Medical Plan, effective January 1, 2008, as described below.

Rationale

1. Benefits Plan Amendments

The process for amending the Plan is established in the Plan document (Article XIX). The Board of Pensions has the sole discretion and authority to adopt Plan amendments.

- Amendments to the Pension Plan (Articles VI, VII, VIII and IX) that are in the nature of a benefit reduction or a Pension Plan dues increase are only effective upon approval of the General Assembly. The Board of Pensions must provide written notice of its intent to submit such Pension Plan amendments to the General Assembly and the Plan members, local churches, and presbyteries at least sixty (60) days prior to the commencement of the General Assembly.

15 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BOARD OF PENSIONS,
PRESBYTERIAN FOUNDATION, AND PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING

- All other amendments to the Plan adopted by the Board of Pensions must be reported to the next succeeding General Assembly and to the members, local churches, and presbyteries in a reasonable manner.

Since the 217th General Assembly (2006), the Board of Pensions has not adopted any amendment to the Pension Plan that requires the approval of General Assembly prior to becoming effective.

Since the 217th General Assembly (2006), the Board of Pensions granted experience apportionments and disability benefit increases for Plan Years 2006 and 2007 and adopted other amendments to the Pension and Medical Plans. A summary of the amendments to the Plan is provided below. The effective date of the amendments is January 1, 2008, unless otherwise noted.

A letter advising the Benefits Plan members, local churches, and presbyteries of this report and the amendments was mailed on March 20, 2008. The letter and a complete copy of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (2008) are available on the Website of the Board of Pensions at www.pensions.org or by calling 1-800-PRES-PLAN (1-800-773-7752).

2. Pensions Plan Amendments

a. Experience Apportionment Grants

The Pension Plan provides in Section 7.3 that the Board of Pensions may determine, in its sole discretion, that sufficient Pension Plan assets have accumulated, due to favorable investment and actuarial experience, over and above those required for actuarial reserves, general contingency reserves, and other special reserves, to grant an experience apportionment.

The Board of Pensions is pleased to report to the 218th General Assembly (2008) that in the judgment of the board of directors of the Board of Pensions, sufficient Pension Plan assets were in hand at the end of Plan Years 2006 and 2007 as a result of cumulative favorable investment and actuarial experience to permit experience apportionments. Therefore, the Board of Pensions approved the following experience apportionment grants for the Pension Plan and the corresponding amendments of Appendix B of the Benefits Plan (the History of Experience Apportionment table):

(1) For Plan Year 2006 (Effective July 1, 2007)

- A 3.7 percent (3.7%) increase in retirement and survivor's pension benefits for members and eligible survivors receiving benefits as of July 1, 2007.

- A 3.7 percent (3.7%) increase in accrued pension credits as of December 31, 2006, for active, disabled, and terminated vested members in the Pension Plan as of July 1, 2007.

(2) For Plan Year 2007 (Effective July 1, 2008)

- A 3.8 percent (3.8%) increase in retirement and survivor's pension benefits for members and eligible survivors receiving benefits on July 1, 2008.

- A 3.8 percent (3.8%) increase in accrued pension credits as of December 31, 2007 for active, disabled, and terminated vested members in the Pension Plan on July 1, 2008.

b. Other Pension Plan Amendments

(1) Effective Salary Definition Amendment

The definition of Effective Salary in Section 2.1, Definitions, was amended and restated effective January 1, 2008. The amendment excludes employer matching contributions to the Retirement Savings Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) from Effective Salary. The intent is to increase employee participation in the Retirement Savings Plan by encouraging employers to offer a matching contribution to employee elective deferrals. The definition now reads as follows:

“EFFECTIVE SALARY. Any compensation received during a Plan Year by a Benefits Plan Member from an employing organization, including but not limited to any sums paid as a housing (including utilities and furnishings) allowance. Effective Salary shall also include any deferred compensation (funded or unfunded) credited to or contributed on account of a Member by an employing organization during a Plan Year, with the exception of any amounts contributed as an employer contribution to the Retirement Savings Plan under a matching contribution program that is available to at least all employees of the employer in same employment classification, and any salary reduction contributions to a plan or other arrangement providing a tax-favored benefit. Effective Salary does not include amounts received for reimbursement of professional expenses through an accountable reimbursement plan or Social Security amounts up to fifty percent (50%) of a minister's Self-Employment Contributions Act obligations. With respect to a Member eligible for a housing allowance, the amount for housing is calculated as follows: if a Manse is provided, the amount shall be at least thirty percent (30%) of all other compensation described above; if no Manse is provided, the amount shall be the actual housing allowance."

(2) Eligibility Requirements for Retirement

The eligibility requirements for retirement were modified, effective January 1, 2007, to clarify that a termination of service is required before a member may receive retirement benefits from the Pension Plan either in the form of a lump-sum distribution or a retirement pension. Section 8.1(b) now reads that a member of the Pension Plan shall be entitled to initiate retirement benefits if the member has terminated employment with his or her most recent eligible service employer.

2. Death and Disability Plan Amendments

a. Disability Benefit Increases

The Death and Disability Plan provides in Section 11.3(h) that the Board of Pensions may determine, in its sole discretion, that sufficient Death and Disability Plan assets have accumulated, due to favorable investment and actuarial experience, over and above those required for actuarial reserves, general contingency reserves, and other special reserves, to grant a disability benefit increase.

The Board of Pensions is pleased to report to the 218th General Assembly (2008) that, in the judgment of the board of directors of the Board of Pensions, sufficient Death and Disability Plan assets were in hand at the end of Plan Years 2006 and 2007 as a result of cumulative favorable investment and actuarial experience to permit disability benefit increases. Therefore, the Board of Pensions approved the following Disability Benefit Increases in accordance with Section 11.3(h) of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.):

(1) For Plan Year 2006

- A 4 percent (4.0%) increase in disability benefits for those receiving such benefits on December 31, 2006, beginning July 1, 2007.

(2) For Plan Year 2007

- A 4 percent (4.0%) increase in disability benefits for those receiving such benefits on December 31, 2007, beginning July 1, 2008.

3. Medical Plan Amendments

Since the 217th General Assembly (2006), the Board of Pensions adopted several amendments to the Medical Plan in response to changes in vendors and federal law and the commencement of the Medicare Prescription Drug Program.

Changes to Prescription Drug Program

Section 13.4(b)(1) of the Medical Plan was amended to implement the preferred home delivery model for maintenance medications under the Prescription Drug Program. Effective January 1, 2008, the Plan provides that, in addition to the existing copayment amounts described in 13.4(b)(1)(a)–(c) of the Medical Plan, the member shall also be responsible for an additional copayment of $5 for each generic drug prescription, $10 for each brand-name drug prescription, and $15 for each non-formulary prescription drug refill at a retail pharmacy beyond the first two fills of the prescription.

Increased utilization has resulted in double digit increases in the overall cost of the Prescription Drug Program each year. Encouraging the use of the mail order option for maintenance medications was one of the few options the Board of Pensions had to reduce Plan costs without reducing benefits for members. It was projected that if all members moved to the use of mail order for maintenance medications, estimated annual savings to the Medical Plan would be approximately $2 million and Plan members themselves would save another $1 million. While the savings on any one prescription are not large, the cumulative savings are significant since approximately 300,000 prescriptions for maintenance medications are filled each year.

There were two basic options available to the Board of Pensions to increase the use of mail order services, mandatory or preferred home delivery. The Board of Pensions chose the preferred home delivery model, with an effective date of January 1, 2008. Under this model, members will continue to have the option of using a retail pharmacy; however, a surcharge will apply to make up for the higher cost of filling the prescription.

Item 15-Info

A. The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) 2006–2007 Agency Summary

Marking the 291st anniversary of the beginning of the work now carried on by this board and presented to the 218th General Assembly (2008) meeting in San Jose, California, June 2008.

The responsibilities assigned to the Board of Pensions by the General Assembly are:

- The design and administration of a comprehensive program of retirement, death, disability, medical, and optional benefits for ministers, missionaries, and other church workers.
- The design and administration of a program of financial assistance to help meet needs that are beyond the scope of the pension and benefits program.
- The establishment and operation of a retirement housing program for eligible retirees and their spouses.
- The receipt, investment, and disbursement of the funds required to support these plans and programs for the sole and exclusive benefit of members and beneficiaries of the Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and other beneficiaries of the assistance and retirement housing programs.

This report incorporates by reference the 2006 and 2007 Annual Reports of The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), in which the financial information for the Board of Pensions and the Plans and Programs it administers is presented.

1. The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)

The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) provides pension benefits, death and disability benefits, medical benefits, optional benefits (supplemental death benefits, supplemental disability benefits, dental coverage, long-term care insurance, and a retirement savings plan), and a retirement and financial planning education program. The Book of Order (G-14.0534) mandates that all ministers of the Word and Sacrament in installed positions must participate in the Benefits Plan. A particular church may also enroll other church employees in the Benefits Plan. Ministers of the Word and Sacrament in non-installed positions and employees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or affiliated organizations may also be enrolled in the Benefits Plan.

The Affiliated Benefits Program (ABP) offers the same benefits, including the Retirement Savings Plan but excluding the Pension Plan, to employing organizations for certain nonmandated employees of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) or affiliated organizations.

The 215th General Assembly (2003) approved changes to the Benefits Plan amendment process to accommodate biennial meetings of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). The right to amend the Benefits Plan is reserved solely to the Board of Pensions. Amendments to the Plan that constitute a reduction in Pension Plan benefits or an increase in Pension Plan dues are effective only upon approval by the General Assembly. The bylaws of the Board of Pensions require approval of a two-thirds majority of directors present at a duly constituted meeting to amend the Pension Plan except for a benefit reduction or a dues increase (which amendments require the approval of the General Assembly). The Board of Pensions must provide sixty days' notice to the General Assembly, Plan members, local churches, and presbyteries of any amendment requiring General Assembly approval and reasonable notice of any other amendment to the Benefits Plan.

2. The Community Nature of the Benefits Plan

The Benefits Plan of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), administered by the Board of Pensions, is designed to care for and protect the community of Benefits Plan members as a whole.

An employing organization's cost of providing benefits for its employees enrolled for pension, medical, death, and disability benefits is not based on their marital status, gender, family size, or age. The dues contributed by the employing organization are instead based on a percentage of the participating members' salaries and represent that organization's share of the cost of protecting the entire community. The salaries used to determine the dues for the Pension Plan, the Death and Disability Plan, and the Medical Plan are subject to both minimum and maximum salary amounts.

15 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BOARD OF PENSIONS,
PRESBYTERIAN FOUNDATION, AND PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING

In order to assist lower-paid employees, no employee accrues benefits at less than the median salary for his or her employment classification (i.e., ministers of the Word and Sacrament, lay exempt, lay nonexempt). In order to contain the cost of healthcare, there are caps on medical deductibles and copayment expenses for higher paid members.

Affiliated Benefits Program medical dues are determined by an employing organization's benefits subsidy and the participation levels selected by its members. Some members may choose employee-only coverage, while others may choose to cover an entire family. This flexibility is one of the key advantages of the Affiliated Benefits Program.

3. Pension Plan and Death and Disability Plan Amendments

a. Pension Experience Apportionment and Disability Benefit Increases

The designs of the Pension Plan and the Death and Disability Plan provide for the granting of pension experience apportionments and disability benefit increases. When deciding to grant experience apportionments, the directors of the Board of Pensions consider increases in the cost of living, investment and actuarial experience, level of reserves, and questions of fundamental fairness for all participants in the Plan. Effective July 1, 2007, a 3.7 percent experience apportionment and a 4.0 percent disability benefit increase were granted. The directors of the Board of Pensions approved a 3.8 percent experience apportionment and a 4.0 percent disability benefit increase to be effective July 1, 2008. Towers Perrin, actuarial advisors for the Board of Pensions, reported that there continued to be sufficient funds on hand to meet the obligations to current and future retirees and disabled members after recognizing the increased liability generated by the 2007 and 2008 apportionments and disability benefit increases.

(1) History of the Pension Apportionments and Disability Benefit Increases

A major function of experience apportionments is to help the pension credits of active members and the retirement income of pensioners keep pace with inflation. The disability benefit increases serve the same function for those receiving disability income payments. In Table I, the recent experience apportionments and disability benefit increases are compared to the Consumer Price Index (CPI), a measure of inflation in consumer goods and services.

(2) Impact of Experience Apportionments

For the years 1998 through 2007, Table II shows the number of ordained minister Plan members (with at least fifteen years of service) retiring at or after age sixty-five and the average annual amount of their pensions at the time of retirement. By applying the experience apportionments granted over the past ten years, the Benefits Plan has been able to fulfill its intent to shelter both pension credits and retirement income from the inroads of inflation. The average pension with an inflationary increase based solely on the CPI is shown for comparison.

b. Administrative Changes to the Pension Plan and Death and Disability Plan

The eligibility requirements for retirement were modified, effective January 1, 2007, to clarify that a termination of service is required before a member may receive retirement benefits from the Plan, either in the form of a lump-sum distribution or a retirement pension.

Effective January 1, 2008, the definition of Effective Salary was modified to exclude employer matching contributions to the Retirement Savings Plan from Effective Salary. The purpose of this change is to increase employee participation in the Retirement Savings Plan by encouraging employers to provide a matching contribution.

4. Medical Plan

In 2006 and 2007, Highmark, as the host “Blue Card” plan, continued to deliver on its commitment to network efficacy, measured by both broad member access and deep provider discounts. Combined savings to the Medical Plan and to its members generated by network use were in excess of $110 million each year, contributing a level of continued stability to the Plan’s reserves.

While the reserve stability and the 2005 plan year experience allowed the Board of Pensions to hold dues at 19 percent for the 2006 plan year, the risk of reserve erosion made it necessary for the Board of Pensions to raise dues to 19.5 percent for 2007. The overall experience for both 2006 and 2007 was aligned with more optimistic forecasts, but, because the medical care trend continues to significantly outpace payroll increases, it was prudent to take the 2007 dues action. Since that measure had the desired effect, no change in dues was made by the Board of Pensions for 2008.

In addition to more moderate trends in the Medicare Supplement Plan, the advent of the Medicare Part D pharmacy program in 2006 created a relatively stable cost environment for eligible retirees. Specifically, to encourage plan sponsors like the Board of Pensions to continue their Medicare Supplement programs, the Federal government began providing subsidies linked to the value of the Medicare D Prescription Drug Program. In anticipation of receiving this subsidy, individual monthly subscription dues were reduced from $194 to $174 (or 10 percent) per month for each subscriber in 2006. Without this subsidy, dues otherwise would have been increased by approximately 15 percent. Having qualified for the Medicare Part D subsidy again in 2007, the Board of Pensions was able to hold these rates constant for 2007 and 2008.

A key strategy for the 2006 plan year was to focus on health management and employee wellness. The Board of Pensions promoted appropriate use of preventive care benefits by offering, on a pilot program basis, $100 to eligible members who completed all recommended screenings and exams. Early utilization results were a somewhat disappointing 20 percent, but, with additional outreach and conversion from the pilot program to a fully operational plan component early in 2007, the rate of participation by eligible members did increase. The Board of Pensions also initiated lifestyle behavior change programs with the introduction of the Mayo Clinic Tobacco Quitline in October 2006 and encouraged member use of a 24/7 nurse hotline. By the end of 2006, approximately 2,500 Medical Plan participants were actively engaged with CareAllies in the Board of Pensions Disease Management program that targets diabetes and cardiac conditions.

The Board of Pensions’ behavioral health vendor relationship transitioned from ValueOptions to CIGNA Behavioral Health (CBH) in 2006 through a cooperative purchase with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America and the Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod. This relationship with CBH includes care management and claims processing services for mental health and substance abuse as well as an Employee Assistance Program (EAP) component. This transition provided another opportunity to promote the EAP program, resulting in an almost 100 percent increase in utilization of EAP-related services by Plan members.

Through its coalition purchasing partnership with other denominations, the Board of Pensions again entertained bids from two competing pharmacy benefit management companies in 2006. The Express Scripts bid was at least as favorable as that submitted by a competitor, resulting in a decision to renew that relationship through 2009. Despite the administrative cost efficiencies of this arrangement, increased utilization has resulted in double digit increases in the overall cost of the Prescription Drug Program each year. Encouraging the use of the mail order option for maintenance medications was one of the few options the Board of Pensions had to reduce Plan costs without reducing benefits for members. It was projected that, if all members moved to the use of mail order for maintenance medications, estimated annual savings to the Medical Plan would be approximately $2 million and Plan members themselves would save another $1 million. While the savings on any one prescription are not large, the cumulative savings are significant since approximately 300,000 prescriptions for maintenance medications are filled each year.

