

MIT School of Architecture and Planning Students fighting the evil twins Katrina and Rita
Sustainable Housing on the Bayou

Photographs taken by Ji-Hye Ham July 2006, Houma, Louisiana
Volunteers organized by SIGUS

The Good Earth Village

"We peered out of the windows to witness rows of little blue plastic houses..."

The Good Earth Village

"They're actually one of the most pleasant 'port-a-potties' I've been in."

“Overall, this place seems to be run pretty smoothly.”

The Good Earth Village

“Jacob’s house was a complete mess and needed the most help.”

“I thought it looked pretty self-explanatory, but apparently I’ve been cutting them all the wrong angles...”

“The nail guns, the loud compressor, and the chop saw were all intimidating at first..”

Working on Don's Hood

"The nail guns were pretty fun, except when they spout air in your face."

"I was amazed that the guide knew each alligator by name; the weather was cool, and surprisingly a lack of bugs."

Working on Jacob's House

"I'm pretty pleased about the work even though it became monotonous and sometimes tiring due to the raising of my arms for so long."

"We were all dirty and sweaty from working all day, so we went back, cleaned up then out to dinner!"

“Before we knew it our last work day was over. Then dinner and dancing and afterwards for some karaoke.”

Last Night at the Jolly Inn