There were two basic options available to the Board of Pensions to increase the use of mail order services, mandatory or preferred home delivery. The Board of Pensions chose the preferred home delivery model, with an effective date of January 1, 2008. Under this model, members will continue to have the option of using a retail pharmacy; however, a surcharge will apply to make up for the higher cost of filling the prescription.

Concurrent with the decision to increase medical dues for 2007, the Board of Pensions implemented new and expanded initiatives to increase personal health stewardship. These initiatives included offering the $100 Preventive Incentive to more than 18,000 Plan members aged fifty and older and the expansion of its Disease Management Program to address fourteen additional conditions, including, among others, lower back pain, oncology needs, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), and depression. This expanded Disease Management program has resulted in the active engagement of more than 5,000 members struggling with chronic conditions. An additional health management initiative included the launching of a customized Mayo Clinic e-health portal, EmbodyHealth, and the Mayo Clinic Health Risk Assessment (HRA). EmbodyHealth provides active members and their families with a credible and reliable online source of independent health information, tools, and resources from one of the most trusted names in healthcare. Approximately 8,000 members have registered on the site. By completing the online HRA, participants obtain a personalized report that identifies their specific health risks and directs them to available health improvement resources.

The Affiliated Benefits Program (ABP) continues to function as a viable option for many employing organizations that want to provide comprehensive medical coverage, and/or disability and death benefits to their employees. By design, its aggregate experience has been self-supporting since its inception. Following back-to-back years of 15 percent dues increases in 2004 and 2005, the ABP had no increase in 2006. Dues for 2007 and 2008 rose 8.8 percent and 9.2 percent, respectively, consistent with revenue growth for the Traditional Medical Plan. Enrollment has declined slightly, ending 2007 at 1,951 members. This number reflects a decrease of just over 7 percent from the 2005 Plan year. To help retain this business, the Board of Pensions continues to hold an annual ABP informational forum in conjunction with the Regional Benefits Consultations.

The 213th General Assembly (2001) asked the Board of Pensions to comment in its future reports about the parity of mental health benefits provided through the Benefits Plan by “Urg[ing] The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) to evaluate, on an annual basis, issues of parity between coverage for mental health and medical and surgical benefits under plans offered by the Board of Pensions and include their evaluation in their annual reports to future General Assemblies” (Minutes, 2001, Part I, pp. 48–49). Other than the addition of a disease management program for depression, there have been no changes since the last report that would affect the parity of these benefits. The Board of Pensions believes that the parity standard continues to be satisfied.

5. Assistance Program

a. Overview

In keeping with its promise to care for those who devote their lives to the church, the Board of Pensions’ Assistance Program helps advance the mission of the church in two key ways:

- by providing an important safety net to church workers and their families whose needs exceed the bounds of the Benefits Plan and personal resources, and
- by strengthening the church’s future leadership by providing strategic assistance and support to pastors who need it.

Support for this program comes from gifts, legacies directed to the Board of Pensions, endowment income, and one half of the undesignated portion of the Christmas Joy Offering.

b. Retirement Housing Program

The Retirement Housing Program was initiated in 1883 to provide housing for eligible ministers. This program consists of the Homes Program, which offers affordable housing in properties owned by the Board of Pensions, and the Housing Supplement Program, which gives financial assistance to help retirees maintain their own homes or move to retirement communities.

(1) The Homes Program

Persons who have served in the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) for twenty years or more are eligible for the Homes Program. Rents in this program are structured so that residents pay according to their ability, contributing the lesser of:

- thirty percent of their total annual income, excluding post-retirement earned income, or
- an appraised fair rental value of the home.

The Homes Program presently consists of two individual homes and twenty-two houses in a cluster called El Sombroso Oaks in Los Gatos, California. Homes related to various governing bodies of the church also provide services under contract with the Board of Pensions.

(2) Transition to the Housing Supplement Program

More ministers are purchasing homes during the course of their ministry than in earlier generations. This reality has lowered the demand for church-related retirement housing. Recognizing this shift, the Board of Pensions requested permission from the 200th General Assembly (1988) to change the Homes Program from one based solely on homes owned by the Board of Pensions to one based on housing assistance supplements. The General Assembly approved this change in strategic direction and authorized the sale of properties then owned and received thereafter, with the proceeds going to the Housing Supplement Program. The General Assembly withheld approval for the sale of two housing communities operated by the Board of Pensions and instructed it to continue its "ownership and management of the clusters at Morganwood (Swarthmore, Pennsylvania) and El Sombroso Oaks (Los Gatos, California) with no further sale of these clusters without General Assembly Approval" (Minutes, 1988, Part I, p. 97).

The 214th General Assembly (2002) approved the sale of Morganwood, a cluster of twenty-nine housing units. On October 29, 2003, an agreement of sale for Morganwood was signed with Swarthmore College, a Quaker-affiliated institution adjacent to the Morganwood property. The proceeds from the sale are used to support the Retirement Housing Program and provide subsidies to current Morganwood residents. Under the agreement of sale, the current residents are entitled to continue living in their units until they choose to vacate them or at the expiration of twenty years from the closing date (January 14, 2004), whichever is earlier. The Board of Pensions provides subsidies to the continuing Presbyterian residents of Morganwood who are related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Board of Pensions. These subsidies totaled approximately $170,300 for 2006 and $161,800 for 2007. Each year, the Board of Pensions reviews the subsidies with the residents to determine their future needs.

Similarly, the 215th General Assembly (2003) approved an affiliation agreement between Southern California Presbyterian Homes (SCPH) and Westminster Gardens. The agreement was signed by all parties and the certificate of authority was received from the Department of Social Services in California, effective May 4, 2004.

Westminster Gardens, Duarte, California, was established in 1949, by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A., to care for retired missionaries. Since its founding, this retirement community has been available for retired church workers and their spouses. The denomination assigned responsibility for the oversight of the affairs of Westminster Gardens to the Board of Pensions in 1972.

As part of the affiliation agreement with SCPH, the Board of Pensions guaranteed a line of credit, obtained by Westminster Gardens, to a maximum of $3,500,000 for a period not to exceed five years. The line of credit was for the initial phase of rehabilitation work on the Westminster Gardens property and was secured by a promissory note and deed of trust in favor of the Board of Pensions. This line of credit was paid in full on December 27, 2006. As a result, the guarantee on the line of credit provided by the Board of Pensions was also cancelled on December 27, 2006.

Under the terms of the affiliation agreement, the Board of Pensions is providing rent subsidies to residents who are related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and the Board of Pensions. The total amount of the subsidy was $281,500 in 2006, and $231,500 in 2007. These payments were in addition to the direct assistance provided to qualifying residents under the Board of Pensions Income and Housing Supplements Programs.

Over the long term, the Board of Pensions expects to continue to reduce the number of retirement homes it owns and operates and focus its efforts on providing financial assistance for the housing needs of eligible retirees and their spouses.

c. Financial Assistance Programs

The financial assistance programs provide emergency and ongoing financial aid for members of the pension and health-care plans and, for some programs, other employees of Presbyterian churches. They also work to strengthen future leadership for the church by providing strategic assistance and support to pastors.

In recent years, the Board of Pensions has introduced a number of pilot programs as it seeks to be more proactive in addressing the needs of church workers. These pilot programs are intended to complement the traditional assistance programs.

The financial assistance programs have been organized under three overarching categories:

(1) Church Workers: Urgent Financial Needs

(a) Shared Grants

These grants are designed to meet the financial needs that an active or retired church worker is unable to handle. The objective is to help the person who has a financial problem with everyday needs or medical/dental costs not covered by the Benefits Plan or insurance. A grant is shared by a governing body and/or an employing organization and the Board of Pensions. Annual Shared Grants are usually approved for a calendar year but are disbursed monthly. Other Shared Grants are approved for a one-time payment or can be a monthly disbursement for a period of less than a calendar year.

(b) Emergency Assistance Grants

These grants are provided for one-time, special needs when no other financial resources are available. At times, members may have special needs that are beyond the scope of the Benefits Plan. Occasionally, governing bodies and employing organizations are unable to participate in a Shared Grant because of insufficient funds.

(c) Adoption Assistance Grants

These grants are distributed to members of the Benefits Plan who adopted a child (under age 21) on or after January 1, 2006. The monies for these grants come from gifts to the Assistance Program and the Relief of Conscience Fund. One grant of $3,000 is given for each eligible adopted child to help defray the cost of the adoption. Adoption Assistance Grants were made totaling $57,000 in 2006, and $84,000 in 2007.

(d) Transition-to-College Assistance Grants

These grants are distributed to eligible members of the traditional Benefits Plan who have a child enrolled as a full-time freshman at an accredited college or university and whose adjusted gross income is below twice the churchwide median salary. The grants are meant to help mitigate transitional, one-time expenses, such as the purchase of a computer or dorm room furnishings, that are not covered by traditional financial aid. (This is a three-year pilot program begun in 2007.)

(2) Retired Church Workers: Financial and Housing Needs

(a) Income Supplements

These supplements are designed to raise the monthly income of retired church workers and their surviving spouses whose total annual income from all sources is below levels established by the Board of Pensions. The guidelines for the Income Supplement program are reviewed each year. The guideline levels for 2007 were $24,600 for a single person and $29,520 for a married couple. For 2008, the levels are $25,700 and $30,840, respectively.

(b) Housing Supplements

These supplements provide financial assistance to help eligible retirees and their surviving spouses remain in their own homes or move to a retirement facility. Each year the guideline for the Housing Supplements program is reviewed. The maximum annual income level guideline for Housing Supplement eligibility in 2007 was $34,400. For 2008, it is $36,000. (This program provides the financial assistance component of the Retirement Housing Program for eligible retirees.)

(3) Pastors: Vocational Leadership Needs

(a) Seminary Debt Assistance Grants

These grants are provided to ministers of the Word and Sacrament serving in the first seven years of ministry after ordination. To be eligible, a minister of the Word and Sacrament must be in a full-time, called, pastoral position in a PC(USA) church of less than 150 members with a budget of less than $250,000. An eligible minister may receive a grant of up to $2,500 per year for up to four years to help repay loans incurred while pursuing education leading to a Master of Divinity degree. (This pilot program has been extended through 2010.)

(b) Middle Governing Body Grants

These are matching grants of up to $20,000 that are provided to a synod or a group of three or more presbyteries to help them conduct continuing education events focused on practical skills training for pastors. (This is a three-year pilot program begun in 2006.)

(c) Sabbath Sabbatical Support Grants

A three-year pilot program begun in 2008, these grants are designed to help pastors serving congregations of less than 200 members take sabbaticals that will strengthen their skills and renew their ministries. The grants are for $3,000. This program is administered in cooperation with synods and presbyteries.

(d) Presbyterian CREDO

Presbyterian CREDO is modeled after a very successful program of the Church Pension Fund of the Episcopal Church. Its mission is to provide opportunities for clergy to examine significant areas of their lives and to prayerfully discern the future direction of their vocation as they respond to God's call in a lifelong process of practice and transformation. During an eight-day, faith-based conference, Presbyterian CREDO helps ministers examine vocational, financial, health, and spiritual aspects of their ministries and discover how these seemingly disparate parts of their lives intersect. The CREDO experience is designed to trigger personal discovery through guided reflection, introspection, and dialogue. Each participant commits to extensive reflection through pre-conference instruments that focus on personal and professional wellness. In 2006, the Board of Pensions conducted three CREDO conferences with the assistance of Episcopal CREDO. In 2007, four Presbyterian CREDO conferences were held. There will be seven conferences in 2008.

d. Funds Development

In response to the continuing and emerging needs of ministry and the challenges facing those who serve the church, the Board of Pensions entered a more deliberate phase in its funds development effort in 2005.

The Christmas Joy Offering remains a vital financial support to the Assistance Program, and the Board of Pensions continues to work with the racial ethnic schools and the staff of Mission Education and Promotion to promote this denomination-wide offering.

In examining long-term trends in the usage of the Assistance Program and in consultation with the larger church, the Board of Pensions has determined that financial support beyond half of the Christmas Joy Offering is required to meet the increasing demands on existing programs and to fund new programs to meet emerging needs.

To ensure communication with other national entities of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) that are also seeking contributions, the Board of Pensions designed and hosted an Executive Funds Development Forum to agree on and implement "Principles of Funds Development." In 2003, the agency leaders agreed to use these principles as a basis for coordinating their efforts.

The Board of Pensions has selected a theme for funds development communications ("Keeping Our Promises") and established the capability for online contributions through the Board of Pensions Web site, www.pensions.org. It also established a planned giving initiative to encourage deferred gifts and approved a gift acceptance policy. Finally, as a means to describe its programs and communicate opportunities for financial support, the Board of Pensions published a booklet in 2007 that describes in detail the Assistance Program and its theological foundations.

6. Conflicts of Interest and Ethics

The Board of Pensions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) has policies covering conflicts of interest and ethics. The directors and employees have complied with those policies.

B. *New Covenant Trust Company, N.A.

New Covenant Trust Company, N.A. (NCTC) was chartered January 2, 1998, as the first Nationally Chartered Trust Company owned by a not-for-profit foundation. The NCTC serves as back-office service provider for the Foundation and the endowment funds it holds as fiduciary for the benefit of the General Assembly, local congregations, and other Presbyterian-affiliated organizations. The company also serves as investment adviser to New Covenant Funds and trustee of various types of trust instruments in which there is a Presbyterian or Presbyterian-related beneficial interest. The Board of the NCTC has enacted policies and procedures to ensure compliance with banking and securities law and provides oversight of the delivery of trust services to the Presbyterian community.

15 ASSEMBLY COMMITTEE ON BOARD OF PENSIONS,

The distributing broker dealer for the Funds, through whom the Foundation and NCTC employees are licensed, is New Covenant Funds Distributor, Inc. (“the Distributor”), a wholly owned subsidiary of NCTC. The distributor is subject to oversight by the NCTC board and thus, ultimately the Foundation and the General Assembly.

The Foundation and NCTC consistently strive to deliver superior service to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and seek to enhance the vehicles available to Presbyterians to express their Christian faith and generous stewardship. We are also exploring ways to partner with Presbyterian and related organizations in the delivery of enhanced trust services, such as personal trusts, wholly charitable trusts, and charitable remainder trusts. The NCTC now accepts IRA accounts and provides life and legacy financial planning. These estate-planning devices provide an opportunity to care for loved ones while providing for planned giving opportunities.

The following individuals have been confirmed by former General Assemblies and continue in their service as directors of New Covenant Trust Company, N.A.

Former Foundation Trustees

Karen C. Anderson, CPA, White, female, married, lay, under 50, Synod of the Pacific; Lynwood L. Battle Jr., retired, black, male, single, lay, over 50, Synod of the Covenant; George J. Hauptfuhrer III, investment adviser, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of South Atlantic; Robert A. McNeely, banker, black, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Southern California; Richard J. Seiwel, (former adjunct trustee), investment adviser, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of the Trinity; B. Cary Tolley III, tax attorney, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of South Atlantic.

OGA Designee

Doska D. Ross, OGA staff, white, female, single, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters.

GAC Designee

Currently, there is a vacancy in the position for the GAC designated board member while we await a nomination by the GAC.

NCTC Staff

Robert E. Leech, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters.

Other

Bruce K. Dudley, estate planning attorney, white, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Living Waters; Susan R. Ingram, manager, treasury, white, female, married, lay, under 50, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic; Charles H. Self III, investment manager, black, male, married, lay, over 50, Synod of Lincoln Trails.

Item 16-01

[The assembly approved Item 16-01 with amendment. See p. 33.]

On Reaffirming Our Common Faith in Jesus Christ—From the Presbytery of East Tennessee.

The Presbytery of East Tennessee overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to

1. affirm as sisters and brother[s] in Christ[,] our common faith in~~[, and allegiance to,]~~ Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior; and

2. request that~~[, at his discretion,]~~ the Moderator of the 218th General Assembly (2008) ~~[say before every vote]~~ [when calling for the vote say:] ~~[‘As sisters and brothers in Christ,]~~ [‘Sisters and brothers,] sharing our common faith in~~[, and allegiance to,]~~ Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, [and walking humbly with our God,] let us proceed to vote on the question before us.

Rationale

In the PC(USA), individuals professing faith are asked, “Who is your Lord and Savior?” They respond, “Jesus Christ is my Lord and Savior.”

Persons ordained and installed as officers and ministers of the Word and Sacrament in the PC(USA) affirm faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior.

The PC(USA) desperately needs an affirmation of common ground.

Our mutual affirmation of Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior is the common ground that allows us to talk about any and all issues.

Without this common faith in Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, there is not an issue we can address together.

Item 16-02

[The assembly approved Item 16-02 with comment. See pp. 33–34.]

A Call to Seek God for Spiritual Renewal of the Church—From the Presbytery of San Joaquin.

The Presbytery of San Joaquin overtures the 218th General Assembly (2008) to call upon each congregation and presbytery of the PC(USA) to gather in Solemn Assemblies within the next two years, to seek God for spiritual renewal of the Church of Jesus Christ, following the command of God through the prophet Joel<sup>1</sup>.

Comment:

Realizing that worship is our response to God’s love for us and that we pray for God to “put a new and right spirit within [us]” (Ps. 51:10), we invite each congregation and presbytery of the PC(USA) to gather in times each sets aside for spiritual renewal through intentional gatherings such as spiritual assemblies, which may include personal and community worship, meditation, confession, forgiveness, fasting, and prayer.

Recognizing the biblical value of solemn assemblies for spiritual renewal, we request the Office of Theology and Worship to make available materials to include rich varieties of worship, Bible study, prayer, Christian meditation, and other spiritual disciplines.

Rationale

For decades the PC(USA) has attempted to turn the tide of decline in mission and membership, but to little avail. We have also labored to serve as salt and light in a society that appears to be growing darker with the passage of time. It seems that our efforts, as well intentioned as they have been, have been insufficient.

We can point to many causes for the ills of our great church, but we will have little hope of remedy until we embrace the reality that we cannot cure ourselves. But, that does not mean we are beyond hope. A study of history reveals that when churches and nations have fallen upon hard times and the people of God have turned to God for remedy, God has often given a fresh lease on Life<sup>2</sup>.

One means by which the people of God have sought God's remedies has been through Solemn Assemblies. Such gatherings are described frequently in Scripture, including those called by Moses, David, Nehemiah, and Joel, and the meeting of Jesus' disciples in the upper room following His ascension. Solemn Assemblies are simply times for God's people humbly to ask for God's perspective, to listen carefully, to confess our sins, to receive forgiveness in Jesus Christ, and to be freed to grow toward the fullness of the grace and truth that characterize our Lord Jesus Christ<sup>3</sup>.

No matter what our theological perspectives might be, we are united in our common need of God's grace. The call to Solemn Assembly is a call to join as one at the foot of the cross of our Lord and to beseech His mercy, in light of the promise of 2 Chronicles 7, "If my people who are called by my name humble themselves, pray, seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin and heal their land" (vs. 14).

Commissioners' Resolution. On Youth Participation at the General Assembly.

That the 218th General Assembly (2008) of the Presbyterian Church (USA) direct the Office of the General Assembly to celebrate youth and affirm their unique gifts and talents by welcoming and encouraging their full participation at each General Assembly, including service as volunteers.

Rationale

In 2008, youth (ages 12–17) from Central Presbyterian Church, Atlanta, Georgia, offered to volunteer at the General Assembly. Examples of the volunteer opportunities offered that the youth wished to provide were: ushering during worship, assisting with registration and ticket sales, and exhibit hall monitors. The youth were not allowed to volunteer at the 218th General Assembly (2008) due to an age restriction that all volunteers be at least eighteen years old.

In polity, theology, and witness, the gifts of youth are upheld, honored, and experienced in community through full participation in the life of the church. This resolution is to extend the reach of their inclusion beyond local congregations and into the General Assembly.

POLITY: The Book of Order outlines our understanding of membership in the church, participation by non-members, and presents a standard that is consistent in its inclusion of women and men of all ages.

Chapter III: The Church and Its Mission: Section G-3.0401b

b. [The Church is called] to a new openness to its own membership, by affirming itself as a community of diversity, becoming in fact as well as in faith a community of women and men of all ages, races, and conditions, and by providing for inclusiveness as a visible sign of the new humanity.

Chapter IV: The Church and Its Unity: Section G-4.0403

The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall give full expression to the rich diversity within its membership and shall provide means which will assure a greater inclusiveness leading to wholeness in its emerging life. Persons of all racial ethnic groups, different ages, both sexes, various disabilities, diverse geographical areas, different theological positions consistent with the Reformed tradition, as well as different marital conditions (married, single, widowed, or divorced) shall be guaranteed full participation and access to representation in the decision making of the church. (G-9.0104a)

Chapter V: The Church and Its Members: Section G-5.0301a

Persons not members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) are entitled to the following privileges:

a. All persons are welcome to participate in the life and worship of this church.

Chapter IX: Governing Bodies: Section G-9.0104a

a. Governing bodies of the church shall be responsible for implementing the church's commitment to inclusiveness and participation as stated in G-4.0403. All governing bodies shall work to become more open and inclusive and shall pursue affirmative action hiring procedures aiming at correcting patterns of discrimination on the basis of the categories listed in G-4.0403.

THEOLOGY: In Scripture, we hear God's claim on us all as members of the body of Christ (1 Cor. 12:12–26). The church, as the body of Christ, is woven together with these many different members, yet we are all connected to and dependent on each other. Just as the eye cannot say to the hand "I have no need of you" (1 Cor. 12:21), neither can one age demographic say to another "I have no need of you." While not all members have the same function (Rom. 12:4), Scripture clearly describes that all gifts are welcomed and needed to be the body of Christ (Rom. 12:4–8).

God's call is to all and extends to all ages. The stories of God's call to Timothy (1 Tim. 4:11–16), Jeremiah (Jer. 1:4–10), and David (1 Sam. 16:6–13) contain a consistent message of youth being called as prophets and leaders.

WITNESS: Asked why they wanted to be able to volunteer at the General Assembly, the youth from Central said:

"Every person is a child of God and we should all be able to participate." "Through full participation, we honor the gifts of everyone." "We want to take on more responsibility and involvement." "It will be more fun if we can serve." "We want to be a part of the church now and not have to wait until we are eighteen." "We want to experience the sense of community that comes with being part of the direction of the church."

Hearing and experiencing the witness of youth in our congregations has helped us understand how vitally important their faith is to them and how critical it is that we value their gifts and support their full participation in the life of the church. Experiences we have had in our church communities that compel us to share them with the General Assembly are:

Youth as church officers: elders and deacons;

Youth leadership in worship: youth Sunday, youth choir, youth handbell choir, lector, liturgist, ushering;

Youth leadership in mission: domestic and international mission trips, night shelter, foot clinic, outreach and advocacy center, AIDS walk, Hunger Walk;

Youth leadership in education: vacation Bible school group leaders, youth committee co-chair, youth committee members, assisting with younger children during congregational events.

The Reverend Jonathan Scanlon, Presbytery of Greater Atlanta
Elder Marie Andrews, Presbytery of Western Reserve

Item 17-1NB

[The assembly approved Item 17-1NB. See p. 16.]

That the 218th General Assembly (2008) direct the Office of Ministry with Youth to

- 1. provide the resource center or resource contact person of each presbytery with a copy of the DVD Soul Searching to enhance the outreach to teens; and
- 2. prepare a study guide to accompany the DVD.

Rationale

A major component of the information gathering completed by the Assembly Committee on Youth was the viewing of the documentary Soul Searching: A Movie About Teenagers and God, a creative representation of the findings of the National Study of Youth and Religion (<http://www.youthandreligion.org>). The committee found this DVD and the study it represents to be eye-opening resources of great value. As many of our congregations struggle to connect meaningfully with youth and young adults, it was the judgment of the vast majority of the committee that congregations and presbyteries would gain helpful insights from viewing this film.

---

Item 17-2NB

[The assembly approved Item 17-2NB. See p. 16.]

That the 218th General Assembly (2008)

- 1. Asks commissioners to take back to their churches and presbyteries the recommendation to develop a mentoring program for young people in their congregations and presbyteries, and to prayerfully and seriously consider being a mentor to at least one young person and enhance walking humbly with God.
- 2. Direct the Office of Ministries with Youth to
  - a. affirm the importance of the use of mentors in the spiritual formation of youth, with attention to “tweens” (ages 9–12), teenagers (ages 13–18), and also to young adults (ages 18+);
  - b. create and/or identify, and to disseminate tools and appropriate educational materials for training mentors and emphasizing active listening;
  - c. develop worship and programmatic resources to celebrate the rites of passage for “tweens,” “teens,” and young adults, and to commission their mentors.
  - d. include on the PC(USA) Website a page to report on the experiences of mentors.

Rationale

The Assembly Committee on Youth identified several key needs of youth after considering all the information gathered. Among these was the need for acceptance and belonging, for adults to listen with respect, for leadership development, and for a safe place to question and learn the language of faith. The committee felt that many of these needs are best addressed through the development of quality relationships between adults and young people. It was the desire of the committee that such relationships be encouraged through the creation of mentoring programs within congregations and for the development of resources to support such programs. This was of such great importance to members of the committee that they desired immediate implementation by those gathered at this assembly.

---

[The assembly approved Item 17-3NB. See p. 16.]

The 208th General Assembly (2008) directs the Moderator of the General Assembly to appoint a task force to seek input from youth, young adults, and adults to continue the dialogue begun at this assembly; find and present model programs; and focus on the needs and development of youth ministries, and report back to the 219th General Assembly (2010) specific recommendations for designing and conducting various youth ministries under a “new vision” for youth. The task force would be composed of ten youth and young adults, ages 15–21, and five adult mentors. The task force would meet four times prior to the 219th General Assembly (2010).

Rationale

It is undeniable that investing valuable General Assembly time and energy to consider youth, a crucial generation in our faith communities, was an essential exercise and is one that merits more time, attention, and resources that could be offered in the short time available at the General Assembly. Though the committee sought to discern God’s vision for youth and the PC(USA), this is a task that will require more time and more intensive youth involvement for its adequate completion. The Assembly Committee on Youth has begun an important dialogue that should be continued in a task force with a two-to-one youth-to-adult ratio. We became convinced that youth are best equipped to articulate the needs and possibilities for effective youth ministry and for a more comprehensive inclusion of youth in the life and mission of the church, but also that intergenerational collaboration contributes to fruitful discernment. It is the understanding of the committee that there are existing funds allocated within the budget of Office of Ministries with Youth that could be appropriately redirected to this effort.

---

Item 17-4NB

[The assembly approved the referral of Item 17-4NB to the Youth Ministry Task Force. See p. 16.]

That the 218th General Assembly (2008) refers the following matter to the task force created if Item 17-3NB is approved:

- a. The inclusion of both youth (ages 12–18) and young adults (post-secondary school);
- b. That congregations increase their efforts at fulfilling their commanded responsibility to nurture youth and young adults in their calling as disciples of Jesus Christ; and
- c. That congregations set as their goal the nurture of youth and young adults, confirmed as active members of the church, to become full partners in the life and mission of the Church.

Rationale

In order to facilitate the continuation of the committee dialogue, the committee wishes to pass on the above matters to the task force for their continued consideration.

---

Item 17-5NB

[The assembly approved Item 17-5NB. See p. 16.]

That the 218th General Assembly (2008) urge the Office of the General Assembly to consider the following recommendation to the 219th General Assembly (2010): Since the age range of YADs is currently 17–23, the designation of youth advisory delegate is not a fitting description of these delegates. Therefore, we urge the official name of these persons be changed to young adult advisory delegates (YAADs).

Rationale

A widely accepted definition of youth is ages 12 to 18. As the age range of YADs is 17–23, most fall outside of this accepted definition of youth. Out of respect for the young adults who embrace this crucial role, we urge the adjustment of the name to more adequately reflect reality.

A Comment on Process: While the committee feels positively about the business generated through the implementation of the process of communal discernment, the committee leadership feels it is important to note that the limited time available to committees of the General Assembly presents substantial challenges to the learning of and full implementation of a discernment model.

1. Papers in General

Papers to Be Considered

a. The General Assembly shall consider only those papers delivered to the Stated Clerk in compliance with Standing Rule A and any other papers whatsoever that have been delivered to the Stated Clerk. Ordinarily, such papers shall have been forwarded to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly.

Received Less Than 60 Days Prior to General Assembly

b. All papers intended for consideration by the General Assembly that are forwarded to the Stated Clerk and postmarked less than sixty days, but no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be reviewed by the Stated Clerk, who shall determine whether or not to refer them to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. The Stated Clerk shall report to the committee regarding those papers not referred.

2. Reports of Entities, Commissions, and Committees

Reports Deadline

a. All reports from entities, commissions, and committees of the General Assembly shall be delivered to the Stated Clerk on or before 120 days prior to the convening of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall publish these reports (print or electronic) and distribute them so that they shall reach the commissioners thirty days before the convening of the General Assembly.

Budget Consultation

b. An entity, commission, or committee submitting a report with a recommendation that affects the work or budget of another entity(ies) shall submit evidence that a consultation has been held with the affected entity(ies).

Appropriate Background Information

c. Committees, agencies, or corporations presenting reports shall provide the appropriate background information necessary to interpret or understand the recommendations or responses to referrals to the members of the General Assembly committees to which the business is referred. Any and all documents or publications referred to in these reports that require approval by the assembly for publication and distribution to the church, including but not limited to curriculum, study papers/guides, position papers, and program resources, shall be made available to commissioners at the time the reports are published.

Report Length

d. All reports shall be limited to ten thousand words except the report of the General Assembly Council, the length of which shall be determined by the Stated Clerk and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council. A request for an exception to the length of a report shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk no later than forty-five days prior to the deadline for the submission of the report and shall include the anticipated length of the report. The Stated Clerk may assess a fee of the entity or committee whose report exceeds ten thousand words for the costs incurred in printing and distributing the excess pages. Payment of the fee shall be submitted to the treasurer of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), A Corporation. If the Stated Clerk and the representatives of any body are unable to agree, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall determine the length of the report.

3. Overtures

Definition

a. Overtures are items of business that must have been approved by a presbytery or a synod and shall request the General Assembly to take a particular action, or approve or endorse a particular statement or resolution. (See Book of Order, G-11.0103t(3).)

Writing Overtures

b. The stated clerk of a presbytery or synod considering an overture to the General Assembly shall:

(1) Examine the most recently published Minutes of the General Assembly to determine if a similar overture has already been passed.

(2) Consult with the Office of the General Assembly to determine whether the desired action has been voted by any previous General Assembly.

(3) Consult with the Office of the General Assembly to determine whether a similar overture has already been proposed in order that the presbytery or synod may concur with the existing overture.

(4) Draft the overture in the following form:

“The Presbytery of _____ overtures the [# of the assembly] General Assembly [(year)] of the PC(USA) to [state the specific action the General Assembly is asked to take].”

To this shall be appended a rationale, stating the reasons for submitting the overture.

Submitting Overtures

c. Submitting Overtures

(1) Overtures proposing an amendment to the Constitution or requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order (see Book of Order, G-18.0301a and G-13.0112c) must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than 120 days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, and shall be promptly referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (see Book of Order, G-13.0112d and G-18.0300).

(2) All overtures that have financial implications for current or future years' budgets must be delivered in writing to the Stated Clerk postmarked no later than sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly. Overtures with financial implications not received within the designated time limit shall not be considered, but shall be returned to the originating governing body.

(3) All other overtures intended for consideration by the General Assembly shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly.

(4) Overtures not received within the designated time limits shall not be considered, but shall be returned to the originating governing body for reconsideration.

(5) Presbyteries or synods submitting overtures with a recommendation(s) that affects the work or budget of a General Assembly entity(ies) shall submit evidence that the affected entity(ies) has (have) been consulted. If such evidence is not submitted, the Stated Clerk shall recommend that the overture be received and referred to a future session of the General Assembly so that consultation may take place.

(6) In the event that the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly receives an overture similar to one already proposed (excluding the rationale), she or he shall inquire of the presbytery or synod in question whether it would be willing to concur with that existing overture or desires to withdraw the overture. A presbytery or synod concurring with an overture may submit additional rationale for its action, provided that it does not duplicate the rationale provided by the overturing body. The concurrence and any additional rationale will be printed with the original overture in the Reports to the General Assembly.

Distributing Overtures

d. Overtures that do not propose constitutional amendment or interpretation, and that are postmarked at least sixty days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be published (print or electronic) in the reports distributed by the Stated Clerk. Overtures received in the same manner, postmarked no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, shall be distributed to the commissioners before the convening of the General Assembly.

Overture Advocate

e. Overture Advocate

(1) Each presbytery or synod that submits an overture shall notify the Stated Clerk of the name of a commissioner or some other person in attendance at the General Assembly who has been designated as the advocate for the overture. The overture advocate shall be available to provide information on the background and intent of the overture to any assembly committee to which the overture may be referred. (See Standing Rule E.2.)

(2) In the event that the assembly refers an overture to a General Assembly entity for further consideration (and not simply for implementation), the presbytery or synod submitting the overture shall be invited by the Stated Clerk to designate an overture advocate for the assembly meeting at which the entity's response to the overture is presented. The overture advocate shall be available to provide information on the background and intent of the overture to any assembly committee to which the overture may be referred. (See Standing Rule E.2.)

4. Communications and Resource Material

Provide

a. Communications and resource material provide comment or advice on business already

Comment or Advice	under consideration by the assembly and shall neither contain nor constitute business to be considered by the assembly. Communications may be directed to the General Assembly (1) by entities of the General Assembly that desire to comment on a single item of business coming before the General Assembly from any source other than their own entity, but which do not introduce new business, (2) by organizations in which the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) holds membership, and (3) by other denominations in correspondence with the General Assembly.
Forty-five Day Deadline	b. All communications intended for consideration by the General Assembly shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly.
Resource Materials	c. Resource material (except for previously published books), including advice and counsel memoranda from advocacy and advisory committees, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred. This material shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk, postmarked no later than forty-five days before the convening of the assembly meeting, who shall then publish (print or electronic) and distribute the material to all commissioners prior to the assembly.
Advice and Counsel Memoranda	d. Advice and counsel memoranda are resources prepared by the Advisory Committee on Social Witness Policy, Advocacy Committee for Racial Ethnic Concerns, and the Advocacy Committee for Women’s Concerns for the purpose of providing information about existing policy, current work on specific topics, recent developments, and other factors useful to commissioners as they consider issues before the assembly.
5. Advisory Committee on the Constitution Report
Report	a. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall report to the General Assembly its findings along with its recommendations on all questions requiring an interpretation by the General Assembly of the Book of Order, including proposals for constitutional change. “The General Assembly shall vote on the recommendations, and may amend or decline to approve them” (Book of Order, G-13.0112d). The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall report any editorial changes made to the Book of Order since its last report to the General Assembly.
Presented Directly to General Assembly	b. The report of the committee shall be presented directly to the General Assembly. The General Assembly may take action on the recommendations immediately, or it may refer them to an assembly committee for consideration by that committee and report to the General Assembly for action later during the same session of the General Assembly.
6. Entity and Synod Minutes
Submit for Review	a. Entities and synods required to submit minutes for review by the General Assembly shall submit such minutes on a calendar year basis so as to present minutes of all meetings for the calendar year (from January 1 through December 31) preceding the year in which is held the session of the General Assembly to which such minutes are submitted. The minutes shall contain the attestation that they have been approved by the entity or synod submitting them in the manner regularly in use within that body.
Review Process	b. Minutes of General Assembly entities will be reviewed in accordance with the “Guidelines for Preparation of Minutes of Agencies” as printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Minutes of the synods will be reviewed in accordance with “Guidelines for Reviewing Synod Records” as printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. In addition, the provisions of Book of Order, G-9.0409, shall apply, including whether: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>(1) The proceedings have been correctly recorded;</li> <li>(2) The proceedings have been regular and in accordance with the Constitution;</li> </ol>

- (3) The proceedings have been prudent and equitable;
  - (4) The proceedings have been faithful to the mission of the whole church;
  - (5) The lawful injunctions of the General Assembly have been obeyed. (Book of Order, G-9.0409)

7. Presbytery Reports

Each presbytery shall act upon all papers sent to the presbytery to be voted upon in ample time to permit the stated clerk of the presbytery to mail the results to the Stated Clerk so that they are received no later than two weeks before the convening of the General Assembly. The response of the presbytery shall be mailed to the Stated Clerk by certified mail.

8. Commissioners' Resolutions

Who May Propose

a. Any two commissioners may propose an item of new business, known as a commissioners' resolution, for assembly consideration by delivering it in writing to the Stated Clerk or the Stated Clerk's designee. No commissioner may sign more than two resolutions.

Deadline

b. The Stated Clerk shall determine and announce at the first meeting at which business is conducted the deadline for receipt of commissioners' resolutions. The deadline shall not be earlier than twenty-four hours after the assembly has convened.

Existing GA Policies

c. In the preparation of a resolution, commissioners are urged to be aware of existing General Assembly policies relevant to their proposal and, where appropriate, to make reference to these policies.

May Not Amend Book of Order Already Before Assembly

d. Commissioners' resolutions shall not contain business that requires an amendment to or interpretation of the Constitution (see Book of Order, G-18.0301(a)).

e. The Stated Clerk shall not transmit as new business any resolution that deals with matters of business already before the General Assembly, nor transmit any resolution whose purpose can be achieved by the regular process of amendment and debate.

Same Issues as Previous Assembly

f. Should the commissioners' resolution deal with substantially the same issue considered by one of the two previous sessions of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall recommend that the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures take one of the following actions on the commissioners' resolution: "refer to a subsequent assembly," "decline for consideration," or "take no action."

Referral

g. If the proposed resolution does deal with new business, the Stated Clerk shall transmit it to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures with a recommendation for its referral.

Referral Declined

h. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures may decline to refer proposed items of new business if it decides that the matters proposed are already before the assembly or that the purpose of the proposals can be reached by the process of amendment and debate. Proposed items of business not referred, whether declined by the Stated Clerk or the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, shall be identified in the first report of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures distributed to commissioners after the period docketed for committee meetings, with a brief description of the content and a statement of the reasons for declining the proposed business. Twenty-five percent of commissioners present and voting is required to overturn action of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures to decline, take no action, or refer a commissioners' resolution to a subsequent assembly. If a commissioners' resolution affects a substantial change in an existing social witness policy, the Stated Clerk should recommend to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures that it be referred to the next General Assembly.

Election	1. Commissioners a. Each presbytery shall elect commissioners to the General Assembly in accordance with Book of Order , G-13.0102. The number of commissioners attending General Assembly will be based on the number of active members, including resident clergy members of presbytery. The figures for active members will be taken from the information recorded in Minutes of the General Assembly , Part II, Statistics of the year in which per capita apportionment is assessed for the year in which General Assembly meets.
List Delivered by 120 Day Deadline	b. Presbyteries shall elect commissioners in sufficient time to permit the list of commissioners to be delivered to the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly 120 days prior to the convening of the session of the General Assembly to which they are commissioned.
Able to Attend	c. Ministers and elders considered for election as commissioners must be able to be in attendance for the duration of the General Assembly.
Entitlements, Expenses	d. Commissioners shall be entitled to speak under the rules, and to vote and present motions in meetings of the General Assembly and of assembly committees to which they are assigned. Commissioners shall be reimbursed for approved expenses.
Newly Created Presbytery's Commissioners	e. In the case of a newly created presbytery, the presbytery shall be entitled to elect commissioners to the General Assembly if the qualifying enrollment of ministers and congregations in that presbytery shall have been completed by December 31 of the year preceding the assembly meeting (see Book of Order , G-13.0102).

Alternates	f. Presbyteries may elect alternates in number up to, but not exceeding, the number of commissioners to which the presbytery may be entitled. Such alternates shall be seated with other visitors to the assembly.
	2. Advisory Delegates
Definition	a. Advisory delegates are persons who are active members in one of the constituent churches or governing bodies of the General Assembly (or, in the case of ecumenical advisory delegates, of a denomination of Christians designated by the General Assembly) who are selected to attend the meeting of the General Assembly in an advisory role so that the assembly may be assured of hearing and taking cognizance of their special viewpoints.
Categories	b. There shall be four categories of advisory delegates: youth, theological student; missionary, and ecumenical. The expenses of each advisory delegate shall be paid by the General Assembly (see Standing Rule I.3.) on the same basis as the expenses of commissioners (see Standing Rule B.2.f.(2) below for exception).
Voting Privileges	c. Advisory delegates shall be assigned to assembly committees as voting members and shall have the privilege of the floor of the General Assembly without vote. Only voting members shall have the privilege of proposing or seconding a motion. When certain issues come before a plenary session of the General Assembly, the advisory delegates may be polled prior to the vote of commissioners to determine their advice.
Youth Advisory Delegates	d. Youth Advisory Delegates (1) Each presbytery shall appoint an active member of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), who shall be between the ages of seventeen and twenty-three years on the date the General Assembly convenes, to be a youth advisory delegate. (2) Each presbytery will request each candidate for youth advisory delegate to submit an application/questionnaire and be interviewed by an appropriate presbytery committee in order to ensure the selection of the best qualified person to serve as youth advisory delegate. The youth ministries staff shall prepare and distribute to each presbytery a sample/suggested questionnaire for use in reviewing candidates for election as youth advisory delegates.
Theological Student Advisory Delegate	e. Theological Student Advisory Delegates There shall be a delegation of theological student advisory delegates each year: two from each of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); one from each of the theological institutions in a covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.); and one each from three selected other theological seminaries. The selection process for these delegates is as follows: (1) Each theological institution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall nominate three students who, at the time of the General Assembly, will have at least one year of study remaining in their degree program. Two of these students shall be designated by the institution as delegates and the other student shall be designated as the alternate. Such a student must be either an inquirer or a candidate in preparation for ministry under care of a presbytery, or a student nominated by the Presbyterian School of Christian Education. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, who shall transmit the names of the two students to be delegates to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed. (2) Each theological institution in covenant relationship with the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall nominate two students who, at the time of the General Assembly, will have at least one year of study remaining in their degree program. One of these students shall be designated by the institution as the delegate and the other student as the alternate. Such a student must be either an inquirer or a candidate in preparation for ministry under care of a presbytery. These nominations shall be forwarded to the Stated Clerk, who shall transmit the name of the delegate to the presbytery of jurisdiction for election. The presbyteries shall then certify the election to the Stated Clerk when completed.

(3) All non-Presbyterian theological school represented by corresponding members on the Committee on Theological Education and one additional non-Presbyterian theological seminary shall be asked to nominate one theological student advisory delegate and one alternate. The additional non-Presbyterian seminary shall be chosen on a rotating basis, descending alphabetically, from those that have at least twelve Presbyterian enrollees (either inquirers or candidates under the care of a presbytery) as of October 1 in the year preceding the assembly.

(4) Nominated students shall have at least one more year of study following the assembly remaining in their degree program. The Stated Clerk shall forward the name of the nominated students to the presbyteries of jurisdiction for election and confirmation.

Missionary Advisory
Delegates

f. Missionary Advisory Delegates

(1) There shall be eight missionary advisory delegates who shall be chosen by the Worldwide Ministries Division from persons who are members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and mission personnel assigned by the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in another country in which this church is engaged in mission. To the degree possible, the selection shall provide a global geographical representation with no two delegates representing the same country or geographical area and rotating the geographical representation. The Worldwide Ministries Division shall notify the Stated Clerk at the time these persons are named.

(2) The expenses to the General Assembly of each missionary advisory delegate shall include transportation only from the point of entry or domicile of the delegate in the United States and return.

Ecumenical Advisory

g. Ecumenical Advisory Delegates

There shall be up to fifteen ecumenical advisory delegates. Ten of these delegates shall be from churches outside of the United States. No more than five shall be from member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches. Ecumenical advisory delegates shall be selected by the highest ecclesiastical authorities of their churches, in response to the invitation of a previous General Assembly. The assembly shall extend such invitations at the recommendation of the General Assembly Council upon nomination by the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations.

3. Corresponding Members

Definition

a. The following persons shall be corresponding members: Moderators of earlier General Assemblies; the Stated Clerk, Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks, and other members of the staff of the Office of the General Assembly as designated by the Stated Clerk; the members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly; the members of the GAC Executive Committee and staff of the General Assembly Council, and of the divisions and related entities designated by the council; all members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution; the executives of synods; one person designated by each entity reporting directly to the General Assembly, including permanent, special, and advisory committees (additional persons may be designated by such bodies if authorized by the Moderator of the preceding General Assembly in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly); and the presidents (or their designee) of the theological institutions of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), and seminaries related by covenant agreement.

Entitled to Speak, Not Vote

b. Corresponding members shall be entitled to speak, under the rules, in meetings of the General Assembly and of assembly committees on matters related to the work of the body represented, but they may neither vote nor present motions.

4. Advisory Committee on the Constitution

During the General Assembly, three or more members of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution [this committee] shall be present at the session of the General Assembly to advise the General Assembly and its Moderator on constitutional matters (Book of Order, G-13.0112e).

5. Other Participants

Special Guests

a. The assembly, out of honor, courtesy, recognition, and the need for information and resource material, may recognize other persons as guests or observers. As such, they may be invited by the General Assembly to speak to the assembly for the purpose of conveying greetings or messages, or bringing enlightenment or information germane to the decision-making process. An assembly committee may extend a similar invitation at its own meeting.

Ecumenical Representatives

b. Ecumenical representatives are individuals sent at the initiative of another church to be the official representative of that church. The Stated Clerk shall announce to member churches of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches the date and place of the next meeting of the General Assembly. When officially certified through appropriate ecclesiastical channels at least forty-five days prior to the convening of the General Assembly, these persons shall be welcomed as guests of the General Assembly and introduced to the governing body through the report of the assembly committee addressing ecumenism. The assembly shall assume the expense and housing of such guests on the same basis as the expense of commissioners, but shall not reimburse any travel expenses to the assembly site.

Resource Persons

c. The assembly may welcome persons invited by the General Assembly Council or another entity of the General Assembly for the purpose of establishing or affirming particular ecumenical, mission, or program relationships, or assisting the entity in the presentation of particular items of business. Any expense reimbursement shall be the responsibility of the inviting entity.

Presbytery Staff

d. The presbytery's executive staff person (or designee) and the presbytery's stated clerk shall be supplied with all reports and materials related to the General Assembly, but shall not be entitled to speak in plenary meetings or in meetings of assembly committees unless called upon by a moderator to provide information.

Ecumenical Visitors

e. Ecumenical visitors are individuals attending a session of the General Assembly at their own initiative. These persons are welcomed to the assembly as unofficial visitors. The assembly shall assume no expenses for these ecumenical visitors.

Interfaith Representatives

f. Interfaith Representatives—Three observers of other faiths or religious traditions, who shall be representatives chosen by recognized religious bodies of non-Christian religious traditions and/or faith communities shall be present at the assembly at the invitation of the General Assembly Committee on Ecumenical Relations. The interfaith representatives shall be present with the church in its deliberations, and to speak to the assembly for the purpose of conveying greetings or messages, or bringing information germane to the decision-making process. The assembly shall assume the expense of housing and on the same basis as the expense of commissioners, but shall not reimburse any travel expenses to the assembly site.

6. List of Participants

Upon request, the Stated Clerk shall make available the list of participants registered for a session of the General Assembly to entities of the General Assembly, governing bodies of the denomination, educational institutions, ministers of the Word and Sacrament, elders, and independent organizations composed primarily of members of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). A fee will be charged for lists or mailing labels to cover the costs incurred for printing, postage, and handling.

Number and Designation of Assembly Committees	1. Assembly Committee Structure a. The Stated Clerk shall propose the number and designation of assembly committees to the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall present the proposed committee structure to the General Assembly for consideration and ratification at the first assembly meeting at which business is transacted. In making these proposals, the Stated Clerk shall consult with the appropriate General Assembly entity or entities, and may consult with other persons.
Committee Assistants	b. The Stated Clerk shall propose to the General Assembly for appointment the names of persons to serve as committee assistants for the duration of the General Assembly. The Stated Clerk shall consult with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly before recommending persons to serve as committee assistants. Persons proposed shall not be commissioners to the General Assembly or staff members of entities of the General Assembly or any person who is a member of the General Assembly Council or any person who is a member of any other entity of the General Assembly. A committee assistant shall be appointed to provide staff services to each assembly committee. The appointments shall be made in accordance with Book of Order, G-4.0403.
Assembly Committee Moderator and Vice Moderator	c. The Moderator of the preceding General Assembly shall appoint a commissioner to be moderator and a second to be vice moderator of each committee. Final appointment shall be made only after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, and then also with representatives of the General Assembly Committee on Representation regarding the inclusivity mandated in the Book of Order, G-4.0403 and G-9.0104. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees, including any committees dealing with finance and budgets, shall be elders. The moderators of at least one-half of the assembly committees should be women. No more than one person from any one presbytery may be appointed to serve as a moderator or vice moderator. All synods shall be equitably represented.
Assembly Committee on Business Referral	d. The moderators and vice moderators of the assembly committees, as a group, shall function as the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. The moderator and vice moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall function as the moderator and vice moderator of this committee as well. This committee shall report to the assembly for its action at the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business.

Orientation e. The Stated Clerk shall conduct an orientation for moderators, vice moderators, and committee assistants of assembly committees no less than three weeks prior to the convening of the General Assembly. The orientation shall include information regarding business likely to be referred to each committee; suggested procedures for dealing with business referred to committees, especially the use of Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised; utilization of available resources, both persons and materials; and preparation and presentation of assembly committee reports. The Stated Clerk, following consultation with the General Assembly Council, may invite persons designated by the council as General Assembly resource coordinators to participate in the orientation. During this orientation, the Assembly Committee on Business Referral shall meet and carry out the duties given it by these rules. The Assembly Committee on Business Referral shall also meet, if necessary, just prior to the convening of the assembly and its function shall end at the convening of the assembly.

2. Assigning Commissioners to Assembly Committees

Committee Assignments a. Forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall assign each commissioner and advisory delegate to one of the assembly committees by the random selection process described in this standing rule.

Notification of Assignment b. No later than thirty days before the convening of the assembly, commissioners shall receive the number and designation of committees. At the same time that the number and designation of committees is communicated, the Stated Clerk shall notify each person of the assignment, the time of their first meeting, and the necessity to confirm appropriate housing and travel arrangements.

Assignment List Provided c. The Stated Clerk shall provide a list of the assignments to those who need it to facilitate the work of the General Assembly.

Random Selection Process d. Commissioners and advisory delegates shall be assigned to assembly committees by random selection as follows:

(1) The Stated Clerk shall divide the presbyteries into six regional districts. Each district shall be composed of one or more presbyteries so arranged that, insofar as possible, the presbyteries in the district have contiguous boundaries and the numbers of commissioners in the several districts are approximately equal. Within each district the presbyteries shall be arranged alphabetically. The commissioners from each presbytery shall be listed alphabetically in two parallel lists: the first containing the names of the ministers of the Word and Sacrament; the second, the elders. In those cases where the presbytery has not designated commissioners, the position shall be listed as vacant so that the name may be inserted later when the Stated Clerk is notified. The names of moderators and vice moderators of assembly committees shall be removed from the list and the names below them shall be moved up to fill the vacated positions. The minister commissioners and vacant positions for minister commissioners shall be numbered in sequence. The list of elder commissioners in each district shall be rotated downward so that no elder commissioner is opposite a minister commissioner from the same presbytery. Separate lists of groups identified in Book of Order, G-4.0403, shall be prepared, insofar as it may be practical, to assure the most equitable distribution of such commissioners to the various committees in accordance with Book of Order, G-4.0402.

(2) The Stated Clerk shall list the youth advisory delegates in one list arranged in the alphabetical order of the presbyteries that designated the delegates. In any case where the presbytery has not designated a youth advisory delegate, the position shall be listed as vacant so that the name may be inserted later when the Stated Clerk is notified.

(3) The Moderator shall pick by lot a number from one to ten. This number shall identify the number of the name in the first column of names in each district in which the assignment will begin. It will also identify the number of the youth advisory delegates in which assignment will begin.

(4) The Moderator shall then pick by lot a second number equal from one to the number equaling the total number of committees. This number shall identify the assembly committee in the order in which the committees are arranged in the standing rules to which the first assignment of members shall be made.

(5) The assignment of members of the assembly committees shall then proceed in sequence. When initial assignments have been made to all committees in sequence so that the committees with the fewest number of commissioners are full, additional assignment shall be made to the other committees in the same manner, until all commissioners and youth advisory delegates have been assigned to committees.

(6) The Stated Clerk shall assign missionary advisory delegates and ecumenical advisory delegates to assembly committees in consultation with those delegates. Ordinarily not more than two persons in each of these categories shall be assigned to any one assembly committee.

(7) Theological student advisory delegates will be assigned to committees at the same time and in the same way as are commissioners to ensure their full participation and attendance.

(8) Names of commissioners and advisory delegates received after these assignments have been made shall be inserted in the appropriate position in the original list and assigned to the committee to which that position was assigned.

3. Referring Business

Recommendation for Referral of Business

a. The Stated Clerk shall submit to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly a recommendation for the referral of all items of business coming before the General Assembly.

General Assembly Action on Referrals

b. After making any necessary changes, this committee shall present the prepared referrals to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral so that it may recommend referrals to the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business. Ordinarily, this committee shall recommend referrals to the General Assembly for its action. When the General Assembly is not scheduled to meet in time to act on its recommendation, the committee may refer business. Such referrals shall be reported to the General Assembly at its next business meeting.

How Referred

c. Items of business to be considered by the General Assembly shall be referred in one of the following ways:

(1) for consideration by an assembly committee and recommendation for action by the General Assembly;

(2) for consideration and action by an assembly committee with a report of the action to the General Assembly;

(3) for consideration by the General Assembly through its inclusion in a consent agenda;

(4) for consideration by the General Assembly in a plenary business session.

Referral Considered by One Committee

d. Each item of business referred to a committee shall ordinarily be considered by only one assembly committee, but in no case should there be more than one committee making a recommendation on an item of business. Business of a related nature shall be assigned to a single committee insofar as possible.

Referring Overtures to Committees

e. The Stated Clerk shall present such items of business to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, along with a recommendation for their referral. In the event that the presbytery or synod disagrees with the referral recommendation, this procedure shall be followed: The presbytery or synod shall be entitled to submit a written statement regarding the background and intent of the overture at the time the overture is initially being considered for referral by the Assembly Committee on Business Referral. If, after that committee makes its recommendation, the presbytery or synod still disagrees with the referral recommendation, the presbytery or synod shall notify the Stated Clerk, in writing, of its disagreement. The overture advocate will then be entitled to speak to the background and intent of the overture at a special meeting of the Assembly Committee on Business Referral that shall be held no more than twenty-four (24) hours prior to the convening of the assembly.

4. Tentative Docket

a. The Stated Clerk shall submit to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly a tentative docket. After making any necessary adjustments, this committee shall present a proposed docket to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral so that it may recommend the docket to the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business.

b. The reports and recommendations of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly regarding the initial docket of the General Assembly and referrals of business shall be referred to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, along with any items of business not included in them (see Standing Rules I.4.b.(3) and I.4.b.(4)). Review of the minutes of the synods pursuant to G-13.01031 and of statement(s) of compliance with decisions of the General Assembly Permanent Judicial Commission by governing bodies, reported by the Stated Clerk pursuant to IV.B.2.d. of the Organization for Mission, shall be assigned to the same assembly committee. Following the convening of the assembly, such matters shall be directed to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

1. Registration and Seating

Registration of Commissioners and Delegates

a. The Stated Clerk shall enroll commissioners and delegates on the opening day of the General Assembly and at such other times as may be necessary. The Stated Clerk shall determine any question that may arise regarding registration of commissioners and delegates. Any complaints regarding such decision shall be received by the Assembly Committee on General Assembly Procedures.

Commissioners with Disabilities

b. A commissioner certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance shall be entitled to designate a person to function as an assistant without vote during all proceedings of the General Assembly, including executive sessions and committee meetings, in order that the commissioner may fully participate in those proceedings. The expenses of the assistant shall be paid for by the General Assembly on the same basis as expenses of commissioners. The Stated Clerk shall also enroll assistants to commissioners who have been certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance.

Assigned Seats

c. The Stated Clerk shall assign each commissioner, advisory delegate, and corresponding member to a seat in advance of the meeting. They shall occupy the assigned seats during each meeting of the General Assembly at which business may be transacted. An assistant to commissioner who has been certified by his or her presbytery as having a disability warranting assistance shall be assigned a seat adjacent to the commissioner. The Stated Clerk shall assign seats to commissioners and delegates in a manner that shall assure that the most favorable seats, with regard to the platform, will be assigned to delegations from the various presbyteries in turn through an annual rotation of space assignments.

Alternates

d. When a principal commissioner is replaced by an alternate prior to or during the course of an assembly session, whether for the remainder of the session or for a period of time during the session, the alternate shall assume that assembly committee position and seat assignment.

Ecumenical Representatives

e. Ecumenical representatives shall be seated on the floor of the assembly in a section clearly designated for such guests.

Presbytery Staff Seating

f. The presbytery's executive staff person (or designee) and the presbytery's stated clerk shall be provided assigned seating in proximity to the area that corresponding members are seated.

Access to Commissioner and Advisory Delegate Seating

g. The only persons who shall be permitted access to the commissioner and advisory delegate seating area during plenary sessions are commissioners, advisory delegates, assistants enrolled by the Stated Clerk to assist commissioners having a disability warranting assistance, the Stated Clerk, Associate and Assistant Stated Clerks, and other staff and assembly assistants who are assigned responsibilities that require access to this area, including assisting at the floor microphones, delivery of official messages to commissioner and advisory delegates, and locating commissioners who are needed on the platform. The Stated Clerk will provide special credentials for the particular staff and assembly assistants who are authorized to enter the commissioner/advisory delegate seating area.

2. Quorum

At the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business, the Stated Clerk shall recommend to the General Assembly that the roll call of commissioners be established by registration. Alternately, the Stated Clerk may call the roll of commissioners and advisory delegates by calling the names of absentees as they appear on the roll. After any needed corrections have been made, the Stated Clerk shall announce whether or not a quorum is present (see Book of Order, G-13.0105). When commissioners and advisory delegates subsequently register, they shall be seated by the General Assembly. A commissioner who has not registered may not be seated and may not vote.

3. Committee Moderators and Overture Advocates Meeting

The Office of the General Assembly shall, on the first business day of the assembly, before committees meet to consider business, organize a forum where assembly committee moderators shall meet with overture advocates to discuss procedures for participation in committee discussion of business related to the overture that they are advocating.

1. Committee Leadership and Support

Moderator and Vice Moderator

a. The moderator shall preside over the committee's deliberations. The moderator may request the vice moderator to preside and to assist in the work of the committee.

Recorder

b. Each committee shall have available to assist in its work a recorder appointed by the Stated Clerk. The recorder shall be appointed from a pool of individuals who will already be attending the General Assembly, including staff members, local volunteers, and others. The recorder shall keep an accurate record of the actions of the committee with the votes on each indicating the number of committee members voting in the affirmative, or negative, or those abstaining; and shall assist in drafting the committee report.

Committee Assistant

c. Each committee shall have available to assist in its work a committee assistant. The committee assistant may address the committee offering suggestions regarding procedure, but shall not participate in its deliberations on any issue before the committee as an advocate of one position or view regarding its action. The committee assistant shall assist the committee in securing desired resources.

2. Procedures for Assembly Committee Meetings

- Open Meetings a. Meetings of assembly committees shall be open to the public (as space permits) provided, however, that the committee may go into executive session at any time in accordance with the Open Meeting Policy, printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Ordinarily, the committee assistant will be expected to remain with the committee in executive session.
- Parliamentary Procedure b. The deliberations of the committee shall be conducted in accordance with Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised.
- Use of Resources c. Each committee shall determine the use to be made of the resource material or resource persons available to assembly committees. Each assembly committee shall determine whether or not to permit the distribution of particular materials to the committee members.
- Preparation of Resource Material d. Resource material (except for previously published books or interpretive brochures), including advice and counsel memoranda, that provides background or advice on items of new business, including commissioners' resolutions, shall be prepared as necessary by entities of the General Assembly and shall not exceed 1,000 words on each item of business referred. This material shall be submitted to the assembly committee leadership team prior to presentation to the assembly committee to which the business has been referred. A hard copy of this resource material, accompanied by a disk copy, shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall consider any request that is made to distribute this resource material to the full assembly.
- Privilege of Floor e. During the deliberations of the committee, in contrast to public hearings, only the following persons may speak:
- (1) Members of the committee;
  - (2) Committee assistant, when recognized by the committee moderator;
  - (3) Persons with special expertise, including elected members or staff members of General Assembly entities;
  - (4) Overture advocates and signers of commissioners' resolutions (see below in this standing rule) who shall be entitled to speak when the overture or resolution or response to the referral of an overture is first considered by the committee; and then shall have the same privilege of the floor as other persons with special expertise listed in Standing Rule E.2.e.(3) above;
  - (5) Persons invited by the committee through a majority vote of the committee; and
  - (6) Representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, who may speak to overtures, commissioners' resolutions, or other business on which the Advisory Committee on the Constitution has presented advice or recommendations, or matters that propose amendments to the Constitution, or that affect compatibility with other provisions of the Constitution.
  - (7) In the event that business being considered by an assembly committee has been referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution for advice, representatives of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall be entitled to speak.
  - (8) The committee moderator shall provide that the total time allotted to persons, other than members of the committee, who speak for or against a recommendation be equal so far as possible.
- Overture Advocates/ Signer of Commissioners' Resolution f. Overture advocates and one signer of each commissioners' resolution shall be responsible for being available at the time selected by any assembly committee considering the matter. The overture advocate or one of the signers of a commissioners' resolution shall be entitled to speak to the background and intent of the overture or resolution immediately after the motion is made and seconded, placing the overture or resolution on the floor of the committee or subcommittee, or immediately after any motion that might logically be expected to affect the overture or resolution is moved and seconded, and during debate of such motions to correct misunderstandings or to clarify.

Responsibilities of Overture Advocate g. Overture advocates who have been designated by their presbytery or synod to speak to the response from a General Assembly entity to a referral of an overture shall be responsible for being available at the time selected by the assembly committee considering the response. The overture advocate shall be entitled to speak to the background and intent of the overture immediately after the motion is made and seconded, placing the response to the referral of the overture on the floor of the committee or subcommittee, or immediately after any motion that might logically be expected to affect the response is moved and seconded, and during debate of such motions to correct misunderstandings or to clarify.

3. New Business

Consider Only Matters Referred a. Each assembly committee shall consider only matters referred to it by the General Assembly. No assembly committee may initiate new business except as it relates to the business of the particular assembly committee.

Proposing Amendment to Constitution b. New business initiated in an assembly committee proposing an amendment to the Constitution or requiring an interpretation of the Constitution by the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-18.0301b and G-13.0112c) shall be referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall report its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly.

Constitutional Matters c. Any other new business initiated in an assembly committee that touches upon constitutional matters (Book of Order, G-13.0112e) shall be communicated in writing to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and the Stated Clerk. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall consider each matter so referred and report its findings and recommendations, which may include proposals for constitutional change, to the assembly committee and the Stated Clerk. The assembly committee shall vote on the recommendations and may amend or decline to approve them. The advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on these matters shall be transmitted to the General Assembly with the report of the assembly committee.

Approval Requirement d. Recommendations and reports to the assembly regarding such new business must be approved in assembly committees by three-fourths of the committee members voting on the matter.

Presentation of e. New business, other than that described in this standing rule, must be presented in accordance with Standing Rule A.8.

Referral to Advisory Committee on the Constitution f. New business initiated in an assembly committee proposing an amendment to the Constitution (Book of Order, G-18.0301a and b) or requiring an interpretation of the Constitution by the General Assembly (Book of Order, G-13.0112c) shall be referred to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall report its findings and recommendations to the General Assembly. Any other new business initiated in an assembly committee that touches upon constitutional matters (Book of Order, G-13.0112e) shall be communicated in writing to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution and the Stated Clerk. The Advisory Committee on the Constitution shall consider each matter referred and report its findings and recommendations (which may include proposals for constitutional change) to the assembly committee and the Stated Clerk. The advice of the Advisory Committee on the Constitution on these matters shall be transmitted to the General Assembly with the report of the assembly committee.

4. Organization Meeting

a. Ordinarily, the initial meeting of each assembly committee shall be an organizational meeting in private session for up to one hour for the purpose of developing intergroup dynamics and determining procedural matters, such as approval of the committee's agenda and consideration of the style in which the committee plans to operate.

b. During this executive session, business items before the committee shall not be discussed or acted upon.

5. Public Hearings

Schedule

a. Each committee, with the exception of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, shall schedule at its convenience one or more public hearings on matters before it.

Time Limits for Presentations

b. The committee may limit the time for the presentation by any person during a public hearing, including an elected member or staff member of an entity of the General Assembly. If the time allotted for the public hearing is not sufficient to accommodate all the persons wishing to speak, a method shall be approved by the assembly committee that ensures that an equal number of persons on each side of an issue have an opportunity to speak. Any person denied the right to speak at the hearing may appeal to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures on the basis that the method employed in selecting speakers was not fair.

Hearing Form

c. Any person who wishes to be heard in a public hearing shall sign up on a hearing form, posted in a public place in the building in which the assembly is being held, no later than the close of business on the second day of the General Assembly or one hour after the subsequent referral of business to the committee by the General Assembly. The location of hearing forms shall be announced during the first session of the assembly. In the event that an issue is expected to be controversial, those wishing to speak shall be asked to indicate whether they wish to speak for or against the recommendation.

6. Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures

Responsible for Referral of Business

a. This committee shall neither retain any items of business for its own consideration, nor suppress any matter that comes before it. However, business that substantially duplicates matters already before the assembly may be declined by this committee and reported to the assembly with a statement of the committee's action.

Coordination Between Committees

b. This committee shall keep itself informed of the subjects being considered by the other assembly committees, and, when any subject is taken up by more than one committee, this committee shall advise the moderators of those committees regarding ways to avoid redundant or inconsistent recommendations.

Distribution of Materials

c. This committee shall determine whether or not particular materials may be distributed to the commissioners and delegates to the General Assembly, and specify the time and manner of distribution of any authorized by it. Particular materials distributed in assembly committees shall not be distributed to the full assembly without the approval of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, including the time and manner of distribution.

Requests to Schedule Event

d. The committee shall review requests from entities of the General Assembly, governing bodies, other entities related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in any way, or coalitions in which this denomination or any of its entities participate, to schedule meetings, briefings, hearings, or other events of any kind during those hours when the General Assembly or its committees are in session.

7. Reports of Assembly Committees

Writing the Report

a. The moderator, vice moderator, committee assistant, and recorder, together with such other persons as the moderator may designate, shall draft the report of the committee following the sample form provided by the Stated Clerk.

Content	b. The reports of assembly committees shall contain only (1) the recommendations to be submitted to the General Assembly, and, where necessary, a brief statement of the committee's reasons for such recommendations, and (2) the actions taken by the committee on items referred to the committee for action. Material necessary to identify the item of business and brief explanations may be included in the report. Extensive background information and detail contained in other documents in the hands of the commissioners shall not be included.
Fiscal Implications	c. Each assembly committee shall include with each recommendation or action in its report statements advising the General Assembly whether or not the recommendation or action has fiscal implications affecting any budget under consideration by the assembly.
Identify Entity	d. Recommendation for assembly action, or action taken by the committee, shall identify the entity that is directed to carry out and report back to the General Assembly regarding the matter dealt with by the recommendation or action.
GAC to Determine Entity	e. When the entity to which an assembly action is directed is a part of the General Assembly Council, such as a division or related entity, the Stated Clerk shall automatically amend the language so that the action is directed to the General Assembly Council. The council shall determine which entity shall carry out the responsibility and report to the assembly on the matter.
Votes Recorded	f. The votes recorded in the assembly committee on each recommendation or action shall be included in the report for the information of the commissioners, but shall be omitted from the Journal of the General Assembly.
Confer with Entity Affected by Action	g. If the report of an assembly committee proposes or records an action affecting the interests of an entity of the General Assembly or of a governing body other than the General Assembly, it shall be the responsibility of that assembly committee to confer with the representative(s) designated by the entity or governing body concerned before proposing such action to the General Assembly or taking such an action.
Minority Report	h. Minority Report (1) A minority of the members of an assembly committee, or an individual member of an assembly committee, may submit in writing views that differ from those in the committee report. If the moderator of the committee shall affirm in writing that the positions expressed as recommendations for action by the assembly in a written minority report were presented to the whole committee during its consideration of the matter, the Stated Clerk shall reproduce the minority report and distribute it with the report of the committee. (2) A minority report must be appropriate for consideration as a substitute motion (see Robert's Rules of Order, Newly Revised, 2000, p. 510).

1. Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures Reports

Report at Beginning of Each Meeting

a. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall report at the beginning of each meeting, recommending any necessary changes in order of business and any referrals it may have considered since its last report.

Limits on Debate/Changes in Docket

b. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures may, at any time, recommend limits on debates or changes in the docket to facilitate the handling of business. The reports of the committee shall take precedence over any other business, including orders of the day.

Review Minutes	c. This committee shall review the minutes of the General Assembly daily, report to the General Assembly any suggested corrections, and recommend approval of the minutes. The minutes shall be posted on the church's website and two printed copies of the minutes shall be posted in different places during the following day for examination by commissioners. The minutes of the meetings of the General Assembly during the last two days of its session shall be submitted for review and approval within ten days after the adjournment of the General Assembly to a subcommittee of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.
Requests for Communicating with Assembly	d. Requests for the privilege of communicating with the General Assembly shall be referred to this committee, which shall confer with persons making such requests about the time and the manner in which their concerns may be brought to the attention of the General Assembly. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall recommend to the General Assembly a response regarding any possible presentation to the assembly. At the time any such recommendation is acted upon, any commissioner may request that an opposing view be heard, and the assembly shall consider and act upon the matter.
Referral of Protests	e. Protests expressing disagreement with an action or failure to act on the part of the General Assembly shall be referred to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, which shall decide whether or not the protest is decorous and respectful. Should the committee decide the protest is decorous and respectful, the protest shall be entered in the Minutes. The committee may prepare an answer to be printed with any protest so entered (see Book of Order , G-9.0304).
2. Reports of Assembly Committees
Distribution	a. Copies of the reports of assembly committees (print or electronic) shall ordinarily be distributed to commissioners no later than the close of the meeting prior to the one at which they are to be considered. The Stated Clerk shall arrange for the reproduction and distribution of reports.
Adequate Docket Time	b. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, in consultation with the Stated Clerk, shall docket adequate time for the reports of committees, including ample time for debate and action. If a report requires more time than docketed, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall consult with the committee for additional time to complete consideration of the report.
Committee Moderators	c. Committee moderators should move the approval of recommendations with minimum comment, and material in the commissioners' printed resources shall not be read.
Financial Implication	d. The financial effect of each recommendation on budgets previously approved or under consideration shall be clearly presented at the time that the recommendation is considered by the assembly.
3. Minority Reports
Must Stand as Full and Complete Substitute	a. In order to be considered by the assembly, a minority report shall not only set aside the majority report but also be able to stand as a full and complete substitution for the majority report recommendations. A minority report shall be moved as a substitute only after the majority report has first been moved. When this happens, the assembly shall first consider (and may amend) the majority report. When consideration of the majority report is completed, the assembly may then consider (and may amend) the minority report. Further efforts to perfect each report shall be held to a minimum in order that the assembly can concentrate instead on the issue of whether to make the proposed substitution.
Reasons Supporting Committee's Recommendation	b. The moderator of the committee, or another member of the committee, shall present reasons supporting the committee's recommendation. They may be presented before any minority report is moved or presented during the narrative report of the committee, or presented during debate on the question of whether or not the substitution shall become the main motion. (See also Standing Rule E.7.h.)

4. Committee Reports on the Budget

Per Capita Budget

a. At the first meeting of the General Assembly for the transaction of business following the meetings of assembly committees, the assembly shall hear a report on the per capita budget from the committee that has reviewed that budget.

Amended Per Capita Budget

b. On the final day of the assembly, an amended per capita budget that incorporates the financial implications of actions taken by the assembly shall be presented to the assembly for approval.

5. Plenary Meeting Procedures

Debate

a. In debate on any pending matter, no commissioner or delegate shall be allowed to speak more than three minutes until all other commissioners or delegates who desire to speak on the pending matter have been heard.

Voting Methods

b. The General Assembly shall ordinarily decide questions by electronic voting. The Moderator may also call for unanimous consent by voice vote or show of hands. Assembly committees may recommend the use of a consent agenda for portions of their reports. In all cases, the right of any commissioner to call for one of the other forms of voting or to remove any item from the consent agenda shall be preserved.

Mindful of Effort Required to Fulfill Recommendations

c. In view of the relative ease in which studies and programs may be approved, commissioners and other assembly committee members are cautioned to be mindful of the effort required of staff and elected members to carry out the General Assembly's instructions.

Constitutional Questions

d. When the General Assembly is in plenary session, questions that touch upon constitutional matters, including rulings on questions of order involving constitutional matters requested by the Moderator, shall be handled in accordance with Book of Order, G-13.0112e. These questions shall be referred in writing by the Moderator to the Advisory Committee on the Constitution, which shall consider each matter referred and make recommendations directly to the General Assembly through the Moderator.

Cellular Telephones

e. Use of cellular telephones is prohibited during meetings of the General Assembly and meetings of the assembly committees. During these meetings, pagers may be used only in the silent mode.

Emergency Messages

f. Emergency messages will be relayed to a commissioner or advisory delegate during plenary meetings by way of a written message delivered by one of the Stated Clerk's designated staff or assembly assistants.

Confidentiality

g. Any person permitted to remain during any executive session is expected to agree to be bound by the confidentiality required of commissioners.

6. General Assembly Nominating Committee

Presentation of Nominations

a. Unless the General Assembly shall have made some other provision, the nominating committee shall present to each session of the General Assembly a nominee for election to each vacancy on the entities of the General Assembly that shall exist because of a scheduled end of term, resignation, death, incapacity to act, change of residence, or any other reason.

May Decline to Submit Nomination

b. The General Assembly Nominating Committee may decline to submit a nomination(s) to a particular vacancy(s) when requested to do so by the affected entity because of an expected merger of entity or a transfer of duties between entities in order to reduce the number of persons serving on a particular entity(s).

Nominating from the Floor

c. Nominating from the Floor

(1) Nominations by commissioners shall be in order unless the vacancy is required to be filled upon nomination from some other source.

(2) When any nomination for service on a General Assembly committee, council, or board comes from the floor of the assembly, the commissioner making the nomination will provide the General Assembly Nominating Committee, no later than 48 hours after the convening of the General Assembly, with pertinent information about the person whose name is being presented, as well as the name of the particular person nominated by the nominating committee whose nomination is being challenged. Such information shall be provided on the “Nomination by Commissioner Form” provided for use at the assembly and available from the Stated Clerk.

(3) In the event that there are nominations from the floor, the election shall proceed as follows:

(a) The General Assembly will deal with one challenged position at a time.

(b) The name of the General Assembly Nominating Committee’s nominee shall be placed in nomination by its moderator. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall call upon the commissioner who is placing a nomination from the floor to put that name in nomination.

(c) Once the names are placed in nomination, the order of speaking shall be first, the commissioner or a designee speaking on behalf of the floor nominee and second, the General Assembly Nominating Committee member or a designee speaking to its nominee. Both the commissioner (or designee) and the General Assembly Nominating Committee member (or designee) shall speak from the platform. Such speech shall not exceed three minutes in length. There shall be no other speeches seconding the nomination of any nominee.

(d) Without further discussion or debate, the General Assembly will move to vote.

7. Docket Time for Special Greetings

Head of Communion

a. When the Head of Communion of a member church of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, the World Council of Churches, or the National Council of Churches is in attendance at a session of the General Assembly as an ecumenical advisory delegate or as an ecumenical representative, and proper notice is provided, the assembly shall provide up to five minutes of docket time to each such Head of Communion to present a greeting to the assembly.

Assignment of Docket Time

b. The placing of this greeting on the docket will be assigned by the Stated Clerk.

8. Announcements and Nonofficial Printed Materials

Approval for Announcements

a. Only announcements connected directly with the business of the General Assembly shall be read from the platform and all notices shall be submitted either to the Moderator or the Stated Clerk for approval. Telegrams and special letters shall be reported to the General Assembly only at times to be designated by the Moderator.

Nonofficial Printed Material

b. Printed materials that are not official business before the General Assembly may be distributed at authorized booths in the General Assembly Exhibit Hall. Other distribution is permitted in the mailboxes provided for commissioners and advisory delegates, and also can be handed out twenty-five feet or more from entrances to the building in which the General Assembly meets.

9. Distributing Study Documents

Distribution

a. Whenever the General Assembly itself shall require the distribution of a document for study (whether the proposal originates through the recommendation of an entity, the presentation of an overture or resolution, or arises during the conduct of the assembly's business) with a request for a response (whether the response is sought from individuals, congregations, governing bodies, organizations of any kind, or any combination of these), the study document shall be accompanied by resource materials, bibliography, and aids as set forth in the document "Forming Social Policy," Section 5, printed in the Manual of the General Assembly. Along with a response instrument and the resource materials, bibliography, and aids, the document shall be distributed on a schedule that provides for the study guide and all accompanying material to be in the possession of the proposed respondents for a minimum of twelve months before the due date of the response.

Responsible Entity Identified

b. The entity to be responsible for receiving the responses and reporting to the General Assembly the summary of the responses shall be identified in the material. The report on the responses to the study may be presented no earlier than to the General Assembly that convenes in the second year after the session of the General Assembly that approves the study.

10. Forming Social Policy

The entities of the General Assembly, including its committees, commissions, and special committees, shall be governed by the document, "Forming Social Policy" printed in the Manual of the General Assembly, when that entity is considering making a social witness policy.

11. Peaceful Demonstrations

Where Allowed

a. Peaceful demonstrations shall be allowed twenty-five or more feet outside of the entrances to the building in which General Assembly meets.

Prohibited in Building

b. Spontaneous or planned demonstrations by individuals or groups are prohibited inside the building where the General Assembly meets. The Moderator of the General Assembly shall declare all demonstrations that occur in plenary session out of order and, if demonstrators fail to immediately disband and desist, may recess the General Assembly to a fixed time and place. This rule does not prohibit the spontaneous or planned celebration of an action of the General Assembly or of any event in the life of the church.

General Assembly Meeting Worship

Services of Worship

- a. Moderator of Preceding General Assembly Responsible for Planning
- b. Ecumenical Worship
- c. In Conformity with Directory for Worship

---

Services of Worship

Moderator of Preceding General Assembly Responsible for Planning

a. The Moderator of the preceding General Assembly shall plan daily worship at the General Assembly, and a worship service including the celebration of the Lord's Supper; and shall provide, in advance, suitable leadership for these periods of worship. The Lord's Supper shall be celebrated at the first service of worship of the General Assembly session, and the Moderator shall preside on this occasion and preach a sermon or deliver an address. The Moderator shall seek advice to ensure inclusivity in the planning of appropriate daily worship periods. The Moderator shall assure adequate transmittal of information about the planning of worship periods to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

Ecumenical Worship

b. The Stated Clerk shall plan an ecumenical period of worship and provide, in advance, suitable leadership for this period of worship.

In Conformity with Directory for Worship

c. The various acts of worship planned for the session of the General Assembly shall be in conformity with the requirements of the Directory for Worship, and shall be developed and led according to the guidance of the document, "Presbyterians at Worship in Mass Assemblies." In the preparation and conduct of all worship services, care shall be taken that all language, sight, hearing, accessibility, and other barriers be eliminated so that there can be full participation of all attendees. [Example: That printed orders of service also be printed in braille and that signing be available.]

Officers and Elections

1. Moderator of the General Assembly

- a. Title/Functions
- b. Election
- c. Vice Moderator
- d. Vacancy

2. Stated Clerk of the General Assembly

- a. Title/Functions
- b. Election
- c. Acting Stated Clerk
- d. Associate Stated Clerks

1. Moderator of the General Assembly

Title/Functions

- a. Title and Functions of the Moderator at the General Assembly

(1) The Moderator of the General Assembly is an ecclesiastical officer, along with the Stated Clerk, of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A). The ministry of the Moderator is grounded in the ministry of baptized persons and in the particular ordained ministry of elders and ministers of the Word and Sacrament.

(2) The title of the Moderator is “The Moderator of the [number] General Assembly [(year)] of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)”

(3) The Moderator of the General Assembly is a commissioner of the General Assembly.

(4) When the Moderator presides at the assembly, it is to be a sign of the bond of unity, community, and mission in the life of the church. During the period between assemblies, the Moderator serves as an ambassador of the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, telling the story of the church’s life and upholding the people of God through prayer.

(5) The Moderator shall preside over the General Assembly that elects him or her, and over the meetings of the next General Assembly until a successor is elected. The Moderator possesses the authority necessary for preserving order and for conducting efficiently the business of the governing body (Book of Order, G-9.0202).

(6) The Moderator and the Vice Moderator shall submit a written report of their work to the session of the General Assembly at which their successors are installed.

Election

- b. Election of the Moderator

(1) Each person nominated to serve as Moderator of the General Assembly must be a commissioner to the General Assembly. Action by presbyteries to endorse candidates for Moderator of the General Assembly shall not take place until after the adjournment of the immediately preceding assembly. The Office of the General Assembly shall provide resourcing and orientation for Moderatorial candidates.

(2) Ordinarily, no later than forty-five days prior to the convening of the assembly, the Moderatorial candidates will announce the name of a commissioner each has selected to offer to the assembly to confirm as Vice Moderator.

(3) The following campaign procedures shall be observed:

(a) Candidates should budget campaign spending of no more than $1,500, excluding travel and meeting expenses related to their candidacy. Each candidate shall submit to the Stated Clerk an itemized statement of expenses, including travel and meeting expenses related to his/her candidacy and in kind contributions. This statement shall be submitted to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly prior to the convening of the General Assembly. This information shall be distributed to commissioners and advisory delegates prior to the election of the Moderator. The statement of expenses of all candidates shall be kept on file in the Office of the General Assembly following the meeting of the General Assembly. The Office of the General Assembly shall not reimburse a candidate for campaign expenses, but shall assume expenses involved in printing and distributing material submitted for information packets as outlined in Standing Rule H.1.b.(3)(e).

(b) In order to encourage reliance on the leading of the Holy Spirit in the selection of the Moderator, no candidate shall send a mailing of any campaign materials, print or electronic, to commissioners and/or advisory delegates or permit such a mailing to be sent, nor shall candidates or their advocates contact commissioners and/or advisory delegates by telephone.

(c) Distribution of written campaign materials at General Assembly outside of the candidate's room shall be limited to printed materials placed in mailboxes.

(d) On the day of the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall provide a room for each candidate where commissioners and advisory delegates may meet and talk with the candidate.

(e) Not less than fifteen days before the convening of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish for commissioners and advisory delegates an electronic information packet containing the following material regarding each candidate for Moderator who is known to the Stated Clerk and who wishes to be included:

(i) A photograph, a biographical sketch, a personal statement by the candidate that includes a statement regarding the candidate's sense of call to the office,

(ii) A written presentation by the presbytery having jurisdiction over the candidate, if that governing body has endorsed the candidate,

(iii) An announcement of the commissioner each candidate has selected to be presented to the assembly for confirmation as Vice Moderator if the candidate is elected,

(iv) The responses of the candidate to a questionnaire developed by the Stated Clerk.

The layouts for the presentation under this standing rule (as outlined above) may be chosen by the candidates, but all material including photographs submitted for each presentation shall be provided in electronic format as well as print. The material shall be submitted to the Stated Clerk no less than forty-five days before the convening of the General Assembly for reproduction and distribution, and shall be accompanied by a statement indicating the willingness of the candidate to serve as Moderator, if elected.

Each proposed Vice-Moderator candidate who wishes to be included may send biographical information and a photograph in electronic format.

(4) The Moderator of the General Assembly shall be elected in the following manner:

(a) When the General Assembly is ready to elect its Moderator, only one speech shall be made placing in nomination the name of each nominee. The speech shall be made by a commissioner to the General Assembly. Such speech shall not exceed five minutes in length. There shall be no speeches seconding the nomination of any nominee. The order of speaking shall be determined by lot, the drawing conducted by the most recent Moderator attending the General Assembly.

(b) After nominations are closed, each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to address the General Assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the concerns that nominee feels to be the most important for the church. The nominees shall speak in the same order as the presentation of nominating speeches.

(c) At the conclusion of all the presentations by the nominees, they shall respond to questions from the floor. The first question shall be addressed to the nominee who spoke first in the original presentation, and the same question shall then be put to the other nominees in the same order in which they spoke earlier. The second question shall be directed to the second nominee in this order and then to each of the other nominees in sequence. Each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to answer each question. This process shall continue for a period not to exceed the number of nominees times fifteen minutes, or for one hour, whichever is shorter, unless terminated earlier by vote of the General Assembly.

(d) Where there is only one nominee for Moderator, the election may be by acclamation. Where there is more than one, the election may be by secret ballot in one of the following ways:

(i) Each commissioner shall vote by means of an electronic voting system. The Stated Clerk shall advise the Moderator of the totals. The Moderator shall announce the result of the vote as tabulated. If no nominee has received a majority of the whole vote, another vote shall be taken in the same manner. When one nominee shall have received a majority, the Moderator shall announce the result and declare the nominee to be elected.

(ii) If the assembly votes to use paper ballots, the Stated Clerk shall provide ballots and assign no fewer than ten commissioners to act as tellers, collecting and counting the ballots. The results shall be given to the Stated Clerk who shall report the totals to the Moderator who shall announce them to the assembly.

(5) The Stated Clerk shall provide a service of installation for the newly elected Moderator as the last item of business at the session in which the Moderator is elected. The family of the newly elected Moderator and all present previous Moderators shall be invited to the platform. The service shall use the order of service for “Installation of Governing Body Officers and Staff” from the Book of Occasional Services. The processional banner of the Moderator shall precede the newly elected Moderator into the assembly. The Moderator’s cross and stole shall be presented by the most recent serving Moderator. A representative of the presbytery of the Moderator’s membership shall ask the questions of installation. The newly elected Moderator invites a person to lead the prayer of installation. The most recent serving Moderator gives the charge, a hymn is sung by the assembly, and the newly elected Moderator gives the benediction.

Vice Moderator

c. Vice Moderator

(1) Ordinarily, no later than forty-five days before the convening of the assembly, a Moderatorial candidate shall announce the selection of a commissioner who will be proposed to serve as Vice Moderator. At the next business session of the assembly following the election of the Moderator, the Moderator shall propose to the assembly the name of the commissioner for Vice Moderator. After a brief speech by the person selected, the assembly shall immediately proceed to vote on his or her confirmation. Should there be no confirmation, the Moderator shall bring another commissioner’s name for confirmation to the next business session of the assembly. The Stated Clerk shall provide a service of installation for the newly elected Vice Moderator.

(2) The Vice Moderator represents the assembly at the request of the Moderator. When the Vice Moderator serves in this capacity, all those duties incumbent on the Moderator shall be expected of him/her.

(3) The Moderator may request the Vice Moderator to preside and to assist in the performance of other functions of the Moderator during and following the General Assembly.

Vacancy

d. Vacancy in the Office of the Moderator or Vice Moderator

(1) Should the office of the Moderator of the General Assembly become vacant, the Vice Moderator shall fulfill the functions of the Moderator. In such circumstance, all constitutional obligations and functions as prescribed by the Standing Rules of the General Assembly and the Book of Order shall be incumbent upon the Vice Moderator of the General Assembly.

(2) Should the office of the Vice Moderator of the General Assembly also become vacant, the most recent living Moderator shall fulfill the functions of the Moderator as specified in the Constitution of the church.

2. Stated Clerk of the General Assembly

Title/Functions

a. Title and Functions of the Stated Clerk at the General Assembly

(1) The title of the Stated Clerk is “The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.)” and may be used by the incumbent until a successor is elected and takes office.

(2) The Stated Clerk is accountable, through the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, to the General Assembly for the performance of the duties of the office, and shall present to each meeting of the General Assembly a report on the state of the church.

(3) The Stated Clerk is responsible for all matters related to the sessions of the General Assembly and all other matters relative to and arising from the General Assembly for which no other assignment has been made.

(4) The Stated Clerk shall also be responsible for guidance of the procedures for candidates seeking the office of Moderator, and for supervision of the election of each Moderator.

(5) In accordance with directives from previous General Assemblies and in consultations with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the General Assembly Council, and other General Assembly agencies, the Stated Clerk is authorized to decide on matters pertaining to facilities and special events that must be established before the first meeting of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures.

(6) The Stated Clerk shall receive all reports, communications, overtures, and any other materials appropriate for General Assembly consideration. The Stated Clerk shall recommend to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, for presentation to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral, a referral of such items of business coming before the General Assembly (Standing Rule C.3.e.).

(7) The Stated Clerk shall prepare for consideration of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly a proposed docket for the General Assembly’s consideration of its business (Standing Rule C.4.a.). The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall present the proposed docket to the first meeting of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures so that it may recommend a docket to the commissioners at the first business session. The docket presented to the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall provide a time early in the General Assembly for a report by the Stated Clerk on the state of the church, and for a report by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly.

(8) The Stated Clerk shall propose to the General Assembly the number of assembly committees and a name for each committee after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly and the appropriate General Assembly entity or entities (Standing Rule C.1.). The Stated Clerk shall present the committee structure to the General Assembly for ratification at the first business session. Each commissioner and advisory delegate shall be assigned by random selection to one assembly committee at least forty-five days before the opening date of the General Assembly (Standing Rule C.2.).

(9) The Stated Clerk shall provide opportunity for orienting the commissioners, advisory delegates, and others taking part in the session of the General Assembly. The use of Robert’s Rules of Order, sources of parliamentary advice, and the availability of resource persons and materials to facilitate their work should be part of the orientation.

(10) The Stated Clerk shall be the parliamentarian for the meetings of the General Assembly, or arrange for the service of a professional parliamentarian.

(11) The Stated Clerk shall transmit to the governing bodies and agencies of the assembly, persons who presented business to the assembly, and others affected by the assembly’s actions, a report on actions of the General Assembly on matters pertaining to their concerns. The Stated Clerk shall transmit to the presbyteries all assembly actions on which the presbyteries are requested to take action.

(12) As soon as practicable after the adjournment of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall publish the assembly's proceedings and other documents as the assembly may direct in an appropriate format (i.e. print or electronic) to be determined by the Stated Clerk.

Election

b. Election of the Stated Clerk

(1) The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) requires the election of a Stated Clerk and the standing rules describe the procedures for the election. The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall be elected for a term of four years and is eligible for reelection to additional four-year terms. The Stated Clerk is accountable to the General Assembly for the performance of the assigned functions.

(2) The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly shall be elected in the manner described in this standing rule. No member of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly or other persons involved in this procedure as a member of the search committee or as a person providing staff services to the committee may be considered for nomination as Stated Clerk. The incumbent Stated Clerk may not participate in any way in the election process described in this standing rule. In the year there is an election of a Stated Clerk, the Moderator shall appoint a temporary Stated Clerk during the period of the election at the General Assembly.

(3) The General Assembly that meets prior to the end of the term of a Stated Clerk shall elect a Stated Clerk Nomination Committee.

(a) The slate of nominees for the review/nomination committee shall consist of the following: three members of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (nominated by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, one of whom shall serve as moderator of the committee), one member of the General Assembly Council (nominated by the General Assembly Council), and five at-large members nominated by the General Assembly Nominating Committee in the following categories: one governing body stated clerk and four persons (two elders and two clergy) from among commissioners who have attended an assembly in the past six years. The General Assembly Nominating Committee shall present to the assembly for election the slate of nominees for the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee. The slate presented shall reflect the denomination's commitment to inclusiveness.

(b) Nominations from the floor for the nomination committee shall be in order following the distribution of the printed list of proposed nominees by the General Assembly Nominating Committee and a declaration by the Moderator that the names are in nomination. Names placed in nomination from the floor shall be in opposition to a particular name of an at-large member placed in nomination by the General Assembly Nominating Committee, and must be in the same category (H.2.b.(3)(a)). More than one person may be placed in nomination from the floor in opposition to an at-large nominee.

(c) The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall be responsible for providing the nomination committee with an up-to-date position description.

(d) The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly will ensure that an adequate budget for the nomination process is provided in the Office of the General Assembly and shall designate staff services for the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee.

(e) The nomination committee shall begin its work no later than 300 days before the start of the assembly that will elect the Stated Clerk.

(f) The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall be responsible for conducting the end-of-term evaluation of the Stated Clerk.

(g) The nominating committee shall announce that persons seeking the position of Stated Clerk shall file a completed application form and a resume or personal information form (PIF) with the committee 180 days before the opening of the General Assembly.

If the incumbent wants to be considered, he or she will notify the committee in writing and submit a current resume or PIF 180 days before the opening of the General Assembly. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall provide a copy of the end-of term evaluation to the Stated Clerk Nominating Committee.

(h) Additional written material may be requested by the committee. No one may be nominated to serve as Stated Clerk who has not provided an application to the committee.

(i) The committee shall review and evaluate all applications to determine the constitutional eligibility of the candidates. Any candidate who is determined to not be eligible will be notified in writing within forty-five days of receipt of their resume or PIF.

(j) The committee shall interview all eligible candidates using the same methodology and select one as the committee's recommendation. All members of the committee shall ordinarily participate in the interview. The committee shall declare its nominee no later than sixty days before the opening of the General Assembly.

(k) Any of the applicants for the position of Stated Clerk, including the incumbent Stated Clerk if not the nominee of the committee, who wish to be placed in nomination against the nominee of the committee shall declare their intention to the committee to do so no later than forty-five days before the opening of the General Assembly.

(l) At the convening of the General Assembly, the Office of the General Assembly shall distribute to commissioners and advisory delegates an information packet containing the following material regarding each candidate for Stated Clerk who wishes to be included:

(i) A photograph, a biographical sketch, a personal statement by the candidate, including a statement regarding the candidate's sense of call to the office,

(ii) The responses of the candidate to a questionnaire developed by the committee based upon issues that will be before the church as presented in business to be considered by the General Assembly.

(iii) The material submitted shall be typewritten on paper 8-1/2 x 11 inches in size. The layouts for the presentation under this standing rule (as outlined above) may be chosen by the candidates, but the copy submitted for each presentation shall be provided in one color on one side of one sheet. The material shall be submitted to the Office of the General Assembly no less than thirty days before the convening of the General Assembly for reproduction and distribution and shall be accompanied by a statement indicating the willingness of the candidate to serve as Stated Clerk, if elected.

(m) The candidates may not distribute any other materials, print or electronic, including flyers, buttons, tokens or other objects that would denote a campaign for the office of Stated Clerk.

(n) Other organizations supporting the candidacy of a particular candidate may not distribute materials electronically, through the mail, or at the General Assembly with the knowledge, support, or permission of that candidate. Should a candidate discover that an organization is advocating or campaigning for him or her, it is expected that the candidate will request that organization to cease its activities. The same expectation will be true of organizations that are critical of a particular candidate for Stated Clerk.

(o) Each candidate will be provided a place to meet and talk with commissioners and advisory delegates two days before the election. Only information provided by the Office of the General Assembly may be distributed in those rooms. Other materials, apart from that packet, are not permitted. Each candidate for Stated Clerk will be allowed to post the times when he/she will be available for conversation in that room.

(p) Any questions concerning interpretation of the election process outlined in H.2.b. shall be determined by the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee.

(4) The General Assembly, by majority vote, shall elect the Stated Clerk in the following manner:

(a) Within forty-eight hours of the convening of the assembly, the Stated Clerk Review/Nomination Committee shall place in nomination a single nominee.

(b) The Moderator shall then invite other nominations from those who have completed the nomination process. Only one speech, made by a commissioner or a member of the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee not to exceed five minutes in length, shall be made to nominate each nominee. There shall be no speech seconding any nomination. Each person nominated from the floor shall reaffirm a willingness to serve as Stated Clerk, if elected.

(c) In the event there are no other nominations, the election shall proceed immediately as follows:

(i) The nominee for Stated Clerk shall be given an opportunity to address the assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the nominee's views regarding the functions and work of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly.

(ii) The Moderator shall inquire of commissioners whether there are questions to be asked of the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee. Time allocated shall not exceed fifteen minutes. The Moderator shall inquire of commissioners whether there are questions to be asked of the nominee for Stated Clerk. The time allocated should not exceed fifteen minutes, after which the voting shall take place.

(d) In the event there are other nominations, the election shall proceed as follows:

(i) The election of the Stated Clerk shall take place as the first order of business on the next to last day of the assembly's session.

(ii) Each nominee shall be given an opportunity to address the assembly for a time not to exceed five minutes, expressing the nominee's views regarding the functions and work of the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly. The nominees shall speak in the same order as the presentation of nominating speeches.

(iii) The Moderator shall inquire of commissioners whether there are questions to be asked of the nominees for Stated Clerk. The first question shall be addressed to the nominee who was nominated first and the same question shall then be put to the other nominees in the same order in which they were nominated. The second question shall be directed to the second nominee in this order and then to each of the other nominees in sequence. Each nominee shall be afforded an opportunity to answer each question. This process shall continue for a period not to exceed the number of nominees times fifteen minutes, or for one hour, whichever is shorter, unless terminated earlier by vote of the General Assembly, after which the voting shall take place.

(5) Should there be a vacancy in the office of the Stated Clerk, the General Assembly Nominating Committee shall propose to the assembly, if the assembly is in session, members for the Stated Clerk Nomination Committee, or shall propose to the Moderator for appointment, if the assembly is not in session, to a Stated Clerk Nomination Committee. This committee shall be composed of members as outlined in Standing Rule H.2.b. and begin the process of a search for a candidate for Stated Clerk. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall designate an acting Stated Clerk until such time as a Stated Clerk is elected.

(6) The Stated Clerk Nomination Committee shall be dismissed at the adjournment of the session of the General Assembly at which the committee presents a nominee for Stated Clerk.

(7) A new Stated Clerk shall normally assume office thirty days after the adjournment of the assembly. A longer period of transition between Stated Clerks may be negotiated by the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, but shall not exceed ninety days.

Acting Stated Clerk

c. Acting Stated Clerk

In case of the incapacity, resignation, or death of the Stated Clerk, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall designate an Acting Stated Clerk until such time as the Stated Clerk is able to resume the duties or the General Assembly elects a new Stated Clerk. The person so designated may be one of the Associate Stated Clerks or another person eligible for election as Stated Clerk.

Associate Stated Clerks

d. Associate Stated Clerks

The General Assembly may elect one or more Associate Stated Clerks as the General Assembly shall determine. The Stated Clerk shall nominate persons to fill each such office after consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. The term of office shall be four years, subject to reelection at the pleasure of the General Assembly.

1. Date and Place of Meeting

Determining Date and Place

a. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) shall meet on the date and at the place fixed by the preceding General Assembly for a period, which shall be known as a session of the General Assembly, preferably between May 15 and July 31, subject to the possibility of change (see Standing Rule I.4.b.(10) and Book of Order, G-13.0104, for exceptions). The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall recommend to the General Assembly for its action the date and place of meeting six years hence and any necessary changes in dates and places of meetings previously set. Should action regarding date or place of meeting become necessary at a time when the General Assembly is not in session, this committee is empowered to fix a new date or place of meeting.

Presbytery Invitations

b. The host body for any session of the General Assembly shall be a presbytery(s) of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.). Any presbytery that desires to invite the General Assembly to meet within its bounds shall forward an invitation to the Stated Clerk no later than May 1 of the year that is seven years prior to the earliest effective date of the invitation.

Criteria

c. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall determine the criteria that render a place an eligible site for a meeting of the General Assembly, including the requirement that all meeting arrangements shall be made to facilitate full participation by persons with disabilities. These criteria may be obtained from the Office of the General Assembly.

Rotating the Place of the Meeting

d. In order to distribute the benefits experienced from hosting a General Assembly meeting throughout the church, the place of meeting shall be rotated among the following four areas (unless prevented by financial or other practical considerations):

- Area A: Synod of Alaska/Northwest, Synod of the Pacific, Synod of Southern California and Hawaii, Synod of the Rocky Mountains, Synod of the Southwest;
- Area B: Synod of the Sun, Synod of Lakes and Prairies, Synod of Mid-America;
- Area C: Synod of Living Waters, Synod of Lincoln Trails, Synod of the Covenant;
- Area D: Synod of South Atlantic, Synod of Puerto Rico, Synod of the Northeast, Synod of the Trinity, Synod of the Mid-Atlantic.

---

2. Meeting Arrangements

Arrangements and Housing

a. The Stated Clerk shall oversee all arrangements for the meeting and housing of the General Assembly, including: the assignment of time and place for all special events and public meetings connected with or scheduled at the time of the General Assembly; the assignment of time and place for exhibits at the General Assembly; and the assignment of commissioners, advisory delegates, and others to hotels and other accommodations.

Assembly Assistants

b. The Stated Clerk shall appoint persons to serve as assembly assistants for the duration of the General Assembly. Persons appointed shall not be commissioners to the General Assembly or staff members of entities of the General Assembly. Assembly assistants shall be assigned to particular tasks to facilitate the work of the General Assembly. The appointments shall be made in accordance with Book of Order, G-4.0403.

Simultaneous Interpretation

c. The Stated Clerk shall arrange for the simultaneous interpretation of proceedings into Spanish and Korean languages for any participant during plenary meetings of the General Assembly. This service shall also be provided during assembly committee meetings, services of worship, and other events during the assembly for commissioners, advisory delegates, ecumenical guests, and, when possible, for other participants.

Sponsorship of Event

d. An event scheduled before, during, or immediately following a session of the General Assembly and extending an invitation to any or all participants of the assembly shall clearly identify the sponsor or sponsoring organization(s) in any invitations, announcements, or other publicity about the event.

3. Reimbursing Commissioner Expenses

Reimbursement/ Per Diem

a. The approved reimbursement for the travel expenses, food, lodging, and other approved expenses of commissioners at the sessions of the General Assembly shall be paid by the treasurer or the treasurer's designee. The treasurer shall have the authority to deposit funds for such purposes in a bank or trust company where the General Assembly is to be in session. Commissioners shall be reimbursed by means of individual checks upon receipt of a voucher on a form provided by the treasurer. The Stated Clerk shall recommend to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly the amount of any per diem. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall set the per diem, and the Stated Clerk shall publish such per diem in the materials (print or electronic) provided to the commissioners. The treasurer shall determine the manner in which such checks shall be distributed and shall announce the place or places where such checks may be cashed.

Reimbursement for Alternate Commissioner

b. The Office of the General Assembly shall reimburse an alternate commissioner for cost of meals (as specified in the per diem expenses for the particular session of the assembly to which the person is commissioned) during the period in which the alternate is actually seated as a commissioner. The total of the payments to the two persons shall not be larger than payment to a single commissioner attending the full assembly. The Office of the General Assembly shall reimburse either the original commissioner or the alternate who replaced the original commissioner for the costs of transportation and other approved expenses, but not both. It shall be the responsibility of the two individuals, with the assistance of the presbytery that elected them, to determine an appropriate division of the costs, whether reimbursement was in cash or a prepaid ticket was provided. Both persons shall be listed in the Journal as commissioners, with an indication of the period during which they served.

4. Assembly Meeting Work Group

Membership

a. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall establish a work group on assembly arrangements to be composed of designated members from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk, the Moderator of the General Assembly, and the Executive Director of the General Assembly Council. The moderator of the Committee on Local Arrangements, and the moderator and vice moderator of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures (when selected) shall be nonvoting members of the committee at all meetings in which matters will be considered that affect their particular work. This work group shall be assigned responsibilities (1) through (10) in this Standing Rule I.4.b.

---

Responsibilities*b. Responsibilities

- (1) Review the evaluation of each General Assembly session secured by the Stated Clerk.
- (2) Outline the programs for future General Assemblies sufficiently in advance to ensure an orderly progression of themes and emphases and to ensure the appointment of significant speakers and other program participants.
- (3) Review and present to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral a recommendation regarding the Stated Clerk's proposed docket for the next session of the General Assembly.
- (4) Review and present to the Assembly Committee on Business Referral a recommendation regarding the Stated Clerk's proposed referral of each item of business to an appropriate assembly committee.
- (5) Assist the Moderator regarding the appointment of a commissioner to be the moderator of each assembly committee and a commissioner to serve as vice moderator of each assembly committee.
- (6) Consult with the Moderator regarding the planning of all worship at the General Assembly.
- (7) Coordinate the programmatic aspects of each General Assembly session, ensuring that adequate time is provided for the business that must be transacted.
- (8) Review requests from entities of the General Assembly, governing bodies, other entities related to the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) in any way, or coalitions in which this denomination or any of its entities participate to schedule meetings, briefings, hearings, or other events of any kind during those hours when the General Assembly or its committees are in session.
- (9) Prepare a report, including recommendations on the docket and the referral of assembly business, to be printed and distributed with other materials provided to commissioners.
- (10) Review and present to the General Assembly for its action the date and place of meeting six years hence and any changes in dates and places of meetings previously set.

3. Date and Location

- a. Report of Decision to Call Meeting
- b. COGA Sets Date and Place
- c. Expense Plan
- d. Letter of Notification

1. Method of Calling

The Book of Order permits the calling of special meetings of the General Assembly (G-13.0104). The method of calling a special meeting is the required number of commissioners submitting a petition with the full text of the resolution to the Moderator of the General Assembly.

Petition's Subject Matter

a. A special meeting may be called providing the petition's subject matter falls within the General Assembly's responsibilities. (G-13.0103).

Resolution Form

b. The urgent matter shall be brought in the form of a resolution or resolutions, stating the specific action proposed to be taken by the commissioners at the special meeting and shall include the reasons for proposing the decision to be made.

Not Called for Discussion Only

c. A special meeting may not be called for the purpose of discussion only.

Resolved in 1 or 2 Days

d. The matters should be able to be resolved in a session of one or two days.

Full Text on Each Page of Petition

e. The full text of the resolution shall appear on each page of the signed petitions.

Consult with Assembly Committee on Bills & Overtures

f. The Moderator may consult with the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures to determine any questions concerning whether the resolution meets the criteria for a called meeting or concerning the specific actions in the proposed resolution. This may take place by conference call.

120-day Requirement

g. Resolutions requiring or proposing constitutional interpretation are subject to the 120-day requirement in G-13.0112c. The 120-day requirement begins upon receipt of the petition by the Moderator. The Moderator may consult with the Advisory Committee on the Constitution (ACC) to determine any questions concerning whether the resolution requires a constitutional interpretation.

2. Signatures

The Book of Order establishes the minimum number of signatures to require a called meeting. The Moderator, upon receipt of the petition, shall ask the Stated Clerk to complete the following within thirty days:

- Verification of PC(USA) Membership Verification of Signature
- a. Send each presbytery stated clerk or clerk of session a letter verifying the current Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) membership of the individual signatory to the petition.
- b. Send each signatory to the petition a letter of verification asking the commissioner to verify the signature on the petition and if the commissioner concurs with the purpose of the request as stated in the resolution.
- Removal Request
- c. During the verification process, a commissioner may request removal of his or her name from the petition by notifying the Stated Clerk.
- Failure to Reply
- d. After all reasonable efforts to establish contact have been made, the name of a commissioner failing to reply to the letter of verification shall be removed from the petition.
- Verification Process Report
- e. The Stated Clerk shall report to the Moderator the results of the verification process.

3. Date and Location

The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly has the responsibility to fix the date and place of a meeting of the General Assembly when the General Assembly is not in session.

- Report of Decision to Call Meeting
- a. Upon receiving certification from the Stated Clerk that the petition has met the requirements of the Book of Order and the Standing Rules of the General Assembly, the Moderator shall report to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (COGA) the decision to call the meeting.
- COGA Sets Date and Place Expense Plan
- b. The COGA shall set the date and place of a called meeting.
- c. The COGA shall submit to the called meeting a plan to pay for its expenses. This plan shall be considered to be part of the business of the special meeting.
- Letter of Notification
- d. The letter of notification of the called meeting will be mailed to the commissioners no later than sixty days before the start of the meeting.

1. Commissions and Special Committees

Purpose

a. Unless otherwise specified in the assembly’s action, any body or group established by the General Assembly to carry out decisions of the assembly, or instructed to report to the assembly, or make recommendations to the assembly, or both, shall be known as a commission or special committee (see Book of Order, G-9.0500). The purposes of a special committee must be ones that cannot be undertaken by the work of an existing corporation or entity under its assigned responsibilities. Due to the financial and staffing implications, before authorizing the establishment of a special committee, the assembly shall hear a report from the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures, which shall have consulted with the most closely related entity and a member designated from the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, as to whether the work to be assigned to the special committee could more effectively and economically be assigned to that entity.

Considerations for Creating

b. The Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall be notified by any assembly committee whenever there is discussion about the creation of a special committee. In discussing the possible creation of a special committee, the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures shall hear from related corporation or entity representatives as well as representatives from the assembly committee considering the proposal. Financial implications of special committees should accompany any recommendation for action by the assembly. The written comment of the Assembly Committee on Bills and Overtures must be incorporated as background in the report of the assembly committee containing a recommendation to create a special committee.

Appointed by Moderator

c. Any commission or special committee authorized by the General Assembly, unless otherwise designated, shall be appointed by the Moderator. The Moderator is also authorized to fill by appointment any vacancies that may occur in any of such commissions or committees. No minister, elder, or other person shall be appointed to serve on more than one such commission or committee except by consent of the General Assembly.

Length of Existence and Reports

d. Special committees shall complete their work within two years unless the General Assembly that authorized its establishment specifies a different period. Special committees shall submit a written report to the General Assembly that shall include a recommendation to extend its existence (if beyond the period authorized), or, at the conclusion of its work, a recommendation for dismissal. Special committees shall also publish interim reports, no less than annually, by electronic or print means. Such interim reports shall indicate the progress made by the special committee on its assigned tasks and offer a timeline and process for completing its work. When a special committee requests an extension of its existence, the request shall be referred to the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. After consultation with the most closely related assembly entity, the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly will recommend to the assembly whether the project shall be reassigned to the entity, remain with the special committee, or be terminated. Any extension to its existence shall require a two-thirds vote of the commissioners.

Review

e. The Committee on the Office of the General Assembly shall review the work of each special committee and include in its report to each session of the General Assembly a summary of the work being carried out by each special committee, including any recommendation to transfer the work assigned to a special committee elsewhere, or to dismiss the committee. A special committee shall not consider matters currently referred to another special committee or entity.

Representation at General Assembly and Funding

f. The expenses of one member of a special committee or commission to attend the General Assembly session to make any oral presentation of the report of the committee or commission that may be docketed, and to respond to questions concerning that report shall be paid by the General Assembly through the regular budget of the committee or commission. This member shall be designated as the corresponding member. The exceptions to this rule are as follows:

(1) At the General Assembly meeting in which the final report of the committee or commission is presented, the moderator, who shall serve as the corresponding member of the committee or commission, and one other designated member of the committee or commission shall attend to present the report and serve as resource to the committee considering the report. Unless otherwise approved in advance by the Moderator of the preceding General Assembly in consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly (due to special circumstances), only the expenses of these two authorized representatives shall be reimbursed by the General Assembly through the regular budget of the committee or commission.

(2) In the event of a minority report, a designated member of the committee's or commission's minority shall also be invited to attend. The expenses of this member shall be reimbursed by the General Assembly through the regular budget of the committee or commission.

(3) Other members of special committees or commissions, not otherwise referred to in this standing rule, shall be reimbursed for attendance at a General Assembly session only if they are individually involved in hearings or other official purposes.

Coordination

g. Any such commission or committee shall consult with and advise the General Assembly Council on the progress of its work in order to assist the council in its responsibility for coordinating the work of the entities of the General Assembly and the work of presbyteries and synods.

Staff Services

h. The Stated Clerk shall provide staff services and other assistance to such commissions and committees in order to facilitate and coordinate their work. The work of commissions and special committees shall be funded through the per capita budget of the Office of the General Assembly.

2. Special Administrative Review of Synods*Three Ways to Review

a. The General Assembly has authority to undertake special administrative review of synods (Book of Order, G-13.0103k). There are three ways the General Assembly could be requested to consider such review:

(1) by an overture from a presbytery or synod (G-11.0103t(3); G-12.0102o(2); Standing Rule A.3.;

(2) by request from one of the General Assembly entities (Standing Rule A.2.); or

(3) By a commissioners' resolution (Standing Rule A.8.). If such overture, request, or resolution is acted on favorably by the General Assembly, the General Assembly could undertake Special Administrative Review (G-9.0408–.0410) through commission or special committee as provided for in Standing Rule K.5. and G-9.0501–.0503.

Written Request for Review

b. Special administrative review of an alleged synod irregularity or delinquency may occur when a written request for such review is received by the Stated Clerk of the General Assembly from another synod or a presbytery within the synod of the alleged irregularity or delinquency. If the request relates to an alleged delinquency, the request can only be filed with the Stated Clerk after the failure or refusal of the synod to cure the alleged delinquency at its next meeting, having been requested to do so in writing prior to the meeting. When the request for special administrative review is received, the Stated Clerk shall convene a meeting of the Moderator of the General Assembly, the moderator of the General Assembly Council, and the moderator of the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly. If the request is in order and all the moderators agree that for the good of the church the special administrative review needs to be undertaken before the next meeting of the General Assembly (when the request could be considered by the whole General Assembly), the Moderator of the General Assembly shall appoint a special committee (Standing Rule K.5.) to conduct a special administrative review in accordance with G-9.0408–.0410 and report its findings and recommendations to the next General Assembly.

Amendment or Suspension of the Standing Rules

1. Recommending Amendments to the Standing Rules
  2. Amending the Standing Rules
  3. Suspending the Standing Rules

Recommending Amendments to the Standing Rules

1. In consultation with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly, the Stated Clerk shall recommend to the next session of the General Assembly any changes in the Standing Rules of the General Assembly deemed necessary. The Stated Clerk shall consult with the Committee on the Office of the General Assembly before proposing to the General Assembly any amendment to the standing rules.

Amending the Standing Rules

2. The Standing Rules of the General Assembly may be amended by a majority vote of the commissioners present and voting.

Suspending the Standing Rules

3. A motion to suspend the standing rules is not debatable and shall require a two-thirds vote of the total enrollment of the commissioners.
